"To cherish and preserve the beau ideal of Virginia hospitality has long been our special pride at the Homestead. Superlative comfort and fine percales are in keeping with this tradition. Dan River combed percales, smooth, snowy white . . . actually woven in Virginia . . . are everything one could desire in fine sheets.

"Good housekeepers must be practical, too. Sheets must stand up to daily launderings. To our delight we've discovered that Dan River sheets not only wear and wear but come back softer and smoother; they're so closely woven! The hems are strongly stitched, as they should be, and selvages firmly taped.

"Whenever brides ask about linens, as one good housekeeper to another, I recommend Dan River percales for life-time luxury."

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

DAN RIVER® SHEETS

Dan River Mills, Inc., Danville, Va.—First in Fashion . . . Foremost in Research

Makers of Dress Fabrics • Wrinkl-Shed® Cottons • Stormwear Fabrics • Shirtings • Rayon Suitings • Yard Goods • Sheets and Pillow Cases

Never Any "COIL-FEEL"

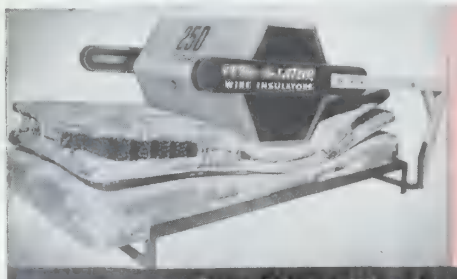
in MATTRESSES and UPHOLSTERED FURNITURE

Built with

PERM-A-LATOR

TRADE MARK

WIRE INSULATORS



LOOK FOR THIS TAG—

The PERM-A-LATOR name is your Guarantee

PADDING CAN'T LUMP INTO SPRINGS

"Coil-Feel" is caused in mattresses and upholstered furniture when padding cups down into spring openings . . . after these products are in use. That's why it's important...when you buy...to insist on mattresses and upholstered furniture built with stronger, longer-lasting PERM-A-LATOR Wire Insulators. Tough steel wires insulate the padding from springs—keep it permanently out of springs to prevent "coil-feel" . . . lumping . . . or sagging. Look for the PERM-A-LATOR tag . . . ask your dealer . . . and be sure you get products built with PERM-A-LATOR Wire Insulators!

LONGER LIFE . . . MORE COMFORT IN ALL UPHOLSTERED PRODUCTS

Torture tests of over 2½ million rolling cycles have proven PERM-A-LATOR Wire Insulators last more than twice as long as other insulators. You have positive assurance the upholstered products you buy will have more comfort . . . last years longer!

Perm-A-Lator Wire Insulators Manufactured By

FLEX-O-LATORS, INC., CARTHAGE, MO.

Factories in Carthage, Missouri and New Castle, Pennsylvania

(Continued from Page 142)

He saw Jane on her cot under the pines. Faint sunlight was filtering through clouds, and little touches of it lay like golden straws on the blue blanket in which she was wrapped. She greeted him happily.

"Good morning, Wei-Chou. You see I am already living out-of-doors."

He bowed, and noted that the nurse as well as the patient seemed the better for the removal from Huai Yuen. Wilfreda had lost the abstraction and the tenseness he had remarked in her during their first visit.

"You had a good night?" he asked, sitting down and placing a finger on Jane's pulse.

"Deep, quiet sleep, thanks to you—the greatest gift you ever gave anyone, I do believe."

"Not to be compared to the debt a student owes his teacher," said the young Chinese. "I shall go away happy that you are a little better already."

The content in Jane's eyes clouded a little. "You are going away?"

"This morning I join Doctor Hartshorn as he comes out in the hospital jeep. He will drive me to the air base, which you know is nearby, whence I have a chance to fly to Chungking."

"When will you come again?"

"It is not possible to say."

Jane sighed. "I suppose it is inevitable. My consolation is that your part in this war is the relief of suffering. You see, you have already relieved it for me."

"I wish I could keep all suffering away from you, Teacher Jane."

He spoke with such feeling that she looked up at him with a brightness in her face which he was long to remember.

"Thank you for that good wish. But you and I know what lies before Brother Ass. The thing to remember is that he is not of the first importance. I hope you don't confuse Brother Ass with me myself."

The other hesitated. "I am a doctor," he reminded her. "Brother Ass is my business."

Jane smiled. "But 'I am not contained between my hat and my boots,'" she quoted. 'Didn't I teach you that?"

"You are still teaching it," he answered. "And I am still trying to learn."

She put her hand on his arm and spoke almost shyly. "I can't tell you how it touches me to have you come back to me so kindly, so generously . . . after so many years."

"I have never been away from you."

He saw the tears in her eyes and she saw his fear that he had overtaxed her strength. As he made a movement to rise she detained him.

"Before you go," she said, "one question more. Do you know anything about Willow?"

THE name brought memories to them both of the young beauty, the indomitable will, the passion of rebellion in one of the most powerful natures either had ever known.

"Willow?" said Wang Wei-Chou. "I have never seen her since we were your students in the north—it must be eleven years ago. You must know more about her than I do."

"I did hear from her at long intervals until I came to West China," Jane answered. "She was always in political hot water, and once was in a Kuomintang jail. I have heard rumors that she is here in West China—still an underground communist agent. You haven't any word at all?"

He shook his head. "After graduation we went different ways. We never agreed in the least, you know, in spite of ——" He stopped and then went on: "I was already committed to working in medicine. I was going into Public Health after I got my M.D. But of course her philosophy scorned anything short of revolution. Also, I am—as her father and all her ancestors were—a landlord which to her is wickedness. We said good-by and have never kept in touch."

"I knew that," said Jane, "from asking her about you. If she should ever come to me here—if she should seek asylum with me, what shall I do?"

At this he smiled. "My dear Teacher Jane," he said, "when I brought you to the garden, I knew that you could not be expected to remain in it alone. I shall give Shang Shih orders that he is to admit anyone who visits you and to consider your orders as my own. And now I think you have talked enough."

SHE did not protest, but as he rose she said quietly, "Try to come to me once again if you can, before Brother Ass collapses. Always remember my gratitude. You are very dear to me."

He bent over her and took both hands in his. "I am your son."

When the sound of his steps had died away, Jane lay still and closed her eyes. Hours passed before she stirred again, but she was not asleep. Her senses made a harmony of the sun's warmth on her body, of the pure air on her face, of the freshness of plants and the winging of birds. Her spirit rejoiced in the compassion which had wrapped her around. Words dropped away from her mind; but with her whole consciousness she drank in that mercy and gave back pure praise.

Wilfreda had waited outside the gate for Wang Wei-Chou, and when he appeared she walked with him toward the entrance to the garden. Each confirmed the other in finding Jane already benefited.

"But it's temporary," said Wang. "And it is clear that she knows it."

"Oh, yes, she knows," said Wilfreda. "How long, should you think ——"

"Doctor Hartshorn believes not more than three months."

When he was gone Wilfreda returned to Jane. She looked in upon her and, observing her deep repose, decided not to disturb her. In order to be on hand when Doctor Hartshorn arrived she went back to the garden entrance, and when Shang Shih invited her into his gatehouse she looked at the turquoise gates inquisitively.

"May I go in there?" she asked.

"It is permitted," said the gatemaster. "There is a place where the hu shih may sit and wait."

He opened the nearer of the twin gates and Wilfreda passed into a spacious court with buildings larger and more formal than anything she had seen in the garden. Each had its name board, and she amused herself with attempting to read their characters. A hall opposite her on the north had a loft roof and stood on a stone plinth over which its spreading eaves cast deep shadow. This was "Inviting the Pleasures." Shang Shih attacked its oblong lock, and the tall doors, heavy with carving, swung open. Inside were great empty spaces with ceremonial chairs set on either side of ponderous tables.

"The hu shih may await the tai fu here," the old man suggested, using his formal terms for nurse and doctor.

Doctor Hartshorn found her there when Shang Shih ushered him in from his jeep. He carried a wicker basket and at once set about unpacking a lunch. "They gave me some coffee and sandwiches at the airfield," he announced. "Brought some along for you. How are you two women going to manage about food?" He cast a shrewd glance at Wilfreda's thin shoulders and at the sharp point of her elbow in its cotton sleeve.

NEXT MONTH

WHAT can a man say when, even though he knows he's right, the law is against him? Not only his life, but also the happiness of Zerelda and Tad depended on the few words he said facing the judge.

THE GREAT COMPANIONS

By G. Markey

Complete in the October JOURNAL

UT THE "Ghost of the Past"
FROM YOUR BATHROOM!

se this daily menace with h, fragrant VANiSH

Cleans toilet bowls with a fast agitating action

Goes to work the
nstant it hits water

Releases an airfreshening aroma

Harmless to septic tank and plumbing systems.

W EXPELLID OPENER
ts top quickly with flick finger. No fuss muss.

ouble-Action VANISH makes bathrooms
ragrant as it cleans

Try ELF new drain opener and deodorant

XTRA MONEY!

Make $50 or more amazingly quick. No experience needed. Sell America's leading 21 Card Christmas assortments. Samples on approval. Show irresistible values in Everyday assortments, Gift Items, other brand new money makers. Don't delay. WRITE TODAY.

LORAIN ART STUDIOS
Dept. S-25, Vermilion, Ohio

FREE SAMPLES
50 for $1.25
NAME IMPRINTED CHRISTMAS CARDS

ET'S FACE IT! YOU GET $25

FOR SELLING ONLY 50 BOXES CHRISTMAS CARDS to your friends and fellow-workers, 21 for $1 and 50 for $1.25, with name on. You make up to 50¢ on each box. Send for Selling Plan and samples on approval. Costs nothing to try.

FREE PRINT SAMPLES

MERIT CARD CO.
370 Plane St., Dept. 74, Newark, N. J.

Dr Scholl's SHOES

orld Famous for their Anatomical
Fit

If your feet hurt—or are "hard" to fit—Dr. Scholl's Shoes will give you glorious walking ease—free of painful friction and pressure points on your feet and toes. Their style distinction give no outward hint of their foot-comforting, foot-coddling inward scientific design.

Dr. Scholl's Shoes are made in all sizes for all types of feet—Women's, some styles, 2½ to 13AAAAA to EEEEEEEE; Men's, 5½ to 16, AAA to EEEEEEE. Expertly fitted at Dr. Scholl's Foot Comfort® Shops and Shoe and Department Stores in principal cities. If not obtainable in or near your city, write for catalog.

Dr. Scholl's, Inc., Chicago 10, Ill.

"Oh, we'll manage." Wilfreda spoke absently, and gratefully accepted a sandwich. "You have known Doctor Wang a long time?"

"All his life. His family was the first to have any truck with our mission. They were Christian long before I came."

"Christian?" Wilfreda was surprised.

"Why not? There've been Christians in China for more than a hundred years. I saw the boy married in this very hall."

"How long ago was that?"

"Let me see. A good ten years ago—maybe more. It was when he came back from the north where he did his university work. Soon afterward he went away again for his medical training."

"I think Doctor Wang mentioned that now there is only his son? And his old mother?"

"His wife died when the child was born," said Hartshorn. "She was a delicate little thing. Odd the old mother hasn't made him marry again. One grandson wouldn't be according to her notions of things."

Wilfreda took a sip of coffee and the doctor noted hollows in her cheeks under the prominent bones. He shifted the topic abruptly.

"What about your eating? You can't bake, I suppose? No bread?"

"We can slice Chinese mant'ou and toast it." Wilfreda finished her sandwich. "Fortunately, Jane isn't hungry. She likes her cabbage soup and her rice gruel. She craves oranges and I can get those. As for me, I can eat dough strings and vegetables."

HARTSHORN brought a package of paper money, tied up with string, out of his raincoat pocket. "Here's what's left of Jane's last remittance," he said. "When she went into the hospital I took charge of her affairs. I've done the best I could and the hospital bill can wait, but not the drug account. She's had to have expensive sedatives."

Wilfreda took the money and counted it. "How long must this last?" she asked.

"That's the difficulty. Nobody knows. Of course," he added, "if and when it's all gone, we'll manage to carry her, somehow. Her mission will make it good eventually, we know. But we're all living on uncertainties. I needn't tell you that," he broke off.

"Don't worry," said Wilfreda. "We'll manage."

"Mind, I'll be keeping an eye on you. Now we'll go and check the patient."

As the doctor made his examination of Jane he entertained her with accounts of the air base he had just visited.

"Extraordinary sight. Got a landing field and a runway in operation, but lots of coolies swarm around doing things with their wicker baskets. The whole place is ugliness and noise and strain—not like this place of yours, where there doesn't seem to be a war. . . . Well, young woman, you are in better shape than I've found you for some time. Just as a reward of merit, here's a letter for you."

Jane held it out to Wilfreda. "From Stephen Purcell," she said. "Such a nice boy and such a vile penman."

"Read it to her," said the doctor. "It's probably good medicine." Nodding, he took his departure.

Wilfreda settled down on the stool by Jane's cot, and began to read:

"Chez Bishop's Palace (two mat sheds, villainously untidy and hellishly hot).

"That girl hasn't written me for six months, and she promised me a letter every two weeks. I wish I could forget her, and I have tried, but it's no use. Nobody but Daisy will do for me, and what do you think are my chances? Tell me the truth. You knew her in childhood. What a miserable existence she had—dragged around the world by a missionary parent so full of programs and committees she couldn't take time for the kid. And then the mother crushed under tragedy—husband dying suddenly, mother dry-eyed, never indulging her grief, so it ate her alive. Oh, I've brooded over that childhood you once painted for me. No wonder

(Continued on Page 147)

When you buy, look for the waffled surface

Even a doll knows the difference with

FREMONT Supreme

RUBBER RUG CUSHION in distinctive waffled green

"When we visited our Dealer to buy carpet cushion, we had two things in mind . . . a floor that was as comfortable as possible and buying only the very best in a prestige brand rug underlay. He naturally showed us FREMONT Supreme with its unique waffled surface that gives a lively, buoyant effect to the carpet, keeps them from crawling. After walking on it, we were thoroughly sold. We've had ours installed a year now and John is so proud of his name brand Supreme that it's all I can do to keep him from taking up the carpets every time we have visitors. Next carpet buying time don't miss seeing Supreme. It's the one brand that you're proud to own."

WATCH FOR NEW FREMONT PRODUCTS

Rubber Tile

Vinyl Plastic Cove Base

Plastics

Sponge Rubber Rug Cushion

Fremont Rubber Company

318 McPherson Highway, FREMONT, OHIO

Gentlemen:

Enclosed please find 10 cents to cover handling costs in sending me your Fremont SUPREME brochure.

NAME_____

ST. ADDRESS_____

CITY_____ STATE_____

Imagine having—in your home—the soft harmony of "CHANSON!" It's one of Magee's many beautiful blends of wool and carpet rayon. A new abstract sculptured design in Dover Grey, Orleans Beige, Mochatone and Veridian Green. In 27 inch, 9, 12 and 15 foot widths.

SEND 25c FOR MAGEE'S NEW DECORATING GUIDE—"KEYS TO COLOR HARMONY"

THE MAGEE CARPET COMPANY • MILLS: BLOOMSBURG, PA.

(Continued from Page 145)

D.s afraid of love—any kind of love; she kn's it can give you hell and she isn't ha g any. That's why I'll stand for any- thi she does—God knows it's a stiff assign- me ane, is there any chance at all? Do you th she's off me because I'm a C.O.? Th's the only way in which I won't change, ev for her. I want to find out what you re think about us two, and I'll be driving up ver the road before long.

nd how are you? I hear, from the bis op, ailing.

won't be leaving here before you could ge letter to me.

"Ever yours,
"STEPHEN."

ilfreda looked up as she came to the end ar found that Jane had risen on her elbow as ie lay on her cot, and was listening with sr ing attention.

Here, here," the nurse said gently. "Lie d n again."

ane relaxed obediently. "Stephen always s me good. I can't think why Daisy blows h and then cold, as she does."

She sounds like a little baggage," said freda, putting the letter in its envelope, "d Stephen is the salt of the earth, I sup- e. A Quaker?"

Oh, yes; for generations. As for Daisy, e loved her all her life—at least whenever I aven't been furious with her," and Jane s ed.

PEI-NI was putting on his tie. He was a g geous creature for the dingy room in vich he stood. It was cracked from bomb- i , and dirty from lack of care. The window s simply an opening into the murk of Chungking. The furnishing consisted of a oden bedframe laced with string, on which single heavy quilt lay in disorder. Under- ath this bed were two suitcases, made of ut materials, and each of them had two ks.

But the occupant of this apartment wore estern clothes. His coat and trousers atched. His shoes were new, and heavy ough to clump importantly. His tie, a ady-made bowknot, which fastened be- nd, was blue with white dots, and on the nd adjusting it were a large green jade ng and a bracelet watch.

Li took a final squint into the narrow irror. He approved his square jaw, and assed his hand over his black hair which ad reddish glints and a slight wave in it. hen he stuffed the quilt into one of the ases, locked it and chained it to a staple the single solid timber in the room, since the remainder of the wall surface was mud, daubed on woven bamboo. He picked up his hat and went out, snapping two locks of American make upon his flimsy door. His precautions were usual in the Chungking of those days. To lose his one quilt, or any of his clothing, would be a major disaster.

HE had not eaten that morning, and as he passed down the street to his usual food shop he stopped to buy a copy of the newspaper he read each day. He did not choose a restaurant, but patronized a sort of shed open to the street where the cooking was done in plain sight. He sat down on a two-inch bench at a rickety table near the stove in which a shallow pan set over a charcoal fire was sending up a cloud of steam from noodles boiling with a few scraps of pork and a selection of green vegetables. A shopboy several degrees dirtier than the average citizen brought him a dish of salted shreds of turnip and a pair of wooden chopsticks. Li took notice that the other customers were two ricksha coolies seated on the other side of the stove. He opened his paper and began to read.

The shopboy brought a dark gray bowl filled with slippery lengths of coarse dough strings and received his money. Li began to eat without ceasing to read. Presently he opened his sheet to its complete size and found, as he had expected, a strip of paper slipped between the sheets with a few characters written on it. The message was brief:

Proceed to Huai Yuen and take over forwarding of reports from air base. Establish relations with a missionary, Jane Breasted, and pick up information relative to her cousin Robert Trent, just arrived in OSS in Chungking. If possible, get B to recommend you to T for a job.

Li bent over his bowl and drew in the hot food with audible gurgling and hissing, and at the same time swallowed the thin strip of paper, which went down without difficulty. He finished his breakfast and called for some tea. Then he lighted a cigarette, and appeared to devote himself to the business of leisurely digestion. As he watched the curling smoke, he entered another time and place.

Before the Japanese invasion. Many years before. A bright little house in Harbin, melting pot of many racial strains from East and West. Two little boys playing noisily all day, and when bedtime came, listening to their mother's stories. She was slender and energetic, with yellow braids around her head, and fresh color and brave blue eyes. She told her boys about her home in Scotland, about her poverty there, and how she had a cousin, an engineer on the river steamers of the Sungari, who got her a chance to "come out east" as nursemaid to a British merchant

"Now look, I believed you when you said my shot was out."

modern by
HEYWOOD-WAKEFIELD
125TH ANNIVERSARY

Nice to have Now—and enjoy for years because it's "Home-Planned" Furniture

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

You're extra sure of quality when you buy products bearing the famous Heywood-Wakefield trademark, including—

OLD COLONY FURNITURE
ASHCRAFT FURNITURE
BABY CARRIAGES

You buy Heywood-Wakefield Modern for today's needs, but with sensible regard for the future. Because these exclusive "Home-Planned" designs give you all the convenience of "open stock" in selecting later additions that will harmonize perfectly in your living, dining and bedrooms. Only Heywood-Wakefield brings you such a rich background of 125 years experience in designing and building fine furniture. That's why it pays to insist on Heywood-Wakefield furniture at department and furniture stores.

Use This Helpful Planning Guide. This beautiful 32-page book by Gladys Miller, decorating consultant, brings you a world of smart ideas for planning your home around Heywood-Wakefield Modern. Send 25¢ for your copy today.

Heywood-Wakefield Company, Dept. LH-16, Gardner, Mass.
I enclose 25¢ for your book on Decorating with Modern by Gladys Miller.

NAME .....
STREET .....
CITY & ZONE ..... STATE .....

Looking at the pictures gives you an idea of the appeal of Gibbs tots-to-teen-age underwear. Selected, fine quality combed yarn assures long wear. Generous tailoring allows plenty of room for action, prevents binding and chafing. Gibbs underwear stays soft, holds its shape. It's made for long and active wear. See it at leading department stores and specialty shops.

Top to bottom:

Infant's gown.
Tie sleeve and bottom.
Pink, blue, maize, mint.

Infant's slipover shirt.
With didytabs.
Sizes 3 to 18 months

Infant's training pant.
2-way-stretch, elastic waist, double panel front and back.
Sizes 12 to 36 months.

Girl's slipover vest.
Patented shoulder.
Sizes 2, 4, 6, 8.

Girl's panty.
2-way-stretch, double panel front and back.
Sizes 2, 4, 6, 8.

Girl's vest.
Fine gauge super yarn.
Sizes 6 to 16.

Girl's panty.
Fine gauge super yarn, elastic waist, rib cuff leg.
Sizes 6 to 16.

Boy's "T" shirt.
Medium weight.
Sizes 2 to 16.

Boy's brief.
Medium weight, elastic waist, fly front.
Sizes 2 to 16.

Runproof slip and panty of Gibbs soft Tricot. Trimmed with Val Lace. Easily washed; no ironing needed. Pink, blue, white, maize Sizes 2 to ■ and 10 to 16.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Ask for Gibbs in Infants', Children's and Teen Age Sizes
GIBBS UNDERWEAR CO.
Empire State Bldg., New York 1, N.Y. Philadelphia 34, Pa.

family. Fine people they were, and she earned a good wage. But then they left the Far East and she kept house for the engineer cousin. That was lonely. He was always away, and she needed company. So it was she met their Korean father, and married him, and the two of them were born. One boy looked like Scotland and the other like Korea.

The two boys were still very small when the father died. The mother became the breadwinner. She was housekeeper to an irascible fellow countryman of dubious reputation. He permitted the boys to live with their mother, and for that reason she bore with his temper, but the hard lot of the Eurasian began for Pei-Ni and his brother. They went to a mission school where there were pupils of many races, but among them all there never seemed to be friends for "Benny" and "Bobbie." At home the old Scotsman swore and growled at the woman who did for him. Finally in a school squabble, another boy shouted the inevitable gossip at her sons. Benny could still see his elder brother's face, white as a sheet, fixed as ice when those words hurtled into his ears. The boys were sixteen and fourteen. They never told their mother, but they began to beg her to leave the old reprobate. Her reply never changed: "We cannot leave yet. We have no money and no place to go. You must get your schooling, and we must wait until you can earn."

But the waiting was too long for the elder son. Benny remembered the summer when he grew stranger and stranger. Then one day he went bathing in the river. It was an accident that he was drowned, they told his mother, but Benny knew. And he thought his mother knew too. That was when he was fifteen, and he vowed it should be his last year at school. It was the first year for "Teacher Jane." She had seemed drawn to the boy who looked like an Oriental but talked English with a slight Scotch accent. She wanted to know Benny's mother. She seemed quite unaware that no other white women went to see the Scotsman's housekeeper.

And so it happened that when his mother fell ill, and felt her last hour approaching, she asked for Jane. When the funeral was over, the old Scotsman sent for Benny.

"You'll not be staying longer in my house," he announced. "And I've a final word for you. Your mother was a good woman, but her marriage was her mistake, and you'll be to suffer for it. There's but one way for such as you. Get money, if you can. There's no other power or protection for you."

MANY years ago. The few months he had known Jane had almost been forgotten in the welter of experiences since. The struggle to find employment, the dislike for his mixed blood. The sharpening of wits to make a try at different jobs, all menial, all humiliating, but also the discovery that he was clever—capable of more than one method of making his way. Then the flooding in of the Japanese.

Well, Benny had seen his chance. He was set hard and evil tasks, but when he was found to be intelligent, he was paid more than anyone had ever paid him, and Benny had long ago decided that he could not afford to be particular. Someday he would end his bondage. Someday he would get away, perhaps to Australia, or New Zealand, and know security at last.

Now he was set to make use of Jane Breasted, who had been good to his mother. Well, no harm could be intended to her. Benny shrugged, dropped the butt of his cigarette under the table, and went to take a bus to Huai Yuen.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Moon in the Morning

By Elizabeth-Ellen Long

Like a hornet's nest
With the swarm gone,
A frail moon hangs from
A limb of dawn,

Only a dry husk
Of silver gray
Since the last winged star
Flew far away!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Jane Breasted to Robert Trent:

So you want me to write to you, and are w ing to answer any questions about your which I may choose to ask? My dear cou indefinitely removed, aren't you a little ra Suppose I inquired whether you are bald a have a thick neck? And then suppose you manded of me whether I have wrinkles a wear spectacles? You must agree that such a ginning would spoil everything! Let us lea some matters to conjecture. . . . You demand be instructed about China. There is a gr friend of mine in Chungking who is deep learned and can discourse on things Chin much better than I can. His name is Bar Manners, and he's attached to the embassy. see him.

I should have replied to you sooner, but I' been occupied in moving to a new place. I'm the Wang Family Garden. We are not far fro the new air base, and late in the afternoon often hear the thunder of the planes going somewhere. So I know there is a war on; I a not allowed to forget it.

Give my greetings to Daisy Fairchild. Sh has not seen me for a great many years, so yo can't check up on whether I have wrinkles an wear glasses through her.

J. B.

Dr. Barry Manners to Jane Breasted:

You will be surprised to learn that I have a rived here in a capacity which I am not a liberty to discuss. Sometime I hope to be flyin to Huai Yuen, where I sha see you.

Have you been able t continue our investigation Chinese gardens?

By the way, I congrat ulate you upon the publi cation of your monograp by The Council of Learne Societies. Very useful ma terial it is. I cite some of i in my forthcoming book t be published after the war, i I can get it subsidized.

Our Chinese garden i Chinese culture in miniature If anything of its serenity its beauty could be breathed into the West, what a heal ing influence it could be!

What am I doing at the moment? Betraying my faith and busying myself in a brutal war, when my proper business is in a well-appointed library.

What are you doing? Let me have a line to tell me whether there is a chance for one of our garden expeditions.

As ever,

B. M.

From the Journal of Wilfreda Grayson:

We have been nearly two weeks now in the Garden and Jane is a different person. We pursued the even tenor of our ways until yesterday, when there was a slight interruption. During the siesta hour Shang Shih called me out and said there was a young Chinese asking for Jane—said he used to be her student. I went to the Mirror Pavilion, and found a Eurasian there. He was well dressed in Western clothes—in fact, rather gaudy. He looked distinctly disappointed when I explained that Jane was recovering from an illness and was not able to receive her friends. He asked if he might come back later, and I agreed that he might try in another ten days.

But I am really worried that we shall have a spate of visitors who cannot be sent off so easily. All the people who write to her seem determined to come and see her. Major Trent speaks of flying across from the capital—which takes only forty-five minutes—and Doctor Manners wants to see this garden, for Jane has sent him an account of it. Of course she gives these people no hint of the real situation and talks as if she had a normal life span before her. I marvel that she can care about such things as the affairs of other folk, and Chinese garden architecture!

Jack Fernald stood outside his tent on the isolated air base in the foothills of the Snow Mountains of West China. In India, he and his mates had been keen to get on to China. Now, in China, they all wished they hadn't been rushed out of India so fast. They were sitting under the Himalayas with no missions to fly, and no place to go when they got leave. The morale of the whole bunch was cracking up.

LAZY BONES
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. AND CANADA.
EXIBLE SHANK SHOES

for the Comfort-Loving Children

onomylinded Mothers

ngsters want foot-free action—need foot-comfort—for their growing feet. And with Y-BONES Shoes, the action and comfort are t in because the stubborn stiffness of ordiy, rigid shoe soles is left out. LAZY-BONES
es are correct—not corrective!

ilable in sizes from tots to teeners—and led to delight every member of the young —LAZY-BONES Shoes are priced amazingly for such fine quality and shoemaking skill.

nuine
odyear
lts

es 4½ to 8
.95
es 8½ to 12
.45
es 12½ to 3
.95
es 3½ to 12
.95
lf Oxfords
.95

ite for name of nearby LAZY-BONES Dealer
AZY-BONES SHOEMAKERS
21 Locust Street ■ St. Louis 3, Mo.
LAZY-BONES
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. AND CANADA.
FLEXIBLE SHANK SHOES

A coolie servant appeared at the door of the next tent, with his arms full of GI washing. Jack watched him padding off down the row of shelters toward the service quarters, and his thoughts took another turn.

He was mighty leery of slopies. No security possible with the place full of those silent eyes. The slopies worked hard, all right, but they were a bunch of chiselers and wouldn't be sorry to see the GI's rubbed out—that was what he'd decided about them . . . And the Japs had found out that the B29's were in. They probably knew the fighter protection hadn't arrived yet. Now all he, Jack, had to do was to think about the Japs and the stories about what happens when you get shot down behind their lines.

He was going to get killed.

That was it—that was what was in the back of his mind . . . of everybody's mind. His head was bursting—all mixed up. He couldn't talk to a soul; he couldn't take it any longer.

Fernald began walking down the field in the opposite direction from that which the coolie had taken. The road which had been built from Huai Yuen to the field entered the base at a point in plain sight, and he could see the sentry on duty.

He was going out of here. He was going AWOL. They might try to stop him, but he didn't care. He was going to get killed. Might as well be now, as under Jap torture. Yes, he was a coward, so what? He was going AWOL.

Somebody was shouting at him. Somebody came up behind him. He wheeled about and spoke: "Look, you. I'm going to be by myself. If you bother me I'll shoot you first and myself afterward. Now, get going."

Somebody else seemed to arrive. He heard voices: "Let him go." . . . "He won't get far. The medics will handle him." . . . "He's been queer for a week." So he walked off into space.

He didn't notice much outside his own head at first. But by and by the disturbance and the confusions quieted a little. He was striding along a path off the main road that led to the base. It skirted the fields of rape all in bloom like great squares of gold pasted on the gray countryside. There was gray sky and no sun.

He did not notice how long he walked. If he saw people he kept away from them, but there were only a few peasants laboring, face downward to the earth. Then he found his path was running beside a high wall. Inside the wall he became aware of tremendous tall trees. He noticed their shade because it seemed queer to find so many all at once.

He walked on. He went around corners of the wall—three of them. He wondered why the place was so big. He began to think how he could get inside that wall . . . up into those trees. The medics, he figured, would have a hard time catching him if they had to shin up such big trees.

He came to a door, and stopped. It seemed an unused door. It was double-leaved, with cracks in it so that he could make out a big bar going right across it inside. There was a stone lintel, and the top of the wall was not out of arm's reach from that projection. Soon he was astride, looking over on the other side.

There wasn't much to see, except some irregular rises of ground that went along in a wavy line inside the straight line of wall. The big trees grew on them, and on the ground lower down, too, and presently he saw a footpath, so he got himself over on the path, and walked along there. He was getting curious.

Soon he found steps cut in the slope and faced with bricks. They led down to a wider path below; he descended and followed that. It took him to a flat bridge of rough gray stone, standing over a current of water. Then he came to another wall. This was on the other side of the stream, and only as high as his head. He could jump the little channel, and when he saw an opening in the wall he did. He had to stoop a little as he went through.

He found himself standing under a roof carried on pillars. There was a house—or a

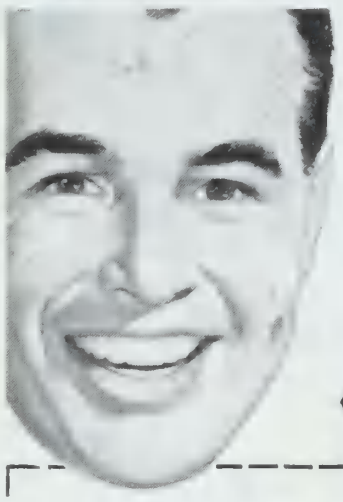
WHAT ARE YOUR BIGGEST BABY WORRIES?

GIVE BABY SCIENTIFIC PROTECTION AGAINST THEM ALL WITH

JOHNSON'S BABY LOTION

TODAY, your baby can enjoy blessed new protection from the most worrisome skin afflictions of infancy.

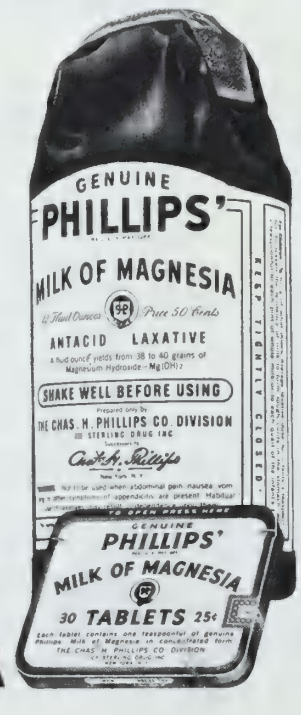
Johnson's Baby Lotion, a new scientific formula, actually kills the germs that give rise to impetigo and diaper rash (ammoniacal dermatitis). It is highly effective in the prevention and treatment of heat rash and cradle cap. Hospital tests have proved these important facts.



Just smooth this white, velvety, non-irritating lotion all over baby's body after his bath and apply it at every diaper change. It prevents that unpleasant "ammonia" diaper odor, too, keeps baby fresh and sweet.

So banish your baby-skin worries. Use protective Johnson's Baby Lotion every day. Get a bottle right away!

Johnson & Johnson



Phillips' does more than LAZY LAXATIVES

Not Only Relieves Constipation, But Accompanying Acid Indigestion, Too!

Three tablespoonfuls for constipation and accompanying acid indigestion! When irregularity causes you trouble, you should take Phillips', because Phillips' brings more complete relief than lazy laxatives which simply relieve constipation. Wonderful Phillips' also relieves the acid indigestion that frequently accompanies constipation!

One tablespoonful for stomach upset alone! Phillips' contains one of the fastest, most effective neutralizers of excess stomach acids known. Brings amazingly fast relief from upset stomach, gas, heartburn and other symptoms of acid indigestion.

LIQUID PHILLIPS' AVAILABLE IN 75¢, 50¢ and 25¢ BOTTLES
PHILLIPS' TABLETS IN $1.00, 50¢ and 25¢ SIZES

PHILLIPS' MILK OF MAGNESIA

sort of room, mostly paper-backed lattice—to his right. To his left was more roof carried on more pillars, and space and greenness.

Then a voice said, "Hello, there."

The voice was quiet, but he started violently. He saw a big chair, and in it, done up in something blue, was a small pointed face looking at him.

"Hello, there," said the voice again.

Fernald stared and stammered hello. At last he remembered something about manners and brought out, "I beg your pardon."

"Pardon? For what?" said the quiet voice.

"I didn't know anyone was here," said Fernald.

"No," said the voice. "Of course not. I haven't been here very long myself." Then the eyes shut, the face went dreadfully white, and he saw that it was in pain.

"Can I do anything? Shall I go away?"

But the woman in the chair opened her eyes again and said, "Don't go. Sit down."

She pointed toward a flat rock in the ground nearby, and Fernald sat down. He saw that there was a little pool in front of the house, partly surrounded by the roofed gallery. The pool, the house and the gallery lay in a cup of miniature hills, and there were dwarf pine trees, and bamboos and fruit trees in blossom all about him. The air was spring-warm, and gentle in its grayness.

Soon the woman in the chair spoke again. "The pain is gone now."

Fernald turned his eyes toward her cautiously. "It was mighty bad, wasn't it?"

"Yes. It comes, but it goes again. I wouldn't have spoken about it, but you saw it. Perhaps you and I are in the same boat?"

Fernald wondered what she could mean. "How can we be in the same boat?"

"We are both facing death, aren't we? I see by your uniform that you are a pilot; you see that I am ill and can't recover. We both face death, and we can speak of it to each other."

He never afterward could quite sort out what happened to him next. He knew there came a sound of a tearing sob, and all the confusion and anguish seethed up within him to a bursting point. He found himself down beside the chair with his head in the folds of the blanket, and time stopped.

When he could think again, there was relief. The confusion was gone. The strings of his eyeballs did not pull.

"That's better," she said. "What's your name? Mine's Jane."

He mumbled his name and tried to rise to his feet, but she put her hand on his shoulder.

"Don't get up," she said. "Turn round, and lean your head back and be quiet."

He obeyed her, fumbling for his handkerchief and overwhelmed with embarrassment as self-consciousness reasserted itself. Then he heard her say in most matter-of-fact tones:

"Blow your nose, and don't mind about me."

She had arranged matters so that he did not need to meet her eyes, and he sat staring out into quiet greenness and at smooth water which stood still and received the long green shadows of the trees upon its banks. Finally he turned and looked up at Jane. He found her gazing into distance, and her lips, though not smiling, seemed about to smile. As he moved she brought her eyes to dwell upon him and he felt a lingering, seeking quality in her look.

"How did you get into the garden?" she wanted to know.

"Is that what this is?"

"Of course. It is a Chinese garden, and a very beautiful one."

"I came in over the wall. I suppose I shouldn't."

George Bernard Shaw was always apt with the turn of a phrase. It took him so long to decide to marry that when he finally deserted the ranks of the bachelors he was deluged with queries on his opinion of matrimony. He polished off a pat answer which became his stock reply, and which he used through the many ensuing years as his definition of marriage: "I might say that it is like Freemasonry; those who are not received into the order cannot talk about it and those who are members are pledged to eternal silence."

"You weren't quite yourself."

"I was going nuts. And when you spoke . . . I went to pieces. But now I'm O.K. I don't know what's happened to me."

"You might talk a little," Jane suggested. "It's one good way to figure things out."

"Talk? What's the good of talking?"

"It seemed to do some good a few minutes ago."

He thought this over. "Yes," he said. "I was all mixed up. Now I'm O.K., but what's to prevent me going haywire again when I get back to the base?" He put his head between his hands broodingly, and now felt Jane's fingers lightly in his hair.

"I don't think you'll go nuts any more," she said.

"You don't? A fat lot ——" He stopped.

"Yes. To other people you could say 'A fat lot you know about it.' But you can't say that to me. I do know."

He pulled himself out of his brooding and looked at her. "Say, you told me you would get well. Are you sure?"

"As sure as my doctors and my closest friends are. They think it may be about three months now."

"And you think so yourself?"

"I think so myself."

He continued to turn this over in his mind. Then he looked up again. "Say, what's the matter with you?

She told him, and he drew a sharp breath.

"God! They say it's awful. It's the worst —— Can't they do anything about it?"

"Oh, yes, they can do a great deal. I may in three months I suspect I shan't need help any more. And it will be all right."

"It's all right," he repeated. "You can't go nuts. You just sit still and say it's all right."

She was silent a while, and the short sentences with the pauses between recurred.

"You haven't got a chance. . . . You've got to go that way. . . . Hell, what have I got to crab about? I've got some chance, have I? I've got the best damned outfit in the service behind me. If you're not scared I don't have to be."

"You don't have to be. At the base or anywhere else."

There was silence again, and he noticed that Jane relaxed in her chair as if something had been settled. Presently he looked around again.

"You told me your name. You're Jane. But—but who in hell are you, anyway?" He stopped suddenly. There was a dimple playing hide-and-seek with the corner of Jane's mouth. "Oh," he said in dismay, "I bet you're ——"

"Yes?" she prompted. "One of those missionaries. Yes, I am."

Jack looked at her reproachfully. "I hope you don't think I mind," he said earnestly. He got to his feet.

"Sit down," she commanded, and he sat. "Did you think I would preach you a sermon? I'm not a preaching missionary. I find there are some things that don't go into words; and I belong to the Quakers, who have a great fondness for silence."

At this point an old slopy came shuffling into the veranda, and after Jane had listened to what he said she turned to Fernald.

"Your friends are here, looking for you."

Jack remembered that there were such things as medics and AWOL regulations, but as he got slowly to his feet he felt able to cope with them.

"Jane," he began, "there's two things I've got to ask. What's your last name? And may I come again?"

"My name is Breasted. Will the authorities at the base encourage you to come?"

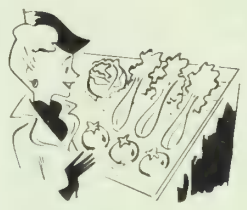
"They'd better." Leaning over, he kissed her hands and then her cheek. "I'll be back."

(Continued on Page 152)

BUY-LINES • by Nancy Sasser

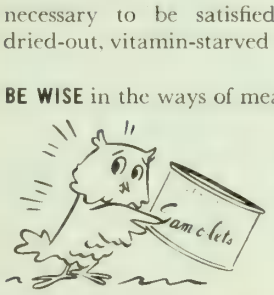
AN ADVERTISING PAGE

A BRIGHT NOTE to your breakfasts . . . a your family will sing your praises all d long. What do I mean by a bright n ? Why, tall, sparkling glasses of D L MONTE Unsweetened Pineapple J e . . . for it puts sunshine in your life, s ngtime in your heart. In fact, I call it a rink of tropic magic . . . because L L MONTE'S exclusive strains of pine- a le have true tropic flavor and are p ked only when natural tartness and s etness are in perfect balance. That's y y it's not too tart and not too sweet . . . t most refreshing pineapple juice you e r tasted. But don't take my word for it . . compare DEL MONTE Pineapple J ce with any other brand and you'll s . Abounds in natural fruit sugars and o contains Vitamin C . . . yet is so-o-o o nomical. So don't serve it just at e akfast . . . add its sunny beauty d festive flavor to other meals and a cks, too.



U CAN LEAD A DOUBLE LIFE . . . go through those trying days every month without anyone knowing your secret and much less aware of it yourself. You can, that is, if you depend on TAMPAX for monthly sanitary protection . . . for it's worn internally and absorbs internally . . . can't be seen or felt when in place, or interfere with any ctivity. Just think of it . . . no more un- omfortable, "obvious" pads and belts, . . no tell-tale bulges to show in sheer rocks or snug playclothes. With TAMPAX there's no chafing or odor, ither . . . and you can bathe without re- moving the TAMPAX. Remember, too . . TAMPAX is the invention of a doctor nd is made of extremely absorbent sur- gical cotton compressed into dainty little pplicators . . . is easy to insert quick to hange and no trouble to dispose of. So ut your faith in TAMPAX . . . let people see you always at your poised, elf-confident best!

BITS of brightly colored wool yarn, a crochet hook, a dash of imagination and lo! . . . an afghan is "born!" How were afghans really born? Well, they're almost as old as time itself . . . although they weren't called "afghans" until the last century. It seems that, after the British campaign in Afghanistan during the 1830's, soldiers took home shawls made of Afghan goats' hair . . . and, ever since, "afghan" has meant any kind of wool coverlet made by hand. Even the most "elaborate" ones are easy and fun to make . . . something you'll treasure always. Why not try one?



NOW IS THE TIME FOR EVERY GOOD HOMEMAKER to get her full money's worth when buying fresh vegetables . . . so let me make a suggestion. Always shop at stores where vegetables are displayed on crushed ICE . . . for scientific research has proved time and again that this modern method of protecting vegetables while they're displayed keeps them garden-fresh and vitamin-rich . . . as well as delicious and nutritious, too. That's why it's no longer necessary to be satisfied with wilted, dried-out, vitamin-starved vegetables . . .

and why I urge you to shop only at stores where they're protected by crushed ICE. Now let me send you this:

FREE Booklet called "Money-Saving Tips on Marketing" . . . a complete color-illustrated guide to wise buying which shows you how to get the best vegetables, fish and poultry for less. In my opinion, it's absolutely invaluable . . . write Nancy Sasser, 271 Madison Ave., New York, N.Y. for your FREE copy today!

BE WISE in the ways of meal-planning . . . depend on DEMING'S Sam-O-Lets to give you priceless protein main dishes at a budget-pleasing price. It's simply wonderful . . . a different kind of light meat salmon with a luscious, delicate flavor. The cost is oh-so little, too . . . so get DEMING'S Sam-O-Lets today and, for a peak-treat tonight, try these Delu e Croquettes:

Drain and flake 7¾-oz. can DEMING'S Sam-O-Lets. Add and mix well ¼ cup cracker crumbs, ¼ tsp. salt, 1 egg (unbeaten). Shape into 6 uniform croquettes; dip in 1 egg (slightly beaten). Roll in cracker crumbs and fry in deep fat (350–375°F.) until golden brown, about 10 mins. Or fry in regular frying pan in approx. 2 tbsp. shortening.

And remember . . . thanks to DEMING'S exclusive feature (salmon with the skin removed!), DEMING'S Sam-O-Lets is the secret of the world's best salads and sandwiches.

WHAT'S COOKING . . . pancakes, gingersnaps, whipped turnips, mayonnaise or ice cream? Well, they all have one thing in common . . . they're easier to make, smoother to taste with a GENERAL ELECTRIC Triple-Whip Mixer. I can't begin to tell you what a wonderful helper-outer it is . . . but I'll try:

There's a new improved speed selector out in front where you can get the just-right power you need . . . plus 3 beaters that beat from center to side of bowl for ideal mixing action. This bright sparkling beauty has a built-in light that shines directly down into the bowl, too . . . spotlighting those fancy mixing jobs. And you get a wondrous plastic juicer, a 2-quart and a 4-quart bowl with every mixer.

But why go on . . . let your G-E Dealer show you how a G-E Triple-Whip Mixer can make you a better cook with extra leisure time.

FREE Color-Illustrated Recipe Booklet with 56 quick, easy, taste-tempting treats. You'll love it . . . so write Nancy Sasser, Dept. S8, 271 Madison Ave., New York 16, N.Y. for yours TODAY!

FALL IS HERE with all its hustle and bustle . . . so why add to your busy schedule by marketing every day? You don't have to when you own a FRIGIDAIRE Refrigerator . . . for it will give you room a-plenty for a whole week's supply of food! So, do your heavy shopping once a week . . . when stores aren't crowded . . . and take advantage of special food bargains! Besides storing quantities of different foods, a FRIGIDAIRE keeps them all fresh and flavorful with constant SAFE Cold from top to bottom . . . thanks to the thrifty Meter-Miser, simplest cold-maker built! FRIGIDAIRE Refrigerators have loads of other advantages, too; most models having full-width Super-Freezer Chests for meats, desserts and frozen foods, bin-size Hydrators that keep a week's supply of fruits and vegetables fresh and crisp, plus many, many more time, food and money-saving features. Visit your FRIGIDAIRE Dealer and learn the whole wonderful "once-a-week shopping" story!

PACK YOUR CHILDREN OFF TO SCHOOL with a delicious, nutritious breakfast . . . but make it easy on yourself. How? Just put a package of POST-TENS on the table every morning . . . then let them help themselves. I know your whole family will love it . . . for this wonderful cereal assortment "serves" 7 different Post Cereals in 10 individual packages. This means they can choose an old favorite every day or try a new treat as often as they like . . . because this prize-package contains:

3 pkgs. of Post Toasties • 2 of Grape-Nuts Flakes ▪ 1 of Post's Sugar Crisp ▪ 1 of Post's 40% Bran Flakes ▪ 1 of Grape-Nuts ▪ 1 of Post's Raisin Bran ▪ 1 of Nabisco Shredded Wheat.

POST-TENS are a "toast" to your health as well as a treat to your taste, and wonderfully economical, too . . . for, since each package "serves" one, there's no waste, staleness or loss of flavor. Better make a note of it . . . to get POST-TENS today

A GIRL'S BEST FRIEND is her beauty . . . so don't neglect it or it won't be there when you need it most. And to serve your every glamour need to perfection, I suggest CO-ETS . . . handy fluted cotton squares that are downy-soft, satin-smooth and wonderfully absorbent. Truly, I find a CO-ET my best bet for applying ouge and powder, home permanent wave lotions, oundations and astringents . . . removing eye shadow, ipstick, excess cream and the like. Which reminds me . . . ou'll look lovely longer if you "anchor" your make-up ike this:

Use a CO-ET to apply rouge . . . then coat another clean CO-ET with powder and, without rubbing, press it firmly on your face and throat. Remove excess with a clean CO-ET . . and your "face" is on to stay.

CO-ETS please your purse while they pamper your prettiness, too . . . cost only 35¢ for the large economy package with 80 fluted cotton squares, 19¢ for 40. At all Drug and Cosmetic Counters.

I USED TO FUSS AND FRET about my hair all the time . . . because it was so dry, brittle and unruly I couldn't do a thing with it. Then I heard that John Robert Powers, famous beauty authority, recommended KREML Shampoo to all his models . . . so decided to try it. And you should see what a wonderful difference it makes . . . for, unlike shampoos with drying ingredients, it has a natural oil base. That's why it leaves hair silky soft, a darling to manage . . . as well as encourages any natural curl. Another thing I like about KREML Shampoo is its special cleansing qualities . . . the way it brings out all your hair's natural highlights and makes it sparkle with natural gloss and sheen. Try it once . . . you'll never use any other kind. And for your Mr. Who, I recommend KREML Hair Tonic . . . which now comes in a new package at the lowest price in KREML history. Saves you up to 40% . . . when you buy the 16-oz. size.

MY YOUNG MEMBER OF THE BIB 'N' CRIB SET is all the proof I need . . . Johnson's BABY OIL and Johnson's BABY POWDER offer baby-safe protection against irritation, chafing and prickles. And know why I chose this particular combination for my baby? Because both these fine products are made especially to "agree" with baby's delicate, sensitive skin by America's foremost makers of baby products . . . Johnson & Johnson. You can put your trust in them, too . . . so keep them on your nursery tray and:

Smooth on Johnson's BABY OIL at every diaper change and apply to baby's scalp and body after every bath...see how this pure, soothing oil helps prevent skin irritation. Sprinkle on soft, silky Johnson's BABY POWDER often... will help ward off little chafes and prickles to keep baby comfy and contented.

If I were you, I'd get these two Johnson's Baby Products today . . . then your baby will be soothed, sweet and happy right away!

Tweedies®
ALLURING FOOTWEAR

the feminine slant

fastidiously

fashioned.

There is a dealer near you.

TWEEDIE FOOTWEAR CORPORATION • JEFFERSON CITY • MISSOURI

HI-LOW
Witchery

BRASSIERES

. . . the plunge STAYS in place with this . . . little LYRE-WIRE

STYLE 805
Rayon SATIN with lace frame. Also available in BROADCLOTH and NYLON.
A cup 32 to 36
B cup 32 to 38
C cup 32 to 40
White, pink, black 3.00

EXQUISITE FORM BRASSIERE, INC. New York 16 • Los Angeles 14 • Toronto

(Continued from Page 150)

Just as soon as I can fix it up—in a few days if I have luck."

"You'll be having luck," said Jane, "from now on."

He left her and followed Shang Shih along the garden paths.

"This chair," said Jane, "cost me five hundred dollars two years ago. How much do you think we could get for it now?"

Wilfreda looked over at her friend, who was enjoying her afternoon hour out of bed. She was established in a wicker chair which was low and the back of which was a wide curve, against which Jane in her blanket looked not unlike the body of a peacock against the spread of the tail.

"What makes you think of selling?" the nurse asked.

"Because we need some extra cash, don't we? I can see your forehead pucker into a knot every time Shang Ma comes to you for the vegetable money."

"You are too weak to sit on stools with no backs, or to perch on the chairs which are so high and stiff. We will not part with the peacock chair."

"It was sheer worldliness which made me buy it," Jane confided. "Two years ago five hundred dollars was about one dollar in American money. . . . However, if you don't sell this, we must think of something else."

"I don't see that you have anything to spare."

"Take my underwear," Jane suggested after a moment of reflection. "Good wool commands a price, even if it is worn and darned. Mine was Dr. Eleazar Humphry's best. When he was obliged to leave for the States, I made all the other single ladies very mad by getting him to sell to me. He was rather stout, although not much taller than I, and it's always prevented my having anything like a spirituelle figure in winter. So take it. Brother Ass won't be needing his winter things again, you know."

"It isn't the season for selling wool," said Freda. "But I will go into Huai Yuen before long, and I'll visit the hock shop."

Jane leaned back contentedly. The quietness spread before her eyes like the quietness which floated in at her ears, and reached deep into her being. She was soothed into renewed strength. Surely she would be able, before long, to go about outside the San Yu Chai.

"Freda," she began, "did you ever come across Master Yuan again, after the day you met him with Wang Wei-Chou?"

"Never. I've often wondered why he doesn't come to inquire about you."

"Oh, that would not be good manners. In China, in the old days, a well-bred woman asked only one courtesy from a man—that of being left completely to herself. If she was modest, she could not endure the suggestion of having the slightest interest in anyone outside the family circle. Therefore Master Yuan keeps to his side of the garden, and presumes that I wish to keep to mine."

"But you don't?"

"No. I'm not a refined Chinese lady. I'm a Westerner who wishes to talk with Master Yuan about a thousand things. So I shall be bold-faced and send him a note. Could you bring me writing materials, Freda?"

"I never learned to write Chinese," sighed the nurse as she fetched Jane's portfolio.

JANE'S dimple showed for a moment. "Master Yuan will hardly regard me as literate. My handwriting is laborious and uneven like a child's. But he will be able to make out what I mean."

She used her fountain pen and filled a few squares on her paper with very stout, definite-looking characters. She folded it and inscribed the scholar's name on the outside.

"When Shang Shih goes over with his evening rice, he can take this to Master Yuan and bring the answer."

"When are you asking him to come?"

Jane appeared shocked. "Of course I'm not asking him to come. I asked Master Yuan whether there would be some time the next week or two when he would al me to call upon him."

"Now, Jane! At least he can walk and y can't."

"Modify your statement, my dear. can walk; but he wouldn't want to w across the garden to call upon me. He wo be embarrassed; he wouldn't know what do about a lady in an invalid state. As me, let us say that just at present I do walk. However, by the time he is ready receive me, I shall be able; you'll see."

WHEN the reply came, Jane displayed with the pride of showmanship. "It's luc I know, to start with, what he's likely say. He uses an elaborate literary style, a his character is certainly very free. Le see . . . let's see." She studied the no "Um . . . um . . . yes; he will be glad to me whenever I wish to come. He is alwa in the library. A word to Shang Shih will sufficient."

"Doesn't sound like an exact translatio Wilfreda said.

"No," said Jane. "I can't read it all. T is our event for the day, isn't it? I prom not to walk over to the Library of Fo Delights until you give me leave. I belie that will be sooner than you think."

Jane's days of sitting up in the chair we followed by promenades in the gallery; so she was able to go to the Water Mir Pavilion and back. Wilfreda marveled at t increase of energy, and longed to believe t improvement was permanent. She put t inevitable out of her thoughts for the ti being, and she wondered if Jane were doing the same.

We all hope he is where we all know he ain't.

—Funeral sermon ascribed to Negro clergyman.

The visit to Mast Yuan was constantly d cussed. Freda was of t opinion that it would n do for so cloistered a sc to be confronted with t women at once. It was nally agreed that the ne time Wilfreda went to Huai Yuen, Ja should walk over very slowly, stopping rest at the Water Mirror Pavilion, and spe a morning hour in beginning her acquai ance with the old scholar. Shang Ma was be taken along as a precaution.

The shopping excursion required that W freda set off very early. She could sa ricksha fare by walking into the city, whi would take her about three hours. Comi back there would be things to carry, and s would ride.

The morning turned out to have shafts misty sunlight for Jane's encouragement, a by ten o'clock she was on her way wi Shang Ma. Her destination was near a rust bridge which spanned the watercourse und leaning trees. The Library of Four Deligh stood to the west and north. At first it w only a curved roof, lifting in the midst sheltering trees. But as Jane came neare she saw its ample proportions, under its de eaves, with all its windows open to the su mer air.

Master Yuan was expecting her. His da figure appeared on the path, where he sto bowing to receive her. Jane halted sever steps away to bow in return, and was the ushered into the house while she apologize for intruding, and was made ceremonious welcome. She was seated opposite the op door in a black wood chair the exact mate the one in which Master Yuan took his plac Shang Ma put cups of tea on the squa black table between them, and then retire outside the door.

Jane fervently hoped she acquitted herse without too many blunders while the intr ductory politenesses were going on. She to in the appearance of the room where the were sitting. It had a desk drawn near window, and there were cases on the wal for the books which were protected by the covers secured with ivory pegs in silke loops. She knew that before she left it would b proper for her to make a tour of the room ar admire the bronze curios, the porcelain jar the bits of jade carving which were place in their respective niches in cabinets pr pared to exhibit such treasures. But to beg

EN YOU'RE 70...

U'LL STILL BE USING THE NICHOLS
NEVER-STAIN
AL MINUM CLOTHESLINE
YO BOUGHT AT 25
IT ASTS A LIFETIME!
★ ON'T RUST OR ROT
★ 'ON'T CRACK OR STRETCH
★ OLDS ALL TYPES F CLOTHESPINS
★ NCE UP — ALWAYS UP UMMER AND WINTER
★ /ILL NOT SOIL FABRICS
TYPES AVAILABLE
SOLID STRANDED
COMMENDED BY THE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU OF PARENTS' MAGAZINE
REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
HOLS WIRE AND ALUMINUM CO.
DAVENPORT, IOWA

BIG ONEY FOR OU!
Easy-To-Sell Yard Goods
Wanted! Responsible people to sell Imported and Domestic Dress and Suit Fabrics. Hundreds of exclusive designs. Attractive sample book insures fast sales. Write NOW for details of this amazing way to large earnings!
BUCKLEY BROTHERS
ENGLISH SHOP LTD., Dept. LH9
205 Wolfs Lane, Pelham 65, N. Y.

MAKE MONEY FAST!
Sell Christmas Cards, Gift Items Stationery and Everyday Cards
Make AMAZING PROFITS calling on friends, others. Show 7 leading 21-Card $1 Christmas and Everyday boxes, Religious, Comics, Currier & Ives, Secret Pal Cards, Gift Wrappings, Ribbons, Rain Sandals, Glove Holders, Napkins, Telephone Pencils, Children's Cards and Books. New items galore.
No Experience Necessary
Thousands succeed. WRITE TODAY for actual SAMPLES On Approval, Special Offers and bonus plan for yourself, club or church group.
CARD STMAS rtment 1.00
OVER 150 FAST SELLERS
21-CARD ALL OCCASION Assortment $1.00
Hedenkamp & Co. INC.
361 Broadway, Dept. L-11
New York 13, N.Y.

Corns
Callouses? Bunions? Sore Toes?
HERE'S INSTANT, SURE RELIEF!
instant you apply Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads, ful shoe friction stops, pressure is lifted. with this fast relief you get separate ler-working Medications for speedily re- ng corns, callouses. Get a box of these soothing, cushioning, protective pads y—world's largest selling foot reliefs.
ORNS CALLOUSES BUNIONS SOFT CORNS
Dr Scholl's Zino-pads

with, she should drink tea and make general observations with as much repose as she, being from the nervous West, could manage.

She shifted to the subject of the garden. Could Master Yuan tell her something about the family history of the Wangs and their ownership of the garden? Did it go back many generations?

The scholar bowed and replied with a quotation from the classics. Jane caught the style but entirely missed the sense.

"Please, Master Yuan," she said, "this miserable person is a foolish woman from the West with no literary education. If Master Yuan would speak to her as to a child, it is more possible that this unworthy one would understand."

That the master agreed entirely with Jane's account of herself was clear even while he made a politely deprecating rejoinder; but then he did descend to a level of communication which she could follow.

"The ancestor of Wang Wei-Chou," said Master Yuan, "settled in Canton and became a merchant at the time when trade was opening between China and the West. The Wang family became rich and purchased land in many places. Such was the beauty of this place that they preferred it to all their other lands. The ancestral integrity of the Wang family has been great. The grandfather of Wang Wei-Chou, when a young man, passed the imperial examination and entered official life with high hopes. But he gave up his post when he discovered that he could not remain both an official and an honest man. When he returned to this garden he was visited by Wu Mei-Sun, an artist, who was his friend. He was not one of our great painters, of course," said Master Yuan. "But he was descended from Wu Chen, who was the best painter of bamboos in the Yuan dynasty, and he tried to follow in his ancestor's footsteps. He did a series of views of this garden. It is called The Bamboo Masterpiece of Wu Mei-Sun, and is a famous possession of the family." Her host went to a table where an album of pictures was lying open. He brought it to her, saying, "These paintings in my collection are also from the hand of Wu Mei-Sun."

THERE were eight landscapes bound in book leaves with covers of worn brocade. Each picture was in a different style of brushwork, and on each leaf were the red seals of the collector who had owned the paintings before Master Yuan. The old man talked about his treasures and their history, and as he talked Jane became aware that she was in the presence of a dedicated soul. It was his duty to go on being Yuan the Scholar in the face of Japanese atrocities and American B-29's. Provinces were overrun, and new weapons of destruction were planted in the shadow of the Himalayas; but the Scholar Yuan continued to practice calligraphy, write occasional poetry and examine paintings and ink slabs as his highest duty. Now he made a startling remark:

"You have some understanding of these paintings. Can you, perhaps, suggest how they might be sold?"

She was shocked by the sudden intrusion of his necessity. Only actual want could separate the lover from his beloved, the connoisseur from his treasures. She was careful not to change expression, and to keep her eyes on the picture before her.

"This should be in the hands of a lover of Chinese art," Jane said. "Would Yuan Hsien-Sheng regret if it passed to a foreigner?"

The old man gazed wistfully at his album, but he did not hesitate. "If one of your honorable friends is interested in such trifles, this might be added to his collection."

Jane thought of Stephen Purcell, and wondered if she could induce him to become a customer. But now she was obliged to close the book and to rise to go. "It is very beautiful," was all she could think of to say, and the courtesies of leave-taking put an end to embarrassment for the time being.

As she started back to her own quarters, Jane was conscious that she had done enough for that day. Shang Ma had lingered to wash

(Continued on Page 155)

fresh from the English countryside

BY APPOINTMENT PERFUMERS TO H. M. QUEEN MARY
YARDLEY, LONDON

...the lilting fragrance of Lavender is brought to you by Yardley. Subtly blended with precious oils, there is only one Yardley Lavender. Though it's luxurious beyond compare, you will want to use it as generously as toilet water. It's right for all your doings. Enjoy this unique fragrance, too, in creamy-lathering Lavender Soap.

Yardley English Lavender, from $1.75, plus tax
Dusting Powder, $1.65, plus tax
Lavender Soap, $1.35 (box of three)
Bath size, 75c a tablet

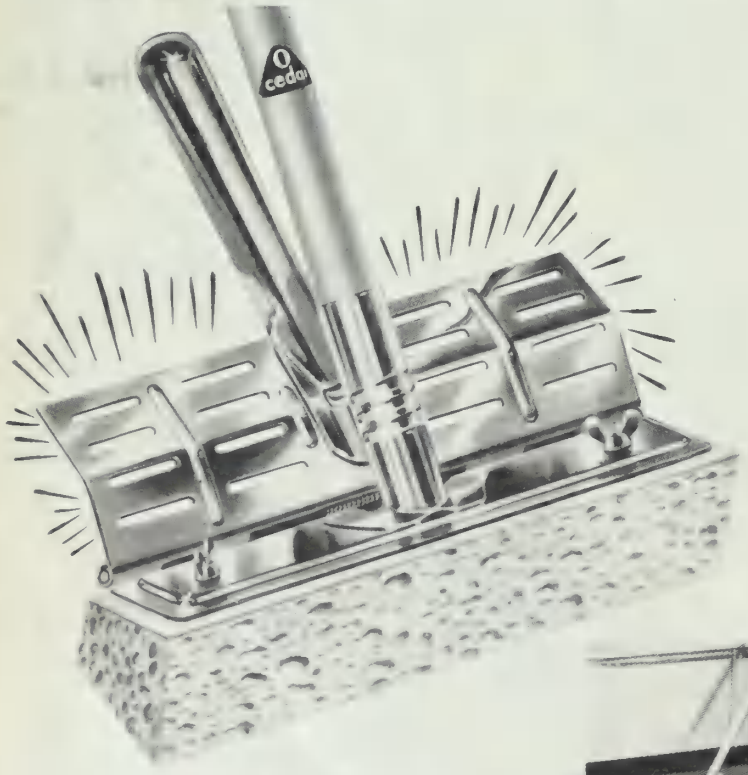
YARDLEY
English Lavender

Yardley products for America are created in England and finished in the U. S. A. from the original English formulae, combining imported and domestic ingredients. Yardley of London, Inc., 620 Fifth Avenue, N.Y.C.

Let this new wet mop keep your hands dry!

No more wringing!

Your hands need never touch scrub water again with a new O-Cedar Sponge Mop. You simply press the water out with a handy built-in squeezer. No need to stoop when squeezing.



No more rough, red hands!

Now your hands look as lovely, feel as soft and smooth after mopping as they do before. Your O-Cedar Sponge Mop keeps 'em out of hot, dirty scrub water.

Cleans floors faster!

The O-Cedar Sponge Mop's exclusive "wond working" angle teams up with hotter water, stron soap to clean your floors faster without harm to y hands. Sponge head dries floors faster, too!

Already proved in use by more than 3 million women!

O-Cedar Sponge Mop $3.95 complete

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

O-Cedar Corp'n, Chicago, Illinois — O-Cedar of Canada, Ltd., Toronto, Canada

O cedar

Get 4 extra uses with 1 extra sponge head!

Keep your O-Cedar Sponge Mop in good working condition by replacing the sponge head as soon as it needs one. Get an extra sponge head for waxing floors or other house-cleaning chores.

For waxing floors

For cleaning walls

For washing tile

For shampooing rugs

Where you buy cleaning supplies

(Continued from Page 153)

nd
and sser or t o co
He
her.
rib away the teacups, and was not at nen she felt exhaustion beginning to self. She thought of stopping to wait woman's appearance, but there was renient seat.
At
is moment she saw Shang Shih turn ner of the path, evidently in search of gave her a visiting card with a line
ed on it:

D
ten Teacher Jane . . . Do you remember in Harbin, in Truth Hall days?

B
uic
red
Wa
T he bo oo
no
I r ell ai nd
nit
h ve in st
as te ar pa cl of
th ned to him that Jane's attention wanded.
ny . . . of course, she must see him. She ned her steps and, with Shang Shih ing her, came within sight of the Mirror Pavilion.
Eurasian had been looking out over
ke. As he heard her step, he swung and came toward her.
ou do remember me?" he asked as he er hand.
ou are much heavier, and very much elegant," she told him, "but of course ember you. Let us sit down while you e what you have been doing."
h, refugeeing, just like everybody else," Benny as he took his place beside her.
hope you've not had as hard a time as
."
nny's response was a masterpiece. He red strictly to facts in matters which t conceivably come to Jane's ears gh other channels. In the account of the s when he had been out of her orbit, he ated freely. He described his poverty and ggles to better himself a country school-her; his adventures successes as a news-rman; and he con-
ed with the account thrilling escape from Japanese. But it

he came up with a question after a mont of silence. "So you are on a special asnment from your Chungking paper now.
you staying long in Huai Yuen?"
"A week or two. Then I may not be needed longer, and I'll have to look for another
."
ane leaned her head against the pillar ind her and wished that Wilfreda would
ne. Benny's voice seemed very far away.
"You know, Teacher Jane, I am hoping haps you will help me get work."
There was quite a pause before he got an swer. "Perhaps we can talk about that en you come again."
There was a quick step behind him and nny rose as another woman came into the vilion.
"Freda," said Teacher Jane in a very all voice, "this is Benny Li—an old stunt of mine—who will stay to lunch."

ENNY scarcely understood how it was that found himself strolling along the path to e west of the lake, while the two women nished somewhere behind the low hills to e east. The person called Freda had slipped r arm under Teacher Jane's shoulders and oved off with her, at the same time waving nny toward the opposite end of the vilion. She made no explanation, but rearked over her shoulder that she would be ck, and it was plain that Teacher Jane uldn't. Benny continued in the direction which he started, reflecting that he should ve been more observant—something must wrong.
He reached a point where he felt free from servation. He plunged his hand into the cket of his coat and brought out a roll of inted matter about as thick and as long as pencil. It was the daily newspaper which ways contained his orders. He glanced at for only a moment and swore heartily as disposed of the message. He had received sharp reprimand for delay in setting up the oadcast service to Tokyo. American Intelgence had been so active that all former annels were now impossible, and he was at s wits' end to think what to do next. As he llowed the path around the lake he began to wonder whether this garden might not be a possibility for a few broadcasts.

When he reached the Water Mirror, he found Wilfreda there.

"I'm sorry," the nurse said, "and Miss Breasted is very distressed. But she has been ill, and is not yet quite strong."

"I should have realized that she was tired," Benny apologized.

Wilfreda was surprised. The visitor did not seem a sensitive type. "She hopes you will stay to lunch," she said.

"Thanks, but not this time." He turned toward the gate. "Please tell her I shall come again soon."

SHANG SHIH closed the gate upon Benny and went off to Shang Ma's kitchen for the old scholar's noonday meal. He opened a deep wicker basket and lifted from its compartment a pewter bowl which was made in the shape of a lotus flower. It was lined with crackleware porcelain, and in it he placed a frugal portion of rather inferior rice. The basket was provided with padding covered with faded silk, in which were spaces exactly shaped to keep hot the four shallow plates formed like lotus leaves, which made up a complete service for a Chinese meal. The gateman put a spoonful of cabbage prepared with one or two dried shrimps for flavor in one of these, and then poured into a slender winepot a mere thimbleful of hot wine. He adjusted the little covers with knobs of white jade over the two poor portions of food; and went to the Library of Four Delights where his master's old tutor was starving out the war. When he had arrived in Szechwan, he had money with him. But the war had gone on too long. Shang Shih had noted that the food given out to be cooked had grown less and less in quantity, and when he carried out orders to purchase supplies he was directed to get poorer and poorer quality.

Respectability is the dickey on the bosom of civilization. —ELBERT HUBBARD.

He presented himself in the library and set his basket on the floor. Master Yuan was sitting at the square table, and the pewter dishes and winepot were placed before him.

"Venerable Teacher, please eat."

The servant retired respectfully outside the door, to wait until the meal should be finished. He waited long, for today Scholar Yuan ate very slowly. He savored each grain of rice, and each morsel of cabbage.

"Shang Shih," he called.

The servant appeared at once.

"This is the last of the rice I have measured for you?"

"The last, Venerable Teacher."

"You may clear the table."

Shang Shih fitted the dishes and the wine jug into their compartments in the basket and said, "What will the Venerable Teacher eat this evening?"

"This evening I shall not eat."

The gateman departed, his faithful head concerned for Scholar Yuan. The latter sat very still for a long time. Next day he must break his habit of seclusion, venture into Huai Yuen, and find some way to turn some article into food. It was a more horrifying thought for the old man than the prospect of battle to a young soldier.

"You are Miss Grayson, aren't you?"

The driver leaned out as Wilfreda came to the side of the truck which had just stopped outside the gate.

"I'm Stephen Purcell," he went on, opening the door and climbing down to her. "Don't dream of shaking hands. I'm a mass of dirt. But I've got a letter for you from R Square, and I can tell you that he says to stay with Jane until he sends for you. How is she?"

"Much improved, though she still must rest a great deal. She is eager to see you."

Wilfreda moved toward the gate, but the newcomer stood looking about.

"I don't like leaving the truck outside," he said.

"I think there's another gate somewhere in the back. I'll ask."

Wilfreda turned to Shang Shih. The gateman had been making his own observations

It's cheaper to buy a good carpet cushion than another new carpet

Extra Years of Wear and Beauty for your lovely carpets...

Castle
CARPET CUSHION

Guaranteed Permanently Moth-Proofed

Ozonized for Permanent Freshness made by the makers of

Famous Ozite Carpet and Rug Cushion

Yes, Castle Carpet Cushion is made by the makers of Ozite. Every modern technological improvement together with the skill of 85 years experience in the selection and blending of fine fibres guarantees a cushion which, in its price class, represents the finest quality, and the greatest value on the market today. Its history of many years of satisfactory service proclaims it the outstanding cushion in the medium price range, and a truly fitting companion for world famous Ozite.

Penny for penny, no other carpet cushion compares with Castle . . . or gives you such quality and value for your money. It's springy and thick—a skillful blend of finest hair and vegetable fibres. Permanently moth-proofed . . . it's Ozonized for lasting freshness.

CASTLE carpet cushion is made and guaranteed by the makers of OZITE—the finest carpet and rug cushion money can buy.

the Shortest route to Dreamland

COMMENDED BY THE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU OF PARENTS' MAGAZINE AS ADVERTISED THERE

"Sleep, little baby
'Til morning is nigh...
In a Knit, Safety Crib Cover
Soft as a sigh."

Neslings®

Your little one will take a fast flight to Dreamland when dressed in kitten-soft, comfortable Neslings sleepers.

Fashioned of finest brushed cotton, sized to fit . . . Neslings are a "must" for your tiny tot's wardrobe.

All Neslings available in pink, maize, blue, mint green, white.

*®

1. Knit Crib Cover with every safety feature mothers demand. Keeps baby covered at all times, closes with self-locking zipper . . . yet does not restrict baby's movements. Ideal for preventing thumb sucking and building good sleeping habits.

2. One- and two-piece sleepers have double sole and toe cut to shape of foot, self-help drop seat . . . plus gripper fasteners.

Also makers of HOBBIES* for boys

SINCE 1891 MINNEAPOLIS KNITTING WORKS • MINNEAPOLIS 11, MINN.

Meds Meds Meds

"Hand-done" perfection for your wash with the new G-E Activator-Automatic!

"My clothes are washed the way a fine hand-laundress would do them—every piece heavenly clean!"

Yes, like painstaking washing by hand, G-E Activator® washing action is thorough. Each piece is passed through 3 zones of washing action—vigorous, medium, light.

2. "My finest washables get such loving care. General Electric's gentle washing is perfect for them."

Each piece of your wash is dipped, flexed, and gently cleansed individually—just as in hand laundering. NOT just sloshed around in a tangled mass.

3. "I smell my wash and I KNOW it's clean—every piece so fresh and sweet."

G-E complete rinsing—a spray rinse to kill suds and then a deep rinse (activated)—removes loosened soil and hidden soap film, leaves clothes clean-looking, clean-smelling.

4. "My new General Electric Activator-Automatic spins clothes so thoroughly they actually feel fluffy-dry."

Spin-drying is most important. Unless rinse water is removed thoroughly, some dirt stays. The drier clothes are spun, the cleaner they are bound to be.

Activator-Automatic
WASHER

A wonderful wash can be yours just by setting a dial. Never needs oiling. Water-temperature Selector automatically mixes hot and cold water. No bolting. Porcelain top, tub, wash-basket; baked-enamel front, sides—ALL THESE—PLUS 21 OTHER GREAT FEATURES. 1-year written warranty on entire washer.

AND ALL YOU DO IS SET A DIAL

This washer is completely automatic; it washes, rinses, damp-dries your clothes, and shuts off—all by itself.

But you can re-set the dial to shorten or repeat any cycle.

And what a wonderful wash you'll take out of your new Activator-Automatic every time. How proud you'll be of the "hand-done" perfection of every piece!

NOT THE OLD WAY...

NEVER do clothes come out of this washer tangled, matted, soggy, dripping.

BUT THE NEW WAY!

CLOTHES are washed individually and many pieces come out dry enough to iron.

See the marvelous, new Activator-Automatic at your General Electric dealer's now.

Let him show you its many clean-washing, worksaving features. And as you look this automatic washer over, remember—there is one outstanding feature that you can't see.

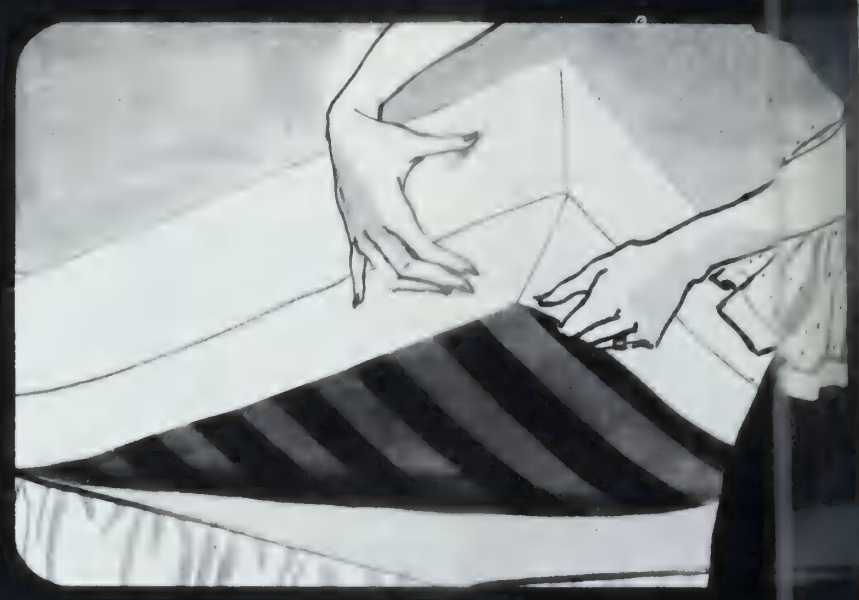
That is famed General Electric dependability!

Your nearest General Electric dealer is listed under "Washing Machines" in your classified Telephone Directory. General Electric Company, Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.

Model AW-5B4 Illus. Trim and specifications subject to change without notice.

Finest washing, finest spin-drying with the General Electric Activator-Automatic Washer.

GENERAL ELECTRIC



For the smoothest sleep of your life

1. Sleep on a CONTOUR SHEET*! It won't wrinkle, can't pull out, stays smooth all night long

2. When you get up your bed is half made! The secret is four mitered, sewn-in corners

3. . . .that cap the mattress . . . plus an all-around shaped tuck-under that keeps the sheet wrinklefree

4. A Contour Sheet is easy to launder, won't shrink because it's Sanforized.* Ironing's optional

5. Combed percale or muslin in standard double twin or crib sizes that adjust to mattress thickness

At your favorite store, or write for folder and name of nearest dealer to Pacific Mills, Dept. DD9, 1407 Broadway, New York 18, N. Y.

*Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

Contour...a PACIFIC sheet

BY PACIFIC MILLS . . . WEAVERS OF FINE COTTONS, RAYONS, WOOLENS AND WORSTEDS

(continued from Page 156)

young men in the legations. There was a dearth of young women of the proper age and they flocked around the teen-agers. Daisy threatened to get quite out of hand."

"Out of hand by missionary notions, I suppose," commented Stephen.

"One evening," continued Jane, "Miriam came to my room distracted. Daisy was supposed to be studying for college-entrance examinations next day. But she had slipped off, leaving a note which I still remember: 'I'm seventeen, and I'm going to have a good time and there's nothing you can do about it.'

"She didn't tell where she'd gone?"

"Oh, that was easy to find out. She was at the Pekin Hotel with a man much older than the young crowd, a person we didn't like and didn't trust."

"What could the mother do? A missionary parent arriving on a hotel dance floor in a heat of righteous indignation would simply cut a ridiculous figure."

"I don't think Miriam Fairchild was ever ridiculous in her life," said Jane. "I made her dress in the one evening thing she possessed. It was a black chiffon. She wore her bronze-brown hair piled high to give that super air one could adopt when she chose. I telephoned Barry Manners, who was First Secretary then, and a friend of ours. He was very amused and came around at once to escort Miriam to the hotel. He told me afterward that she was the most stunning woman in the room. Barry got a group of rather important people at his table. Daisy went dancing by, uneasy but very nonchalant, of course. Miriam only nodded and smiled at her. She kept an eye on the villain, who presently made a move to leave. Then she and Barry just joined Daisy's party. Miriam put an arm around her daughter, said it was time to go home, and went. . . . You see she was charming. She charmed even Daisy herself. Daisy took her examinations next day," concluded Jane. "And then I took her off to the hills until it was time for her to sail for America. That was the last I've seen of her. Daisy is twenty-eight now but, thee sees, I think of her as seventeen."

One of the greatest victories you can gain over any man is to beat him at politeness.
—JOSH BILLINGS.

The walked on slowly and when they reached the arch they found it marked the bottom of a flight of steps which led to a higher level cut into the side of the cupping hills. One stood with face uplifted to the green stillness above her.

"The wants to go up there, doesn't thee? That is not allowed, according to Wilfreda Grayson, but since thee wishes it ——"

Stephen stooped, lifted her in his arms and walked with her to the top, where he set her down.

"Very kind of thee," she thanked him.

She stood looking over the tops of the trees to the Water Mirror Pavilion, and the roofs of the Hall of Inviting the Pleasures.

"Master Yuan was telling me —— And that reminds me" – Jane looked questioningly up at him—"Stephen, does thee have some extra money just now? I mean, money thee couldn't get back again?"

"Unfortunately, I have."

"Well, then, I should like some of it."

"Ah me, thee comes to the point very sensibly. How much does thee want, and when does shee want it?"

"I don't know how much. Master Yuan has an album which he must sell, and I thought I would get thee to buy it. I know thee doesn't need an album of Chinese landscape painting, but Master Yuan has to buy food."

"I see," said Stephen. "Who is Master Yuan?"

"Did thee notice the house across the pool from thy Studio of Clear Sounds?" Jane asked. "Master Yuan lives there. He is an old-style Chinese scholar, and—and—he's facing destitution, I'm afraid. I think, then, if thee can spare sixty dollars of American money, that will buy food for months, and probably it will be more than Master Yuan expects for his album."

"Thee shall have sixty dollars as soon as I can get the C.N.C. equivalent."

"Are you there, Jane? May I come up?"

Jack stood at the base of a minuscule mountain on the west side of the lake and peered at the outline of a small roof rising above the jungle growth of green things on the slope. He caught just a patch of blue which he took to be Jane's Chinese robe. Her voice answered, and when he had climbed up, he came upon her sitting on the steps of the platform on which the shelter was erected.

He took the place opposite her on the steps. "Miss Grayson told me where to find you. You get a chance to look outside the walls here, don't you?"

A sudden thunder arose somewhere to the north, and then, lifting over them, five winged shapes slanted up, catching sunlight which did not reach to the plain. They flew in formation with one in the lead.

"It is our only reminder of the war in this garden," said Jane. "That coming and going."

Jack was scowling at the step. "I've been grounded for a week. The medic let me come over here today instead of being around when they took off."

"But you are better?"

"I'll be perfectly all right when I'm flying again. Tell me about yourself. Has that awful pain come back?"

"Oh," said Jane. "I'm glad you brought it up. Your life at the air base must be secret, of course. When you are going out on missions you won't be able to tell me. When you come back you won't give me the details of the flight."

"No," admitted Jack. "I won't. Security is our headache."

Jane nodded. "I have my security problem too. Only my doctor and my nurse—and you—know my situation. Please remember, if you meet other people here, that it is top-secret."

"O.K."

"And more than that," went on Jane. "My routine—what happens in my days when you come and perhaps don't see me—you must not ask about. More than you know now you need not know, and I ask you to leave it."

Jack was silent. "It's a queer thing we've got between us," he said finally.

"There's one detail I think you can tell me," Jane remarked after a pause. "Did you give a full account of last Saturday to your medical officer?"

Jack began a slow grin. "Say, there was one mixed-up medic. I just said I met you and we talked a little bit, and now I wasn't haywire; he could see it was so. He let it go at that. And he grounded me for a week."

"He's let you come to see me. We'll put that down to his credit. What do you do when you're not in a war?"

"I'm a mechanical engineer, and I had a good job in Oshkosh, Wisconsin, before Pearl Harbor."

"Is that your home?"

"Yes; I've lived there since I was five, except for the years at the U. of Wisconsin."

"Do you get letters from home?"

"My kid sister and I are the family," Jack explained. "Dad died when I was seven, and my mother ——" He stopped.

"Don't talk about anything you'd rather not," said Jane quickly.

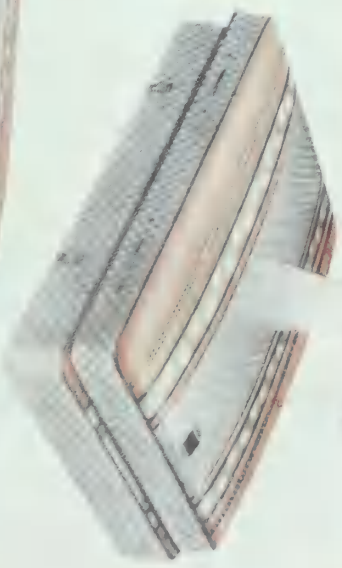
"I suppose I shouldn't mind telling you, but I wouldn't want the medics to get hold of it. She's . . . not quite right. I had to put her in a place where they take care of mental cases. You see, she was lonely after my father died. Dad was the son of a Danish immigrant. He got into lumber in Michigan and made pots of money. He brought dad up to have everything; and let him do what he wanted. I guess dad didn't miss much. When he met my mother, they went clean crazy about each other at first sight, and granddad

Look for the "Perfect Sleeper" Hand

Just try the smooth top...

Serta

"Perfect Sleeper"



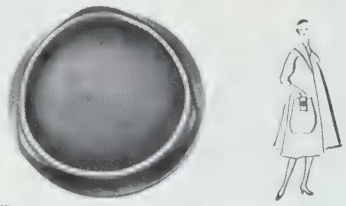
AMERICA'S FINEST SMOOTH, MOST SOOTHING MATTRESS!

Try!... You will instantly discover that particular "Perfect Sleeper" feeling* ... a smooth, soothing, more relaxing comfort ... found in no other mattress.

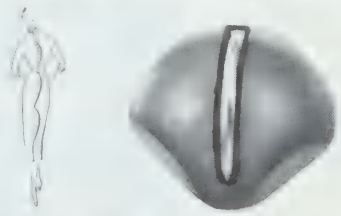
*Serta Smooth-Top Construction *Vitalized Coil Cushioning *Uni-Matic Innerspring Unit

GUARANTEED—against any defects caused by faulty materials, workmanship or construction. Fine Serta Mattresses and Box Springs, $49.50 to $99.50 ... also with Serta-foam by Firestone ... at better stores from coast to coast.

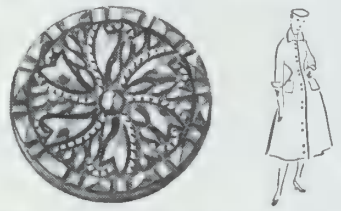
SERTA ASSOCIATES, INC. Chicago, Illinois



you sleep on it ... not in it!



Notes from designers' sketchbooks...



New effect . . . graduated buttons on diagonal-front tunic. La Mode 8186.

Gargantuan pocket. La Mode king-size button 8149.

Scalloped front shows beautiful button parade. La Mode 8171.

Button twosomes smarten the coat dress. La Mode 3478.

Famous designers agree:

Buttons are the exclamation point of fashion!

Your wardrobe can have that "couturier stamp." Take your cue from leading designers both here and abroad . . . concentrate on buttons . . . the world's most beautiful buttons by La Mode. You'll find every shape, every shade, every price, at your favorite Button Department. Or write . . . we'll tell you where.

La Mode
FOR EVERY FASHION . . . IN EVERY PRICE RANGE BUTTONS
Since 1877

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

B. Blumenthal & Co., Inc., 1372 Broadway, New York 18, New York

Also creators of nationally advertised Le Chic buttons, available at variety stores.

MAKE YOUR HAIR Colorful with this safe Temporary color rinse

Add all the glamorous color you want, without making a permanent change. Noreen Super Color Rinse gives your hair such natural-looking color . . . color that rinses in like it belongs, and stays until shampooed out. There are 14 true-to-life shades, ranging from light gold to lustrous black, and lovely grays. Choose one, and "try it on." Then, when you want a change, try another! Noreen is so easy to apply. It takes only 3 minutes with the Noreen Color Applicator (40¢). Try, too, Noreen's wonderful Super Satin Creme Shampoo. It's freer-rinsing! (50¢)

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

ALSO AVAILABLE IN CANADA

Noreen
SUPER COLOR RINSE

15¢ - 30¢ and 60¢ sizes. Also applied in Beauty Salons

Until the Applicator and Shampoo are available in every store, you may order from NOREEN DISTRIBUTORS, 450 LINCOLN ST., DENVER let him marry and just play around. Granddad died all of a sudden, and dad found out there wasn't as much money as he supposed. Before dad got far on earning any cash himself, he got pneumonia . . . and died. There was enough so we could get along and be educated. Mother was always hiding away from people after dad died. But she didn't begin to be queer until I was in high school. Even now she isn't the dangerous kind. She's only so withdrawn . . . gone away into a dream ——" His voice trailed into silence.

"So it's your sister who keeps in touch with you."

"There isn't very much touch. I wish you could understand what my mother is like. Even now she's one of the loveliest persons to look at. I've never seen a girl so—so exquisite." He looked up, caught Jane's eyes and smiled. "There've been girls, of course. Seems sometimes like they won't let a fellow alone. I get some letters. But I'm a poor correspondent."

Jane sat with folded hands, and eyes on the horizon. It was some moments before her companion spoke again.

"I guess I want too much," he told her. "When I was a kid, my mother talked to me about herself and dad. It was queer to talk like that to a child, but she hadn't anybody else. I've never seen anything like what she had—or what she gave—coming my way. Now it's on the cards I never will."

Jane stirred. "You can't tell," she said. "Your future is not in your hands."

He did not seem to hear her. He was following his own thought. "I think I'll be coming to draw in this garden of yours while I'm grounded."

"You didn't mention that you draw."

"My mother liked me to fool with paints and crayons when I was a kid. I studied a little at the U. Never had time afterward to do much with it." Jack was shy, but the cloud was gone from him.

"The garden provides plenty of subjects for sketching," Jane said.

From Stephen Purcell to Daisy Fairchild:

I'm still in Jane's garden. She told me quite frankly that she hasn't been well for some time, but she prefers not to be asked about it. It seems that one factor in Jane's trouble is malnutrition. I've been waiting for the next consignments for my truck, and have taken considerable satisfaction in negotiating an arrangement to add milk and eggs to Jane's diet. We made out a little budget like this:

2 goats	CNC	15,000
12 hens (and rooster)		2,400
2 milk pails		1,000
milk cloths, whatever they are		500
1 goatherd for 1 year (he comes cheaper than the goats)		12,000
1 milking uniform		1,000
1 padded quilt (for repose of goatherd)		1,300
Miscellaneous		10,000
Feed for goats at figure unknown		X
Total		CNC 43,200 plus X

With a rate of 750 CNC to one American dollar, you can see that my investment is not very heavy.

I haven't told you much about this place where I'm wanting you to come and visit Jane the next time I'm able to visit her too. Since you were born in China, I suppose you have a general idea of what my present surroundings are like. Jane is writing to you, bless her heart!

Barry Manners to Jane Breasted:

What extraordinary good fortune to be the tenant of the San Yu Chai, which I am determined, of course, to see for myself. I am told I rate transportation whenever my duties take me out of Chungking, and I am earnestly trying to find some reason for going to Huai Yuen. If such an opportunity presents itself, I shall be dropping in upon you without further notice.

This supremely distasteful Chungking! You have been here; I need not go into details about this wartime capital—a nightmare of the shabby and the sordid.

But I am sure the subject which is of greatest interest to us both is Daisy Fairchild—grown from the child we knew in Peking to a most fascinating woman. I do not care for social functions, but I cannot avoid a certain number of them, and wherever I go I meet Miriam's daughter. She has a vitality, a brilliance which Does Dry Skin make you afraid to get closer?

Do you find yourself drawing back so that people won't look at your skin too closely?

It's very bad for your self assurance, but it doesn't have to happen! For often it's just a dry skin that causes complexions to look withered and weary.

For such skins, there's Woodbury Dry Skin Cream with a new wonder-working ingredient called Penaten! A glorious new miracle, Penaten's special magic is that it penetrates deeper into the important corneum layers of the skin—carries the rich benefits of lanolin and 4 other special skin softeners deeper than ever before!

Try Woodbury Dry Skin Cream! See little dry skin lines and roughness seem to melt away. The first application shows results—a smoother, younger-looking skin—the whole jar produces wonders! 25¢ to 97¢ (plus tax).

WOODBURY DRY SKIN CREAM
penetrates deeper because of Penaten

MAKE EXTRA MONEY
FREE SAMPLE STOCKING AND MONEY-MAKING PLAN

NYLONS that WON'T RUN!

Make extra money showing a taking orders for amazing nylon guaranteed RUN-PROOF! Ma times more wear per pair. Spa time money, without experience. G personal hosiery too! Sample stockin FREE! AMERICAN HOSIERY MILL Dept. X-156, Indianapolis 7, In

TOPS IN STYLE
TIPPY HATS
By SANDLER
. . . AT BETTER STORES

CASH for CHRISTMAS
Sell Amazing CHRISTMAS CARDS

Get your Christmas shopping money this eas way. Show Friendship Christmas Cards i spare time. Gorgeous 21-card $1 Assortments sell sight, pay up to 100% cash profit. EMBOSSED Name Imprinted Christmas Cards, 50 for $1.25. Gift Wrap $1 Imprinted Stationery, many others. No experien needed. Imprint samples FREE. Assortments on approval. Send for them today!
FREE SAMPLES
FRIENDSHIP STUDIOS, INC.
673 ADAMS STREET, ELMIRA, NEW YORK

AMAZING CREAM REMOVES UNSIGHTLY HAIR QUICKLY, SAFELY

Acts Below "Razor Line" Without Cutting or Scraping Legs

The modern way to remov ugly hair from your legs is wit Neet® Cream Hair Remover. I works deeper than a razor, be low the surface of the skin Safer too from razor cuts an scratches. Neet leaves tende skin soft and smooth, free fron razor stubble. Just apply Nee like any cream, then rinse of and hair disappears like magic is [illegible]hralling. I meet her with the most impo[illegible]nt personages, sometimes American, some-tin[illegible] British, but more often than not Chinese.

(H[illegible] Mandarin is excellent.)
[illegible] has not confided in me sufficiently to thr[illegible] much light upon what she is doing—in fac[illegible] in her branch of the service one can be qu[illegible] sure that the appearance is not the reality.
Sh[illegible]s in the office of the OSS chief, Major Tr[illegible]. Whatever it is she does, she is finding the wa[illegible]bsorbing and exciting.
[illegible]t I am too inquisitive about this young wo[illegible]an. I wonder about her constantly. Ah, we[illegible] I am ruminating like an old man whose ta[illegible] for living has turned into a taste for gossip.
D[illegible]y tells me you have not been well, but are no[illegible] recovering. I trust you have had only tempo[illegible]ry inconvenience.

[illegible]ang Wei-Chou to Jane Breasted:

[illegible]ear Teacher Jane: Miss Grayson has sent m[illegible]n account of you, some of which is very enc[illegible]aging. Be careful, I beg of you, so that the n[illegible] report will be all good.
[illegible]he occasion for writing you is to forward
th[illegible] enclosed. It is curious that you mentioned n[illegible]old friend just as I was leaving you, because a[illegible]ough I had known nothing about her for y[illegible]s, I began to get t[illegible]gs as soon as I r[illegible]hed Chungking.
[illegible] have not seen her,
a[illegible] do not know the d[illegible]ails of her situation.
I[illegible]derstand, however,
t[illegible]t it is imperative
f[illegible] her to leave. I dread a[illegible] anxiety for you,
k[illegible] I know that if I do n[illegible] send you her letter, s[illegible] will be very dis-p[illegible]ased with me. If you [illegible]te to me enclosing y[illegible]ur answer, I can [illegible]ke sure she receives [illegible].
You are never far
[illegible]m my thoughts.
Your student,
WEI-CHOU

The enclosure:

You and I have a
[illegible]ng and queer friend-
[illegible]ip. It is a firm one, I [illegible]elieve. Always our [illegible]eas are different, but [illegible]ways our friendship
[illegible]mains. Perhaps you [illegible]e to know what has [illegible]appened me? I always [illegible]ork and work. Some[illegible]mes it is very danger-[illegible]us, but I never mind it. I never wanted to [illegible]arry. Marriage is prison to me. But I do not [illegible]scape love. I have suffered and been fighting [illegible]r the people, but now life plays me a trick.
That man urged me to marry, but I refused [illegible]gain and again. Then I knew a child would [illegible]ome to the world. How can I care a baby? But [illegible]e wanted that child. And I thought at least [illegible]e should have a descendant if he wants,
[illegible]hough I do not see how he can care it either.
Now he is died. He was outside a bomb shelter [illegible]hen a raid came. I am going to give birth, and [illegible] am alone, and have no place to go. My Teacher, [illegible]an you help me? Do not be angry at my foolish [illegible]etter.

Sylvester Fuchs, medical officer of the air [illegible]ase, was finishing his conference with [illegible]Lloyd Osborne, of Intelligence, and with the [illegible]commanding officer, Col. Harley Smith. The [illegible]ase of Capt. John Fernald and the relations
[illegible]f air-base personnel with the Quaker mis-[illegible]sionary in the Wang Family Garden was [illegible]being debated.

"WHEN we first came here," said Osborne,
"we checked that place. The only people in [illegible]t were an old Chinese who is some sort of [illegible]friend of the owner, and four servants. The [illegible]owner is a doctor with the National Army.
[illegible]The old Chinese never comes out, nobody [illegible]goes to see him. The servants are the care-[illegible]taker and his wife and the two coolies. They [illegible]go to the nearest village to buy food, and [illegible]once in a while they go to Huai Yuen."
"Any suspicion of a radio on the prem[illegible]ses?" Smith wanted to know.
"There's no radio," said Osborne, looking [illegible]at his notes. "Three weeks ago this Quaker [illegible]missionary moved in. An Englishwoman, [illegible]Miss Wilfreda Grayson, a member of the [illegible]Church Mission, is with her. Doctor Hartshorn, of the Huai Yuen Medical Center, visits the Quaker professionally."
"Anybody else?"
"A driver from the Friends' Service Section has turned up. Then some Chinese. They're mostly former students of the missionary."
"Check up on 'em." The colonel turned to Fuchs. "You say Fernald has been O.K. since that one break of his?"
"Yes, sir."

"And you've been approving of his visits to that Quaker woman? What's her name?"
"Jane Breasted, sir."
"No Quaker would support the war. Get a line on her, Osborne . . . especially about the Chinese she sees."
"Yes, sir."
The conference was over, and as the two subordinates walked away, Fuchs made a suggestion.
"Want to take me on your staff, Osborne?"
"What's the idea?"
"How about letting me report on the Quaker? I'm interested in her for my own reasons. I can get an idea of the medical angle while checking on your security points."
"Go ahead," said Osborne.

"You seem to have come out of your tail spin very well, Fernald," Fuchs told Jack later in the day. "Miss Breasted must be an interesting person."
The pilot did not reply.
"I wonder," Fuchs went on, "if you would take me along when you get your next pass to go over?"
"This isn't just a request, I know," the pilot answered. "You can come, of course. Only you may be wasting your time. We're not certain to see Miss Breasted."
"Why not?"
"She rests a lot."
Two afternoons later, Shang Shih opened the gate to admit Benny Li, who was by this time a familiar figure. The shih mu, the gateman explained, was resting. There were two American flying officers also waiting to see her.
Benny stopped, reflecting rapidly. He might be walking straight into trouble. On the other hand, Shang Shih might wonder why he turned back upon hearing of the presence of the Americans. The boldest course would be the safest, as usual.
He followed Shang Shih along the path; and when he came out on the strand of the lake, he saw an easel set up beside a pavilion. A uniformed figure minus its coat was working away with brushes and canvas, while a companion lounged on the low steps, smoking a cigarette.
Shang Shih turned back to the gate, and Benny advanced with casual deliberation.
"I hope I'm not interrupting," said Benny.
Jack looked relieved. "Thank God you speak English. I was afraid we'd have to try and dig up our two words of Chinese and then fall back on sign language."
"Not necessary," said Benny. "As a matter of fact, I'm partly Scotch, and I was educated in an American school."
"I suppose you know Miss Breasted," said Fuchs.
"Oh, yes. I was her student at the school I mentioned. My name is Li."
Neither American responded to this self-introduction and Jack went on with his sketch. Presently Shang Shih returned with a basket of small tea bowls which he arranged on the table in the pavilion. The shih

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Floating Moment

By Georgie Starbuck Galbraith

This floating moment after you've gone
Is a white feather on a dark lake.
Leda, deserted by the swan,
Stooped to the water's edge to take
Just such a token of strange rapture;
Laid the cool softness to her heart
Still burning from the omnipotent capture,
Proof of her god. So, when we part,
You leave on the gloom this luminous feather
Of time as witness we were together.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

when you see a fashion

like this  and feel foot-easing comfort

like this  in the same pair of shoes

they're

Enna Jetticks

Empress

Looper

Theda

Same ENNA JETTICK Styles are made in sizes 1 to 12 widths AAAAA to EEE

$9.95 to $12.95

Enna Jetticks

America's Smartest Walking Shoes

®

ENNA JETTICK SHOES INC., AUBURN, N. Y.

RECIPE:

DOUBLE-QUICK STRAWBERRY JAM

Yield: about 5 six-ounce glasses

2 (12-ounce) boxes Birds Eye Sliced Strawberries
2½ cups sugar
⅓ cup water
4 tablespoons (½ box) Sure-Jell powdered fruit pectin. (Mix contents of package thoroughly before measuring.)

Thaw strawberries as directed on package. Measure sugar and set aside. Combine strawberries, water, and Sure-Jell in a large saucepan. Place over high heat and stir until mixture comes to a hard boil. Add sugar at once. Bring to a full rolling boil and boil hard 1 minute, stirring constantly. Remove from heat. Stir and skim by turns for 5 minutes to cool slightly, so fruit won't float. Ladle quickly into glasses. Paraffin at once.

FREE: For more new miracle-quick recipes, write to Frances Barton, Dept. A9, General Foods Corp., 250 Park Ave., New York, N. Y.

Frozen Strawberries and Sure-Jell make wonderful Strawberry Jam in only 15 minutes!

SO EASY!

Use frozen fruits or juices, or bottled juices—they're all prepared! Then Sure-Jell and the short-boil method work the miracle! Mix the ingredients, heat, and boil one minute. And you have homemade jam or jelly in 15 minutes—start to finish!

SO THRIFTY!

Sure-Jell saves you money three ways: The ingredients cost less than jam or jelly you buy! You get 50% more jars than with the long-boil method! And—with Sure-Jell recipes you get surer results!

SO DELICIOUS!

Sure-Jell won't let the rich flavor of your fruit boil away. It's the natural fruit pectin product that helps all fruits to jell just right! (Fresh fruits, too! Look for the recipes for fruits and berries in every Sure-Jell package.)

Powdered fruit pectin for easy jelly making

HOMEMADE Jams and Jellies can't be beat, can't be bought!

Product of General Foods

mu, he explained, was coming to join them for tea.

Benny was somewhat uncomfortable and grasped at an opportunity to escape, after translating what Shang Shih had said. "I will go and meet her," he said. He rose and walked away. A bend of the shore soon screened him from the Americans and he went toward the bridge which Jane must cross. On his way, the mouth of the grotto yawned invitingly. Benny turned toward the coolness of the underground chamber.

I've never been in there, he reflected. I can hear Jane as she passes along.

Benny plunged into the tunnel, cunningly supplied with faint light, and the coolness of the earth rose pleasantly around his heated body. There were niches contrived for seats; and in one place Benny found a recess so deep that one could lie down at full length. The back of this recess was not faced with rock. It was simply a thin coating of plaster that kept the earth from crumbling into the cave, and Benny found himself staring at it with open mouth.

We've got to move, he was thinking. Of course they could work out the location after one or two broadcasts—but couldn't everything be hidden behind there and a facing of rock put in? And the aerial—the rocks and the trees growing on top of the grotto mound—they'd have a hunt. They'd never get it first time trying. . . . I'd better not be seen coming out. But this is an idea.

He heard Jane speaking to Wilfreda on the lakeside path, and realized that he had missed her. He waited until she was out of sight, then circled the lake in the opposite direction. She was pouring tea when he returned to the pavilion, and she introduced him to the others. When she inquired how he had missed her, he had his excuse ready.

"I took a walk around the lake," he said, "to make an inspection of that little island. I got interested in examining it—or rather, Teacher Jane, I knew you'd be interested in what I could find out. The bushes and the trees have grown over the edges, but it's got a very unusual shape. I finally made out what it's supposed to be."

Jane was all attention. "What?"

"It's a bat. It lies with wings outstretched and the head is just suggested by two rocks laid together here on the south side."

JANE followed Benny's pointing finger. "Of course," she said. "Master Yuan says the name of the lake is the Happy Sea. Now the bat is fu, and happiness is fu, so here is the bat flying happiness into the garden—a fantastic pun. Garden landscapes are full of fantasy, but I've never before come across a bat island."

"Do you mean that the water basin is entirely artificial and the island was blueprinted as a bat to start with?" inquired Fuchs.

"Oh, yes. The whole garden was made by coolies with wicker baskets, just as they are making your air base now. And some Chinese scholar thought out the plan for their work, but the original plan couldn't have included what we see today. The Wang family has been here for generations and each master has added something according to his own interests and tastes."

Shang Ma came up the steps and began to collect the tea bowls. Wilfreda handed her the teapot to put first into her basket and added an observation.

"It's not entirely the masters," she said. "I came across a new thing which I hadn't ever seen before, on my walk this morning. It is Shang Shih's contribution."

"What did you find?" asked Jack.

"Do you see that rise of hills? It screens off the southeast corner of the walled area. I've been in the other three corners. One is Shang Ma's," and as she pronounced the name the woman's eyes were upon her. "I'd never been in the fourth, so I strolled over. I found the gateman in the act of burning incense before a miniature temple. It is not more than three feet high, but every detail is perfect. The man told me he had built it when his wife began to have her hysterical seizures. It's a fox-fairy temple."

Wilfreda had been careful to use only English, but Benny struck in with the Chinese equivalent: "Oh, a Hu Hsien. They're nonsense, but very common, of course."

"Look at the woman!" said Jack suddenly.

Shang Ma had her basket ready to take away, but she had not yet lifted it. She stood beside it, shivering. As the others turned to her, she cried out, an unnatural animal cry. Fuchs sprang to his feet, and Wilfreda, on the other side of the table, started around it, but Jane was before her. She took the woman firmly by both arms, which were beginning to twitch as the hands curled up with fingers bent like paws, and spoke to her in a low, insistent tone:

"Shang Ma! Shang Ma! Look at me!"

The woman crooked her neck; an expression of stealthy cunning spread over her face as she said in a high, whining tone, "My name is not Shang. My name is Fox."

BENNY, perfectly ashen, took precipitate steps backward, and Fuchs, after a glance at him, became aware of a new and compelling unscientific sensation. Jack was staring in amazement, but he was not affected as were Benny and Fuchs. Jane spoke again to the half-grinning lips and the squinting eyes:

"Since your name is Fox, go away to your temple behind the hills, and let Shang Ma come back."

The cunning of the face intensified. "Why should I go to a small temple, when in Hunan I have a great one with many rooms and rich treasure?"

"All the better," said Jane. "Go far away to Hunan, and don't ever come back."

The woman shook from head to foot, and nodded to Wilfreda, and the two stood supporting the shuddering figure. The eyes closed. There was a deep sigh, and the trembling ceased; a moment later the hands unflexed and dropped to the sides.

"Finished," said Jane gently. Then she spoke to Shang Shih, who had come to stand immobile with the others. "I think she can walk now. Lead her to her bed. Do not allow her to get up for an hour or two. Slowly, slowly, Shang Ma. You feel tired and must rest."

The gateman received his wife from Jane and Wilfreda, who helped her down the steps. Then she turned obediently and followed him until both were out of sight.

Benny came forward hastily. "I'll have to be going now, Teacher Jane. Thanks for the tea."

"You'll be coming again before long," Jane suggested, but Benny made a precipitate retreat without responding. She followed him with a look of surprise, as Fuchs addressed her.

"You handled that woman in a very remarkable manner, if you'll pardon a doctor for saying so. May I ask what it was you said to her?"

"Oh, I just told her to come out of it," said Jane. "Using Chinese expressions, of course."

Wilfreda intervened. "You will both forgive me for pointing out that this has been very tiring. And perhaps you will excuse Miss Breasted now?"

Fuchs was loath to give up at this juncture, "I wish I understood your technique with hysteria."

Jane was guilty of an impatient look. "I'm not medically trained, Doctor Fuchs. I haven't any idea of techniques. Of course I have seen hysterical schoolgirls and hysterical village women, and have dealt with them from time to time. It's just common sense. But you must know so much more than I—that I—I'm afraid you must be laughing at me. And—and—good-by now."

"Daisy will be arriving very soon," said Jane. "Is everything here ready?"

The Porch of the Fan stood to the west, somewhat higher than the other garden buildings.

"I wonder," Jane went on thoughtfully, "if Daisy won't think this is too lonely a place to sleep? We could have her in our court, you know."

"No," Wilfreda disagreed. "We couldn't. I'm not going to have your peace and quiet destroyed. She will come to us to eat. She has no idea how ill you have been?"

Fr
Th
he fre
"t ar
so
th ste ga
th br be fo co ot k
ar m s h
I
J
H
f n
i i v a c
"
e
Jane rd od lfreda.
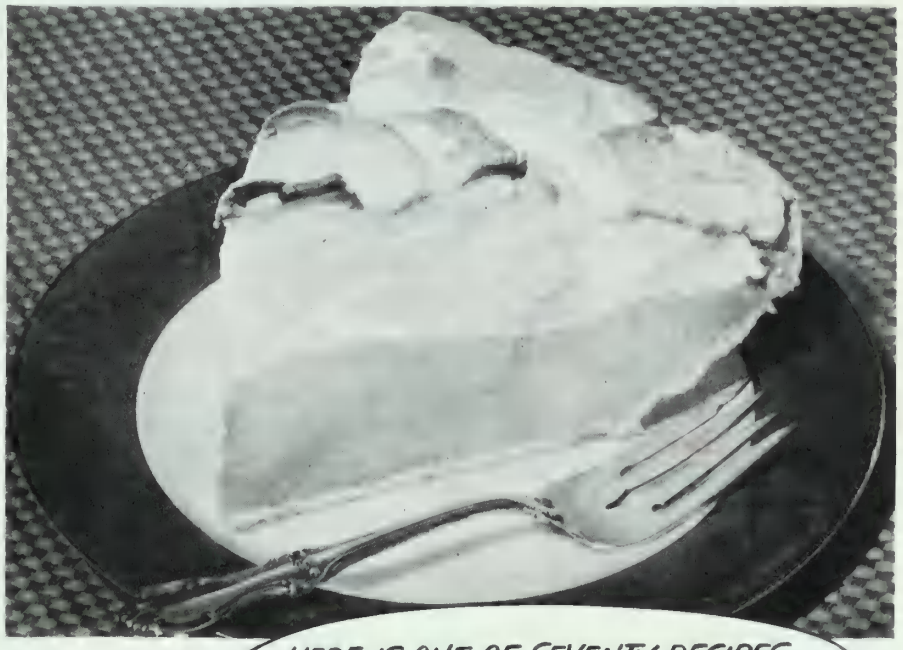
"She's been sick, hasn't she?"
"Yes. She still needs a good deal of rest. e go this way."
Daisy fell into step beside her and Lao brought up the rear. "It's a fine old gar-n, isn't it?" Daisy offered politely.
"I suppose you have seen finer, in the rth?"
"The great Chien Lung gardens are all ound Peking. I've seen them, but I've never red in one. Is this where I'm to be? What a eam!"



WILFREDA paused outside the door, and aisy, remarking that she would have a ash and be only a moment, left her without remony. Wilfreda settled on the steps with r chin in her hands. She was aware that she ot only disliked the fact of Daisy's arrival, ut was guilty of considerable antagonism to e young woman herself.
Daisy came out the door. "Can I have an rly-morning plunge? Stephen says he does. e's described his house—the one where he ops when he's here. Where is it?"
"It's not far from your Fan Hsuan," said ilfreda, quickening her pace. "Do you ex-ect him soon?"
"I've come to spend two days' leave with im," said Daisy, "so I suppose he'll be turn-g up. But he wasn't at the base to meet e. We're going into Huai Yuen for dinner onight."
They were at the door of the chai, and Wil-reda hurried on to the kitchen for the food which Shang Ma had prepared. The menu as vastly improved. There were a small ooden bucket of rice, a plate of green egetable cooked with scraps of pork and gg, and a covered bowl of cucumber soup. When she returned to the room where Jane ad set the table she found Daisy talking eagerly.
"I often think," said Daisy when they were eated, "what a lot of bother we'd save if we only served food as the Chinese do. And why not? You can be as delicate about your eating, and as sanitary, when you use chopsticks instead of quantities of silver things which need cleaning and are such a temptation to burglars. And then think of the dishwashing you'd save, when each person needs only one bowl and one tiny plate. And no table linen either; and hot cloths at the end of each meal are much the most pleasant sort of napkins."
"But how," said Jane, "would you serve a nice juicy beefsteak with only a pair of chopsticks and a tiny plate?"
"Beefsteak," returned Daisy, "would not be served. Beef would be served, of course, but it would be cut into small bits in the kitchen."
"Then I'm afraid you'd be too elegant for the American man," Jane pointed out.
As soon as she could, Wilfreda gathered up the empty plates and bowls, thinking only of leaving the two others free to talk of their intimate interests.

As she came back from the kitchen, she met Stephen. He gave her a preoccupied nod and disappeared into the court. She lingered until she saw the two young people departing through the gates.
Jane was putting on her loose dark robe when the nurse went into her room. She drew the cot out, and after Jane had stretched herself upon it, with a practiced hand tucked the net under the thin pad which served as a mattress.
"Poor Stephen," said Jane.
"Why poor Stephen? He was beaming a moment ago."
"He will have less time than he expected with her. There will be this afternoon in the garden, and tonight he takes her into Huai Yuen for dinner. But before noon tomorrow he must leave on his next trip to Chungking, so he loses his second afternoon and evening."
"Why doesn't Daisy go back to Chungking in his truck?"
"She hasn't time, of course. She will fly back in forty-five minutes. The truck will be on the road three days. Stephen can take my reply to Wilson's last letter and to the note he enclosed. It will be safer to have it go by hand."
"What are you going to say?"
"That depends on you. Since Willow is going 'to add,' as the Chinese say, and since I'm a broken reed, the question is are you prepared to superintend the addition? I know I ought not to ask you—and yet I do."
Wilfreda looked amused. "And I ought to forbid you to bring a political fugitive into the garden—and yet I don't," she answered. "Of course I'll look after her—if you are determined to have her come."
"I'm so grateful," said Jane. "I think that the one thing I need most now is a baby."

Shang Shih opened the gate to Li Pei-Ni, and informed him that the shih mu was expecting him in the Water Mirror. Benny, nodding, strolled off without waiting for the old man to announce him.
Summer had begun in the garden, and the early freshness of the morning was already over. The intense heat which brooded over the plain was lessened by the garden waters and trees, but in the short walk from the gate to the Water Mirror, Benny found himself perspiring. The sunlight had penetrated the shelter of the pavilion, and he saw that Jane had retreated into the shadiest corner and sat cooling herself with a large paper fan.
"I'm here to say good-by, Teacher Jane," he said as he took his place beside her.
"Oh? Is your paper recalling you?" Jane asked.
Benny assumed an attitude of dejection. The fact was that he had established a private means of entering the garden, and had installed a radio and its necessary equipment in the grotto, with the purpose of "going underground" and in the future making visits to the premises only at night. It had all been

There is no greater disloyalty to the great pioneers of human progress than to refuse to budge an inch from where they stood.
—DEAN INGE.

Seventy Luscious Desserts
so quickly with
Borden's Eagle Brand
SWEETENED CONDENSED MILK

HERE IS ONE OF SEVENTY RECIPES. TRY THE WORLD'S EASIEST FRESH LEMON PIE. SAVES 20 MINUTES!

Filling Needs No Cooking
Made With Fresh Lemons Easy As a Mix!

1 8-inch baked pastry shell
½ cup lemon juice
1⅓ cups (15-oz. can) Borden's Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk
1 teaspoon grated lemon rind (or ¼ teaspoon lemon extract)
2 eggs, separated
¼ teaspoon cream of tartar, if desired
4 tablespoons sugar

1. Blend Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk, lemon juice, lemon rind (or lemon extract) and egg yolks. Stir until mixture thickens.
No cooking! No tedious blending! No sugar to add. Yet all the true, tangy delight of real lemon flavor. No wonder 10 million homemade fresh lemon pies were made last year with Borden's Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk.
2. Pour filling into cooled pie shell.

TO MAKE MERINGUE

1. Add cream of tartar to egg whites; beat until almost stiff enough to hold a peak. Add sugar gradually, beating until stiff and glossy, but not dry. Pile lightly on pie filling.
2. Bake in slow oven (325° F.) until lightly browned (about 15 minutes). Cool.

(This recipe checked in Good Housekeeping kitchen)

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

FREE! "BOOK OF 70 MAGIC RECIPES"

70 exciting recipes for delicious pies, puddings, candies, cookies, ice creams, frostings made like magic with Eagle Brand.

Borden's Dept. LH-91, Box 175
New York 46, New York

Please send me, free, your "Book of 70 Magic Recipes."

Name _____
Address _____
City _____ State _____

Most make-ups shout: "Made-up!"— Magic Touch whispers: "Natural beauty"

Replace that heavy "made-up" look with natural-looking loveliness by using Magic Touch. No puff, no sponge.

43c and 1.00—6 magic shades . . . a CAMPANA product

Magic Touch is NEW . . . a tinted cream make-up so sheer your skin glows through! . . . yet it hides each tiny blemish while it smooths and softens and adds glorious color. . . . Apply with fingertips (with or without powder)—so quick, so easy, so naturally lovely!

they're new! they're exciting! they're a joy to wear!

fall fashions BY FOOT REST

Foot Rest Shoes— fashioned to fit perfectly at heel, toe, and instep —are 'round-the-clock shoes to work in, play in, live in! They're so smart . . . yet so comfortable! Write for the name of your nearest dealer.

Krippendorf FOOT REST SHOES VERIFLEXIBLE

$10.95 to $12.95 a few higher

THE KRIPPENDORF-DITTMANN CO., DEPT. L, CINCINNATI 2, OHIO

ridiculously simple. He had never in all his experience found a place where suspicion was completely absent.

"My assignment is finished," he said in answer to Jane.

"And so you go back to Chungking?"

"On the postal truck tomorrow." He would in fact begin that journey in order to make an unnoticed return.

"And what will your paper want you for next?"

"Nothing. I told you I wasn't on their regular staff. I'm out of a job."

Jane looked at his good clothes and his startling jade ring. "Then I hope you have a little money put away to carry you until you get another."

Benny shrugged. "I wouldn't want you to worry about me." Then he added after a moment's pause, "If you could give me an introduction to somebody in the American services in Chungking, I'd make a fairly useful secretary."

Jane looked thoughtful. Getting jobs for useful Chinese had been a function of hers ever since she had arrived in China. Benny continued his dejected attitude.

"I don't suppose that wonderful-looking Miss Fairchild would need a handy man, would she?" he suggested.

"Daisy? Where have you run into her?"

"Oh, I saw her as she arrived at the restaurant with Purcell last night," said Benny. "She's quite famous."

"Benny, I don't entirely like the way you say 'quite famous.' What, exactly, do you mean?"

"It's only that she's with the American OSS and has done a lot of exciting things. She's known for her wits and her courage—that's what I meant. But you might ask her if there's any vacancy in her office, mightn't you?"

"I doubt if she's the person to ask," said Jane. "I think her superior, Major Trent, does all that sort of thing."

This was really too easy. If Jane could be induced to send him to her cousin, Benny's superiors would be mightily pleased. He scarcely dared to breathe.

"I might write a note to Robert Trent," said Jane. "He's a distant cousin of mine."

"I'd certainly appreciate it," said Benny.

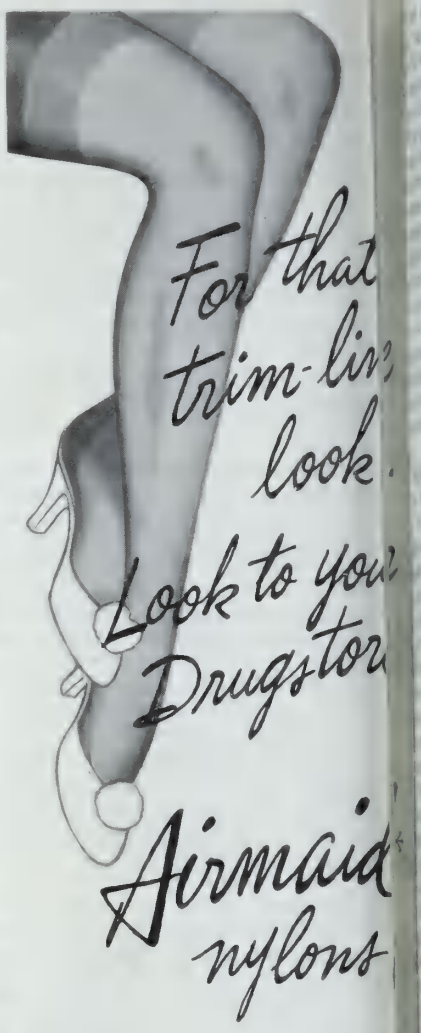
Jane suddenly stood up. "If I write a note for you, you should do something for me. Let's get out of this heat, and go into the grotto. It will be cooler there, and there's something I want to investigate."

Benny's face and manner betrayed nothing as he walked beside her, but he was furiously wondering if Jane was suspecting something and wanting to uncover his treachery.

They came to the mouth of the grotto. Jane turned, went down the tunnel which opened into the central chamber and came to a halt before the north wall of the cave, where, shoulder high, two wooden leaves were shut together and secured by a wooden bar.

"Would you mind lifting that bar away for me?" she asked. "It's too heavy for me to manage."

Could she possibly know that he had been opening those doors two nights ago? Benny fumbled at the bar, and took it away. Jane herself opened the wooden leaves which pivoted in stone sockets.



Light from the mouth of the cave showed clearly the life-sized figure carved in white stone, which sat on its lotus pedestal looking serenely down at them. The garment flowed in lines of the utmost beauty; the face was so dimly touched by the light that its features were hardly visible, but it was scarcely needed to convey more than was given in the attitude of the lifted hands.

"Kuan Yin, Goddess of Mercy, listening to the earth cries," said Jane.

(That was all she wanted—all she knew. The secret of the other sounds to which Kuan Yin was soon to listen was still safe.)

"It is cooler in here," said Benny, clearing his throat.

Jane said, "You don't ask me why this lovely thing is sealed up in a grotto—you haven't a guess of your own?"

*AIRMAID HOSIERY MILLS — DALLAS, manufc turers and distributors of the finest quali hosiery for 22 years — sold exclusively in Dru stores — coast to coast — accept no substitut

UNWANTED HAIR? For complete removal of superfluous hair use ZiP Epilator

ZIP-IT'S OFF because IT'S OU Safe face, arms, legs. Good sto or send $1.10 to Jordeau, Box J-11, South Orange, N

AT LAST! SOMETHING NEW AND SENSATIONAL CHRISTMAS CARDS 50 MAKE Extra MONEY FAST SUPERB SATIN VELOUR & METALLIC Show rich New Cards never before offered ..Gets orders fast! Gorgeous Christmas Cards with Name 50 for $1.25 up. 80 Assortments. Personalized Book Matches. Stationery. Gifts. Several $1 boxes on approval. IMPRINTS FREE. Write now! With Na FREE Sam PURO CO., 2801 Locust, Dept. 113-L, St. Louis 3

CORNS also Calluses. Quick, easy, and economical. Just rub on. Jars, 30¢, 50¢. At your druggist. Money refunded if not satisfied. Moss Co., Rochester, N. Y. removed MOSC

NEW, DIFFERENT, Flowire Sell CHRISTMAS CARDS 50 WITH NAME IMPRINTED Per-'n-Brush STUDIOS 1 FREE EARN EXTRA $$ BIG BONUS PLAN EARN UP TO AND OVER 100% PROFIT SEND NO MONEY Write for Samples Deal with a Leader. Earn BIG EXTRA MON in full or spare time $50 & MORE Yours for selling only startling NEW boxes Of AMAZING profits with greatest of ea You take NO RISK send postal c today for b assortment samples on approval You a get FREE samples easy-to-sell perso Christmas cards, stationery, napkins. costs nothing to try. Write TODAY.

PEN-'N-BRUSH, Dept. L-9, 139 Duane St., N.Y.13, N.

FALSE TEETH

KLUTCH holds them tighte

KLUTCH forms a comfort cushion; holds dental plat so much firmer and snugger that one can eat and ta with greater comfort and security; in many almo as well as with natural teeth. Klutch lessens t constant fear of a dropping, rocking, chafing plate. 2 and 50c at druggists. . . . If your druggist hasn't i don't waste money on substitutes, but send us 1 and we will mail you a generous trial box.

KLUTCH CO., Box 5121-I, ELMIRA, N.

dressmakers SAVE! Bridal and Evening dress fabrics at WHOLESALE PRICES.

SCHENFELD & SONS, 97 Hester St., Dept. L, N. Y. 2 Rush me your FREE Catalogue and BIG Swatchbook.

NAME .....

ADDRESS .....

not unusual to set up shrines in s," said Benny indifferently. "West s full of caves with figures in 'em. But member what the gateman said about otto. He told me it was here before the the garden was built. There was a not far away and one of the monks hermit and came to live in this cave.
llowed it out a good deal, I expect.
ermit must have been here more than ndred years ago, and still the people here remember he was a holy man and this as a sacred place."
u see," said Jane. "The memory of an lasts. But Kuan Yin wasn't here he hermit was. She stood originally on stal on the Island of the Bat. Imagine g whiteness reflected in the green lake
"
hen why isn't she reflected there now?"
ne Wang who owned the garden be-1800 and 1870 was one of the earliest rts to Christianity in Canton. When he ed here he felt he must take away all gns of other religions. But he couldn't o have Kuan Yin broken up, so he put ere and had a niche made for her and her in as she is now."
ny looked at his watch, and Jane re-ntly closed the doors and turned away.
suppose you must go," she said. "Your mentioned you couldn't stop for lunch."
'm sorry; I should be starting back."
ny put the bar in place, and as he did ne turned toward the entrance. "Come me to the chai," she said, "and I'll give that note to Robert Trent."
Well," said Daisy, "Stephen's almost y to leave. I'm going to walk with him r as the road where his truck will pick up. Then I'm com-back to pack, and people at the air base promised to send a for me. I'll catch last plane to Chung-tonight. The idyl is
."
Has it been a good idyl?" inquired Jane.
That's redundant, Aunt Jane, isn't it?
v can an idyl be anything but idyllic?
I haven't seen nearly enough of you."
Nor I of you."
hey were walking slowly up and down the
th of the lang-tse.
But," continued Daisy, "you now can the kind of person I am; you can note the erences between myself when sixteen and self at present. Don't you think I have n nice to Stephen?"
He seems happy. Are you going to allow to remain so?"
ow can I tell?" said Daisy. "I've given two whole days, which is more than any er man in the whole of the CBI theater boast. I have sense enough to understand phen is a much better matrimonial bet n anyone else I happen to know, even ugh he is a C.O. and a truck driver. I rect him for sticking to his own line, even ugh it's very far from my line. I suppose
've got a chance of making a go of things en it comes time to talk about renting a and buying chops for me to cook . . . alugh I don't think of that far-off event as all romantic, and Stephen, poor fellow is ch too serious about it. But now he re-ns to his job, and I to mine. Nobody can what may happen from one half second to other. So why ask me if Stephen will conue to be happy? I don't run the universe."
I think you run a good deal of Stephen's iverse," said Jane. "But there doesn't m much point in talking about it."
Stephen appeared at the door of the chai as two women paused near it. "Good-by, ne," he said. "I'll do what I can about the ssenger you want me to bring back. With k she'll be here in a week. Coming, isy?"
"Good-by, Stephen," Jane said. As the two re moving away she called, "Daisy, when u want me, I'll be in the Court of Retire-nt across the garden. Shang Shih will w you."
The girl hung back for a moment. "What e you going to be doing there?"

"I have an errand in the hall called All Past Wishes Come True. When you visit me again, you and Stephen can enjoy yourselves there."

"All right then; I'll be seeing you where All Past Wishes Come True," and then she was gone.

At the hour when the tree shadows were long over the water basins, Jane went musing on her way to the courtyard in the northwest corner of her domain which Shang Shih had, at her request, unlocked. She passed into the courtyard. The shadows of evergreen and bamboos were thick on the flagged stone pavement, and the double doors opened into interior darkness which had once sheltered the tablets of the Wang family.

A brisk step sounded on the path outside the open gate, and she turned to see Jack coming toward her.

"Hello, Jane. Hear you have a guest who is flying to Chungking tonight. I'm to drive her to the field. Who is she?"

JANE was suddenly aware that she was very tense. She answered as easily as she could. "A girl I knew in North China. Her mother was an intimate friend."

Jack came to Jane, took both of her hands and scrutinized her searchingly. "And what about you? I am ordered not to ask questions, I know, but are you sure you're not doing too much?"

"Sure. And you seem all right too."

"Thanks to you."

He stood looking down at her a moment. Then it happened.

Daisy had stepped within the doors. As Jane moved toward her, she realized that the girl's cool glance had encountered something unusual; her lashes swept her cheeks, and she seemed suddenly shy. This was so totally uncharacteristic that Jane avoided turning her own eyes upon the face of the man at her side, but went forward, and made introductions with some formality. Then she saw the two of them together. Neither of the young people made any acknowledgment of being named to each other. It was an eternity before Jack broke the silence and the sense Jane had of standing within a magnetic circle.

No one blames you for being too polite. —CHINESE PROVERB.

"I'm going to drive you to the air base," he said.

"Oh," said Daisy. "Yes . . . my bag is in my room."

"At the Fan Hsuan," said Jane. "We'll walk there with you."

Daisy pressed close to Jane, and for a moment the older woman wondered if the hand on her arm was trembling. Jack walked beside the two until the path grew too narrow, when he fell back and allowed them to go before. At this Daisy dropped Jane's arm, murmuring "I won't be long—I won't be long," and fled along the lakeside.

The two others halted. At last Daisy appeared. She handed over her bag, and on the way to the gate she hazarded a few remarks which Jane picked up and elaborated, but to which the young man made no response. He was in a hurry and swung along at a pace with which Jane could hardly keep up.

"Please . . . Aunt Jane can't go so fast," Daisy remonstrated.

"Beg pardon. But we'll have to step on it to make the field in time."

"Oh," echoed Daisy, "to make the field in time."

Daisy reduced to an echo—Jane felt a wild desire to laugh. Then the thought of Stephen came, bringing dismay and compassion. You couldn't tell, Daisy had said, what the next second would bring forth. No more you could.

When they came out the main gate, the jeep was standing on the near side of the little bridge. While her bag was being thrown into the back of the car, Daisy murmured indistinct thanks and climbed into her place. The motor whirred, the jeep bounced across the bridge, and Jane backed up against the gate and sat down on the broad stone block in which it pivoted, so that she might lean against a support. She felt utterly spent. She

Which Hair Problems Do You Have?

Try this new Glamour-Treatment!

Used by professionals for problem hair! A creamy lotion—not sticky or greasy. Makes your wave behave—leaves hair soft, shining! ★ Rich in Lanolin to soften dry hair or stiff, fuzzy permanents. ★ Ends loose dandruff worries. ★ Deodorizes for between-shampoos freshness, fragrance.

RICH IN LANOLIN!

50¢ and $1.00 plus tax

new LUSTRE-CREME Hair Dressing

New . . . Cream Deodorant Keeps Underarms Dry and Odorless

Watch those intimate curves beneath your arms if you want to avoid perspiration embarrassment and save your clothes from stains. Used daily as directed Arrid gives best results of any deodorant tested. Here's why more men and women use Arrid than any other deodorant in the world:

1. Effective, prevents even the appearance of perspiration—keeps underarms dry.
2. Safe, saves clothes from stains. Does not rot dresses or men's shirts.
3. Removes odor from perspiration on contact. Keeps underarms odorless.
4. Mild for skin. Antiseptic.
5. Today's Arrid with Creamogen stays smooth and creamy. Never dries out in jar! Don't be half-safe. Use Arrid to be sure. Buy Arrid today.

ARRID
America's Largest-Selling Deodorant

Kitchen tools so good they're guaranteed for fifteen years! Countless washings can't dim their shining stainless steel . . . hard use won't mar their black, heat-resistant handles. The six most beautiful kitchen tools she'll ever own—complete with stainless steel wall rack. See them wherever good housewares are sold.

give FLINT!®
ANOTHER GREAT PRODUCT
BY EKCO®

© 1951 EKCO PRODUCTS COMPANY
CHICAGO 39, ILLINOIS

JOLLY TIME POP CORN ALWAYS POPS BETTER

WRIGHT'S
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
AMERICA'S LARGEST SELLING SILVER CLEANER

THRIFTY RECIPE

HAMBURGER CHOPS

1 lb. ground beef
2 slices white bread, softened in milk
1 egg
1 teaspoon LEA & PERRINS Worcestershire Sauce
½ teaspoon salt
1 small onion, grated
Shortening

Thoroughly blend meat, bread, egg, and seasonings. Mold into shape of chops (makes 4 or 5). Brown each side quickly in a little hot shortening; then cook until done. Dress with chop ruffle, and garnish with watercress. Nancy Sasser says that the success of this taste-tempting recipe depends on LEA & PERRINS Sauce, the original Worcestershire.

Whenever recipes call for Worcestershire, you can be almost certain that the experts who write the recipes mean you to use LEA & PERRINS Sauce. Always ask for it by name.

FREE RECIPE BOOK. Write Lea & Perrins, Inc. 241 West St., New York 13, N. Y., Dept. L-9

closed her eyes and tried to relax. But almost at once she was roused by Shang Shih, who stood before her.

"The shih mu must get up," he said with insistence. "The shih mu must go inside."

She looked at him without stirring.

"Quickly."

In the garden one never had to do anything quickly. What was the matter? She rose, and then, in spite of his efforts, she saw. Lying under scrub willow in a spot which had been covered by the jeep was somebody . . . somebody the color of earth with only an earth-stained loincloth . . . somebody lying on his face.

"The shih mu must not look," said the gateman, still trying to get in her way.

"Is he dead?"

"I do not know. We must go inside and shut the gate at once."

"But who is he? How did he come to be here?"

Shang Shih looked anxiously down the track leading to the highway. "I do not know. It is probably a deserter. I think he was brought here by others who were afraid to have him found on their land. When the American came he was not here, but I have been inside the gate since then and did not see how he came. Let us go in, and shut the gate."

Jane had forgotten her exhaustion. In spite of Shang Shih she went nearer, and what she saw stopped her like a blow. He had been flogged. He lay on his face with his back cut to ribbons, and the dried blood mingled with the dark loam of the fields.

And now Shang Shih was before her again. "I implore the shih mu, do not bring this man inside the garden."

"Shang Shih, get up!" but Jane dragged at the supplicating old body in vain. "Get up!" Jane repeated. "I will not ask you to bring him inside our walls."

Then she went over and made herself look closely. She thought she could detect a pulse. The head was turned to one side and she saw the sharpness of the nose. The end must be near.

"I must shut the gate," Shang Shih insisted.

Jane's course became clearer to her. Wilfreda would be returning in the early evening, and they two would consult without involving the Chinese servants.

"Go in and shut the gate," she said.

"But the shih mu?"

"If anyone comes," said Jane, "I shall explain that you have nothing to do with this."

The figure was lying by the channel of water where a strip of grass was green and fresh. She sat down, dipped her handkerchief into the stream and moistened the swollen lips. Shang Shih, after a horrified appraisal of what she meant to do, turned toward his gate.

"When the hu shih gets back," said Jane, "I will speak with her and we will decide something."

THE gateman withdrew inside the door, and the leaves swung slowly together. The shadow of the wall lengthened and deepened. No one came. After a little Jane found it easier to reach both the water and the mouth if she took the head in her lap. She was glad of her long training in sitting cross-legged on country k'angs, which made the position possible for her. The sun was out of sight behind her, but she knew when it sank from the intense flush which spread over the eastern sky. Low on the horizon before her, a pool of light began to spread, and then came the lift of the yellow moon. She sat still and dipped and bathed, and dipped and bathed, until she heard the sound of Wilfreda returning.

From the Journal of Wilfreda Grayson:

Daisy is gone and Jane has just avoided a severe attack, but, thank God, I believe it really has been avoided. If she has several days of complete rest she may once more pull up to the place where she can enjoy her garden an people who come to her. I wish I could e the next arrival to be less of a strain tha last, but I know I cannot. Jane's days are bered, and if she chooses to fill them—or to shorten them—with the exigencies of people, I shall not attempt to thwart her.

I did resent the incursion of Daisy Fair I dreaded her coming, and when she got found myself disliking the young woman self, although I can't deny that she is charr Stephen doesn't seem to expect Daisy to him; he says it will be enough if she lets love her, and marries him after the war. I der just how much his money has to do marriage after the excitement of OSS has to an end. Spiteful of me, but I can't hel

Anyhow, I didn't want to watch Stephen Daisy together, so I went off to Huai Yuen didn't get back until two hours after m rise.

I had no parcels, so I took a ricksha onl the point on the highway where the track t off to the garden. I walked on, enjoying night. As I got to the bridge I saw someone ting on the ground, on the other bank of stream. It came as a shock when I realized the vague figure and the pale face were Jan and that she was sitting by a man, lying on ground, and had his head in her lap. As I to her side, Jane looked up at me, and s "Freda, is he dead?"

I knelt down and tried to find a pulse, couldn't be sure. I told her he wasn't c scious—and it seemed unlikely he would e recover consciousness. I said there was noth we could do for him.

To this she paid no attention. After a lit she told me how terrified Shang Shih was having anything to do with the man.

As we talked, I began to have an uneasy f ing that Jane and I were being watched. Th was open ground around us, but it was qu possible that the shadows the bushes contained e which we could not see.

"You can do nothi more," I urged. "And y have no strength to spar

Again she withdrew in herself and seemed not ev to hear me. I saw she w sustained by the deman of the moment—the d mands as she felt them. said no more, and sat dow at the feet of the man, keep vigil with her. We r mained for hours, but at last the presence death became unmistakable. Then Jane ba me get the gate open and go and fetch one of h sheets. We wrapped the poor dishonored fle away from sight.

Jane turned herself and spoke out into th night. "You can come and get him now," sh said in Chinese.

We went inside, and in the morning Shan Shih reported that the body was gone.

Jane was almost gone too. I had my hands ful and all the time I was caring for her I was ask ing myself why she had indulged in this strang behavior. I understood her well enough to b sure she had not been following a reasone course of action, but had been obeying a deep seated impulse. After I had some rest I bega to hear echoes from the village which com through Shang Ma. I heard the opinion that th man had been beaten for attempted escap from the awful camp for conscripts which i not far away; that he had been left for dead but had come to life enough to crawl to a vil lager's field. Its owner, terrified to have hin remain, had had him carried to the garden. It appears that Jane's hours of tending the inert body have already become a legend among these people, like the legend of the hermit who once lived in the grotto. The people once saw holiness and they have cherished that memory; now they have seen compassion, and they will not forget.

Major Trent to Jane Breasted:

It's so hot tonight that typing is better than paper work. So I'll try to answer your last letter.

I've recently run into one of your former pupils. His name is Wang, and it seems you are living in his garden. He is a formal, close-mouthed chap, but when it came out that we both knew you, I found myself being treated with deference. This chap strikes me as unusual. He is right in the midst of knavery and treachery of every description and of suffering which is indescribable. Most of his sort get cynical and hard-boiled. He isn't any of these things. Once when I asked a leading question, he replied that he was deeply indebted to you. Just what the debt is I'd give a cooky to know. I

(Continued on Page 169)

NEVER UNDERESTIMATE, ETC.

When a man is born, people say, "How is the mother?" When he marries, they say, "What a lovely bride!" And when he dies, they say, "How much did he leave her?"

Time for Ideas— a timely service from the meat industry

Modest in price, but you'll be proud as punch when you see how the family goes for this good meal. Next page, please, for the recipe.

Hamburger Corn-Pone Pie

This suggestion from Mrs. Wilbur Norman, of Des Moines, Iowa, makes it pretty plain that ideas are often more important than money when it comes to fixing really good meals.

Where there's a woman, there's a way!

It isn't just what she carries in her purse these days that helps her stay in style, smarten up her home or set a good table. It's what she carries in her head!

This good-looking main dish is an excellent example. It starts with a simple pound of ground beef, but it's well seasoned with imagination. That's what makes it the kind of dish that would be hard to beat, even if you had all the money in the world to spend for food.

But, since most of us do have budget troubles these days, the meat industry is searching for ideas that will help you get more mileage out of your food dollars in eye appeal and taste appeal, as well as nutrition.

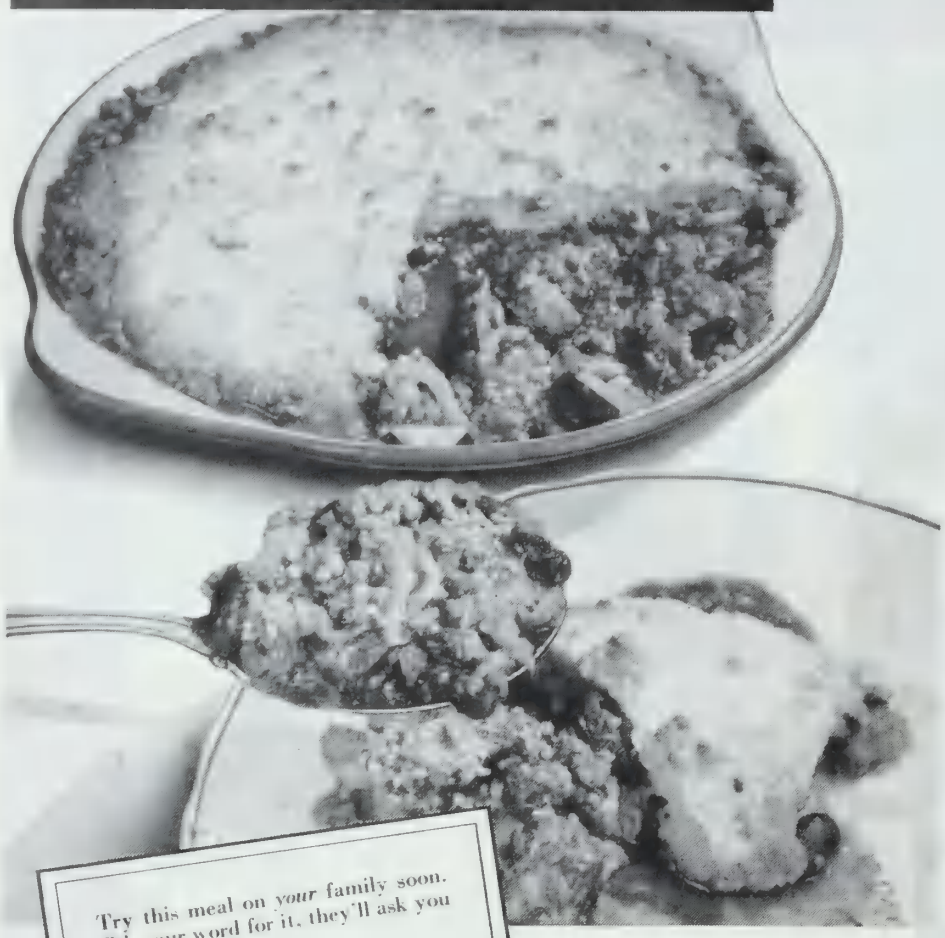
The Hamburger Corn-Pone Pie is one of them. Treat your family to it soon.

Newly discovered vitamin B_{12} in meat

Meat is now recognized to be a good source of B_{12}—the B vitamin you have heard so much about lately—as well as vitamin B_1 (thiamine), essential minerals and complete protein.

This kind of complete protein, you know, is needed for sound muscles and good red blood . . . It keeps you going longer without feeling tired . . . It is the key element of the modern reducing diet. Yes, you're right in liking meat—"a yardstick of protein foods."

AMERICAN MEAT INSTITUTE



Headquarters, Chicago • Members throughout the U.S.

Nourishing Meat—a yardstick of Protein foods

ACCEPTED COUNCIL ON FOODS AND NUTRITION AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

This Seal means that all nutritional statements made in this advertisement are acceptable to the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association.

Ideas with Hamburger— or main-dish magic from one pound of ground beef

Here's how to make the delicious

Hamburger Corn-Pone Pie

(shown in full color on the previous page)

The skillful blend of seasonings and the corn bread crust make this a different kind of meat pie. It's almost a dinner-in-one-dish and is as easy on the cook as it is on the budget.

Try this meal on your family soon. Take our word for it, they'll ask you to repeat it often.

FRUIT COCKTAIL
HAMBURGER CORN-PONE PIE
LETTUCE WITH FRENCH DRESSING
SHERBET WITH COOKIES
COFFEE
MILK

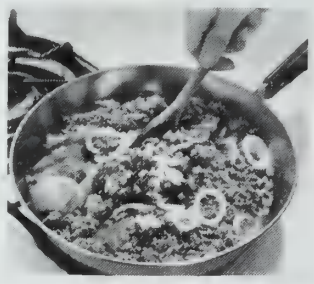
Buying Ideas!

SINCE hamburger is one of the most important items your meat-man sells, you usually can count on the hamburger in his counter to be freshly made.

If, however, you like yours "made to order," you can save money by buying chuck or stew meat instead of round steak (the grinder makes all cuts equally tender). And remember, a fair amount of fat (about 20%) is necessary not only for juiciness, but for flavor as well. If meat is too lean, have suet added before grinding.

Once through the grinder is enough. Once-ground meat doesn't tend to "pack down" like twice-ground meat.

Buy only as much ground beef as you plan to use by next day, unless you have proper facilities for freezing. If you do plan to freeze it, it's a good idea first to form it into patties—it will freeze much faster, and thaw more quickly when you're ready to use it.



Clip this for your collection of budget-stretching meat dishes.

Hamburger Corn-Pone Pie

Recipe suggested by Mrs. Wilbur Norman of Des Moines, Iowa and kitchen-tested by AMERICAN MEAT INSTITUTE

(Serves four)

- 1 pound ground beef
- ⅓ cup chopped onion
- 1 tablespoon shortening
- 2 teaspoons chili powder
- ¾ teaspoon salt
- 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
- 1 cup canned tomatoes
- 1 cup drained canned kidney beans
- 1 cup corn bread batter
  (½ package corn muffin mix or ½ standard corn bread recipe)

1. Brown meat and chopped onion in melted shortening. Add seasonings and tomatoes.

2. Cover and simmer over low heat for 15 minutes, then add kidney beans.

3. Pour meat mixture into a greased 1 or 1½-quart casserole (or other baking dish of same capacity).

4. Top with corn bread batter, spreading carefully with wet knife. Bake in hot oven (425° F.) for 20 minutes.

When you're making hamburger patties, try seasoning them this savory way . . . Mix 1 pound hamburger with 1 teaspoon salt, 2 tablespoons chili sauce or catsup and 1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce. Form into patties and broil, or fry in a little hot fat.

32 moneysaving meat recipes for 5¢

Also tips on buying, cooking and serving that will help you make your meat money go further. Just send 5¢ in coin to American Meat Institute, Dept. J3, Box 1133, Chicago 77, Illinois.

(Recipes are now being collected and tested for a new booklet, which will soon be printed. What meat ideas have you found most helpful in keeping meat on your table? Send them in!)

AMERICAN MEAT INSTITUTE Headquarters, Chicago • Members throughout the U. S.

(Continued from Page 166)

you wouldn't tell me? He certainly ing to.

A her young product of yours breezed in ith a note from you, and I got some nent out of the encounter. You certainly xperience in writing letters of recom- tion—if that is what you call the docu- i Pei-Ni brought me. I never read any- o sweetly noncommittal, and I promptly e young man a note to the Friends of the led Soldiers, and advised him to ask or a job. I had a feeling that this was not what he had hoped for. He doesn't look as if he is in straits. Even if the Friends Wounded Soldiers don't take him on, pect him to manage.

late in the night. Before I stop I have a on: What has come over Daisy? I can't t my finger on any change sufficiently to e it, but she's something like a collar he starch gone out of it. Look here, Jane, t have you interfering with the morale of aff. But don't talk too much about Daisy r next. Say more about yourself.

R.T

had the lantern windows lighted in your ," said Jane.

rry Manners stood at her side gazing s the Happy Sea toward the Court of ement. Twilight was dim over the water he tree-bordered shore; beyond, shining e violet air, were little glowing shapes n the wall on either side of the roofed anners narrowed his eyes. "I see a fan; f of the persimmon tree, and its fruit h is the symbol of fertility . . . the lights aking on their outlines with the deepen- of dusk. My dear Jane, no one but you ld think of such a welcome to a war-weary t."

Enjoy the lantern windows while you ," said Jane. "We lighted them with the t native candles which will burn only a e while. Like much of this garden beauty, windows show their charm for a transient nent."

Let us walk toward them," her guest sug- ed. "They were meant to beckon ough the night, on occasions of high fes- l, I suppose. My dear, Daisy brought an encouraging report of your health. I delighted your difficulties are behind you. I thought Daisy herself seemed a little off color when she returned from her two days with you."

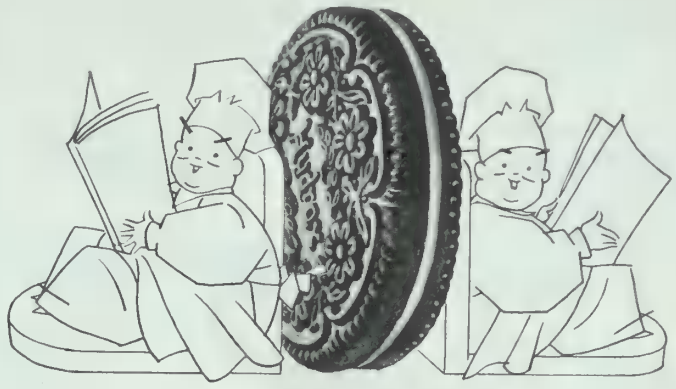
"Oh," said Jane, "I'm sorry. What was the matter with Daisy?"

"I thought at first nothing very definite . . . but an absence of her usual sparkle, perhaps. This is the Fan Hsuan where she stayed? She told me about it."

"Which room have you chosen for your own? Quiet Mind or Tranquil Heart?" Jane asked.

"You might know me well enough to be sure that I have taken possession of both," said Manners. "While I may, I live in the grand style."

"You will not be here very much during the days, I gather?"



"Unfortunately, no. I must be in Huai Yuen. But my errands there will make it possible to remain with you longer than I had anticipated, if that is entirely convenient?"

"Nothing could be more convenient," Jane assured him. "You will want to spend hours with Master Yuan, who is eager to make your acquaintance. I learn through Shan Shih that he contemplates a little feast. He can afford it since Stephen bought his album at the price you suggested. I was quite abashed to discover how little I understood the money value of those paintings. To go back to Daisy—can you tell me anything more about her?"

"Your young Stephen seems desperate about her," Manners told her. "Ah, do let me look at your charming lantern show a moment."

He counted the little windows before which they stood, and enumerated the shapes, each different from its neighbor, and all making a harmony of pattern which began to fade away as the lights sank low, one after another.

"And so the beautiful thing perishes, but the beauty itself is immortal," he murmured, and then picked up the thread of what he had been saying. "About Daisy. Three days ago, she came to see me—to have coffee, to be exact. We talked of this and that. She seemed distrait, and I took an uncle's priv-

Cookie Classic!

Mmmmm . . . volumes of delight in two crisp chocolate cookies with a luscious vanilla cream in between! Millions say Sunshine HYDROX is the Finest Cream-Filled Chocolate Cookie Ever Made!

Sunshine HYDROX COOKIES

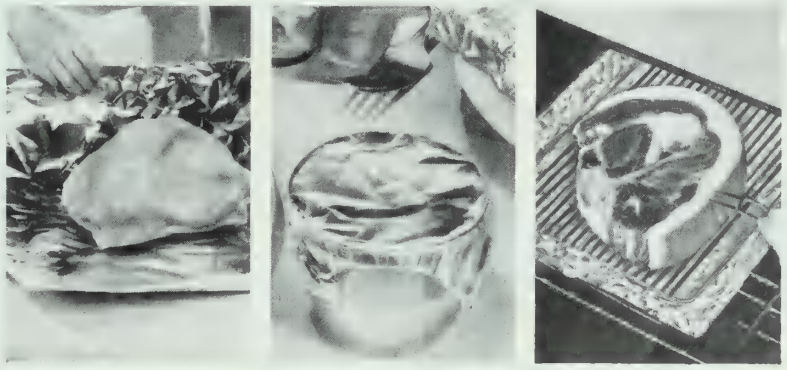
THE ORIGINAL CREAM-FILLED CHOCOLATE COOKIE

...best I ever ate

Easy Sponge Cake by Mrs. Florence Readman

Sponge cake is about the nicest cake there is to serve with fruit. We have made this cake many times and it is always light, fluffy and tender.

The recipe came to us from Mrs. Florence Readman, a Canadian reader who wanted to share with us her way of making sponge cake in return for "the many recipes of yours that I have tried with success always. It is economical, easy to make, and friends and family agree it's super."



Most sponge cakes this size call for ten eggs in the recipe. This is a cake you don't have to be too gentle with, except for folding in the whites.

Easy Sponge Cake

Separate 5 eggs. Beat the egg whites until foamy at medium speed on an electric mixer. Add 1 teaspoon cream of tartar, ½ teaspoon salt, and beat until stiff. Put the unbeaten yolks into a large mixer bowl with 5 tablespoons cold water and 1 cup fruit sugar (superfine). Beat at medium speed until light yellow and fluffy. Sift 1 cup cake flour 3 times and add to the yolk mixture with 1 teaspoon each of vanilla and lemon extract. Beat again at low speed until well blended. Fold the beaten egg whites into the egg-yolk mixture until well blended.

Pour into ungreased large 10" x 4" tube pan. Bake in a slow oven, 300° F., 70 minutes. Turn upside down to cool.

Remember these ways to save food, save time, save work...

Reynolds Wrap is "all out" for defense—Return Flight Guaranteed!

You save meat (less shrinkage, more flavor) when you roast in REYNOLDS WRAP.* You save food when you wrap leftovers and cover bowls with this bright, reusable foil. You save work when you line pans with foil (no scouring)! Government order now limits the manufacture of REYNOLDS WRAP household foil. Military needs come first. But production of aluminum is expanding. Look and ask for REYNOLDS WRAP,... for "1,001 Kitchen Miracles!"...

REYNOLDS WRAP
the pure aluminum foil

REYNOLDS Aluminum

*MADE ONLY BY REYNOLDS METALS COMPANY, LOUISVILLE 1, KY. ASK FOR IT BY NAME

ilege to remark upon it. Suddenly she threw her arms about my neck and burst into tears. My dear, I could not have been more amazed if I had found Niagara Falls on my shoulders."

"She must have been overwrought. I'm told she does very dangerous work at times," Jane said hastily.

"Dangerous work? I dare say." They walked slowly as he continued. "Daisy asked if I had ever been completely upset . . . made to feel overwhelmed and uncertain about everything. This admitted of only one interpretation, and I murmured that I have been young—have had my own affaires de coeur. At the suggestion of a love affair she got up hastily, and said would I forgive her foolishness and forget about it?"

They had reached the steps of the Temple to the Flowers, and here they found Wilfreda, who had an air of suppressed excitement.

"Jane, I think it's time for your bath. Excuse me, Doctor Manners, but a bath in a tub is not very easy to arrange here and Jane ordered hers to be ready at this time."

"Then I must go," said Jane. "Forgive such domestic details, Barry."

"Of course," said Manners. "I shall be having a delightful evening with some old books I bought today. Until tomorrow, my dear hostesses."

HE left them and the two women turned in the direction of the chai. As soon as the tall figure was out of earshot Jane made an eager demand.

"Has Stephen got back?"

"Yes. He drove the truck in at the back gate. He asked me to get rid of Lao Ch'i and Lao Pa, so I sent them off to prepare your bath as we arranged."

Jane quickened her pace through the bamboo grove and around the low hills to where the truck was standing. No one was visible. Jane went into the dense shadow and Wilfreda heard her say, "Willow, my dear, my dear."

There was no audible word in reply; but as Wilfreda came near enough, she saw the shadowy outline of a woman taller than Jane holding the little figure away from her with her hands on the slender shoulders. After a long moment, Jane spoke to Wilfreda.

"Please go ahead. We will follow at a distance and wait for your signal that the coolies are out of the chai."

Wilfreda returned to Jane's quarters and found the lacquer tub full of steaming water waiting. She made sure that the servants were out of the way. A moment more and the three women were within the chai.

"Close both gates and fasten the south door," said Jane.

The newcomer had gone into the east room. Wilfreda saw she was far along in pregnancy, and dressed in the poor black cotton of the Chinese peasant garment. Her legs were bare and the feet thrust into rough straw sandals. Every detail was characteristic of Szechwan's worst poverty, but the poise of the head under its soiled white cloth wound turbanwise, and something in the set of the shoulders, did not agree with the coolie clothing.

"Wilfreda," said Jane, "I want to do a few of the first things myself. Stephen has managed very well about food, so she isn't hungry. Willow is so exhausted that she has scarcely said two words, but she warned me to keep away because she says she has lice. I'm going to start by giving her an insecticide shampoo. It's going to be a serious job to get her cleaned up, and I think I would like the wooden foot tub to soak the extremities before we put her into the bath."

"You can't put a woman in her condition into a hot bath!" the nurse objected. "We must be satisfied with sponging off for the present. I'll get the insecticide."

Wilfreda brought the insecticide and Jane soaked one end of the towel, which she rubbed through the rough black locks which were cut short. The saturated cloth was plastered over the head, and then the dry part was wound firmly around and fastened.

Pep Up Your Cooking With Heinz Mustard!

Try these easy economical ways to flatter your cooking with HEINZ Old-Fashioned YELLOW MUSTARD

● Perk up yo cream sauce f cauliflowe broccoli or lefto chicken by addi a teaspoonful two of Heinz P pared Yello Mustard!

● To make your breaded veal pork chops taste even better, a half a teaspoonful of Heinz Pr pared Yellow Mustard to the eg batter in which they're dipped.

HEINZ PREPARED MUSTARDS Are U usually Fresh Tasting And Fine Texture Heinz Uses A Special Grinding Meth That Helps Retain The Pungent Flav Of Mustard Seeds. Ask Your Grocer F The Mild YELLOW Kind!

Give these ordinary dishes extraordinary flavor with HEINZ Old-Fashioned BROWN MUSTARD

● You add a touch of zest and flavor by spreading leftover slices of baked ham generously with Heinz Prepared Brown Mustard before broiling or frying. Wonderful!

● Dip cooked, fresh or canned shrimp in Heinz Prepared Brown Mustard. Roll in crumbs and fry in deep fat till golden brown.

Finer In Flavor, Creamier In Texture, HEINZ PREPARED MUSTARDS Are The Best Money Can Buy! Use The Stronger BROWN Kind To Glorify Scalloped Potatoes, Breaded Pork Chops, Leftover Lamb And Countless Other Dishes!

"No," said Jane, "by morning you ll fi all those wretched little crawlers ve b me perfectly quiet and then we'll t ri f them with soap and water. I ow v to give an insecticide shampoo.
l ne forget the time I needed it my-
f. D t try to talk. You'll soon be going rest
Wil la brought a heavy clay jug; she oped p some bath water, and poured it o t foot tub.
Wh the washing of the feet was finished,
illo irred and spoke. "Teacher Jane, you ve e e too much for me. I can manage re Please both of you go out and let me he one."
Wh they were out of the heated room
ne rmured to the nurse, "I'm afraid ere marks on her body that she doesn't nt to see. She has been in prison, you ow Did you ever see anyone so done
?"
"Y " said Wilfreda. "I think you were ne yourself the other night after our le ssion outside the garden gate. And I nt u in bed as soon as possible."
Th scrubbing and splashing behind the tic lid not go on very long. A clean gar-ent Wilfreda's was ready when Willow ked or it, and the things she had worn re aced near the pile of laundry which e se would attend to next morning fo any curious eyes were open. It was arl leven o'clock when the three women ple rough the paths leading to the Joy
Ba boos.
"I r since I knew you would come," ne eathed in Willow's ear, "I have been n his isolated house,
t t no one will be p ed that Wilfreda
d often visit it. But o else has any er-nd here. You will not
d urbed."
" is long since I have
té " was the answer.

It as a drowsy morng a Szechwan summer day and the oi heat permeated everything. Jane came o ne lang-tse. She looked very sober, but ill when she saw Stephen and Wilfreda.
" illow had a fairly good night, I think,"
e ported. "If you would go up and look ver, Wilfreda? I finished her shampoo."
J e took her friend's chair as the latter n ed. The morning light was a glory c the face of the pool. On the banks, the l green of the bamboos hung in bladed l s, and on the surface of the water a g lotus was opening its rosy cup. Jane d d from the peace of the garden to look S phen.
" illow was born to this, but she doesn't n e to remind her of it. She says she h o heart for the enjoyment of gardens
."
"ell me a little more about her," said
n en.
Ier father was an official and a large
o wner, and Willow was well grounded e Chinese classics. But it was decided to h her a modern education as well, and she s ent to a mission school."
Was that when thee first knew her?"

D. That school was in the south. Willow m e a communist while she was preparfo r the university where I taught her.
is a born rebel and experimenter, and at t time the student communist move-t was beginning. She met a young or-z er who made a great impression upon
He was dying of TB, but he lived in rty and jeopardy. She contrasted him the missionaries in the school. They security; they lived comfortably. Wilcast in her lot with peril and hard work.
she was already an underground agent
n she entered the university."
ephen whistled softly. "Did thee know

Not for some time. In her sophomore
, she marched in a parade which was ersed by the police, and she was ar-
ed. At first she was kept at police headrters, but later she was moved to a military prison, which alarmed all her friends. We went into action and got her out. It was shortly after she returned to the campus that we became really intimate."

"Thee chooses thy intimates for odd reasons, I must say," Stephen commented.

Jane appeared thoughtful. "Well, I was a propagandist—and Willow was one too. I had a deep respect for her courage and devotion. We used to have arguments. But we did become friends; dear friends."

"All this was a long time ago. What has been happening since then?"

"I know very little about it—and I am not likely to know much more. But now she needs me; she turns to me. That is enough."

EVENING came softly into the garden on the night of the feast to which Barry Manners had been bidden by Master Yuan. The guest found Master Yuan waiting to greet him, with all proper apologies for the repast which was certainly in contrast to the forty courses of feasts in Peking restaurants, or the elaborate eating which, even in war days, went on in official Chungking. But the pièce de résistance of roasted crabs was in true scholar tradition. The soup was served in exquisite Ming bowls.

Master Yuan was a gracious and meticulous host. The library where the table was laid was lighted with great horn globes in which candles were burning, and the narrow table, often used for the display of paintings, was now covered with a single scroll of calligraphy.

"I see you have something to show me," Manners said when he knew the proper time had arrived to introduce a subject which must be approached with attention and deliberation.

It appeared that the writing was that of the artist Wu Mei-Sun, and that there was still in existence a sort of garden daybook which narrated the circumstances under which this particular piece of calligraphy had been written. And there was an entry—the old scholar dropped his voice—which mentioned that Wu Mei-Sun had brought to the garden certain documents descended to him from his famous ancestor, Wu Chen. The daybook hinted that these precious things had been hidden somewhere in the garden.

"Has the present owner never made a search for this?" Manners wanted to know.

The old scholar replied that Wang Wei-Chou was very seldom at home and that the recovery of the work of the brush of Wu Chen had not concerned him as much as it should. But he had given Master Yuan leave to hunt about himself.

"And you have never found any trace?"

"There is no trace. I have examined the grotto, as a likely hiding place, and I have considered the statue of Kuan Yin."

"Of course," said Manners. "There would be a hollow place near the heart where writings, if they were small enough, might be deposited."

"I have examined the heart chamber of the statue and found nothing. However ——"

At this moment, the two heard footsteps and unfamiliar voices. Lloyd Osborne appeared in the open door and spoke abruptly.

"Hello, Manners. Please tell the old man we must come in. Sorry to disturb you."

Manners translated for his host. "What is the matter?" Manners asked, as two Americans in uniform came in behind the young officer.

"Search party. We heard a radio last night and pin-pointed it in this garden. When it started again tonight we came over."

"A radio!" said Manners. "Well, you certainly won't find it here. I've spent a good bit of time in this room. There's no space where a radio could be hidden."

Osborne glanced around and saw a doorway, covered by a screen of split bamboo. "Tell the old man we're going in."

Manners said a few apologetic words to his host. The officer lifted the screen and turned on his powerful electric torch.

It is easy to convince a wise man, but to reason with a fool is a difficult undertaking.

—BRIAN BROWN:
The Wisdom of the Chinese.
(Coward McCann Inc.).

"Royal Dahlia" Royledge on shelves.

Now takes minutes to COLOR-DECORATE
your kitchen!

Here's how easy it is to transform your kitchen into a "garden of color": Simply decorate shelves with color-bright Royledge Shelving—see how the gorgeous floral and other designs, glowing reds, blues, yellows—brighten the room instantly! And new "Plasti-Chrome" Royledge costs only about a penny a foot. Hurry and see gay new Royledge patterns at 5 & 10's, Supermarkets, Housefurnishing, Naborhood, Dept. Stores.

Plasti-Chrome
Royledge
Royal Lace Paper Works, Inc., Bklyn.
"Royledge" Td. Mk. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Shelving Paper & Edging
all-in-one. 9 ft. & 24 ft. pkgs.

New ADHESIVE Edging
for steel or wood shelves

Swingline Tot 50
Quick as a Bunny!
Clicks all over the house!

—It Tacks!—
—Staples!—
—Mends!—

Use your handy TOT 50 daily to do dozens of jobs like these all around the house, No fussing, with messy glue, nasty hammers, tacks, pins. TOT 50 does so many things easier, faster, cheaper, better!

1000 Refill Staples 25c

Only 98¢ with 1000 staples

SPEED PRODUCTS COMPANY, INC.
LONG ISLAND CITY 1, NEW YORK

• If your drug, hardware, stationery, dept. or variety store can't supply you, WE WILL SEND A TOT 50 postpaid, for $1.00—write Dept. LHJ.

The room was very small and crowded with chests stacked on top of one another. One by one the chests were lifted out into the larger room, and Manners unpacked and repacked, until it was clear that nothing remained concealed. The best of the old man's collections had been taken out for the visitors' benefit, and what remained was rather pathetic evidence of the care with which every vestige of scholarly treasure-trove was lovingly hoarded. The last box had his supply of garments for winter.

"You see? Nothing here." Manners closed the lid.

Osborne stood frowning. "We've been through every other building in the place. And we worked all over that grotto. I thought it was queer that white stone figure was shut in behind doors, but we went into the niche behind and all around—drew blank. Manners, I'd like to talk with you."

"By all means."

The scholar feast had come to an unexpected conclusion, and Master Yuan accepted his guest's farewells.

Osborne told his men to wait for him and followed Manners into his quarters.

"I want to get your help," the Intelligence officer began. "You are the only one in this garden who is one of us. I'm inclined to order everybody out of the place—and ——"

MANNERS cleared his throat. "I think I can make a suggestion. I am, as you point out, in the war effort, and I have a rather specialized knowledge of Chinese ways. It may be that in a day or two I shall pick up a clue. Do you want me to see what I can find out?"

"I'm not sure I can wait."

"Did you tell Miss Breasted what you were after?"

"I told Miss Grayson. She said Miss Breasted was off with a servant and we didn't bother to hunt her up. . . . Do you think you can do more than we have done?"

"I can try," said Manners.

In the San Yu Chai, Stephen was with Jane. "I hope this unexpected visit hasn't upset thee?" he said as she lay back in her peacock chair looking at the reflections of stars in the pool.

Wilfreda came to the door. "Jane, I think Willow's labor has begun. I ought to stay with her tonight. But I don't like having you alone in this court. Stephen, could you sleep here?"

"Of course. What do I do if Jane needs you?"

"Call me," said Wilfreda. "We can set up my cot on the lang-tse." Come and help me bring it out."

The arrangements were swiftly made, and Wilfreda took her candle lantern and went to her patient. Stephen sat down on the steps of the chai.

"Sleepy, Jane?"

"Not a bit."

"There's some of thy strategy that I don't quite understand," said the young man. "When the child is born thee can't possibly keep Willow's presence here a secret. Has thee provided for that?"

"Certainly. As soon as the birth takes place I shall call Shang Shih and tell him one of my old students came to me from Huai Yuen with thee, and call upon him for congratulations. He won't like it. Szechwanese consider it bad luck to allow a strange child to be born under their roofs. So I shall let Shang Shih gather that it is on account of his ideas I didn't tell him until everything was over."

"But then it will be his duty to notify the police that we have a Chinese newly arrived."

"They'll take their time," said Jane. "Thee told me that day after tomorrow thee leaves for Pao Chi. Willow can go underground there until she is entirely strong and able to do the mountain trails to Yennan. She will lie on her mattress and make the journey really comfortably. I can keep the local police away for two days, I'm sure."

Stephen held his head and groaned. "Jane, thee is a sort of witch-woman. I don't fancy this assignment at all."

Ladies, it's really too bad that the men don't have the babies

Diaper rash, scald, cradle cap, all such skin irritations can make baby's life miserable, as every Mother knows.

Now you may ask, what does a mere man know about caring for the precious, tender, rose-petal skin of that Bundle from Heaven?

He knows plenty! From experience. He'd know that Mennen Baby Oil is the oil to use because he knows that Mennen is a synonym for the finest in human skin care. He found that out the moment he lathered his downy, 'teen-age fuzz for his first shave. Found it out through the years with all Mennen skin preparations!

He knows how fine, pure, safe, reliable Mennen skin products are! And naturally, Mennen Baby Oil is his choice.

P.S. Why not send him out to buy a bottle for your baby right now?

MENNEN
BABY OIL

* More for your money, too! Up to 33⅓ more oil in the bottle than other leading brand.

OFF TO A SMART START IN TUFFIES OUT OF THE WEST
Authentic West[ern] Denims for B[oys] cowboy pants and jackets $2.[49]
ANYWHERE IN THE U.S.A.
★ Zippers
★ COPPER RIVETE[D]
★ SANFORIZE[D]
8 oz. Blue Deni[m]
★ DOUBLE-STITCHE[D] with heavy orange threa[d]
DOUBLE KNEE in sizes 4-14
IN SIZES 1-22 Husky Sizes, too
TUFFIES OUT OF THE WEST
COWBOY PANTS
FOR GIRLS! AUTHENTIC WESTERN DENIMS all sizes $3.49
UNCONDITIONAL GUARANTEE
Ruffies OUT OF THE WEST Authentic Cowgirl De[nim] Manufactured by OKLAHOMA CLOTHING MANUFACTURERS,
OKLAHOMA CITY 1, OKLA.

RELIEVES HEADACHE NEURALGIA NEURITIS PAIN
FAST
ANACIN
ANALGESIC TABLETS
Here's Why...
Anacin® is like a doctor's prescription. That is, Anacin contains not one but a combination of medically proved active ingredients. Anacin is specially compounded to give FAST, LONG LASTING relief. Don't wait. Buy Anacin today.

$ Surprising Savings
USEFUL GIFTS FOR TOTS
Pleasant prices, striking styles, desirable durability, superb service, prepaid postage, delightful discounts. Wide choice items & ages. Send 25c for catalogue (refunded on first order).
WEE FOLK SHOPPING SERVICE, Box 606LH, Piqua,

8 Mistakes Parents ma[ke]
Every parent should have this new book. It is free; no obligation. Simply address
PARENTS' ASSOCIATION
Dept. 49 Pleasant Hill,

MATERNITY DRESSES wri[te] FR[EE] CAT[ALOG]
Fall Styles
Dresses & suits for morning, street, afternoon, or sports, $2.95 to 22.50. Also maternity corsets & lingerie. (Catalog mailed in plain envelope.)
CRAWFORD'S Dept. A, 729 Balt., Kansas City 6

"t thee will undertake it?" Jane asked ently.
hen was silent. "The baby goes too?" lly asked.
. Willow could never get the child with her. Besides, I need the baby."
hat thee is really doing is wishing a on Wilfreda. Thee certainly asks a leal of her, Jane."
, I know, I know. But if thee will e in one thing more, the baby need a burden to her—only a joy to us both.
can spare some money, we can find a wet nurse in the village. No further ds are to be made upon thee, poor

n, the money is easy. But can't thee think of any other way to get Willow ety?"
an thee?"
re was a long silence. Then Jane began ing softly.
hen Willow got over her exhaustion
h to talk with me, she began by saying,
s not argue; you have one set of ideas, e another.' And of course I said we not use the precious hours together bate. I said that what she and I both d was basically the same: the welfare people. She at once flared up and told at my Christian tradition had been in orld for two thousand years, and that little for the people had been accom-
d. And it turned out that in spite of ersonal tragedy, in spite of her condi-all she really wanted to talk about was beliefs, and the sacrifices of her com-
s. 'I know there is just one way for a to go,' she told me."
he did not thank thee, ppose, for giving her
m?"
Did she thank thee
riving her from Chung-
?"
No. But I could feel was grateful. I won-whether, if thee or I
into a jam with her munist crowd, she would help us."
She would want to, I'm sure. But she ld be guided by what she thought was dient politically. No personal considerawould move her if it wasn't the party
That's the whole difference between her
. . . us."
Thee means," said Stephen, "that our istian view embraces the good of the le of humanity. Hers embraces the good ommunists."
She thinks it will bring about the good he whole of humanity if communists e to power," said Jane. "And there is a nendous drive and energy in her and her rades. It is a force we must all reckon
h."
And what have we got in us that will e with it?"
Shall I really tell thee?"
Tell me!"
I listened to her a long, long time. I rd her savage anger at the evil she com-
s. And I began to find a pattern of words ning in my thoughts . . . words which ne again and again as a strain of music
s through the head."
But thee doesn't say what the words
re."

THEY might not mean much to thee," swered Jane. "But since thee is a Friend I am, I'll attempt to tell thee. The words ne from a powerful impression which I eived in childhood. . . . My family, when as little, always went in summer to the aker settlement in the Allegheny Moun-ns. In those meetings, there was one old end who gave me the words I have spoken When he rose, he began speaking much the rest did, but he seemed to experience great happiness and peace; his old face one. One phrase he repeated comes back haunt me beautifully now. These are the rds: 'We . . . shall be satisfied . . . with the ghtness . . . of His rising.'"
Her voice died away and the night silence wed over them. But she had one more ng to say.

"I have never had an experience of God quite like that of the old Quaker who chanted about the satisfying he had in the brightness of His rising. Neither, I suppose, has thee. We experience God in the way of our own time, which is not favorable to ecstasies. But it is clear that there is no satisfying to be had out of the sorry scheme of things in the external world which is all materialism knows. Now, Stephen, I have said more about my inner self than I have attempted to say to anyone. And it is time to go to rest."

"Yes," said Stephen. "Jane, I will take Willow to Pao Chi."

Jane's interview with Shang Shih took place next morning, and it was quite clear that he felt she had now gone too far in the use she was making of his master's hospitality. Jane was tempted to tell the gateman that Willow had been received with the knowledge and consent of Wang Wei-Chou, but she refrained. It would be best to take all the responsibility herself.

"When the police come, I will speak with them," she said. "Did you not tell me a short time ago about a young relative of yours who has recently given birth? I wish to find a good nurse for this child."

SHANG SHIH was not too offended to miss the proffered olive branch. He departed.

Jane waited impatiently for Wilfreda, and when the nurse came she was carrying a small white bundle.

"Give her to me!" was Jane's demand.

Wilfreda smilingly stooped and laid the baby in her arms. "Keep the flap of the blanket over her eyes as the Chinese do. There is bright sunshine this morning."

"Her eyes are nothing but little creases in her face," said Jane. "She's fast asleep. Oh, Wilfreda, how soft she is . . . and how sweetly she draws her breath."

"She draws it just like any baby," Wilfreda remarked, and as her friend looked up the two women laughed.

"Of course I shall make an idiot of myself over this child," Jane said. "But it's time I took some thought for you. Can you leave Willow now?"

"Yes, she should sleep for a while."

"Then you should sleep too. Little Hope and I are going to be perfectly happy. She can sleep in my arms just as well as anywhere else, can't she?"

"I suppose so," Freda answered. "You've picked out a name for her already?"

"Yes. Willow was sure it would be a girl and chose her Chinese name. But she asked me to give an English one, and that's what it is—Hope."

Barry Manners had decided that the threat to security was more important than his business in Huai Yuen, and he spent the day considering courses of action.

Late that afternoon Lieutenant Osborne again made his appearance in the garden, in response to a message. He found Manners waiting for him.

"You have something important to tell me?" he demanded.

"Of the greatest importance. But I want one assurance from you before I proceed. You remember the old scholar whose room you searched last night?"

The young American nodded.

"He has been of the greatest assistance. I want you to promise you will let me handle anything which comes up concerning him."

Osborne hesitated. Manners had an obstinate air—and, after all, he wasn't a fool. "O.K."

He found himself escorted to the grotto which he and his men had searched. There he met Stephen Purcell and the old Chinese waiting at the mouth of the cave.

"I thought you'd like to see your radio," said Manners. "We haven't touched it. Come in and make your own observations."

The wooden doors which ordinarily enclosed the Kuan Yin were wide open, and Never bear more than one kind of trouble at a time. Some people bear three—all they have now, all they ever had, and all they ever expect to have.

—ANON.

TOP-FLIGHT FIT...
BY WEIGHT

Growing bodies are easier to fit correctly by WEIGHT than size alone, so you'll find both marked on E-Z labels. Before Jack Frost arrives, shop for downy soft and oh-so-cozy sleepwear by E-Z. Chase chills—encourage warm, deep sleep this E-Z way. And you mothers who dress a wiggly baby will bless EZ-ON* Necks that slip over baby's head so conveniently. Good for older children, too. Yes, it's truly E-Z "for any child of any age".

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

E-Z

UNDERWEAR • SLEEPWEAR
HOSIERY • "FOR ANY CHILD OF ANY AGE"

E-Z MILLS, INC., EMPIRE STATE BLDG., NEW YORK 1, NEW YORK

*PATENTED

Back to school with "The Magic Spoonful"!

RECIPE

DATE-NUT SANDWICHES - with luscious flavor in every bite!

¾ cup chopped walnuts
1 cup cut-up pitted dates
1½ teasp. baking soda
½ teasp. salt
3 tablesp. shortening
¾ cup boiling water
2 eggs
1 teasp. vanilla*
1 cup granulated sugar
1½ cups sifted all-purpose flour
Cream cheese

Mix first 4 ingredients with fork. Add shortening, water. Let stand 20 min. Heat oven to 350° F. (moderate). Beat eggs with fork. Add vanilla*, then sugar and flour, beating with fork. Add date mixture; mix to just blend. Pour into greased 9"x 5"x 3" loaf pan. Bake at 350° F. 1 hour, 5 minutes, or until done. Cool loaf. Slice enough for 2 or 3 small sandwiches, spread with cream cheese. (Rest of loaf keeps in refrigerator.)

* McCORMICK OR SCHILLING PURE VANILLA puts extra goodness in school day sandwiches and desserts . . . adds richer, fuller flavor that won't cook out, bake out or freeze out! Tastes wonderful in milk, too! Buy it at your grocer's today—McCormick in the East—Schilling in the West—depending on where you live.

McCORMICK PURE VANILLA

Schilling PURE VANILLA

East or West—the same pure vanilla—only the name is different

Made by McCORMICK & CO., Inc.
The World's Largest Spice and Extract House

P.S.—Be sure to buy the Tea with the big Mc!

the goddess sat immovable and beautiful before them. But just under her feet there was blackness instead of her lotus leaves. The block of stone upon which they were carved had been taken away. The pedestal was not solid, as it had appeared, but was made of stones, hollowed and set together without cement. Under the serene figure was quite a space, and in it was what he had been searching for.

"How did you find out this was hollow?" Osborne demanded.

"We are indebted to Master Yuan," was the reply. "He made the suggestion, and we found the piece which has been removed not too heavy for one person to handle, once it was identified."

"So the old fellow knew about this?" said Osborne. "Maybe he knows the operator too."

"You are leaving that to me," Manners reminded him.

The Chinese scholar had been standing apart from the three Americans. Now he moved forward.

"Please tell the American officer," said Master Yuan, "that caution should be used in investigating the interior of the pedestal. Something of the greatest value might be injured by injudicious haste."

Manners translated, and added a word of explanation which made Osborne stare.

"But if he thought the junk he's interested in was here, why did he wait until now to look for it?"

"Chinese scholars," Manners replied, "are not very good at dealing with such matters as the identification of movable stones in what seems a solid substance. Nor am I, myself. We both found Mr. Purcell's practical skill most essential."

Osborne proceeded to remove the radio from its hiding place himself, and then handed his torch to Master Yuan. "Tell him I'm much obliged . . . and if he'd like to look for his stuff, this will be useful."

The Intelligence officer busied himself with the inspection of the radio while the old man approached the hole and played the beam around the dusty interior. Nothing was there, so far as he could see. But Stephen took the torch and after a moment or two noticed that some loam had been pushed into a little ridge at the back. He reached a long arm into the space and brought out a scroll, tightly rolled

"Is that all?" asked Osborne as Master Yuan received the find in trembling fingers.

Further search produced nothing more, and the Chinese, after asking Manners to express his gratitude, bowed slightly, and retired to the Library of Four Delights, where he could examine the scroll at his leisure.

"Now," said Manners to Osborne, "are you satisfied that this is what you have been looking for? If you are, what do you propose to do next?"

"Leave it where it is, of course," said Osborne. "We'll let the operator suppose that we have given up the search. Next time we hear him, we can nab him."

STEPHEN replaced the movable stone as soon as Osborne had restored the radio to the spot where it had been found, and then the three separated. Stephen escaped to his own quarters, and Osborne and Manners strolled back to the Hall for Inviting the Pleasures.

"You say," Osborne remarked, "that it was this old fellow's learning which gave you the idea of an empty place under the statue. I'd certainly like to know what it was he grabbed up so anxiously."

"Suppose I go over and have a look?" Manners suggested.

"Well?" the young man demanded when Manners returned from his errand. "Did you see the thing yourself?"

"Yes."

"Could you read it?"

"Easily."

"What is it?"

"It's not the text that is important. It's the handwriting—the calligraphy. That makes it very precious."

"The handwriting!" said Osborne. "But what's the text?"

"It is the Diamond Sutra," replied Manners, "from the brush of the great [illegible] raphist of the Yuan dynasty, Wu Ch[illegible]"

The night had been very long. At in[illegible] Jane had risen and paced the floor. [illegible] would collapse release her? She t[illegible] there had never before been so many [illegible] consecutively of this ordeal; and she [illegible] it presaged an attack which would car[illegible] far toward the end.

It must be long after midnight. She thought of the coming of the light with [illegible] pressible longing, and remembered th[illegible] her there would not be many more d[illegible]

She went over to her basin and pi[illegible] took off her nightdress, and sprinkle[illegible] shoulders and arms with cool water. Sh[illegible] on a fresh gown, and over it her loose [illegible] robe. Her straw sandals had cost her [illegible] hundred dollars the first summer she [illegible] been in Huai Yuen, and she never wore [illegible] without remembering that item in her [illegible] account. With this mundane thought [illegible] extinguished her light and stepped [illegible] into the court.

It was a well of shadows. The roof [illegible] of the four little buildings cut delicate[illegible] against a sky where stars were dim. [illegible] turned from the path, and managed t[illegible] the steps of the eastern ridge, cut i[illegible] packed earth. She would circle the [illegible] on the wooded rise from which she [illegible] look over the plain and up to the star[illegible] At the highest point there was a stone [illegible] where she could watch for the sun.

SHE could not see the path as she [illegible] slowly, but her feet knew when they str[illegible] from it. At first the growth between her [illegible] the wall made a complete screen. Ther[illegible] was near the rear gate. Here the growth [illegible] away so that the uneven terrain to the r[illegible] glimmered vaguely under the dim hea[illegible]

She put her hands before her and tou[illegible] a tree. It was rough, definite, comfor[illegible] and she leaned against it. As she did s[illegible] a tiny point of light flashed out of the [illegible] ness. It pricked the thick air and was g[illegible] Then it pricked again. It was coming ne[illegible]

The watcher stood very still. There [illegible] only one kind of light that behaved like t[illegible] the bulb of an electric torch; this one n[illegible] be held in the hand of someone approac[illegible] the garden wall. Presently there were st[illegible] and a figure outlined for a moment in [illegible] glow of the torch passed directly beneath [illegible] The scent of a good cigarette became not[illegible] able. Jane sniffed. She had an association [illegible] that particular smell. She decided to sp[illegible]

The sound of her voice in the night [illegible] startling to her own ears. "Don't [illegible] troubled," said Jane. "I have had a rest[illegible] night, so I have come out to try to walk [illegible] self quiet. I was surprised by your light [illegible] came along the hills."

There was no answer.

"Benny," said Jane, "if you won't sp[illegible] to me I shall be very suspicious. You s[illegible] me a note saying you were returning [illegible] Chungking. What are you doing her[illegible]

"Teacher Jane!" The voice was hoa[illegible] but plainly Benny's. "Teacher Jane, [illegible] won't get me into trouble?"

"I suspect," said Jane dryly, "that you already got yourself into trouble."

"What do you mean?" The voice [illegible] sullen.

Jane slid to the ground and sat on her he[illegible] with one arm clasping the base of the t[illegible] "If you won't give me a frank account of yo[illegible] self, you must be here for no good reaso[illegible]

"Listen, Teacher Jane. These are h[illegible] times. I've seen and done bad things, [illegible] I'm trying to get out of the mess. I'm try[illegible] to get away. A word from you about find[illegible] me here tonight will trap me."

"You appeal to my compassion, Ben[illegible] But you don't tell me what you are doi[illegible] You must consider whether I have the ri[illegible] to risk danger and distress for other peo[illegible] in order to shield you."

"Teacher Jane, I'm hurting no one[illegible] swear it! Do you know what they do t[illegible] poor man like me when they even susp[illegible] what you are hinting? To be turned over [illegible] torture by you! Oh, I can't believe you [illegible] do it."

J could not answer. Of all the monstros meaningless violence of war, torture held the greatest horror. Yet he must be a spy. His terror was evidence enough. And the had been the raid ——

"nny, speak the truth and I'll hide you, I'll lp you get away. You have only to stop hat you're doing."

"tell you I'm hurting no one. You won't believe what I said if I talked. You can hide me. You can only keep quiet. What are you going to do?"

"nny, I don't know. I don't know."

"hen there's only one thing left for me. You emember my brother? He knew what the ore was, and now so do I."

Suddenly Jane realized that he had gone. She struggled to her feet, intending to call back, and then checked herself. An outcry might wake the coolies sleeping in their hut. She sat down again, trembling and chilled. The violence against which she had been a witness all her life had snaked out a tentacle of its octopus strength and caught her in its grip. To betray Benny was unthinkable, and even at that moment she was sure he knew it. To be responsible for his treachery was impossible. She must stop him without injuring him.

She began crawling along the path, forcing herself to shaking hands and feet to push against the steady ground, and gradually she stilled herself enough so that she stood up. She fell after a step or two; but she persisted, and, in the end, did walk uncertainly forward. Through her racing, anguished mind a familiar rhythm began to assert itself, first as beating with no meaning. Then gradually its sense came in the midst of her tumult:

"He . . . shall be satisfied . . . with the brightness . . . of His rising.

The words flowed in repetition as she went on. She was following the hill path. She reached the highest point, and groped to a stone seat. She was facing the east, but the black dark was still on the horizon. Exhaustion set in; her bodily energy was at an end. But it seemed her thought was clearing. There came a great compassion for Benny and for all sufferers, guilty and innocent alike. The compassion grew into a strange sweetness which embraced all living creatures, and turned toward the heart of God whence it had descended upon her. The body slipped to its knees.

When the sun rose, flaring red, Wilfreda looked into the Nameless Room and found it empty. She waited some time and then went out on a search. At last she found her friend, scarcely able to speak, and unable to see. Lao Ch'i and Lao Pa carried the shih mu to the chai and laid her upon her cot.

"Forgive me," whispered Jane. "I did not mean to make a fuss."

"You had better not try to talk," said Wilfreda. "But can you tell me in a word what happened? Did you have an attack?"

"Not an attack. Later . . . I will try to tell you."

"You must be very quiet now."

"Yes. I must not be sick now. I have things to do."

The Szechwan world was gray with mist. Dawn was beginning to lighten on the plain which lay filled with clouded air.

Wang Wei-Chou strained his eyes for a sign of his garden wall. He was traveling the narrow track from the main highway in a sedan chair carried by two bearers. Before him a gang of coolies tramped rhythmically, bearing on their shoulders the lacquered poles which distributed the weight of a burden, long and narrow, covered with coarse oiled cloth. He had his reasons for an arrival at dawn at the River Garden.

Ah. The sound of the current of water gliding in the channel outside his walls. Wang spoke to his men, who set down his chair. He stepped out with relief.

"We have arrived," he addressed the outline of a figure which emerged in the grayness. "Let the men rest. I shall go inside."

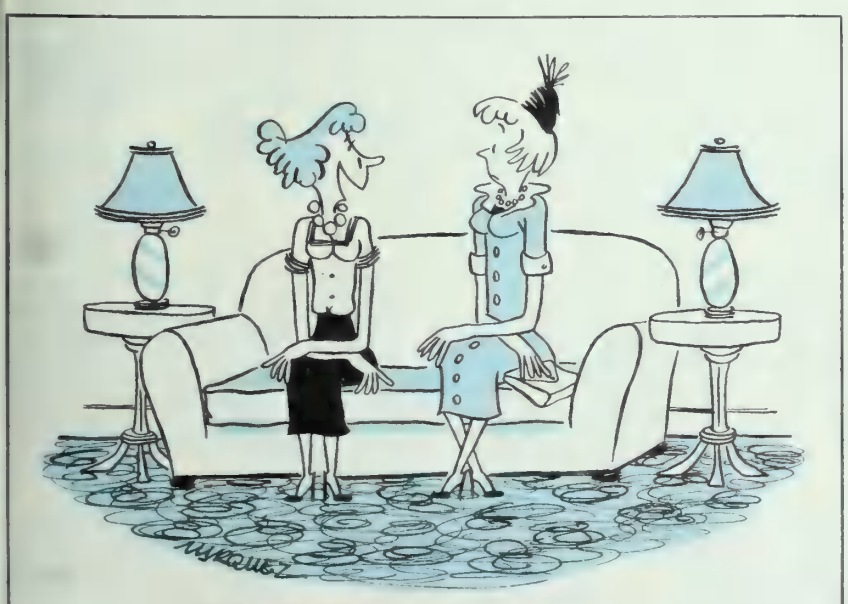
Wang went forward alone. He accompanied his knock with his own voice, so that Shang Shih might not be troubled by the early summons. Presently the gate swung ajar, and Wang stood beside his old servant, who made his respectful bow.

"The master is unexpected."

"I have been on the way all night. Let us go to the Court of Retirement."

They moved into the garden. They heard fish leap in the hidden lake, and birds from invisible trees. They came to dim walls pierced with the lantern windows and Shang Shih undid the lock, and gave entrance.

It was gloomy inside the great room. Wang Wei-Chou took out his flash and its thin beam fell on the wide stone slabs of the floor, and on the intricately patterned lattice.



"Sweep out now, and leave all entrances open. I have a certain thing to bring here. I shall go and return soon."

Shang Shih fetched a broom and busied himself while his master returned to the men outside the garden.

"We will go in," he said.

The coolies raised their load again upon their shoulders. The signal was given to go forward. The shuffling feet were the only sounds as they went through the paths to the Court of Retirement. There, the burden was eased down upon the trestles, and the covering stripped away. A black lacquer coffin, its lines picked out in gold leaf, stood in the hall.

The carriers gathered up their carrying poles and their ropes and followed Shang Shih out of the garden. Wang Wei-Chou lingered. The walls and galleries, crowded upon by the dripping pines and drenched bamboo, shut him away from the glow of

"I thought of a wonderful scheme to get Harry to propose. But I don't want him."

Televised... written about...raved about...this sensational new appetizer

A pip of a dip for potato chips

Made with the world's most famous cream cheese

PHILADELPHIA BRAND

The next time you entertain, serve this terrific new variation of cheese 'n' chips. Clip this recipe for Kraft's Clam Dip now.

Rub a mixing bowl with half a clove of garlic. Blend an 8-oz. package of soft, rich Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese with 2 tsps. lemon juice, 1½ tsp. Worcestershire Sauce, ½ tsp. salt, a dash of freshly ground pepper, ½ cup drained canned minced clams (one 7-oz. can) and ¼ cup clam broth. Place in the center of a large tray and surround with potato chips, crackers or raw cauliflower buds.

You can't imagine how good it is. Wait till you taste it . . . and hear what your guests say!

Look for the red Kraft K. Only Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese has it on the package!

Other cream cheeses are in similar packages. To pick the real thing at a glance, look for the red K; it's on every package of famous Philadelphia Brand.

TWO POPULAR SIZES

3-oz. famous since 1880

½-LB. saves you as much as 12%

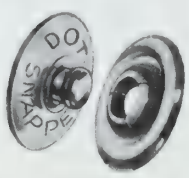
PHILADELPHIA BRAND CREAM CHEESE WITH CHIVES . . . A tantalizing new version of that old favorite "Philadelphia"! It's flavor sparked with fresh, chopped chives. Grand for little appetizers or big sandwiches. Note the green-printed package.

PHILADELPHIA BRAND CREAM CHEESE WITH PIMENTOS . . . the same delicate-rich "Philadelphia", with bright red bits of racy pimento added. Sure to be a snack favorite with the entire family. The "pimento package" is printed in red.

THERE IS ONLY ONE PHILADELPHIA BRAND

. . . IT'S MADE BY KRAFT AND GUARANTEED FRESH!

Why not change to one of these new QUICK DRYING BABIES ?



No need to turn snookums in on a new model—simply turn him out in new snap baby pants. Quick changes are easy with Dot Snappers on the job. They work in a wink and they're completely laundryproof. Make it a point, next time, to ask for snap baby pants. They're just one of many examples of the way Dot Snappers and other United-Carr products help to make life easier for you.

SMART SEW-AT-HOMES!

Put laundryproof Dot Snappers on the clothes you make with the Dot Snappers Kit. Complete with professional attaching tool. At notion counters, $1 a box, refills 25¢.

DOT SNAPPERS ®

UNITED-CARR, FIRST IN FASTENERS, CAMBRIDGE 42, MASS.

sunrise. He walked the low-roofed galleries, then back to look upon the lacquer and gold, ponderous and shining . . . taking possession of his thoughts as he walked.

It was inevitable that Jane must die. It had been a satisfaction to provide for her last days the surroundings which were her heart's desire, but he had not been content to stop with that. He had, during his last leave, gone to Hsu Lao-Pan and his coffin shop, and given his orders. He had been able to get a brief leave when word came that the coffin, containing exquisitely wrought Chinese grave clothes, was in readiness for the time when Jane might be "invited" to occupy its state.

Shang Shih came back with a kettle of hot water and his master's bags. He joined Wang Wei-Chou by the open doors. "Where shall I take the bags and bring the morning rice?" asked the old servant.

"I will stay in the Fragrance of Bamboo," said his master. "Tell Shih Mu as soon as she is awake that I am here and bring word when I may see her."

It was Wilfreda who received him at the San Yu Chai. The nurse met him at the gate.

"Jane is lying down. I will take you in presently."

They spoke in low tones as Wilfreda gave a nurse-to-doctor report. Then she left him and he crossed the court to Jane's door.

"Come in, Wei-Chou."

She was lying on her cot. In Jane's eyes and smile there were warmth and light, although he was quick to see that she made an even smaller bundle in her white sheet than she had when he brought her in her litter to the garden.

She went on, "You come at an auspicious moment. Have you heard about Willow?"

"I have. And about her baby. And about your other friends. Shang Shih has made a full report."

"There's very little that escapes Shang Shih," Jane commented. "I must apologize for filling your garden so full of people."

"I knew what would happen when I invited you. I am honored and pleased with everything you have done." He took her hand and let a finger rest on her pulse.

"It is good to be with you and Wilfreda," Jane continued. "You both know that Brother Ass is not going to do much more work, but neither of you confuse me with Brother Ass. At least, Wilfreda certainly doesn't and I hope you don't, Wei-Chou, in spite of your attention to that pulse."

"I suppose I am very far from being as clear about life and death, and body and spirit, as my teacher," he answered. "And I'm a doctor. Brother Ass is my business. But I am also your student, you know. I hope to become clearer as I go on."

Jane nodded. "You will."

He laid down her hand. "Brother Ass is not doing badly. I shall not interfere with you, if that is what you mean." Wang Wei-Chou rose. "And by the way, I have a message for you. Major Trent hopes to call upon you very soon."

JANE sat in the peacock chair where she could look out on her pool. Wilfreda and Doctor Hartshorn were with her, and also Stephen, who had returned from the north.

She looked at Stephen. "Did thee hear anything at the air base as thee came by? Have they ever found the radio they were hunting the night thee hid Willow?"

"I heard nothing about that. But did thee know that they have opened a Red Cross club at the base with a hostess so that the men can have guests? And that Daisy is there this week end?"

"No," said Jane. "I didn't know that."

She did not ask if Stephen had seen Daisy, fearing it would humiliate him to say that he had not. Then he spoke again.

"Jane, has thee forgotten what day this is "What day? Thee means it is First Day

"Yes," said Stephen. "Here are four of who have one faith; why should thee n draw us together in worship?"

Jane glanced swiftly from face to fac Stephen's need she knew; it seemed that tl weary lines of Doctor Hartshorn's forehea betrayed a burden of spirit; and of Wi freda's cares she was never unmindful. The were all weary and sorrowful. She folded h hands in her lap.

"Let us enter into silence," said Jane.

The mists were in the garden that morn ing, curling over the hill rises and the lang-t roofs, wreathing the dark trees. They drifte over the small hushed group. Gradually concentration began to spread among then

Jane's voice was heard:

"What shall we render unto the Lord for a His benefits toward us?
All our fresh springs are in Him.

"What shall we say in the face of the suffer ings of our time?
All our woes and our despairings are fron His hand.

"What shall we do with ourselves in a worl of violence and war?
All the efforts of ou souls, all the toil of ou bodies, can be wipe out by one bomb.

"How shall we mee our secret griefs and terrors?
In the nights, in the days, which one of us escapes being afraid?

"How shall we bear the joys which come to us and are denied to our fellows?
How have we dared to taste of loving-kindness and tender mercy?

"And the benefits and destructions, the terrors and the joys will not submit themselves to our understanding.
His ways are all unsearchable
His paths past finding out.

"From His strange and terrible and glorious acts
Our only refuge is Himself.
For He only is our hope
And in Him only is there any promise of life."

The water, lapping on the stones of the pool, came soothingly to ears filled with words which were but dimly comprehended. They did not know how long they had been sitting together when Jane unfolded her hands and laid them on the arms of her chair. As she did so, Daisy came in at the door opposite. Her eyes were fixed on Jane, and she went swaying toward her—swaying and stumbling.

"Aunt Jane . . . Jack went out on mission last night, and he didn't come back."

Stephen caught her in his arms as she collapsed.

Doctor Hartshorn to Wang Wei-Chou:

Jane Breasted died early Monday morning, ten days after you left. The immediate cause of death was heart failure. Your wishes were carried out. At noon Tuesday she "ascended into the coffin," as you Chinese say.

The scene in your Ancestral Hall was something like your Chinese ceremony and this seemed right to me.

Wilfreda Grayson used the garments you provided. There were present only Wilfreda Grayson, Stephen Purcell and myself. Stephen and I closed the coffin and he sealed the lid. Then we three remained together in silence until it was time to go.

Purcell has asked about Jane's finances. I have had to confess that there is no money. Of course, we missionaries in Huai Yuen would have done our best, if you had not stepped in.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Testament

By Sara King Carleton

All that we knew and had—we leave it lying
In a room called Earth, on a littered table there,
And open a door to a passage
where birds are flying Through tall stone arches, free
in a wind-lost air.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

When sunshine floods the room through your picture window, ...eats against drawn draperies, your c... y furnishings are being ruined right b... re your eyes! All year long, sunburn fa... s and rots fabrics and rugs, spoils wood fi... hes—but now there's a way to stop it. N... you can have an extra wide CLOTH w... low shade tailor-made for any picture w... low up to 150 inches in width. Mounted o... a slim aluminum roller, out of sight w... n not in use, that CLOTH window sh... le will shield your possessions from st...urn damage year after year. Such a s...ple way to solve the picture window p...blem, to save you so much grief and so m...ch money!

V...luable book free! Plain facts about w...dow shade quality, with actual samples c...paring CLOTH and cheap substitutes. W...ite Joanna Western Mills, Dept. B, 1...1 Merchandise Mart, C...cago 54.

Joanna Western Cloth Window Shades

...tell the world you're a smart housekeeper!

JOANNA WESTERN MILLS CO. · CHICAGO

...ake More ...oney SELL WOMEN'S WEAR

Up-to-minute styles — DRESSES — street — house — DRESS GOODS — cotton — rayon — HOSIERY — LINGERIE — GREETING CARDS — Be...utiful Samples — Splendid Values — Make EASY SALES — GOOD PROFITS — without experience. Exclusive. Be First. Write now.

MITCHELL & CHURCH CO. Dept. 139 Binghamton, N. Y.

...Lady, ...ee your ...el marks showing?

WALL-TO-WALL CARPET installed with Smoothedge has added beauty—no ugly tack marks, scallops, or dust-catching indentations. Easier to keep clean. Write for free color book "Working Magic with a Carpet."

Smoothedge

1532-X N. Indiana St., Los Angeles 63, Calif.

...MALL TABLES that let you . . . LIVE IN A BIG WAY

DROP LEAF MODELS BY Craddock

IN 1-, 2-, 3-, & 4-PEDESTAL SIZES WITH EXPANSION UP TO 9 FEET

...eautiful 18th Century ...esigns, richly finished, ...eaturing Craddock's ...obble-proof construction.

...ASES & CHAIRS IN OPEN STOCK

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN SATISFACTORY OR REFUND OF MONEY

Write for name of nearest dealer —and send 10¢ for Complete Catalog J1 to Craddock Furniture Corporation, Evansville 7, Ind.

But none of us could have made matters go so simply, so swiftly, so beautifully.

We three send our gratitude.

DANIEL HARTSHORN

Wilfreda Grayson to Wang Wei-Chou:

It is not possible to write at length just now, but I think I should tell you what has been decided about little Hope. None of us know how to communicate with Willow. It seems necessary to ask for your protection of the child and her nurse until Willow arranges to have her taken north, which, I understand, is her intention.

We called in Scholar Yuan and he thinks it perfectly simple to leave the baby with the nurse in the garden. He will take charge of some money which was given to Jane after her death, brought by Major Trent. This will be enough to provide for the child for some time.

A word about Jane. I do not know what Jane has meant to you, but I know what your goodness has meant to her in these weeks you have given her in your garden. Later, I can write more about it. But that must be for another time. W. G.

From the Journal of Wilfreda Grayson:

Everything is over. Jane had only a week of the agony we dreaded for her. She went into a coma and died when her heart mercifully failed.

That was two nights ago. Now, before I leave the Garden, I must set down some account of these final hours.

Why do little things related to the end of a life seem charged with significance? For Jane there was no sense of coming to an end, as she approached death. She felt herself like one about to pass through a door which was open into light.

Bodily pain she did fear. She supposed, as we did, that she must endure its very worst a long time. Now she will not be hurt any more.

It may be that the shock given her by Daisy Fairchild was the beginning of the end. Stephen, Doctor Hartshorn and I were with her and had been holding Quaker meeting.

The mood of worship (that seems the wrong word, but I can't think of another) had hardly lifted, when Daisy Fairchild appeared. She said Jack Fernald had been lost on mission, and then she fell unconscious. Doctor Hartshorn found that she had a high fever. Daisy had flown from Chungking to be with young Fernald, and when she arrived Fuchs noticed that she was not well; but she would allow him to do nothing. She said she and Jack were to have this time together, and she could not afford to be sick.

Stephen got her to the Huai Yuen Hospital, and there she still is, in a critical condition. No one puts a name on the infection. It is one of those myriad diseases that war against us here in Szechwan.

Now young Fernald had been blotted out . . . they told us later, he went down in flames.

As soon as Stephen and Doctor Hartshorn had taken charge of Daisy, Jane let me put her to bed. When she stretched herself upon her cot, she looked up as we heard the first showering on the roof.

"Hush," she said. "The rain." She lay listening, as the downpour came steadily. I came to sit beside her, and when I took her pulse, it betrayed the exhaustion I expected. Jane had closed her eyes, but she opened them. She spoke of Jack Fernald, and allowed me to understand that she had known about him and Daisy, although just what she knew she did not tell me.

After the words about Jack she said very little more. I thought she slept, but I did not leave her. After a time, I realized that her condition was not sleep, and sent Lao Pa through the rain to let Doctor Hartshorn know.

She had a week of suffering, but we were able to keep her under morphine most of the time. When the end came, Doctor Hartshorn told me about the extraordinary forethought of Wang Wei-Chou. There was something very sweet to me in the fact that only Stephen and Doctor Hartshorn and I were concerned in what had to be done. We stood together near the open doors and gave thanks to God for Jane in silence of our hearts. As we left the court we found all the servants waiting at the gate. Shang Ma says they went in and bowed before the coffin.

The two men returned to Huai Yuen, where Daisy occupies Stephen completely. Doctor Hartshorn lets him do some of the sitting up with her because they are so desperately short of staff, and Stephen is so anxious to be of use.

Wednesday, I set about packing up. As I was busy in our quarters I heard Shang Shih's shuffle, followed by an unfamiliar step, and then I saw a tall man with heavy shoulders and

Ideal

DOG: Dogs and cats love I - DEAL

CAT: I - DEAL gives us pets Ap - peal

WOMAN: If you love your dog as I love mine

Feed him I - DEAL and he'll be fine

FOR Ideal's clean wholesome, meaty aroma makes it so pleasant to feed. Ideal contains a full 7-course meal all in one can.

WILSON & CO. INC.

Another WILSON Quality Product

"My Aunt Jemima Old South Recipe gives you – the lightest pancakes you can bake!"

Yes, the very lightest pancakes you can bake! Lighter even than your own homemade! It's all because Aunt Jemima's Old South Recipe is now specially blended . . . a wonderful process that whips and whirls a fluffy lightness right into Aunt Jemima Pancake Mix—Buckwheats, too! You just stir very lightly . . . and bake the lightest, most delicious pancakes of your life! What's more, a stack of fluffy-light Aunt Jemimas, running with butter 'n syrup, costs about 6¢. Enjoy them any time, any day.

SPECIAL OFFER!
Big 12" Aunt Jemima
COOKIE JAR
Send only $1.00 and one Aunt Jemima Ready-Mix box-top to Aunt Jemima, Dept. 85, Box D, Chicago 77, Illinois
Sparkling, washable plastic

Aunt Jemimas
America's Best-Loved Pancakes

● The red box for pancakes and wattles ● The yellow box for buckwheats thinning hair coming into the lang-tse where I had taken Jane's letters and books for a final looking over.

"Miss Grayson?" he asked, coming toward me. "I am Robert Trent."

I invited him to sit down, and saw he was laboring under a burden of shock and grief which brought us very near together.

"I heard in Chungking," he said. "She never gave me a hint of this."

"There were very few who knew," I answered.

I found myself telling him more than I had told anyone before. He listened in wonder and, I could feel, with understanding. It was extraordinary how we two strangers drew together in those moments of our talk of Jane. Finally he lifted a letter from the pile before me.

"This is my last to her. It's of no importance now. It refers to an old student of hers, picked up by our Intelligence. His name was Li."

"Oh, Benny?"

"He has committed suicide," said Trent. "He thought he was going to be turned over to the Chinese police and took that way out. I don't blame him."

I found nothing to say. Trent stared at his letter and then tore it slowly to pieces.

"That Eurasian was a queer sort to be a pal of Jane's. But she evidently had all kinds. He had a little money, and sent word to me that he wanted Jane to have it. In his message he said another thing. He wanted Jane to be told that he knew she had never done him any harm—it was he who had hurt himself. I wonder what that meant. Do you know?"

I didn't. I had never liked Benny. But this message touched a tenderness in me. Of a sudden my head was down on my arms, and I was weeping—weeping the tears held back so long. Robert Trent let me cry for some time, comforting me as if I had been a child. At last I was quiet, and we had a long talk about all sorts of little things which it relieved me to tell and pleased him to hear.

At last he got up and said with authority, "You had better put all this away now. I can see that you are quite worn out."

"I got some sleep last night."

His level glance was on me. "I should think not much. I go back to Chungking within a few hours. What are you going to do?"

I said I must finish disposing of Jane's effects if he, as next of kin, gave me permission. He smiled at that.

"One favor before I leave you. Could you let me have something of Jane's to keep—a book, perhaps?"

A copy of the writings of Meister Eckhart, a German mystic, full of her notes and marks, was lying with her papers. I gave it to him.

"We shall meet again," he said. "But now I must go back to the air base and you must give yourself a rest."

He went away, and I obeyed him and lay down on my cot. The good tears had made sleep possible.

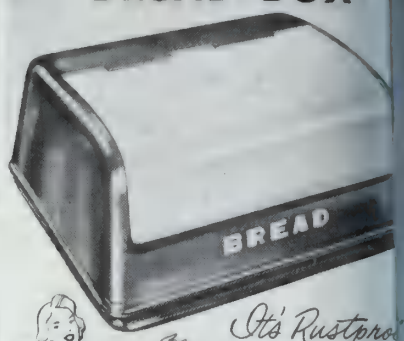
Wilfreda Grayson to Michael Chambers:

Tomorrow I shall be leaving Huai Yuen on the postal truck, and should be in Chungking in two days' time. From there I will get whatever transportation I can to Kweichou.

Daisy Fairchild's serious illness has not yet reached the point where the doctor can be sure she will recover, but she is young and strong and there seems good hope that she will live. Doctor Hartshorn tells Stephen that her war work is finished; she will require a long convalescence, and should be flown back to the States as soon as she can stand the journey. Doctor Hartshorn says that when Daisy comes out of this illness it is probable that all events just before it will seem very remote to her. He thinks there is a good chance that in the end Stephen and Daisy may come together.

Expect me in Kweichou by the end of the month. W. G.

Robert Trent to Wilfreda Grayson:



It was good to see you in Chungking as you passed through. Be sure to let me know when you are here again.

I have been looking over that book of Jane's which you gave me. I can't make much out of it, except when I find passages that she has underscored. Those seem to stand by themselves. But there are six lines, written in pencil, at the close of the chapter in which Eckhart has said that the love of God is like a fisherman's hook:

The hook of love
Caught me, long since;
And when strength failed,
And pain beset me,
Then, on that hook I felt
The tug of God.

THE END

FLATTER YOUR KITCHEN with a Big, Beautiful Lustro-Ware BREAD BOX

It's Rustproof
Also CHIP PROOF ODORLESS, SANITARY

Outstanding addition to popular Lustro-Ware ensemble of gay kitchen beauties. Matches canisters with smart round corner design — no crumb collecting crevices. Space for three loaves and baked goods, too . . . keeps them fresh, tasty. Over 100 other Lustro-Ware plastic housewares in many matching sets—welcome gifts. At stores everywhere, or write for catalog. Columbus Plastic Products Inc., Columbus, Ohio.

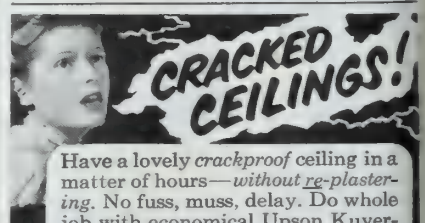
ALL PLASTIC
Lasts for Years
Permanent finish and colors.
At most stores $4.95
Slightly higher in Canada
Matching 4 Canister Set $8.95

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

® T M REG.

COMPARE • You'll Say Lustro-Ware

MOMMY'S RIGHT 3-IN-ONE STOPPED THE SQUEAKS



3-IN-ONE OIL

P.S. Mend broken dolls, wood to with amazing PLASTIC WOO

For PERFECT POPPIN
Tender • Nutritious • Ta
Sun-Cured • Fun to Po
At Better Stores Everywhere
T-N-T POPCORN

Have a lovely crackproof ceiling in a matter of hours—without re-plastering. No fuss, muss, delay. Do whole job with economical Upson Kuver-Krak Panels. Hundreds of thousands of Upson Ceilings giving lifetime satisfaction. Send 10c for 32 page booklet. Ideas of leading decorators. Mail coupon.

GET UPSON KUVER-KRAK PANELS

THE UPSON COMPANY
939 UPSON POINT, LOCKPORT, NEW YORK
I enclose 10c. Send me your practical 32 page idea booklet, "New Interiors For Old."
Name_____
Street_____
City State

School days are here again, even for the cockers, and Hildegarde loves jumping hurdles in the warm September sun.

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

THE sunlight has a new quality now in September. It is no longer a golden trumpet tone in the sky; it is like a strain of violin music, very pure and clear, but sad. It falls on the cropped fields gently, the hills have a dreamy look. The first stamp maples begin to burn, striking the prelude for the color symphony to come. Goldenrod and chicory along the old stone fences mark the paths for autumn. The wild white and purple asters bloom.

I feel like singing all day. The cockers enjoy my singing, they don't care at all that I cannot keep on the key. My very favorite song is a folk song that I can very rarely manage.

"When cockle shells turn silver bells," I sing happily while I take the seeds out of the glowing scarlet peppers, "then will my love re—turn-n to me — — When roses blow—in winter snow — —"

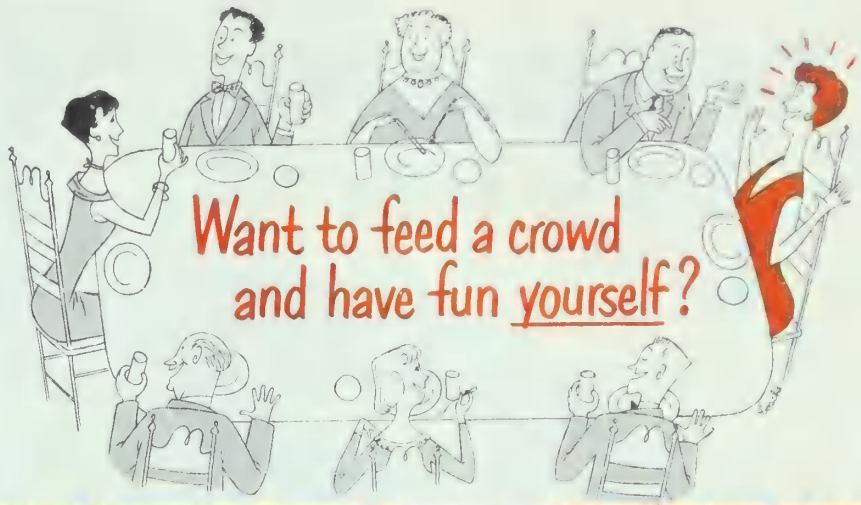
Pepper seeds are so hard to get out. They jump around the kitchen. The inside of the peppers is a tawny orange red, the outside a true scarlet. What a beautiful vegetable, with the smooth glossy surfaces and the creeping lines to the tip. "For love is bonny but a little while." I get out the chopper and begin the chop-chop-chop in the old wooden bowl.

I always loved that folk song, but, oh, how different it sounds when my friend Glenn sings it. But Glenn is a real singer, with one of those voices that pour like a golden tide against the dark shores of time. While I make my pepper relish and sing to Jonquil and Melody, I think happily of how marvelous music is, how it comforts the spirit, stays the soul. Glenn's idea of true bliss, however, is to take his six-year-old fishing, and the fact that Jimmy can cast is a far finer thing, in his mind, than almost anything else.

I went out to the Bach festival in Berea in June, and I like to relive every moment, storing it up as I am storing up the relishes and pickles. No happy experience is ever lost; we have it, to take out and savor.

Berea is a small, quiet college; great trees cast shadows on the campus, the buildings are stanch and old and awesomely American somehow. I was a little worried about me and Bach as I drove up with Burton and Dorothy, for eight hours a day for two days was quite a lot of Bach, I thought.

But it is like Shakespeare: if you just receive it, you are enchanted. Bach was wonderful, and so were the students who sang in the Mass. "That's my boy there," said a proud papa behind me; "see him, he's got the oboe!"



My faith in America was renewed as I saw these excited boys and girls dashing around lugging their instruments or looking at their scores. I think it is sometimes easier to see what's wrong in our country than to consider how much is right.

We can still eat outdoors during most of this month. But it is pretty cool at night, and we like a good hot dish instead of the aspics and molded salads of August. Chicken, split and broiled over the charcoal embers, basted with barbecue sauce, is a favorite now. A slice of ham grilled and served with pineapple slices is good. I do the pineapple in a spider at the back of the barbecue fire.

The modern version of a paper plate is lovely, plastic coated; you can serve anything and not find it leaking through on your lap in a few minutes. The paper cups with handles are fine too. I never enjoyed holding a cup of boiling coffee with only a bit of wax between me and it.

But nobody has invented a successful eating utensil in the picnic line. The wooden paddles and spoons are so small, the plastic ones are too much like chopsticks for me. We use indoor forks and spoons and knives for our picnics.

The freezer has had its fall cleaning. This is the job Jill and I hate and detest. First you stand on your head half an hour reaching into the mysterious icy darkness as you unload the packages. The freezer has sweated profusely, and as you lean you get a nice cold sponging from the outside of it. The packages are slippery. Now and then the wrapping tears as you grab it, and some nice frozen rhubarb pops at you. Then there comes the awful moment when you find three containers labeled PEARS 1946. How did they stay hidden all this time? Shriveled and mummylike, they reproach us for forgetting them. We do try to rotate

Serve Spaghetti and Meat Balls cooked with—

You can make this delicious spaghetti sauce and meat balls ahead of time. And then—

Let the crowd come! Your main dish will be ready in minutes. And everybody will rave about your grand recipe.

That's because only Hunt's Tomato Sauce can put that same rich flavor into a dish. It's the Kettle-simmered sauce, and your grocer sells it for only a few cents a can. Now, here's the basic recipe for four people:

¾ cup chopped onion
1 clove garlic, minced
4 tbsp. oil or drippings

Lightly brown onion and garlic in hot oil. Then take:

1 lb. ground beef 1 tsp. salt

Add salt to meat and mix lightly. Form into small balls and brown them in the pan with the oil. Then add:

1 Can Hunt's Tomato Sauce
¼ tsp. pepper 1 cup water
2 tsp. Worcestershire Sauce

Cover the pan and simmer 40 minutes. Pour over hot spaghetti (8-oz. pkg.) and sprinkle with grated Parmesan cheese. For 8 servings double the recipe.

Use Hunt's Tomato Sauce in your everyday recipes. In soups, stews, casseroles, gravies, meat loaf. Grand for leftovers — just use a little of this and a little of that and Hunt's Tomato Sauce. Get a few cans at your grocer's!

Hunt-for the best

Hunt Foods, Inc., Fullerton, Calif.

Hunt's Heavenly Peaches
at down-to-earth prices

UNIVERSAL Stroke-Sav·r

America's Fastest Iron!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

CUTS IRONING TIME ALMOST IN HALF!

Certified tests prove Universal Stroke-Sav·r cuts 26 minutes from the average ironing hour. Prove it to yourself with a 10-Day Home Trial. Money-back guarantee.

UNIVERSAL

LANDERS, FRARY & CLARK, NEW BRITAIN, CONN.

Copyright, 1951, LF&C

KVP Paper Maids for Neater, Easier Living

All the family will brag about your meat.

Keep Full Fresh Flavor In Frozen Meats

Enjoy your meat more than ever this year by wrapping with KVP freezer paper. Seals in all those savory juices, shuts out air, prevents mottling and freezer-burn — keeps it fresher and tastier! KVP originated freezer paper — has kept it the leader in protection ever since.

The paper commercial lockers use and sell.

The original freezer paper. Four roll sizes 15" to 24" wide — 70 ft. to 400 ft. long in cutter boxes.

Paper Maids Save Time—Save Work

Shelf Papers • Freezer Papers • Heavy and Fancy Waxed • KVP and Mrs. Hayward's Dusting Papers • Pie Tape • Baking Cups • Place Mats • Cookery Parchment • Pressing Parchment • Kalacloths.

Your Guarantee of Quality

Kalamazoo Vegetable Parchment Co. Parchment, Michigan

things the way the books say. But here are those sad pears!

After everything is piled on the cellar floor, Jonquil and Tiki find out where we are and pounce in. Hamburger is meat, they opine, lunging at two fat packages. We chase them away and their reproachful faces lean into the cellar well as they watch.

Then comes the awful scraping of all the ice from the inside of the box. By now the freezer seems as big as the state of Texas. We used to try all kinds of weapons to get the frost off, from putty knives to weed cutters. In the end we mostly clawed with our hands. Jill had to stretch like a giraffe's neck to sweep up the bottom. A small dustpan would go down all right, but spilled half the stuff as it came up. Before we finished we were numb with cold, the cellar floor looked as if Peary's expedition had camped there. The Workshop girls have outfitted us with a sort of snowplow gadget which is a good scraper and collector—but still I don't like the job.

And then everything has to go back in. We haven't enough corn, we discover, but oh, how much spinach we have! I filled one glass jar too full and it is cracked, so we put it on the steps to throw away. Daphne immediately grabs it, frozen as it is, and makes off. If she eats broken glass —— We fly.

Anyway, we love that freezer, we say as we emerge into the sunlit yard and rub our numb fingers. Wouldn't it be nice if it consumed its own frost? But what a friend to the home it is.

Tea in the quiet garden is pleasant. The white clematis is about out, the thyme smells sweet, the asters are lovely. No one could believe in winter on a warm September afternoon. I always wonder if the dogs and cats sense that summer is over.

National Dog Week comes the twenty-fourth. Every week is dog week at Stillmeadow, but I am thankful that the great contribution dogs make to humanity is celebrated nationally now. I like the slogan: "At your service—all ways." From the guard dogs at the front to the smallest puppy following his own small boy, dogs live for mankind, and the love of a dog for his humans is beyond any telling. The National Dog Welfare League has a seven-point program which everyone should support:

1. A good home for every dog.
2. Elimination of stray dogs from the streets.
3. Better-informed dog owners.
4. Consideration for dogs and all animals.
5. Emphasis of the dog's use as com[panion] and protector.
6. Fair laws for dogs and dog owne[rs].
7. Respect for the rights of non-do[g] owners.

The Stillmeadow dogs would add on[e] last point if they had their say: Point 8— [an] an open-door policy in effect. For the [one] desire in a dog's heart is not to be sepa[rated] from his loved ones for so much as a m[inute].

Esmé thinks this is very silly. Aloof and beautiful, she walks along the fence on thinking Siamese thoughts. Aladdin was born with a yearning for human love t[o] unusual for cats, but Esmé says an [Or]sinian is a feckless being.

I'd like to be going to school again [when] September comes around. Not that one doesn't go on learning all one's life, but learning is easier in school. The assignments are tangible, the te[acher] is always on hand to help. Outside sc[hool] often one does not know just what the assignment is. or whether one has ma[jored] ured up at all.

But at least we [can] go to Obedience [class] with the cockers and the Irish! Maeve [never] sits down in the [car] when we drive to cl[ass]. She stands breat[hing] down the back of [our] necks, wagging [her] tail, and blocking [the] rear-view mirror. [She] has stood up this [way] on six-hour drives, too, until I get tired [of] her and plead with her to sit down [just] a minute, my feet hurt. The cockers generally settle down, on laps if possible.

Twilight is soft amethyst, haze hangs [over] the woods, the country road is tranq[uil], shadowy. The air is cool and faintly scent[ed] with burning leaves. When the moon ri[ses] the light is tender. The stars are the colo[r] the fresh-water pearls we used to have wh[en] I was little, the sky is spread all over w[ith] them. I think of Keats' Last Sonne[t] "Bright Star! would I were steadfast as t[hou] art!"—for there is a security about look[ing] up into a sky full of stars. Perhaps it remin[ds] me of how infinite the universe is, how sm[all] the terrors of man, how truly magnific[ent] God's handiwork.

Walking to the house as the Septemb[er] night folds down over the lilacs, over t[he] little hemlocks by the door, I notice how t[he] trees have grown this season. They give t[he] house a small, sheltered appearance. Neve[r]theless, the house is sturdy, weathering t[he] passing time. And the fire on the old sto[ve] hearth burns with its own glory.

Homekeeping hearts are happiest, sa[id] the fire.

William Jennings Bryan was devoted to his wife. One day, when he was posing for his portrait, he was asked by the artist:

"Mr. Bryan, why do you wear your hair over your ears?"

"When I was courting Mrs. Bryan she objected to the way in which my ears stood out. To please her, I let my hair grow to cover them."

"But that was many years ago," said the artist. "Don't you think you should have your hair cut now?"

"Why?" said Bryan, with genuine astonishment. "The romance is still going on."

JUST HELP YOURSELF

(Continued from Page 71)

itself to this kind of occasion. And I might add, one that makes it possible to give a party and still have carfare left. All of which led us to explore the possibilities of veal, which, once you get over the idea that it's something put in chicken salad to fool you, is very good indeed.

So for our supper dish we shall have, not the well-known scallopini but one christened Veal Paprika, and never to be called "Pap" if you make it right.

VEAL PAPRIKA

Cut 6 slices bacon into small pieces with scissors or a sharp knife. Sauté with 3½ pounds boneless veal shoulder or shank, cut into pieces, as you would for stew, along with ⅔ cup chopped onion. Cook until the meat and onions brown to a golden brown. Add 1½ teaspoons salt, 3 tablespoons paprika, 5 cups canned chicken broth. (Once upon a time we used to make our own "stock," but few have time for that any more.) Cover and simmer slowly until the veal is tender—about 1–1½ hours. Now mix 3 tablespoon flour with ½ cup cold water and 1 cup heavy sour cream. Stir into the veal and cook until thickened, stirring all the while. Taste for seasoning and add more salt and paprika if needed and pour into a casserole and set in a slow oven, 300° F., to keep hot. A garnish of toasted, slivered, blanched almonds adds a touch of elegance to this dish.

The adaptable noodle. Did you ever wonder why noodles are called noodles? There's something slightly uncomplimentary about it. And yet they are most adaptable. You can do most anything with noodles. They love to play any number of different roles, and if you can't find at least twenty-two things to do with them—no coaching, either—then your noodle education has been neglected and you'd better stick to spaghetti.

Anyway, here is a very simple noodle idea (but just different enough) to go along with and add interest to the veal paprika—or paprika veal.

NOODLES WITH BUTTERED CROUTONS

Remove the crusts from sliced bread. Cut into cubes to make 1 quart. Sauté in ½ cup butter or margarine, turning often. Set aside, to keep warm. Near serving time, cook 1 package (8 ounce) medium-wide noodles, according to the directions on the package. Drain. Rinse with boiling water. Drain again—and I mean drain and no foolin'. Season highly with salt and pepper. Add the croutons and toss everything together, adding 2 to 3 more tablespoons butter or margarine as you toss. (A sprinkling of poppy seed added to the noodles as you toss is highly recommended by me.) Serve hot with the dill paprika.

East or West onions. The tears that have been shed over onions would make a lake in the North Woods plus a trout stream in New England look like puddles in the road on the way to school. Now there are onion-detearers, onion salts and solutions that make you forget the tears, but for prodigal perfection in cooking, I still prefer the real thing at its pungent best. So here's to the onion, and may it smell up the house from kitchen to parlor—East or West.

WEST COAST ONIONS

Place 2 cups very thinly sliced onions in a shallow dish. Pour over them ½ cup water and enough vinegar to cover. Sprinkle with 1 tablespoon sugar. Cover the dish and chill for 3 to 4 hours. Just before serving, drain the onions and mix with ¼ cup mayonnaise, 1½ teaspoons celery seed and salt to taste.

Composition into compote. Remember those "composition books" we had in school, wherein you wrote essays on whatever subject teacher dreamed up, or if you were especially original, you went ahead and wrote strange tales and fancies not meant for teacher's bulging eyes? A fruit compote is a composition itself, and here you may be as original, artistic and creative as you please. Teacher isn't looking. Plums, apples, apricots and pears all play a part in this compote, and the indispensable lemon juice ably supports the blander fruit, and, after all, support is what we need, whether lemon juice or not.

HOT FRUIT COMPOTE

Drain 1 No. 2½ can whole apricots. Put the apricot sirup in a saucepan. Add 3 cups water, 3 peeled, cored and quartered apples and 3 peeled, cored pears cut into halves. Cut three 3" pieces orange peel into ⅛" strips and add with ½ cup sugar and ¼ cup lemon juice. Simmer for 30–40 minutes until the apples and pears are tender. Add the canned whole apricots and 1 one-pound can purple plums, drained. Heat through. Serve hot with or without a cooky or a cruller.

Old-timey as turning the heel. In the days of long ago, with little persuasion, grandma used to knit. All the socks and stockings and shawls and afghans that dropped from grandma's shining needles made an endless procession of wool gathering, and the things never wore out. Once acquired, you were in for it. It was mittens in mitten season and bootees for the baby in all seasons.

And, somehow, doughnuts and grandmas always come to mind together. Both are nice to have. So let's go straight to the deep-fat kettle and get started on a batch of quick crullers—not the raised kind which is my favorite but this one which you can make in a hurry any time from now till Christmas.

SUGARED CRULLERS

Beat 4 eggs until light. Gradually add ⅔ cup sifted sugar. Beat well until spongy and sugar is dissolved. Add 1 teaspoon grated lemon rind, ⅓ cup milk and ⅓ cup melted shortening. Sift 3½ cups flour with 1 teaspoon salt, 3 teaspoons baking powder and ½ teaspoon nutmeg. Stir the sifted dry ingredients into the egg mixture. Roll a small part of the dough out at a time on lightly floured board. Roll to ¼" thickness. Keep the balance of the dough in the refrigerator while frying batch by batch. Cut the dough into strips—twisting in knots or braids. Fry in deep fat at 370° F., until crisp and golden brown. Drain on unglazed paper. Roll in a mixture of cinnamon sugar—½ cup sugar to 1½ teaspoons cinnamon (and a little nutmeg does no harm). Makes 4 dozen.

I hope you've all had a chance to take your summer in tankards and not by thimblefuls. Great glorious draughts of sunshine, not insufficient little sips. And that you've come out with an enviable tan. And don't start thinking about the cold months to come. The strings on life's harp never give out a sweeter note than the lingering music of summer's passing. And Jupiter is now the evening star. What more can you ask? THE END

JENNIFER

"Sure it's cute, Marge—but let's spend our money for something that shows!"

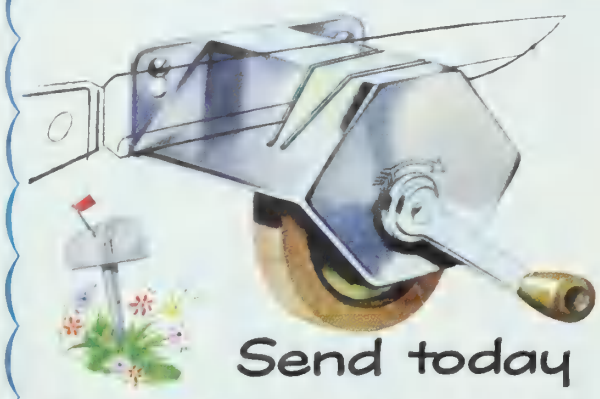
Cool and Thr-r-ifty

Kool-Aid
In the Ice Box
by the Pitcher Full

A 5¢ Package Makes 2 Quarts

KEEP a pitcher of refreshing Kool-Aid in your ice box. Saves money. Costs just a wee bit . . . a 5¢ package makes 2 full quarts. Saves ice box space, especially in one of the new space-saving pitchers. Saves time . . . to make Kool-Aid, simply dissolve a package in 2 quarts water and sweeten to taste. Saves work . . . always chilled, fully blended, and ready to serve. Handy for your children . . . they love it, too. Six delicious flavors. Say, wouldn't it be nice to have a thirst-quenching pitcher of Kool-Aid in the ice box now?

ALSO MAKES
20 Colorful FROZEN SUCKERS
8 Servings Refreshing FROZEN DESSERTS



"KOOL-AID" IS A REGISTERED TRADEMARK OF PERKINS PRODUCTS CO. ©1951 PERKINS PRODUCTS CO.

Beatrice Cooke's Mealtime Adventures

SPECIAL, For September: How to get a HONE-RITE knife sharpener worth $1.50 for only $1 and a label—if you act at once!

Send today

I'm sure you'll want to have this new home knife sharpener that gives your knives a true, professionally sharpened edge and keeps them always keen. I assure you, once you have it in your kitchen you'll wonder how in the world you ever got along without it! This compact, beautifully plated knife sharpener is all steel with a self-lubricating bearing and the knives are sharpened by a fine TRU-BALANCED CORUNDUM HONE. Guide slots automatically hold your knife at the proper angle for correct sharpening. And this HONE-RITE sharpener is ever so easy to attach to your wall. After seeing for myself what a help it is, I'd certainly be willing to pay $1.50, or more, for it!

Get your knife sharpener—now—for just $1 and a label!

Simply take the label from any Meadow Gold or LaChoy product and mail it with one dollar in currency (no checks or stamps, please) to Beatrice Knife Sharpener, Wulff Manufacturing Co., Ontarioville, Ill. Be sure to print your name and return address plainly. You may order as many sharpeners as you wish (maybe with an idea for Christmas giving!). But send a label and $1 for each sharpener ordered. This offer expires October 31, 1951, so it's a good idea to order yours at once.

A dessert treat that's cool and swee

Here's an all-weather dessert that's so wonderful to t so beautiful to see, and so easy to make that I'm s it'll become one of your favorites, too. Of course, y ice cream or sherbet recipe is good all year, but I th it's particularly fine to have a stimulating new w dessert now when there's still a good bit of w weather to come and the old stand-bys are becom too familiar to our friends and family!

Chocolate Lime Sherbet Pie

1 quart Meadow Gold Lime Sherbet Chocolate Wafer C
Semi-sweet chocolate, chopped

Chocolate Wafer Crust: Combine 1½ cups chocolate w crumbs (about 20 wafers) with ⅓ cup melted Meadow G Butter. Press firmly into a greased 9-inch pie pan. Chill t oughly. Spread the lime sherbet in crumb crust. Top w chopped semi-sweet chocolate. Place in freezing compartm of refrigerator or home freezer and freeze until firm.

I consider it most important to use MEADOW G SHERBET for this recipe, and I'll tell you why: MEA GOLD SHERBETS are always creamy-rich and crea smooth. And made with the natural juice of fresh, r fruits. In a recipe like this, you can see why best-tasting sherbet is a must—that's MEADOW G SHERBET. Try it soon, won't you?

It's picnic fare weather!

These late Summer and early Fall days are probably the best picnic weather of the whole year, aren't they? The hottest days are over and Nature seems to be continually inviting us to come out and enjoy her beauty. I love spur-of-the-moment outdoor meals and I do like variety in them. That's one thing I appreciate about having MEADOW GOLD COTTAGE CHEESE always on hand in my refrigerator—it can be combined with pantry-shelf foods to make simply delicious sandwich spreads! I think you'll want to keep MEADOW GOLD COTTAGE CHEESE as a dependable picnic stand-by, too. Here are eleven of my favorites:

1. nuts
2. olives
3. chives
4. liverwurst
5. jelly
6. tuna fish or salmon
7. sliced ripe olives, chopped nuts
8. ham, pickle relish
9. hard-cooked eggs, chopped pickle and mayonnaise
10. grated carrots, chopped nut meats and mayonnaise
11. chopped dried fruits; raisins, dates, apricots or prunes

When you make sandwich spreads for any occasion you want the best: that's why I always use MEADOW GOLD COTTAGE CHEESE. Its tender, moist curds are firm, not watery, and give the cheese an appetizing texture. If you haven't tried MEADOW GOLD COTTAGE CHEESE, get it today!

FREE! BOOK OF ENCHANTING CHINESE COOKE

Like to delight your family with a wonderful Mu room Chop Suey . . . Lobster Cantonese . . . or F Foo Yong? Discover the easy way to make these a 21 other unusual oriental dishes—in a grand recipe book offered by the makers of fine LaCh Chinese Foods. Write today to LaChoy Food Produ Division, Beatrice Foods Co., Archbold, Ohio, Dept. J-

The quality of your butter shows up in your baking — for delicate flavor use MEADOW GOLD.

Company Cookies for your Coffee Klatsch

The long summer vacation is just about over n the children will be back in school and once ag you'll have time for those delightful, caref get-togethers over a cup of coffee. It will be g to get back to the habit, won't it? And I hav recipe I'm sure you'll be most proud to make for your neighborhood taste-testing panel! It's recipe that just couldn't be better with coffee, t

Glazed Orange Wafers

1 cup Meadow Gold Butter
1 cup sugar
¼ cup orange juice
½ teaspoon orange extract
3 cups sifted flour
½ teaspoon soda
1 teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon salt

Glaze

½ cup sugar ½ cup honey ¼ cup orange juice
Combine and boil 20 minutes.

Cream butter until light. Add sugar gradually and continue creaming un light and fluffy. Add orange juice and extract. Sift flour, soda, baking po der, and salt. Add to creamed mixture. Chill dough for an hour. Roll o ⅛ inch thick on floured board and cut with cooky cutters; place on baki sheets and bake at 350° for 13 minutes or until delicately browned. Cool cake racks. Use pastry brush to brush on glaze and sprinkle with fin chopped nuts. For variation and color, tint your favorite powdered sug cake frosting with vegetable colorings for some cookies.

To make the most of the delicate flavor of these cookies, you'll want the best butter, MEADOW GOLD BUTTER. You know, MEADOW GOLD BUTTER is having its golden anniversary this year. Surely any company making butter for 50 years has learned every butter-making secret. Try MEADOW GOLD BUTTER today!

© 1951, Beatrice Foods

Allergies and bronchial asthma plagued Mrs. Hulce in Gary, Indiana, and bill for drugs mounted high, $35 a month. To pay for move to Utah, the Hulces sold home and furniture, started out with $1500.

NEW START IN LIFE

Meet the Harry J. Hulces, who looked for a miracle— and found it in Springville, Utah.

By ROGER BUTTERFIELD

Harry Hulce gave up a promotion in Gary, took laborer's job at huge Geneva Steel Mill in order to earn adequate income, says, "I'll never be sorry."

HARRY HULCE aimed his hoe at some weeds, slaughtered them efficiently, and straightened up to look at the mountains that come down almost to the back yard of his home in Springville, Utah.

"We had to burn our bridges behind us when we moved out here in 1947," he said. "But I'll never be sorry we did it. If we had stayed in Indiana I wouldn't have Joyce now."

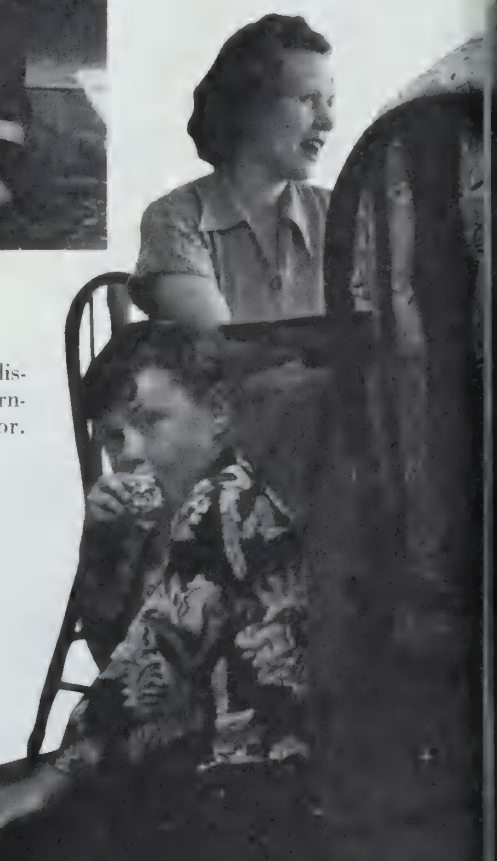
He is probably right about that. Four years ago, when they lived in the industrial city of Gary, Harry's blue-eyed, youthful-looking wife was so tortured by asthma that she had to hang over the back of a chair in order to draw a deep breath. There were nights when she could not lie in bed except under the influence of drugs. Scratch tests revealed that she was subject to an incredible list of more than fifty allergies, including

PHOTOGRAPHS BY JOSEPH DI PIETRO

Youngsters are fond of chicken, but "like everything—that's the trouble." Hulces say being "in on family matters" has made children feel secure, despite many moves.

Leaving friends, relatives in Gary took courage—but the Hulces' decision was unanimous.

wheat, eggs, milk, pork, chocolate, tobacco, cabbage, tomatoes, chicken feathers, dog and horse hair, and almost every known pollen.



She was virtually starving: her stomach was so upset by medicines that she could swallow nothing but rye crackers, orange juice and bouillon. Her sufferings were doubly intense during pregnancy. After Bobby, her third baby, was born her family doctor told her she would be "foolish" to try to have another.

The final blow came when the specialist who was compiling her allergy chart solemnly warned her against touching, wearing or sleeping in anything made of cotton. Joyce, who had clung to her sense of humor in spite of everything, laughed wildly at this.

"Have a heart, doctor," she begged. "My husband is a workingman and I have a new baby to care for. I'll just have to keep on changing diapers until someone comes along and invents a baby who can do without them!"

Joyce does most of disciplining ("I spank, scold or nag, according to age"), but "when Harry says 'Boo,' the youngsters boo!"

Energetic Joyce likes to read, discuss books with Harry; often turnabout baby-sits for neighbor.

HOW AMERICA LIVES

me time after this conversation the Hulces began burning their bridges. Ha quit his secure and long-time office-accountant position in the giant Ca gie-Illinois works of the United States Steel Corporation in Gary. W nothing more than the promise of "some kind of laboring job" ahead of n, he prepared to move his ailing wife and three small children 1500 mi to the vicinity of Provo, Utah, where U. S. Steel had recently bought an er big plant. Fellow workers had told him that the mountain air ard Provo was working wonders for other asthma sufferers.

n November 10, 1947, the Hulces set out for the West in the style of m ern pioneers, with their elderly Hudson sedan packed full of kids and su ases, and a two-wheeled trailer hitched on behind containing all their wo dly goods. In Harry's pocket was a roll of $1500 in bills, which was wh he had left after selling their house and furniture in Gary, and buying wh they needed for the trip. He hoped it would be enough to give them a br d-new start in life.

t dusk on November 17 the Hulces reached the Wasatch Mountains, wh h ran from north to south through Central Utah, and guard the fertile va ys to the west. The highway was slippery with snow, but Harry kept go g. He had written ahead to the only couple they knew in Utah, and these good friends had offered to share their home with them until they managed to find a place to live.

Halfway through the mountains on the western side Harry had to turn onto a narrow road and start upgrade again. Here the snow was deeper and there were patches of ice on the road. Until this trip the Hulces had never seen any real mountains, and they were impressed, if not a bit scared. On their left a frowning cliff rose straight up into the sky, blotting out the stars. On their right it dropped steeply down to a small river, which sounded very far below them.

Suddenly the wheels spun on ice and stopped moving ahead; the car and trailer started sliding toward the canyon on the right. Harry shifted gears, but it was no use—everything was rolling slowly backward. The motor died and the noise of the stream grew louder. The trailer jackknifed and dropped completely off the road.

It was the snow that saved them. Bulldozers had piled it up on both sides of the road, and the trailer settled into a snowbank and stuck there. A moment later headlights appeared behind them and a reassuring voice called out, "Unhitch the trailer and leave it here. I'll come back with chains and haul it up for you." It was their host, who was coming by on his rian, 14, wants to be concert linist, to teach home eco- nics, or marry, have "right" nber children—"about 5."

ry doctor warned Joyce, "No re babies." Since move, she's l Margaret, expects again.

ke and Marian earn money swimming, movies. Mike's bition: to be a hermit. "But goes to all school dances."

Bob, 7, watches Mike and friend at favorite pastime—sailing boats in irrigation ditch.

HOW AMERICA LIVES

Mike, 13, plays drums in school band, has big time hunting, fishing with father—and often catches the "first and the biggest" perch.

"The children here don't go in so much for fights, bad language, as in Gary."
And "out after dark" problem has diminished.

Best of all family treats for Hulces are summertime picnics at beautiful Hollow Creek, only a few minutes from home. In winter, whole family likes to have friends in, pop corn, make candy.

way home from work. His warm house was just two miles farther up the road.

The Hulces can joke about their introduction to the "wild West" now, but it was exciting enough at the time. The important thing is that the miracle they hoped for has really happened—all Joyce's symptoms have disappeared in the high, mountain-cooled air of Utah. She breathes and sleeps in comfort, eats everything she wants, and is once more the gay companion and optimistic helpmeet she was when Harry married her.

Best of all from the viewpoint of the whole Hulce family, she can have babies again. Chubby, healthy, year-old Margaret, the present idol of the household, is not only a Utah (Continued on Page 193)

Betty Crocker MAPLE PECAN CHIFFON

Cool and summer-y in a nut-trimmed, beige frosting!

You'll take a bow—after serving up Maple Pecan Chiffon! It's glamour on a cake plate—put there by you, a Betty Crocker recipe and the ever-glamorous Softasilk Cake Flour.

All cakes become glamorous—with Softasilk! Chiffons—Double-Quicks—Angel Food Supremes—Softasilk makes them all higher, finer, more delicate than ordinary flour can! Because Softasilk is no ordinary flour! It's milled and tested just for cake-making! Use Betty Crocker's tested cake recipes—for Chiffon, Double-Quick and Angel Food Supreme cakes. Use them with Softasilk Cake Flour. And together they'll give you cake-perfection every baking time!

The Secret of all glamour cakes is—

Softasilk

SO GOOD IT'S AMERICA'S CHIFFON CAKE FLOUR!

Betty Crocker of General Mills

Betty Crocker Maple Pecan Chiffon

MAKE ONLY WITH SOFTASILK

Preheat oven to 325° (slow moderate). Chop nuts very fine (see quantity at right below).

STEP 1 . . . Measure (level measurements thruout) and SIFT together into mixing bowl:

- 2¼ cups sifted SOFTASILK Cake Flour (spoon lightly into cup, don't pack)
- ¾ cup sugar
- 3 tsp. baking powder
- 1 tsp. salt

Mix in:

- ¾ cup brown sugar (free of lumps) (packed in cup)

Make well and add in order:

- ½ cup cooking (salad) oil such as Wesson
- 5 unbeaten egg yolks (medium-sized)
- ¾ cup cold water
- 2 tsp. maple flavoring

Beat with spoon until smooth or with electric mixer on medium speed for one minute.

STEP 2 . . . Measure into large mixing bowl:

- 1 cup egg whites (7 or 8)
- ½ tsp. cream of tartar

Beat by hand until whites form very stiff peaks, or with electric mixer on high speed for 3 to 5 minutes. DO NOT UNDERBEAT. Egg whites are stiff enough when a rubber scraper drawn through them leaves a clean path.

STEP 3 . . . Pour egg yolk mixture gradually over beaten egg whites—gently folding with rubber scraper just until blended. DO NOT STIR. Sprinkle over top of batter gently folding in with a few strokes:

- 1 cup very finely chopped pecans

Pour immediately into ungreased tube pan, 10 x 4-in. Bake 55 minutes in slow moderate oven (325°), then increase to 350° (moderate) for 10 to 15 minutes, or until top springs back when lightly touched.

Immediately turn pan upside down, placing tube part over neck of funnel or bottle. Let hang, free of table, until cold. Loosen from sides and tube with spatula. Turn pan over and hit edge sharply on table to loosen. Frost with Browned Butter Icing. Decorate with chopped nuts.

BROWNED BUTTER ICING

Keep ¼ cup butter over low heat until golden brown. Remove from heat. Blend in 2 cups sifted confectioners' sugar, 2 tbsp. cream, 1 tsp. cooking oil and 1½ tsp. vanilla. Stir vigorously until consisteney to spread. If too thick stir in a little hot water. For more generous icing, double recipe.

For high altitude adjustment see the recipe folder in the Softasilk package.

Classic blue-and-green plaid jacket, Vogue Design No. 6875. Gray flannel skirt, 7418.

Red corduroy jumper, shoulder buttoning, Vogue Design No. 3420. Blouse, 7354.

$100 Teen-Age Wardrobe

Dear Marian: I can't believe that this complete wardrobe of twelve pieces cost only $101.10. Your idea of having a purple coat was such a good one. It looks entirely new this year and gives the wardrobe an individual touch. The black-and-white checked suit is most becoming . . . I love the velveteen jockey cap you wear with it. I'll bet you will "live" in your red (wonderful with purple) corduroy jumper, because you can wear so many different blouses and sweaters under it. Your gray velveteen party dress certainly looks pretty . . . the black braid is a nice accent for the neckline and pockets. It was great fun helping you plan this wardrobe, and I am sure it will be an inspiration to other girls your age who like to sew as much as you do.

Most sincerely,
NORA O'LEARY

Black-and-white checked rayon suiting in a braid-trimmed, belted jacket, flared skirt, No. 3437. Fabric for suit costs $7.16

MARK SHAW

Dressy gray velveteen . . . the perfect junior party dress. With braid trimming. It costs $17.92 to make this. Vogue Design No. 3438.

© VOGUE

Topcoat to wear over everything, in purple fleece—a new color in the younger market. Vogue Design No. 3431.

Turn to Page 226 for itemized list of co of wardrobe and accessories; also, oth views, sizes, prices of Vogue Pattern

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Greenwich, Conn.: in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont. (*Conn. residents add sales tax.)

above the crowd...
Town & Country Shoes
in two new perfectly simple (simply perfect) pumps, combining suede with kid
in five wonderful into-winter colors...
Town & Country Shoes
Travel Light Jackpot winter spice winter smoke winterblue violet winter green winter red
Shoes & bag 8.95 to 10.95 (bag plus tax)
Also available in black, brown, navy, in store near you: or write we'll tell you where Town & Country Shoes, St. Louis, Mo.

SCRAMBLED EGGS? SCRUMPTIOUS!
WHIPPED POTATOES? WONDERFUL!
ORANGE JUICE? OH, WHAT ORANGE JUICE!

ALL - with the new...

G-E Triple-Whip Mixer!

No semi-retirement in a closet for this beauty! Because it's so convenient to use, so right for a wide variety of dishes . . . you'll find yourself putting it to work for breakfast, lunch, dinner—even snacks!

New improved speed selector is up front in plain view. Result: you can get just the right power for the job at hand . . . without squinting or guessing!

Three beaters mix thoroughly by beating from center to side of bowl. And the beaters—without troublesome center shafts—are easy to clean!

Built-in light shines into the bowl, spotlighting the fancy whipping jobs! (A 2-quart and a 1-quart bowl—plus a wonderful juicer—come with every mixer.)

Whip-Tip for Sept.:
To give whipped sweet potatoes a tangy lift, add grated orange rind!

Write for the Triple-Whip Recipe Book. Address General Electric Company, Box L9, Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.

Trim and specifications subject to change without notice.

You can put your confidence in—

GENERAL ELECTRIC

Baking on a Budget

HOW AMERICA LIVES

By LOUELLA G. SHOUER

"THERE are a lot of good bakers in this town. Practically every one of my friends and neighbors bakes her own pies, cookies and cakes. Not many bake bread every week as I do, but we're great hands around here for hot rolls and coffeecakes."

Mrs. Hulce likes to bake, but she also feels that it's cheaper to bake than to buy. In large quantities, supplies are lower in price. She buys a twenty-five-pound bag of flour (sometimes more) and ten pounds granulated sugar—usually beet sugar. Sugar beets are grown locally; and if you've ever had the idea that beet sugar isn't the same as cane, you can take Mrs. Hulce's word for it—there's not a bit of difference. You'll have just as good results with one as with the other.

A friendly town, Springville. Someone is always calling up to say, "I just baked a cake—how about coming over for a cup of coffee?" When a bake sale, church supper or social is coming up, Joyce makes a big batch of potato doughnuts, cookies or pies, and they sell like hotcakes.

Even if I hadn't known Mrs. Hulce had lived in Indiana, I would have tumbled immediately when she began talking about her raisin pie. My mother came from Indiana, and there was a raisin pie like Mrs. Hulce's in the oven at our house almost as often as apple pie. If you're a Hoosier, you'll stand by me on this. Raisin pie is old-time—maybe you've never eaten one. If you have, maybe you've forgotten how good it can be.

INDIANA RAISIN PIE

Boil 2 cups seedless raisins in 1¼ cups water and ½ cup orange juice for 5 minutes, covered. Combine ½ cup brown sugar, 2 tablespoons cornstarch, 1 teaspoon cinnamon, 1 teaspoon grated orange rind, a pinch of salt and ¼ cup water. Add to the cooked raisins; bring to a good boil, stirring well to keep sauce smooth. Remove from the heat and add 1 tablespoon vinegar and 2 tablespoons butter or margarine. Pour into an 8″ piepan, lined with pastry. Cover with top pastry. Crimp edges and slash top as you do for any covered pie. Sprinkle lightly with cinnamon and sugar. This final benediction may seem superfluous, but it really does something special for this pie when you get to the best part—eating it. Bake 25 minutes in a hot oven, 425° F. Serve while still warm.

Potato doughnuts—the light, airy, raised kind—are practically a Utah state specialty, and word goes around that the recipe originated there some-

JOE DI PIETRO

Bread dough takes and likes a beating.

"Punch down to rise again!"

"I like the feel of bread dough."

"Divide, shape—and into the pans."

Top favorite: bread hot from the oven, slathered with jelly.

up for the bake sale—potato
uts go along with the pies.

ere in the vicinity of Salt Lake
y. Mrs. Hulce got her recipe from neighbor across the street, Mrs.
uise Robertson.

But doughnuts and recipes do have vay of getting around, and when we ade them in the Workshop kitchen, ey went as hot doughnuts always around here, only a little faster.
ey are best eaten hot, with a cup good coffee. Glaze some just for fun, d don't forget to fry the "holes"
r the youngsters. Here is the rece—straight from Utah.

RAISED POTATO DOUGHNUTS

eat 2 cups milk until film forms on p. Do not boil. Add 1 cup sugar, ½ p shortening, 1½ teaspoons salt.
dd 1 cup freshly mashed potatoes. It kes approximately ¾ pound po-toes, boiled in salted water and rained, for 1 cup mashed. Cool until
's lukewarm. To be sure, test it on our wrist as one does the baby's ilk. Meanwhile, soften 1½ packges yeast, compressed or quick dry, n ¼ cup lukewarm water and let tand 5 minutes. Add to the milk-nd-potato mixture with 3 eggs, beaten ight. Flavor with ½ teaspoon lemon lavoring and ½ teaspoon cinnamon.
Add 8 cups sifted flour, part at a time, working smoothly to a nice dough with a strong spoon.

Scrape into a clean, greased bowl. Cover and let rise in a warm, cozy place (bread dough, like a setting hen, likes to be let alone for a spell) until it holds the impression of your finger when you touch it lightly. Then punch it down to release the air bubbles. Turn out on lightly floured board and roll out to about ¼" thickness. Cut out with a doughnut cutter and place doughnuts on a clean floured dish towel—cover with another towel. Let rise until doubled in bulk. Fry in shortening or salad oil heated to 375° F. until golden brown, turning once gently with a fork. (Mrs. Hulce keeps an old-fashioned iron kettle just for frying these doughnuts.) Drain on absorbent paper. Makes 5–6 dozen.

If you want to glaze the doughnuts, blend ¼ cup water into 1½ cups confectioners' sugar. Mix until smooth and add 1 teaspoon vanilla. Dip one side of each doughnut in the glaze and drain on a rack.

There's something soul-satisfying about making a loaf of good bread.

Baked Chicken Puff

WHAT a dish! First—just open a can of CAMPBELL'S CREAM OF MUSHROOM SOUP! That heavy-cream, mushroom-rich soup that makes the best-tasting, easiest creamed dishes ever. And so quick, so easy!

1 can (1¼ cups) Campbell's Cream of Mushroom Soup
⅓ cup milk
1 cup cubed cooked chicken
2 cups cooked green beans, drained
4 eggs, separated
½ cup grated American cheese

Combine soup and milk in a 1½-quart casserole; add chicken and beans. Bake at 375° F. for 10 minutes. Meanwhile, beat egg yolks and add grated cheese; beat egg whites and fold into egg-cheese mixture. Pile fluffy egg topping over chicken; continue baking for 30 minutes. 6 servings.

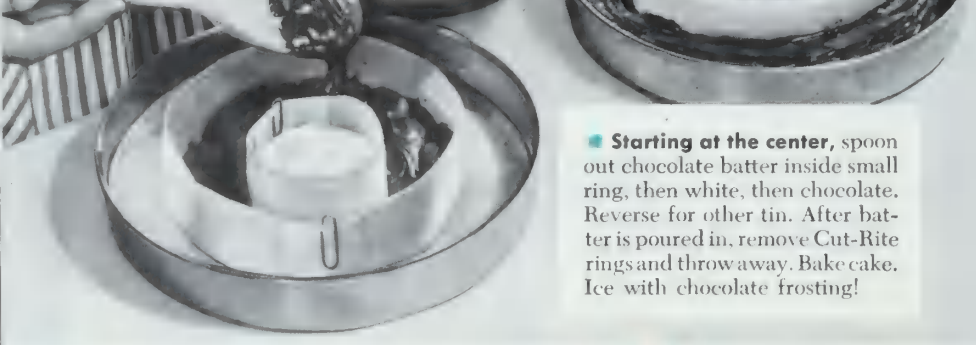
CREAMIEST DREAMIEST CREAMED DISHES... CREAM SAUCES, TOO... This EASY Way!

DELICIOUS AS A SOUP... AS A POUR-ON SAUCE ... AND IN COOKING

It's no bother now to make creamed dishes and cream sauces! For you can have the best creamed dishes and cream sauces ever—with Campbell's Cream of Mushroom Soup! Just heat soup with milk—and stir! Cooking sauce or pour-on sauce—it comes out velvety-smooth every time! No lumping, no bother! And so delicious—for Campbell's Cream of Mushroom is made only with choicest-flavor, cultivated mushrooms. Extra-heavy whipping cream, too. As soup, in creamed dishes and as a pour-on sauce—it's a favorite of families everywhere!

● Here's a new way to make a fancy cake and save dishwashing, too! No need for special rings. Just make them from folds of Cut-Rite—it's extra-heavy. Use your favorite cake recipe or cake mix and prepare half white, half chocolate batter.

DIONE LUCAS TELLS YOU



How to make an easy Checkerboard Cake

. . . famous cooking authority

● For each layer pan tear off two lengths of waxed-through Cut-Rite, one 10 inches long, the other 19 inches long. Fold into several thicknesses. Form into two rings; overlap ends, fasten with paper clips. Arrange in pan to form three sections.

● Starting at the center, spoon out chocolate batter inside small ring, then white, then chocolate. Reverse for other tin. After batter is poured in, remove Cut-Rite rings and throw away. Bake cake. Ice with chocolate frosting!

When you take a nut-brown loaf out of the oven, you have a feeling of having accomplished something really important. If you have ever "stayed home with the bread" you will understand how Mrs. Hulce and I feel about it. "I like the feel of bread dough when I knead it," she says. "It has such spring. It feels alive!" Mrs. Hulce's bread is very tender and makes wonderful toast.

MRS. HULCE'S BREAD

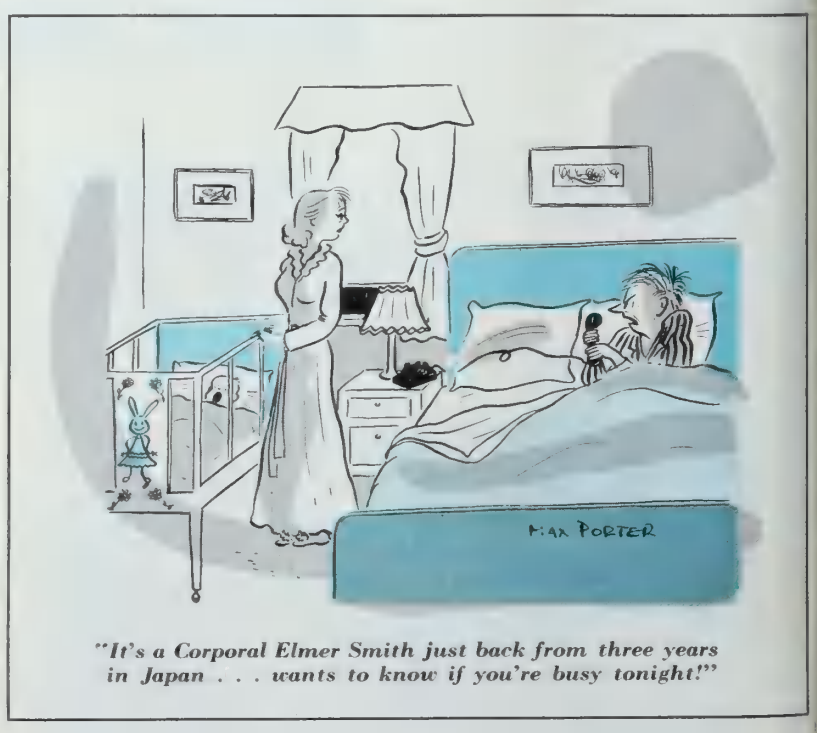
Dissolve 2 packages yeast, compressed or quick dry, in ½ cup lukewarm water. Add 1½ cups potato water, left from cooking potatoes, and 2 cups scalded milk cooled to lukewarm. Next add 2 tablespoons salt, ½ cup sugar and 4 cups flour. Mix well, then add ½ cup melted shortening (Mrs. Hulce uses lard) and 8 more cups flour. Mix until smooth. Place in greased bowl—a large one. Cover with a towel and let the bread rise until it "comes to meet you." (Mrs. Hulce's mother used to say, "I must hurry home or my bread will be coming to meet me." Mrs. Hulce herself uses the expression when she means double in bulk.) When you can touch the dough lightly and it holds a slight impression of your finger, the dough is ready for kneading. Don't poke it—just touch it. This is the best test I know and it's the surest way of knowing whether the dough is "light." Punch down the dough and let rise again, just as before. Knead lightly on a floured board.

Cut dough into 3 equal portions. Shape one into a round loaf to be baked on a cooky sheet like the old-fashioned cottage bread, and one into a regular loaf to fit a greased breadpan.

Roll out the third portion for a sweet cinnamon loaf for breakfast. Sprinkle ¼ cup sugar and 2 teaspoons cinnamon on the dough. "I'm heavy on the cinnamon, but it tastes so good in bread," Mrs. Hulce says. Roll up like a jelly roll, press edges together and curve it to fit into a greased breadpan. Let rise again and bake in a hot oven, 400° F., 40–45 minutes until the crust is a golden brown. Tap the loaf. If it sounds hollow, it's surely done through.

Mrs. Hulce's icebox cookies never stay on the table long at bake sales. The recipe intrigued us, for they seem to have the flavor of oatmeal or graham, yet there's none used. It's the cinnamon, I guess. They are very crisp and a cinch to make.

ICEBOX COOKIES



Sift 4½ cups flour, 2 teaspoons baking soda, 1 teaspoon cinnamon and 1 teaspoon salt. Combine 1 cup brown sugar, 1 cup granulated sugar, 3 well-beaten eggs and 1½ cups melted shortening. Add the sifted dry ingredients and 1 cup chopped walnuts. Mix well. Shape into 3 rolls. Wrap in wax per or aluminum foil and chill several ho or overnight. Slice thin. Place on greased sky sheets and bake in a moderately hot en. 375° F., 6–8 minutes. Watch it—a ger linger in the oven and you'll have l nt. sugar cookies. The whole recipe mak 2 dozen, so slice and bake just one rol time. The dough will keep for a wee or longer in the refrigerator. If you ha a freezer or freezer-compartment refrige or stash some of the rolls away for later ba g.

I'm willing to wager that chocolate ke is a top favorite with most families, a it certainly is with the Hulces. Some es Mrs. Hulce uses mixes, sometimes m es her own. She has a slick mix trick—m es two 8″ marbled layers, using a packa of white cake mix and a package of choc te or devil's-food cake mix. The rest o e batter she bakes in 12 large muffin s Harry likes cupcakes in his lunch box. e bakeries in Springville don't seem to e them. Maybe they don't like to wash m in pans any more than I do. Here's s Hulce's homemade chocolate cake h white wonder icing, which she uses o ll cakes, whether mix-made or handmade.

FAMILY CHOCOLATE CAKE WITH WONDER ICING

Cream ¼ cup butter or other shorte g. Gradually add 1 cup sugar, creaming as o go. Add 1 well-beaten egg and 2 square s sweetened chocolate, melted (or you can d 6 tablespoons cocoa to the dry ingredi s, if you'd rather). Sift together 1½ cups fr, 1 teaspoon baking soda and ¼ teaspoon t. Add the dry ingredients alternately to creamed mixture with ¼ cup sour mil or buttermilk. Add 1 teaspoon vanilla ext t. Then add ½ cup boiling water and beat il smooth. Grease the bottom of a square s. 8″x 8″x 2″. Pour in the batter and bake a moderate oven, 350° F., 30–40 minutes, or until it springs back lightly from the to h.

Wonder Icing: Combine 2 egg whites, ½ p sugar, 2 teaspoons light corn sirup and 6 teaspoon cream of tartar in the top f double boiler. Have the water in the bot n boiling. Stir over the boiling water abo t minutes—"until it's too hot for your fing o stand," Mrs. Hulce says. "I don't me l stir with my finger. I take out a little da spoon and test it with my finger when I th it's about ready." Remove from the t water—pull up a chair to a table, migh well be comfortable—and beat 10 min until it stands up in fluffy peaks and doe t run. (Or 5 minutes, if you have an elec beater do the job for you.) Add 1 teasp vanilla and spread on cake. You don't n to remove cake from the pan. It keeps mo r if you don't. THE

"It's a Corporal Elmer Smith just back from three years in Japan . . . wants to know if you're busy tonight!"

NEW START IN LIFE

(Continued from Page 186)

by but "a JOURNAL baby," according to yce. She and her husband read the article, n I Choose the Sex of My Child? by Bruce iven, in the November, 1949, LADIES' OME JOURNAL, followed the suggestions, d got what they wanted—a second girl. Another arrival is due this fall, and this ne the Hulces are hoping for a third boy.

Harry Joseph Hulce (pronounced Hulcie), ed 38, has been working in steel mills for nost half his life. At present he is earning .61 an hour, or $64.40 for a 40-hour week, a machine operator in the Recoil Depart- ent of the Geneva Steel Company, near ovo. The Geneva steel plant is the biggest ngle industry in Utah, and one of the new- t and most modern in the world. Its 10 pen-hearth furnaces, 252 coke ovens and 0 assorted buildings are spread out over 00 acres of what was flat, fertile farmland ly ten years ago. Geneva was built in a rry during World War II with $200,000,- 00 of Government funds; today it has more mployees (4995) and produces more steel ½ million tons a year) than in wartime.

A slight, wiry man who wears thick glasses ver his deep-set eyes, Harry seems a little ut of place in the noisy vastness of the Ge- eva mill. It is easier to picture him bent ver a desk in the accounting department, hich was the kind of work he did in Gary. mong his fellow workers Harry is regarded s an "eager beaver" about his job, and n amusing fellow to sit around with at unchtime. With Harry, life is always ather precariously balanced between deadly eriousness and a quick wisecrack. His sense f humor has carried him through some rying times.

It also brought him and Joyce together.

During her junior year at Lew Wallace igh School in Gary, Joyce was assigned the ask of making a scrapbook anthology of her avorite poems. She knew Harry slightly hen, and was aware that he drew posters and artoons. She asked him to make some special ketches for her scrapbook.

Harry, who had long worshiped her from far, was happy to oblige. He drew a little oy soldier for the section headed "Chil- dren's Verse," and a Hawaiian moonlight cene for "Nature Poems." He decorated the itle page and made the book quite hand- ome. Joyce was delighted.

"This is wonderful," she exclaimed. "I ope I can do something nice for you some- ime!"

"You can," grinned Harry, and they both urst out laughing.

JOYCE, who was pretty and popular, had never paid much attention to Harry before. He seemed shy, and his glasses hid the twinkle in his eyes. In fact, the glasses were so concealing that when Joyce got around to writing her first poem to Harry she gave it the title, "Brown Eyes." Harry's eyes are a dark blue, and he had a lot of fun kidding her about the mistake.

Harry was born in Gary, where his father at various times ran a dairy, a paper-hanging business and a candy store. He died when Harry was eleven, and after that Harry lived mostly with a married sister. To help meet expenses while he was going to high school, he sold candy and newspapers at the railroad station, and night-clerked in a hotel. In the summers, which he spent in Michigan with his mother, he collected frogs' legs and turtle meat, and sold them to restaurants for 50 cents a pound.

As a boy Harry loved the outdoors and growing things, and specialized in horti- culture in high school. He wanted to become a tree surgeon, or work with flowers in a nursery. But when he was graduated in 1932 there were no such jobs to be had—in fact, there were no jobs at all. The big steel mills which are Gary's main reason for existence were all closed because of the depression, and Gary itself was a sullen, dreary place.

While in school Harry had earned enough to buy a set of drums, which he played in the orchestra. After graduation he earned $1.50 a night playing for dancing in cheap night clubs around Gary and Chicago. Some of the things he saw in those places convinced Harry he could do without hard liquor for the rest of his life. One New Year's Eve in Calumet City a celebrator fired two bullets through his bass drum, and just missed hit- ting Harry.

He also made a little money as part-time night watchman in a dry-cleaning plant. At that time a racket war was on and bombs were being thrown at cleaning plants by gangsters from Chicago. No older man would take the job, but Harry needed the money.

WHEN he wasn't exposing himself to bombs and bullets, Harry sang first tenor in the Grace Methodist Church choir, and attended meetings of the Epworth League. It was there he really got to know Joyce Hansen, whose blond good looks and organizing ability had made her a leader among the church's young people. Joyce had plenty of other admirers. But Harry made it a point to be around where she was, and to keep her amused with stories of his adventures.

"We wore our old clothes for dates in those days because we didn't have much else," Joyce recalls. "All the families we knew had been hit by the depression. We couldn't afford movies and things like that, but the church basement was open every night. We would collect some sandwiches and cocoa and have a party there. We played running and relay games, passing spoons and dropping handkerchiefs. Maybe it doesn't sound very exciting to the present genera- tion. But we had fun."

Harry's persistent tactics paid off; by the time Joyce finished high school in 1934 they both knew they wanted to be married.

"I don't believe Harry ever really pro- posed," Joyce laughs. "He didn't have to—it was just something we both under- stood. We used to drive down to the lake front in the evening and sit there and talk about our plans."

Harry borrowed his brother-in-law's 1925 Chevrolet to take Joyce on these rides. Her mother christened the car "the Rolls-Joyce."

In 1933 the Carnegie-Illinois mill reopened, and Harry went down to the employment office to stand in line with thousands of others. On October 1 he was hired as a helper in the tie-plate department. He would still have preferred an outdoor job, but this was all he could get. The pay was $2.95 a day.

Two years later it had crept up to $3.88 a day, or $19.40 a week. Joyce was working in a dentist's office, and they decided they had enough to be married. The wedding at Grace Methodist Church was an overflow affair, with friends and in-laws packing the aisles and standing on the steps outside. Joyce wore a dress of rust-colored velvet with tur- ban and veil to match, and carried a bunch of bronze chrysanthemums. Harry wore a navy-blue suit with a red rose in the lapel.

They lived at first in a single room with Joyce's married sister, later shared apart- ments with other working couples. In 1938 Harry sold his drums for $150 to complete the down payment on a tiny four-room house they got cheap by agreeing to let the builder continue to use it for sales demonstrations. In twelve years they moved through eight different houses and apartments, without finding a place where they wanted to settle down. Always they were within whistle- tooting distance of the mill where Harry worked. Smoke and grime were a constant nuisance; in summer, when the humidity was high, a blanket of smog hung over the city.

The open-air way of life that they have discovered in Utah is by far the pleasantest the Hulces have ever known. Springville is a thriving rural town five miles south of Provo, and a good fifteen miles from the Geneva Steel plant. It lies on a plateau nearly a mile in altitude, surrounded by farms and or- chards that have prospered there ever since the Mormons began to irrigate the land a hundred years ago. Joyce and Harry are still amazed at the abundance of fresh fruits and vegetables they can buy right off the farms.

"From the pictures we'd seen we thought Utah would be mostly rocks and deserts," Joyce confesses. "The first summer here we picked sweet cherries for a farmer and took our pay in fruit. I put up a hundred quarts of cherries and I think we ate almost as many off the trees. All the fruit seems to taste better out here."

The Hulces have a miniature orchard of their own—apple and peach and nectarine trees—around their small brick house at 251 East Fourth North Street. They also have a good-sized vegetable garden which is Harry's special care. Instead of factory chimneys, the whole magnificent scenic array of the Wasatch Mountains surrounds them like a backdrop. In the autumn the lower slopes are ablaze with colored foliage, and during most of the year there is snow on the peaks.

The lure of the mountains is very strong for Harry and his older son, Mike (full name: Harry Michael). Mike is a lean, long-legged youngster of 13 who takes to the outdoors like an Indian; his most prized possessions are his BB air rifle and the sleeping bag he got for Christmas last year. Like his father, he has a silent streak, and they make good companions in the woods. Harry takes him deer hunting every season, and they always go fishing together.

Bobby, aged 7, is more mechanically minded. Whenever his father parks the family car in the driveway and starts cleaning the spark plugs, Bobby gets out his red toy jeep, jacks it up on a block of wood, and pries at its insides with whatever tools are handy. Bobby is also passionately fond of irrigation ditches. When he isn't actually in one, he is often sprawled out over the edge, sailing chips of wood and getting mud-coated.

Back in Gary there was little opportunity for such healthy outdoor recreation. Mike could never have known the thrill of landing a rainbow trout, or watching a herd of elk pick their way down the mountainside. Both boys have more playmates—and more congenial ones—in Springville.

"The children here don't seem to go in so much for fights and bad language," Joyce explains. "We counted up once, and within two blocks on either side of us there are thirty-four children, and all of them are nice kids. Their parents are friendlier too. I never have any trouble getting someone to watch Bobby or Margaret if I have to go shopping, and I do the same for them."

Now that she is well again, Joyce never seems to run out of energy. She bakes bread, rolls, cakes, pies, cookies and dozens of doughnuts every week, in addition to her thrice-a-day mealtime chores. She is once again writing poems that are published in national poetry magazines. She puts up several hundred quarts of fruits and vegetables and fifty jars of jelly every summer. She handles the family money, keeps detailed accounts, arranges birthday parties and picnics, and does a prodigious washing and ironing. She writes at least ten letters a week, to friends and relatives, and reads an equal number in reply.

Along with all this she also manages to be what her teen-age daughter, Marian Jean, describes as "the very best mother in the world." Relationships within the Hulce family group are very close and co-operative; the long strain of Joyce's illness, and the isolation they felt when they first moved to Utah, have bound them tightly together. Disciplinary problems are almost nonexistent. Each of the children has some household job to Marian, the oldest, was 10 when they left Gary. At that time her parents were always on edge about her because of the numerous crimes against children on Gary's crowded streets. They have no such fears in Springville. Marian today is a good-looking girl of 14 with golden-brown hair, frank blue eyes and a well-developed figure. She plays second violin in the Springville High School orchestra, and sometimes she thinks it would be wonderful if she could practice a lot and become a real concert violinist. At other times she would rather be a home-economics teacher and earn her own living regardless of the world of men. But then again she would like to get married and have the "right" number of children—"about five."

In Gary all three children were developing allergies like their mother's—Marian would sneeze and choke at a dish of chocolate pudding, and Mike got a skin rash from wearing anything made of wool. Little Bobby broke out in a kind of prickly heat when he ate grapes or ice cream. These symptoms have disappeared since they moved.

What all the Hulces miss most about Utah are the big family get-together that ran through the year in Gary. The first Christmas in Utah was almost a fiasco, for they had just moved into the new house and lacked money to buy enough furniture, let alone gifts. But on Christmas Day so many of their neighbors came calling that everybody had a good time after all.

Harry, who had read a good deal about American history, was well aware of Utah's Mormon background before they moved there. But Joyce was blithely ignorant. "I didn't even know what a Mormon was," she says. "I had never heard of one."

After she mentioned this to a couple of her neighbors she realized she was making a mistake. Springville's 7600 population is probably close to 80 per cent Mormon. Utah County is one of the solid strongholds of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, commonly called Mormon.

Back in Gary the Hulces had attended the Methodist church and lived among neighbors of assorted creeds, nationalities and colors. They had belonged to clubs with Catholics, Jews and Protestants, and had never been especially conscious of religious differences.

But in Springville they couldn't help noticing it. Every phase of community life, it seemed, centered around the Mormon churches and Mormon "stake houses," or meeting halls. When the Hulces first arrived even the local Boy Scout troop was exclusively Mormon. For the first time they felt what it is like to belong to a minority group.

In Springville the only non-Mormon church is the Community Presbyterian, a small wooden structure with folding seats for sixty people, and an upright piano to lead the choir. The pastor, the Rev. Frank G. Mar, also preaches to two other small congregations within a 50-mile radius.

The Hulces joined this little church in 1948. Harry once more sings first tenor in the choir, and on winter Sundays he comes over early to start the fire in the furnace. Marian and Mike earn $3 a week by house cleaning the church every Saturday. Joyce is active in the Ladies' Aid, and president of the Missionary Society. To raise funds for the latter she initiated her fellow members

Next Month

SHE has three youngsters under fifteen, and a nine-to-noon job in an office. Juanita McCoy believes in being a real helpmeet to her husband, James, whom she assists in his accountancy work. She plans the family vacations, takes an alert interest in her home and finds the time to carry out her decorating ideas. Can family unity thrive in such a busy household? The James Franklin McCoys are proof that it can be done.

PART-TIME WORKING MOTHER

By HILDEGARDE DOLSON

How America Lives, in the October JOURNAL

in an old Gary custom called "galloping breakfasts." One woman agrees to serve coffee and rolls in her home, and the others round up housewives from wherever they happen to be at nine o'clock in the morning. They have to come as they are, uncombed, in jeans, bathrobes or rumpled house dresses. They pay 25 cents for their breakfast, and the money goes for missionary work.

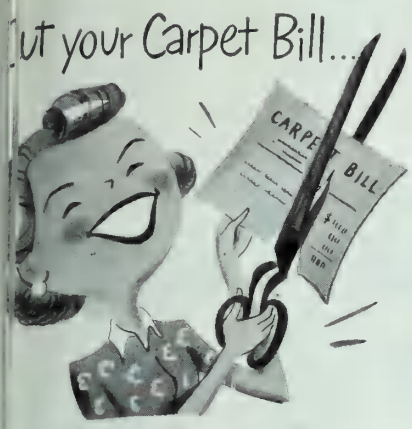
In one important respect—financial—the Hulces have not benefited from their move. When they left Gary, Harry was working as a billing clerk in the accounting department, and was next in line for promotion to foreman. If he had stayed he figures he would now be making $4500 or more a year.

His present job pays only $3400, and there is no definite prospect of advancement. If Harry wanted to go back to a desk job such as he had in Gary, he would have to drop to around $3000 and start from the bottom. All such jobs are covered by seniority rule, and he could not transfer his seniority.

Harry's pay check comes through every two weeks. When there is no overtime it amounts to about $116 net, after deductions for insurance, union dues, Social Security and so forth. Harry turns it all over to Joyce except his personal "allowance" of $5 or $6 a week, out of which he buys gas and oil, pays his daily 45-cent bus fare to work, gets his haircuts, and an occasional beer and cigar.

The Hulces' food budget of $25.25 a week is scant enough for a family of six in these inflated times. It couldn't possibly do the trick without heroic efforts on Joyce's part. Besides doing most of her own baking and a lot of home canning, she is always on the watch for special sales of canned goods and sugar and potatoes in bulk. She uses margarine exclusively, and saves her coffee for afternoon-party treats with the neighbors. Favorite, but economical, dishes in the Hulce household include homemade chile con carne, spaghetti with meat sauce, and barbecued hamburger. Canned fruit, apple pie or cake is the usual dessert, and there are always cookies to munch between meals.

But even with all her economies, Joyce doesn't always come out even. And Harry frankly admits that his steel-mill income is not enough for his growing family, and probably never will be. That is why they are both so eager to get started on a plan they have been evolving ever since they came to Utah.

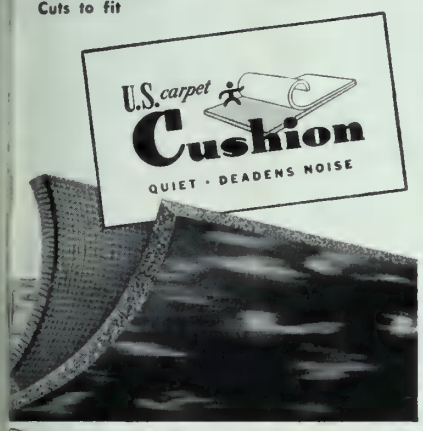


In the East not many steelworkers can live in the country and still get to work regularly. But at Geneva they can. More than half of Harry's fellow workers own small farms or a few acres where they raise most of their own food. During harvest season staggered absences are arranged so that these farmer-steelworkers can get in their crops.

For the Hulces this self-sufficient arrangement is a dream that is very real and near. Their present house has only five ground-floor rooms for them to live in, plus a three-room apartment in the basement which they rent out. It was adequate when they bought it in 1947. But now they need more space.

On the outskirts of Springville is a vacant farmhouse with a modern kitchen and bathroom, several acres of land, and an orchard of peaches, apples, apricots and cherries. Close to the back door is the original cabin of hewn logs. There are also an outdoor vegetable cellar and a combination garage and barn.

"I've got our house up for sale now," says Harry, "and if we can get our money out of it and put $1500 down on that little farm it will be just the place for us. We can raise our own chickens and eggs and a couple of young pigs to kill just before Christmas. I'll put out young fruit trees that will start to bear by the time the old ones die. Later on we could get a freezer and store our own meat and fish. I know a lake where I can get fifty to a hundred yellow perch almost any time. They make wonderful eating. I figured the boys and I would use the cabin to store our hunting things and tools.



"It's a different kind of life than anything we could have had in Gary, but we think it's better. When you have your own land you don't have to worry so much about layoffs and strikes. You can always eat!" THE END

WITH YEARS MORE WEAR!

It's like finding money when you cut carpet replacement costs with U.S. Carpet Cushion. Quality rugs deserve this resilient sponge rubber—it absorbs shock and grind, protects rug nap and backing, reduces ugly wear spots. And such luxurious walking—such wise economy!

Resilience lasts • Won't mat or spread
Moth-proof, dust- and vermin-proof
Cuts to fit

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
Mishawaka, Indiana

Your Spare Time Brings MONEY For You!
Sell
SOUTHERN Christmas Cards
Turn your spare time into cash! It's easy—it's fun with the amazing Southern Greeting Card line. Just call on friends, show stunning new 21-card $1 "Southern Beauty" Christmas Assortment. 100 quick $1 sales pay you $50!
START EARNING CASH NOW!
Add extra dollars to your income showing FREE SAMPLES of lovely NAME-IMPRINTED Christmas Cards. Folks eagerly buy at 50 cards for only $1.25 or 100 cards for $1. Also Humorous, Religious, Gift Wraps, Everyday Boxes, Stationery, dozens of other surprise sellers in big new line. No experience needed. Special plan for clubs, churches. Get FREE imprint Samples, Assortments on approval NOW!
SOUTHERN GREETING CARD CO., Dept. H-2
215 S. Pauline St., Memphis 4, Tenn.
FREE SAMPLES of Personal CHRISTMAS CARDS

KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS
Serve Mushrooms with Beef—in stews, meat loaf, barbecues, hash, creamed, braised! Treat the family to KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS
"—it's the Quality Pack"
Enjoy these finest of Cultivated Mushrooms, picked at flavor peak; packed vitamin-fresh by a process that retains all tenderness and fresh mushroom flavor. If your Grocer doesn't have KEYSTONE Mushrooms send his name. For FREE Recipe Book write Keystone Mushroom Co., Coatesville, Pa.

FIRST CALL IN THE KITCHEN—EXCELLO!
"Laundry Fresh"
• KITCHEN TOWELS
• HOUSEHOLD PLASTICS
Curtains, Tablecloths, Storage Bags
at leading stores everywhere

WRIGHT'S
AMERICA'S LARGEST SELLING SILVER CLEANER
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

"My husband helped decide on Caloric"

"First thing I noticed about the Caloric was how much easier it is to keep clean . . . and I specially liked the removable burners and broiler. Meantime my husband was inspecting, too, and asking questions. When the dealer proved that this range is built to last, and well made . . . that decided us on Caloric."

See All These Features On The New Caloric
AMERICA'S EASIEST RANGES TO KEEP CLEAN

★ Flavor-Saver Dual Burners, speedy, gas savers; flexible heat.
★ Veri-Clean Broiler, completely removable for washing in your sink.
★ Seamless Construction, porcelain enamel inside and out.
★ Hold-Heat Oven. Exclusive seal keeps kitchen cooler.
★ Automatic Oven Clock Control, starts, cooks, stops without attention.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

See dealers under "Caloric" in classified phone books. Any Caloric model can be factory-built for "Pyrofax" Bottled Gas or other LP-Gases. Caloric Stove Corporation, 12 South 12th Street, Philadelphia 7, Pa.

Ultramatic Caloric® Gas Ranges
America's Easiest Ranges to Keep Clean

The Make-Believe Twins

Something exciting's happened today.
Peter and Penny are cast away on a lonely Island out in the sea (between the porch and the maple tree).

They've nothing to eat but islandy things like Nuts and Bananas. They sleep in Swings made out of branches.
A tree is their roof, cozy and almost weatherproof.

Sometimes exploring the island sands they're attacked by bloodthirsty
Cannibal bands, but Pete makes a slingshot good as a gun and they kill the Savages, every one.

After months and months they invent a Boat. They stock it with Breadfruit and off they float toward Home and supper
where strange to say Nobody knows they have been away.

By PHYLLIS McGINLEY
DRAWN By ROBERTA MacDONALD

How to "GO HOME TO MOTHER" and make everybody happy!

REMEMBER when the expression, "going home to Mother" was anything but a laughing matter? Not any more... air travel, especially Flagship travel, has given the old phrase a new meaning. Even if the whole country separates them, today's daughter can have her visit with Mother and keep everybody happy.

Left-at-home husband's happy because his "bachelor time" is shorter. Traveler daughter's happy because going by Flagship is so quick and easy. That's really important when the children are along.

Next time you have to take a trip... go by Flagship and you'll be happy, too.

America's Leading Airline AMERICAN AIRLINES INC.

pre-testing

by real boys and girls

assures your child better shoes!

For 22 years, real boys and girls have pre-tested every pattern of Poll-Parrot Shoes in actual wear! So your child gets such benefits as: extra reinforcements at strain points to help shoes wear better—pear-shaped heels to hug and cradle young feet—room for growing feet to grow! See your Poll-Parrot dealer now for these better-value shoes!

ALSO STAR ★ BRAND SHOES ... AT LOWER PRICES

For nearest Poll-Parrot dealer, see Classified Phone Directory or write us.

ROBERTS, JOHNSON & RAND
Division of International Shoe Company
ST. LOUIS 3, MO.

COMMENDED PARENTS' MAGAZINE
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Poll Parrot

SHOES FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

WOMEN WITHOUT CHILDREN

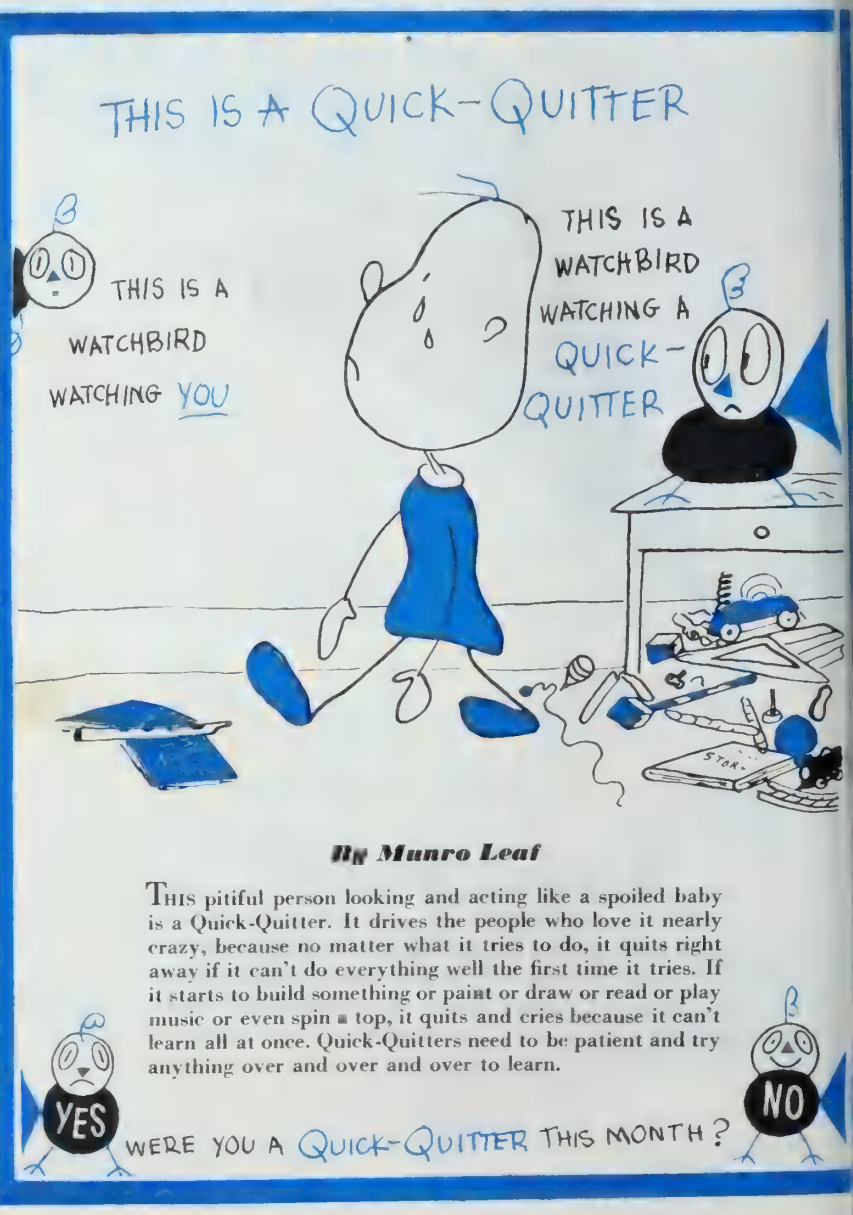
(Continued from Page 65)

puckered areas. After excision of such areas and microscopic study by the pathologist, a diagnosis of endometriosis could be made."

The difficulty lies in the fact that for the blood from these errant cells there is no outlet. It stays where it is, forming hard nodules, due to reaction around the bleeding glands. Each month at menstruation the accumulation is added to. "Chocolate cysts," so called because of their dark color, may form. There have been cases where they have attained the size of a small orange, but apparently they do not grow larger than this without rupturing. If they rupture, they spread the disease.

Usually the accumulation does not become great enough to make trouble before a woman is 25 or 26, but an increasing number of younger sufferers is now being reported. (One girl of 13, who had menstruated only twice, was found to have it.) As a rule, cramps that are "acquired"—that is, beginning after menstruation has been established for some years—are one of the signs of endometriosis. They start a few days before the period, becoming more intense as the period begins. In some cases menstruation is heavy, but ordinarily it is not interfered with.

After years of uninterrupted periods, as happens with the unmarried or with the married who put off childbearing, the pelvic organs may become solidly embedded and immovable. Doctor Beecham, of Temple University, mentions the "frozen pelvis" he has found in a number of women—a pelvis in which the organs have become so fixed and so hard that it is as though the pelvis were filled with cement.



It is this fixation of the reproductive organs which causes sterility in a large number of endometriosis sufferers. Normally, the ovary moves on its ligament. The tube follows the ovary, so that when ovulation takes place, the tube is near and can pick u the ovum. In the woman with severe endo etri- osis, the ovary is held behind the broa ga- ment in a position which the tube c not follow. Various doctors have reported that after operations which cleared awa the collection of nodules and freed the o ary, anywhere from 29 per cent to 45 per c t of previously sterile women had become re- nant. In many cases, conception took a e three or four months after the operatio

If the endometriosis is unchecked the abdominal pain may become constant The pressing of the hard masses upon the va ous organs may cause backache. Invasion o the intestines can bring about bowel obstruc on. When constant suffering is attended b ex- cessive bleeding, the victim often think she has cancer.

All the foregoing medical facts have been well established. The connection of e do- metriosis with late and infrequent childbear- ing is deduced from the fact that the di ase is found frequently and increasingly a gynecologist's private practice, seldom in charity work. Doctor Beecham has seen only a few cases in the hospital wards, whereas h incidence is high among his private pati ts. To establish this point, Doctor Meigs m de two surveys, at an interval of eight y rs. Each time, of 400 women in his pr te practice, more than a third had endom ri- osis. Each time, of 400 women in the w ds of the Massachusetts General Hospital, only 8 per cent were found to have it.

"The reason for the difference," ys Doctor Meigs, "was that the patients m my practice on whom I operated were in he age group twenty-six or older. These re the patients who had married late in e. They had put off starting their families In their late twenties or thirties they wa ed

(Continued on Page 200)

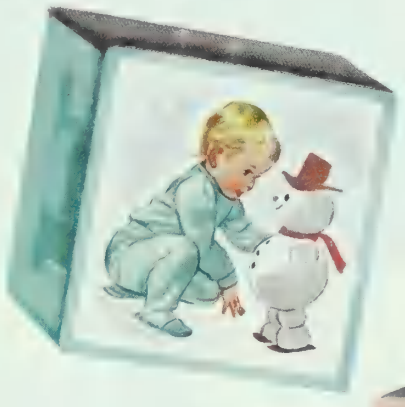
For the best-dressed tots in Dreamland

Dreams tiptoe gently past this angel on the night shift, cuddled snug and warm in his downy Hanes Sleeper. For all Hanes Sleepers are deftly designed for sweet sleeping.

Hanes Merrichild

Wonderfully cuddly and cozy, of fluffy springy-knit cotton. Good news for Mother in those laundry-proof Gripper fasteners, and the long-wearing double-soled feet! Snug ribbed cuffs and neckline shrug off winter chill. In lighthearted suds-fast colors.

One-piece, sizes 0 to 8, in pink, blue, canary, green and red.



Two-piece, sizes 0 to 4, in pink, blue, canary, green and red.

Three-piece (with extra pants), sizes 0 to 4, in pink, blue, canary, green and red.

Hanes Suedeknit*

Delightful de luxe Suedeknit* is the cashmere of cotton knitting – petal-soft, warm fabric that begs for hard wear! Roomy raglan shoulders, trim tailored collarette and cuffs. Double soles and toes for busy little feet. Gripper fasteners laugh at the laundry. In suds-fast nursery colors.

One-piece, sizes 3 to 6, in peach, blue, canary and green.

Two-piece, sizes 0 to 4 (shown above), in peach, blue, canary and green.

Three-piece laundry-saver (with extra pants), sizes 0 to 4, in peach, blue, canary and green.

MOTHERS – Save laundry with the colorful, durable Hanes Basque Shirts for growing boys and toddlers, too. And with Ski-Pajamas, sizes 6 to 18. All Hanes garments processed for full fit.

® REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

HANES SLEEPERS

Merrichild Suedeknit*

P. H. Hanes Knitting Company, Winston-Salem 1, N. C.
Underwear, sportswear and sleepers at better stores everywhere

Feeding time is fun time when your baby is seated in a

COSCO HIGH CHAIR

Comfortable! Easy to Clean! Now with new plastic tray!

There's an extra measure of pleasure in mealtime and playtime—for all parties concerned—when your baby is seated safely and comfortably in an all-metal, easy-to-clean Cosco High Chair. Deep-dished plastic tray is 29½" high (standard table height) so baby can join the family for meals. Tray is easily removed with one hand. Safety strap locks in place. Wide footrest adjusts for growth. Sturdy, tubular steel construction assures generations of wear—rounded edges protect baby skin. Wide-flared legs, with floor protecting gliders, reduce risk of tipping. Upholstered seat and back are separated—no cracks or corners for food particles to collect. See this smartly styled Cosco High Chair—get yours—at leading department, furniture and hardware stores. About $18.95.

HAMILTON MANUFACTURING CORPORATION • COLUMBUS, IND.

For the best in quality, look for the COSCO Trademark. Accept no substitutes.

. . . and for your "High Chair Graduates," get a COSCO Youth Chair

After babyhood and up to age eight, this 21" high seat brings your youngster right up to the table—encourages correct posture and hearty eating. All-metal. Duran upholstered in red, black, blue, yellow, mother-of-pearl gray. Chromium finish. About $10.95.

COSCO

HOUSEHOLD STOOLS, CHAIRS AND UTILITY TABLES

Sold also in Canada and South America

(Continued from Page 198)

children, and found they couldn't get pregnant. In contrast, the women in the wards had married at eighteen or nineteen and had many children. They had ailments, but not endometriosis.

"Nature never intended that women should go on menstruating indefinitely. Monkeys in the jungle, who menstruate as women do, start reproducing as soon as they mature physically. The woman who puts off pregnancy until she is twenty-eight, let us say, has had at least fourteen years of menstrual life that she was never meant to have."

Why all women who have not borne children do not get endometriosis is an unsolved problem. Doctor Beecham believes the errant cells are present in all of us. This cannot be established, however, without sectioning minutely a number of perfectly normal women, which obviously cannot be done. Doctor Meigs has noted a tendency of endometriosis sufferers to be somewhat undeveloped physically, with a small, rather infantile uterus and small breasts. Yet this is not true of all.

But new and strange as this disease is, with many questions about it still to be answered, great progress has been made in treating it in recent years. No woman need suffer its pain. The sterility due to endometriosis has been corrected in a large number of cases by skillful surgery.

In this respect, women today are fortunate. In former years hysterectomy, or removal of the uterus, was a rather standard practice. This cured the endometriosis. For when menstruation stops, the clots or nodules dry up and atrophy. (In this way women are usually cured of it automatically after menopause.) But it has meant that a host of women have been deprived of the ability ever to have children, and many needlessly so.

Now the up-to-date practitioner concentrates upon preserving this ability in women in the childbearing ages. Excellent success has been had with far more conservative forms of treatment than hysterectomy.

THE best treatment of all, where it is possible, is for the sufferer to have a baby. Says Doctor Beecham, "When a woman comes to me in her thirties with endometriosis, having had one or two children, I discuss the methods we have for control of the disease—namely, pregnancy, drugs or hysterectomy. If she chooses the baby, by the end of the third or fourth month of pregnancy no sign of endometriosis remains. The uterus and other organs are soft and pliable." The rest from menstruation afforded by pregnancy, especially if lengthened by breast feeding, will frequently keep endometriosis at bay for five years or longer. Thus a woman who has her babies not more than five ar apart until her family is complete has tl to fear from endometriosis.

This fact is generally accepted, but oc tor Beecham had a dramatic illustrat of it. Treating a doctor's wife for endo ri osis, he suggested that she have a baby did so. A few years later, Doctor Bee had occasion to operate on the woma for another condition. When he opened he pelvis, he found the white scars of m pletely healed endometriosis.

FOR a woman in her forties, on the hand, especially if she has had her fam is unlikely to bear children, an operati usually indicated. Doctor Beecham's p cedure is to remove the uterus, which menstruation, but to leave the ovari this is possible. Removal of the ovarie bring about premature menopause, with pleasant symptoms and possible person changes.

X ray has been employed to stop men ation, but this, too, sterilizes the patient may have undesirable aftereffects.

For younger women, and those who not completed their families, everyt possible is done to preserve the reproduc organs. In skilled hands, it is not consid a difficult operation to open the pelvis, move the nodules, free the ovaries, and pend the uterus up above the raw trac the patient is married, she is advised to come pregnant as soon as she has recov from the operation. Where the bowel been invaded, the organs may be rese without interference with the childbea function.

When the sufferer is unmarried but yo enough to have hopes of marriage and dren, it is believed by several authorities the menstrual function can be stopped t porarily by drugs, particularly by the n and female hormones. Dr. John Karnaky Texas, is an exponent of massive dose stilbestrol, the synthetic female hormone a means of temporarily suppressing mens ation. Testosterone, the male hormone used for the same purpose. It must be ployed sparingly, however, since too muc it may bring about secondary male ch acteristics, such as a deep voice and fa hair. Doctor Meigs has doubts about efficacy of hormones, but suggests that experiment should be watched with intere

In some cases, particularly those where abdominal pain is centrally located, the p sacral nerve may be cut. This has prove satisfactory way of relieving suffering i number of instances, without interfer with the childbearing function.

An operation to remove the nodules cysts will also give temporary relief. B unless this is followed by pregnancy, or m struation is stopped in some other way, t

"Why don't you come back, Ed, when the manpower situation gets tighter?"

NOW
Western Blue Jeans Sets
for the Creeper Crowd!

SANTONE
Crawl-a-Long

• BLUE JEANS
• JACKET ★ SHIRT
• SIZES—6, 12, 18, 24 Mos.

Texas-Styled of soft, lightweight Sanforized denim; double-stitched and bar-tacked with authentic orange thread. Gripper fasteners throughout; inserted elastic back; adjustable shoulder straps; on-or-off in a jiffy. Creep-A-Long Jeans, Jacket or Plaid Gingham Shirt retail under two dollars each.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED HEREIN

AT BETTER STORES

COMMENDED BY THE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU OF PARENTS' MAGAZINE AS ADVERTISED THERE

Ask for Santone Crawlers and Crawler Sets, O'All and O'All Sets, Slacks and Slack Sets, girls' Boxerette Slacks, Shirts, Sport Coats, also the sensational Yes T-Alls.

JUVENILE MFG. CO. ★ SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS

ONE MINUTE of Simple Care in Minor Injuries
CUTS, BURNS May Avoid Terrible Infection
Great risk lies in neglected small cuts, burns, scratches, scalds as germs may multiply by millions. Apply tested Oil-O-Sol at once. This germ-arresting antiseptic helps control infection, ease pain, speed healing. A favorite in first aid for 50 years. Mosso's Oil-O-Sol – today at your drug store.

MAKE $27.50 A DAY
EVEN beginners
Sell 50 full-value Fanmour Christmas Card Boxes a day and make $27.50! Up to 100% profit with Imprint Cards, Stationery, Napkins and Gift Items.
FREE! SAMPLES 40 for $1
NAME IMPRINTED CARDS NAPKINS STATIONERY
FREE PACKAGE CHRISTMAS GIFT CARDS 32 PAGE MONEY-MAKING CATALOG
Write for complete selling outfit on approval.
ORGANIZATIONS: Write for Fund-Raising Plan
FANMOUR Corp. Dept. S-23 200 FIFTH AVE., N. Y. 10, N. Y.

DISCOURAGE...
Prolonged and Persistent THUMB-SUCKING
USE
THUM
TRADE MARK
60¢ and $1.00
AT LEADING DRUG COUNTERS
• Simple
• Quick • Effective

TO KEEP WHAT YOU OWN...
Put a CASH'S WOVEN NAME on it!
A MUST FOR SCHOOL & COLLEGE
Replacements are expensive and harder to get. Mark your things with your own name, woven to order by Cash's, and prevent most losses. Cash's are a favorite identification with the Services, travelers and students, as well as at home. Ask your Dept. Store, or write us.
Send for FREE folder "101 Ways To Use Cash's Woven Names".
CASH'S, South Norwalk 4, Conn.
PRICES 3 Doz. $2.25 6 Doz. $2.75 9 Doz. $3.25 12 Doz. $3.75 NO-SO CEMENT 25c a Tube patient must understand that they will form again. In less serious cases, the monthly pain may be held in check by some simple drug such as aspirin. The doctor will watch the patient to make sure the endometriosis does not develop to an extent that will incapacitate, or cause sterility.

None of the measures just mentioned—suppressing menstruation by drugs, cutting the presacral nerve or removal of the accumulation by surgery—can be considered a cure. They may insure reasonable comfort, however, until such time as the patient can become pregnant, or reaches the age group where it is no longer considered necessary to preserve the childbearing function, and the uterus can be removed.

As with other diseases, the sooner the doctor gets the case, the easier it is for him to help. Women who endure severe menstrual and other abdominal pains without seeking medical aid are the ones who become crippled or sterile from endometriosis.

The diagnosis of endometriosis is not difficult. "The pelvic structures have a nodular feel," says Doctor Beecham. "The ovary is slightly enlarged and you can't move it. The only thing it can be confused with is an ovarian cancer or gonorrheal infection, but usually it is not necessary to operate to distinguish."

Care and watchfulness on the part of mothers of girls can be a big factor in keeping the disease from developing at all, or in keeping it in check until a young woman is ready for marriage and babies. Doctor Beecham would have every girl at the age of 18 or 19 start seeing a doctor for regular examinations.

When a girl is going to be married, she should be checked again for endometriosis. If it is present, Doctor Beecham tells the brides among his patients, "It doesn't cost very much to have a baby." Before the age of 25 or 26, endometriosis has seldom progressed to such a point that conception is impossible, and babies provide the cure.

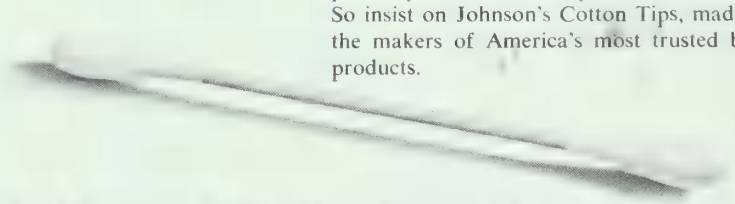
Doctor Beecham would have married women checked every year for endometriosis, as many are now for cancer. In the married, a recto-vaginal examination should be made.

Both Doctor Meigs and Doctor Beecham agree that the best preventive measure of all is a return to earlier marriage and earlier childbearing by the social and economic classes which have been deferring them. Having babies in the early twenties will not insure that endometriosis will not develop at a later date. But after a woman has completed her family, the matter is not so serious.

The Journal of the American Medical Association states that because of the danger of endometriosis and other late-developing diseases which interfere with ovarian function, it is unsafe to defer conception at all after the age of 35, if a woman wants children. "If she is 30, it would be unwise. If a wife is in her early twenties, postponement of conception may be safe for three years, but after the age of 25 it is not advised."

"Endometriosis is the reason why all fathers and mothers who are able to do so should permit their children to marry early, have babies right away, and should aid them financially until they are able to care for themselves," says Doctor Meigs. "Our children must realize that by being helped when they are young, they need not expect much in the way of an inheritance.

"Of course not all parents are in a position to do this. I therefore believe that the idea of better pay for young men should be taken into account in industry. Workers should be paid more earlier in life and not expect great increases in their salaries as they get older. Above all, the level of income should be increased for young men with wives.



"Young people should be encouraged to keep our country populated, not discouraged from it. Financial help to our children so that they may have their babies while they are young will reduce the incidence of endometriosis. At the same time it will reduce the number of unhappy and childless marriages. I believe we shall accomplish much more for the world this way than by trying to save for them when they get older." THE END

Small—but oh how important

...the cotton tips you use on baby

COTTON TIPS are used for such delicate purposes—you want the very finest, safest kind. So insist on Johnson's Cotton Tips, made by the makers of America's most trusted baby products.

Only Johnson's Cotton Tips give you all these advantages!

- Baby-soft—made of finest, purest absorbent cotton.
- Baby-safe—sterilized right in the box—guaranteed by the famous Johnson & Johnson quality-control method.
- Cotton firmly anchored — spun directly on the sticks. Stays firm, doesn't twist in use.
- Double tips — both ends of stick are cotton-tipped for extra convenience and economy.
- Handy drawer box—easy to open. Fits on narrow shelf. Protects cotton tips till the last one is used.
- The Johnson & Johnson trade-mark—your guarantee of unvarying quality and dependability from America's largest, most trusted maker of baby products.

Don't just ask for cotton tips....ASK FOR

JOHNSON'S COTTON TIPS
29¢ and 49¢ sizes
Johnson & Johnson

Time to Buy

Nitey Nite

The Shrink-Resistant Sleeper

Cradle your cherubs in gay NITEY NITE sleepers and ease your laundry problems. Now NITEY NITE sleepers are shrink-resistant. Their fur-soft, fur-warm fabric is pre-shrunk by a new scientifically measured process. Wash NITEY NITES as often as you please, they hold their shape and size. Buy NITEY NITE—the only shrink-resistant sleeper with all these 10 features:

- ★ shrink-resistant pure cotton fabric.
- ★ important seams are nine-thread sewn.
- ★ every point of strain is reinforced.
- ★ warm sweater-cuff hugs wrists; gives 4-inch adjustable sleeve-length.
- ★ exclusive "bootee" foot, double sole for warmth, wear.
- ★ full-cut seat and "I-help-myself" closings.
- ★ Gripper fasteners end button problems.
- ★ comfortable neckline assures needed chest protection.
- ★ easy to wash—hold shape and fit.
- ★ generous sizes, 0-4; 4-8; 10-16. Six sudfast colors: Canary, Bluebird, Flamingo, Parrakeet, Hummingbird, Robin.

Nitey Nite REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

sleepers at your favorite department store or children's shop

NITEY NITE SLEEPERS MADE BY GLENDALE KNITTING CORPORATION • PERRY, N.Y.

"I LOVE YOU"

(Continued from Page 11)

Saying it with proper feeling at the right time can turn a crisis into Christmas. Not saying it can turn a pause in the conversation into purgatory.

Depending on the speaker, it can create ecstasy or inspire horror. At the end of a letter from the One and Only, it can make the reader insane with joy; from two swains arriving for the same week end, just insane; or from the Last Man on Earth, crazy-mad.

It can be the password to lifelong bliss or a bill of sale into a vicious form of slavery.

You can't afford to take it at face value or to ignore it with a shrug.

It can make a strong person weak and a weak person strong.

It may mean: "I'm sorry and it won't happen again," or "I'm not sorry and it will surely happen again—if you love me you'll just have to put up with it."

Listen to it with a judicious mixture of caution and hope, dear. One thing is sure, in a world where talk is cheap and often nonsensical: it may baffle you, but it always means something. THE END

The Little Dark Wood

By Oliver St. John Gogarty

I dwelt by the Lake of the Little Dark Wood
That lies by the edge of the neighboring sea,
The lake wherein mountains
invertedly stood
When mists of the morning the water let be:
Plum blue in the water the mountains reflected
Were clearer than ever they looked in the day
Where flat water lilies were floating collected,
And black sallies sheltered their little still bay.
All through the long noon in the wood by the water
I lingered and found that the better my mood,
The better the lake looked though less than a quarter
Was lulled by the lilies to mirror
the wood.
At evening, the gentle wind losing its motion
Would leave the lake leveled to double the sun
That set in an oval ball over the ocean
Until the bare mountains were purpling alone.
Sometimes the sun set in a revel of silver
All squandered except what the lake water saves
To roof the dim haunt of the trout,
eel and elver;
And that spilth of silver far out on the waves.
I left the dark dell by the lake water-wooded
Because so much beauty was sibling to pain,
Besides, with its magic my mind
was so flooded
I need but closed eyelids to bring it again.

Curity® DIAPERS

The superiority of Curity Diapers is woven right in! They're woven t resist after-laundering wrinkles an size distortion of machine washin . . . they're specially woven to resis raveling . . . their exclusive woven-i Foldlines label them unmistakably a Curity, the largest selling of all gauz diapers. Curity Diapers also . . .

Wash Easier—Curity's open weav means cleaning ease in Ivory Flakes Ivory Soap or Dreft.

Dry Faster—Indoors or out, drying air acts faster on their open weave Absorb Fully—Their thirsty surgica weave assures maximum absorption

You'll find Curity Diapers at fine infants and department stores every-where . . . leading diaper laundries use them, too. And you'll love the new Curity Diapers in tender tints of pink, blue, maize or mint green for dress-up and gifting!

NURSER
PADS
BIBS
FLUFFS
MASKS
PAT. NO. 2,146,187

MAIL THE COUPO

KENDALL MILLS — Division of
The Kendall Company, Walpole, Mass., Dept. J91
Enclosed is 25c (coins only) for full-size Curity Diaper and literature on Curity Nursery Products. (Only one diaper to a family.)
Name_____
Address_____
City_____ State_____
Good in Continental United States and Hawaii.

When a child breathes noisily he needs a doctor's attention. Asthma can nearly always be combated successfully if it is diagnosed early.

The Child Who Wheezes

By Dr. Herman N. Bundesen
President, Chicago Board of Health

IN recent years, an increasing number of mothers are asking for advice about children who breathe noisily, or "wheeze." I suppose the reason for this lies partly in our modern way of life. Today most of us lead fast-moving, complicated existences which subject us to nervous tensions. Our children do too. Many of our foods are manufactured or processed. We spend much of our time indoors, surrounded by materials that are largely synthetic and many of which are potential allergens, or causers of allergic disturbance. Since allergies are the largest known cause of noisy breathing, we can understand why there should be more "wheezy" youngsters today than formerly.

As nearly everyone knows, an allergy is a peculiar, highly sensitive response of the body to some substance which the allergic person touches, eats, or breathes in. In some way that is not yet fully understood, the allergen, or offending material, releases quantities of histamine, a protein substance, into the system. Quite a variety of symptoms may be produced, depending upon what part of the body is affected.

When the reaction affects the bronchial tubes, the result is the disease called asthma. The child is likely to feel a sense of constriction, and to cough and wheeze. In some advanced cases, an exposure to the allergen responsible may affect the bronchial passages so severely that the child gasps painfully for air. The condition may last anywhere from a few minutes to several days. Unless steps are taken to protect the sufferer from such episodes, damage to the bronchial structures may be lasting.

Fortunately, asthma is something we doctors can nearly always combat successfully when mothers bring wheezy children to us. The treatment follows two main courses.

First of all, the doctor will undertake measures to relieve the allergic symptoms, and in this a child's mother plays an important role. Her first duty when an asthmatic seizure starts is to do everything possible to divert the child's attention and get him to relax, for the anxiety and nervous tension that accompany an attack contribute to the spasms which make breathing difficult. She will also be given drugs to administer, to help relieve the symptoms. Among the drugs that are commonly used to combat asthma today are ephedrine and epinephrine. Their action relaxes the spastic muscles so that breathing becomes easier.

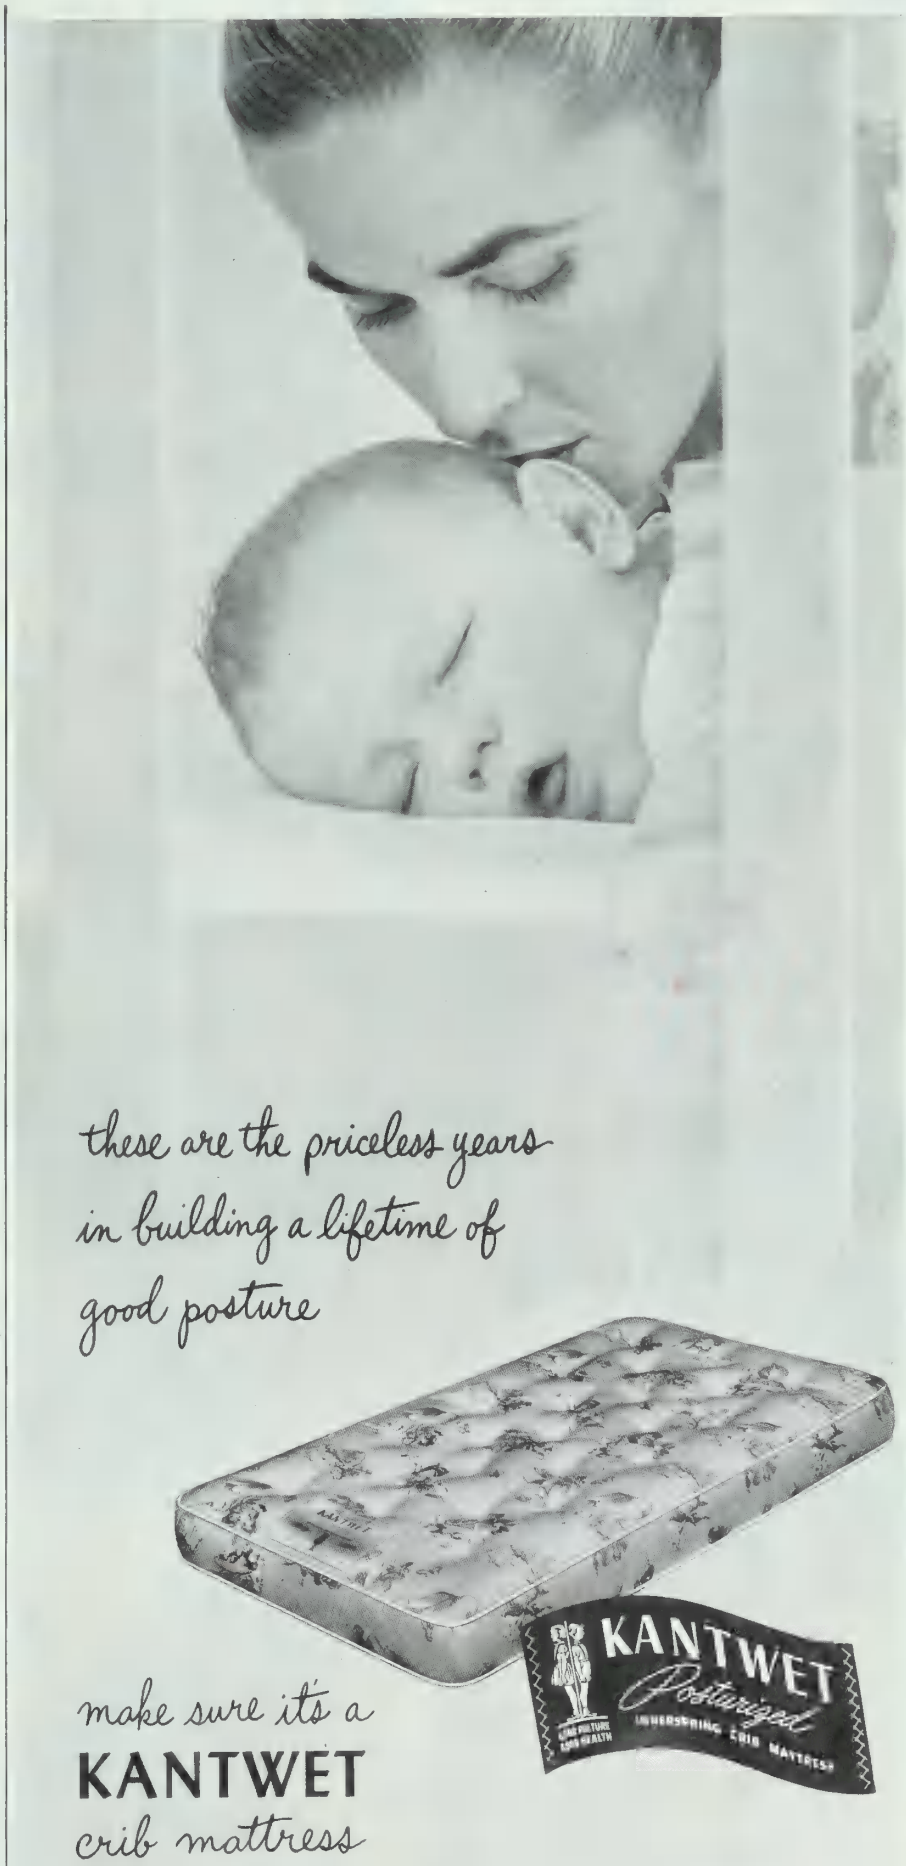
The newer antihistamine drugs are also used in asthma, to counteract the histamine which exposure to the allergen has released into the system. But the fact that some of these drugs may be obtained without a doctor's prescription does not mean that mothers may use them in the treatment of asthma without a doctor's advice. If taken too often or in too large amounts, antihistamine drugs may cause harmful side effects such as drowsiness or dizziness.

The second part of the treatment consists in trying to discover the substance, or substances, to which the child is sensitive, so that they can be removed as far as possible from his environment. Sometimes weeks of testing are required to identify the offender. Usually this is done by means of "patch tests," in which the substance being tested is applied to the skin and left there for several

(Continued on Page 205)

DOCTOR BUNDESEN'S booklets, used by many thousands of enthusiastic mothers, cover all phases of baby care. They are:

BEFORE THE BABY COMES (prenatal months), No. 2383, 50c.



First series of booklets, covering first eight months, 50c.

Second series of booklets, covering nine months to two years, 50c.

OUR BABIES (complete book and invaluable supplement to the monthly booklets), No. 1345, 50c.

A DOCTOR'S FIRST DUTY TO THE MOTHER (breast-feeding helps), No. 1346, 6c.

Address all requests to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

Now is the time you can do the most for your baby's future health and posture. Give him a KANTWET posturized crib mattress — for the firm level support that makes every sleeping hour a posture-building hour. KANTWET is recommended by more doctors, more mothers, more stores than any other crib mattress. It is the only mattress to bring your baby all these important health and posture features:

IMPROVED DORSAL CONSTRUCTION — greater firmness, greater resilience, greater posture help. Better by actual test — you can feel the difference!

- BUILT-IN straight line support!
- FLEX-O-LOC INNERSPRING — lasting firm resilience!
- DOUBLE-SEALED TUFTS — keep filling in place, keep moisture out!
- WETPROOF, WASHABLE COVER — stays sweet, clean, sanitary.

THERE'S A KANTWET PAD FOR EVERY NURSERY ACCESSORY

Because there's only one Bill...

Here you have it all—Tragedy (a little boy has skinned his elbow) . . . Faith (he knows Mother will make it well) . . . Love (it flows from a mother's finger tips).

You avert the tragedy by following the first rule of first aid: "Get it clean and keep it clean."

You justify his faith by using the same first-aid dressings leading hospitals use . . . Curity.

And you do this for love . . . because there's only one Bill.

Use the Same First-aid Dressings Most Leading Hospitals Use

Most of America's leading hospitals use Curity Dressings as a standard of protection. Isn't it good to know that you can get these same famous dressings packaged for home use at any leading drugstore?

Curity

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

BAUER & BLACK

Over Half a Century of Adhesive Tape Leadership

Bauer & Black,
Division of The Kendall Company

(Continued from Page 203)

hor s, and the reaction to it is then observed. On e the allergen is definitely identified, it is up the mother to see that it is removed as far possible from the child's environment. If s something that cannot be completely eli inated—like wheat, perhaps, or ordinary du —every effort must be made to protect th ild by reducing the number of exposures to and the length of the exposures. Some do rs also recommend a series of injections of called "shots" for the allergic child; the eff of these is to diminish the severity of th llergic reaction, so that the child can "l with the allergen" with less discomfort.

certain cases, it is necessary to probe in the circumstances of the child's life, for th is a type of asthma called "nervous" in w h the bronchial tubes are quite unaf ted and emotional impulses are responsibl One such case was of a lad whose asthm c uncle had recently died, and whose ov home was upset by the fact that the fa er was undergoing a nervous breakdown. In he night the boy would awaken with se re asthmatic seizures, screaming, "I do t want to die! Mummy, don't let me d " Naturally these episodes were not very so hing for the already distraught father a mother. A careful investigation showed th this boy's physical system was perfectly n nal. He was reacting to the nervous tensi s in his home, and his uncle's death had g n him a pattern for expressing his fears a conflicts. Treatment in this case cons ed in getting the boy's emotions straighte d out.

Whatever method of treatment the doctor s gests, it is the mother's obligation to fol l his instructions scrupulously. If asthma d to allergy is neglected, it will usually get p gressively worse, so that the child who is only a little wheezy to begin with will eventually become subject to severe spasms.

While allergies account for the majority of cases of wheezing, there are other possible causes for this condition. When a thorough physical examination, with special attention to the respiratory organs and air passages, does not reveal the cause, the doctor may wish to take X rays or view the chest and bronchial area on a fluoroscopic screen. Or he may make a bronchoscopic examination, using an instrument which permits direct study of the bronchial tubes.

Occasionally, an examination of this kind discloses that noisiness in breathing is caused by a structural or mechanical defect somewhere in the respiratory system. Even a slight change in the formation of the larynx, or "voice box," for example, may cause a rasp or wheeze similar to that of asthma. In some children a severe infection may have left the bronchial tubes inflamed or weakened, so that there is some sound when air rushes through these delicate passageways. Another frequent cause of noisy breathing is enlarged adenoids—the spongy tissue located in the passage that leads from the nose into the throat.

When the cause of wheezing proves to be some mechanical or structural abnormality, it can sometimes be corrected by surgery. Thus enlarged or chronically infected tonsils or adenoids are frequently removed.

I must say, as I have said so many times before, that treatment of asthma and the other causes of noisy breathing is most likely to be successful if the condition is recognized early and appropriate measures are undertaken promptly. If you notice that your child is breathing noisily, take him to the doctor at once! Delay may turn a mild ailment into a crippling one.

. . . AND HAVE NOT CHARITY

(Continued from Page 49)

No, just family."

Just family." Theresa's face was serene. Martha thought, It's strange that I'm only beginning to see how beautiful you are. It's as these years of suffering have purged away all but was earthly of you and left only spirit—strong and pure and a little frightening. . . . Oh, my baby, what can I do about you? It can't go on like this. Her breath caught in a little sob.

Theresa let the silver fall in a shimmering little pool on the table, and put her arms about her mother.

Martha hugged her fiercely. "It's all right, baby." Theresa smiled and went back to setting the table. I tell her it's all right, but she's the one who by saying nothing at all makes it easy to believe that it will be all right. She have never understood this deep peace in her. She's the strong one. It's as if she lives away and apart from us all, even from Eben. "Theresa, where is Eben?"

"In the attic with Gulliver's Travels. He'll come to life, though, when he smells the apple dumplings you're making." That's another strange thing. You never bother him, but you know him as I never knew you or Muriel.

The front door banged noisily. Muriel came in. Something always made her look wind-blown. "Dinner ready?"

"Almost," Martha answered. "Did you get through?"

"Not quite," Muriel said. "Miss Ritchie didn't want me to be late for dinner. So she'll finish tomorrow."

"Dear, your father may not like that."

"For heaven's sake, why not?" Muriel was wide-eyed.

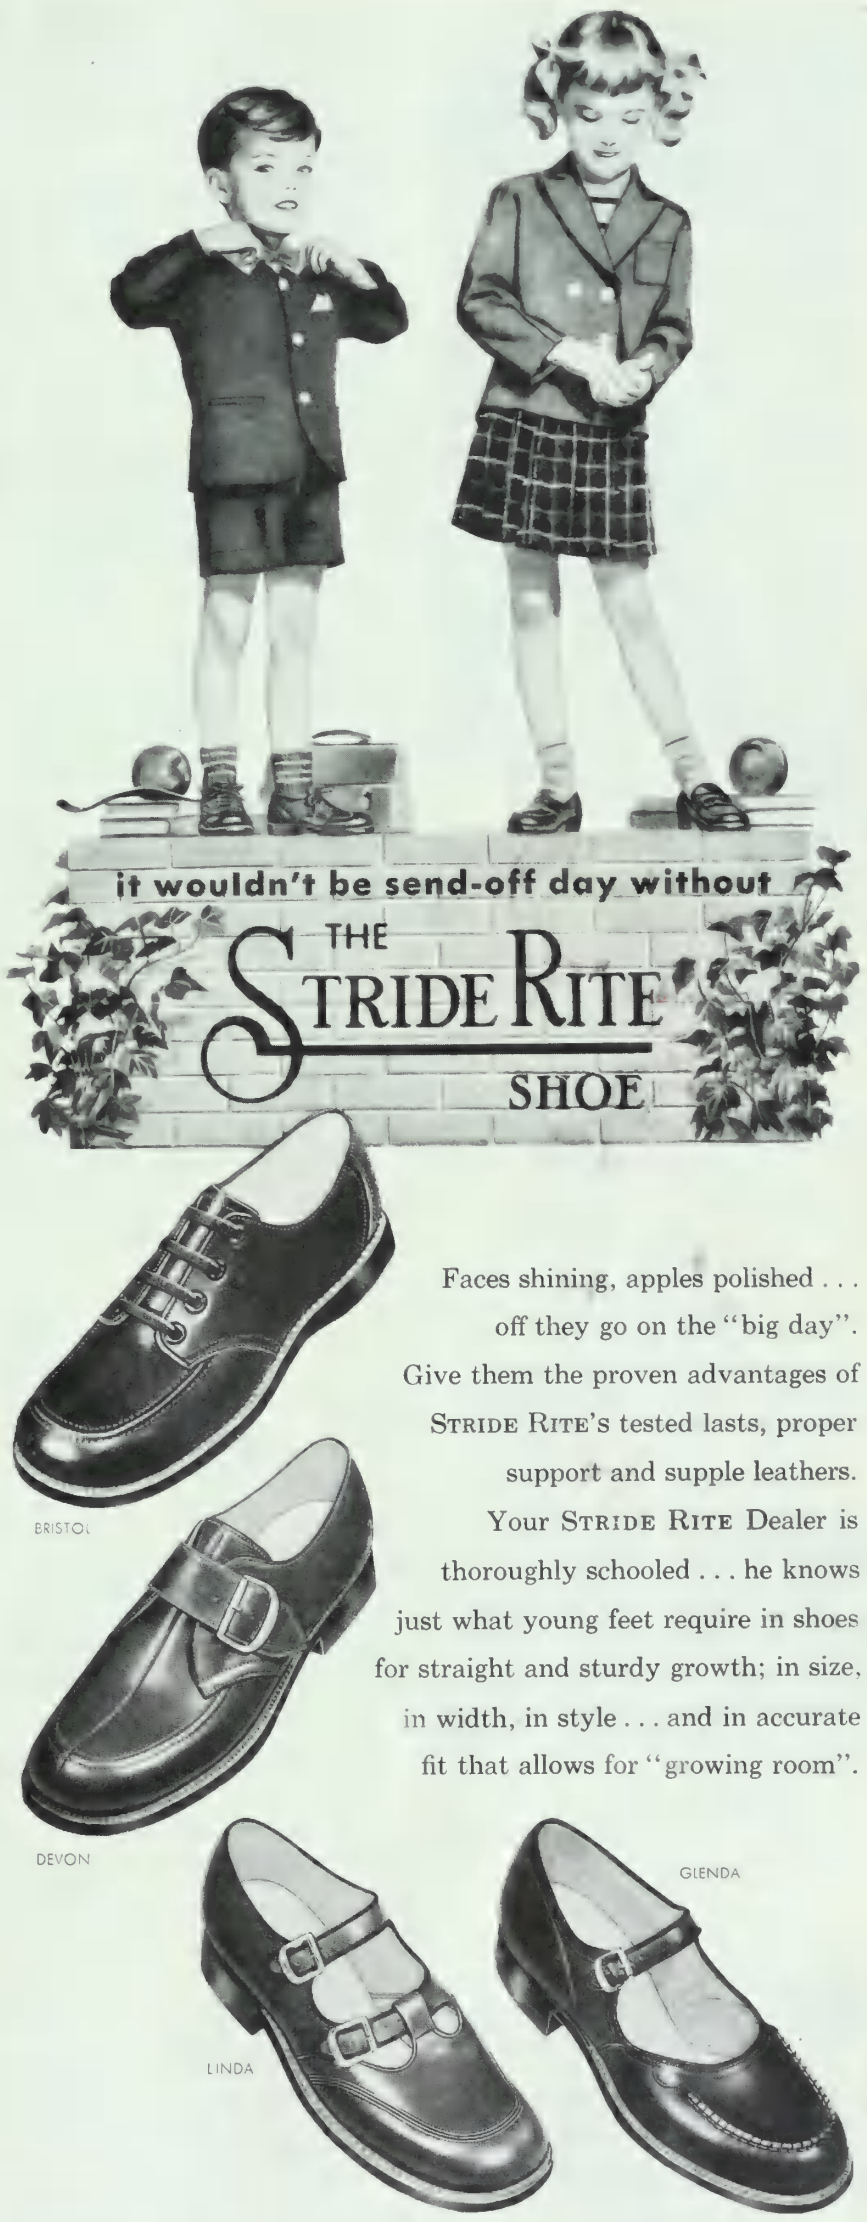
"He seems to think you should spend more time at home, helping."

"Gosh mom! I help a heap more at home than any of the other girls do."

That was true, Martha knew. She sighed. "I know you do, dear, but never mind now. Be an angel, and see that Eben gets ready for dinner. He's in the attic."

Muriel took the steps two at a time, as usual, calling "Benn-ee-ee" in the singsong that was sure to evoke a quarrel, for Eben hated being called Benny, as he hated being babied in any way.

James Weatherby believed in stimulating conversation at the dinner table. He would introduce a topic and ask Martha and Muriel for their opinions. Often, to keep the ball rolling, he would take the opposite point of view, prodding them into mild argument. Before Eben was born he and Theresa had developed this into a pleasant battle of wits. Theresa had inherited her father's facile tongue and they were well matched.



But after Eben, James spoke only to Martha and Muriel, completely ignoring Theresa. When at first she had tried to join in the talk he had met her with silence, waiting till she finished, then continuing as though she hadn't spoken. Now Theresa sat through meals in silence, except to answer when her mother or sister spoke to her, or to remind Eben of some small table courtesy.

He who preserves a wise silence speaks well.
—SERBIAN PROVERB.

Eben was also excluded from the conversation. This did not seem to affect him very much. He worshiped his grandfather with a touching reverence that breathed in every word that fell from James' lips, although James seldom spoke to him directly; when he did, it was usually in terse forbidding or command. Martha often wondered if he was aware of how deeply the child loved him, so entirely without a reason.

"Eben is a sponge that you can't squeeze," Muriel had once said, and Martha knew that it was true. Eben absorbed everything and gave back little. She seldom knew what he was thinking. Only Theresa seemed to understand him, and she of them all was least able to help him. In any need he turned instinctively to Martha.

This evening his grandfather ignored him as usual; he did not speak till they had all begun to eat. Then, looking at his younger Faces shining, apples polished . . . off they go on the "big day". Give them the proven advantages of STRIDE RITE's tested lasts, proper support and supple leathers. Your STRIDE RITE Dealer is thoroughly schooled . . . he knows just what young feet require in shoes for straight and sturdy growth; in size, in width, in style . . . and in accurate fit that allows for "growing room".

Green Shoe Mfg. Co., Boston, Mass.

new bottle and nipple brushes with sanitary NYLON bristles

Your baby's bottles and rubber nipples can be easily kept clean and sanitary with these nylon-bristled brushes. Springy, resilient Du Pont nylon bristles not only get bottles and nipples cleaner—they can be kept clean and sanitary themselves. For nylon, unlike other bristle materials, can be sterilized by boiling.

Springy, non-matting DuPont nylon bristles stay resilient . . . never get limp or brittle . . . don't wilt or fall out. They work efficiently at all times . . . dry quickly . . . and durable nylon bristles last longer.

You can sterilize Du Pont nylon bristles by boiling. Easily kept clean and sanitary, they help you keep baby's bottles and nipples hygienically clean. Specially designed brush-ends aid thorough cleaning.

Whenever you buy any brush, ask for one with Du Pont nylon bristles, because . . .

The best brushes have
DU PONT NYLON BRISTLES

DU PONT

Better Things for Better Living . . . through Chemistry daughter, he asked, "Who was the young man that brought you home, Muriel?"

Muriel looked up in surprise. "Roy Lincoln. How did you know?"

"I saw you from the study window. Who is he, and how does it happen that he escorts you home from the school library?"

Martha tightened. Don't push her too far, James. Muriel reddened, but her voice when she answered was as cool as her father's.

"He's the son of Mr. Swayne Lincoln, who owns the Modern Fashion Shop on Center Street. Roy's football captain and president of the senior class. And he did not escort me home from the library. I met him coming out of Simms' drugstore. He had to come this way anyway, so we just walked along together."

James eyed her sharply. "You seemed very animated."

Muriel was defiant now. "I suppose I was. Any of the girls would give their eyeteeth to walk a block with Roy Lincoln. He's smart, and smooth too. What's more, he's nice." She looked at her mother. "He's just beginning to see me," she said a little shyly. "He wants to date me."

James put down his fork. He leaned back in his chair and drummed gently on the edge of the table. "I shall not allow you to 'date,' as you put it, before you are of age, Muriel. I am convinced that the laxity of morals in the younger generation is due largely to the laxity of discipline among the parents. I do not intend to risk a recurrence of the misfortune that has already befallen my family." He paused, the lines in his forehead deepening. "As for this Lincoln, they said of Mark Eldridge, too, that he was a nice young man."

In the small silence that followed, Martha saw that Eben's black eyes were puzzled, sensitive to the drama about him, and curious about it.

Theresa spoke gently. "Eat your supper, Eben."

"I'm not hungry any more, mommy."

"Very well, then, dear, run along and play. You might take Patsy for a walk. She's getting too fat."

Eben said "Excuse me" politely, and pushed his chair up to the table before he left.

Muriel stood up. Her eyes were black as Eben's in their anger. "I think you're awful," she told her father. She turned and ran from the room.

Martha spoke to her husband then. "Mark Eldridge was a nice young man," she said. She was at the foot of the stairs to follow Muriel when Theresa stopped her.

"She'll be all right, mom. I think I need you now more than she does. In the sewing room. We'll be quiet there."

The large room next to Theresa's bedroom was her workshop. Here she made the clothes that had earned her reputation as the best dressmaker in town. After Eben was born she had advertised for sewing, and people brought it to her, some in kindness, many in curiosity. The quality of her work had kept them coming.

Since the Rev. Mr. Weatherby never went there, the sewing room served as council chamber for the rest of the family—and as a refuge. Theresa had painted the walls white, and had hung pink curtains at the windows, and painted the few pieces of furniture a bright pink to match. It was an unorthodox and completely charming room. Theresa lived there. The small room next to it was Eben's.

There was only one picture in Eben's room. On the table by his bed was a photograph in a silver frame of an Air Force pilot with a captivating grin, a duplicate made from the one that hung on the wall in the sewing room. This one was inscribed, "I love you always, Mark."

Theresa stood before it now. Martha sat in the armchair by the window and looked at her daughter's slim back, and waited.

When Theresa turned, her voice was quiet, but there was just a hint of passion in it.

"I'm glad! Do you realize it's been eight years since anyone has called his name out loud in this house? He's Eben's father, and all I've ever known of living! I say it to Eben often, perhaps too often, when we're alone, to make up for his never hearing anybody mention it when we're all together. I think he's beginning to notice that now." Her voice faltered. "Oh, mom, if it hadn't been for you all these years, I'd have died, too, I guess. You have been all I've had to lean on. What you are to me I have to be to Eben. He is going to need me so."

Martha waited. All of us, since Eve . . . wanting to suffer for them. Mine has been the waiting . . . not knowing what to do, afraid to rob you of the knowledge of my love, when you had lost everything else.

"The way I've needed you, mom, all these years, with all the words locked in me, so that I couldn't talk about it, even to you. The way I've wanted to, ever since . . . that day."

Martha remembered that day. It had begun like any other of the long happy Saturdays the Weatherbys used to share. James had been in the study preparing his sermon. Muriel had gone to the store. Martha and Theresa had been in the kitchen getting lunch, and arguing good-naturedly about the wedding.

"But, mom, neither Mark nor I want a big wedding. He wanted dad to marry us when he was here that week end last month. I had the hardest time getting him to wait till he got the twenty-one days. I didn't want to wait either, but I felt we couldn't cheat you and dad out of all your plans—even though I'm not going to let you spend loads of money for tulle and bridesmaids and what not."

The phone had rung then. Martha had answered it. Myra Eldridge was crying while she talked, but some of the words stood out: "Plane crashed . . . Mark . . . killed." Theresa took the receiver from her, listened, put it back on the cradle. Theresa was only eyes—wide, puzzled eyes.

"He can't be dead, mom. He's going to marry me in two weeks. He can't be dead, because I'm almost sure I'm going to have a baby."

She had fainted then. The rest was hazy. Martha remembered getting Theresa to bed . . . calling James . . . the doctor . . . the long weeks afterward. . . .

Theresa began to talk. "There have been so many things I've wanted to tell you but somehow I never could. Of all the hurts that this has meant, the biggest has been knowing that it hurt you, shamed you. I never felt any shame for me." She looked straight into Martha's eyes. "That would have been like being ashamed for Mark, and I couldn't be. I couldn't ever be anything but proud of him."

"I know," Martha said. She had that same feeling, herself, about Mark. No matter what he had done—no, those weren't the right words. It wasn't something that anybody had done. It was something that had happened.

"It was when he came home for that last time." Theresa's voice was not quite even. "We went for a walk out to Tom's Point. We had just seen Two in Flight at the Ritz. We sat there on the bank and talked. We talked about things we'd do after the war was over, about the home we'd build. Then we just sat there a long time and held hands. He looked at me as though he would never get enough of looking. And then, when he kissed me, we—we couldn't wait." She was talking to herself now, remembering. "I wasn't ashamed; not then or after. Only sorry, because it changed things. Mark thought that we ought to be married right away. But when I remembered how you and dad were looking forward to a big wedding, I felt we ought to do as we had planned. I never thought about a baby. Mark did, though. He was terribly worried." She sat on the couch opposite her mother. "I'm not saying that it wasn't wrong, mom. Only that I could never be ashamed of it. Dad could never see that."

No, James had not seen that. Martha would never forget the day when Theresa, well enough to sit up for the first time after the sickness of shock and grief, had asked for her father. James had stood in the doorway of her room, ignoring her pleading gesture.

Springfoot Sox
FOR BOYS FROM SIX TO SIXTY
a sure sign of VALUE & ECONOM
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
THEY WEAR WELL!
COMMENDED PARENTS' MAGAZINE
SIZES 6 to 13
39¢ to $1.25 A PAIR
Featured by selected leading retailers of boys' and young men's apparel. For the name of your nearest dealer write:
WILMINGTON HOSIERY MILLS, INC.
WILMINGTON 17, DELAWARE

METALLIC Christmas Cards YOU MAKE $40.00 CASH
You make 80c on every box of Metal Foil name-imprinted Christmas Cards you sell friends and others. They buy this new sensation on sight . . . Over 50 other Christmas and Everyday assortments. Name-imprinted Christmas cards, 40 for $1, up. FREE Personal Samples. Assortments on approval. Write now.
On Only 50 Boxes
CHAS. C. SCHWER CO., 37E Elm St., Westfield, Mass.

MAKE QUICK EASY CASH! FREE SAMPLE
SELL Empire CHRISTMAS CARDS
50 NAME PRINTED CARDS $1.25
Personalized STATIONERY NAPKINS — COASTERS
Big new line—sure fire sellers. Gorgeous 21 card $1 Christmas and All-Occasion Assortments. Metallic, plastic, comic cards. Surprise gift items. 5 NEW Christmas Card name-printed lines $1 up. Animated children's books. Scented Stationery. NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED—Costs nothing to try. Fund raising plan for clubs. Special offers. Extra Cash Bonus. Write now for samples.
100% Cash Profit
EMPIRE CARD CO. 232 FOX ST. ELMIRA, N.

SEND FOR FREE CATALOG OF Cotton Values!
NEW EXCITING STYLES for FALL
Just one of the really worthwhile cotton values in our New Fall and Winter Catalog. Finest quality always at a saving . . . in glamorous dresses, nightwear, handsome sportswear, shirts, underwear, beautiful fabrics, wonderful household Cottons, children's and infant's wear, etc., all guaranteed completely! Buy direct from those who know Cottons best. Satisfaction guaranteed or your money promptly refunded. See for yourself—and Save on Cottons . . . get this FREE CATALOG Now! Write!
SOLID and PLAID DRESS $5.98
SOUTH CAROLINA MILLS
Dept. 626, Spartanburg, S. C. hristian charity forbids me to condemn or your sin, for the disgrace that you brought to this family. Judgment rests

God. As you have nowhere else to go, nay remain here with us. Your mother
I will do all we can to help you with the tunate child that is to be the result of wickedness. Hiding your condition will nprove it. I shall expect you in church ual on Sunday morning."

at was all. In eight years he had not back to his daughter's room, not even Eben was born.

: was his pride that I hurt, mom. But sn't his pride in himself. He could have the gossip, the whispers, even the pity y had been directed at him. What he n't stand was the hurt to his pride in
He had loved me so; been so sure that I perfect." She was speaking vehemently
"I could understand what a shock it have been to him, mom. I could under-l anger, hurt, even hate. What I couldn't rstand was the cold, calculated effort to me so completely out of his life—me everything that belonged to me, Eben,
Patsy, as if none of us had ever ex-
. He knows that you have been torn een your love for him and your love ne, and he has resented it, because he s me, mom, and he hates your love for e was crying now. Martha was silent.

t can I say to her? Isn't it true? Doesn't ate her? And the terrible thing about it is he doesn't recognize it as hate, or his icy fference as cruelty. Every day of these years lent denial of her has hurt Theresa worse that Sunday when I
ght she would surely die.
hey had gone to church.
resa had been weak
pale, but she had ked down the aisle been Martha and Muriel
h her head up, oblivi-
of the turning heads, whispers.

Martha had felt that the worst was over n they reached their front pew. But she w better when James read his text: "A e son maketh a glad father: but a foolish is the heaviness of his mother."

he listened, against her will, while James ached, more brilliantly than she had ever rd him preach before, about spoiled, sing children who were the just punishment too-lenient parents. At last, leaning ford, he spoke with quiet earnestness:

"You all know that in my own family I e bitter proof of what I have been saying.
unmarried elder daughter is to become a ther. She came to church, holding to my d, as soon as she could walk. We thought, mother and I, that our love was rearing in the ways of righteousness. But love s not enough. We failed. We failed because were not mindful enough of our sacred st to rear her to be afraid—afraid of doing
l. We failed because, like too many other ents of today, we were afraid, not of doing l but of forbidding it, afraid to punish e little sins that lead to the graver ones.
ke counsel from our failure, friends, and ch your children fear, the fear of God, t someday you are asked, 'What of the ild I gave you?' and have no answer."

HAT sermon had cost the Rev. James eatherby much of the wholehearted love in hich his congregation had held him. They ll came to church and contributed to its keep, but they didn't bring him their probms the way they used to. He was not called so many sickbeds. If he was aware of the fference, he never mentioned it.

Martha was thinking about that difference
w. "Your father lost himself, Theresa, hen he lost his faith in you. He has not ted you so much as he has hated himself
r the hate in him, and it has been slowly stroying him. All I have tried to do has not lped. I have hoped that Eben might some-w reach him, but Eben is seven now, and thing is changed. It is pitiful the way Eben ves him when he so seldom notices him."

"Yes," Theresa said. "That's one of the asons why I'm thinking of going away.
Eben worships him. He might realize someday that the only way he can hurt me any more is through Eben—by teaching Eben to hate me."

Martha could not speak. His own daughter believes him capable of deliberately trying to hurt her through her child!

"He's hurting Muriel, too," Theresa said. "Treating her the way he believes he should have treated me. And she'll fight back with the courage that has kept her standing by me as if nothing had happened. But she's old enough for love, now, and so he can hurt her too."

"You mustn't go away." Martha spoke firmly. "Eben's best chance is here, where everybody already knows about him, where everybody knew his father and respects his memory. Your courage has helped to keep that respect alive. There will always be a place in this town for your son and Mark's." She stood up. "You'd better go to Muriel. You and she can help each other."

On her way downstairs she met Eben, holding Patsy on the leash.

"Did you and Patsy have a nice walk?"

"Yes, gramma."

"You didn't wait for your apple dumpling. Ready for it now?"

"Uh-huh." He nodded, dimpling. Eben's rare smiles were worth waiting for.

"Well, let's go get it, then."

In the kitchen, she put his apple dumpling in a bowl and scooped ice cream over it. She fixed one for herself. They ate in silence.

Then Eben asked, "Gramma, why didn't grandfather like my daddy?"

"I think he did like him, dear."

"What he said about him at dinner didn't sound as if he liked him. And he doesn't like Patsy either. He never lets her stay where he is, and that's mean, 'cause Patsy is the nicest dog in the world."

"Yes, Patsy is, but your grandfather doesn't mean to be mean, Eben."

"No, I know. It's 'cause he feels so sorry all the time. Why does he feel sorry, gramma?"

"Who told you he feels sorry, Eben?"

"Nobody. I just know. I've knowed that a long time."

"Known," she corrected automatically.

"Known," he acknowledged. "I've known that a long time, only I don't know why." He was regarding her gravely. "Do you know why, gramma?"

"I think so, Eben, but I'm not quite sure about all of it. When I am, we'll talk about it again. In the meantime, do you know what to do when someone is very sorry?"

Eben shook his head.

"Well, if a person is sorry and you love him enough, someday that person will stop being sorry and be glad. But you have to love him very hard."

"Even if he doesn't love you, gramma?"

"Yes, Eben. That is one of the wonderful things about love. If you love somebody hard enough, that person just has to love you back."

His round, dark eyes absorbed that. "I see," he said.

"Now come and give gramma a big hug." How much more have you "knowed" a long time, Eben? His small, strong, still-baby arms about her neck were strangely reassuring.

In Muriel's room Theresa was asking, "Shall I go away?"

Muriel stopped crying. She answered earnestly, "Whatever happens, you mustn't do that. It would make things much, much worse—for all of us."

"I don't see how."

"Think. Bad as it's been, we've all been able to hold our heads up, because you held yours up. We haven't been afraid because we've hidden nothing. We've been proud of you—even dad—because you've stayed and proved to the town that you are brave and decent and honest and good. There isn't a person in town who doesn't admire you. All the nicest girls at school are jealous of me for

The more intellectual people are, the more originality they see in other men. To commonplace people, all men are much alike. —PASCAL

Dental Research Indicates You Can Help

Prevent Tooth Decay With COLGATE Ammoniated Tooth Powder

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Yes, Colgate's Great Dentifrice Gives Extra Protection As It Cleans Your Teeth—and Breath!

1 REMOVES ACID FILM usually associated with tooth decay! Laboratory tests indicate that when you use it regularly as directed, Colgate Ammoniated Tooth Powder may help you avoid pain, worry and expense of needless tooth decay.

2 TEETH LOOK CLEANER, feel cleaner immediately. That's because Colgate's foamy cleaning action removes dulling film so well teeth get naturally, sparkling clean.

3 CLEANS BREATH, TOO . . . Removes tiny food particles that cause much bad breath. Has a minty, mouth-refreshing flavor that even children love!

Get Colgate Ammoniated Tooth Powder today for the whole family. Available at any toilet goods counter.

4 oz. 47¢ 2 oz. 27¢

With A Flavor The Whole Family Will Enjoy

Is your child's health worth a $15 investment?

■ Strange question, isn't it? And yet many people do compromise when it comes to a vaporizer. If you have a child in your home you should have a vaporizer—the very best you can get!

A DeVilbiss No. 149 is the wisest investment you could make for your child's health and well-being. Ask your druggist about it by name and number. You'll find it runs all night long without attention. Produces a greater volume of medicated vapor than any other vaporizer we've ever seen. Safe, clean, fully automatic. Don't wait till a middle-of-the-night crisis arises. Get a DeVilbiss No. 149 today! The DeVilbiss Company, Toledo 1, Ohio, and Windsor, Ontario.

THE NAME YOU KNOW BEST IN ATOMIZERS, NEBULIZERS, AND VAPORIZERS

DE VILBISS
VAPORIZERS

FOR USE WITH COLDS, CROUP, COUGHS

There's no suit like a Suitmaker!

It's the "ultra" in rayon suits...the bonus in your wardrobe. Here, tailored for the most particular tastes, a classic with a tilt to its pockets, a fit for every figure. 10 to 20, 7 to 15 and young Proportioned Plus sizes, 10+ to 20+. Only $30. At one fine store in your city. For its name, write Handmacher-Vogel, Inc., Dept. L9, 533 Seventh Ave., New York 18.

Tailored by handmacher®

being your sister. You're a sort of legend with them."

"Muriel, you're making this up."

"No, I'm not. All the boys who matter have been extra decent to me, because they couldn't be anything else to your sister."

"I thought it would be the other way around."

"Not with any of the right sort of boys—like Roy Lincoln." She hesitated. "I think I'm in love with Roy, Tess."

"I'm glad, Mully. I've always liked everything I saw or heard of him. But you're going to have trouble with father about him, and my being here will make it worse."

"No, it won't. It won't be easy to manage him, but your leaving would make it harder. Don't worry, Tess. It's going to be all right."

But Theresa wasn't so sure.

Eben sounded worried. "Gramma, I think Patsy's sick. She didn't eat her dinner."

"I think you're mistaken, dear. I looked at her plate awhile ago and it was empty."

"That's 'cause the dog from next door ate it. And Patsy let him."

Martha went to the door and whistled, the clear shrill whistle that always delighted Eben. Patsy came across the lawn, walking instead of bouncing. When Martha patted her she did not writhe as ecstatically as usual.

"She looks all right, Eben. Maybe she's just tired."

But Martha kept on worrying, as she tried to put out of her mind the thought that Patsy was very old. And that Eben loved her very much.

At dinner James was holding forth about the need for a revised hymnal. Muriel and Martha were unresponsive and Theresa, as always, was tacitly excluded from the conversation. Martha could see that James was becoming annoyed. She followed his frowning glance toward Eben. The boy was making a little fort of his rice and his mutton was untouched. Eben hated mutton. She tried to think of something to say that would distract James' attention, but it was too late.

"Eat your dinner, Eben. It is bad manners to play with food."

"Yes, grandfather." Eben attacked his plate with obedient zeal.

James resumed his discourse. "Many of the hymns in our present hymnal are worded in language long outmoded and set to tunes that have little appeal to the modern ear ——"

Patsy nudged her way through the kitchen door. She waddled quietly across the room to lie at Eben's feet. Martha saw her husband's gaze shift to Eben, just as the boy slipped a piece of mutton to Patsy.

"Eben," James said coldly, "that dog is not to be fed at the table. I have told you that before. You will please take her outdoors, and wash your hands before you come back."

Eben looked at him for a moment, the bright color about his ears. "Yes, grandfather." He stood up and snapped his fingers. "Here, Patsy . . . here, girl." Patsy followed him obediently. At the door he stopped and turned toward his grandfather. "Her name is Patsy," he said quietly. He went out, shutting the door soundlessly behind him.

Muriel was looking at her father with narrowed eyes. "Even the dogs," she said, as if to herself, "eat of the crumbs that fall from the master's table."

"I fail to see, Muriel, that mutton at seventy-five cents a pound can be described as crumbs." He turned to Martha. "As I was saying, Martha, we need a new hymnal. The problem is to persuade the committee ——"

Eben came back to the table with his eyes suspiciously bright but his head high. His grandfather had not finished with him. "From now on, that dog is to stay outdoors. She has a kennel. There is no need for her to sleep indoors." Eben bit his lip. The room was silent, except for the sound of Patsy whining and scratching on the screen door.

At bedtime Eben came to Martha. "Gramma, can't she come in? She's lonesome out there."

NOW . . . Real SALON-TYP Home Facial . .

See your skin clearer, fresher, fin — a professional treatment in 10 min es

You know the beauty results of a sal clay facial. Now give your skin the sa care at home . . . regularly . . . for just a f cents a facial with Hopper White Clay Pa So easy! Just smooth on. Let dry. Rin In just 10 minutes, you'll see your sk softer, clearer, glowing! Tense feeli melts away! Try it today. Money-ba guarantee. 25c to $1. Also 10c trial s*

FOLLOW UP your Hopper Home Facial with extra-softening Hopper Homogenized Facial Cream. *plus tax

Guaranteed b Good Housekeep

HOPPER® white clay pac HOME FACIAL

Here's A Merry Way To MAKE BIG MONE

Sell MIDWEST Christmas C Show friends Name-Imprinted Christmas C low as 50 for $1.25, 21-Card $1 Christmas A ment sells fast; your profit up to 50c. Also Exc Secret Pal, Stationery, $1 Gifts, Gold-Stri Playing Cards, Children's Books, others. Pl organizations. Party Plan. Send for FRE print Samples, Assortments on Appr

50 Cards $1 WITH NAME

MIDWEST CARD CO., Dept. 1113 Washington Ave., St. Louis 1

The 1951 Creation SLIPON SHAPE NEW REAL HAIR NETS

Adjust without hair pins, cover only parts of hairdo requiring protection, reinforced for longer wear, all shades, double and single mesh. IDEAL for present hair styles. MAIL direct $1.70 doz. for plain colors or $2.35 doz. white, grays. All other shapes available also. Over 43 years experience.
NATIONAL HAIR NET CO., New York 3, N. Y.

CUT ME OUT!

If You Want to Make Mone

We need live-wire Subscription Represe tives! Here's a part-time job that will you Big Commissions. No charge for part lars or supplies. Write at once to

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
643 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsyl

NEW cushion plastic tightens LOOSE FALSE TEETH

Stop slipping, sliding and sore gums! Chew and enjoy all foods. Reline your plates at home with DENTUR-EZE. Not a paste or powder, but a cushion plastic that lasts weeks. Thousands delighted. 59c & 98c tubes. If druggist hasn't it, send check or m. o. to DENTUR-EZE, 902 John St., Seattle 9, Wn.

ONE APPLICATIO LASTS FO WEEK

DENTUR-EZE

MONEY BACK GUARANTEE

Make Mone WITH EXCITING Ne CHRISTMAS CAR

AMAZING EASY WAY

Show friends, others, lovely L PRICED Name-Imprinted Per Cards—shipped direct to custo —and big Album De Luxe, higher-p Personals. PLUS 40 Christmas and E Asst's. including sensational 21-card "Fea Assortment. Sells $1—your profit up to 60 ligious, Humorous, Etchtone, Gift Wrappings Red Velvet Ass't, Currier & Ives Ass't., giant Ribbon Assortment, (80 yards for $1), Stati others. Fast selling Gift Items. FREE Sample sonal Cards; "Feature" Assortment on app Rush Coupon TODAY! WALLACE BROWN, 225 Fifth Ave., Dept. C-9, New York 10.

Mail COUPON FOR Samples TODAY!

NAME
ADDRESS
CITY STATE

"I sorry, darling, but grandfather says st stay out."
"Couldn't you let her in anyway?"
"I without telling him."
"Gramma, I'm trying very hard."
"To do what, dear?"
"What you said about loving."
"Yes, I know."
"Didn't want to tonight at supper."
"Yes, I know. I was proud of you."
"Gramma, suppose it rains?"
"I don't think it will, Eben."
"But, but suppose it does?"
"She has a nice house. She'll be all right."

Martha was brushing her hair in front of her old-fashioned oval mirror when the rain, it. In the glass she saw James watching ch the intense look that so often puz- r. She turned.
", James, let me let Patsy in," she d. "She's never been out in the rain at before. We've spoiled her all her life, 's heartless to change now. She won't stand."
"My dear, you speak as though she were a "
"She is! She's one of the family. We've ed her from the day Theresa brought me, a little, lovable, wet, stray puppy. oved her, too, till all this happened to you so hard and bitter!"
" stiffened. "I've felt that I've acted great forbearance during 'all this,' as nderstate it."
"Forbearance hasn't been enough, James. eed love, all of us—Theresa, Muriel, Patsy. Me!" She was trembling. y need you and I need you. The way used to be. Before t this hate into your for your daughter er child."
answered coldly, "I hate either Theresa en. I couldn't be a ter of the Gospel if I ored hate for anyone, least of all for bers of my own family."
She looked at him wonderingly. "You believe that, don't you? You really know you hate them. If you knew, would be some hope for you, but you know—you don't even want to know!"
She did not answer. The rain beat in st the windows. Long after she was in Martha lay listening to it.
In the morning, when she went downstairs ake the coffee, she found the back door and Eben sitting on the steps with y in his arms. Patsy was dead. Eben was rying, but his small face was not child- ny more.
Martha was frightened. She put her arm nd him. "Try not to feel too sorry, Eben. y was very old for a dog. Come upstairs gramma."
He followed her obediently. At the head of tairs they met James. He looked at their s.
"What's wrong?"
"Patsy's dead," Martha said.
He shrugged his shoulders. "Well, she was ty old."

Eben looked straight at him. His voice was ll but high. "It's your fault, grandfather. was sick an' you wouldn't let her come n' she got scared an' stayed all night on steps in the rain, waiting for someone to her in. Gramma says to love you, but 're mean an' you hate me like you hated sy, an' now I hate you too." He burst into s.
Martha knelt and put her arms about . "Don't cry, darling. We'll get another , and you'll love her just like Patsy. 'll see."
James Weatherby looked down at them. o, we're not going to get another dog," said. "Dogs seem to make everybody too appy."
Eben pulled away from Martha, his small s clenched. "I hate you! I hate you! I e you!"
Theresa came to the doorway of her room held out her arms to her son. She spoke etly, her eyes on her father. "You mustn't hate, Eben. If you let hate get inside of you, there won't be any room for love, either to come in or go out." She picked him up and shut the door of her room gently behind them.

Martha saw John Benson for the first time in church, on a Sunday morning in December. He was in old Mrs. Benson's pew. Even seated, he was head and shoulders above everybody else in the church. He had bold, square-cut, homely features, softened incongruously by his glasses. His hair was very black and very curly. About thirty-five, Martha guessed. He met her eyes and they both smiled.

After the benediction, as they waited for James, Mrs. Benson brought him over. She was little and birdlike, and beside him she looked tinier than ever.

"My great-nephew, from Simpsonville," she said. "He's spending his vacation with me."

Martha liked the way he grinned at her. She introduced him to Theresa and Muriel and then to Eben, who stared speechlessly up at him.

"Say hello, dear." Theresa touched Eben's shoulder. "That will be politer than staring." She smiled at John. "I don't think he's ever seen anyone so tall."

"Well, we can do something about that," John said. "Would you like to come up here?" Eben nodded and John swung him up so that they were face to face. "Perhaps someday you'll be as tall as this yourself."

Eben looked doubtfully toward Theresa. "Was daddy this tall?" he asked her.

"No, dear. He was tall, but not as tall as that."

"Then I don't suppose I'll be as tall as you," Eben said.

John put him down and looked over his head at Theresa. Their eyes held for a long time, so long that Martha had a silly impulse to measure it by counting seconds.

James joined them. He and John seemed to like each other, a little to Martha's surprise. For a long time James had shown no sign of offering or wanting friendship.

"I liked your sermon, sir," John said. "Only I didn't quite agree with all you said about capitalism."

"Oh, you didn't, eh?" James chuckled. "Well, then, why don't you and Mrs. Benson come home with us and argue it out over dinner?"

Mrs. Benson excused herself, but urged John to accept. Not that he needed urging, Martha thought.

At dinner James was more animated than he had been for a long time. At last he had an opponent who was a fair match for him. They argued eagerly all through dinner and well into the afternoon.

"The man's brilliant!" James told Martha later. "I don't know when I've enjoyed a talk so much."

"I thought he was enjoying it too," Martha told him.

"I hope he did—enough to come back for more."

"I hope so too," Martha said.

But it was something more than a hope that was in her heart, something more like a prayer. And when John came back, next afternoon, and James persuaded him to stay for dinner, Martha dared to think that her prayer might be answered. All the talk was between James and John, as it had been yesterday, but Martha hardly listened to it. Her mind was on the way John's eyes kept shifting toward Theresa's. And on the way Theresa's eyes, meeting his, were soft and shining again, and happy.

Martha watched them falling in love, in the days that followed, marveling that neither of them seemed to know that it was happening, marveling still more that James should be as blind to it as they, beginning to believe that the miracle of love, when he should recognize it, might melt his heart, cleanse it of bitterness. Fervently as she prayed for Theresa's happiness for Theresa's

A narrow mind and a wide mouth go together. —ANON.

NYLON SNOW BOOTS

In the land of the ice and snows, Dayton's knows! Nylaqueen is a cold weather boot designed for your comfort and appearance whatever your winter. Warm enough for Minnesota, yet light in weight for moderate temperatures. Outer shell is nylon, treated with DuPont Zelan to be water repellent; sole is ribbed synthetic rubber. Lined with luxurious high nylon pile; heel countered for shapeliness; nylon sewn throughout. Trim is a soft, non-crushable plastic resembling shearling. Three-eyelet. Mildew and moth-proof. Colors: black, brown, red, or green. In ordering be sure to give your exact shoe size and heel height.

The Dayton Company
MINNEAPOLIS

THE NORTHWEST'S GREAT STORE

THE DAYTON COMPANY
Minneapolis 2, Minnesota
Please send me ____ pair of Nylaqueen Boots at $11.95 pr.
COLOR ____ SHOE SIZE ____ HEEL HEIGHT ____
Name ____
Address ____ Zone ____ State ____
City ____
☐ CHARGE ☐ MONEY ORDER ☐ CHECK ☐ C.O.D.
WE PAY POSTAGE ON ALL ORDERS

3 Wonderful Reasons

FOR LOOKING YOUR FASHION FINEST

Smarter Style . . . bringing compliments galore
Greater Comfort . . . such as you've never felt before Finer Value . . . you just couldn't ask for more!

$8.95 and $9.95
SOME STYLES HIGHER DISTANT POINTS
SLIGHTLY HIGHER

Miracle-Tread

SMART SHOES FOR GRACEFUL POISE

Write for Name of Nearest Dealer

MIRACLE-TREAD DIVISION Craddock-Terry Shoe Corporation, Lynchburg, Va.

sake, she prayed for it even more fervently for the healing it might bring to James.

On Saturday, when James came in from a long visit to Jefferson Hurley's sickroom, dinner was over. Theresa had put Eben to bed and gone downtown to do Christmas shopping; Muriel was upstairs and Martha was alone in the living room. The weary sadness on James' face stirred her pity. He looked as he had in their early days together, when he came home from the near shadow of death.

"I can't reach him, Martha. He won't believe what I try to tell him. He keeps saying that when I'm sure of my own salvation I may come and offer his to him. And I can't make him believe that I am sure."

Martha waited. Perhaps, through his dying friend's doubt of him, he might come to understand what his own bitterness of hate was doing to him. Perhaps ——

There was a step behind her. She saw James' face change before she turned to stare at Muriel in the doorway. Muriel in a demure little velvet blouse with miniature sleeves and a wide, colorful skirt, with her blond hair caught up in back with a black velvet bow. Her cheeks were flushed.

"Dad, I'm going to the school hop with Roy Lincoln. I'd like to go with your permission; but with or without it, I'm going."

James struck the table with his clenched fist. Martha had never seen him look so angry. "I forbid it," he said.

"I'm sorry, but I'm going."

"If you do," he said, "don't come back."

"James!" Martha was between them, facing him. "Think what you're saying!"

"I have thought. I've had eight years of thinking. Eight years of repenting for my part in the rearing of one spoiled, willful, wicked daughter! It shan't be my fault if I have two!"

His voice rose. Martha tried not to hear the words. Hateful words, thrown like stones.

"If you go, don't come back to this house. There's no room in it for another loose woman. Nor for another bastard brat. Nor ——"

"Don't you dare call Eben that hateful name!" Martha kept her voice low, but James heard it through the shouting loudness of his own.

"I call him what he is," he said.

Martha waited to be sure she could control her sudden sickness of anger. "I'm not sure I can forgive you for this, James. I've managed somehow to forgive you for everything else. I've tried to believe that it wasn't really you who made ■ Hester Prynne of your daughter, that somewhere under all the hate and bitterness you were still the good, just, kind, patient man I loved. But now I know you aren't. You couldn't be, and use that cruel name for your grandson."

She stopped. He did not answer, but there was no relenting in the set hardness of his face. Pity suddenly went out of her.

"I know now why Jefferson Hurley won't listen to you. If you spoke to him with the tongues of men and angels, all he would hear is what I heard just now. A voice with no charity in it. No love. A voice that is only . . . sounding brass!"

He stood still for a moment, giving no sign that he had heard. Then, without speaking, he turned and went slowly, heavily upstairs. Martha heard the closing of a door, the sound of steps in their bedroom overhead. Only then did she realize that she was alone, that Muriel's coat was gone from the chair where it had been lying.

Martha ran to the door, with a half-formed thought of following her daughter. But in the light of the street lamp at the corner she could see Muriel's silhouetted figure and another, tall and straight, that must be Roy Lincoln's. Martha saw them meet, pause, go on together. She came back to the living room. As long as Roy was with her, Muriel was safe. She had too much common sense to take that wild talk of James' in earnest; she'd come home when the dance was over.

Martha waited, trying vainly to keep her thoughts away from the silence upstairs. I don't see how I can ever be in that room with him again. I don't see how I can even bear living in the same house with him.

She was too restless to sit still; a drink of warm milk might calm her nerves, she thought. She went to the kitchen to prepare it. The back door was ajar, letting in a draft of cold wind. Martha was almost sure that she had locked it when she had finished with the dishes. Could James have come down the back stairs and gone out? The sound of a step overhead reassured her. She drank the milk and went back to wait for Theresa.

It was nearly ten when Theresa came in, laden with packages. The brightness went out of her face at what she saw in Martha's.

"What's the matter, darling?"

She had a gift for getting the truth from people; it didn't take her long to get it from Martha.

"That's bad," she said. "That's very, very bad. Eben knows that—that word must be something hateful. He heard it at school and asked me about it. I told him it was a cruel name that cruel people called other people for something they couldn't help. If he had heard father calling him that ——"

She ran upstairs. Martha heard swift footsteps and then Theresa calling down to her in a small tight voice.

"Mom, he isn't here. Not anywhere."

Martha went up to her. They made another search together, but Martha, remembering that open kitchen door, knew that they wouldn't find Eben, knew it even before they found that his overcoat and cap and rubbers were gone.

"Call John Benson," she told Theresa, "and tell him. He'll know what to do."

She went back upstairs and into the bedroom. James was kneeling beside the bed, his face on his crossed arms. It was a pitiful look, set and drawn, that he lifted to Martha.

"I've been asking God to forgive me," he said huskily.

She could not feel thankfulness. She could not even be compassionate, or merciful.

"I hope He will," she said quietly. "He must have heard what you—what you called him. He's not in the house and his clothes are gone. He must have run away."

James' shoulders drooped. Then they were straight again, and square, almost a young man's shoulders.

"I'll find him," he said. "I'll bring him back. Don't be afraid, Martha."

His voice was deep and strong, and there was in it the sure conviction that had been in it, long ago, whenever the young Jan Weatherby proclaimed his faith in God and in God's mercy. And, as it had always done before bitterness had taken possession of his spirit, that triumphant certainty of belief gave some measure of its strength to Martha's own faith. Suddenly she was not afraid.

She was not afraid, all through the long night of waiting. She could even share that faith that armored her against fear with Theresa, and with Muriel, when Roy Lincoln brought her home.

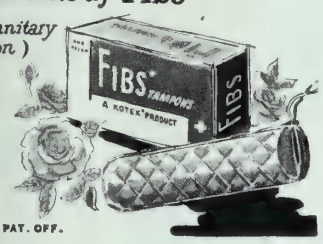
And although the state and town police, the boys from the dance, and most of the men in the neighborhood were searching the snowy roads and woods and fields, it was no surprise to Martha that the one who found Eben, unconscious, half frozen but alive, was his grandfather.

James had gone out, late in the afternoon while Eben was still asleep. Martha heard him come in and met him at the head of the stairs. He had not taken off his overcoat and there was a powder of snow on it.

"The doctor's just gone. He says Eben will be all right. All he needs is rest and quiet." She stopped him as he would have moved past her to Eben's door. "I think you better not go in, James," she said. "Not yet. He heard what you said. He still thinks you meant it."

"That's why I must go in, Martha," he told her.

He who is not taught by his mother will be taught by the world. —BANTU PROVERB.



To Tampon users...

Fibs*

...he Tampon
...ith rounded ends...
...he only Tampon
...uilted" for comfort...
...uilted" for safety...
Next time try Fibs

...nal sanitary
...otection)

...G. U. S. PAT. OFF.

INGROWN NAIL Hurting You? Immediate Relief!

...w drops of OUTGRO® bring blessed relief from ...enting pain of ingrown nail. OUTGRO tough-...the skin underneath the nail, allows the nail to ...ut and thus prevents further pain and discom-... OUTGRO is available at all drug counters.

...y Many Wear FALSE TEETH With More Comfort

...STEETH, a pleasant alkaline (non-...powder, holds false teeth more firmly. ... and talk in more comfort, just sprinkle ...le FASTEETH on your plates. No ...y, gooey, pasty taste or feeling. ...s "plate odor" (denture breath). Get ...EETH at any drug store.

...mouth tissues change—see your dentist.

EARN EXTRA MONEY Now!

Sell EXCLUSIVE Name-Imprinted Gifts!

Friends buy on sight smart EXCLUSIVE Gold-Stamped Playing Cards, Napkins, $1 Name-Imprinted Stationery, others. Just show FREE Samples ... pocket big profits! Also Name-Imprinted Embossed Christmas Cards, 50 for $1.25 up. Complete line Christmas Card Assortments pays up to 100% profit. No experience needed. Get Assortments on approval, Imprint Samples Free. ...reetings, 1702 Payne Ave., Dept. C-4, Cleveland 14, O.

FREE to STOUT WOMEN

MERELY mail coupon below for 92-Page Money-Saving Style Book. Sizes 38 to 60, proportioned by designers who KNOW how to slenderize stout women. Dresses, coats, suits, hats, sportswear, shoes, hosiery, corsets and underwear—all at very low prices. Mail the coupon now for your copy of this FREE Style Book.

...ne Bryant
...NDIANAPOLIS 17,
...IANA DEPT. 34

...NE BRYANT, Department 34
...dianapolis 17, Indiana.
...ease rush me FREE Style Book for Stout Women.

...me
...dress
...t Office State

He pushed her aside, gently, and went to the door. Behind him she saw Eben's small head turn on the pillow, saw the fear in the white face.

"Don't be afraid, Eben." James' voice was gentle, quiet, but it was the same voice that had told Martha, last night, not to be afraid. "Don't ever be afraid of me again." He knelt beside the bed. "I love you, Eben. I've always loved you. When I acted as if I didn't it was because I had let bad thoughts into my mind and they wouldn't let me think about you and about how much I loved you, the best grandson in all the world. But I did love you, all the time. And I always will. It was because I loved you so much that God let me find you last night and bring you home."

"Gramma said you would, if I loved you hard enough," Eben said.

"Gramma was right. She's always right. It was gramma who knew what you wanted for Christmas. Look."

His hand went into his overcoat pocket and came out with a tiny white puppy, all head and paws. The puppy sprawled past Eben's shoulder, licked his face, curled comfortably into the bend of his arm and went to sleep. Eben smiled and went to sleep too.

MARTHA was in the hall when James tiptoed out of Eben's room. He put his hand on her shoulder and she reached up and touched it.

"Eben's forgiven me," he said. "And I think God will. Can you, Martha?"

"You know I can, James. You know I do."

Her hands moved, after an almost forgotten habit, to help him take off his overcoat. But he shook his head.

"Not yet, Martha. I'm going out again," he told her. "To see Jeff Hurley. Perhaps, now, I can speak to him without being as sounding brass."

"You won't be," Martha said. "You won't ever be again."

John was enough at home, by now, to let himself in without ringing. He stood in the doorway, dwarfing the room. He shook his head when James told him to take off his coat.

"No, thanks. It's no night to be wasted inside of a house. There's 'a moon on the crest of the new-fallen snow' and I'm going walking in it."

James reached into the cloak cupboard for his coat. "Good. It's a long time since we've had a talk, John. It'll be nice to have one while we're walking."

"No, sir." John took the coat from him and hung it up again. "That would not be nice. Theresa's coming with me and I want her to come alone, because I'm going to ask her to marry me."

For a moment James' face was blank. Then, just as Theresa came running down the stairs, the new, bright glow about her, he put out his hand.

"I can't think of anything nicer than that, John," he said.

They had walked a long time in silence through the crisp, moonlit snow, not touching, but matching stride for stride. At the low summit of Peach Hill, John stopped and turned.

"I have to be back in Simpsonville the day after New Year's. Will you marry me on Christmas Day?"

"Are you sure you want me?" Her eyes did not leave his face. "In spite of everything? In spite of Eben?"

"I love Eben. As for 'everything,' the only thing that matters is how you feel about it. If you feel that you've paid, paid in full, so that there's no shadow out of the past to darken the happiness that you've earned ——"

"I've paid, John. In full."

"Then, Christmas Day?"

They had not touched till now.

"Christmas Day, my darling."

There were tears on her face as she lifted it to his. But in the moonlight they were bright.

THE END

Luxury styling at a budget price. Fil d'Or... Luxite's exclusive rayon-nylon blend gives you soft, smooth next-to-skin comfort, long wear, and easy care.

Fil d'Or, luxuriously enhanced with nylon woven embroidery and nylon net ruffles.
Gown, buttoning shirtwaist fashion. Pink, blue, white. Sizes 32-40. $8.95.
At better stores everywhere. Write for store in your community.

Slip in white, black. Sizes 32-40. $5.95

Luxite

HOLEPROOF HOSIERY COMPANY, MILWAUKEE 1, WISCONSIN • IN CANADA: London, Ontario
World-Famous Men's Socks • Women's Proportioned Hosiery • Luxite Lingerie • Nappers—The All-Nylon Slippersock Sensation

Medal of Honor

Sergeant Charles Turner, of Boston, Massachusetts—Medal of Honor. Korea. On September 1, 1950, near Yongsan, Korea, Sergeant Turner took over an exposed turret machine gun on a tank. Despite fifty direct hits on the tank, he stayed by his gun and destroyed seven enemy machine gun nests before he was killed.

You and your family are more secure today because of what Charles Turner did for you.

Sergeant Turner died to keep America free. Won't you see that America stays the land of peace and promise for which he gave his life? Defending the things he fought for is your job, too.

One important defense job you can do right now is to buy United States Defense* Bonds and buy them regularly. For it's your Defense Bonds that help keep America strong within. And out of America's inner strength can come power that guarantees security—for your country, for your family, for you.

Remember when you buy bonds for national defense, you also build personal cash savings. Remember, too, if you don't save regularly, you generally don't save at all. Money you take home usually is spent. So sign up today in the Payroll Savings Plan where you work or the Bond-A-Month Plan where you bank. For your country's security, and your own, buy United States Defense Bonds now!

*U.S. Savings Bonds are Defense Bonds - Buy them regularly!

The U. S. Government does not pay for this advertisement. It is donated by this publication in cooperation with the Advertising Council and the Magazine Publishers of America as a public service.

THE GREEN SCARF

(Continued from Page 40)

Con stood before them and gave them her le, expansive smile. When she remem-ed where her voice was located, she said t she would drive.

'I've hardly drunk anything," she ex-ined. "You people—I counted yours. u've had drinks and drinks and drinks d ——"

'Yeah," said Greg, "but I can still talk aight. Which is more than you can do, Con iams."

Con giggled. She leaned against the green nvertible and giggled. If Lennie did see , she thought, she'll think her little sister s evermore grown . She evermore will. Before she had pped giggling, they re somehow in the r cruising along the ach road. Just one the swishes, Con ought, just another g swish and a horn one lf note lower when it sses. She noted with rprise that they were the back seat. But s Toby's car we're in, e thought. Why is reg driving? Does think that he's in -1 condition after all those dry Martinis?

"Hey, where we goin'?" she asked. "I ant some more champagne."

Marian turned from the front seat and Con w her sharp angry face. "Oh, for gosh sake, ut up," she snapped. "Come out of it, Con. ou haven't had all that much to drink."

Oh no. I haven't had all that much. You rget, my frien', that I was a totalitarian up tonight. You forget that my theme on he Harmful Effects of Alcohol won second lace in high school. You forget that I am resident of the WCTU, or is it the YWCA? ou forget I am the author of the best-sell-g novel . . . no, a song.

We're coming, we're coming, our brave little band.
On the right side of temperance we've taken a stand!
We don't chew t'baccy ——

"Oh, shut up, Con. You're running it into he ground."

She hadn't been aware that she had even sung it through once, but undoubtedly Marian knew. Oh, undoubtedly.

Toby pulled her toward him and turned her face around toward his. Con opened her wide eyes and looked at him, nearly cross-eyed because he was so close. His breath was heavy with whisky smell, and his eyes looked swollen. Isn't this silly, Con thought, isn't this simply ridiculous? He wants me to kiss him. She laughed suddenly right in his face, pulling away. She rolled down the car window and rested her arm on the sill, feeling the stiff salty breeze whip at her hair. She squinted her eyes against the wind and tried to think.

One champagne cocktail ago we were in the Aguanian room. Purple fish and the waitress with long blond hair from Waynesburg, Pennsylvania. Just a short one, before we head home, someone said. One for the road. We were gonna make it snappy because Marian's dorm hours are twelve, and we're seventy miles from home. So we'll leave early. Did we? Then why is Greg driving so fast?

One champagne cocktail and one gin rickey ago we were on the Deck, dancing. Gosh, that was a good orchestra. And Lennie . . . I kept looking for her. She and Jim always go to the Deck to dance, but not tonight, or else I couldn't see them. She said she'd look for me; before they left this morning she called back to me. Connie, she said, I'll look for you. But she wouldn't be likely to look for me at a bar. Because I was always the Victorian. Lennie, it was Lennie who was the Party Girl, Mother always said, and I was the Home Girl. Take a look at me now, mom.

One champagne cocktail and three gin rickeys ago I was in the Rainbow Room, cold sober. Limeade, I said, very firm. Ha, ha, big joke. Listen at Con ordering a limeade. Bring her a zombie. No kidding, I said, I want a limeade. It's much cheaper. Cheaper, so what? they said. Kid, I'm loaded. I got money to burn. Bring this kid a gin rickey—

The mother of a five-year-old wanted to do some extra shopping, so she told Willie to go over to play with his cousins until lunchtime. When she returned Willie was playing by himself in his own back yard.

"Well, Willie, you didn't stay until lunchtime after all," remarked his mother. "What's the matter—were you sent home?"

"Oh, no," replied Willie. "Aunt Mary just put me out on the porch and locked all the doors."

Other Views, Sizes and Prices of Vogue Patterns on Pages 66 and 67

Vogue Design No. 7438. Suit-dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 42. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 7460. "Easy-to-Make" suit; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 7481. One-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 60c.
Vogue Design No. S-4243. One-piece dress with optional pockets and scarf; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. $1.00.
Vogue Design No. 7485. "Easy-to-Make" coat; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.
Vogue Design No. S-4233. Coat; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. $1.00.

7438 7460 7481 S-4243

7485 S-4233

"It's not your face, Mom... it's your figure!"

SHOCKED by her daughter's words, she took a good look at herself—wondered if poor foundation support and droopy posture might be causing fatigue, that middle-aged look.

RELIEVED by Spencer Breast and Body Supports individually designed for her, she feels and looks years younger, thanks to the wonderful posture improvement SPENCER is famous for!

Even the younger generation recognizes SPENCER-IMPROVED posture means a lovelier, healthier YOU

So many women, young and old, have learned from happy personal experience that Spencer Individual Designing, by improving posture, helps do these things: 1. gently "lift" abdomen, back and breast, 2. provide better circulation and digestion, relief from tiring muscle strain, 3. proportion the figure to smoother, lovelier lines.

ASK YOUR DOCTOR!

Many doctors prescribe Spencer Supports to improve health by improving posture; to aid treatment of back disorders—arthritis and other chronic diseases—displaced abdominal organs—breast problems—maternity—post-operative and other conditions. Don't diagnose yourself, see your doctor about troublesome symptoms.

INDIVIDUAL DESIGNING is the secret!

Let a trained Spencer corsetiere show you, in the privacy of your home (or a Spencer Support Shop), how Spencer can help you. From her 15 or more detailed figure measurements, our talented designers will create Spencer Breast and Body Supports to help improve your posture, your poise and well-being, your looks! Spencer is guaranteed to keep its shape, which means true economy in the long run.

Write or phone for FREE information

MAIL valuable coupon below for booklet showing how Spencer can help you, personally. Or PHONE your Spencer dealer, (look in yellow pages under "Corsets," white pages under "Spencer Corsetiere" or "Spencer Support Shop"). Never sold in department stores.

Lordosis Backline Problem ☐ Breast Posture ☐ Fatigue ☐

Please send me your FREE booklet.
I have marked my figure problem at left.
(Print name and address)

MRS.
MISS _____
ADDRESS _____
CITY STATE _____

Mail to SPENCER DESIGNERS, 141 Derby Ave., New Haven 7, Conn. 9/51

Want to Make Money? No experience needed for this professional type of business — we train you. Profitable, interesting. Check for information. ☐

Canadian Address: Rock Island, Quebec

individually designed SPENCER SUPPORTS®

• FLOWERS express man's hope for everlasting peace. Their delicate beauty and fragrance shut out doubt and darkness by symbolizing the love we hold for those we've lost.

And, because we love, we grieve. But, because we have faith, we look forward to immortality. To our soul's unspoken question on these solemn occasions, flowers whisper comfortingly, "Hope!"

Because . . . like life . . . flowers flourish and fade. But there is something in their vital beauty that cannot wholly perish.

When you can't be there with those who grieve, Flowers-By-Wire carry your sympathy across the miles.

FLORISTS' TELEGRAPH DELIVERY Worldwide INTERFLORA

LOOK FOR THE FAMOUS F.T.D. MERCURY EMBLEM. IT IDENTIFIES THE RIGHT SHOPS!

FLORISTS' TELEGRAPH DELIVERY ASSOCIATION, Headquarters: Detroit, Michigan and in Sunday school they taught me Yield Not to Temptation . . . or is that in a song? Let us turn to Hymn Number 262 and stand as we sing . . . a pause . . . let us stand. And I always dropped my gloves. We sang the song, but they didn't tell me a thing about gin rickeys. A Christian must be able to say a firm no. Well, didn't I? I could have said Hell, no, and maybe that would've made more impression. Hell, no, I don't want a gin rickey. Bring me a limeade.

Bring this kid a limeade. And a wink to the waitress that meant, Spike it. Well, they did put in a slice of lime along with the gin. Now there's something to be thankful for.

So there's where my four drinks came in. No, that's just three. Where did I have the third gin rickey? I can't even remember. I can't even remember. I can't ——

An arm on her wrist. "Hey, honey, whatcha doin'? Come back in the car and sing with us."

Con leaned back against Toby's shoulder, her hair tangled and the rush of the wind still in her ears. Her brain was a little clearer, though. Enough to know that it was a darn good thing Greg was driving after all. He and Marian were singing, their voices far-off and clean and steady. Toby's bass was a lumbering elephant, clumsy and thick. His foot on the brake would be clumsy too.

College songs. . . . "Who am I? Hey! I'm a Sigma Chi! Da-de-da-de-da. Hey! Sig-a-sigma Chi!"

Con's voice cut across theirs.

I went down to the burleycue
(Phi Delta Theta for aye!)
An' who d'ya think the stripper was?
The sweetheart of Sigma Chi!

They were laughing at her. "Th'ow the girl out!" "Hey, whose side are you on, anyhow?" Warm laughter, heated by many drinks and fast young blood and a good car speeding over a good straight road. Con relaxed. Not quite so woozy now. So what, if I did drink? It's no crime, is it? Come to think of it, a gin rickey's better than a limeade. So why not drink?

Toby pulled her toward him, and this time she didn't turn away. She smelled whisky, and she saw his eyes again, cross-eyed for an instant before her own eyes shut. Then she felt his lips, hard and too heavy on hers. But the pulse beat in her throat. What the hell, what the hell, and she did not turn away.

When she did pull back she turned to the wind that was no longer salty. They were speeding . . . speeding. Too fast, Con thought. Up on the front seat Greg and Marian were sitting close, still singing fraternity songs. Lennie's husband was a Sig too. Maybe they were driving and singing too . . . but th wouldn't be starting back so early. Or wo they? No dorm hours to keep, but Jim's was at eight. Lennie and Jim could easily right in front of them . . . or right behi Speeding down the same highway, too f The coast behind them and the long wh highway before them, curling and beckon like a finger. Come, follow me. Come. .

Silly! Con reached for Toby's hand started a chorus of In the Evenin' by Moonlight, slipping up to harmonize . . . something was wrong. Somebody was She was! Ridiculous, to let a little gin aff you so that you couldn't even harmoni She tried again, wavered, gave up. I'll j follow the melody, she thought. I wonde my own voice blurred around the edges a slow.

The sudden screech of brakes drove th all to electric attention. Con peered o Marian's shoulder and saw the road bef them blocked by a confused mass of ca lights, people. Greg was pumping at brake frantically, but the green converti hurtled on, on, on, swerved to miss jumble at the bottom of the hill, and th fled free.

Con snapped her head around. Her pu had stopped, but now it was jerking in ragged beat. Behind her the red flares a the shiny metal of cars looked as bright a lurid as a carnival. She stared out the ba window, stunned. From the front seat heard an irregular gasping from Marian.

"Damn, that sobered me up," Toby s hoarsely. "Damn, that looked bad."

"It looked bad," Greg said, "and we d near made it worse. Chee-zam, your brakes

"What was it?" Toby said, even hoars "I mean, I couldn't see anything but jus bunch of nothing. But it looked pretty awfu

"Gosh, I don't know, I was thinking abo would we stop or not. Looked like about fo cars piled up. I saw two police cars."

Marian's voice came muffled. "There w somebody . . . in the road. Just lying there

"No, that was just a pile of glass and stu Clothes or something."

"It was a green scarf," said Marian. "A a person."

Con clenched her hands. She was stiff a shaking. "Well, let's be careful, Greg," s begged, "and slow down! Please, plea let's not make another one."

"Yeah, yeah. I'm all sobered up now."

The car raced on. Con stared fixedly o the window. "Greg! You haven't slow down one bit. Please." She wondered h long it would be before she was crying. S was scared, just plain yellow-coward scare She was shaking. I don't want to die and nothing but a green scarf on the highway, s

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Last Thing

By Robert P. Tristram Coffin

The hard lean farmers on our rocky farms
Did one thing that by far became them best.
It was the last they did. When their time came,
They used their own hard hillside for their rest.

Where they had sweat so much they wished to lie,
Where they had waked so late they chose to sleep.
Heaven, if 'twas so, was a foreign place;
A surer heaven was sounds of cows and sheep.

Back of barns they built, their bones should be,
By their own bees in their own apple boughs;

It would be heaven to be beside the way
A small boy built like them brought home the cows.

It would be heaven not to have to wait
Till dressed-up folks remembered them on Sunday
Thinking of sorrows and death by acres of graves;
Better by the bean patch on a Monday.

Home was first, and home should be the last.
They always suffered being away at night.
So when they had to leave the house for good,
Their stones at least were in their window light.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

wildly. I want to live, live, live. God, gained hopelessly, let me get home never get in a car with Greg again.
r drink another drop. I'll never —— y do we have to go so dadgum fast?"
Toby had said it for her. Her eyes
Toby. . . . Make him drive carefully.
im slow down! I don't want to crack ause we've got to make it to the col-twelve," Greg said. Con thought his unded too even. She wanted to kill , fine. Let's get little Marian in her o she won't get in trouble. Let's go miles an hour and not get there at all.

ot to get there at all than to be late.
e on, slow this car down, Greg. It's and I know what it'll take and it ake this speed. To hell with dorm ll get there. You just let me worry,

'll get us there."
car lurched forward even faster, and d not breathe while it hesitated an beside a long black car and then ahead. There was a funny light that inking on the front of the black car.
lt a vague fear that suddenly crys-
.
g! That's the ambulance!"
ah, I know it. So what?"
ll . . . we can't pass an ambulance. . . ."
remark, when they had just done it.
seemed wrong, a powerful black car
perhaps with death through the night, n screaming a way clear, humans inttling with shock and pain for life . . .
pass it, a green convertible, tra-la-la.
over, ambulance, we gotta make a
our. Move it on over.
With the hurtling pace. Con crouched n her corner. Her eyes glued to the er heart pounding faster and faster.
was staring at the road, too, not speak-eg was driving steadily and surely . . .
fast! Con's lips thinned in a hot anger the girl who covered her eyes in the seat. Why didn't she say "Slow
"? Was some silly college regulation so d important that it was worth en-ing four lives? I hate her, she thought, her! And then the brief anger faded, only the stark fear that made her again and again, shaky convulsive nities passed before Toby reached nd took her hand. "Cheer up, honey,"

d. "Here's the four-lane highway.
almost there."
nost, but not," Con said in a tight e'll make it," Greg drawled, "if we have a blowout."

car swung into the double lane and he fast side. So many cars, for a late y night, to be conquered by the green tible. Con caught quick glimpses of astonished faces staring at them as they flashed by. She was relaxing a little; she almost laughed.

"Must feel funny to be going seventy and see a car whiz past like you're standing still!" Funny? It was horrid. Here I am, Con, she thought, the girl who always was asking the boys to see what the old jalopy would do on a straight-away. It was the wreck that did it, she decided. The wreck, and the gin rickeys.

When Greg turned the car off the highway and swung up College Street, Con reached in her purse and flipped her comb over to Marian. "Here, do a fast job," she said. "We're almost there." When she saw Marian's drawn face, she felt a wave of compassion. Why, Marian was more afraid than I was! she realized.

And finally, unbelievably, the car stopped at the white dormitory, and Marian leaped out and ran up the stone steps to disappear through the door.

"Made it," breathed Greg through his teeth.

"Yeah, and that was too damn fast," Toby said, lighting a cigarette with apparent trouble. Con saw with amazement that his hand was shaking on the lighter. "Move over, chum," he said. "I'll take us home."

"At twenty miles an hour," Con said.

But she couldn't stop shaking, and almost before she heard the car drive away from the house, Con sank to the floor. On her knees . . . it had to be that way. As when she was a child, before trivialities like cold feet and cold floors interfered.

"God, God, thank You!" she wept over and over again. It was like the days when she and Lennie would ride the Zephyr at the carnival, or swim out too far beyond the breakers, or climb too high in the oak tree, so the ground looked miles away. "God," she would pray afterward, "thank You for keeping Lennie and me safe."

Then suddenly Con found herself leaping up, facing stark horror again. She knew with a vicious and sickening jolt why she had felt so unreasonably afraid, even after they had reached home safely. She remembered now.

Lennie, driving away early in the morning, waving through the window and calling, "You look for me, Con, and I'll look for you!" Waving and calling, with her green scarf fluttering on her head. And a green scarf under the sudden sweep of the headlights, vivid against the highway.

She fled to the phone. She fled to the phone, fumbling frantically at the dial, clutching in her incoherent mind for Lennie's number, and repeating over and over again, "But they wouldn't have started back so soon . . . they wouldn't have started back so soon . . . it couldn't be. . . ." And at last all thought slammed blank and futile against the blank and futile silence in the phone, broken now and then by an irritating, unanswered buzz.

THE LESSON OF KOREA

(Continued from Page 14)

ot the other way around—that will ep forward.
y I testify that I see and feel symptoms
h an awakening, in all the chaos and nding "ideologies" of this despairing rl? In the horror of scientists at their achievements—and in the awakening to ct that many of the observations of were not only humanly enlightened but ifically true?
The law of life is growth and change, and ng remains as it is—neither democracy, mmunism, nor ideas of liberty or au-y, nor the sway of classes or powers. We ve by the capacity to digest experience.
The speeches of our leaders have not been ing the world confidence in America's d of war. They see and speak of peace in terms of superior military force to nt and deter aggression. They present eace forces in the world through galaxies
erals and fleets of airplanes.
But generals, armies, atom bombs and d fleets of sea and air do not equate in minds of the world's people with peace.
Nor does "psychological warfare." Nor does the threat to surround any nation, Soviet or otherwise, with cordons of bases from which its industrial centers can be bombed.

What equates in the minds of the world's peoples with the passion for peace is perpetual denunciation of the fallacy of war, perpetual appeal to reason, perpetual advocacy of universal, controlled disarmament, and readiness to negotiate any issue, if necessary ad infinitum. For it is obviously better to negotiate ad infinitum than to fight ad infinitum.

What is needed are voices "above the battle" of contending "ideologies" and claims, appealing in behalf of life itself. A corpse is neither a communist nor a democrat; a heap of smoking rubble has no owners, public or private; and war is the destroyer and negator of both capitalism and socialism.

This is, it seems to me, what needs to be taught and said. All over the world people are saying it, today, to themselves. Someday they will say it out loud—and perhaps all together.

THE END

Smartly styled and lovely in glamorous satin! So soft, light and comfy you'll whip through hostess-ing duties effortlessly! PATRA—$6.00 (at top) and DORIC—$6.50, in black, scarlet, royal blue, wine, pink, heaven blue and white satin. Made with Daniel Green's Famous Long-Wearing Cushion Soles. In better stores everywhere.

Daniel Green comfy slippers

MADE BY MASTER CRAFTSMEN SINCE 1882

DANIEL GREEN MAKES "AT HOME" SLIPPERS FOR HIM TOO!

See page 91 for the Wallace Sterling Silver patterns in "Third Dimension Beauty."
Wallace Silversmiths at Wallingford, Connecticut since 1835.

for goodness' sake!

Way up in taste...way down in cost...
delicious, satisfying day-to-day family fare.

Nika Standen

Kedgeree
Tomato-and-Onion Sa
Blueberry Puddin

Have India's kedgeree steaming hot, follow with cold crisp salad

The mainstay of this dinner is kedgeree, a fine sustaining rice-and-fish dish that saw the light of day in India. Along with precious stones, tea, mangoes and curries, the English brought it home, making it not quite so hot, and much nicer, to our taste. In England, it's eaten for brunch, to hold you over until teatime, but we like it for our main meal of the day. Kedgeree is good with any kind of fish, especially smoked finnan haddie. The rice ought to be fluffy, each kernel dry, hot and golden as the noonday sun.

Kedgeree ($1.05)

One word about your fish and your rice. Since both have to be cooked again, be sure that you don't overcook in the first place. Have 1 pound cooked white fish in nice, firm flakes, 3 cups hot cooked rice in fluffy, dry grains, a little on the underdone side. Now take ¼ pound butter, melt it to a foam, which is the stage when butter is bursting with the sweetest, nuttiest flavor. Add the rice, fish and 3 hard-cooked eggs, chopped, and season with 2 teaspoons salt and ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Mix well, and see to it that each morsel is butter-coated—a fork is good for this since a fork mixes lighter than a spoon. Heat slowly, taking care that the mixture doesn't stick to the pan, and keep it fluffy, please. Eat as hot as you can, and you'll see that fish, rice, egg and butter belong together like a string quartet. Serve a tomato-and-onion salad, as red and as the kedgeree is golden.

Tomato-and-Onion Salad

Peel, drain and slice 4 tomatoes. white or Spanish onions into very slices. Arrange alternate layers of o and tomatoes in a salad bowl and sp plentifully with a light French dre Serve immediately.

Let's have something blue for de like this deep-dish blueberry pudding easiest thing in the world to mak you'll see. Penny-pinching, too, and r outstandingly good.

Blueberry Pudding

Butter 6 slices of stale bread sligh and sprinkle parsimoniously with cinn and a little grated rind of lemon. Then 3 cups fresh or frozen blueberries, ¾ sugar and ½ cup water, and boil tog for 10 minutes. If you're using canned berries, the proportions are a little d ent. If the canned blueberries are liquid, you can dispense with the wat they're on the sweet side, use less s boil not more than 5 minutes. Arrang bread and berries in alternate layers i dish you're going to serve them from. C and chill in the refrigerator for several h Serve with top milk, thin or sour cr

Spaghetti with Meat-Tomato Sauce
Tossed Green Salad
Cheese
Bowl of Fruit and Nuts

Everyone loves spaghetti. To go with it, real Italian meat sauce.

What's so good about a spaghetti dinner? Reasons rush at me like an ocean wave. Here goes—everybody likes it; old, young, plain, sophisticated, thin or plump, they like it. It's inexpensive—if you feel very poor, you don't even need meat in your tomato sauce; the cheese, without which you cannot do, gives you some protein. Can be fixed in advance—tomato sauce is better for heating up. You need very little else to go with it, best being a tossed green salad and a hunk of cheese (more protein for you), with crisp French bread or thin crackers. For dessert, if at all, a bowl of fruit and nuts.

Cook your spaghetti in a great big full of angrily boiling salted water—t what keeps it supple, yet firm. And overcook.

The tomato sauce is a standard Ita from-Italy one, simple, yet very flavo as compared with the rather heavy and plicated Italian-from-America to sauces. It cooks into the loveliest ooze you ladled on spaghetti.

Spaghetti with Meat Sauce (70

Mince 1 slice bacon, 1 small onio clove garlic (optional), 2 sprigs parsley

For hungry people—a casserole based on hamburger and its well-seasoned juices; for something chewy, add a crisp raw-vegetable salad.

…" piece celery. Fry gently and until …den in 2 tablespoons salad oil or bacon f… Add 1½ pound hamburger. Season with s… and pepper, 2 or 3 bay leaves, a pinch o…régano or thyme. Cook mixture gently f… about 8 to 10 minutes. Dilute 1 can t…ato paste with hot water until a little thicker than tomato juice. Add to meat mixture. Simmer slowly until meat is assimilated into a thick, tantalizing heap of goodness. Pour over ¾ pound freshly cooked spaghetti and serve hot with grated Parmesan or any other Italian-type cheese.

Cheese-and-Ham Soufflé
Mixed-Vegetable Salad
Bananas with Apricot Sirup

Bananas and thick apricot sirup—a happy merger for dessert.

Soufflés are little tyrants who want to be …en when they are ready—else they sit down …a despondent manner. But unlike other …ants, soufflés are good and easy to make, …d when the soufflé, tall-topped and grace-…, a lovely symphony of browns and golds, …nes in, little savory puffs of steam whet the …betite for the goodness within.

We'll have the soufflé by itself, since it's …eady a medley of flavors. Afterward, a …ll-seasoned mixed-vegetable salad of car-…s, string beans, potatoes, beets and sweet …ions, cut into strips, a few peas added, the …ole drenched with a sharp French dressing …d left to marinate in a deep bowl for an …r. Serve in little mounds of color on crisp …uce leaves. Warm cheese crackers go with …hand in hand.

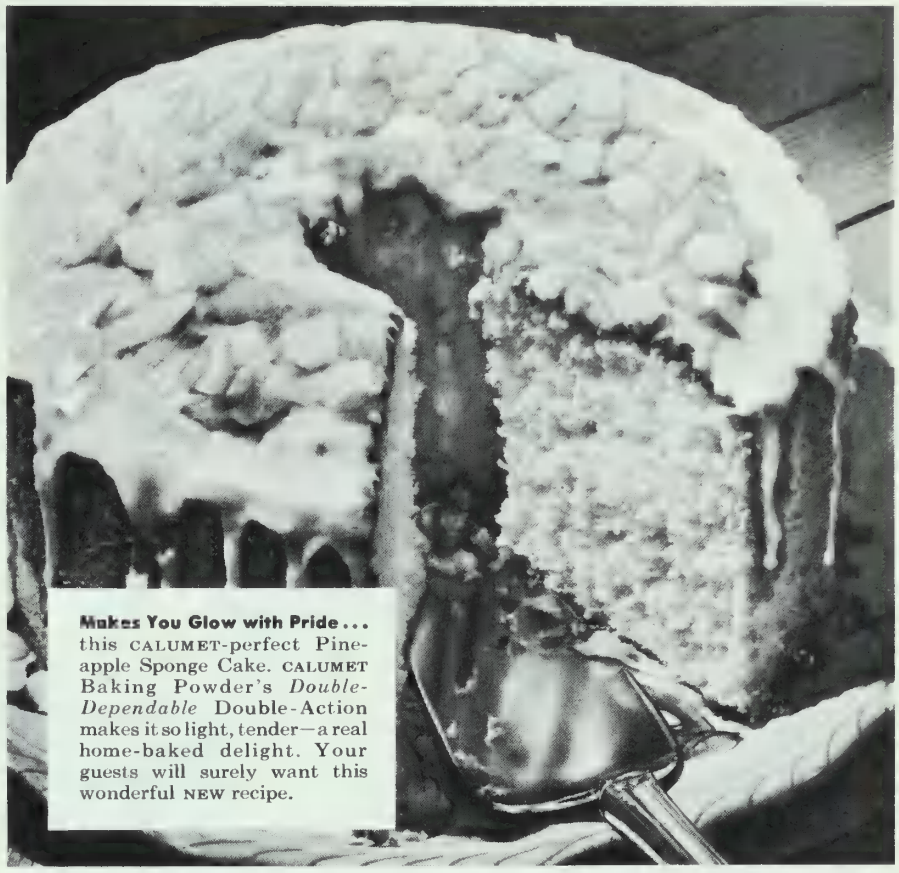
For dessert, bananas cooked in a thick …ricot sirup, a happy, happy merger indeed.

Cheese-and-Ham Soufflé (89¢)

Mix half of a 6-ounce package cooked …ow macaroni with ½ cup ground ham or …ar of ham spread, 1 cup grated Cheddar cheese, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, ½ teaspoon salt and a dash of pepper. Do it thoroughly but gently. Separate 3 eggs. Add the yolks which you've beaten until frothy. With big, leisurely strokes, fold in well-beaten egg whites. Grease a 1½-quart baking dish generously—a pretty dish, because you'll be serving it at the table. Pour the mixture into the dish, and see to it that it's evenly distributed. Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., for 40 minutes, or until puffed and golden brown.

Bananas with Apricot Sirup

Empty 1 No. 2 can apricots into a saucepan; cook fruit slowly in its own sirup till quite thick, adding sugar to taste (about 2 tablespoons). When cooked, rub through a strainer. In the same pan in which you cooked the apricots lay 3 peeled bananas, cut into halves lengthwise. Add strained apricots. Simmer as gently as you know how for 10 minutes. Turn the mixture into a pretty glass dish, taking care not to break the bananas, and serve very cold.



Boston Stew
Creamed Celery
Apple Meringue

From an Irish cook in Boston—hearty beef stew and apple meringue.

Boston stew is our main dish, and I first …et it in the home of my husband's great-…cle, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, the …raigie House on Brattle Street in Cam-…idge. A fascinating house that in the Revo-…tion served as Washington's headquarters, …nd that to this day is furnished as it was in …e poet's day. We lived in the Craigie House …r a long, cold winter, and were cooked for …y a stern Irish cook who used to look after Cousin Alice ("Grave Alice") Longfellow. Cook believed in saving money, and on chilly nights she offered us a hearty Boston stew with creamed celery (she didn't forget the nutmeg in the cream sauce) followed by an apple meringue.

Boston Stew (85¢)

Peel and wash 4 big potatoes, 4 big onions, 4 carrots, and cut them into

Makes You Glow with Pride . . . this CALUMET-perfect Pineapple Sponge Cake. CALUMET Baking Powder's Double-Dependable Double-Action makes it so light, tender—a real home-baked delight. Your guests will surely want this wonderful NEW recipe.

IMAGINE—NEW 4-EGG RECIPE FOR

"Tropical Delight"

PINEAPPLE SPONGE CAKE

Chosen from 63,000 recipes to be the CALUMET Cake-of-the-Month

Pineapple Sponge Cake

2 cups sifted Swans Down Cake Flour
4 eggs
¼ teaspoon salt
1½ cups sugar
1 cup hot pineapple juice
2 teaspoons CALUMET Baking Powder
1 teaspoon vanilla
Confectioners' Sugar Glaze
½ cup canned crushed pineapple, well drained

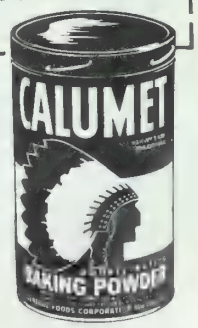
Note: One of the secrets of a really successful cake is to follow the recipe word for word. It is unwise to substitute any of the ingredients called for. For example, use only the baking powder recommended—CALUMET. Yes, more published recipes specify CALUMET than any other brand of baking powder. That's because CALUMET is not only Double-Acting but Double-Dependable, too . . . first in the mixing bowl and later in the oven CALUMET gives just the right amount of leavening. And that double dependability insures glorious results for your baking . . . cakes with that real home-made goodness, feathery-light biscuits, wonderful muffins, waffles, pancakes, coffee cake. No wonder CALUMET is America's Quality Baking Powder. . .

TWICE AS MANY WOMEN USE CALUMET AS ANY OTHER BAKING POWDER

Method. Sift flour once, measure, and sift again. Beat eggs and salt together until thick and light colored. Then add sugar gradually, beating constantly. Add 1½ cups of the flour, alternately with the hot pineapple juice, beating well after each addition. Combine remaining flour and CALUMET Baking Powder and sift over batter; beat in thoroughly. Add vanilla; blend.

Baking. Turn batter into ungreased 9-inch tube pan. Bake in moderate oven (375°F.) 40 minutes, or until done. Remove from oven, invert pan, and let stand one hour, or until cake is cool.

Frosting. Make Confectioners' Sugar Glaze by combining 1 cup sifted confectioners' sugar with 1 tablespoon water. Spread on top of cake and let dribble down the sides. Garnish top of cake with a ring of the drained crushed pineapple.



If desired, Pineapple Whipped Cream Topping may be substituted for the glaze and crushed pineapple. To make Topping, whip 1 cup heavy cream until cream will hold its shape. (Do not overbeat.) Sweeten to taste, then fold in ½ cup drained canned crushed pineapple. Spread on top and sides of cake or use as a sauce on slices of the cake.

Note: One No. 2 can crushed pineapple will give sufficient juice and drained pineapple for this cake.

CALUMET BAKING POWDER

DOUBLE-ACTING

A Product of General Foods

"M-M-M-M-M! darling, that's coffee!"

Hot from the COMPLETELY AUTOMATIC

MIRRO-MATIC ELECTRIC PERCOLATOR

• The stimulating fragrance of hot coffee perking in the pot will please your husband every day and delight your guests on party days.

Coffee "Experting" Is Easy

Really good, hot coffee is a pleasure you can give your family and your friends with less trouble than it takes to make a pitcher of ice water! MIRRO-MATIC asks nothing of you. None of your time. No attention. No practice or skill. You simply put in enough coffee and cold water for four to eight cups, and plug it in. Without watching or timing, it perks to the very peak of aroma and flavor. Then, at the instant of perfection, it automatically changes to low heat and holds the full-bodied brew drinking-hot till you want it.

Once you have a MIRRO-MATIC in your home, you'll wonder how you ever got along without its businesslike efficiency, its classic beauty, and its happy way of making your husband say, "M-m-m-m! Darling, that's coffee!"

ONLY $12.95 (West, 13.95) 8-cup, with cord, Fed. Tax Included at department, hardware and housefurnishing stores, wherever dealers sell the finest aluminum.

ALUMINUM GOODS MANUFACTURING COMPANY • MANITOWOC, WISCONSIN WORLD'S LARGEST MANUFACTURER OF ALUMINUM COOKING UTENSILS

MIRRO-MATIC PRESSURE PAN 4-qt. 12.95 6-qt. 17.45
MIRRO COOKY PRESS 16 pieces 2.95
MIRRO EGG POACHER 3-egg size 1.60
MIRRO THE FINEST ALUMINUM
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
MIRRO TEA KETTLE 5-qt. 4.25
MIRRO DOUBLE BOILER 1½-qt. 2.45
MIRRO TUBED CAKE PAN 1½ cups egg whites 1.75
MIRRO BROILER 15x10⅞x2" 2.75
MIRRO COOK BOOK 304 pages 2.00
Prices slightly higher in west cubes. Cut ½ pound round steak into 1" cubes. Brown meat on both sides in 2 tablespoons shortening. Take your nicest oven-proof dish or casserole, and place alternate layers of meat and vegetables. Season each layer with salt and pepper. Add about 2 cups hot water or consommé made with bouillon cubes, and cover tightly. Now into a moderate oven, 350° F., with it, to cook until tender—about 2½ hours.

Apple Meringue

Make 2 cups very thick applesauce; sweeten and flavor it with either 1 teaspoon grated lemon rind or a dash of cinnamon and ground cloves. Pour into a baking dish from which you'll serve the dessert. Beat the whites of 2 eggs until stiff with 6 tablespoons sugar, just as you would any meringue. Spread this meringue over the applesauce, and bake it in a slow oven (300° F., 20 minutes) until faintly golden. Serve cold.

Eggs Parmentier
Mushroom Salad
Fudge Cake

If you like to know, any dish "Parmentier" means it has potatoes in its make-up, because a foresighted man by the name of Parmentier introduced potatoes into France. Class dismissed.

We'll dispense with vegetables and, instead, go in for mushroom salad, which you'll make a few hours before serving. Maybe you haven't had it before—but I'll make a wager that you'll have it over and over again, especially when men are around.

I'd like a moist, dark, evil fudge cake for dessert, being a girl who thinks it's the only way to eat chocolate. With little frosting, please—no more than a thin layer of glazed chocolate sirup flavored with almond extract.

Eggs Parmentier (69c)

Place 3 cups hot, thick, mashed potatoes in a shallow greased baking dish, and do a neat, even job of it. With a spoon, make 4 depressions in the potato. Break an egg carefully into each depression. If you're not too experienced a cook, I'd suggest you break each egg into a cup first and then slide it onto the potatoes. Cover everything with ¾ cup heavy cream. Season with salt and pepper. Sprinkle with paprika, and dot with butter or margarine. Bake in a hot oven, 425° F., for about 15 minutes, or until just very slightly browned and eggs are just set. Serve hot, eat hot, and smack your lips.

Mushroom Salad

For four people, you'll need about ½ to ¾ pounds mushrooms. Cut off the withered ends of the stems, wash quickly under running water, drain, slice. Place in a deep dish, cover with a French dressing made from 2 parts lemon juice and 3 parts salad oil. Season with salt and pepper, and mix well. Chill. Before serving, drain off some of the liquid you'll find in the bowl—it's the water from the mushrooms that the French dressing has released. Serve in little mounds on lettuce leaves.

Rice-Hamburger Casserole
Radish-Cauliflower Salad
Fruit Tartlets

Rice is for hungry folks, and here's a rice hamburger casserole I evolved when meat was rationed during the last war. My husband taught college then, and the house was always full of students, who were not only hungry, but also bored with the school's food. Dear boys, whatever trouble I took feeding them was amply compensated by the hours of baby-sitting, dish washing and errand running—I never enjoyed so many movies, and I declare that college students make the best household help. Here is one of their favorite dishes.

Rice-Hamburger Casserole (93c)

Cook 2 onions, minced, and 1 clove garlic (optional) in 5 tablespoons butter until soft and golden, taking care not to brown. Remove garlic. Add ½ pound hamburger and cook until almost done, preventing it from caking by tossing it with two forks. Season with 2 teaspoons salt and a dash of pepper, and you can add a pinch of marjoram or orégano—two herbs that flatter this dish as a spring bonnet flatters you. Mix with 3 cups cooked rice, taking care to use up all the meat juices, or else you'll leave much of the flavor behind. Add 1 cup cooked peas and 1 No. 2 can tomatoes and mix well. Pour into greased baking dish, sprinkle with 3 tablespoons grated cheese. Bake in hot oven, 450° F., for about 20 minutes or until piping hot.

Since rice-hamburger casserole is a dish that offers much to the taste buds, but little to the teeth, I suggest a salad that's sharp in texture and color contrast.

Radish-Cauliflower Salad

Trim a bunch of radishes, wash, dry and slice fine into rounds. Divide a small cauliflower into tiny flowerets; wash and dry, using a clean towel. Place flowerets in salad bowl neatly, because untidy salads don't taste really fresh and crisp. Now take your rosy-hued radish rounds and arrange them attractively over the flowerets to please the eye and tickle the palate. Dress with a plain French dressing and season.

For dessert, I suggest fruit tartlets made with peaches, plums, cherries or any fruit you have in your refrigerator. Since I—and almost everybody else—like my desserts rich, let's imitate the French and liven up our tartlets with a layer of vanilla pudding under the fruit. My, such goodness!

Fruit Tartlets

Make and bake tart shells according to your favorite recipe. When cold, fill with a layer of packaged vanilla pudding which you've made following directions. Drain fruit well. Fill tartlets with sliced peaches or a peach half, cherries, plums, apricots or what have you. Finish off with a dab of whipped cream to which you added a drop or two of vanilla.

Each recipe serves 4. THE END

Feet, be Disciplined

By Helen Harrington

Man will betray his love the way he bends
Above a woman; woman will reveal
In the way she moves beside him how they feel.
Though skillfully the cautious heart defends
Its secret, though cunningly the eye pretends
Indifference, though firm intention seal
The lips and all their glances steel
To coldness, a subtle alchemy blends
Their love and their desire to fluid motion
Expressive as the waves upon the ocean
Of compelling currents, unplumbed depths. Beware,
Man who would hide your love; watch how you lean
Toward her as if endowing her with green
And glowing sapphires. If you would not declare
Too soon your passion, woman, then forbear
To stand as if an irresistible wind
Inclined you to him. Feet, be disciplined
To walk as if you did not tread on air!

CARRY-ON-JOHNNY

(Continued from Page 43)

n's garage. And she could handle any en the Prima Donna, as well as Bill
f.

lly, she wasn't feeling either lonely or
l. Only a little keyed up. It was the and knowing how Johnny felt. She him out of the stream of dancers
g smoothly through the light like gay-l fish in an aquarium—Johnny in his hite dinner jacket with a carnation in tonhole and his cheek pressed to Diana
's cheek. (Diana in something white immering with no shoulder straps in the nd, to Liz, rather startling fashion.)
and Johnny weren't exactly engaged.
an understanding which went back to kindergarten days when Diana had a sort of fairy-tale little girl. Now she ne Debutante of the Year with her pic-n the society-news columns. A radiant
e.

nny would sit on Liz's desk and show
ne cuttings and talk a blue streak, ress of Liz, who was trying to make out onthly bills. He seemed to like to hang d, in vacation time, talking and some-lending a hand with this and that.
e, having lost his mother, too, and with others and sisters, he was sort of lone-
It would be different now. Once in a he might stop by to say "Hullo." t it was one thing to be a six-foot kid in ck Prep School, where they guaranteed

m even Johnny so full of education he'd the college board. A Stanton freshman omething else—a man with a man's life
d. When he graduated he'd go into his
's Wall Street office and become a big nd marry Diana. Well, so long, Johnny.
een nice knowing you. Good luck. Good hing. You're a good guy. You deserve it.
now the music had worked down into
eet. She began to dance, irrepressibly, little girl. Bill Somers came out of his n to take notice.

Want a partner, Liz?"

e stopped at once. She said coldly, "I ust having fun," and turned and stalked,
s in her jeans pockets and her head up,
the tree-shaded avenue. She was whis-to the tag end of the fox trot, just to someone, maybe herself, that she didn't a darn.

ve Gifford had made up a bridge four
Mr. and Mrs. Foster and Hardy Mer-
They sat in the brown, book-lined li-
, just within pleasant hearing of the and under the radiant portrait of ny's mother. (It had been painted soon her marriage, by a famous painter who,
rd suspected not without tolerant amuse-, had fallen in love with her.) Then ny had been born and she had died.

tween hands Clive Gifford glanced up
e grave, charming face—a baffled, frown-ook. If she had lived he might have d out what, if anything, lay behind that drawn sadness. Perhaps nothing. He'd ys known, of course, that she wasn't
r. She'd known it herself. When he'd d her out of her dreaming silences she d say simply, "I've nothing to say,
." But with the servants or some neighne'd heard her chirping like a bird let out cage into the free sunlight. It had made obscurely angry.

hnny took after her—except that her loveliness had been somehow translated a boyish homeliness. Thank heaven, at he had the Gifford build. He was big husky. If he hadn't cracked up his knee at wild, misjudged tackle, he might, one have made the Stanton team. The Gif-s, for generations, had been great ath-
s. There was a standing Stanton joke the Trophy Room in the gym belonged hem. Clive himself had been a star back whose record, in his last year, had bee almost a legend. A Phi Beta Kappa too. Well, it was a bitter, disappoint-business. He arranged his cards delibely.

"Two no trumps ——"

"Three hearts ——"

Hardy Merrick glanced across at his partner's handsome, moody face. He and Clive Gifford had graduated together—rivals for top honors rather than friends. But he knew how the other man was feeling. The astute realization of what a successful alumnus would pay to get a dim-wit son into his alma mater had given birth to the Merrick Prep School. It was, Merrick knew, almost notoriously successful. Getting Johnny Gifford over the hurdles might even rank as a sort of top-notch academic scandal. Whether Johnny would stay the course was something else, and out of Merrick's hands. Poor Johnny. A nice kid. But even the decimal system had almost floored him. Merrick took a glass from the proffered tray and raised it.

"To Johnny!" he said. "May he continue to follow in his old man's footsteps."

"Thanks." Perhaps Gifford suspected a subtle gibe. He had sounded curt—almost aggressive. He plunged quickly. "Four no trumps ——"

JOHNNY danced well. You hardly noticed his faint limp, which was much more noticeable when he walked. Diana rested lightly in his arms. She wondered whether Clarissa, her classmate at Smith who was dancing with Mark Hanley, envied her. Johnny was no world-beater—just strong, upstanding and so steadily in love he made you feel rather uncomfortably like a household fixture. (A cradle-to-the-grave affair, without a dash of uncertainty, might become distinctly wearing.) Johnny was a year behind her on the graduation road, owing to that crushed kneecap. Though what his kneecap had to do with his bullethead and contents, she didn't know. It meant that she would have to wait around on the side lines for him—which wouldn't be in the least funny. Boys didn't care so much for dating girls who were already, as it were, bespoken. However, she'd promised. And the Giffords had stacks of money. Mrs. John Gifford would have all the fun there was.

"Happy?" he whispered to her.

"Sure."

"I am. You know, I was plenty scared. I didn't think I'd made it. It would have broken dad's heart."

"What about breaking mine?" She pulled back a little to smile up at him. She always said what she knew people wanted to hear. It cost nothing even if it didn't mean much. She'd been voted the Most Popular Girl. She felt his deep shuddering sigh of gratitude.

"I'd like to think I could—break it, I mean."

"Don't ever try, sugar."

"I never shall."

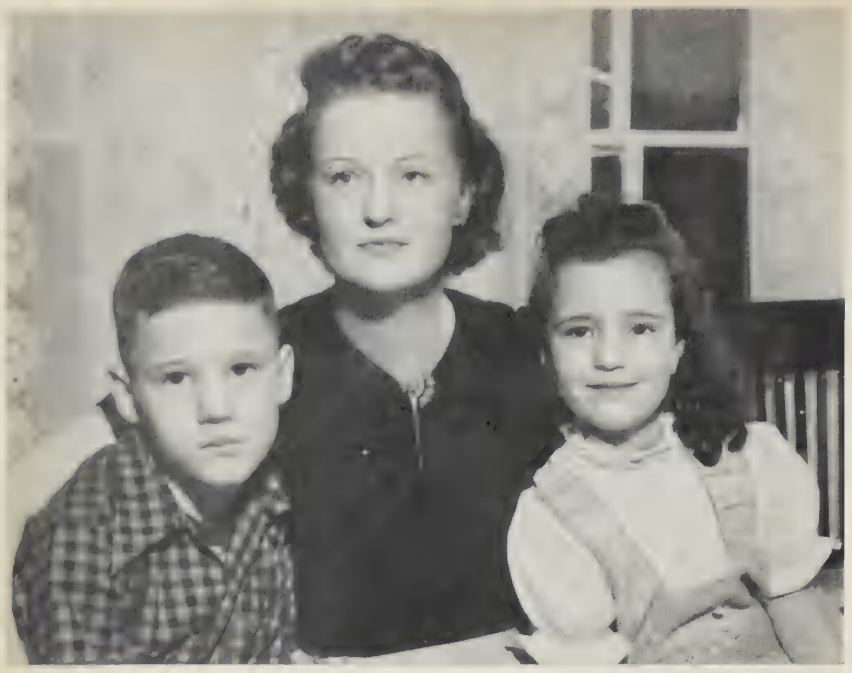
He wouldn't—ever. With Mark Hanley, now, you'd never be so sure. Life would be day-to-day adventure. On the other hand, he hadn't a bean or even the hope of one.

II

TWO minutes to go. The best that Stanton could hope for was a tie. And Jeffrey, the Stanton captain, had just fumbled an easy forward pass. The groan from Stanton's side sounded as though it had been torn out of the bowels of the earth.

Johnny, huddled at his father's side, the bitter east wind in his aching face, knew just how he felt. Clive Gifford was near to angry tears. He was remembering his own last game—those three last, glorious, historic touchdowns. If only Johnny could have growled at him from behind clenched teeth, "Just wait till I get going, dad." He never would.

For a moment the fast-moving scene below him dissolved. He was back on Merrick Field. He was hearing his dad shout to him, "Carry on, Johnny." He'd known all that that challenge meant in pride and hope. And he'd done his desperate, disastrous best. He'd tried too hard. When they'd carried him off the field the coach had said bitterly, "What d'you think you are, Supermouse, or a flying



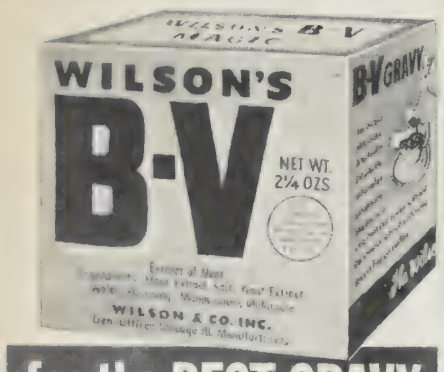
"Oh! Oh! OREO!"

Search high and low, you'll never find a cookie with the creamy filling of OREO CREME SANDWICH! You'll never find yummier cookies than all the triumphs from NABISCO, Cookie Headquarters! They make the favorites you love—best! Look for the red NABISCO seal, always!

You can't see flavor but you know it's there when you see the red NABISCO seal

Praises Dry Yeast's Speed

Farmwife is Prize-winning Cook



Fifty-two prizes in 3 years—that's the impressive record set by prize-cook Mrs. Joseph J. Rizzo. This Cedar Falls, Iowa farmwife is the busy mother of three children, including twins Peter and Paula (above). Yet she finds time to enter and win both State and County Fair Contests. Her latest triumph came at the 1950 State Fair where she won eight prizes in three different classifications.

Like so many top cooks, Mrs. Rizzo has one favorite yeast—Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast. "It's so fast—and easy to use," she says. "I depend on this grand dry yeast for prize-winning results."

Everybody loves it—that deliciously different flavor of yeast-raised treats. So good to eat—so good for you, too. When you bake at home—do it with yeast—the very best yeast. Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast is so fast rising, so easy to use—and always dependable! Buy a supply. You'll like it!

CASH MONEY! Women wanted to forward new and renewal subscriptions for the Ladies' Home Journal, The Saturday Evening Post, Holiday, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill and Other Popular publications. Big Cash Commissions. Devote spare time or full time.
CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, 644 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

PROTECT YOUR STOVE TOP
ARISTO-MATS
INSIST ON THE GENUINE • ACCEPT NO SUBSTITUTES

for the BEST GRAVY you ever tasted

B-V GRAVY
Blend 2 tbsp. fat or drippings with 2 tbsp. flour. Gradually stir in 1 cup water or milk. Mix smooth, cook and stir to gravy thickness. Add and dissolve 1 tsp. Wilson's B-V. Result: the best gravy you've ever tasted and enough for three.
Extra nice with potatoes, bread or rice.

saucer?" And his dad had said, "Bad luck!" but in a flat, colorless sort of voice. They both knew it wasn't bad luck—just rotten bad play. But no one knew how hard he'd tried.

His father stood up. "All over but the shouting." He was thinking, too, of that last game. That his son should have cracked himself up for the sake of a silly schoolboy tussle, which didn't matter one way or another, seemed an unforgettable stupidity. But there it was—his only son was a fool.

They made their way in bleak, awkward silence through the milling crowds back to Main Street. They didn't know what to say to each other. At the corner of Park the man stopped short. He tried his best, Johnny knew, to sound casual and friendly.

"I guess I'll turn into the club, Johnny."

So now he was alone. Nowhere much to go. By rights, he ought to get back to his quarters and his books. But at the very thought of them his head began to ache again. Instead he drifted down a side alley to the Hipps garage, where Liz would have been listening in and feeling bad too. And there she was, at her desk, just where he had placed her. The sight of her comforted him a little. Her eyes under the straight brows were the clear brown of chestnuts. They matched her hair. She narrowed them a little, as though against the light, or as though she didn't want him to see what was shining in them—maybe tears too.

"Licked," Johnny said. "Dad almost bawled."

It was always his dad, Liz thought indignantly. The man might have been the boy, so easily hurt that Johnny had to take care of him, ease him over the bumps, make up to him for his disappointments—even in Johnny himself.

"He's so darned proud of the old place," Johnny muttered. "He's part of it. I've got to be part of it, too, or bust."

"Sure. You will."

"I dunno. Maybe I'll just bust. Dean Potter had me on the carpet. He doesn't like Merrick's hand-stuffed babies. He sort of warned me to put my best foot forward pronto—or else."

"What else?"

"Flunk out."

"You won't ——"

He sighed. He was still wrapped up in his topcoat. He didn't seem to know that he was steaming with heat and discomfort. "I ought to be cramming right now—instead of cluttering up this place. I guess you wonder sometimes why I do."

She bent her head over her books. "You don't clutter. But I've wondered."

"It's queer. I guess it goes back to that summer after my smash, when dad sent me to that Montana ranch for tutoring. I couldn't do what those other kids did—ride and hike and all that. It was sort of lonesome. So I'd take my jalopy and mosey over to the filling station on the highroad. A nice old guy owned it—called Pop Earnest—and he let me sort of work around. Sometimes there was a repair to do, or a flat to fix. Small stuff. But I got sort of handy. I'd look forward to slipping over. It was like going somewhere where I belonged—like going home." He dug his hands into his pockets. His face couldn't have been redder than it was already. But his voice had a suspicious croak in it. "When he saw me coming the old boy used to yell out, 'Hiyer, son,' just as though he were sort of pleased ——"

"So we make you think of Pop Earnest," Liz said. "That's nice. That's swell."

She sounded so unexpectedly testy that he grinned at her. When he grinned he wasn't homely. At least he was good to look at. His eyes were an honest, kindly blue.

"Now I've made you mad. It sort of suits you, Liz. I'm sorry though. I'm enough to make an angel hop. Always blowing my top and grousing about myself. Forget it. What say we take off and have a malted together?"

"No can do, Johnny." But she so mollified. "I've a heap of bills to mal A big one for the Prima Donna. She's dock right now."

"Let's take a gander."

At any rate she could and would d much. They stuck their heads like h birds pecking at grain into the huge a bewildering interior. From the othe Liz's father lifted a grimy, exasperated

"The old hellion's got me this tim snorted. "Can't tell what ails her."

Johnny came up presently with a wire and the familiar smudge on his Jim Hipps grunted.

"You sure have a way with you. Any you want a job, son, it's right here waiti you."

They all laughed. And Johnny steam looking like a huge gray bear on the tra a kill and feeling much better.

From his dormitory he rang long dist But Diana wasn't to be found. It matter. She was somewhere. She'd wai one day soon he'd catch up with her—ever she was. He'd start off right, putti nose into those darned books.

III

They fluttered down from the express the Stanton platform like a flock of colored birds. alertly waiting dogs set on snatching at their cases or giving t vigorously as quarry hove in The haggard-lo young man with brown-haired gi jeans gazed about wildly.

"Maybe she m the connection. Maybe she's not comi

"Why shouldn't she?" Liz snapped.

She nearly added that Diana Foster w have to break a leg to miss a Founders' N Prom. But she was trying hard not t nasty. Besides, she had her own busine attend to. She'd brought the Prima Do fresh from an overhaul, to meet Johnny ther and some old classmates, and unles could thumb a ride back she'd have to w Johnny had his sports convertible, prese to him by his Wall Street tycoon uncle o occasion of his making Stanton, an course he'd ask her to come along Diana—if he thought of it. But apart the fact that she'd rather walk, he was l ing too distraught to think clearly about thing. It was queer, Liz reflected, tryin be unconcerned, how a young man neatly even nattily dressed in sports clothes c look as though he'd been pulled throug bush backward. And he hadn't been ro to the Hipps Motor Works for days. W was queer too. Not that she hadn't expe it—but not that suddenly, not as tho something important had snapped sc where.

Watching him, she saw his face clea some of its anguish. He waved and shou "Hullo there!" and raced down the platf toward the golden head flashing like a bea light on the surface of a turbulent ri (When he ran his lameness became more dent. He lurched a little.) Liz croaked a him, "Have a wonderful time, Johnny!" of course he did not hear her. He'd got h of Diana's suitcase and with the other h he was clutching her arm as though the li spring breeze might blow her out of his yea ing sight.

"Oh, gosh, Di, I thought you'd run out me."

She walked passively beside him. She w dered if Mark were around somewhere. might not have a bean. But he was fun. could put in a good time with him. You co mark time. She giggled at her private li joke and became more aware of Johnny. was hurting her arm. He was so desperat tiresomely in earnest that he made her fee hot and bothered and almost cross.

"Is it true, Johnny, what you wrote m "Sure."

(Continued on Page 222)

WITH THE CHILDREN

"I don't like you to ask me to make promises, but it is all right for you to ask me to try to do something, it makes doing easier."

"My mother is the bestest bakercaker in the world."

—KATHRYN COFFEY GLENNON.

Internationally renowned Hotels

USE THE FAVORITE RANGE OF FAMOUS CHEFS

Magic Chef

GAS RANGE

A FEW OF THE MANY HOTELS THAT FEATURE Magic Chef COOKING:

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN • BILTMORE • BOCA RATON
CHASE • GREENBRIER • SAXONY • ST. MORITZ
STATLER HOTELS • SIR FRANCIS DRAKE • SHAMROCK TERRACE PLAZA • WALDORF ASTORIA

meals that appeal are easy with these EXCLUSIVE FEATURES

YOU'LL LOVE TO BROIL

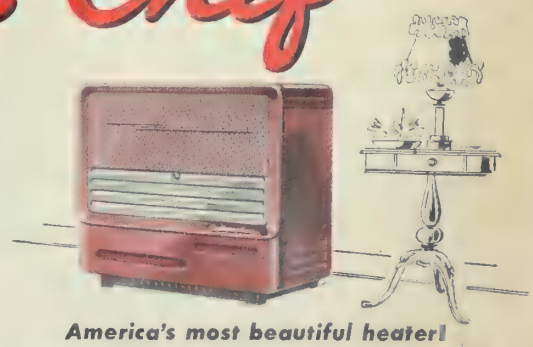
on this waist-high broiler! No stooping. Swing-out door prevents spattering. Lifts out for easy cleaning.

BAKE WITH CONFIDENCE

in the Magic Chef oven controlled by the famous Red Wheel Regulator! Accurate to the degree—set it, forget it!

IT'S FUN TO CLEAN

Magic Chef top burners. Just lift them out in ONE piece for easy cleaning at your sink!



AMERICAN STOVE COMPANY — Magic Chef — 50 — GOLDEN JUBILEE

wherever food's the finest it's cooked on.. Magic Chef

At the world's renowned hotels, famed restaurants, leading airlines—wher*ever* food's the finest—you find Magic Chef. It belongs in YOUR kitchen too—to turn out the most flavorful meals your family has ever enjoyed. See the new Magic Chef and all its time and money-saving features today. For use with city, "Pyrofax" or other bottled and tank gases. In most areas, priced from $139.95

AMERICAN STOVE COMPANY, ST. LOUIS 10, MO., U.S.A.

America's most beautiful heater!

Looks like a TV set, floods the room with clean, even gas or oil heat. Priced from $64.95 more women cook on Magic Chef than on any other range

(Continued from Page 220)

"I thought it might be a sort of joke."

"It isn't that funny."

"What are you going to do?"

"I dunno. Not yet. Of course Uncle George is out. Even his office boys have to be Stanton grads. But, Di"—he was almost pleading—"we'll make out somehow. We've got each other."

She released herself gently. Mark hove into sight, looking, not too ardently, for his own girl. She waved gaily and he wolf-called back to her.

"Be seeing you tonight, Mark."

"You bet your life, baby."

Hipps' garage stayed open till the small hours on Founders' Night. There were always cars that had to be salvaged from convivial, head-on encounters or that had turned lightheartedly into driveways that weren't there. From where she sat at her desk Liz could hear the dance music from the hall like the murmur of a far-off sea. She tried not to tap her foot to its rhythm or to think of anything but the pile of bills in front of her. When she looked up and saw Johnny she was sure, for a moment, that she was just imagining him. But then she would never have imagined him in white tie and tails—the only permissible outfit for Founders' Night—so elegant and yet so gray-faced and battered-looking that she stood up as though he might collapse into her arms.

He gave a sort of laugh. "It's okay. I just didn't seem to have anywhere else to go. Mind if I sit down?"

He hunched himself on her desk. But he didn't fold his arms or kick his heels after his usual casual fashion. He was like a tired runner who'd been licked after a long race.

"I've flunked out," he said. "Yes—that's it. Dean Potter told me days ago. They've stretched all the points they could—for dad's sake—just in hopes I'd make a last touchdown. But of course I didn't. I've told Di. She—she was swell about it. But she says she can't wait forever and of course that's right. Dead right. So there I am, Liz. I'm ditched." He pushed his hand through his thick, rough hair. He couldn't tell her about his dad—about that aloof acceptance of disaster, that brief, impersonal reflection, "Well, I suppose we might push you through some small Middle Western college." He stumbled on hurriedly. "I've tried to enlist. But the way the Army looks at me I'm a cripple, and the A. F. thinks I'm color blind." He gave his high-pitched laugh again. "I'm Clive Gifford's son and I don't rate a nickel."

Liz began, "You rate ——" but stopped herself. He wasn't listening. In any case, what she thought wouldn't rate a nickel either.

He stumbled on. "I didn't know her. But I guess I'm like my mother. I heard someone say once, 'Beautiful, of course, but dumb.' I wasn't meant to hear. But I nearly barged in and took a poke at the lot of them. But you can't take a poke at your own aunts, can you?"

"It's not often done," Liz admitted.

"Anyhow, that goes for me too—except that I'm not beautiful."

He sat there, lost in his own thoughts. Last commencement Stanton had given its distinguished alumnus, Clive Gifford, an honorary degree. In his splendid academic robes he'd been the handsomest figure in the procession and his son, sitting on the side lines, had almost burst with pride. Well, now he was on the side lines for keeps. It was queer that a young man who had such trouble with the simplest equations should understand so well how the older man felt. It was as though his own nerves had been stripped bare and ached with Clive Gifford's bitterness and disappointment. A father whose son couldn't carry on for him hadn't any future. He was a sort of dead end. When Johnny saw his father glance up at the glowing girl's portrait and the ironic twist of the proud mouth, he understood that too.

Johnny slipped off the desk. He did something so unexpected that it left Liz breathless and speechless. He bent over and kissed her gently on either cheek.

"Thanks for everything, Liz. It's h swell knowing you."

IV

Jim Hipps told her. It wasn't easy. She Johnny had grown up together, as kids d small towns, even if they don't live on same side of the railway tracks. They together. They drink their sodas at the dr store side by side. Even after they're gr up and gone their different ways they ne quite forget each other. Jim guessed that would take it hard.

"They've found the poor kid's car," said. "It was left standing by the ri
They're dragging it now."

She didn't take it in any way that h expected. She simply closed her account b with an indignant snap and blew out of office as though, her father thought, all were after her.

The Prima Donna had had a minor t trum. Liz eased her out of the repair sh and drove her home. Though the spring d had set in, there were no lights showing the Gifford house. It looked not so much mourning but as though for a long time had been left deserted. The front door st open, so there was nothing to stop her.
sides, nothing could have stopped her. Sh never been inside the house before. But knew it as Johnny knew it. The library wo be to the right of the great hall. She fores its somber, book-lined luxury, and the over the carved-oak mantelpiece, her f loveliness, her look of innocent young s row—even the look of Johnny in the b eyes, fixed on the distance as though she w waiting for something wonderful to happ or for someone who never came. The l sunlight rested benignly on the gentle face that it seemed to shine with an inner brig
ness of its own.

From where she stood at first Liz could see the man hunched between the wings
the big high-backed chair. But she flair him as a big-game hunter flairs his quar
She was out to get him. She could take h time.

She came away from the door and sto squarely opposite him, and he stared back her with bleak indifference as though not ing mattered or could surprise him any mo
His face was gray and hard-set. His han clenched on the chair arms, were bloodle Somehow they reassured her. At least th made her hate him less.

"I've brought back that crazy car of you
Mr. Gifford," she said, "and I want to ask question of you."

He raised himself to ask one of his ow
"You're Jim Hipps' daughter, aren't you

"That's me," she told him. "'Liz' to m friends."

"Well, whoever you are and whatev you want to know, you might have te phoned ——"

"I might. But you might not have a swered." She settled herself more firmly her tracks. "What's that Montana ran where you sent Johnny with his bust knee to watch other kids having a goo
time?"

He was too startled—too stung by t suddenness and audacity of the attack realize that he was actually answering he
"If you mean the Lazy Bar B Ranch Great Falls ——" He cut himself short. "I cidentally, he wasn't sent there for a goo time. He was meant to study. What he di God only knows."

"Maybe he tried to find a way to live she said absently—"his way." She seeme for the moment, to have forgotten the ma opposite her, to have brushed him out of h consciousness. She stood at ease, her han loose-clasped behind her back, looking up that other girl. She talked about her, almo to herself. "Johnny said she was lovely. S was too. And she wasn't dumb either. S knew a lot of things—different things—lik Johnny. I guess you made her feel she wa just too dumb to live. I guess she was unhappy she was damn glad to quit."

He had a violent impulse to stand up—t take this slender, incredible girl by the shou ders and thrust her out of sight. Sitting the put him at a disadvantage—gave him a furiating sense of being at her t he was too proud to move. He o say coldly:

re an outrageously impertinent man and your language is a dis-
"
ld be worse," she told him—"a worse. I'm holding myself in."
night at least have the decency to
——"
hat they're dragging the river?"
scornful eyebrows at him. "What ny isn't there. Johnny wouldn't not that way." She came an aggresloser to him. She'd given up holdf in. "Besides, what do you care, rd? You don't really give a damn.
ke that painted-up, two-timing, ng blonde. You never cared a whoop nny—not the real Johnny. You nted to know what sort of guy he , or what he wanted. He had to be wanted—Carry-on-Johnny—so you're dead folks'll say, 'Rememuy who made those three touche last game in 1920—the guy they e best-dressed, smartest, mostest year? Well, that's Johnny, his son, ng image of him ——'"
ut!" he growled at her. "You must
"
razy. Just hopping mad. I've been for a long time. Now I'm going to 'm through. . . . So there was the hnny had to be clever like you—but ust clever like himself. He had to like you—and he busted his leg he poor dumb cluck wanted so ter-please you—to make you proud of d say, 'Liz, if I don't make the grade
k dad's heart.'"
id that?" The man's voice sounded subdued—a little rough around
s.
he did. I'd want to slap him."
you?"

ook her head. She said rather wistou do think I'm a hellion, don't you?
metimes. But I don't hurt people—I ople I ——" She broke off, and then with renewed fierceness. "You keep nds off him too. He's not your sort.
r will be. He's better. He's good and d honest. He knows what makes
ick. He's worth a world of cockeyed shirts."
nan murmured, "Aren't you being ude?"
doing my best. I guess I've done it.
en rude to Johnny's father. He'd rgive me ——" She advanced upon reateningly. "If ever you tell
—"
n't ever. I dislike extremely being . The encounter," Clive Gifford rmally, "rests a profound secret be-ou and me, Miss Hipps."

She cocked a doubtful head at him. Something had happened. The gray, stony face had color in it. It seemed to be breaking up into new lines. She had an uneasy feeling that the enemy had shifted his ground—that he was stalking her.

"Well—thanks," she said.

She swung on her heel and now he stood up, rather stiffly, like a man who has been ankylosed for a long time.

"May I ask where you think you're going now?"

"To find him."

"He's none of your business. Or is he?"

She looked over her shoulder to give him an almost friendly little grin. "Sure he's my business. He's what I want."

The filling station made a bright spot of red amid the valley's shining greens. The young man bent over a worn-out flat looked up for a moment, shading his eyes against the sun. Someone was walking down the gray strip of highway. No one in his senses walked in these parts. Johnny took a deep breath. He didn't, at first, believe what he saw. She wore her familiar workaday jeans and the sun had burned her Eastern rosiness brown and taken the skin off her nose. She wasn't beautiful at all. But she was like a dream from which he didn't want to wake. He strode down on her and took her by the shoulders. He almost shook her to be sure of her.

"Liz, how did you know?"

"I've got a bean, haven't I? I used it. Pop Earnest's filling station, Montana. That's what I looked for—where you belonged. But that's over. I've come to take you home ——"

His hands dropped. He stood very straight, his bright thick hair shining in the sunlight. "No," he said.

"—— my home." She conceded, "Our home." Now it was her turn to shake him. She sounded breathless and a little incoherent. "Dad's garage. It'll be yours one of these days—the best garage in Stanton. After all, you'll be his son-in-law."

"You're talking crazy, Liz."

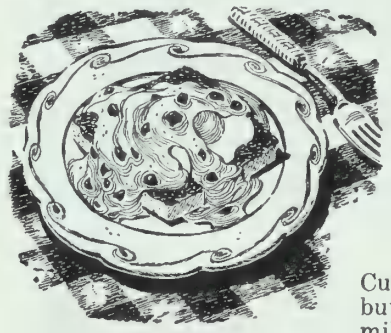
"I'm marrying you."

She stood on tiptoe and kissed him, as he had once kissed her, gently on either cheek. He kissed her, swift and hard, on the mouth as though the kiss had been delayed for a long time—for much too long a time.

"You're still crazier," he told her. "I can't go back. Johnny Gifford running a garage in Clive Gifford's town—it'd break dad's heart."

"Never mind his heart!" She linked her arm through his. "If you've got a jalopy, let's get going. The Prima Donna got mad again. She's ditched us—five miles down the road. Your dad says he doesn't want a Stanton graduate. He wants a good mechanic. And will you please come right away?"

THE END

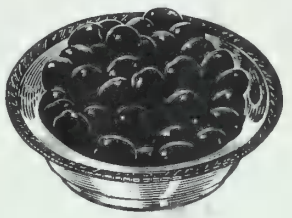


"I hope your boys are doing well at college, Mr. Winick. My wife and I like to feel our money isn't being wasted."

RIPE OLIVES
FROM CALIFORNIA

Elegant in Egg Dishes

ELEGANT! To make more dishes more delicious with ripe olives, write for your free booklet of Elegant Ripe Olive Recipes: Olive Advisory Board, Dept. D-9, 16 Beale St., San Francisco 5, Calif.



EGGS FRANCISCO

½ cup ripe olives
1 ½ tablespoons butter or margarine
1 ½ tablespoons flour
¼ teaspoon salt
¾ cup milk
½ cup grated American cheese
4 slices hot toast
1 (3-ounce) can deviled ham
4 poached eggs

Cut olives from pits into large pieces. Melt butter and blend in flour and salt. Add milk and cook and stir until thickened. Blend in cheese and olives, stirring over low heat until cheese is melted. Spread toast with ham, top each slice with an egg, and cover with cheese sauce. Serve at once. Serves 4.

(CUT OUT AND PASTE ON CARD FOR YOUR RECIPE FILE)

Elegant . . . the bowl of gleaming ripe olives . . . the accent of ripe olives on your appetizer tray . . . the subtle flavor of ripe olives in your cooking. Your own ingenuity will suggest a variety of ways to take advantage of the versatility and elegance of ripe olives. So you will always have them handy, make a permanent place in your cupboard for . . . Ripe Olives from California.

THE ORIGINAL—ALL FINE HAM—ZESTFULLY SEASONED
For 86 years America's favorite spread

"GLASS WAX", wood cream' and GOLD SEAL are trademarks. Gold Seal Co., Bismarck, N. Dak.

WAYS and MEANS

Something ou is always tur up to a the adventur
housekeeping.
Workshop
report each discoveries will enthusias
an explorers'

By MARGARET DAVIDSON

• First-aid note for television viewers. If there horizontal lines on the screen, look to your light bulbs. Old made twenty-five years ago cause the trouble and may still b basements, attics or closets.

• If you have trouble with the radio rebroadcas from one room to the next, try moving the cabinet away from wall. It helps, too, to put felt pads underneath.

• Betty Gray's French dressing is always freshly m For her superb tossed salads she mixes the dressing right in bowl before adding the greens. Her husband appreciates trick. It shortens the dishwasher's stint.

• Ever have trouble f ing clamp space for a meat grind (Alfred Lunt used to screw his chair back.) There are new grind without clamps which stay even when grinding tag ends roast for hash. One has a suct base; another slides into a brac fastened to the counter edge. One fits over the table edge, rubber bumpers to hold it secure—and, as a bonus, opens like a book so its inside can be washed. (Let's have stu peppers for supper.)

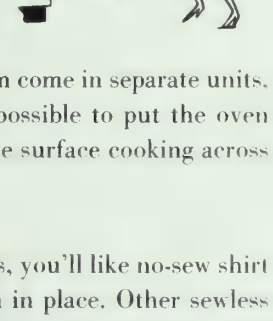
• It burns me up. With kitchen sinks the right heig why should we have to bend down over bathroom washbasi I'm peeved every time I wash my hands. To prick one ballo they aren't low enough for children as is—a footstool is s needed for self-help. Why not measure a few people and comfortable standards for basin heights?

• A vegetable bin in a closet? Why not? For sports ge it's good. Made of metal, it's durable, even when baseball mi and roller skates are dropped in the sections.

• Donald Stuart, our photographer, counts off the s onds, "One one hundred, two one hundred." Some people cou egg-cooking time as meticulously. Others wish they had. Now automatic electric egg cooker measures the doneness accordi to the amount of water added. It holds five eggs in the shell, a four in the new poacher attachment. Gladys Taber asks for h poached eggs on a sliver of ham over chopped spinach with suggestion of horse-radish stirred in.

• The JOURNAL Workshop is saving up coffee cans now t some freezer containers are scarce. Scald and air them, and t y are ready for stowing away food in a freezer. Seal with f zer tape. Use a china-marking pencil for dating and mark- i —"Chicken Curry" or "Lamb Stew."

• A paradox about eggs: When cold, the yolks and v tes are easier to separate. But when the whites are room tem- p ature they beat to greatest volume. So we do the separating r it after the eggs come from the refrigerator and let the whites s nd awhile.



• If you are one of those y o can't bear to part with your d high-oven range for any new d e where you have to bend down t take out the roast, something h s been done for you at last. It's t sectional range, gas or electric, a l the oven can be placed any h ght your heart desires. What's m re, the oven and the cooking platform come in separate units, a l, for the first time in history, it's possible to put the oven w ere your baking things are and do the surface cooking across t room where it's easy to serve.

• If the mending basket bulges, you'll like no-sew shirt b ttons. Stainless-steel clips hold them in place. Other sewless b ttons are decorative pin-on ones—metal or jeweled. Attached w th safety catch, they are easy to take off before washing or c aning.

• The Workshop way with weary hat plumes. To c an: Gently rub in upholstery-cleaning powder. When solvent e aporates and powder is white, remove with soft brush or v cuum-cleaner dusting tool—if it's clean. To recurl: Run dull e ge of knife along spines. Not for stiff feathers, but we've p rked up many a plumed hat this way.

• Tricks of our trade: A cake rack laid over bacon to b broiled keeps unruly curls in place. . . . A speedy way to s ell hard-cooked eggs for a crowd is to put them in a wire salad b sket or colander, rap smartly until the shells are well cracked. T en wash off broken pieces under the tap. . . . After broiling, s rinkle detergent or soap over b oiler grid, then cover with a wet p per towel. It makes washing easier— t e cleanup squad will applaud. . . . W hen melting chocolate over low h at, use its parchment wrapping to l ne the pan. Pan washing is faster, t e paper makes a handy funnel. . . . W ear dark glasses when hanging c othes in the sunshine to cut down glare and prevent eye- s rain. . . . Mending tape of the iron-on type makes handy labels f r children's clothes. Use indelible laundry ink for writing out t e names. . . . Skip cloves in spicecakes to be frozen—that spice s rengthens during freezer storage and the flavor dominates.

Masland Duran® all-plastic upholstery

Designed For Today's Living

Two new designs!
The simplicity of Masland Duran's new Romance pattern
combined with the graceful, flowing lines of this stunning Dinette.
See Masland Duran
on all styles of furniture...Today!

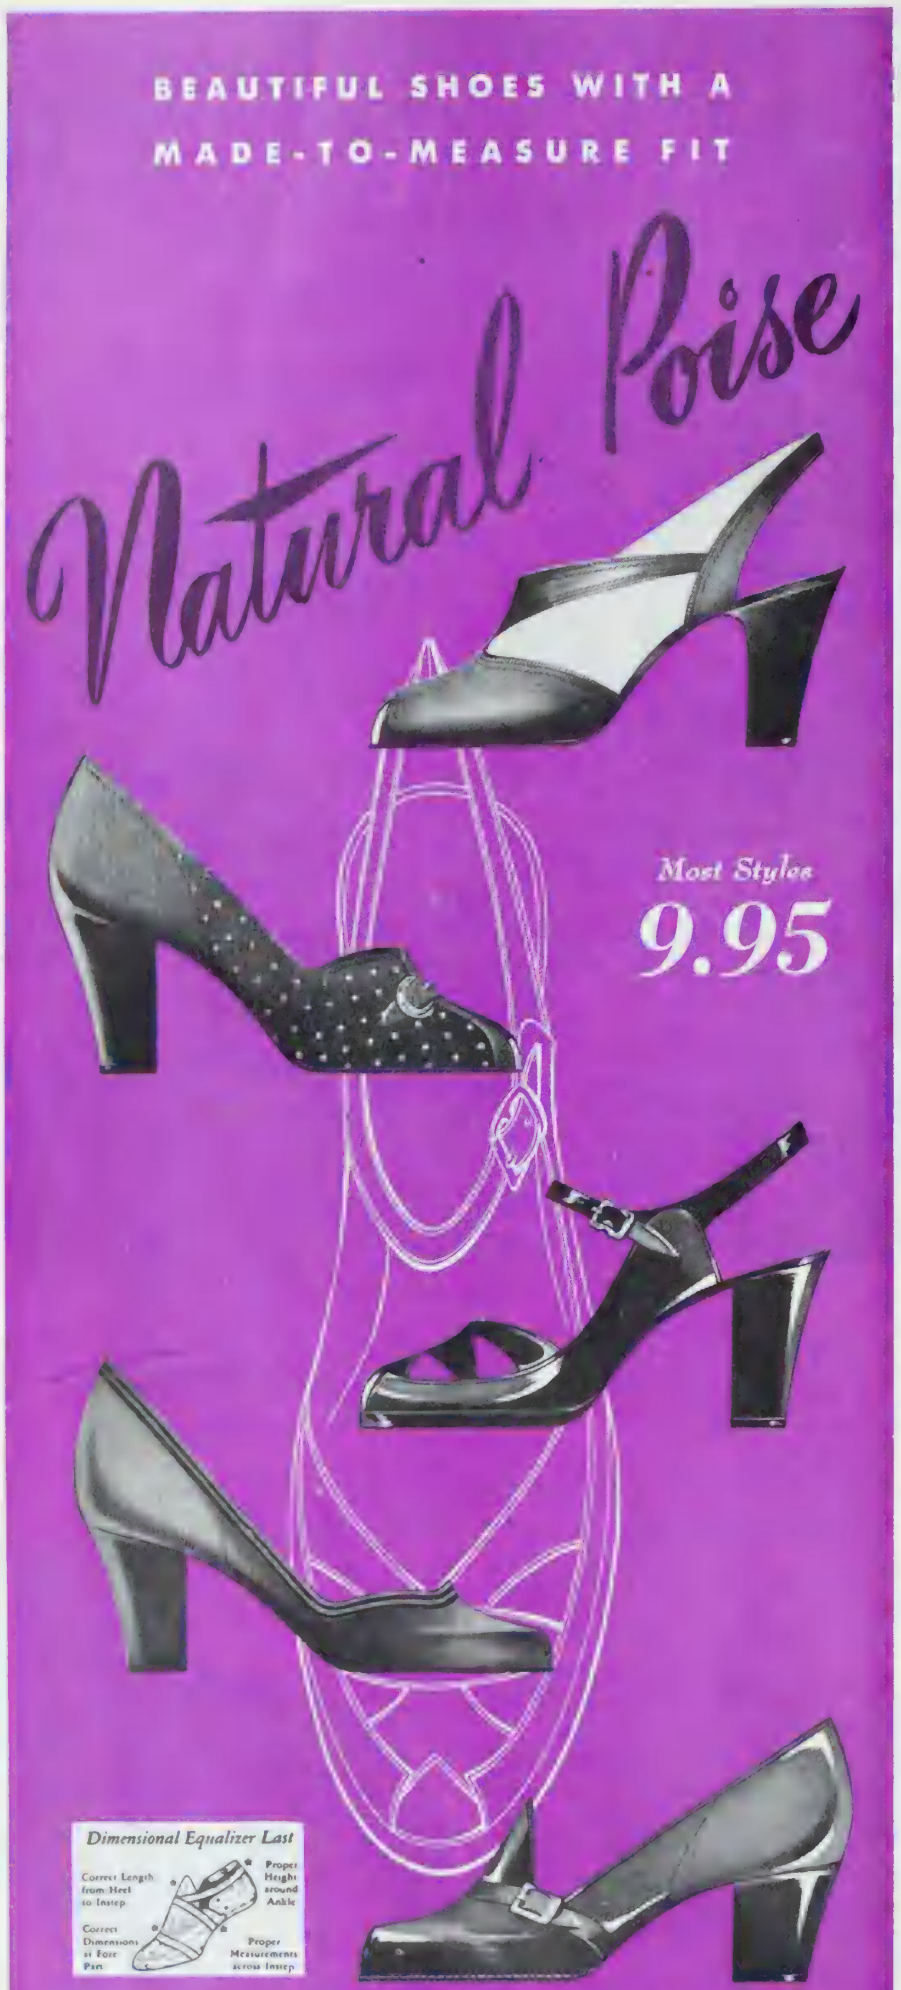
SEE MASLAND DURAN
IN JASON Sealtuft DESIGNS

FREE! folder with sample of Masland Duran — write today!



THE MASLAND DURALEATHER COMPANY
DEPT. L-9, PHILADELPHIA 34, PA.

*Trade Mark Reg. U. S Pat. Off.

ONLY MASLAND MAKES DURAN
THIS TAG IS YOUR PROTECTION

BEAUTIFUL SHOES WITH A
MADE-TO-MEASURE FIT

Natural Poise

Most Styles
9.95

Dimensional Equalizer Last
Correct Length from Heel to Instep
Proper Height around Ankle
Correct Dimensions at Fore Part Proper Measurements across Instep

NO OTHER SHOE CAN GIVE YOU MORE COMFORT!

Fashionable women everywhere are singing the praises of Natural Poise . . . their up-to-the-minute styling . . . their precious comfort. For here are shoes both dainty and flattering . . . beautifully crafted in fine, supple leathers. Here's the custom fit, the lasting ease assured by the exclusive Dimensional Equalizer Last. No wonder Natural Poise is recognized as America's Greatest Shoe Value.

Seal of Good Housekeeping

WOHL SHOE COMPANY • SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI

DEVOTEDLY, PATRICK HENRY CASEBOLT

(Continued from Page 47)

"You," he said to me, "you, you, you, you, you!"

"Me what?"

"Just you," he answered, grinning like a polecat.

I knew his type immediately. Any other girl, I suppose, might have been quite charmed to meet Patrick Henry Casebolt—were he sitting down, with a paper bag over his head. On the other hand, I was well versed in boys' "lines." I had heard every conceivable approach on the upstairs extension of our phone at home, while Robert, my brother, was downstairs telephoning his girl friends. This line was not new. Robert had a parallel one in which he would say for minutes on end, "Tell me, tell me, tell me, tell me, tell me." The young lady would then answer, "Tell you what?" and Robert would say, "Just tell me." . . . Patrick Henry Casebolt had all the earmarks Robert had of being just another—what father terms—"drugstore cowboy!"

"When you come to my barracks tonight," he said, "tell the guard that the barriers are fortified. That's the password."

"I wouldn't come to your barracks in a million years—not in a million years!" I told him. "And please stop pushing my arm up and down as though I were an old water pump!"

He merely said, "Oh, yes, you would too."

"I would what?"

"You would come to my barracks if you knew how many other females die for the honor."

"Really!" I exclaimed the way mother did when father slept through church, or when Robert told her that seventeen females were in love with him, including his English teacher. "Really!"

"Yes, really!"

He began to sing the words to the song in a raucous tone.

"Please," I pleaded, "oh, please," I begged, "must you sing?"

And he said that he was going to name his prize filly after me.

"You don't even know my name."

The music stopped then and I begar bolt across the room.

He shouted after me, "I'll find out yr name, princess. I'll find out!"

I didn't see him again that afternoon. I did I see Clarence Rassmussen. There we only two dances left and I spent them cfronted with a stumbling monster w grabbed the back of my dress as though were going to rip it off and devour me wh

When all the platoons had sounded and the last gray-and-red-uniformed st had disappeared over the hill, we gathe in Skip Holliday's room.

Skip was a general's daughter and had spent her whole life on an Army b up until the black day she was shipped to Wood Hollow. She was a short, stubby with a head of blond hair and a procliv toward profanity.

"I'll be d——d," she said to us as we exhausted on her bed, "if that wasn't t d——est rat race I was ever at. D——n!"

"They were sure all goons," comment Wheezie Myers (called Wheezie, crue enough, because she suffered from chro asthma).

"And all of them dwarfs," said Candy.

At this point I interrupted. "I take it no of you danced with Patrick Henry Ca bolt."

"Casey?" Skip asked. "He's an old-tim at Hillside. Yeah, he is d——n tall. Wouldr think they grew them that big stateside."

She informed me that Casebolt had been Hillside Academy for at least five years, wi the singular reputation of being the on cadet in the corps who invariably flunk Bible I.

"A nice joe," she commented, "ju doesn't know Genesis from Exodus."

After Candy's ten-minute harangue on h experience with Bible courses, I introduce the subject of Cadet Clarence Rassmusse Skip had been at Wood Hollow longer tha any of us and she knew all the cadets exce the "greenhorns." Her only statement o Clarence was "With a name like that, who' know him?"

HOW AMERICA LIVES

Other Views, Prices and Sizes of Vogue Patterns on Page 188

Vogue Design No. 6875.	Blazer jacket; 12 to 20, 30 to 42. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 7418.	"Easy-to-Make" skirt; 24 to 38 waist measure. 40c.
Junior Vogue Design No. 3420.	"Easy-to-Make" chemise dress or jumper dress; 9 to 17, 29½ to 34½. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 7354.	Blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 40. 50c.
Junior Vogue Design No. 3437.	Suit; 11 to 17, 30½ to 34½. 60c.
Junior Vogue Design No. 3431.	Coat; 11 to 15, 30½ to 33. 75c.
Junior Vogue Design No. 3438.	One-piece dress; 11 to 17, 30½ to 34½. 60c.

Marian Hulce's $100 Wardrobe

Fabrics
Coat—purple wool, $8.50	$27.63
lining, $1.50	5.25
Blouse—white rayon, $1.20	3.00
Jumper—red corduroy, $2.98	8.94
Suit—checked suiting, $2.29	7.16
lining, $1.50	1.87
binding	.50
Dress—gray velveteen, $2.98	16.77
trim	1.15
Jacket—plaid wool, $2.95	5.53
Skirt—gray flannel, $2.29	2.58
	$80.38
Accessories
Velveteen hat	$5.00
Belt	2.00
Bag	5.95
Gloves	2.77
Sweater	5.00
	$20.72
Grand Total	$101.10

ished simultaneously a full package crackers and our discussion of the
. At dinner there was further "re—of the dance, and of the previous ner, the latter served up in the form carroty stew. After dinner, I wrote tter to mother and father about the ood Hollow Hall, and in the P.S. I d that I had met a charming young ned Clarence, with whom I was love. I had a tendency to exaggereven as I closed my eyes at ten at night, my mind was seduced by ory of Clarence's smile.
xt morning Patrick Henry Casebolt to haunt me. The special delivery ne piece of mail in my box. The let-ling whose-name-I-procured-from-Skip-for-the-reasonable-fee-of-one-dollar Mar-guard informs me that you were way from the barracks last night and ret. How was I to know that they had the password? That guard, my be-without his tongue. The new password oing Jiminy." If you do not come to ll come to you—on Sunday afternoon,

g the hours designated by your Wood guardians. Devotedly,
PATRICK HENRY CASEBOLT.

was in the study hall reading One se Forever.
gave my name to that—that—Case-said.
h-h-h," she whispered. "This is a good part!"
p, how could you! And you didn't rn me last night!"
split the buck with he said. "I'll give y cents."
wonder why Clardn't write."
you want the fifty
r not?"
arence wouldn't is money foolishly on special deliverbably," I told her. "I'll hear tonight;
bly."
ay, if you don't want the fifty cents," id.
want it," I said, "my allowance is late.
still won't make up for your giving me to that . . . thing!"
fty cents is fifty cents," Skip said
e.

w come you're so crazy about a guy
nly met once for a few minutes?"
ie asked, trying to pick up the marble er toes. We had both been assigned to me "corrective" class. It was an hour ed expressly for "slumpers," and ie and I were slumpers. We had been t slumping in three places. At the at our desks in study hall, and in
h. There were six other slumpers in our and forty-six slumpers in Wood Hollow don't know," I answered. "He's just verything! You should have seen him.

y Fonda, only with blonder hair."
don't like the way Henry Fonda talks," ie said, "and besides, I go with a boy my home town. These cadets are a of drips, if you ask me!"
hat time is it?"
ou got four hours to go before the next call. I keep track—because of Henry.
the boy from home."
artha," said Miss Blott, the slumper er, "get busy with that marble!"

whole day was like that. I couldn't ntrate on marbles, the thirteen original s, or my acute abhorrence for eggplant we had for dinner that evening. I was ing about Clarence Rassmussen. In my ox after dinner there was a letter from r, and a post card.
ther's letter said that mother was tired eiving my blue jeans week after week
y laundry case. Was that all I ever ? . . . Mother understood nothing about mportance of a "washed-out" look in jeans.
e post card said:

Another change in the password. It's now "The citadel has fallen!" Devotedly,
PATRICK HENRY CASEBOLT.

"No luck, eh?" said Candy, peering over my shoulder.

"Uh-uh. Guess he didn't get a chance to write. Or it could be that Casebolt is hogging the mails so that other cadets can't get their letters through."

"I got a letter from one of them," Candy offered, "the one that was as tall as a fire hydrant. I always draw a real piece of stuff!"

THAT evening Patrick Henry Casebolt and a crew from Hillside sang Moonlight and Roses under someone's window three dorms away from mine. I didn't hear the serenade, but I was told that Patrick sang a solo dedicated to "Martha" entitled You Made Toothpicks of the Timber of My Heart. Typically Missouri, I thought. Paris, indeed!

There was a wire propped against my water glass at breakfast. Miss Baluff insisted that I eat my prunes first, on the theory that it is always better to have food in the stomach before receiving any sudden news.

"I finished them," I said.

And she said, "You may be excused to leave the dining room and read your wire, but you must return for the second course."

"Even if somebody's dead?" I asked sarcastically.

The wire read simply:

FOUR DAYS TILL SUNDAY
DEVOTEDLY, PATRICK HENRY CASEBOLT

A girl going up the aisle to be married looks as confident as a man laying down four aces. —ANON.

Even my brother Robert, I thought wearily, wouldn't go this far, and Robert was a six-eared wolf.

"If he thinks he's coming here on Sunday," I told Skip in geometry class, "then he's got another think."

"What are you going to do," she sneered, "go awol?"

"I'm going to write Clarence Rassmussen," I announced, "and I'm going to invite him over on Sunday."

Skip remarked, "I'll bet he's a d——d idiot!"

I clung one more day to the thread of hope. Then, obsessed, bewitched, and tormented with the vision of Clarence Rassmussen's smile and his brown eyes, I wrote a polite note asking if he would like to come over on Sunday at three o'clock.

Right after I mailed the letter I was called to the reception parlor. A messenger pushed a long piece of thin tissue paper at me.

"Things like this," he said bitterly, "make delivery boys want a union."

The tissue contained a rose, and attached to the rose, a card:

Roses are red,
Violets are blue,
I'm coming courting
Sunday—at two.
Devotedly,
PATRICK HENRY CASEBOLT.

"Good!" I screamed at Skip, who just "happened" to be passing. "Visitors can't come until three. He'll arrive during siesta hour and won't he be surprised when he can't come in."

"D——n! I forgot to tell him the visiting hours were changed this year."

"Look, Skip. If you tell him that now—I don't care what he offers you—we'll be enemies."

Skip promised and until Friday I was confident. That morning the air came out of my tire, the gas out of my balloon. Clarence Rassmussen must have written at precisely the time I sat down and wrote to him, for our letters crossed. Up in Skip's room, as I fumbled with the envelope, everyone gathered around me.

"Read it aloud," they commanded. "Come on, Martha."

"Dear Martha: Well how are you???? I have been working like a dog studying. We had drill

THE TIME:
Early Fall
THE PLACE:
Anywhere in America
THE TRIP:
Best by Greyhound

These are golden days along America's highways . . . great days for going places, by Greyhound! You'll enjoy every scenic mile as you sit back in a deeply cushioned armchair, behind a highly skilled driver . . . among friendly fellow-passengers. This trip, this Fall — you'll be smart to relax as you see as you save, by Greyhound!

— and only GREYHOUND gives you all these travel features . . .

More Express, Limited Service than any other Travel Way!
Up, down, across, and all around America, Greyhound Express, Limited and through buses provide fast, direct, and luxurious travel with fewest possible stops.

Unequaled Schedule Frequency!
No other transportation in America offers so many schedules to so many places! These high-frequency schedules mean time saved, extra convenience for your trip.

Exceptionally Low Fares to all 48 States!
There are no lower fares in Nationwide travel! Greyhound takes you where you're going, with dollars to spare . . . at about ⅓ the cost of operating your own car.

Charter Coaches Available throughout America
Get your crowd together—and go by Chartered Greyhound to the big game, festival, convention, or special event. Charter trips are easily arranged in your area!

Direct Travel to Military Centers, College Towns!
Here's a help for servicemen on leave, and for students headed back to college. Greyhound directly serves almost all military centers, university and college towns.

Amazing America Tours FREE Trip-planning Service!
For high adventure at lowest cost, try a Greyhound Expense-Paid Tour — with hotel reservations, transportation, sightseeing, all arranged in advance by experts!

A LOT MORE TRAVEL FOR A LOT LESS MONEY!

PLAN YOUR FALL TRIP WITH THIS FREE FOLDER!

Mail this coupon to Greyhound Information Center, 105 W. Madison St., Chicago 2, Ill. for Greyhound's illustrated folder describing 40 pre-planned pleasure trips to all parts of America.

NAME .....
ADDRESS .....
CITY ..... STATE LHJ-9-51

GREYHOUND

today and it was hot. You ought to see my class list. Whew. You ought to have to drill like us boys do but then I can see you girls drilling (ha ha). Maybe we can have a little get together one of these days. When do you see fellows? I get out Saturdays and Sundays from this prison. They say they are strikt with you gals (ha ha). You should have come to this school (ha ha).

"Yours,

"CLARENCE RASSMUSSEN.

"P.S. Write me a letter as my mailbox is dusty.

"P.P.S. Is yours?"

"Real sense of humor," Candy said, "like a jackass."

"Henry Fonda," Wheezie said, "only with blonder hair."

Skip said, "Ha, ha, ha."

I didn't say anything. I folded the letter and put it in the pocket of my skirt, and then I bit the tears back and walked out of the room.

I remembered what Robert had said about women.

"Women," Robert said, "are either beautiful hunks of people with the brains of a dead haddock, or they're walking b look like zombis."

Maybe it was the same with men

That night I got out my best s with the thin green stripe running t and I wrote two letters to Hillside A

Dear Clarence: I am ill and I will n to have visitors on Sunday. Sinc MARTHA W

Dear Patrick: The visiting hours ar from 2–4, to 3–5. Sinc MARTHA W

It is ten years since I attended W low Hall.

Candy Lane married a druggi inches shorter than herself. Ski day joined the Wacs and married private she ever court-martialed. won Henry, the boy "back hom brother Robert, on the other han vinely happy with his wife, Rita, a numskull. It is a choice everyone mu I myself chose a husband who is votedly, Patrick Henry Casebolt. T

The Secret of Lovelier Hair

for more than a century

Photograph by HORST.

MICHAEL OF THE WALDORF styles the hair of MRS. ALBERT TILT, 3rd, Greenwich, Connecticut, following a Conti Castile Shampoo.

Beauty Authorities agree, "Pure Castile is the best shampoo." And, for pure castile at its finest, leading hair stylists choose Conti . . . the pure castile shampoo that contains pure imported olive oil for greater hair loveliness.

Thanks to its natural oils, Conti guards the health of the scalp, leaves the hair silky-soft, lustrous and perfectly conditioned to take and hold its wave.

For more than a century, lovely women have used Conti for finest hair care—first with shampoo made at home by dissolving famous Conti pure castile soap, imported since 1836—now in response to their demand, with perfected Conti Castile Shampoo in liquid form.

Today millions of women use Conti for their fine shampoos. Absolutely pure and mild, it has no drying effect, contains no mysterious or irritating ingredients, is safe for children and all the family. It does not streak or fade hair and needs no conditioning agents or after rinses.

Use Conti regularly . . . it will make your hair lovelier.

Conti Shampoo

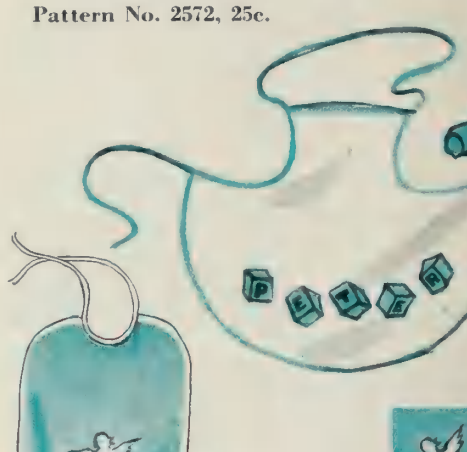
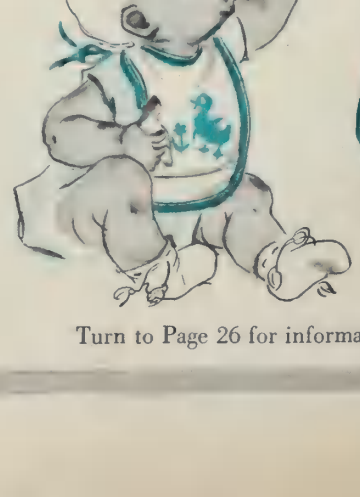
PURE CASTILE

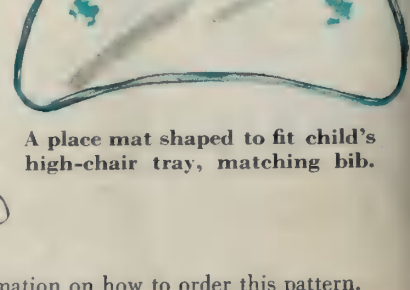


Now also available in Canada

BIBS, APRONS AND PLACE MATS

Plastic with cotton backing (often sold in upholstery departments), or oilcloth makes amusing bibs, aprons and place mats . . . especially when gaily appliquéd with animals or a child's name, and bound in contrasting binding. Keep these in mind for Christmas giving. Pattern No. 2572, 25c.





A shaped apron is ideal for playing or eating.

Oilcloth with chicken appliqué for bib and place mat.

A place mat shaped to fit child's high-chair tray, matching bib.

Turn to Page 26 for information on how to order this pattern.

Modess . . . because

At home

"COKE" IS A REGISTERED TRADE-M

COPYRIGHT 1951, THE COCA-COLA COMPANY

The pause that refreshes with ice-cold Coca-Cola helps to make a house a home.

JOURNAL

OCTOBER
1951. 25c

BURLINGAME
PUBLIC LIBRARY
Burlingame, Calif.

The Magazine Women Believe

Recapitulation

FIGHTING THE BUDGET
with the James McCoys

should a girl go steady

WHO CARES?

When you educate a woman you educate a whole family

Dr. CHARLES D. McIVER

The Make-Believe Twins

Geranium Cabinet

How Sparkling can you be?

The answer is Ipana!

There's no doubt about it—a sparkling, attractive smile depends on a healthy mouth—and here's how cleaning your teeth with Ipana helps keep your whole mouth healthy!

1. TEETH. To reduce tooth decay effectively, no other tooth paste—ammoniated or regular—has been proved better than Ipana.

2. GUMS. Brush teeth from gum margins toward biting edges. Ipana's active cleansing foam helps remove irritants that can lead to gum troubles.

3. BREATH. Ipana sweetens breath instantly, makes mouth feel good. Get a tube of Ipana Tooth Paste today.

For teeth that really Sparkle . . . the answer is IPANA!

For breath that's Sparkling clean . . . the answer is IPANA!

A Product of Bristol-Myers

For Sparkling personality . . . the answer is IPANA!

For the Smile of Beauty

Let Your Beauty be Seen...

Palmolive Brings Out Beauty

WHILE IT CLEANS YOUR SKIN!

SO MILD . .
SO PURE!

For Tub or Shower Get Big Bath Size Palmolive!

36 LEADING SKIN SPECIALISTS IN 1285 SCIENTIFIC TESTS PROVED THAT PALMOLIVE'S BEAUTY PLAN BRINGS MOST WOMEN LOVELIER COMPLEXIONS IN 14 DAYS

Start Palmolive's Beauty Plan today! Discover for yourself—as women everywhere have discovered—that Palmolive's Beauty Plan brings exciting new complexion loveliness.

Here's all you do: Gently massage Palmolive's extra-mild, pure lather onto your skin for just a minute, three times a day. Then rinse and pat dry. You'll see Palmolive bring out your beauty while it cleans your skin.

Doctors Prove Palmolive's Beauty Results!

VOL. LXVIII NO. 10

Journal Contents

October 1951

Journalities

G. Markey

Just when and where, in the course of his sparkling career, author G. MARKEY came across a boy like Tad and a raccoon like Spook—or, for that matter, a medicine-show maestro like Doc Tilbee—we can't say, but there they are in his novel, The Great Companions (Page 42). Writer of four novels, numerous short stories and screen plays, G. Markey is a yachting enthusiast and a commodore in the United States Navy. In the first World War he served in the Army—but never, so far as we know, in a medicine show. ▪ According to HOPE SHELLEY MILLER, Kit-nen of A Small Miracle (Page 68) was a black tomcat who had three kittens in the middle of her kitchen floor. The other characters are more universal; every mother will recognize Pat, the harassed young mother, and wish she had a child psychologist for a husband, too—or will she? The Millers live in Boise, Idaho, vacationing frequently in the Grand Tetons, where they like to sleep on the ground in sleeping bags, with nothing but the stars above and bears and bugs and things below. • Among G. M. WHITE's many editorial duties for the JOURNAL is putting together this column (this very sentence) and after much experimentation he has found that anything he says about himself sounds silly, as this sentence proves. Such inadequate expression is due, no doubt, to the limitless regard he has always held for G. M. White—a feeling shared only by a very special wife, two young sons and a mongrel dog. On his first assignment for the JOURNAL, four years ago, he lived in a maternity hospital; to do the reporting job on Page 58, Do You Remember Rocky? he went to jail—and he prefers jail.

Hope Miller

DI PIETRO

G. M. White

Novel Complete in This Issue

The Great Companions — G. Markey — 42

Stories

Date With a Harvard Man — Florence Jane Soman — 44
Recapitulation — Jessamyn West — 52
The Ghost Horses — Isak Dinesen — 56
A Small Miracle — Hope Shelley Miller — 68
Melville Goodwin USA (Part six of seven) — John P. Marquand — 70
Mrs. Fremont's Daughter — Audrey De Graff — 74

Special Features

Democracy in Theory and Practice — Dorothy Thompson — 11
Your Red Feather — 11
There's a Man in the House — Harlan Miller — 28
Who Cares? — 46
Political Pilgrim's Progress — 48
Women Can Get Results — 51
What Women Did in Gary — 51
"I Couldn't Compete With My Mother" — Selma Robinson — 54
Profile of Youth . . . Do You Remember Rocky? — G. M. White — 58
Youth Before the Judge — Judge John Clark Knox — 59
The Make-Believe Twins — Phyllis McGinley and Roberta MacDonald — 132
How America Lives . . . Fighting the Budget With the James McCoys — Hildegarde Dolson — 207

General Features

Our Readers Write Us — 4
Under-Cover Stuff — Bernardine Kielty — 16
Reference Library — 30
Making Marriage Work — Clifford R. Adams — 32
Should a Girl Go Steady? (The Sub-Deb) — Edited by Jan Weyl — 34
Diary of Domesticity — Gladys Taber — 38
Fifty Years Ago in the Journal • Journal About Town — 41
Guard Your Youngster's Eyesight — Dr. Herman N. Bundesen — 136
Ask Any Woman — Marcelene Cox — 151
This is a Gloater — Munro Leaf — 160

Fashion and Beauty

One Wonderful Suit — Wilhela Cushman — 60
Your Signature — 61
Three to Go . . . Anywhere — Wilhela Cushman — 62
Our Own Young Marrieds — 64
Capsule Wardrobes . . . for City . . . for Country — Nora O'Leary — 66
How Do You Rate With Your Daughter? — Dawn Crowell Norman — 213
$100 Working Wardrobe — Nora O'Leary — 215

Food and Homemaking

First Rate Fare — Ann Batchelder — 76
Line a Day — Ann Batchelder — 80
Arm's-Reach Kitchen — Gladys Taber — 112
Ways and Means — Margaret Davidson — 120
Ten Commandments for Kitchen Safety — 184
Cook it and Freeze It — Louella G. Shouer — 218
For Freezer Users — Victoria Harris — 219
Conversation Piece — Ruth Mills Teague — 226
Quick and Easys for Two — Louella G. Shouer — 236

Architecture, Interior Decoration and Garden

Furnishing Firsts — H. T. Williams — 72
Triple Threat to High Prices — Richard Pratt — 78
A Paintbrush and a Sewing Machine Did Wonders for My Room — Henrietta Murdock — 216
Geranium Cabinet — Richard Pratt — 254

Poetry

Robert P. Tristram Coffin 14 • Elizabeth McFarland 95 • Archibald Rutledge 105 • Joan Aucourt 109 • Eleanor Alletta Chaffee 119 • Alma Robison Higbee 130 • May Williams Ward 143 • John A. Cappon 156 Daniel Smythe 178 • Helen S. White 203 • Christie Lund Coles 221 May Sarton 224 ▪ Dan G. Hoffman 230 • Joseph Auslander 247 F. B. Jacobs 253 ▪ Virginia Reynolds 257

Cover Design by Wilhela Cushman

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Send your new address at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect. Address:
LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.

Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1951 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U. S. and Possessions, Canada, Costa Rica, Cuba, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America except the Guianas: 1 yr., $3; 2 yrs., $5; 3 yrs., $7; 4 yrs., $9. Other countries, 1 yr., $6. Remit by money order or draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company. Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President; Lewis W. Trayser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Donald M. Hobart, Vice-President and Director of Research; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

"I like pretty lingerie that fits as if it had been cut for me . . .

"Like my new slips that are shirred with Lastex yarn all through the bodice . . .

"And my dreamy new nightgown that's so gently elasticized with Lastex in the waist . . .

"Really, the best fitting slips, gowns, panties, negligees, bed-jackets, pajamas, are now being knit, woven, shirred or embroidered with

Lastex

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

the miracle yarn that makes things fit

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY

Rockefeller Center ▪ New York

"A good-lunch rule
For play or school"

Eat HEARTY-with Franco-American Spaghetti!

Youngsters eat hearty without urging when there's Franco-American Spaghetti for lunch! It tastes so good because it's tender-cooked in a luscious, savory sauce of sun-ripened tomatoes and sharp, well-aged Cheddar cheese. And Franco-American Spaghetti is so chock-full of good nourishment, it sends your boys and girls back to school with plenty of bounce for the afternoon's work and play. It's so quick to fix, too—and costs only pennies a portion. Serve hearty Franco-American Spaghetti for lots of your schoolday lunches!

Quickie
for a "Dress-Up" supper

■ Brown green pepper and onion rings, cut about ¼-inch thick, in hot shortening, and mix some of them with your heated Franco-American Spaghetti. Use remainder of the rings for garnish. Looks good—tastes even better!

JUST HEAT...
AND EAT HEARTY

Our Readers Write us

Do Europeans Know Us?

Rome, Italy

Dear Editors: Many Americans and enlightened Europeans we have met are more than distressed by our policy of presenting to Europe a perfect and affluent America with no problems. My husband and I have blushed while listening to the saccharine, patronizing Voice of America telling the people of Europe that all is well and everything is under control.

We have encountered bitter resentment at the nerve of our government agencies who try to teach without making any effort to understand those they would teach. American women, the wives of our government employees and occupation forces, are soundly criticized for their selfishness, their closed minds, their unawareness of the countries in which they are living.

My husband and I believe that it is just as important to tell the rest of the world about the United States as it is to tell the United States about the rest of the world. But it must be done honestly and the material and information sent out must appeal to ordinary people, not just the comfortable, professional and wealthy groups. It is for the peasants and workers in Europe that the Red propaganda is designed, and it is to these peasants and workers that United States propaganda should be directed.

Our information services, our magazines and movies should not be afraid to show that we are human and have our troubles; that we, too, can be confused and make mistakes.

If only our attitude of smug superiority could be changed, much would be accomplished. We need to meet the people of the world on their own ground. Sincerely,

DOROTHY THOMPSON GOLDNER

"I Despise My Mother"

Omaha, Nebraska

Dear Editors: Your answer to Mary Cunningham's letter in the August issue has extended me a release. I, too, am from the silent but forgotten mass who flounder between duty and suffocating hatred. I despise my mother.

For nearly forty years she has incessantly nagged and preached. She labels this "just trying to help." Always she is so right, so unyielding. I have never lived up to her expectations, never pleased her. Relentlessly, she imposes her will, demanding and dominating until I've turned into the person I least want to be, mean and stupid.

Newly widowed, she became a nerve-racking leech on my budgeted time, my reasoning, my tolerance. With unquestioning authority she gained an emotional strangle hold, sucking me dry, reducing me to obedience and silent resentment. If I rebel, I'm being contrary and disrespectful of my elder and my parent. Sincerely,

(Name withheld by request)

Texans Make Poor Husbands

Dallas, Texas

Dear Editors: Your nice, lovely magazine makes me feel just like a second-grade moron! This feeling comes from the near-perfection that pervades the whole magazine. For instance, Ann Batchelder—I'll bet she never had a cooking failure in her life. Wilhela Cushman was most likely perfectly dressed the day she was born and has remained so ever since (though not in the same outfit). As for your Young Marrieds, they give me the shakes! They have smooth-running jobs and husbands that are apparently paragons. I have a job and a husband, but there the resemblance ends.

What brand of men do you Yankees raise? They appear to be so willing to help with the housework and so very adept at it! Almost to a man, Texas males feel that housework is just not for them, barring extreme emergencies. On my word of honor, the only time my husband helped me with the dishes was a few months after our marriage when I burned my thumb rather badly. Then he washed them for me once. He hasn't been able yet (two years later) to live down being "henpecked" on that occasion. I do love him and I think he loves me (he's a taciturn Texan and has never said so in so many words), but I never have time to do all the things he thinks I should do and still be ready to go wherever and whenever the mood strikes him.

All I can say is, it must be wonderful to lead the life of a LADIES' HOME JOURNAL employee! Sincerely,

MRS. D. T. COLE

It is wonderful—but is there room for another man in Texas? ED.

No "Smother Love" for Baby

Joplin, Missouri

Dear Editors: I would like to suggest that Mrs. Cunningham's child is lucky in a way. He is unlikely to become a victim of "smother love."

If she can preserve toward him an attitude of impersonal kindness—the attitude of a good friend rather than a doting mother—the gain in objectivity may offset the lack in affection.

Sincerely,

MARY JOHNSTON

First-Time Father at 63

North Bergen, New Jersey

Dear Editors: The odd idea that life begins at 40 has been overemphasized.

Marie Alice: a bit of immortality.

For me, it began at half past 63, with the advent of my brand-new daughter, Marie Alice. I'm probably not the first man to become a father for the first time at that age, but the combination of circumstances that confronted me was novel, to say the least.

Marie was born three weeks after the company for which I had worked thirty years retired me on length of service. I was an expended expendable. It was obviously no time to report such news to my wife.

Marie Alice came into the world with a distorted foot, requiring medical care, and my wife was also ill. Then, in a street accident, I injured my knee.

I hit bottom, but I bounced. Marie Alice showed me the way. When she took my finger in her little hand, when

(Continued on Page 6)

OF ALL THE GALS WHO DO THEIR WASH...

She wears the cleanest clothes in town

. . . she swears by TIDE!

"She wears the cleanest clothes in town—
So does her daughter, Susan.
So clean, so bright, you guessed it right—
Of course it's Tide she's usin'!"

Tide GETS CLOTHES CLEANER THAN ANY SOAP!

TIDE not only washes clothes cleaner—but whiter, too, in hardest water!

CLEANER CLOTHES! When you rinse out a Tide wash, you've got the cleanest clothes in town . . . cleaner clothes than any other woman will get with any soap of any kind. And here's why—Tide not only gets out the ordinary dirt, but removes dulling soap film, as well!

WHITER, TOO! Yes, tests prove Tide gets clothes cleaner and whiter than any soap in hardest water. What's more, after just one Tide wash, soap-dulled colors actually come brighter! Millions of you women have proved these Tide miracles. You've seen the proof in your husband's cleaner, whiter shirts . . . in your own bright wash prints.

NEW MILDNESS FOR HANDS! Tide is kind to your hands—now milder than ever before. Tough on dirt—but easy on your hands—that's Tide! Get Tide today and hang the cleanest wash in town on your line!

P.S. PREFER TO SKIP RINSING?

With Tide you can skip the rinsing, and save all that time and work. Just wash, wring out, hang up. Tide will give you the cleanest possible no-rinse wash!

part-time angel

He's a daytime imp but a nighttime angel, cuddled soft and sweet in his downy Merrichild Sleeper. He's an all-time darling!

And he loves his warm Merrichilds, Hanesknit for sweet sleeping. The snug cuffs and neck hug close on chill nights. The fabric gives easily with every sleep-wriggle. Mothers love the durable double feet, the self-training seat, the easy Gripper fasteners.

In pink, blue, canary, red and green. Say "Hanes" for long-wearing sleeper values at thrifty prices.

SLEEPER SHOWN ABOVE ONLY $1.89

SPRINGY-KNIT OF THE FINEST COTTON One-piece, sizes 0 to 6, $1.89; in red, $2.25; size 8, $2.49; in red, $2.85.

PROCESSED FOR PERMANENT FIT Two-piece, sizes 0 to 4, $1.89; in red, $2.25.

WONDERFULLY WASHABLE Three-piece, with extra pants, sizes 0 to 4, $2.85; in red, $3.39.

Prices slightly higher in the Far West

HANES SLEEPERS

MERRICHILD SUEDEKNIT*

Underwear, sportswear and sleepwear at good stores everywhere

P. H. HANES KNITTING CO., WINSTON-SALEM 1, N. C.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

(Continued from Page 4)

the light of recognition was first detectable in her blue eyes, I knew I had a job, more important and more worth while, than any I could find by tramping the streets or scanning the ads. Never, that I recall, had I touched a baby, and certainly I never held one in my arms, until I became fate-assigned sitter to Marie Alice. Nevertheless, I had to pitch in and be mother's helper in all branches of the profession.

I dropped some other magazines in order to subscribe to LADIES' HOME JOURNAL—a must, I then thought, and am now convinced. The first valuable thing I learned was that babies are people. From then on, the going was easier.

Marie Alice is almost two now. Her blue eyes search mine to find out what's really on my mind. I wouldn't dare to try to deceive her. There are only a few things she can tell me in words, but there's no limit to the things she tells me with those eyes, with the curve of her mouth, with the gestures of her hands.

My wife, aided by my assumption of maternal as well as paternal duties, quickly recovered. My knee got all right—I don't even remember when. Marie Alice walks, runs and climbs stairs with complacent agility, and the specialist has dismissed her as a thoroughly cured patient. Documents say I'm 65, but I say I'm at the age when life begins in those things that matter. Yours truly,

KENNETH McKIM

Children are a Nuisance

Long Beach, California

Dear Editors: I for one rise to Mary Cunningham's defense with a loud and vigorous hurray for her honesty. I completely agree with her. I think it is a bitter quirk of fate that, since Mother Nature decided women were to bear children, she didn't include in all of us the maternal urge, or the urge to become slaves. Yes, I'm selfish. I know it and readily admit it. I'm probably crazy not to be thankful to have a healthy, normal, cute two-year-old. But, oh, for the chance to go back three years, to be able to join the host of women who can know of something in life besides crying, diapers, feeding, routine, training, teaching, and above all . . . boredom, complete and overpowering boredom.

Is there any answer for those who aren't and can't be satisfied with the routine of a child? Or is our restlessness and bitterness the punishment we must pay for not wanting our children as they should be wanted? Sincerely,

(Name withheld by request)

Banishes Boredom

Cincinnati, Ohio

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Gould: You seem to receive so many letters from well-educated women who are bored with housework. I wonder if my solution would be an answer? When my youngest was two, I went back to college. My purpose happens to be to complete certification requirements for high-school teaching. As this is my second year, I know it's no whim. I get a second degree next winter, and, I hope, another baby next summer. I have no outside help (except nursery school and kindergarten) and teach high school two nights a week in the winter.

Block that desolation! Whee for education! Yours truly,

DORELLE MARKLEY HEISEL

Modern Mothers Have a Cinch

Buck Ridge, B. C., Canada

Dear Editors: Instead of asking all the young women with two or three children and all modern conveniences how they manage (and pretty poorly, seems to me), ask my mother-in-law, who is now eighty-three. She has had fifteen children, no modern conveniences and little money. Yours truly,

ALICE HANGLID

Solves Everything

Phoenix, Arizona

Dear Editors: I'd like to propound two rules for successful family living. Rule No. 1. Never have either a first child or a last. Parents are too inexperienced to do a relaxed, common-sense job of bringing up a

(Continued on Page 8)

CLOROX gives you More than gentler bleaching!

It's a 4 in 1 product!

1 AN extra-gentle BLEACH

Long life for linens is one of the big reasons millions of women prefer Clorox. For Clorox is extra gentle . . . free from caustic and other harsh substances . . . made by an exclusive formula protected by U. S. patent!

2 A dependable STAIN REMOVER

Whenever you get a stain on white or color-fast cottons or linens, refer to the Clorox label. For Clorox removes numerous stains from linens . . . kitchen and bathroom surfaces, too.

3 AN effective DEODORIZER

Yes, Clorox deodorizes in laundering and in routine cleaning. Clorox-clean linens, and kitchen and bathroom surfaces, not only look clean . . . they smell clean!

4 In addition CLOROX is one of the world's great DISINFECTANTS

Clorox is the most efficient disinfectant of its kind . . . it acts faster, kills germs quicker. Give your family the added health protection of a Clorox-clean home. Disinfect drainboard, sink, wash basin, shower, tub and toilet bowl regularly with Clorox. See directions on the Clorox label.

You get all 4 in 1 with

CLOROX

AMERICA'S FAVORITE

CLOROX-CLEAN means ADDED HEALTH PROTECTION!

office

asked Laura to lunch if they could possibly wasn't good company or that she didn't pay her ne fault that outweighed her good points. What rl, would be the last to suspect. There's one in e had to be the one.

y time

You could be guilty of *halitosis (unpleasant breath) right now litosis may be absent one day and present the next . . . and, when th everybody. It can nullify your other good points.
ffending when Listerine Antiseptic is such a simple and delightful reath is instantly fresher, sweeter, less likely to offend.

tra-careful

HAVE A LOAD OF

Phone your West relieve off-color breath watch a load Antiseptic sweetens and easy, thorough tly . . . and helps keep it Westinghouse Elonds . . . not for minutes
. No wonder it's the extra- st bad breath. So, to be ra-careful. Never, never omit Listerine Antiseptic night and morning, and before any date, when you want to be at your best. While some cases of halitosis are of systemic origin, most cases, say some authorities, are due to the bacterial fermentation of tiny food particles clinging to mouth surfaces. Listerine Antiseptic quickly halts such fermentation, then overcomes the odors fermentation causes.

LAMBERT PHARMACAL COMPANY, St. Louis, Mo.

Even ground-in dirt yie
Westinghouse LAUNDR

WASH AWAY RINSE AWAY A

because dirty was away from clothe

That's the sec gets white cloth brighter. And it job is completely

The Laundron water and soap, t
sive WEIGH-TO-

No other washer made, either automatic or conventional, has such thorough washing action as the Laundromat. Thanks to its exclusive WASHaway-RINSEaway action, clothes are lifted up and out of the water . . . turned over . . . washed inside and out, again and again and again.

Then the clothes are triple-rinsed in fresh, clean water, equal to 1500 hand rinses. Every speck of soil and soap is flushed out, stays out,

LOOK TO WESTINGHOUSE FOR TV's TOP ENTERTAINMENT . . . Exc
Outstanding COLLEGE FOOTBALL GAMES . . . plus WESTINGHOUSE "STUD

YOU CAN BE SURE...IF IT'S Wes

TISEPTIC

. . . . IT'S BREATH-TAKING !

See and Hear THE SAMMY KAYE SHOW ★ "So You Want to Lead a Band"
CBS TELEVISION NETWORK

part-time angel

He's a daytime imp but a nighttime angel, cuddled soft and sweet in his downy Merrichild Sleeper. He's an all-time darling!

And he loves his warm Merrichilds, Hanesknit for sweet sleeping. The snug cuffs and neck hug close on chill nights. The fabric gives easily with every sleep-wriggle. Mothers love the durable double feet, the self-training seat, the easy Gripper fasteners.

In pink, blue, canary, red and green. Say "Hanes" for long-wearing sleeper values at thrifty prices.

SLEEPER SHOWN ABOVE ONLY $1.89

SPRINGY-KNIT OF THE FINEST COTTON One-piece, sizes 0 to 6, $1.89; in red, $2.25; size 8, $2.19; in red, $2.85.

PROCESSED FOR PERMANENT FIT Two-piece, sizes 0 to 4, $1.89; in red, $2.25.

WONDERFULLY WASHABLE Three-piece, with extra pants, sizes 0 to 4, $2.85; in red, $3.39.

Prices slightly higher in the Far West

HANES SLEEPERS

MERRICHILD SUEDEKNIT*

Underwear, sportswear and sleepwear at good stores everywhere

P. H. HANES KNITTING CO., WINSTON-SALEM 1, N. C.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

(Continued from Page 6)

the first child and are too indulgent with the in heast. Rule No. 2. Never have a child until imporou can provide it with three parents—I come to earn a living, one to run the house, scamind one to attend to the physical and I tounental needs of the child.

one I'm sure if everyone would follow these assi-simple rules there could be no harried less,housewives and no problem children; but helpas long as dumb dopes like myself persist I in ignoring them, we'll just have to strug-ordegle along with the same old problems.

Jou Sincerely,
now LETEE FOSTER IDE
I le
the

Just two parents for several children has always seemed an uneven match—one parent is ridiculous, unless, of course, the parent has two heads. ED.

blu
rea
to she lin ey
the

Bringing Up Father

Evanston, Illinois

Dear Editors: My wife put the August JOURNAL in front of me, opened to the article on Making Marriage Work.

"Am I a creative wife?" she inquired.

After twenty-three years I refuse to be startled by silly questions, so I tried my best to look bored as I glanced over the questionnaire prepared by Doctor Adams.

"Bought a little gift for your husband? Served a new dish he liked? Tried a new dinner arrangement? Given him several unexpected compliments? Told him how much you love him?"

Ye gods! If there is anything wrong with the American housewife today it is because her mind has become distorted by the rot she reads in magazine articles and fiction. No doubt Doctor Adams has the most honorable intentions, but some of us would prefer to muddle along in our old-fashioned way. Yours truly,

TOM MULLEN

How many months, weeks, hours—well, maybe minutes since you told her you loved her? ED.

Only Warm Bathroom in England

The Duke's Cottage, Rudgwick, England

My dear Bruce and Beatrice: I have just installed a new hot-water system, so efficient that we are now going around with bound-up fingers, suffering from burns! Even handsome Mr. Williams, who installed it, was at a loss yesterday to know how to fit a washer on a pipe! I think even Beatrice will now think my warm bathroom is really warm!

The other day I was bidden to a party at Cliveden, your friend Lady Astor's place, to have the honor to meet the Queen, who looked sweet and wore blue and had a smile and a kind word for most of us. She is so much prettier than her pictures in the paper, and she has a gentleness I wish some of our bouncing celebrities would copy. It was an international-relations party, and there were people from all over the world, including some African ladies in their native party frocks, who had done something too chic for words with a duster by way of a headdress. (Wilhela should look into this!) I have been trying it out myself, but the result is not the same. And there I met also a Burmese gentleman I knew in Rangoon long ago. He had changed very little, except that he was translated out of the lovely peacock blue and pink silks in which he used to dress himself, into a morning coat and top hat. It was no improvement.

This is our busy season in the village. A large white tent has arisen in the field, like a sitting hen. Near it, but not too near, are two smaller tents like chickens. One labeled Ladies. One Gents. The stage is set. Our Flower Show is about to begin. The battle of the red and black currants and the broad beans opens at 2:30 P.M., and it is a very serious matter. This year we have an added excitement, because it has always been a foregone conclusion that Mr. Napper will win the sweet peas—but now our Mr. Port has come forward with some truly astonishing blooms, and the camp is divided. Some friendships are quite severely strained at Flower Show time, but by Harvest Thanksgiving everything is as it was before and all bitternesses have been forgotten, and this is as it should be. Love to you all,

DOROTHY BLACK

Aching feet can put lines in your face

● When your feet are sore, throbbing with fatigue . . . your face looks tense and tired! . . . And perhaps even worse, those little pain-lines can be the beginning of unpleasant wrinkles!

That's why it pays to rub those feet with Absorbine Jr. at the first sign of ache or fatigue.

First, Absorbine Jr. quickly cools and soothes the sore spots. Second, it counters the irritation that causes the pain with a grand muscle-relaxing effect!

When your feet feel better, you feel better . . . and your face shows it! Get Absorbine Jr. wherever drugs are sold . . . $1.25 a long-lasting bottle or MAIL COUPON TODAY!

"It feels so good."

Absorbine Jr

Mail this coupon today

W. F. Young, Inc.
250 Lyman Street, Springfield 3, Mass.

Please send me a Free sample bottle of Absorbine Jr.—Postpaid.

Name_____

Address_____

There's one in every office

The other girls never asked Laura to lunch if they could possibly avoid it. Not that she wasn't good company or that she didn't pay her share . . . but she had one fault that outweighed her good points. What it* was, Laura, poor girl, would be the last to suspect. There's one in every office . . . and she had to be the one.

It can happen to you...any time

How's your breath today? You could be guilty of *halitosis (unpleasant breath) right now . . . without realizing it. Halitosis may be absent one day and present the next . . . and, when it is, you are in wrong with everybody. It can nullify your other good points.

Isn't it foolish to risk offending when Listerine Antiseptic is such a simple and delightful precaution . . . such an extra-careful one? You simply rinse the mouth with it before any date and, lo! . . . your breath is instantly fresher, sweeter, less likely to offend.

To be extra-attractive be extra-careful

A number of things will relieve off-color breath momentarily, but Listerine Antiseptic sweetens and freshens the breath instantly . . . and helps keep it that way . . . not for seconds . . . not for minutes . . . but for hours, usually. No wonder it's the extra-careful precaution against bad breath. So, to be extra-attractive, be extra-careful. Never, never omit Listerine Antiseptic night and morning, and before any date, when you want to be at your best.

While some cases of halitosis are of systemic origin, most cases, say some authorities, are due to the bacterial fermentation of tiny food particles clinging to mouth surfaces. Listerine Antiseptic quickly halts such fermentation, then overcomes the odors fermentation causes.

LAMBERT PHARMACAL COMPANY, St. Louis, Mo.

BEFORE ANY DATE . . . LISTERINE ANTISEPTIC

. . . . IT'S BREATH-TAKING!

See and Hear THE SAMMY KAYE SHOW ★ "So You Want to Lead a Band"
CBS TELEVISION NETWORK

Florentine Lace

PIERCED STERLING

A Brilliant New Achievement By

REED & BARTON

The six-piece place setting, including tax, $38.50

Distinctively New, Exquisitely Pierced Solid Silver. Florentine Lace . . . beauty inspired by treasures of Catherine de Medici, Renaissance patroness of arts. Never before have you seen silver with so much fine and lacy piercing! You will use this sterling proudly, for every occasion — with every type of china, crystal, linen. Florentine Lace, Reed & Barton's latest triumph in sterling silver craftsmanship for your table.

A beautifully illustrated Florentine Lace folder will be mailed upon request to Box 990L, Reed & Barton, Taunton, Mass., Silvermasters since 1824.

Ladies' Home JOURNAL

Bruce Gould and Beatrice Blackmar Gould Editors

BIRDS AND FLOWERS HANGING SCROLL
1368-1644
COURTESY METRO. MUS. OF ART

Your Red Feather

October is RED FEATHER month, and in cities and towns all over America united Red Feather campaigns are in full swing. That's traditional—it happens every fall.

But this year there's a difference. The RED FEATHER is a bigger Red Feather. Symbol of more than 15,000 health, recreation and welfare services that combine their appeals once a year in more than 1300 local Community Chest campaigns, the RED FEATHER this year has an added assignment: the United Defense Fund.

Our mobilization for the defense of democracy demands efficiency, economy and wise planning in health and welfare services, just as it does in industry. The United Defense Fund answers that demand, for it finances the combined strength and know-how of national health, recreation and welfare agencies.

Included in the United Defense Fund are: United Service Organizations, Inc. (USO); American Social Hygiene Association; National Recreation Association (emergency defense program); United Community Defense Services; American Relief for Korea.

Health, recreation and welfare services such as family-service agencies, visiting nurses, Scouts, the "Y," boys' clubs, hospitals, clinics, Traveler's Aid, USO, children's-aid societies and United Civilian Defense Services provide help civilians need. Volunteers undertake the enormous task each fall of raising money to provide these human services. And everyone, no matter what his income, can contribute to the welfare of his neighbor through his pledge to his town's UNITED RED FEATHER CAMPAIGN.

There's just one thing to remember. It's a bigger Red Feather this year because it includes Community Chests and the United Defense Fund. When you contribute with generosity to your local united RED FEATHER campaign, you are helping to strengthen and defend democracy.

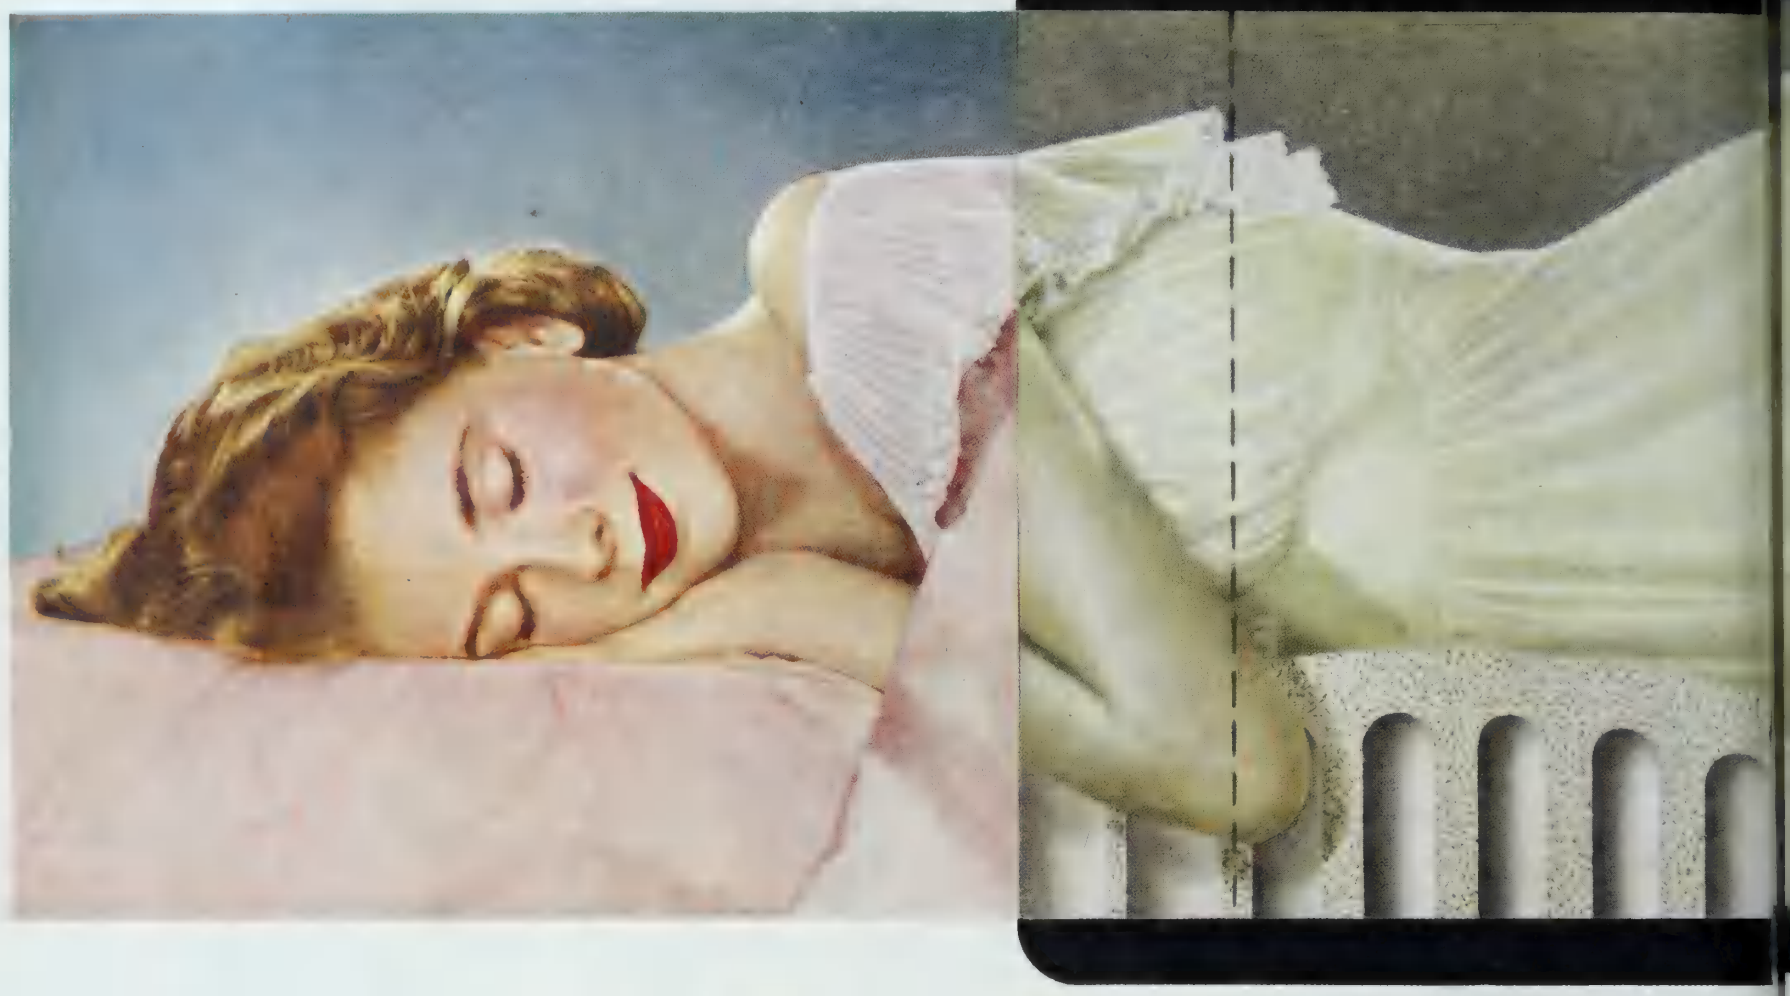
Democracy in Theory and Practice

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

Any thoughtful observer of government in the United States today is forced to report widespread political cynicism and deep distrust of government on all levels, as well as a popular feeling of helplessness, sometimes approaching despair—more often expressing apathy.

During the current year, the Senate Committee to Investigate Organized Crime in the United States (the Kefauver Committee) uncovered appalling situations. It was established that criminal rackets are nationally organized; that in every state gangsters are allied for mutual profit with law-enforcement agencies; that in some places it is difficult to disentangle or even distinguish organized crime from organized government.

Chicago was found to be still in the grip of the Capone heirs; in Detroit, industry was being blackmailed into co-operation with gangs. Missouri politicians were disclosed as in alliance with a variety of rackets; Kansas City politicians were involved in murder. California's Mickey Cohen had fingers in many government activities; former Mayor O'Dwyer, of New York, admitted tolerating henchmen who closed their eyes to crime. In instance after instance the investigation revealed police captains unable to explain their extraordinary bank accounts.



Simultaneously it was shown that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which lends the money of the American people to businessmen, was full of favoritism for political pets.

The assumption has been that the fact of exposure would, of itself, bring about purification. We doubt it. The American people did not demand that former Mayor O'Dwyer be removed from his post as their representative in Mexico. They were appalled and disgusted, but most of them, when the exciting television show was over, settled back into the hope that things would improve—with the same apathy about doing anything to improve them.

Yet the puritan spirit is not dead. A majority of Americans place honesty, integrity (Continued on Page 14)

Executive Editor, Mary Bass • Managing Editor, Laura Lou Brookman
Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Alice Blinn, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Dawn Crowell Norman, John Godfrey Morris, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary, Jan Weyl
Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Barbara Benson, Margaret Hickey, Betty Kidd
Assistant Editors: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Donald Stuart, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Shapley Matthews, Alice Conkling, June Torrey, Joseph Di Pietro, Anne Einselen, Glenn Matthew White, Betty Niles Gray, Elizabeth Goetsch, Robert N. Taylor, Elizabeth McFarland, Charles Stryker Ingerman, Elizabeth Crawford
Editorial Assistants: Alice Kastberg, Jeanne Lenton Tracey, Adrina Casparian, Virginia Price, Marion Wilson, Victoria Harris, Helen Schmidt Kennedy, Cornelia S. McCook, Rosemary Jones, Virginia Carr, Sallie Eager Kubly, Lee Stowell Cullen, Jeanmarie Dunn, Elizabeth W. Graham, Isabel G. Phelps, Pauline Stieglitz, Erma W. Kelley, Janice H. Bauder, Dolores Knapp, Dorothy Anne Robinson

the X-ray story of how

Form-Fitting, because it is built to support the different weights of head . . . torso . . . limbs . . .

No matter what your size, weight or build, your body weights vary much like this young lady's. So you need the Form-Fitting Mattress Construction that gives different kinds of support to the different weights of your body. The Form-Fitted Foamex Mattress does this . . . and floats your body in natural balance while you sleep.

33 pounds from head to just above the waist. The larger air spaces (nature's own springs) in this section of the Foamex mattress give lighter support where you are lighter.

68½ pounds from waist to knees. This mattress section is built with more firm, lively Foamex (smaller air spaces) for heavier support where you are heavier.

25½ pounds from knees to to You get larger air spaces in t foot section of the Foamex ma tress to float your lighter limb

Form-Fitting, because it moulds itself to the curves of your body.

Foamex conforms to your contours like a second skin. It yields to fingertip pressure . . . returns instantly to level smoothness when you take the pressure away. Although soft as a rose petal to the touch, Foamex supports you firmly when you lie on it. Tired, aching muscles are cradled in blissful relaxation. You sleep deeply—you awake alert and refreshed on a Form-Fitted Foamex Mattress.

...et more rest while you sleep

...his entirely new and exclusive Form-Fitting Construction supports ...our different body weights while it cradles your body curves

The Form-Fitted Mattress of Firestone FOAMEX*

...e X-Ray Story proves it! Now your body ...n rest as nature meant it to rest. Not ... the board-like surface of too firm a mat-...ss, not on the sagging discomfort of too soft ...nattress. But cradled in balanced comfort ... cloud-soft Foamex built with firmer sup-...rt in the mid-section.

...e Form-Fitted Mattress is a Firestone ...amex exclusive! No other mattress so com-...etely supports your body in correct sleeping ...sition. The Form-Fitted Foamex Mattress ...ves you lighter support in the head and ...ot sections—firmer support under your ...avier mid-section. No matter how much ...u turn, twist or change position in sleep, ...ur different body weights stay evenly bal-...ced in rest.

...ght after night, year after year, Firestone ...amex always gives "brand new mattress" comfort. Foamex stays lively for life. Nothing to break or come apart. Just pure milk of the rubber tree, whipped with air to a creamy foam—baked like angel food cake. After 12 years of 24 hour use in hospitals, Foamex mattresses showed no sign of wear.

You can feel the heavenly softness of Foamex yourself. Bedding departments everywhere feature Form-Fitted Foamex Mattresses and matching Box Springs. Just stretch out and imagine what it's like to be cradled in comfort every night of your life.

Form-Fitted Mattress of Firestone Foamex $79.75

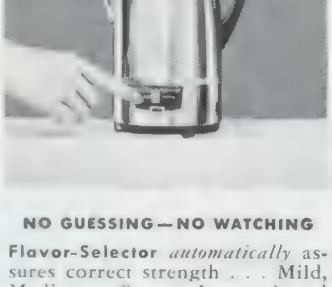
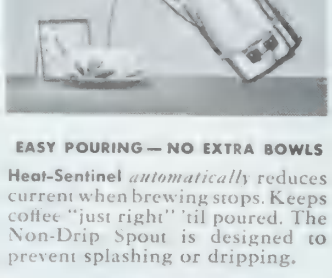
available with Special Matching Box Spring $69.75

Prices subject to change



Look for this label at better stores everywhere!

© 1951 Firestone Industrial Products Company



Enjoy the Voice of Firestone Monday Evenings on NBC Radio and Television

NO GUESSING—NO WATCHING

Flavor-Selector automatically assures correct strength . . . Mild, Medium or Strong. Just set it and forget it—the Redi-Lite will come on when coffee is ready to pour.

EASY POURING—NO EXTRA BOWLS

Heat-Sentinel automatically reduces current when brewing stops. Keeps coffee "just right" 'til poured. The Non-Drip Spout is designed to prevent splashing or dripping.

Completely Automatic—Complete in One Unit

Everyone enjoys the automatic convenience of a Universal Coffeematic. Just set it . . . and forget it! Select the exact strength you want, and the wonderful Coffeematic takes over . . . automatically brews coffee to the correct strength and signals when it is done.

Your coffee stays hot, too, cup after cup is kept at perfect serving temperature without increasing the strength. And remember, Coffeematic has no bowls or extra, cumbersome parts to remove.

For features, for the flavor and quality of the brew . . . for its completely automatic action, it's no wonder Coffeematic is America's Favorite Coffeemaker.

Copyright, 1951, LF&C

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

UNIVERSAL

LANDERS, FRARY & CLARK, NEW BRITAIN, CONN.

(Continued from Page 11)

and independence of mind above party loyalties and class interests. It has often been demonstrated that voters will break class and party allegiances to support candidates whom they believe to have these qualities. It is not true that "good" men cannot be elected to office. Men who have taken the currently unpopular side of issues have repeatedly been re-elected to Congress, simply because the people had respect for their characters.

In every community there are men and women in whose characters, energy and judgment large numbers of people have confidence. They may be newspaper editors, clergymen, businessmen or trade-union leaders. They are on hand for every unofficial movement for community improvement; they do not sway with every wind that blows, but are rooted in character and common sense.

Why is it often difficult to persuade such persons to run for public office?

First, because too few people are trying to persuade them. But such able persons have other doubts. They say, "I am incompetent to play the political leader who dares to run afoul of the 'idols of the market place.' Maybe I could take it, but I don't want my kids coming home from school with black eyes for defending me against what this or that radio commentator may have said about me the day before. You can't exercise good judgment if your chief purpose is to get yourself re-elected. And party leaders don't regard character and competence as necessarily the best vote-getting qualities. There are few men in political life today who would dare oppose any measure which has a strongly organized claque behind it."

Since political parties are a fact, the first duty of a citizen, it seems to me, is to join one—and, of the major parties, I don't think it makes a great deal of difference which one. If we leave the composition and control of political parties only to people who have some personal or group interest to promote, we are going to have officials nominated by special interests and under obligation to them. These may be criminal racketeers seeking collusion with law-enforcement agencies, or selfish pressure groups of other kinds.

A legislature or Congress which becomes a mere recording machine of waves of feeling or organized pressures ceases to be a deliberative body. "Write your congressman" is good advice only if the writer has himself carefully deliberated the issue involved. It is more important to have a representative whose honesty and wisdom one can trust.

The American people could do much to create a more civilized atmosphere if they would more vigorously and publicly condemn campaigns of character assassination based on unsupported and irresponsible charges. Our libel laws are much looser than are those in Great Britain. It is practically impossible to win a suit for libel where one can prove no damages beyond an offense to one's honor. Almost any kind of slander goes on the floor of Congress under cover of Congressional immunity. Certain journalists and radio commentators—some with a wide audience—have themselves so well insured against libel suits that they feel they can risk making charges that, in another age, would have brought a challenge to a duel. Indiscriminate mudslinging coarsens the whole tone and temper of the nation and increases general cynicism.

Democratic government will never survive the shocks of this epoch of change and overturn merely by its theoretical virtues. Democracy, to survive, must provide not only popular government, but good government. It must not only represent the people. It must represent in large measure the best in the people—the best in their traditions and in their character. It must preserve liberty without permitting liberty to degenerate into license, and maintain authority without permitting authority to degenerate into tyranny.

Such government requires certain dispositions of mind on the part of the governed: a high respect for law, a natural respect for oneself and others, and a willingness to subject issues to the tests of reason. It requires the presence of a natural nobility who set the tones and standards of society; not an aristocracy of birth, or of wealth, or of power groups, but an aristocracy of brains and virtue—persons who welcome and accept responsibility without hope of personal gain.

To increase the number of such persons is the function of democratic education. The majority of the American people undoubtedly put the national welfare above their own peculiar interests, yet this majority is never adequately represented. It never will be unless more people participate more actively in party life at the grass roots. THE END

Small Places With Hopeful Names

By ROBERT P. TRISTRAM COFFIN

New England breaks out in good names
Upon its smallest crossroads places:
Bethel, Goshen, Gilead;
God's light is on their well-washed faces.

No place too high or far or mighty—
Athens, Paris, Mexico—
But little makers of red clover
Named their one-horse villages so.

And as the honeyed years rolled on Small tanned boys outgrew their breeches,
Left bucksaws to rule commonwealths,
Caught the stars in bold half hitches.

The villages had names so handsome,
Concord, Friendship, Harmony,
Plain carpenters grew nation builders,
Plain shepherds, shepherds of the sea.

New England is the law of growing
Bigger in barns and faith and mind;
The plowman sees small boys who follow
As preachers and teachers close behind.

The waters of life burst still from acres
Hard and steep and sweet with stone,
Small places with hopeful names are makers
Of best New England brains and bone.

Brand-new! For lemon pies that taste homemade!

Now—for the first time in a pie mix—you can get that wonderful, teasing, tangy taste—just like fresh-squeezed, fresh-grated lemons!

And so quickly, too! Jell-O Lemon Pudding and Pie Filling saves about 15 minutes' time—gives you perfect texture every time. Never stiff or too runny. Always just right!

Directions on package for this luscious lemon meringue pie. Get a package at your grocer's today. Guaranteed best—or your money back!

Grand too! For scrumptious puddings and pies!

Chocolate Macaroon Pudding. A rich pudding with crunchy macaroons! So easy, too! Prepare package Jell-O Chocolate Pudding and Pie Filling as directed. Chill. Layer with macaroon crumbs in parfait glasses. Garnish. Serves 4.

Vanilla Cranberry Treat. A luscious combination of tart cranberries and delicate vanilla flavor. Try this new treat tonight: Prepare 1 package Jell-O Vanilla Pudding and Pie Filling as directed. Chill. Serve in sherbet glasses and top with cranberry sauce. Serves 4.

Butterscotch Cream Pie. Oodles of brown sugar flavor makes this pie tops with the family. Such a thrifty treat, too! Prepare 1 package Jell-O Butterscotch Pudding and Pie Filling as directed. Turn into baked 8-inch pie shell. Chill. Top with sweetened whipped cream.

JELL-O PUDDINGS AND PIE FILLINGS FOR Red Letter DESSERTS

JELL-O IS A REGISTERED TRADE-MARK OF GENERAL FOODS CORPORATION

ECONOMATIC GAS COOKING

So Simple, So Easy, So Quick!

Throw away the matches—HARDWICK EconoMatic is a complete system of pilot lighting, with every advantage of automatic oven lighting as well as the convenience of top burners that light instantly at the turn of a valve. EconoMatic lighting is pin-point, so that your range will be cool in all kinds of weather—a cooler top, a cooler oven when not in use.

OLD STOVE ROUNDUP—Trade for a Hardwick EconoMatic Now!

HARDWICK
EconoMatic pin-point pilot lighting

Costs So Little!

HARDWICK Gas Ranges are famous for value because you don't pay for gadgets and extras but invest in actual cooking performance. EconoMatic adds to the saving. For pin-point lighting costs less to operate and your savings will go on, year after year.

Usual Oven Pilot Flame
HARDWICK EconoMatic
About ⅓ as large
Automatic convenience, a cooler range, finer cooking performance —at a new low cost!

Gas has got it!

MODEL 5526-1-EM

HARDWICK
STOVE COMPANY
Established 1879
CLEVELAND, TENNESSEE
See your dealer, your gas company, or write to Dept. L-15

AGA Approved for LP, Natural or Manufactured Gases

WORLD WIDE

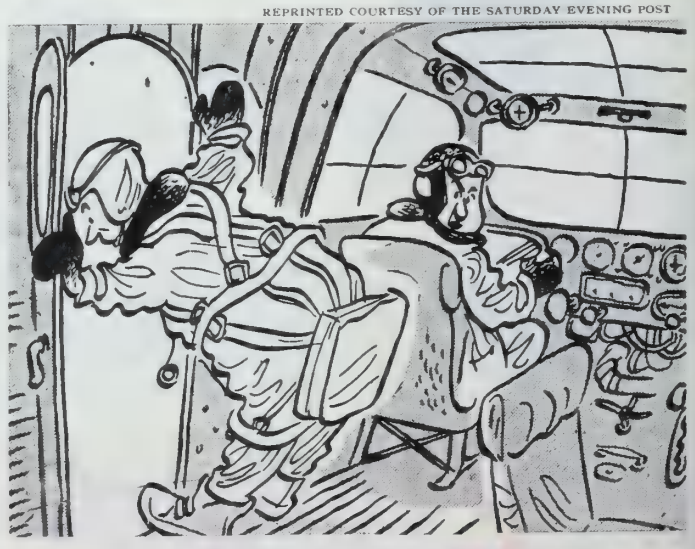
Mayor Impellitteri takes the first ride on the new merry-go-round.

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

THE carrousel burned down. You know, last November, in Central Park. The horses had capered there for just under eighty years, and New York children rode the same ones that their parents, their grandparents and their great-great-grandparents had ridden. It was a sad day. But another carrousel was found, and once again the organ plays, the horses prance, and for seven cents a child gets a five-minute ride. It is one of the nicest things in New York.

New York is a cozy place, as we've always said. Bowery flophouses are showing television. In a recent cleanup of old telephone directories such articles were found between the leaves as wedding certificates, love letters, bankbooks, auto licenses, unused theater tickets, defense bonds, money and horse-race tips. The tiny red lighthouse under George Washington Bridge, beloved of birds and children, is going to stay—though it looked for a tragic time as if it mightn't. And Peter, the hippo at the Bronx Zoo, recently celebrated his forty-eighth birthday. Th birthday cake was a cabbage topped with carrot, which he ate after his usual meal ninety pounds of hay and twelve gallons soup.



Which for some reason brings to min TRUE TALES FROM THE ANNALS C CRIME AND RASCALITY, by St. Cla McKelway. There is the tale of M 880, the counterfeiter who stuck t one-dollar bills; the story of firebu out for insurance; of Harry Bridg fooling with the FBI; of the tong wa and of the innocent man sent to Sin Sing, who had to pay thousands of do lars to gain his freedom and wasn given even the regulation twenty do lars when he left. Amazing tales.

•

"All men are frightened," Gener Patton said once. "The more intell gent they are, the more they a frightened. The courageous man

(Continued on Page 18)

REPRINTED COURTESY OF THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"Quit yelling 'Watch out below!' Just jump!"

New! BROWN BREAD SO QUICK SO EASY!

Brer Rabbit OVEN-BAKED BEANS

2 No. 2 cans Oven-Baked Beans
½ cup BRER RABBIT New Orleans MOLASSES*
2 teaspoons salt
½ cup finely chopped onion
½ cup finely chopped green pepper
8 frankfurters

Combine beans and molasses. Fold in salt, onion and green pepper. Pour into shallow baking dish. Cut frankfurters in half lengthwise, then crosswise. Brush with molasses and arrange on top of beans. Bake at 425° F. (hot oven) 15 minutes or until frankfurters are well browned. Makes 6 servings.

Now a meal that's really easy and economical—and really delicious, too!

You don't steam this elegant new Brown Bread—you bake it. And it's wonderful! Tender, moist, and rich with authentic old-time molasses flavor!

Serve it with a bubbling casserole of plump "oven-baked" beans, dressed up this grand new way. Here's a quick, easy, satisfying meal—for only pennies per serving!

The secret is plenty of Brer Rabbit New Orleans Molasses. Brer Rabbit, made only from freshly crushed, Southern plantation sugar cane, has a character all its own.

It's rich in food iron, too . . . needed for building good red blood. Use it freely . . . in Beans 'n' Brown Bread . . . as a delicious spread . . . and to give extra goodness to your baking.

© 1951 Penick & Ford, Ltd., Inc.

*Use either Gold Label Brer Rabbit—light, mild-flavored. Or Green Label—darker, more full-flavored.

Brer Rabbit ALL-BRAN BROWN BREAD

1 cup ALL-BRAN
½ cup seedless raisins
2 tablespoons shortening
½ cup BRER RABBIT New Orleans MOLASSES*
¾ cup boiling water
1 egg
1 cup sifted flour
1 teaspoon baking soda
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon cinnamon (if desired)

1. Measure All-Bran, raisins, shortening, molasses into mixing bowl. Add boiling water, stir until shortening is melted. Add egg; beat well.
2. Sift together flour, soda, salt, cinnamon; add to All-Bran mixture, stirring only until combined.
3. Fill 2 greased cans (baked bean cans) about ⅔ full . . . or if you prefer, use medium loaf pan. Bake in preheated mod. oven (350° F.) about 45 min. Serve hot.

FREE! A colorfully illustrated cook book! 124 delicious tested recipes. Helpful tips for successful baking. An exciting easier method for making gingerbread and cookies. FOR THIS VALUABLE FREE BOOK, send your name and address today to PENICK & FORD, Dept. H-I, New Orleans 7, La.

Name _____ (Print)

Address _____

City _____ Zone _____

(Offer good in Continental U.S.A. and Canada)

Brer Rabbit New Orleans Molasses

Made by the Makers of My-T-Fine Desserts and Vermont Maid Syrup

Turn a carefree face to the weather...

Stop fretting your pretty head about your dry skin—even when the weather's to blame! Given a little loving care, it can be about the nicest skin there is! By nature, it tends to have finer pores, fewer blackheads and bumps than other skin types. And Dorothy Gray has a special beauty care to bring out all these natural advantages!

Dorothy Gray has special creams and lotions for every skin type...

For dry skin, follow the "Rule of Three" below. For oily, normal or combination skin, use the "Rule of Three" with the special preparations made for each type.

1. FLAKY SKIN? Coax out the dirt, smooth and soften. Rule 1 is Cleanse . . . with mild, gentle, yet thorough Dry-Skin Cleanser . . . $1.25 to $4.

2. DRAB, DULL SKIN needs local stimulation. Rule 2 is Stimulate, brighten and freshen without drying. Pat with Orange Flower Skin Lotion, $1 to $3.75.

3. TINY LINES and rough patches need a smoothing, softening, overnight treatment. Rule 3 is Lubricate . . . with Special Dry-Skin Mixture, $2.25 and $4.

All prices plus tax trust Dorothy Gray and the "Rule of Three"

(Continued from Page 16)

the man who forces himself, in spite of his fear, to carry on."

That certainly goes for the paratroopers, whose every jump is like a little death. The finest book we've read about the paratroopers—one of the most vivid and dramatic of all war books—is THOSE DEVILS IN BAGGY PANTS, by Ross Carter. This was the outfit that jumped and fought in Sicily, Salerno, Shrapnel Pass, the Plains of Naples, the Volturno, Cassino, Anzio and the Battle of the Bulge. Only three men were left out of the original platoon whom we get to know like our own brothers, and this book is the first-hand account by one of the three.

•

When Melville Goodwin USA wanted to get out of uniform, he bought the oddest clothes, you will remember. . . . When Marlon Brando (movies) went to a swank

COURTESY OF THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"You like it?—I mean, I'm certainly glad you like it, sir!"

affair where formal attire was de rigueur he wore black sneakers instead of white. . . . And when Joe Adonis, jailed after the Kefauver Committee finished with him, went to prison, he ordered two dozen monogrammed silk shirts to take with him. Or so we hear.

•

In another crime book, FRAMED IN BLOOD, Brett Halliday, creator of the Mike Shayne mysteries, has ten commandments for women who wish to avoid trouble. Among them are:

1. Do not walk alone in bad neighborhoods after dark.

2. If accosted, try to get away . . . nails and nail files and the jagged edges of keys help if you don't know jujitsu.

3. For those who have to go into those neighborhoods, a whistle should be standard equipment.

4. Do not tell your business loud enough for strangers to hear.

5. Do not "make friends," male or female, in questionable haunts.

6. If local police action doesn't work, complain to newspaper and radio-TV stations.

•

In spite of the fact that most critics (including this humble department) would say that William Faulkner is one of our greatest living writers, one can still admit that REQUIEM FOR A NUN is tough going. It's true that when you're through you've got something—a story not unlike DOUBLE MUSCADINE, with murder and a court scene, down in ol' Mississippi. But it is done in dark and turgid Faulknerian prose, and there are moments when you feel like throwing it across the room.

(Continued on Page 22)

Never Before!

CELLOPHANE TAPE THAT sticks as tight as new TEXCEL

NEW TEXCEL CELLOPHANE TAPE

INDUSTRIAL TAPE CORP., NEW BRUNSWICK, N

LOOK AGAIN!

No matter where you buy your cottons, no matter what you pay...

They can't shrink out of fit—if they are trade-marked "Sanforized"

So in these times, above all others, insist on seeing "Sanforized" on the label.

BEFORE you buy, make even your favorite salesgirl show you "Sanforized" on the label!

Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc permits use of its trade-mark "Sanforized," adopted in 1930, only on fabrics which meet this company's rigid shrinkage requirements. Fabrics b. mark "Sanforized" will not shrink more than 1% by the Government's standard test.

Just another heart case!

A few years ago, the words "heart case" spelled doom for a child. Endocarditis—infection of the lining of the heart—was until quite recently a relentless killer in childhood. Those whom it did not destroy, it so severely injured that an abbreviated life span, accompanied by physical, social and economic limitations, was a usual result. Before the discovery of the sulfa drugs, bacterial endocarditis killed more than 97 per cent of those attacked. The sulfas, particularly sulfadiazine, gave promise that a successful fight could be waged against these invaders.

With the advent of penicillin the way was shown to arrest these infections in a majority of cases. Very high dosages are required, and they must be coupled with good nutrition and expert nursing care, but about 65% of cases recover on penicillin alone. Aureomycin, and other newer antibiotics give promise of greatly improving the latter figure. In a recent scientific review it was authoritatively stated that there now exists the theoretical possibility of curing 95% of such cases!

We have to thank for such lifesaving gifts not only the research teams who devote intensive study to investigations of this kind, but also the freedom of intellectual and economic growth which is our way of life. To build for the future, to battle for the health and happiness of all, and to break through almost insuperable barriers—by competitive effort—these are our heritage as a free people.

Through research, they live who would have died!

Lederle

(Pronounced Led'-er-lee)

A Division of American Cyanamid Company
30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York 20, N. Y.

More Growth More Fun

for your child in every HOLGATE TOY

Choose the toys that help your child progress! Holgate's famous educational toys fit the age needs of every pre-school child. Approved by pediatricians and educators. At better stores everywhere.

LACING SHOE. Beloved by youngsters—this nursery rhyme toy quickly develops lacing skill. They love to practice on this charming shoe which holds the Old Woman and her many children. From 1½ to 5 yrs. . . . $3.50

ROCKY COLOR CONE. How it fascinates! A spindle with six rainbow-colored discs to stack in order, unstack or tip over. Repeated play develops eye-hand coordination, aids perception of size and shape. Chew-safe, color-fast. From 6 to 18 mos. . . . $1.00

HOLGATE TOYS

TRAIN AS WELL AS ENTERTAIN

FREE Folder showing large assortment of Holgate Toys. Or send 10¢ (to cover mailing cost), for complete 16-page catalog, including selection chart showing toys suitable for each age from 6 months to 8 years.

HOLGATE BROTHERS CO.
Kane, Pa., Dept. L-101

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *Zone*____ *State*_____

(Continued from Page 22)

Big-oaks-out-of-little-acorns dept. The National Music League is to musicians what the Artists' Gallery is to painters and sculptors. The League is nonprofit, and is dedicated to the cause of the young American musician. The artists who apply must be American, thirty or under, and with enough talent and experience to begin a professional career. They are selected through a rigid audition system, and auditions are held only when the artist list has a vacancy, or when an increase in business warrants enlarging it.

After selecting these young artists, the League proceeds to build up their names. It books engagements for them in colleges and small communities so that they may have experience before audiences in all parts of the country, and when they become sufficiently well known may be picked up by the large management firms, and eventually—as has happened in many cases—become big names. Risë Stevens was a League artist, John Brownlee, Josephine Antoine, John Gurney, Carroll Glenn, and many others whose names have become familiar to concert and opera goers.

An exchange with foreign countries is also being inaugurated. This year France is sending a violinist to the U. S. A., and the League in return is sending a sonata team—pianist and violinist—to France. A representative of the League will also appear in Brazil.

The League depends for its existence upon voluntary contributions.

•

An absorbing historical novel, worthy to rank beside KRISTIN LAVRANSDATTER, is THE UTMOST ISLAND—set in the year 1000, the scene Iceland, and the hero probably Leif Ericson. The author is Henry Myers.

•

There are No People like Show People, for generosity. When one of the players in a certain popular band became critically ill after an auto crash, he was kept alive by blood donations from Latin Quarter chorus girls. He had twenty transfusions. . . . Danny Kaye put on a bang-up show in London for the benefit of the family of the late Sid Field, British comedian, with acts by Orson Welles, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Judy Garland, and a trio that brought down the house, sung by Danny, Vivien Leigh and her husband, Sir Laurence Olivier. . . . Bob Hope turned over his entire fee for London appearances this last visit to Clubland, a youth club blitzed during the war. He gave them $80,000.

ACME

Danny Kaye, Vivien Leigh and Laurence Olivier bring down the house in London.

Looking at the pictures gives you an idea of the appeal of Gibbs tots-to-teen-age underwear. Selected, fine quality combed yarn assures long wear. Generous tailoring allows plenty of room for action, prevents binding and chafing. Gibbs underwear stays soft, holds its shape. It's made for long and active wear. See it at leading department stores and specialty shops.

Top to bottom:

Infant's gown.
Tie sleeve and bottom.
Pink, blue, maize, mint.

Infant's slipover shirt.
With didytabs.
Sizes 3 to 18 months

Infant's training pant.
2-way-stretch, elastic waist, double panel front and back.
Sizes 12 to 36 months.

Girl's slipover vest.
Patented shoulder.
Sizes 2, 4, 6, 8.

Girl's panty.
2-way-stretch, double panel front and back.
Sizes 2, 4, 6, 8.

Girl's vest.
Fine gauge super yarn.
Sizes 6 to 16.

Girl's panty.
Fine gauge super yarn, elastic waist, rib cuff leg.
Sizes 6 to 16.

Boy's "T" shirt.
Medium weight.
Sizes 2 to 16.

Boy's brief.
Medium weight, elastic waist, fly front.
Sizes 2 to 16.

Runproof slip and panty of Gibbs soft Tricot. Trimmed with Val Lace. Easily washed; no ironing needed. Pink, blue, white, maize. Sizes 2 to 8 and 10 to 16.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Meg Wohlberg

COMMENDED BY THE CHILDREN'S SERVICE BUREAU OF PARENTS MAGAZINE

Ask for Gibbs in Infants', Children's and Teen Age Sizes

GIBBS UNDERWEAR CO.

Empire State Bldg., New York 1, N.Y. Philadelphia 34, Pa.

What glorious beauty! What superb wear! What luxury Boltaflex Swirl pattern gives your sofa! Even pooch's muddy paws don't faze Swirl . . . or any other Boltaflex pattern and finish for that matter. Just a flick of a damp cloth, and presto! — Boltaflex is clean again.

Boltaflex*

means Covered with lasting Beauty

*THE FINEST ALL-PLASTIC COVERING MATERIAL

THIS IS Swirl

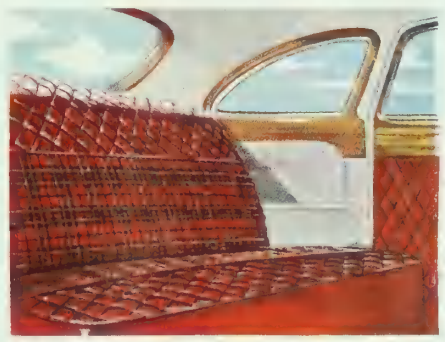
It's newer than new . . . it has all the magnificent beauty of luxury fabric . . . it wears like it never heard of wearing out . . . it could only be one of the superb Boltaflex Textelle patterns!

SWIRL captures in pure plastic the rich beauty of brocade, the exquisite colors that fashion smiles on.

Yet Swirl, like all Boltaflex, takes infinite wear — less care than burlap. It won't chip, won't peel; resists scuffing, staining, fading. It even likes to have its face washed . . . and, praise be, it just looks expensive!

For sofas, for headboards, for high-chairs for the family heirs there's a beautiful Boltaflex pattern and finish to glorify your home. The finest stores everywhere have handsome Boltaflex-covered furniture. Look for the Boltaflex tag — it tells the best from the rest.

Want to know more? Write today to Department L-10.



BOLTA PRODUCTS SALES, INC.
Lawrence, Massachusetts

HOME DECORATING

INFLATABLES

BOLTA-QUILT FOR AUTO SEAT COVERS

There's a Man in the House

By HARLAN MILLER

What's become of the new-fashioned girl who paid for her own steak or banana split on a date? From Junior's demands for emergency financing, I gather he doesn't know any. "As of 1951," he briefs me, "they're extinct."

I know one way to silence my Dream Girl: by chatting about my own funeral's details. "Give me a modest funeral," I tell her, "so you can use the money you save for a long cruise and maybe lasso a rich husband!"

The man next door has suddenly acquired a future son-in-law, much to his surprise. "I can tell there's a wedding in the offing," he confides, "because my daughter has begun to look at everything movable in the house as if it were loot to be carted away!"

On laundry day at our house I must wake up an hour earlier to get a warmish shower bath. Alas, the queer view prevails that the washing is far more important than my bath.

I observe that the Great Debate has filtered down to bridge-table conversation. There isn't a woman in our town so ignorant on world affairs that she doesn't know exactly how General MacArthur combs his hair.

At our town's first country-club party of the autumn, our local No. 1 passion flower confided to me that her technique with the men is based on Madame Pompadour's first axiom: Treat all men as if they were four-year-olds with a splinter in a toe.

In our house, the battle of music continues with no quarter. Every time I want to play Smoke Gets in Your Eyes on the phonograph, Junior hastily puts on something noisy by a musical wonder boy apparently named Satchmo.

I wish every homely girl in our town could paste on her mirror this little gem from my grandmother: "A soft, sweet voice and clear enunciation are as becoming to a girl as a well-shaped nose."

"These Halloween handouts," complains Betty Comfort, whisking her birdbath and big outdoor vases out of harm's way, "are getting too fancy. Some of our richer chums are so afraid of the little scamps that they're serving 'em practically a buffet supper!"

At least three ecstatic girls in our town have been told they look enough like Corinne Calvet to be her sister. . . . Every time a new movie star dawns, at least 100,000 ordinary American girls who resemble her proudly strut their stuff on Main Street.

Our nervous neighbor with the edgy grocery-bill complex vows he'll never give his wife any more expensive engraved stationery for Christmas. "It costs fourteen cents a sheet," he exclaims bitterly, "and she uses it to scribble her fantastic grocery lists on!"

We really crashed high-level Manhattan on our summer vacation: a bighearted friend lent us his apartment on the forty-second floor of the Waldorf Tower. They even let me pitch a typewriter table on the roof, and our youngest brought up a picnic snack for him and me: the first pickled pig's feet ever eaten on the Waldorf's roof

Maybe the most whimsical wife in our town is the one who has named all her sons for the suitors of her girlhood. (But her only daughter for a rich aunt, not for her husband's college sweetheart, as he suggested!)

We're lucky in our neighborhood: We have a fortyish ex-Big Ten halfback to coach our small-fry footballers. But the kids are rough on him when he puffs 'em a perfect end run, and his anxious wife keeps his crutches handy.

Our eleven-year-old Quentin has hit on a brilliant idea which has eluded me on all my midnight icebox raids all these years: he thinks your kitchen refrigerator doors ought to be of glass, so leftovers may be sized up at a glance. (Better'n glass-doored showers!)

I've noticed that the girls who cause the most masculine anguish at the country-club parties are the ones who manage somehow to wear a primitive female facial expression which says:

"Well, big boy, what are you going to do about me?"

My philosopher chum who lives on the corner says that families are as squeezed together at home as the crew of a submarine, and he demands from his children greater courtesy toward one another than the kind they extend toward even the garbage men and the butcher.

"I've compromised with my wife about our football games this fall," Peter Comfort tells me, attempting vainly to dropkick his son's football over the garage. "If I won't yell signals from the grandstand, she won't insist on enough stadium equipment to transform our seats into a boudoir."

My neighbor with the double mortgage has the cheerfulest face in our block. "I wear a serene mask and keep a stiff upper lip," he said, "to convince my wife and kids that I know all the answers, even if I don't."

Quite a few fathers in our block have a "poor boy" complex. Merely because at that age their spending money was a dime or a quarter a week, they're shocked when Junior needs $3.50 to take his girl to dance to the music of a second-rate "name" band.

Meditation over a plumber's bill: I wish they'd taught me more about plumbing repairs and carpentry and painting and electricity in high school. Botany and ancient history were splendid. But a white-collar man could save himself an inflated $1000 or two a year if he knew how to use his hands and a few tools around the house.

In my mania for trimming the grocery bill, I suggested to my wife, before a party, that we could improvise some tasty hors d'oeuvres by putting dainty dabs of hot canned corned-beef hash on tiny squares of toast. "Just like most of your suggestions!" she said scathingly. I claim it'd taste better than lots of appetizers I'm offered.

When my daughter fills my plate at a buffet supper and erroneously gives me a piece of white meat . . .

Or Junior suddenly turns out to be a better bridge player than I am . . .

And our youngest suddenly springs a five-syllable word on me and uses it correctly . . .

Or my Dream Woman suddenly forgets that I'm supposed to be in the doghouse and kisses me tenderly on the top of the head . . .

Then I stop muttering silent tirades and imaginary exhortations to the family and conclude that my family treats me better than such a scalawag deserves.

"I made the big play at the Army game!"

"Jim and I had been dating ever since his Cadet days at West Point. But he always treated me like a little sister. So when he invited me, recently, to go back for a big football week-end, I thought, 'Nancy, this is your chance to make the big play for him!' And here's what happened . . .

"We watched the game in a freezing rain. But I didn't complain about the cold! Jim held my hands to keep them warm, and I had my Jergens Lotion to soften them up for the dance at night. Jergens Lotion is a blessing in this weather . . .

"When we went sight-seeing, the river breezes were sharp and cutting. I was kind of glad, because Jim had to hold me close so I wouldn't shiver, and I knew Jergens Lotion could smooth my chapped skin in a jiffy."

Jergens Lotion is wonderful for rough, chapped skin. It doesn't just coat hands with a film of oil. It softens because it penetrates upper layers of dry, rough skin and furnishes softening moisture it needs . . .

"At the dance that night, Jim kept kissing my cheek. (Thank goodness for Jergens Lotion, I thought.) 'You're such a softie', he whispered, 'do you think you could take the rough grind of an Army wife?'"

Try smoothing Jergens Lotion on your face and arms, and all over after bathing. You'll see why more women use Jergens Lotion than any other hand care in the world. It's still only 10¢ to $1, plus tax.

NEW Wildroot

LIQUID CREAM SHAMPOO

lucky you, when you discover new Wildroot Liquid Cream Shampoo! For it's not just a liquid, not just a cream . . . it's a combination of the best of both.

Soapless Wildroot Liquid Cream Shampoo contains soothing lanolin . . . washes hair without drying away natural oils . . . leaves it gleaming, manageable, curl-inviting.

Even in the hardest water Wildroot Liquid Cream Shampoo foams into a creamy lather that cuts grease and grime . . . that works down to the scalp for deep-down cleansing, that washes away every trace of loose, ugly dandruff . . . leaves hair naturally gleaming and radiant.

Wildroot Liquid Cream Shampoo rinses away in hot or cold water . . . leaves hair alive with sparkling lights without a special rinse. It's right for your hair whether it is dry or oily . . . baby-soft or wiry . . . blond or brunette. It's good for your hair, and remember it contains soothing lanolin.

Soapless Sudsy . . . Lanolin Lovely!

THREE SIZES:
29¢ 59¢ 98¢

P. S. To keep your hair neat between shampoos use Lady Wildroot Cream Hair Dressing.

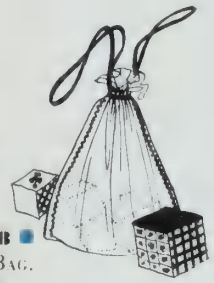
Reference Library

Gifts to make for the little tots on your Christmas list.

2113 LOOPY THE LION. Flannel body, yarn mane. 10c.

2521 SIT-UP ELEPHANT. Use plastic with yarn embroidery. 15c.



2516 FELT BEANBAGS. Clown faces trimmed with bright yarn. 15c.

2302 WILLIAM THE GOAT. Stuffed toy to crochet. 10c.

2117 TERRIBLE TOMMY. Tiger of striped ticking, loopy whiskers. 10c.

2518 OILCLOTH BLOCKS, BAG. Each a different size, color. 15c.

2118 JACK AND JUDY. Rag-doll twins with yarn hair. 10c.

2520 PLASTIC DOG. Made in two pieces, outlined with yarn. 15c.

We will gladly send any of these patterns if you'll order by number. They will be mailed anywhere in the United States and Canada upon receipt of cash, check or money order. Do not send stamped, addressed envelopes. Allow two to three weeks for delivery. Readers in all foreign countries should send International Reply Coupons, purchased at their post office. Each coupon is redeemable for five cents in the United States. Please address all requests to Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

ORDER BLANK

PATTERN NUMBERS

Name_____
(Please Print)

Street_____

City_____ Zone_____

State_____

It's here!

Revlon's

"Indelible-Creme"

world's creamiest lipstick!

in fashion-genius colors!

fabulous wear fabulous luster

fabulous creaminess

The first and only truly creamy non-drying indelible lipstick . . . because it's made with lip-softening *Lanolite! And the colors . . . a full range of fabulous fashion-genius colors only Revlon could create! Discover "Indelible-Creme" now—don't wait another day! 1.10 plus tax

*REGISTERED U. S. TRADEMARK

Making Marriage Work

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS
Ph.D., Pennsylvania State College, Department of Psychology

Learning of her husband's infidelity is one of the hardest blows a wife can receive. She feels she must take some action — but what?

Unfaithful Husbands

"TWO weeks ago I learned that my husband had been unfaithful to me. I was crushed, for I thought our marriage was happy. He admits he's had casual affairs with a dozen women in the last eight years, but claims he wasn't serious about any of them, that life is too short not to make the most of it, and that he is no different from other married men. He is kind and wonderful. I love him, and he says he loves only me, but how can I ever trust him again? I'd rather break clean now than later. What can I do?"

Unquestionably, learning of her husband's infidelity is one of the hardest blows a wife can receive. Hurt, shock and bewilderment are succeeded by indignation. Though she may feel herself partly responsible, she is more likely to blame it all on her husband.

She feels she must take some action—but what? Should she leave him? Demand a divorce? Exact promises, and agree to stay on with him so long as he fulfills them? Or should she accept the situation and continue the marriage in the hope that matters will improve?

There is no easy answer. But one sound principle is to postpone decision and discussion until you are calm enough to face the issues objectively. These questions may help you to analyze the situation.

Do we still love each other? Real love does not attain full maturity through one act, nor is it destroyed by a single episode. If husband and wife still love each other, their marriage is worth trying to save.

Was he like this before we married? Men who had a record of promiscuity long before marriage are seldom able to reverse their past habit patterns. If a girl knowingly marries a man with such a history, she should accept the possibility that he will revert to earlier behavior. She took him "for better, for worse," and should try to adjust to the old problem.

Has his behavior developed since marriage? If so, then the wife must assume some responsibility. In some way, either sexually, as a companion or as a wife, she has failed to fulfill her husband's needs. If she can discover her lacks, and correct them, then the marriage may still grow into a really understanding relationship.

Can I forgive, forget and look ahead? A mother does forgive and forget the misdeeds of her children, because she loves them and knows she is partly responsible for their conduct. She does not discourage their attempts to improve by reminding them of former mistakes. If husbands and wives adopted this attitude toward one another, many heartbreaks would be avoided. There is little hope for happiness in a future which is dominated by past unhappiness.

Has this crisis made it easier for us to talk things over? If the wife (or the husband) regards the situation as an intolerable disgrace, to be mentioned only in anger or as a threat, then nothing can save their love or the marriage. But if the couple face up to the problem, and talk it out calmly and objectively, both may reach a better understanding of the reasons why the husband was unfaithful, and they may even evolve a workable plan to make its recurrence less likely.

Not all husbands are unfaithful, but many are. But, instead of regarding infidelity as the greatest sin in marriage, approach it as you would any other serious difficulty. If you understand each other, if each sincerely tries to meet the other's needs, you have a good chance of resolving the problem and saving the marriage.

Shall We Retire?

"MY husband and I have just passed sixty. He runs his own business, and likes it, and I am kept busy with my home duties and church and social affairs. Now that our three children are married and settled, we can think about retiring, but are not sure we want to. Do you think everybody should retire at a certain age?"

For older people to modify activities in accordance with their decreased energies is desirable; but a contented old age demands not idleness, but continuing participation in the world around us. Physical limitations or employer policy may force retirement; but to retire without substituting new occupations and interests is to reduce existence to a mere procession of purposeless days.

Pension systems and Federal retirement benefits afford some relief from financial anxiety in old age, but do not solve the problem of adjusting to a totally new status. As the proportion of old people in our population grows, it becomes increasingly important to plan for a purposeful and productive old age—just as in youth preparations are made for the years of active working life.

Start planning now. Your present schedule may not allow time for the hobbies and personal and civic projects which appeal to you. But you can start now to plan a program, based on such interests, for the leisurely years ahead.

Suit activities to altered capacities. Since physical energy is less at sixty than at forty; strenuous tennis or golf may no longer be possible. But you can learn less-taxing sports; and you can develop pursuits which depend on faculties which improve with age, such as judgment and emotional control, rather than on sheer physical strength.

Continue working at your regular occupation if feasible, or at something else if not—but continue working. Perhaps you can follow your avocation, or set up a small business of your own. And charitable and welfare organizations have useful work for volunteers, both men and women.

Live in the present. Elderly people often complain of lack of companionship. One reason is that they are prone to talk about what they have done, rather than what they are doing. The person who is alert and interested in the world around him will not lack friends, at eighteen or eighty.

Stay where you are unless compelled by necessity to move. That comfortable sense of belonging is most readily maintained among old friends and familiar surroundings.

The additional leisure of old age offers you and your husband increased opportunity to share in each other's lives. That in itself can make this period one of the richest and most rewarding of your lifetime—provided you start preparing early to make the most of it.

Do You Know Your Luck?

The questions below concern conveniences which fifty years ago were rare luxuries if they existed at all. Yet today many wives take them for granted as necessities. Check to see how your home compares with your grandmother's—or mother's.

HAVE YOU:

1. Running water in your house?
2. Electricity for lights and power?
3. A central heating system?
4. A bathroom?
5. A refrigerator?
6. A gas or electric range?
7. A vacuum cleaner?
8. A telephone?
9. An electric iron or ironer?
10. A radio?
11. The use of an automobile?
12. Daily mail and parcel-post service?
13. Access to a public transportation system?
14. Modern paved roads?

Commonplace as these things seem, they have made the homemaker's tasks both easier and more pleasant. Do you use your bonus of time and energy to enhance your family's happiness?

Do You Agree?

Is it a sin to continue to love and live with a husband who has repeated affairs with other women?

I consulted three ministers who agree with me that the answer is no. Only through your love may he yet change his ways.

It always reflects your prettiest face

Angel Face

MIRROR CASE by Pond's

Angel Face—your "one-and-only" make-up for instant complexion glamour, now in a handsome new Mirror Case complete with mirror and puff!

Heavenly smooth foundation and powder in-one—neatest, sweetest way to look your prettiest!

Velvet-soft Angel Face is all you need for instant complexion loveliness! Pond's unique blend of foundation and powder in-one is so delightfully easy to use! No greasy foundation or damp sponge—never a trace of spilled powder. "Angel Face goes on so easily, gives my skin such a smooth color—and stays on much longer than powder!" says the Countess Jean de Caraman.

New—the enchanting Mirror Case, slim enough to tuck in your slimmest handbag!

Now your "one-and-only" make-up goes where you go, in its stunning new ivory-and-golden Mirror Case! Smooth on your beloved Angel Face anytime, anywhere, for a complete new make-up! "My new Angel Face Mirror Case is the most important bit of flattery I carry in my handbag!" says Mrs. H. Latrobe Roosevelt, Jr. Angel Face Mirror Case in 6 sweet-tinted skin tones—only $1

Also in the familiar blue-and-gold boxes now in two sizes, 89¢ 59¢*

*PLUS TAX

should a girl go steady

When you go steady . . .

. . . . . it used to mean, automatically, no dates with anyone else. But lately there's a new trend. When you agree to go steady with some boys, that means you date him week ends and for big affairs, but during the week you're free to go out with other boys, and he can date other girls. Going steady today means anything you want it to mean—as long as you and your date talk it over and agree on the same conditions!

You should know each other . . .

. . . . . at least two months, see each other in a variety of circumstances—at school, at home, on different types of dates—and be sure it's the person (and not just a class ring, or the fun of saying, "I'm going steady now") that you want. "Because," say teen-agers who know, "while going steady doesn't always mean you're in love for keeps, you should have a really strong affection for each other."

Your age should be . . .

. . . . . at least eighteen, say these teen-agers—"A girl of fourteen should get to know lots of boys. Later you like to have a boy you can depend on. Also—a young boy is very changeable and there's no point in going steady for a short time and getting your heart broken. At eighteen you both should know your minds better."

You should think hard . . .

. . . . . about what you gain and what you give up when you say "Yes" to that flattering question, "Will you go steady with me?"; and to help you out, here are opinions from teen-agers who have gone steady or are going steady now—30 per cent in favor, an overwhelming 70 per cent against:

In favor of going steady . . .

. . . . . "It means so much to know that someone likes you well enough not to want to go out with anybody else. It gives you confidence with other people too. You don't feel so strange in new places. You've got somebody on your side all the time."

. . . . . "You get invited to more things because couples are easier to entertain. If you're an independent, you take your chances, but when you go steady, you always have a date for everything."

. . . . . "You can talk about more things to other boys for having known one so well. You get to understand boys better—the way they act and think and feel. Later, when you get married, you spend a lifetime with one person, and this gives you some idea of what it might be like. You learn to give up things for the other person, to respect his wishes. You learn how to co-operate."

. . . . . "With a date you have to make an impression, but with your 'steady' you can be yourself. You can tell him everything and he'll understand, and you're generally sure of having a good time. You feel happier when you're going steady. You're calmer just from having this security."

Against going steady . . .

. . . . . "It's too complicated to go steady. It limits your social contacts and stunts the growth of your personality. You don't meet as many boys, you don't do as many things on dates, you really don't have as much fun. And if you see one boy all the time, how are you going to know what other boys are like? There might be another type boy you'd like better—if you gave yourself a chance to find out."

. . . . . "You start to lose your girl friends. You can't help but have a superior attitude when they still have to worry about dates and you know you're safe. And close friends resent the amount of time you spend with your boy friend that you used to spend with them. This can hurt—especially when you stop going steady."

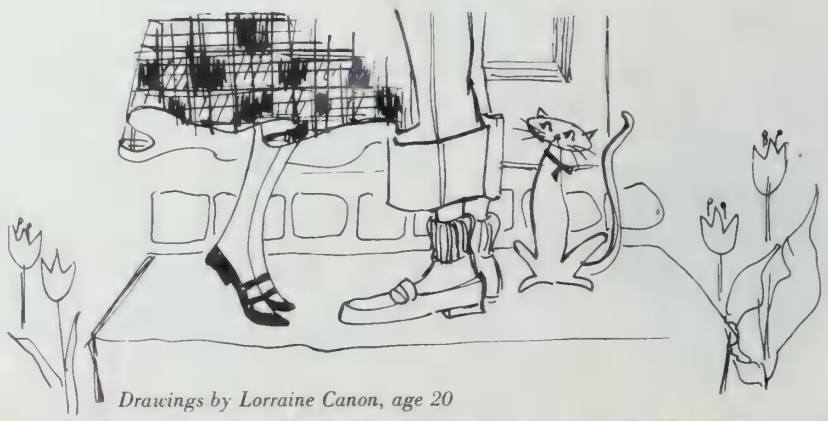
. . . . . "When you go to a party, boys wouldn't think of asking you to dance. They hardly even talk to you, because you're 'somebody else's property.' Then for a month or two after you break off, you're still branded. And it's hard to get back in circulation. The fellows wait to see if you and your ex-steady will get back together again."

. . . . . "Most high-school kids are too young to be sure of their feelings. When a girl tells a boy she'll go steady, she makes him awful happy. Then if she turns around and changes her mind—even if she's been honest with the guy all the time—he'll be hurt. Other guys may get the idea that she's fickle and steer clear. A girl should think carefully before she tells a fellow that she'll go steady."

How can you be sure? . . .

. . . . . There's no guaranteed check list for distinguishing honest, strong affection from momentary infatuation, but there are signs a smart girl will look for. If you like to do things for him, if you would rather be with him than anyone else, if you have fun together, if you enjoy talking things over with each other, if you've tried dates with other boys and still wished you were with him, if you feel that he understands you and you understand him, if you've felt this way consistently for at least two months—chances are you may make a good thing out of going steady. But don't rush. You can date him as much as you like whether or not you're formally going steady—and it's better to be "single" and sure than "steady" and sorry!

How to walk in high heels



Take a fairly short step—not more than six to eight inches—and keep your steps in close parallel lines as they are when you're standing still. Instead of landing flat on your foot, rock your weight from heel to ball to toe, and keep your knees relaxed. Concentrate on the most important lesson in poise of any sort—move slowly and take it easy. The more relaxed you are, the better you will look!

The art of making small talk . . .

is easy if you remember one simple rule: observe what is going on around you. You go to see your best friend. Her family have just put a new picture over the mantel—a country scene. Admire the picture if you honestly do. Ask where it was painted, and by whom. Perhaps it reminds you of a funny experience you had in the country last summer. Tell that—and someone else may have a funny experience of her own to follow up with. The conversation is on its way!

This one simple trick—observation—will help you out whenever you need it. Discuss Tim's new jacket ("That's a super-looking tweed. Where did you ever find it?"), or the dress the history teacher has worn every day this week ("Do you suppose she washes it at night—or maybe not at all?"), or the decorations the dance committee worked so hard to make extra-special ("I hear they slaved over this. Look at that centerpiece—how do you suppose they ever got it together?"). Try to end your remarks with a question—and that will start the other fellow talking. Everyone knows that you don't have to be special to make good conversation. You just have to be yourself!

Sixteen, a one-act play about how one Sub-Deb meets her first love, is yours for 10 cents. Just ask for No. 2308. Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

Drawings by Lorraine Canon, age 20

quick change...
long range

PRINTZESS FASHIONS

Coats with multiple talents by Printzess... to take you to theatre, to sports events, to important little dinners. Full and fingertip lengths ...loosely cut...with last year's bulk subtracted, fresh new details added. Of soft 100% wool that wears almost forever.

• Printzess Fashions are sold in one fine store in over 1500 cities. For store nearest you, write to the Printz-Biederman Company, Printzess Square, Cleveland 3, Ohio; or 450 Seventh Avenue, New York 1, N. Y. In Canada Printzess Fashions are manufactured by Lazare & Novek, Ltd., Montreal.

Printzess by Printz
SINCE 1893

HATS BY FREDERICK

a Cashmere-like wool. Detachable muskrat collar in new "Breath of Spring" or "Silverblu" shades. Black, brown, navy, green, purple, copper. Women's and misses' sizes.

b Fleece or gabardine. Milium lining makes it remarkably warm and light. Nude, tan, gold, cafe, red, purple, skipper. Misses' sizes.

c Fingertip-length, suede-finished broadcloth. Black Persian trim. Grey, navy, black, burgundy, copper, red. Women's and misses' sizes.

Look Ladies— this thrifty SOUP

Quick 'n' easy...

It's NEW! A super vegetable soup! Rich in the complete, healthful goodness of selected garden-fresh vegetables. With a hearty, meaty flavor that will warm the cockles of any man's heart. And to make this super soup—in a few quick minutes—for a few pennies a plate—all you need is a can of VEG-ALL, Wilson's B-V and seasoning. What a soup! What a blessing in today's homes! And it's so easy to make!

Here's how you do it...!

Dice 1 onion and sauté in 1 tablespoon butter until golden.

=

Add contents from 1 can Larsen's Veg-All, including liquid. Heat thoroughly.

Wilson's B-V Meat Extract. A combination of meat juices and vegetable flavors—in concentrated paste form. America's favorite gravy maker. Imparts meaty flavor to soups, stews, casseroles, etc. Makes delicious bouillon and a hot drink like "beef" tea. No kitchen is complete today without Wilson's B-V.

Larsen's VEG-ALL. A nutrition combination of green and yello vegetables—carrots, celer potatoes, peas, green bean corn, lima beans. America supreme quality mixed garde vegetables. More women bu VEG-ALL than any other brar of mixed vegetables. For dinn vegetables, salads, and soups.

More women buy LARSEN'S VEG-ALL MIXED GARDEN VEGETABLES than any other brand serve your family made with VEG-ALL and B-V...

tasty, pleasy!

Add 1 tablespoon Wilson's B-V dissolved in a little of the hot liquid.

Add 4 cups boiling water and touch of pepper as desired.

Here's another tasty dish

B-V and Veg-All Casserole

Prepare 1½ recipes of B-V gravy, adding an extra 1½ teaspoons B-V and ⅛ teaspoon pepper. (See B-V carton.) Add 1 can drained Veg-All*, 1 medium onion, minced, and 2 cubed, cooked, unsalted potatoes. Casserole and bake as usual with biscuit or pie crust top. Serves 6.

The drained liquid may be used in the gravy.*

WILSON & CO. INC.

The Wilson label protects your table

the Finest Food Preparer

KitchenAid

It isn't just chance that KitchenAid is the "finest made" food preparer for the home.

For KitchenAid is built by Hobart, the world's oldest and largest manufacturer of food and kitchen machines. KitchenAid employs the same performance-proved advantages that have made the large Hobart commercial mixers preferred in the world's finest bakeries and restaurants . . . in hospital, hotel, school and club kitchens . . . in fountain service counters . . . wherever fine food is prepared, served and sold.

Naturally, with this broad background, KitchenAid would do more than just ordinary "mixing" or "stirring." With exclusive Hobart "round-the-bowl" mixing, it mixes, whips, blends, stirs, folds and beats with the same superior, true-to-recipe results demanded by exacting chefs and bakers.

Naturally, KitchenAid would be "plus-powered" for any mixing task . . . and to easily operate the wide range of practical attachments. Naturally, it would offer years of useful service. The first series of KitchenAid Food Preparers are still in service after more than 30 years of operation. And, naturally, you'll want to know more. For literature, write KitchenAid Electric Housewares Division of The Hobart Manufacturing Co., Dept. KL, Troy, Ohio.

KitchenAid

The Finest Made... by Hobart TRADE MARK

World's Largest Manufacturer of Food and Kitchen Machines

The fragrance of burning leaves is heady and exciting. Even the sun has new brilliance in this crisp, dramatic season.

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

THE air smells of burning leaves, one of the best smells in the world. We no longer burn ours—they are too precious, they go back into the earth—but I have a sneaking joy that some leaves still burn along the roadsides. For this is the fragrance of autumn, heady, exciting. The blue smoke drifts toward the deep blue sky, the sun has a new brilliance. The fields are harvested, the barns filled with hay. The last wild asters and the bright spikes of late goldenrod are lovely against stone walls, the blackberry canes are chalky purple.

Racing wildly through russet leaves, Jonquil looks like a leaf herself. She is almost the color of a maple leaf now, and I decide this is the most beautiful color for a cocker until I see Linda, who is black as onyx or new satin, or ebony or any black there is. Then Tiki comes with a whisk broom in his mouth, and I think black-and-white is as lovely as an etching. I think, in the end, as I remove the whisk broom, that any color is just right for a cocker.

Daphne and Maeve, the Irishers, feel the heritage of their hunting ancestors and hunt all day long. And for sheer beauty, a pair of red setters racing along a hilltop is something to gladden the heart. The plumes of their tails stream back behind them, always waving, their legs move so fast they hardly seem to touch the earth. Red setters are really airborne dogs.

Daphne is still adolescent. She has such a candid look, and she finds life so mysteriously exciting. Society has not yet cramped her. Last week end, she ate two cakes from the kitchen counter. One had orange icing, one chocolate. By resting her elbows on the counter top, she can look over anything that is laid out and take her choice. We mean to keep the food put away, instead of punishing her for her faith in human nature. What's ours should be hers, she feels. And Jill says, "Daphne is undernourished, she needs those calories more than we do!"

Daphne is the only dog we ever had wh can carry a plateful of butter away wit her, set it down and eat the butter withou upsetting or damaging the plate. She sim ply picks it up by the edge and lopes away head held high.

School is in full swing now. We watch ou the window every morning to see our littl neighbor, Barby, trudge by to the schoo bus. In the afternoon, we see her come bac lugging her papers and book. She seems t me to symbolize all children, she is so smal and walks so proudly, and she has so far t go. When she gets nearer home, she skips. always wish we could be making the road easier for our children; the echo of the inno cent footsteps of all the children in th world should sound in our ears.

They still have sewing in the schools. remember my fearful bouts with an apron and I loved the Progress Sheet a little friend brought home. This is the way it read:

PROJECT—Dish Towel.

Sept. 5. Measured, pinned, and basted side 1.
Sept. 7. Measured, pinned and basted sides 2 and 3. Ripped out side 1
Sept. 9. Measured, pinned and basted side 4. Remeasured, repinned and re-basted side 1.
Sept. 13. Remeasured, repinned and re-basted side 3.
Sept. 15. Sewed side 1 on machine. Ripped out. Crooked.
Sept. 19. Resewed side 1. Sewed side 2.
Sept. 21. Sewed sides 3 and 4. Ripped out side 1.
Sept. 27. Recut, remeasured, repinned, re-basted and resewed side 1. Because of hole.
Sept. 29. Washed, ironed and turned in dish towel.

Grade—B.
Remarks—It wasn't worth it.

It wasn't worth it to me, either, when I spent a whole term wrestling with an apron,

(Continued on Page 134)

AMAZING NEW NONFAT DRY MILK
DRINKING! COOKING! WHIPPING!

STARLAC

Unbelievable, but true!
*Makes 5 quarts nutritious nonfat milk for as low as 40¢ **

Starlac is milk—with only the water and fat removed!

What wonderful news for housewives everywhere!

Now you can get 5 quarts, yes, 5 full quarts of nutritious nonfat milk for about 40¢*.

It's Borden's Starlac! Fresh, pasteurized milk—with only the water and fat removed.

So easy to use! You just put back the water and mix. Then store in your refrigerator just like any milk.

You'll have plenty of fresh-tasting nonfat milk for drinking, cooking and pouring on cereals. You can whip Starlac, too! (See recipe on package.)

So nourishing! Starlac gives you all the muscle-building proteins, bone-building minerals, valuable B vitamins and energy-giving lactose of the finest milk you could buy.

A miracle of convenience! The Starlac package needs no refrigeration. Stays fresh on your pantry shelf like sugar, flour and other staples. You can reliquefy a cup, a pint or all 5 quarts at a time.

Discover Starlac at your grocer's today...and remember Starlac is yours at an unbelievably low cost per quart!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — Replacement or a Refund of Money If Not as Advertised Therein

*Slightly higher in some areas.

25% to 50% more food space

Compare this new General Electric with old-style refrigerators and see how G-E gives you much more space in the same floor area!

There are 133 items in this grouping of food. And, you can place every item—and more—in the G-E Refrigerator shown at the right! Everything's in its place, too.

Model NH-10 above. Most General Electric Refrigerators are available with either right- or left-hinged doors. Trim and specifications subject to change without notice.

TO GET the best buy in a refrigerator, keep these three mighty important things in mind: You want lots of food space. You want convenience features. You want dependability.

SPACE. The General Electric Refrigerator gives you 25% to 50% more space than most old-style refrigerators now in use.

CONVENIENCE FEATURES. You'll be pleasantly surprised when you see all the wonderful features in the G-E Refrigerator.

DEPENDABILITY. No other refrigerator can surpass General Electric's record for dependability. More than 2,700,000 General Electric Refrigerators with sealed refrigerating systems have been in use 10 years or longer. Many for 15, 20 years and longer!

See these wonderful refrigerators at your G-E dealer's. You'll find him listed in your classified telephone directory. General Electric Company, Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.

You get two appliances in one cabinet when you invest in a General Electric Refrigerator-Food Freezer Combination.

ONE: The large food freezer has its own separate door, and its own separate refrigerating system. It's not just a storage compartment for frozen foods. In it, you can freeze your own foods, for it maintains zero-degree temperature.

TWO: The de luxe refrigerator also has its own separate door, and its own separate refrigerating system, and its own temperature control. In it, moist cold keeps foods garden-fresh day after day!

G-E gives you all these wonderful convenience features:

Foods remain crisp and fresh! Frost does not build up in the fresh-food section. Uncovered foods do not dry out, an advantage of moist cold.

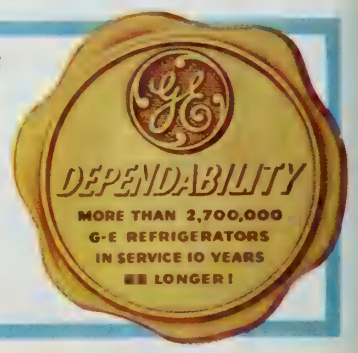
Redi-Cube Ice Trays! You can pick out cubes singly, and return the rest to the freezer—still undisturbed in the dividers.

Vegetable Rolla-Drawers, on rubber-tired wheels, roll quietly. So easy to keep clean. High-humidity keeps vegetables garden-fresh.



No more hard butter! This special conditioner, built into the door keeps a full pound of butter at spreading and mixing temperature.

Judge values for yourself

In our opinion, G-E Refrigerators are unsurpassed for quality, workmanship, and features—yet are priced as low as you will pay for other refrigerators with less usable space, fewer conveniences.

GENERAL ELECTRIC

50 years ago in the Journal

IN October, 1901, one of the "most talked-about luncheons ever eaten in America" occurred: President Theodore Roosevelt invited outstanding Negro leader Booker T. Washington to the White House. Automobiles were doing almost a mile a minute, and a Frenchman circled the Eiffel Tower in a dirigible. To get money to pay her mortgage, a Texas woman, Mrs. Anna Taylor, went over Niagara Falls in a barrel,

FOR YOUR

Christmas Gift ORDERS

LADIES' HOME

JOURNAL

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

Inclosed is $_____, for which please enter a Christmas gift subscription for LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, to go to each of the following addresses:

Name_____

Length of Sub._____ Street or R.D._____

Town_____ Zone____ State_____

Name_____

Length of Sub._____ Street or R.D._____

Town_____ Zone____ State_____

Name_____

Length of Sub._____ Street or R.D._____

Town_____ Zone____ State_____

Sent by_____

Street or R.D._____

Town_____ Zone____ State_____

U. S. GIFT PRICES

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL: 1 1-yr. $3; 2 1-yr. $5; Each additional $2.50
THE SATURDAY EVENING POST: 1 1-yr. $6; 2 1-yr. $10; Each additional $5
HOLIDAY: 1 1-yr. $5; 2 1-yr. $8; Each additional $4
COUNTRY GENTLEMAN: 5 yrs. $3; 3 yrs. $2; 1 yr. $1 (Sold in U.S., R.D. only)
JACK AND JILL: 1 1-yr. $2.50; 2 1-yr. $4.00; Each additional $2

PRINTED IN U. S. A.

"Social distinctions," Doc remarked.
"are drawn kind of taut around here.
We'll have to look for more country."

ILLUSTRATED BY

Everything can change
in 5 minutes...
your whole life,
maybe.

The bell rang downstairs
and Laurie turned pale.
"A Harvard man,"
she said hoarsely.
"I don't think I . . ."

date with a harvard man

By FLORENCE JANE SOMAN

RIGHT afterward, she couldn't believe that it had happened at all. She stood motionless in the high-school corridor, her sense of excitement and happiness so great that she leaned weakly against the wall. Did he really ask me? she thought. Or did I dream the whole thing?

She straightened and began to walk slowly toward the bright square of daylight at the other end of the corridor. It was funny how much everything could change in five minutes—your whole life, maybe. And it had come so simply, without any warning at all. She had come out of History 2A with the others and stayed behind for a moment, stuffing papers into her case as she had done a hundred times before. And then she had looked up and seen Bruce Andrews talking to Penny Walton down the hall. They seemed to be talking very fast, and then Bruce's voice rose, saying, "Okay! Okay, then!" He had turned abruptly and begun walking toward her, his face flushed, his mouth held in a stiff line.

It was then that it happened. Bruce saw her. He hesitated, a change coming into his eyes. And then he walked over to her side. "Hi, Laurie," he said. "You're looking in the pink these days."

It was so sudden, so unexpected that she couldn't speak. She stood there, looking up at him obliquely because he was so tall, clasping her heavy books to her chest with hands that were suddenly damp with perspiration.

"Hey, look," he said, his voice surprisingly loud and clear. "Why don't we get together some night? How about this Saturday? You doing anything?"

"N-no," she stammered. "Not a thing." Everything around her was a blur, but she was vaguely conscious of Penny walking past, her head held high.

Bruce laughed, as if she had said something very funny. "Fine," he said even louder than before. "Saturday it is. Seven-thirty." For a moment his head turned to follow Penny. He stood motionless. Then he said in his normal voice, "So long," and moved away in the opposite direction.

Now she walked down the wide tree-lined street, only she wasn't walking at all, she was sailing on a ship of excitement. She was blinded. I have a date, she thought; a Saturday-night date with Bruce Andrews. At the corner, as she waited for the light to change, she looked around her. And in that moment, seeing the sun splashed on the lawns, seeing the clean blue of the sky, it was as if everything inside her and around her were caught up on a high, trembling crest of happiness. She felt almost giddy and she closed her eyes. "Thank you, God," she whispered. She opened her eyes and began to walk on again. (Continued on Page 230)

ILLUSTRATED BY JON WHITCOMB

All Sally Vogel wanted when she started out was a clean park. Politicians like Eddie Harris, ward boss, convinced her she'd have to work on City Hall first.

WHO CARES?

Many have died to save democracy—yet democracy has no chance unless we are willing to live and work for it daily in practical, constructive ways.

Ten years ago, in July, 1941, months before the attack on Pearl Harbor, the JOURNAL published an editorial—That Freedom Shall Not Perish—stating, among other things, that democracy was worth fighting for. In part, that editorial read:

And the curious thing about democracy is this: a bad government can suppress it; a good government can permit and even encourage it; but democracy can flourish and grow strong only in the hearts and minds of a myriad of individual men.

That is the strength of democracy and its weakness. It is a government of, by and for individuals. Democracy does not tell its citizens what to do. Its citizens tell a democracy what to do. If its citizens are strong and wise and self-sacrificing for a common ideal, democracy will succeed; if they are not it will fail, whether ground out by the iron heel of Hitler or smothered in a thousand internal strifes.

In the difficult, terrible world of today, democracy—the only governmental system yet tried which respects the dignity of the individual man—democracy has no single chance, we believe, to endure, unless Americans—American men and women and children—have it stamped upon their spirits as an ideal for which they as individuals are ready to fight and, if need be, die; for which they as individuals are willing to do the even harder thing—live.

This, we believed then. In the great, confused war which followed, millions believed it so fiercely they were willing to die and did die for this belief. We who survived, if we still believe, must be willing now to fight on, day after day, for our belief. Are you willing?

Democracy is more than an abstract idea or an ideal. It does not float over us like a cloud. Definitions of democracy not stated in terms of its day-to-day operation are meaningless. The label "democracy" can be slapped onto all manner of nefarious schemes, including communist tyranny, by smooth-talking radio politicians—and you have heard it done. Democracy is the free co-operation of a thinking and acting people. Democracy is what each individual person actually does to contribute to his self-government. It has no other being. When a substantial number of us stop contributing—because of laziness, fear, or because we're just too busy making a living—democracy dies.

Political Pilgrim's Progress, which we begin in this issue, is a new experiment in living-reporting designed to show, by the example of others, like you, how the individual citizen can do "the even harder thing"—live for democracy.

Taking an active part in the political life of one's community, the "grass roots" of democracy, requires more than desultory effort from the "Gosh, what can I do?" citizen. It requires gritty persistence, sweat, and perhaps tears, if not blood. Blood our young men pour out—in Korea or elsewhere—when we fail to act, fail to do our part, seek to close our eyes to what must be done here and now.

The most radical—and the most successful—system of government ever devised by man is that system which permits people to govern themselves. "Government of, by and for the people" has always been a political system in peril. Seldom has it been in such peril, from inertia, as it is today. External threats to democracy exist—and we must be militarily prepared to meet them around the world—but democracy in the United States is in greater danger from its "do-nothing citizens" than from military attack. The practical application of "government by the people" has grown frighteningly close to "government by default" in these complacent United States.

There is no need to cite the appalling numbers of eligible voters who fail to vote in primary elections. Did you vote? Or, for that matter, who fail to vote in the most crucial presidential elections. Did you even vote in that? One out of two voters didn't. You should vote, but if you wait until election day to participate in self-government, it is almost too late. To do nothing more than vote is, in effect, to do very little. Not enough to survive. Failure to vote is one of few clear-cut examples of suicide by choice. No amount of complaining about the government can make up for your failure.

It is hard to understand how the exciting miracle of self-government—attained by the self-sacrifice of those in our Revolutionary and Civil wars who believed it was more precious than life itself—can be ignored, and even belittled, by so many of us who are privileged to exercise it. "Politics is a dirty business—let George do it" has become almost a national slogan. "George" is a cog in some "unbeatable" political machine. The man for whom George votes is the crook in office—though he may have to flee in disgrace when the heat is, temporarily, on. Pride of participation in our government has sunk to such a dismal low that it is socially acceptable for many to boast of their political indifference—"I am not now, and I never have been, a member of any political party!" This is the bitterest irony, and it is unhealthy in the most literal sense of the word.

Testifying before a Senate subcommittee on ethics in government, responsible and politically experienced citizens have said that we cannot have a higher standard in our politics unless we have it in our citizens. That's you. Unless our citizens care about graft and immorality in public life, graft and immorality will increase, because they make millions for the politically crooked—and the gamblers who buy them.

If you wait until voting time you will frequently only have a choice between two men of indifferent principles. These men were chosen because they promised to support a machine or a strong pressure group. They were chosen because they do not intend to govern as well as possible in the interest of all. At the present time it's more profitable to be crooked than honest, politically—and you pay the bill.

The problem of each citizen is this—to see that politics in his locality, his township, his election district, his county, is drawing in the best brains and effort of the most responsible citizens of his community, including himself. If that is done at the local level, it will be achieved at the national level. There is no way by which national politics can be more intelligent, more ethical, more courageous than the local groups in which it has its roots. That's why you—yes, you—can do something about it.

Democracy will not endure unless it is a good democracy. It can endure only if it is a fair-minded government of fair and honest men, providing opportunities for the maximum educational, economic and social growth of each of its citizens—growth not only in economic standing, but also growth to man's fullest stature ethically (for democracy is essentially a spiritual and ethical conception, envisioning citizens strong and free and unafraid enough to care that their neighbors be also strong and free).

If democracy grows cynical and corrupt, it will perish—either to enemies without, or to power-minded men within. We are the only ones who can preserve it—all of us, as citizens.

In the following pages you can read how any one of you—if you believe in democracy—can live as a full-voting citizen in these United States—and how you can begin right now.

The Editors

How do you get to be a politician? The story of Sally Vogel, an average housewife, spurred into finding out by a broken milk bottle in the park where her child went to play.

POLITICAL PILGRIM'S

Only park in Sally's neighborhood was so dangerously littered with glass that eighteen-month-old Kitty couldn't play there. Sally decided somebody had to do something, wound up in politics.

This is the real-life story of how one woman's concern over a dangerous park led her into politics. The JOURNAL followed, but did not influence—since it is not politically partisan—Sally Vogel's progress from the first phone call to the last. Looking back, Sally says that the magazine's interest in her work speeded her up—that without it she might have taken more than a year to get as much involved in her city's politics.

SOMETHING really ought to be done, Sally Vogel thought to herself moodily as she stared down at the sharp, glittering pieces of broken glass that lay embedded in the grassy sward of Clark Park—the one oasis in the grubby checkerboard of West Philadelphia pavements where she could take 1½-year-old Kitty for her daily outing.

The glass had been there last year, too, when she had taken Kitty out in her carriage, and it had annoyed Sally then, but this year she saw it not only as irritating but as downright dangerous. Kitty liked to roam around on her own, but she tumbled frequently. If she fell face down on one of those jagged chunks of milk bottle ——

Kitty was tugging at her hand now, so Sally let her go, but kept a sharp eye on her movements, as she sat down on one of the cement-and-wood benches. Sally was a tall, wholesome-looking blond girl, in her mid-twenties, who had graduated from college and become a social worker but had left her work before Kitty was born in order to give the child—and another soon to come—the best of her energies. She enjoyed being a mother and took it seriously, but often she felt defeated by circumstances over which she felt she had no control: the run-down condition of the only apartment she and her husband had been able to find, combined with the efforts of the landlord to raise their rent; the trash-cluttered streets which were unsafe at night because of their dim lights and their inadequate police patrols; the steadily rising prices of even bread and milk and, as a last straw, the sorry shape of the park which made it impossible for her to relax for even an hour and let Kitty play freely.

Now, watching Kitty as she dug in the ground near a shiny bit of sharp, threatening glass, Sally felt impelled to take some Note no-parking sign in plain view of double-parked cars. Picture could have been taken in any big or little city in country, was actually shot across from Philadelphia's vast City Hall.

Philadelphia streets are no worse and no better than those in most large cities. After battling futilely to clean up her neighborhood, Sally became a public-political housekeeper. Like any housekeeper, she knows it's a lifetime job.

Caretaker thought Sally's complaints huge joke, echoed statements park wasn't for kids, claimed he "hadn't time" to pick up "bits of glass." Sally thought it should be somebody's business.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY ESTHER BUBLEY

PROGRESS

sort of action to get the park cleaned up. She looked across the park toward the maintenance men. As was usual at this time of afternoon, they sat on the steps of the tool shed, talking to each other. It would be futile to discuss the glass with them; she'd have to go higher. I should call City Hall, she said to herself. Somebody ought to do something—and I guess it might as well be me.

With that thought comforting her, she took Kitty and went home. It did not occur to her at the time that she was embarking on a project, and a political project at that. Her only thought then was that perhaps she could arouse some official to do the obvious. But even finding an official was a complicated matter—so complicated, in fact, that she decided to keep a record of her efforts. She wrote in her diary the next night:

Called City Hall today. Asked switchboard operator for person in charge of park maintenance. Was first switched to Fairmount Park Guards. They said they were not in charge of parks throughout the city. I asked who was. He said, "Got me." He then went away. Before he came back I got switched to 43rd Street Fire Alarm Station. They asked who it was. Switchboard operator came in with, "I'll take her."

Next department (correct one finally) was City Property. I asked who was in charge of park maintenance, and Mr. Fagan (central-city superintendent) was called to the phone. I asked Mr. Fagan if he was in charge of maintenance at Clark Park, 43rd and Chester Avenue. He said that there were two men full time and one man part time. These men come on at 8 or 8:30 and leave at 4:30. I asked Mr. F. regarding the glass that was generously distributed in the park, and Mr. F. said that it must have been broken overnight, as park had been cleaned recently. I said that I had been going there for over a year and the glass had remained there all that while.

Mr. F. said that as soon as the men leave, young kids come over there and break bottles. He said that the parks are getting worse every year, that they are not playgrounds, but caretakers feel sorry for the children and do not run them off. Parks are mostly for older people for "resting and breathing," he said. They try to keep down ballplaying, but cannot do it. Just then a Mr. Connelly came

Today was trash day, but collectors "forgot" these cans. Uncleanliness made Sally realize she had to do more than clean her own house to be a good citizen, active community member, mother.

THE PERILS OF POLITICS

IN the classic parable Pilgrim's Progress, the hero set out for the Celestial City in a great wax over the evils in his own town, the City of Destruction, and the evils in himself. It was a terrible trip. On the way he faced all sorts of trials and tribulations. "Wearisomeness, painfulness, hunger, peril, nakedness, sword, lions, dragons and, in a word, death," was the description Worldly Wiseman gave him, and suggested he see a lawyer who could get him out of some of these perils. Worldly Wiseman, however, constituted a peril in himself, just as did such characters as Sin, Sloth, Presumption, Mistrust and Timorous. All had their own angles on how Christian could avoid such obvious difficulties as Giant Despair, who spent his leisure time beating pilgrims to death, and the Slough of Despond, which pulled you under like quicksand, and the enchanted meadow, the air of which was so drowsy you grew pleasantly sleepy. Fortunately for our hero, there were also a few characters who were interested in seeing that he got to his goal and even in lending him a hand—men like Help, Mercy, Goodwill, Ease, and a trio of women named Piety, Charity and Prudence. Without them he never would have made it through Doubting Castle or the Valley of Humiliation and kept to the straight and narrow path, avoiding crooked roads. He made it, however, though he was sorely tried frequently and only just barely equal to crossing the last river, where the waters were shallow or deep in direct proportion to his faith.

The present-day voyage from the present-day Cities of Destruction to the Celestial Cities we all know could exist on earth should not be quite so dangerous, but only a character like Simple would be able to say truthfully, "I see no danger."

You will meet with Apathy, Greed, Laziness, Ignorance and Fear. Cynical will say to you, "But what can one person do?" Status Quo will declare, "It's always been that way. Why should you try to change it?" Laziness will ask you, "Why shouldn't I try that? Everyone else does, doesn't he?"

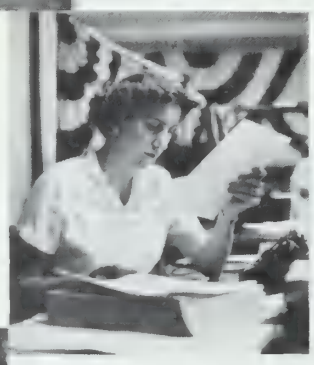
You will meet Fine Morals and Great Morale. When you have to fight for something you believe in, the slow pace of accomplishment may shatter your faith.

You will also encounter Blamer. Blamer is the man who thinks politicians live in another world and have developed from another species. "The machine runs everything," Blamer says. "No one can do anything about it." Honest will tell you a better story, however. "Everyone is in politics in a democracy," he'll say. "If you've got bad officials, well, either you chose them—or you neglected to. Let's face it."

Well, you can be like Pliable and go a little of the way on your political pilgrimage and then turn back because the route seems too long or arduous. Or you can be like Christian's wife, who, when she heard her husband had made it, set out along the same narrow path with her four boys. She wasn't very well informed, however, and got violently scolded for not getting a guide. "It's a poor thing that's not worth asking for," Receiver told her, and gave her a guide named Greatheart. After that, depending on Greatheart, she advanced in a firm fashion, and swam the last river as if it were only knuckle-deep, so strong was her faith.

"Someone must do something," Sally thought, "and I guess it might as well be me."

Sally telephoned—Kitty got political education too.



Ward leader welcomed her, but gave her no work, no help.

She worked for independents to fight the machine.

She listed phone numbers, called voters, pleaded for help.

She studied Kefauver report to learn political realities, though Kitty complained.

Her goal was City Hall, where the men who rule her city sit in power.

in and Mr. F. called him to the phone, saying he was really the man in charge of this park.

Mr. Connelly said that the boys go through there every night and shoot the lights out with their BB guns. I asked him if there were not laws prohibiting the defacing of public property. He said that there were but that if I wanted these laws enforced, I should call the police. He has called them, and after his call they will patrol for one night. Mr. Connelly said that the citizens of the area were more responsible for the park than anyone. He said that the parks were not playgrounds but that there were so many mothers and children out there that they could not keep the grass growing.

I asked Mr. Connelly about waste tins for the park. He said that they used to provide waste tins. However, they had a lot of trouble with "slop." Mr. C. said that they found that the people in the nearby houses emptied garbage into waste tins so that now they provide only one waste tin.

Mr. C. said that it was impossible to keep a park clean if the people in the area were not interested. He said that if this area were like the Marlin Street one, we could really have it nice. He said that some people up there have an organization. All the houses for about a two-block area pay $1.00 each, then they put in seeds and bulbs and keep the gardens in order.

I asked Mr. C. if he knew the names of any of the people in that organization. He said that he did not, but that he could get his men to find out. I said that if I could talk to them and see how they ran their organization, perhaps we could start something like that around here. He seemed to think that this was a good idea and said he would get one or two names and call me back.

4 P.M. Same day. After talking with Mr. Connelly I took Kitty to the park to see if glass had been cleaned up—but it had not been. It just occurred to me that in the year I've been going to Clark Park I have seen the men working only once.

Sally was a little let down after that first call. To have the officials blame the glass on the parkgoers seemed a little hard, inasmuch as the mothers she had talked to were as concerned as she was about it. Her enthusiasm was only dampened, not defeated, however. She decided she'd start again from a different angle, this time tackling the women themselves to see if they'd form a cleanup group.

As she walked slowly to the park with Kitty trailing her, she noticed that trash cans were crowding the sidewalk and that some were full and some were empty. A woman was standing in a doorway and she stopped to ask her what day was trash day in this block. The woman told her that today was, and that the men had come but they hadn't picked up her trash. She added that she'd called City Hall and they (Continued on Page 248)

HOW TO START

1. You must officially select your party in order to vote at primaries—and it is at primaries, often, that the most important things happen. There it is decided, for instance, whether your party nominates Mr. Old-Party-Hack, or Mr. Good-Solid-Citizen, for governor of your state.

2. So, think about it. Decide which party you will support. Call a politically minded friend, or your election board, to find out whom you contact to enter politics at the lowest rung.

3. Don't be a political pawn. When you've decided on a party, work in it. Go to meetings. Ask questions. If you feel you're being given a runaround, collect a few friends who think as you do. Then ask more questions. If you're not getting anywhere, you might try putting up a candidate of your own.

4. Professional politicians are in politics because they want something. Sometimes they want an honorable career, with real regard for public welfare. Sometimes they just want themselves, their family and friends on the public payroll, with a little gravy thrown in. Study the situation, decide who is who and which is which. Help out the former, work to replace the latter by honorable women and men (perhaps, eventually, yourself?).

5. Graft and corruption flourish on your indifference and mine. Searching questions, a sincere attempt to shed light in dark corners—if persisted in—will make dishonesty less possible in your community, your state. But remember, you don't house-clean once—it's a weekly, monthly and yearly job.

AT ELECTION TIME

1. Get the records of all candidates (from dog catcher to governor) from the League of Women Voters, party headquarters, the newspapers, Municipal League Bulletin, and study them. Note whether the office seeker's previous record in school, private life, business or government is good enough to recommend him as a public official. Ask yourself: Do his records and his connections show that he'll work for the general welfare of all rather than for a special segment of the population? Does his way of life indicate he is living within his income? Has he ever taken a stand which showed his willingness to risk his popularity to serve his principles? Or does he try to please everyone but the man-eating shark?

2. When you have decided which candidates you are for, call their campaign headquarters and offer to go to work. Attend as many campaign meetings as you can; get to know as many candidates as you can; ring doorbells, phone, baby-sit for voters, or do chauffeuring. The hand that pulls the voting lever rules the world—the world you live in.

WHAT WOMEN DID IN GARY

WOMEN CAN GET RESULTS

Women can do a lot when they get started.
Here's what some have done:

In 1948, twenty-three-year-old Mary Shadow, running on a reform platform, successfully challenged a hard-shell political machine to become the second woman ever elected to a regular term in the Tennessee House of Representatives. Just a year out of college, where she majored in political science, Mary ran against two veteran politicians, spent less than $270 in her campaign, and won a House seat held by the same man for eighteen years. Then began her uphill fight for revision of inadequate adoption laws, repeal of the poll tax, a new state constitution and many other reforms. In 1950, Mary ran another race as rugged as the first and again was elected.

Senior members of the Wisconsin Assembly have reason to fear the factual, down-to-earth arguments and the analytical ability of Representative Ruth Doyle. In her fight for "good government," her attacks on lobbyists and her demands for reapportionment to meet changing population needs, Mrs. Doyle, now serving her second term, has angered some, heartened others, but won the respect of colleagues on both sides of the House.

In March, 1942, Mrs. Mary A. Gillen, of Brooklyn, was elected to the New York state legislature, with the endorsement of both major political parties, to fill out her late husband's unexpired term. She has won all succeeding elections—has worked for improved public-assistance procedures, public housing, day-nursery care and the civil-service system.

Mrs. Bernice T. Van der Vries has been a member of the Illinois House of Representatives for 17 years. In almost every primary election she has won against stiff opposition. Last January she began her ninth term in office. She has proved that on the floor of the House she can hold her own with the best of her colleagues. In debate she bolsters up her arguments with facts and figures and is a determined fighter in the interests of public health and welfare. Several of her bills for the improvement of conditions in the state's institutions for the mentally ill have been adopted as models in other states.

Maude Frazier spent 40 years in the Nevada public-school system, 19 of them as a city school superintendent. Last year when she ran for the state legislature on a support-for-education platform, she was an easy winner.

THIS is the story of the murder of an innocent woman.

This is the story of a town so enmeshed by gambling syndicates and petty criminals that many officials, from the top down to the smallest public officer, were often willingly or helplessly incriminated.

This is the story of women, so determined to make their town a decent place to live in that they risked the threats of the underworld to their homes and children, to work, undeterred, for good government.

The story begins in Gary, Indiana, on the night of March 3, 1949. Mary Cheever, a popular and much respected teacher in one of Gary's high schools, was on her way home from a Parent-Teachers meeting, where she had been the principal speaker. A purse snatcher accosted Miss Cheever just outside her own apartment building, shot her at close range, and left her dead—not more than twelve feet from one of the main streets of Gary.

Mary Cheever's death was the culmination of a series of shocking crimes in Gary. During the previous two months of 1949, the town had experienced one murder every nine days, and any number of petty thefts and crimes. Gary had one of the worst traffic records in the United States. Gambling was one of the big businesses of the city. Gary had been cited by some authorities as the second crime center in the country, and by the American Social Hygiene Association as the nation's worst offender for open prostitution.

"Mary Cheever's death was the spark we needed," explains Mrs. Frank H. Collins, former president of Gary's Council of Social Agencies. "At the time we thought her death was utterly meaningless, a useless tragedy. Now we believe it was a symbol, calling us to action. We knew, then, that something had to be done."

The women of Gary went to work. Within four days of Miss Cheever's murder, they formed the Women's Citizens Committee, pledged to fight until Gary became a community where honest officials and efficient law enforcement were the rule and not the exception.

It is now more than two years since Mary Cheever's death. The racketeers who sneaked out of town for a few days to let the women get tired of trying to clean up Gary did come back. But they found the easy pickings to which they were accustomed had vanished. Their movements were followed at every turn by housewives and schoolteachers one would have thought too timid to meddle in the affairs of a vice syndicate. There isn't a brothel open in the whole town. There is a new prosecuting attorney who sees that (Continued on Page 109)

GARY POST-TRIBUNE

The two thousand women who jam this auditorium are demanding law enforcement. In righteous indignation they decide to march on City Hall. This meeting marked the birth of the Women's Citizens Committee with eighteen thousand members pledged to fight vice and corruption of public officials in Gary, Indiana.

ILLUSTRATED BY ANDREW LOOMIS

Recapitulation

According to her mother,
Connie was good, sensible, sweet.
And according to Connie, this was an insult

By JESSAMYN WEST

MRS. MALLOY went to the door of her daughter Constance's room to remind her that it was time to set the table for supper. It was a fine Saturday afternoon in November and ordinarily Connie would have been outside, up in the hills with friends, or helping her father with the irrigation: or just walking about under the pepper and eucalyptus trees in the yard, deep in a world which found significance in the parchmentlike bark peeled from a eucalyptus tree or in a bunch of berries (thirteen berries, exactly the number of years she had been alive—what was the meaning of that?) dropped from the pepper tree. But this afternoon Connie had spent in her room in spite of the clear warm weather, and Mrs. Malloy examined with considerable curiosity her daughter's stubby, somewhat boyish profile outlined against the golden light of the west windows.

"What are you writing, Connie?"

Connie looked up from the sheets of paper spread before her on the rickety bamboo desk she had bought for herself that summer and said, "I'm not exactly writing, mother." The sheets had words on them and Connie had a pencil in her hand, and as if aware of this contradiction between appearance and truth, she added, "I'm making a list."

At this Mrs. Malloy smiled. In school she had learned that ontogeny recapitulates phylogeny; and though she had always been somewhat hazy as to the meaning of that sentence, still it had stayed in her memory and was, amended, her formula for accounting for her daughter: Connie recapitulates Jim. Since she loved and approved her husband, believing him to be not only handsome but as often as not wise and sensible as well, she was glad this was so. Though it was strange, as now, to see the gestures and habits of a large, dark, thirty-eight-year-old rancher recapitulated in a medium-sized tow-haired girl. And how much simpler my life would've been, she thought, easing her shoulders against the doorjamb, if Connie had recapitulated me instead of Jim. Jim was hard enough to fathom in himself and writ large without the added need of fathoming a Jim writ small, condensed and made more obscure in a daughter. Nor was she helped any now, in understanding Connie's activity, by the fact that it was one which she had witnessed in Jim for fifteen years. More than fifteen years. She had once broken her engagement for two days because of a list that Jim had made.

Jim had shown her one evening—with considerable pride, she now realized—a sheet of paper headed in a businesslike way "Reasons for Loving Lelia Ames," a sheet Mrs. Malloy still remembered with resentment. On it Jim had analyzed his emotions and her attributes as if both were subjects suitable for the biology textbook in which she had learned about recapitulation. He had started out with "I—Character" and wound up with "V—Physical Beauty," and he had pursued all headings, not only under A's, B's and C's but even unto 1's, 2's and 3's. It still made her angry, and at the time she had believed it would be impossible to live with a man capable of dissecting his love in so orderly a fashion. She had thrown his "Reasons for Loving Lelia Ames" down on the floor (Continued on Page 239)

Mother," Connie asked,
"do you think I'm funny?"

"I couldn't compete with my Mothe

"People say I'm lucky to be Marlene Dietrich's daughter—and I agree. But my dates always asked,
'When may I meet your mother?' Producers wanted to see All my life I've had to fight to be myself."

By SELMA ROBINSON

PASTED on the mirror of Maria Riva's make-up table is an almost life-sized portrait of her mother, Marlene Dietrich. That incredible face with the deep-lidded eyes and the sultry smile cuts off nearly half the glass. Thus, whenever Maria consults her mirror to brush on her lipstick or her mascara, the reflection and the photograph are side by side, inviting comparison. She cannot see her own face without also seeing her mother's.

That mirror, in a way, is symbolic of Maria's life. Her twenty-six years have been shaped and colored by the fact that she is Dietrich's daughter. It is possible that she cannot ever be free of it, no matter how desperate the struggle for her own separateness. She is not merely Maria Riva, CBS television star with a seven-year contract and a growing audience, not merely the wife of William Riva, a talented young scenic designer, and the two little boys.

In addition, and just as important, she is always Mar child of Dietrich, one of the most glamorous women in It is something you never overlook, despite the vigor personality. And neither does Maria.

"I was always self-conscious because of my mothe Maria said one day as we sat drinking coffee in a resta CBS. She spoke wistfully, like a girl convinced of her ness. She seemed unaware that everyone who passe stared at her slender figure and her pale, intense fa winging eyebrows and the broad, high forehead so like She was wearing her mother's hand-me-downs, a Ch suit of black velvet and a black fox stole. Above enormous turquoise eyes and her cloud of apricot-c shone brilliantly.

"Mommy grows younger and more beautiful every Maria. "There are lots of women prettier than she. Bu that makes one a great beauty—Mother has it.

"I never felt good enough for her. She was so beau always gave me a feeling of ugliness and unworthiness. I suffered because I was terribly overweight and I felt should be ashamed of me.

"Do you remember how I looked when you first Maria asked.

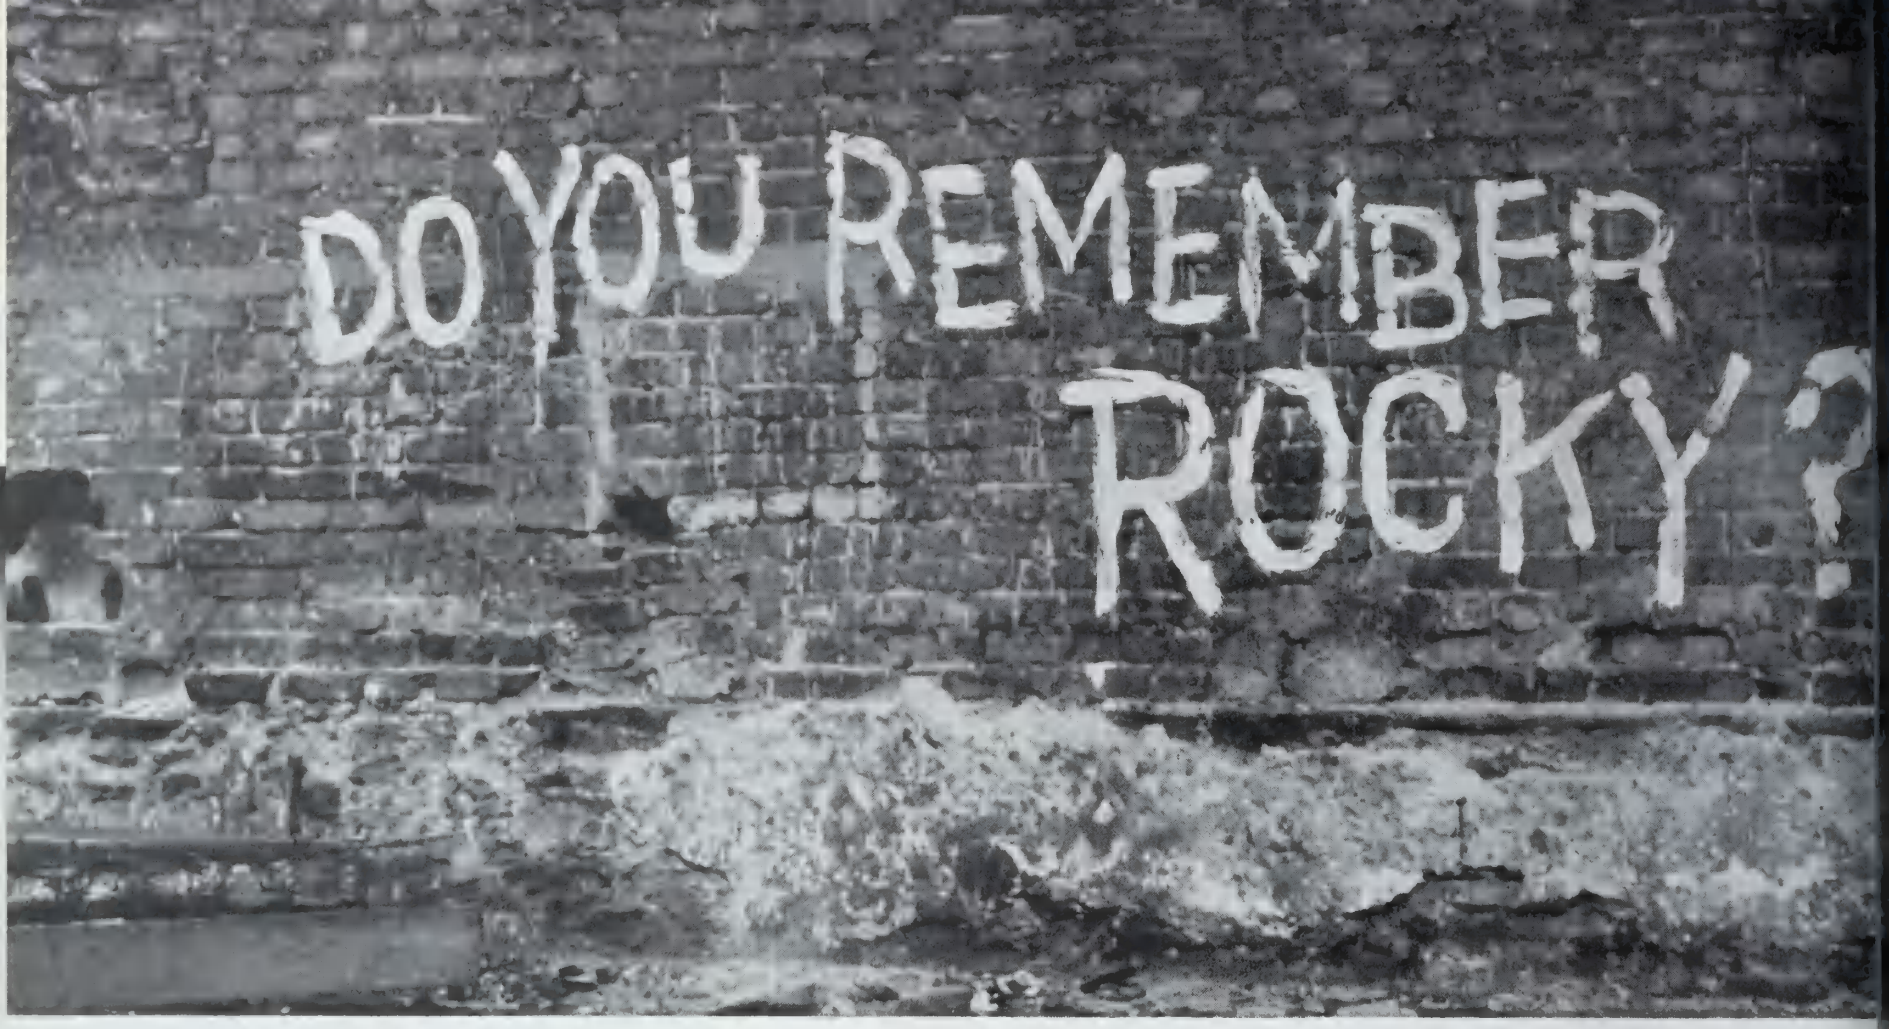
I nodded. It was in February, 1945, and Maria wa tiny part in the Theatre Guild play, Foolish Notion. She like a peasant girl in a baggy, sleeveless sweater an skirt. No make-up. She told me then that her weigh pounds—"exactly what my mother weighed when she to America."

"I lied to you," Maria confessed. "It was really 170 May, 1950, when my second son was (Continued

WIDE WORLD

Watching polo at Santa Monica. Maria was 10. Mother had just made Scarlet Empress.

WIDE WORLD



Maria, once 198 pounds, now weighs trim 118 — which is "exactly mommy's weight."

Scene from her new movie, No Highway in the Sky, shows the famous Dietrich trade-mark.

Not many people know that really real things live in the heart

The History of a Youth in Crime Begins in the Tragedy of Neglect . . .

Profile of Youth

IN the black hour just before dawn on a cold morning in March, Rocco D'Agostino awakened to a persistent rapping at the door of his room in a house off Columbus Avenue in Manhattan's West Nineties. At first he thought it might be Kelly, a fellow who had been staying with him lately, but Kelly wouldn't knock like that; Kelly had a key. Rocco called out, "Who is it?" A sultry feminine voice answered unintelligibly.

Flattered and a little surprised to have a girl knocking at his bedroom door so early in the morning, Rocco got out of bed, switched on a lamp and hastily pulled on his clothes. Cautiously he opened the door a crack to peer at a lovely visitor. She flashed him a bewitching smile, gently pushed the door open and stepped into the room. Then she flashed a badge, identifying herself as a member of the Police Department of New York City, and informed him he was under arrest. Two less shapely but more muscular detectives—Al Spinosa and Jerry Valente—pushed in beside her; one of them snapped on the overhead light and moved to search the room. No one is clear about what happened immediately after that—least of all, Rocco.

The newspapers recorded he boasted, "No cop will ever take me alive!", used other loud and abusive language, and put up quite a fight for a little guy. (He weighs 135 pounds and is 5′ 5″ tall.) "He'll kill somebody yet," Detective Spinosa said later. "He'll kill a cop or somebody."

It is certain that Rocco resisted arrest and search of his room; it is also certain that he was confused and did not at first comprehend it was a raid. He had never seen a lady detective like twenty-five-year-old Laurette McDonnell, a former model and ex-Wave, or police like Valente and Spinosa, both under thirty, who find it easy to assume the sloppy dress and diffident manner which make them appear more like Abbott and Costello at college age than like the city's finest.

In the brief scuffle, Miss McDonnell was scratched severely on the arm—whereupon one of her companions applied a blackjack with more than nervous force to Rocco's skull. In the quiet that followed, they searched the room and quickly located two ounces of heroin, plus two dozen tiny capsules of heroin and cutting and mixing equipment, which they confiscated, along with $250 in small bills. Among these was the $5 bill a young Negro detective, William Owens, posing as an addict, had used to buy twelve capsules of heroin from D'Agostino the evening before.

Handcuffed and bleeding, Rocco was taken to the 24th Precinct Station, where he was booked on a charge of selling narcotics. The detectives said most of his customers were teen-agers. It was the third arrest and second felony offense for Rocco D'Agostino, alias "Rocky." He gave his age as twenty; his occupation: "handy man." News photographers took pictures of him in a group of young narcotics offenders who had been picked up in the night-long series of raids.

This was the end of "public interest" in the little "tough guy." Rocky was sent to Bellevue Hospital for treatment of head injuries and later returned to The Tombs (Manhattan City Prison) to await disposition of his case.

Early in April, the Grand Jury of the County of New York handed down to the Court of General Sessions a three-count indictment for "the people . . . against Rocco D'Agostino," accusing the defendant, in the first count, of the crime of feloniously selling a narcotic drug. The second count accused him of unlawfully possessing a narcotic drug; and the third count, of possession "with intent to peddle, barter, sell, exchange and to aid, abet and directly and indirectly counsel, command, induce and procure the peddling, sale, barter and exchange of same." Attorney Robert P. Brown was assigned as counsel for the accused by Justice

(Continued on Page 123)

MORRIS ENGEL

By G. M. WHITE

NEW YORK JOURNAL AMERICAN-INTERNATIONAL

Rocky is the handcuffed youth on the left. Confiscated narcotics are on the table. At the right is Augustine Castillo, after whose conviction by jury Rocky pleaded guilty to selling heroin.

At the dignified age of four, Rocky was the well-scrubbed innocent posed below. Grade-school teachers remember him only as "a pale, thin little boy"—never a serious behavior problem.

YOUTH BEFORE THE JUDGE

By JUDGE JOHN CLARK KNOX, United States District Court, New York

OUT of an experience of thirty-three years on the Federal bench, I have learned that crime, to a considerable degree, is due to lack of judgment—to sudden impulse, and to immaturity. Hundreds of offenders between the ages of sixteen and twenty-five have stood before me. Among them, those who possessed traits of real viciousness were few and far between.

Many of our most honorable and successful men were guilty, as boys, of foolish acts which would have sent them to a "reform school," had luck been seriously against them. Youth is the period when considered action and sound (Continued on Page 131)

Worn here as a monotone costume with Mr. Alf's velours hat, $8.95, brown plastic alligator bag, $5.00, taffeta scarf, beige cotton gloves.

Luncheon and dinner blouse in gray satin by Herbert Labandter, $14.95. Small Persian-lamb muff by Harold Rubin, black doeskin gloves.

WILHELA CUSHMAN

ONE WONDERFUL SUIT

Receptive to changes, adaptable to many hours and seasons, this timeless oxford-brown flannel with the cut-steel buttons could well be your only suit. You can wear it with taffeta, velvet and furs, or with sweaters, walking shoes and a soft felt cloche. Try a taffeta or shantung blouse in gold, olive green, silver gray . . . a cashmere sweater or jersey shirt in mauve, black, brown, beige. Wear it with a brown velveteen vest for warmth, plus fashion. Give it a Paisley wool or a taffeta scarf. Wear its wonderful six-gore skirt as a separate with wool tops, a leopard or a broadtail belt. Suit by Alvin Handmacher, $75.00. • By WILHELA CUSHMAN

Fashion Editor of the Journal

YOUR SIGNATURE

Ever since you were seven and dressed up in your mother's best, put on all her jewelry and spilled her perfume, you've been fascinated by the elementally feminine idea of adding your own strokes of genius to your clothes. You take your favorite black cashmere sweater and line it with tie silk or turquoise taffeta. You pin a spray of white flowers on your tweed suit. You tuck a striped scarf into your neckline and pull it through your belt. You put on a taffeta petticoat with last year's full-skirted wool dress to give it this year's flare.

There is an art in the putting on. Try wearing a pair of long pendant earrings as the only jewelry with an unadorned black dress, one orange velvet rose with your gray flannel. Tie a bow of African-pink or turquoise velvet in the neckline of your black jersey, a ruby silk sash around the waistline of your black velvet. Perhaps silver bracelets would be better than gold with your new oxford browns, a yellow capeskin or russet calfskin belt a livelier accent than black with your grays. Do the original instead of the conventional thing with jewelry. Collect old watch chains for bracelets; or tassels, fobs and necklace clasps for charms. Find lovely antique gold or silver buttons for a last year's wool dress—just what it needs.

Everybody loves this personal-signature idea, and it is one of the most engaging and least expensive facets of fashion. It takes imagination plus restraint. The single touch that catches the eye is a good thing, but too many is too much in any season, especially this one. The plain truth is that it is better to be stark-simple than "all decked out," and the simplest kind of costume is the best basis for the touch that identifies and charms. Too much detracts from the dress, submerges the personality and defeats the whole lovely idea. —R.M.P.

Vijaya Lakshmi Pandit. Mme. Pandit, Ambassador from India, likes the Western fashion of ribbon-tied veils, doeskin gloves, a brocade envelope bag with a golden feather.

Mrs. Richard Aldrich (Gertrude Lawrence, of The King and I) has her cashmere sweaters lined with taffeta, carries the same bag night and day—a black velvet carryall that holds everything.

FONSSAGRIVES

Lady Browning, writer Daphne du Maurier, has varied tastes in her clothes—a feminine gray taffeta tea gown for dining at home, red gabardine slacks and a shirt for working. Her gold link bracelet is worn with everything.

three to go..
ANYWHERE

Red and black are good colors t count on. The fitted coat, pretty on the fi ure, feminine to the nth degree, has com back into fashion, and is the basis of a ne kind of wardrobe. Take it in black, wea it with one bright wool dress and one blac crepe or faille, and you're ready for prac tically everything. Your bright wool (c jersey) could be red, ginger, gold, roya blue or green—a dress that takes you favorite belts, gold and silver jewelry, velvet hat or a beret. Your black dress silk or rayon, has an intriguing new fu skirt and square neckline. Fill in the neck line with rose beige chiffon or nylon ne for early in the day, wear it bare and flar your skirt with a petticoat for later. Sup plement your coat with a tweed and a vel vet skirt (full or narrow), a sweater, woo and silk blouses.

By WILHELA CUSHMA
Fashion Editor of the Journ

WILHELA CUSHMAN

The fitted, taffeta-lined black wool coat has the new flare, $85.00, by Marvin Leto. Wear it with a red taffeta scarf tied in a bow. Velvet hat, $8.95.

Give your coat another change with a long shoestring tie of blond fur, beige gloves.

Three to Go Anywhere, total $155.00
Skirts and tops 52.80

STEPHEN COLHOUN

An extra: the narrow salt-and-pepper tweed skirt, $12.95; gray cashmere sweater, $14.95: calfskin belt: rayon cloche, $12.95.

Right: Noon-to-midnight rayon-crepe dress by Mary Kay Dobson, $35, for late day with veil, $5.95, jade-and-rhinestone pin.

STEPHEN COLHOUN

Below: Afternoon additions: the gold silk shantung blouse, $12.95; black velvet skirt, $11.95, velvet pillbox, bracelets.

It's the year of the red dress under the black coat. This one is wool crepe with hook-and-eye closing, $35, by Pat Warren. Peaked velvet hat, $7.50, the foxtail scarf around your wrist.

HAT WITH RED DRESS, ELIZABETH MARKS; VELVET PILLBOX, MR. ALF; CLOCHE, JOHN FREDERICS; VEIL, THERESE AHRENS; FOXTAIL FUR, HAROLD RUBIN; TWEED SKIRT, HARRY RUTENBERG; BLOUSE, SAMUEL SALSKY.

Sleeveless velveteen sheath without the jacket, could be an evening dress. Dress, around $20. Jacket, $15.

WILHELA CUSHMAN

MARIAN PLUMMER WILSON'S suit: gray flannel, nipped-in jacket, skirt softly full. By Madeline Fauth. $35.00.

Our own

LIKE other busy young women who divide their time between a home, children and career, and give each a full-time measure of success, they take stock each season, of their clothes closets and then go after what they need. They can spare little time for shopping, make quick decisions, demand much of the clothes they buy. . . . Follow a policy of rotation—one year the major investment will be a good suit; the next year, a heavy topcoat. . . . Invest most heavily in the clothes they wear most—a formal evening dress, for instance, would never be something to splurge on, but a beautifully tailored silk blouse might very well be. They are guided, second after becomingness, by practicality—"A shoulder bag," as Betty Hoffman says, "is indispensable if you have two small sons, one clinging to each hand!" They have learned the economy of choosing simple clothes in basic grays, blacks, muted browns, to spark with scarves and colored ribbons, vary with changes of belts and jewels. They know (and this is real wisdom) that a good clothes economy is your own figure, when it's pared down to its best-possible proportions, for it not only does away with the need for costly, time-consuming alterations, but enables you to wear more easily the inexpensive "little dresses for a song" which come, luckily, now and then, within every woman's reach.

Black-and-white-checked wool jersey basque dress, belted with patent leather, jet buttoned. By Ann Fogarty. $39.95.

BETTY GRAY'S wing-collared pearl-gray taffeta dinner dress remarkable buy at $22.75. (The skirt is stiffened with a crinoli young marrieds...

BETTY HANNAH HOFFMAN goes square-dancing in a gray denim skirt, by Chee Armstrong. $14.95. Blouse is blue cotton.

Brown-and-wine wool-tweed suit. By Jean Bronstein. $69.95.

Rhinestone-buttoned wool-and-rayon dress. $25.00.

MARY ADELE MORRIS' gray wool-jersey dress. $29.95. By Natalie Renke. Rough gray-and-yellow-plaid tweed coat is a "go over everything." $69.95.

"I like clothes to be warm, above all," says Mary Adele. Long rayon-flannel dinner skirt $29.95, by Mary Blair. Short-sleeved velveteen cardigan. $16.95.

H tartan-plaid braid-trimmed wool suit is slightly padded t he hips, small-waisted. By Madeline Fauth. $39.95.

CAPSULE WARDROBES...

What could be more compact than a reversible coat with a skirt to match each side? To the office goes the black-and-white tweed side, showing velvet collar and cuffs. The citron-yellow velveteen hat and bag are exciting accents. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 7499.

Slim tweed skirt topped with red jersey piped in black and buttoned with small covered buttons. This blouse could also be worn with the velveteen skirt and either side of coat. Blouse, Vogue Design No. 7514, 12 to 20; skirt No. 6949, 24 to 32.

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn.; in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont. (*Conn. residents please add sales tax.)

The dressed-up part of the wardrobe: charming yellow satin blouse with novelty braid trim tops a velveteen skirt. Over it, the velveteen side of the coat, of course. Blouse, Vogue Design No. 7447, 12 to 20. Skirt, Vogue Design No. 7506, 22 to 30.

MARIA MARTEL

for City... for Country

By NORA O'LEARY Pattern Editor of the Journal

Three well-chosen pieces in colors that blend are the key to this wardrobe. The suit, a tweed flecked with pink and blue, picks up each color in the sweater and scarf. The nicely fitted jacket has side pockets—the skirt, six gores. Vogue Design No. 7488. 12 to 40.

A lovely soft wool is dressy enough for afternoon or small dinners in the country. Wear pearls or jeweled pin. The skirt is full enough to take a taffeta petticoat. Pretty under the tweed coat. Vogue Design No. S-4251. 12 to 20.

A casual tweed coat in turquoise-and-gray tweed worn over the suit skirt and a sweater. Stitching detail accents neckline, pocket flaps, is optional. Velveteen cloche and carpetbag also pretty with suit. Vogue Design No. S-4252.

For Other Views, Sizes and Prices, turn to page 192

a Small miracle

By HOPE SHELLEY MILLER

BLACK Thursday again. He cut himself while shaving, and when he came downstairs the oatmeal was boiling over on the stove and the kitchen was deserted except for Bill, in his high chair, gnawing on a graham cracker and the cat meowing around underfoot. Pat must be in the basement, judging from the volcanic sound of the washing machine, an antique, bought when Susie was born, which still coped with Bill's diapers. Though why on this particular Thursday the washing took precedence over breakfast was a mystery. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday he lectured to his classes in Child Psychology and the Psychology of the Adolescent in the comparatively serene atmosphere of the university. Thursdays he spent at the clinic dishing out advice to the harried mothers of problem children—or to the problem mothers of harried children. And so it was always on Thursday that he ran out of razor blades, that breakfast was late, that the domestic scene became more than ordinarily chaotic.

He turned off the oatmeal, poured himself a cup of coffee, and prepared to scan the headlines. But immediately the international situation was crowded out by events much closer at hand. The basement door opened and Susie emerged, gold curls bobbing, soapsuds dribbling from her hands. "See, daddy, bubbles!" The cat came up meowing, permitted himself to be used for a towel. Having dried her hands on the animal's black fur, which only increased the meowing, Susie added her protest that breakfast had not yet been served, "Kit-nen hongry. Susie hongry too, bery hongry."

"Yes, I know, we're all hungry," he agreed resignedly.

But resignation was not in Susie's nature. "Boy not hongry!" She planted herself in front of the high chair, pointed an accusing finger at her brother's contented graham-crackery face. (Sibling rivalry again, normal, but potentially dangerous if mishandled.) And suddenly Bill was howling in the high chair while Susie knelt on the floor dividing the graham cracker with the cat.

At which point, of course, Pat had to enter the kitchen. It was a complicated situation needing to be dealt with carefully and in the light of Susie's growing jealousy of Bill. Pat chose to deal with it by giving Susie a swat on the seat of the pants, then planting her at the table, setting a bowl of oatmeal in front of her and commanding her to eat it and let her brother and the cat alone. A simple solution which solved nothing.

Jeffrey Kirkwood, assistant professor of psychology, adviser of problem mothers, author of a soon-to-be-completed text on child psychology, forced himself to keep silence. And yet Pat was intelligent enough in other ways.

"I had to get the washing started so we could be at the doctor's by eleven." She was beating eggs in a bowl. "You haven't forgotten I'll have to have the car?"

He had forgotten, yes. And was there no other day but Thursday for Pat to make a doctor's appointment?

"I'll have an omelet for you in a moment." She put a frying pan on the stove. "Unless, of course, you'd rather have oatmeal?" That came under the heading of early-morning humor; she knew how he loathed oatmeal.

"Never mind." He set down his coffee cup with finality as she poured the eggs into the pan. "If I'm going to walk I'd better get started."

He arrived at the clinic early—early, hungry, and more than a little guilty with the knowledge that he could have waited for the omelet had he chosen to. In the sunny, orderly playroom Ellen Andriesen, assistant to Dr. Finley Jones, the director, was laying out toys. He watched her arranging books on a low round table, her (Continued on Page 117)

ILLUSTRATED BY JOE DE MERS

Jeff knew the rules, But he didn't know Susie— Susie neve

His wife was smart, Jeff knew. Why couldn't she manage the children
the way the book said?

used the same set of Rules twice.

MELVILLE GOODWIN

VI

IF I was disturbed after Captain Robert Goodwin had left, it was an indefinite sort of disturbance. Uncertainty had begun to lurk behind the background of everything I touched. You could start with all the world events which I was trying to put, with the aid of Art Hertz, into an agreeable, intelligent capsule to fit within the limits of fifteen spoken minutes. Nothing was secure in the world any longer where balances and beliefs were moving and settling like the foundations of a badly constructed building.

Once I had been able to view all these matters detachedly, but that was before I had stakes in the future and before I had become involved with studios and contracts and people like Gilbert Frary. I was not even alone with my own problems—there was also Melville A. Goodwin. I began thinking of Melville Goodwin in Washington, struggling with his own uncertainties. I was reminded that before long I was going down to Washington myself to give the broadcast. The details had all been arranged six weeks before. I was enmeshed in personalities and details.

Before I was aware of the time, Art Hertz came in with the final script. While I was reading it and Art sat down to wait, I felt that he was watching me, though every time I looked up from the boldly typed pages he was looking carefully at his hands or playing with a pencil.

"That's fine, Art," I said.

"I'm glad if you like it," Art said.

"I always like what you do, Art," I told him, "but no two minds ever think exactly alike. You mustn't worry if I intersperse a few ideas sometimes."

"Oh, no," Art said, "that's all right. I've always liked working for you, Sid."

At certain times you noticed small details if you knew what was good for you. Art had used the past tense when he said he liked working for me, and the disturbing thing was that he noticed it too.

"And I still like it, Sid," he said.

"Has Frary called up today?" I asked.

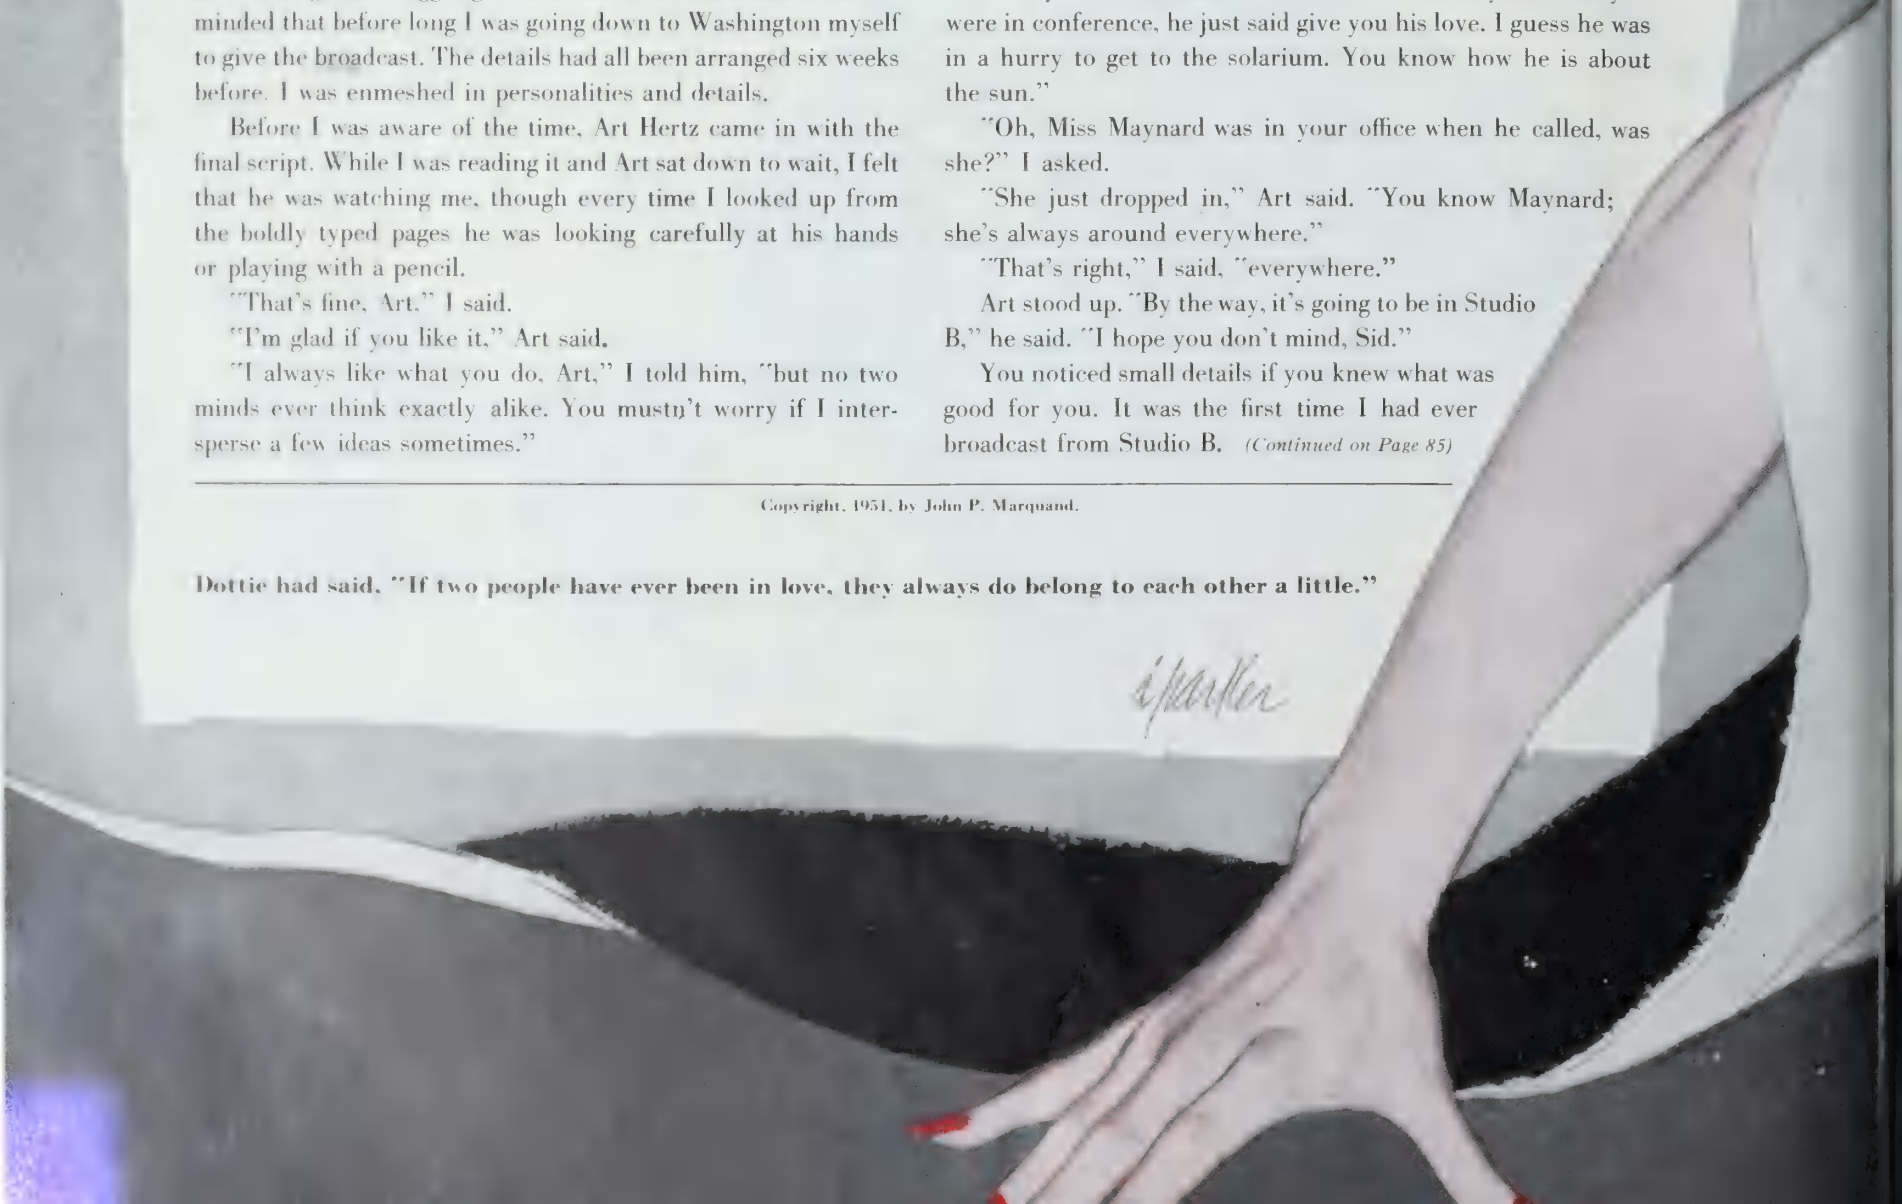
Art Hertz put his pencil in his pocket and smiled. "Oh, yes. He was on the telephone about half an hour ago. He just wanted to hear the lead of the script. He said the sun was shining and he must leave for his massage in the solarium."

"Did you tell him I was here?" I asked.

"Oh, yes," Art answered, "but when Miss Maynard said you were in conference, he just said give you his love. I guess he was in a hurry to get to the solarium. You know how he is about the sun."

"Oh, Miss Maynard was in your office when he called, was she?" I asked.

"She just dropped in," Art said. "You know Maynard; she's always around everywhere."



"That's right," I said, "everywhere."

Art stood up. "By the way, it's going to be in Studio B," he said. "I hope you don't mind, Sid."

You noticed small details if you knew what was good for you. It was the first time I had ever broadcast from Studio B. (Continued on Page 85)

Copyright, 1951, by John P. Marquand.

Dottie had said, "If two people have ever been in love, they always do belong to each other a little."

USA
by John P. Marquand

Sticking closely to a color range of greens, beiges and reds allows plenty of variety and still gives a unified look to a room broken up by many windows.

Furnishing Firsts in a Journal "owner-built" home

by H. T. Williams

By the time a young couple like Jack and Shirley Alker, of Somerville, New Jersey, had lavished much time, loving care and $10,000 of their savings on building their home (a JOURNAL owner-built "Sweat Equity" project, a year in the finishing), they had become pretty skillful managers with time and money—and they needed to be. To produce an interior that could live up to the exterior on the money they had left was going to take doing.

Working the plan out with the Alkers, we chose the sofa, the rug and the armchair for permanence, and budgeted accordingly. The accessories and occasional chairs and tables are of the type that can be used in other rooms later, when the Alkers can afford to collect the individual pieces they will want to live with the rest of their lives.

Integrating windows and walls was the big problem in a room where the walls were mostly windows. Matching walls to full-length, unpatterned fabric produced a background that didn't compete with either the out-of-doors when open or the color and pattern used as upholstery on the furniture inside when closed. Rounded shapes in the chair backs and circular dining table were best adapted for furniture groupings that would be seen from all sides.

Where you're conserving precious wall space, let in the sky. Soften the direct sunlight with an inexpensive (about 30¢ per square foot) split-bamboo shade hung in shallow loops. In a narrow passage a hinged slab table for breakfasting, impervious to stains, cigarette burns, drops to create additional room when not in use.

HAROLD FOWLER

andsome economies, the reversible linen-and)tton rug (9′ x 14′, about $154); sunfast ashable rayon dress material used in the lavish irtains; the coffee table (about $30)—a 27″ iopping board set on a metal frame made y a local ironworker. The latest thing in pin-up mps (see right of picture), adjustable and )unterweighted, is worth a second look.

Sunday-morning breakfasts with a view (curtains open), snug dinners (curtains drawn) take place at this Scandinavian elm-and-birch table which extends to seat eight. Rolling serving table is ordinary typewriter stand with a lower shelf added.

There was nothing
her mother wouldn't do for Joanie ...
except let her live
her own life

Mrs. Fremont's Daughter

By AUDREY DE GRAFF

ILLUSTRATED BY TOM MILLER

IN the still darkness, Betsey Fremont struggled awake. Suddenly alert, she tossed aside the afghan that covered her and swung her feet to the floor. The book she had been reading, one of the new popular psychologies, dropped off the bed with a thick thud, causing her to blink unbelievingly at the luminous dial of the bedside clock. Ten minutes of two! She'd fallen asleep, she actually hadn't heard Joanie come in.

She tiptoed quickly to the door and down the hall, stopped, surprised, at the doorway of her daughter's bedroom. The small dressing-table light still burned, the room waited, a dream of soft blue and rose, drifty white curtains and French-provincial furniture. But there was no Joanie, slim and blond, turning bright, brown eyes to her; there was just the room, waiting and empty.

A host of small worries presented themselves, and worry deepened the darkness of Betsey's eyes. The dance was over at one, it was a short walk home from the high-school gym; even with a stop at the Sugar Bowl, even loitering a bit with Jimmy Sardon, Joanie should have been home by now. These crushes, she thought, these desperate, intense, high-school crushes! She hadn't forgotten, of course—even at fifty-five she could remember—what they were like, exciting and wonderful, and usually mercifully brief. She just wasn't sure of this Jimmy, and Joanie loved him so much.

Betsey looked about the room, turned down the bed and laid a pink nightie and matching peignoir across the foot of it. Joanie looked darling in the peignoir. She looked darling in anything, her mother thought fondly. She frowned down at the old red loafers that showed beneath the ruffled bedspread. Joanie was always just slipping into them, they spoiled the whole effect. Betsey confiscated them, smiled upon the familiar scuffed toes of them, and put the pink rosebud slippers in their place. There, that was right, that was the picture, just perfect for a very pretty girl going on sixteen.

She caught a vision of herself as she passed the mirror, surprised, as always, by the silvered strand that ran in one thick wave through her dark hair. It was so hard to believe the years. But she didn't mind. Because I haven't forgotten, she thought, what it's like to be young, to be growing up, and have everything be right and wonderful. I had it that way myself, the fun, and the pretty clothes, and the gaiety. So I know. . . . I also know, she reminded herself, that it's late.

The night was warm for mid-March, not spring, but still not winter. Perhaps those youngsters were (Continued on Page 200)

"Would it be too much to ask to let me have my own broken heart?"

First Rate Fare

By Ann Batchelder

YEARS ago there was a vogue for songs, so-called "popular" ones, about food and eating. These old songs were primarily minstrel-show material, and, in those preradio days, they lasted too short a time for memory to get in its work. You sang them, whistled them a few times, and a few got on what are now known as "platters." And then they faded away. Suddenly, as I was thinking how good simple food can be if you do your best with it, one of these old songs came into my mind. I recall some of the words and all of the tune, but the title is lost to me forever, I guess. It went like this: "Dinner's ready in the dining room. Everybody gather round. Dinner's ready in the dining room. Can't you hear the dinner bell sound? We've got 'possum pie and applesass. And the way it's going it sure won't last. Dinner's ready in the dining room. Everybody gather round."

It was first-rate, all right. Now down South, which was the background of this song, the famous old mammies set a standard of cooking that was hard to beat. Their meat pies and meat stews were thought well of. Many were celebrated dishes, a specialty of some of the great plantation kitchens. The 'possum I'll pass by. I never saw one or ate one, in a pie or out, and I'm positive I never shall. The important thing to me is that if the folks of those days didn't have or couldn't get expensive foods, they made the most of what they had. And they sang about it. They weren't sad or mad or discouraged. (Continued on Page 246)

MENU

Avocado Appetizer

Swiss Steak

Parsley Potatoes Brussels Sprouts

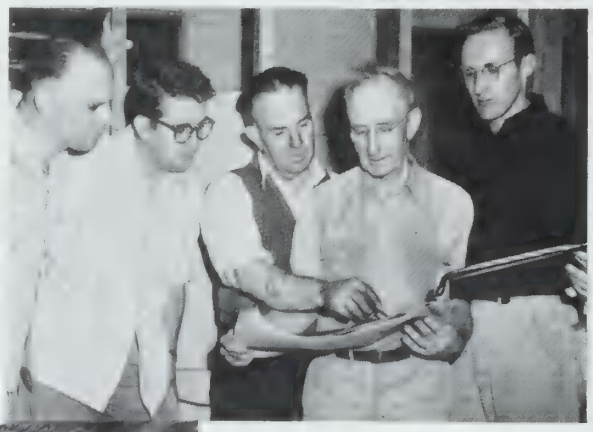
Spiced Apricots

Baking-Powder Biscuits

Orange-and-Raisin Bread Pudding

Coffee

(Planned for 6)

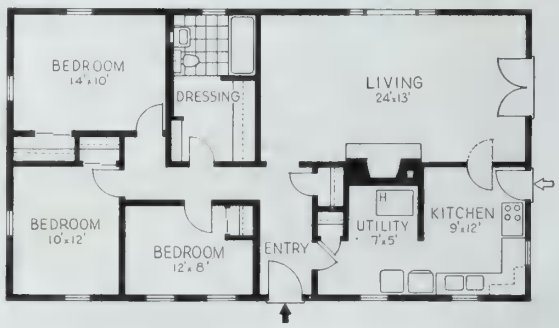


SET: ART-TOWLER

ROYAL BARRY WILLS, ARCHITECT. EXTERIOR PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

Notice how parsonage reversed floor plan of basic version below to fit the site. Together with full-attic version opposite, shows how color tones can vary appearance of practically identical design.

ANTHONY CABRAL—BOSTON TRAVELER



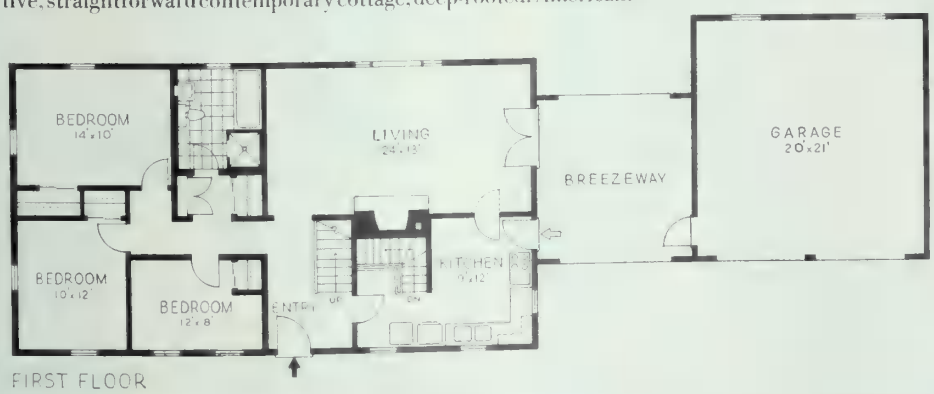
Any congregation has big advantage over any married-couple owner-builders—in manpower, variety of skills.

The minister nails up insulation—one of the pleasanter jobs, for which many wives and husbands compete.

One of the church members was a steam fitter. Only masonry, plumbing, plastering had to be hired.

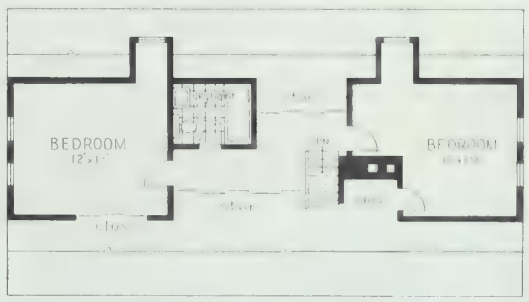
Real entry, commodious kitchen, completely isolated sleeping section, trafficless living room are features rare indeed!

Triple threat to high prices



This time two couples and a congregation find that Journal Sweat Equity can cut prices in half. Multiply the money value of owner effort by expert designing, simple methods. Show how to shop for materials, equipment. Tell how to hire skilled assistants. Make spare-time work really count.

By RICHARD PRATT
Architectural Editor of the Journal



THE ready-built price of a much-needed parsonage was twice what Second Church could afford. Both Sweat Equity's method and design were naturals for the congregation. And the congregation was a natural for Sweat Equity. For among its 120 adult members were a carpenter, a steamfitter, an electrician, a paper hanger, several painters, many amateur assistants. Even so, much help had to be hired, most materials purchased. The final cost should be an inspiration: $8875! . . . But what Lindy and Gertrude, a couple in another town, did, both with busy full-time jobs, should be an inspiration too. They worked week ends on their five-bedroom, two-bath version below. Owner-contracted it the Sweat Equity way. Nearby ready-built houses like theirs were priced up to $32,000. Theirs cost $18,850, acre and all. . . . Frank and Kay had more spare time to give their smaller barn-red version, opposite page below. Their final cost, $10,450. . . . Try matching any of the three! You can, if you try.

To basic design can be added two attic bedrooms and bath: basement (study the stairs); breezeway, a one- or two-car garage. An attractive, straightforward contemporary cottage, deep-rooted. American.

FIRST FLOOR

SECOND FLOOR

A general booklet, No. 2639, A PRIMER FOR THE OWNER-BUILDER, can be ordered from the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Penna., for $1. Use coupon on Page 30. To the Easi-Bild Pattern Company, 462 Bedford Road, Pleasantville, New York, send 50c for Shopping Guide, No. 514, to estimate cost of materials; or $5 for both Shopping Guide and Build It Yourself House Pattern, No. 514.

LIVE A DAY

1 It has no doubt already come your way. I am speaking of—of all things—a moving picture. And if this word "moving" can be applied to anything under the sun, this picture has it. It is a "movie" built with taste, skill, beauty and power around Theodore Dreiser's story, An American Tragedy. The most incredibly beautiful girl is the heroine of this piece—a young lady named Elizabeth Taylor. I saw the preview. I shall see it again in circulation.

2 I understand that this is cheese month. Also apple month. Now go on wid ye, every month is cheese-and-apple month; and here's something curious, they go together like a stocking and a run. What's a run without a stocking? I should know. Never ask me how.

3 Some people lift an eyebrow at garlic. Personally I don't care for it on ice cream. But garlic is quite an item when it comes to roast lamb, for instance. If you don't want it smack on your lamb, try rubbing the bottom of the roaster with a cut clove and then sprinkling with salt. That way you get just enough.

4 A good noodle casserole isn't to be passed up. Take this one, for example: Cook 1 package noodles until they are tender. Drain them and mix with 1 teaspoon caraway seeds. Place in a casserole, alternating layers with 1 can condensed tomato soup and $\frac{1}{4}$ pound grated American cheese. Bake in a moderate oven until light brown. This is wonderful with ham.

5 Fingers of fruitcake rolled in powdered sugar are seen on some of the smartest tea tables.

6 It's a poor bun that can't double at least once when it's called on. Here's one that doubles as a quick patty shell. Split the buns in two lengthwise. Scoop out the center, butter the inside and toast in the oven till brown and crisp. Fill with creamed chicken, etc.

RIVIÈRE AU COUCHER DU SOLEIL, by Camille Bombois

7 West Coast Broil: Cut canned pork luncheon meat into $\frac{1}{2}$" thick slices. Spread each slice with a thin coating of horse-radish, then generously with prepared mustard. Sprinkle with brown sugar, dot with butter or margarine, and broil about 10 minutes to heat and glaze nicely.

8 If you like your stewed tomatoes spicy, add 8 whole cloves, $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon ground cinnamon, 2 teaspoons sugar, $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon salt and 1 tablespoon butter or margarine to 1 No. 2 can tomatoes. Simmer slowly over low heat about 10 minutes, until heated through. Remove cloves and serve hot.

9 Opinions differ—some say that baked apples are better warm than hot or cold, and that cooked prunes are top-flight only when they're as cold as the North Pole. With meats, I like them hot.

10 Hot consommé looks as lonesome as anything on earth, and tomato soup, no matter if it is red, ought to have a little better chance in the world. So if your appetite isn't what it ought to be, serve a slice of toasted French or Italian bread sprinkled with Parmesan cheese on top of either of these soups. Takes away that forlorn look.

11 Two good ideas for meat loaf: Spread it with a thin layer of prepared mustard before baking; that's one. Baste every 15 minutes or so with beef bouillon while baking (the other). Don't try both on the same loaf.

12 To make a simple New England nutmeg sauce excellent for many simple puddings, sift together 1 cup sugar, 1 tablespoon flour, a few grains salt. Add 2 cups boiling water. Stir. Add 1 tablespoon butter. Cook 5 minutes. Add 1 teaspoon nutmeg.

13 When you toss up a tuna salad with mayonnaise, of course, don't have it all tuna. Some chopped cucumber, grated onion and a few spots of lemon juice add a lot.

14 For rolled sandwiches, use a fresh loaf with the crusts removed. Cut thin, spread slices with butter, then with jam, or cheese softened to spread. Roll up and keep in wax paper in the refrigerator until you're ready. Then cut them in two or leave them whole.

15 Savory croutons do things to clear soups. Heat some butter or margarine in a frying pan, add a little salt, onion salt, celery salt and $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon savory.

16 Part 2: Toss 2 cups toasted bread cubes in the seasoned-butter mixture until they're light brown and crisp. Drain and serve afloat on the soup. And remember that these savory bites are wonderful in a green salad. Put them in the last thing.

17 Maybe this rice dish came from the Argentine. Maybe it didn't. Anyway, it's a good one. Combine 2 cups cooked rice, $\frac{1}{4}$ cup melted butter or margarine, 3 tablespoons chopped green pepper, 1 small onion, chopped, $\frac{1}{2}$ cup stewed raisins, 2 tablespoons catchup, dash of cayenne or Tabasco, and 1 teaspoon salt. Place in a casserole, top with grated cheese and bake 15 minutes at 400° F.

18 Good spread for rye or pumpernickel or brown bread on the appetizer tray. Mix "blue" cheese, cottage cheese, crisp bacon bits and sliced stuffed olives.

19 One more idea for the same kind of occasion. Mix together $\frac{3}{4}$ cup cream cheese, 3 sections Camembert cheese and $\frac{1}{2}$ bar butter. Use plenty of elbow grease on this. It pays off. Add salt to taste, and half a bud of garlic, crushed to a fare-you-well. Make into little balls and roll in chopped curried peanuts.

20 Here's a sauce for ice cream (or leftover spice-cake) that raisins might have dreamed up on the stem, all by themselves. Add $\frac{1}{2}$ cup raisins to the sirup of 1 can pineapple, or plums or apricots. Chill it well. The raisins will become as one in flavor with the other fruit.

21 Quick sauce for ice cream: Heat $\frac{1}{2}$ cup honey until it bubbles. Stir in $\frac{1}{2}$ cup chopped toasted almonds.

22 If you yearn for the best from a chicken, give it the lemon treatment. Just rub the skin all over with a cut lemon, then season with salt and pepper and go ahead and roast or broil or fry.

23 Elegant for breakfast, lunch or supper. Spread pâté de foie on rounds of hot buttered toast, place a well-poached egg on each. Dot with butter, season with salt and pepper and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

24 A full-sized baked Alaska is quite a production. But you can achieve this miniature version with ease: Fill small baked tart shells with ice cream, set in freezing compartment until firm again. Cover all over with meringue and bake until the meringue is delicately brown.

25 There's a little supper dessert that wins the heart. Made from peach halves sautéed in butter or margarine and brown sugar, then add some peach sirup to the frying pan and, when hot, pour over the peaches. Serve on French toast or waffles.

26 "Home is the hunter, home from the hill" where partridge and grouse and quail linger still. The patient cook who cooks these wild birds finds that, besides bread sauce, a sauce of $\frac{1}{2}$ cup currant jelly, melted, and 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce saves time and trouble. Stir well. Serve hot.

27 After mixing minced onion and seasonings with meat for your hamburgers, let stand in refrigerator $\frac{1}{2}$ hour or so—improves flavor.

28 Dip thin apple rings in a light batter (you can make it from a pancake mix if you're in a hurry) and fry in deep fat to a golden brown. Sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon and serve with crisp bacon.

29 Cabbage and curry—two worthies in the same dish. Add 2 teaspoons curry powder, 1 teaspoon prepared mustard and $\frac{1}{4}$ cup grated cheese to 1 cup well-seasoned cream sauce. Pour over chopped boiled cabbage and bake till brown.

30 For a seasonable and reasonable company dish: Cut avocados in half, remove pit, fill with hot creamed crab, oysters or lobster. Set in a pan of hot water and bake, covered, at 375° F. for 15 or 20 minutes.

31 Going over some books of another era—not farther back than 1928—I picked from my shelves a thin little volume of verse called Spring Plowing, by a young poet, Charles Malans. It has a distinction few poets called "minor" can boast. It contains a perfect lyric—The Singer in the Sun. Where is he now, this poet called minor? Why do we not hear again his silver trumpet across the foothills of Olympus? Sing again in the Sun, and tell us what was the harvest like.

By Ann Batchelder

First: you take TOMATO Soup—

ANNE MARSHALL
Director Home Economics
Campbell Soup Company

BY Anne Marshall

OH, what magic is in that can of tomato soup! Is there a woman now alive and cooking who could keep house half so easily and thriftily without this wonderful soup? For it serves her in 3 ways—as a soup, as a smooth pour-on sauce and as an everyday cooking ingredient.

Tomato soup is made from luscious, field-ripened tomatoes fresh from summer vines, and puréed with creamery butter. It lends color and zest to any meal—to almost any dish.

Use tomato soup a dozen ways! Pour it over meat, fish, spaghetti and vegetables—use it as an ingredient in any cooking that calls for the best tomato sauce. First you take tomato soup!

To make a Tastier Stew!

Tomato soup gives it a richer flavor and more color. In making your favorite stew, use a can or two of tomato soup for part of the liquid.

To glorify Hamburgers!

Hamburgers are always more delicious with tomato soup heated (seasoned, if desired) and poured on them. Extra-rich, extra-smooth just as it comes from the can.

To prepare America's Favorite Soup:

(left) CREAM OF TOMATO—Blend with milk for a rich, delicious cream soup that's always appetizing.

(right) TOMATO—For the zesty flavor and tempting color of red-ripe tomatoes, just add water.

The Duchess of Sutherland . . .
Mrs. Ellen Tuck Astor . . . La Comtesse de la Falaise . . . share a sure and lovely look of exquisite distinction that singles them out wherever they may be. Yet—each is magnetically individual . . . revealing in her charming face that special woman that is her Inner Self

Britain's Duchess of Sutherland

Her expressive face mirrors the inner grace and dignity of this lovely Duchess—shares with you, too, her warm friendliness. Her complexion has the fresh delicacy of England's own May blossoms. "I always use Pond's Cold Cream," the Duchess says. "I don't know a better cleansing cream in the world for keeping skin smooth and soft."

America's Mrs. Ellen Tuck Astor

A lovely composure looks out at you from Mrs. Astor's charming face. It is a face that beautifully expresses the fascinating quality of her Inner Self . . . a face that never fails to excite interest because it is so delightful to see. Mrs. Astor's complexion has that flawless, smooth look every woman wants for herself. Her beauty care is simple to copy. She uses Pond's Cold Cream. "To my mind there is just no better face cream," Mrs. Astor says.

MELVILLE GOODWIN USA

(Continued from Page 70)

No," I said, "I don't mind. I'd just as not have a crowd watching me."
should have gone over the script again, instead I began thinking about my cont and I remembered how hurt Gilbert been when I had shown it, before signto a law firm I had selected myself. The was Frankel and Jacobs, well-known for ary and theatrical work, and as a matter act Dottie Peale had introduced me to
n. The contract was a long document ch I had never read carefully, seeing that d paid the Frankel firm to read it, but d remember a clause called a Mutual satisfaction Clause, permitting a terminaof the contract by either party. The about either party had been inserted by Frankel. I wanted very much to read it then. I even thought of asking Miss ynard for a copy until I thought that might arouse needless suspicions. Ind I asked her to get me Mrs. Henry le again on the telephone.
Darling," Dottie said, "I thought you ht be calling me. Is anything the matter?"
went to show that she knew too much ut my voice and behavior.
I was just wondering whether young dwin had gone," I said.
He just left a minute or two ago," Dottie
l. "He was so sweet. Don't you think he's et?"
That's right," I said, "he's sweet."
Why don't you stop in for a minute on r way home?" she said. "I could give a bite of supper, dar-
, up in the study. I en't anything to do un-nine o'clock."

lbert the butler greeted like an old family
nd and asked whether should take me up in lift or whether I cared to go by myself.
ld him that I would try to run the thing
ne. When the doors opened automatically, uld see Dottie, through the open door her study, sitting on the sofa with her curled under her in that manner she l never outgrown.
She wriggled off the sofa when she saw me, t as she would have years before. There s always something young about the way ttie got herself off a sofa. She was dressed a greenish afternoon frock which I could gine she had hurried into directly after I l told her about Robert Goodwin. She d her hands out to me, but before I could e them she threw her arms around me and sed me. It was utterly unexpected, but I ld not say I minded it.
Well, well," I said, "say I'm weary, say sad, but Jennie kissed me."
Darling," she said, "your feathers are ruffled. You look upset."

HERE was no use concealing my feelings, d as I stood with my arm around her, I d to admit I felt almost happy, because ddenly realized she and I were friends in te of all our quarrels and competitions.
Well," I said, "perhaps I am."
I had Albert bring up chicken sandhes and milk," she said. "Do you still e chicken sandwiches?"
It was kind of her to remember that I ed chicken sandwiches, but then if she nted she could remember everything.
Darling," she said, "I'm glad you called up." She was back on the sofa again with r feet curled under her. "It's awfully nice know you still belong to me a little."
"I don't mind it either right now," I said.
new this was one of her moods, but per-ps it was valid.
Dottie said, "If two people have ever en in love they always do belong to each her a little, whether they approve of it or
t. It isn't anything to be ashamed of. I n't even mean that we were very much in ve, because we always knew too much out each other, and now you'd better pull your socks and tell me what's the matter."

I did not love her any longer and she did not love me, but at the same time I could tell her some things about myself which I could not have told Helen because they would have disturbed her and they would not bother Dottie Peale.

"Well," I began, "this afternoon at the office ——" And there I was, telling Dottie Peale about Alan Featherbee and Gilbert Frary and Art Hertz.

"I know," Dottie said. "Haven't you known that Gilbert was out to knife you? I've known it for the last six weeks."

"How did you know?" I asked.

"Because I'm not a chump like you," Dottie said. "There's plenty you can do about Frary. You're as important as Frary. What are you thinking of doing?"

"Frankly, I'm thinking of collecting my year's salary and getting out for good," I said.

"And then what'll you do?" she asked.

It was a pleasure to have her ask me instead of asking myself. "I don't know," I answered. "Maybe I might do some writing."

"What sort of writing?" Dottie said. "Dog stories?"

"I've a poodle named Farouche," I said. "I might do poodle stories."

She saw that I was laughing at her. "It's just the way it was on the paper," she said. "All right, I'll go around myself and see someone tomorrow. You can forget about it now and let me run this."

"Well, that's fine," I said. "You sound exactly like Mrs. Melville A. Goodwin."

I had never considered the consequences when I mentioned Mrs. Goodwin until I saw Dottie's face redden and there was a moment's silence.

"Now just why did you bring her up?" she asked.

"Now, Dot," I said, "I didn't mean to, but how did you like the soldier boy?"

Dottie sighed impatiently. "One of your worst troubles," Dottie said, "is that you never face up to anything. First you come here and tell me all your difficulties and then when I'm considering them, you ask about something else. What's the matter? Don't you want to have me help you?"

"Now, Dot," I said, "talking this over has been a help, but I don't want you to go and see someone."

"Sid," she said, "please. Just the other night I was talking to Norman Jones. You know Norman Jones in White Wall Rubber, don't you? Well, he was saying that they want to sponsor a news hour. I'm going to see him whether you want me to or not. You never know what you want."

"Dot," I asked her, "does anyone know what he wants?"

"That's a silly question," Dottie said. "I know, I've always known and I don't flounder around like you."

"You've never got it, have you?" I said.

There is always something embarrassing about a naked truth. She scowled at me and then I saw her move her head sharply and I heard the automatic elevator.

"What time is it?" Dottie said, and then looked at the clock on the mantelpiece. It was exactly half past eight. "Darling," she whispered, "don't go. Don't go just yet."

We had both turned to the door that opened onto the hallway, and there was Melville Goodwin. There was one of those uncertain silences before any of us spoke.

"Why, Mel," I heard Dottie say, "you're early."

"That's right," he said, "a half an hour early. I hope I'm not interrupting a conference. Hello, Sid."

I think he was surprised, because he must have expected Dottie to be alone, but at the same time he was glad to see me.

"Hello, Mel," I said. "I just dropped in for a minute and I'm leaving now."

In great actions men show themselves as they ought to be; in small actions, as they are. —CHAMFORT.

Those questions on a mother's mind...

Is my 10 year old daughter too young to be told about menstruation?

Should I be the one to tell her?

What should I say.... and when?

If your daughter is 12, or younger . . . you will find guidance and reassurance in "How Shall I Tell My Daughter," a new booklet prepared by the makers of Modess.

This confidence-inspiring booklet, which will be sent you free, tells how, when and what to tell a preadolescent . . . gives hints on how to approach the shy girl, the disinterested girl, the girl who has learned "false facts."

Mothers who have already received this booklet say, "I wish my mother had had help like this when I was growing up."

How can I make my 13-year old daughter's "first times" easier?

Should I give her definite health rules to follow?

Can I be sure of my facts?

If your daughter is 13, or older . . . give her the attractive, new Modess Special Teen-Age Package. It contains . . .

1. A copy of "Growing Up and Liking It," a friendly booklet explaining menstruation in "a girl's own language." 2. A Modess Sanitary Belt. 3. Twenty-four soft, safe Modess Napkins in all 3 sizes, so your daughter can discover which size best suits her needs.

Free Book!

Send Coupon, Plus $1.50 for Special Teen-Age Package. We pay postage

Anne Shelby, Educational Dept.
Personal Products Corporation
Box 5132-10, Milltown, New Jersey

Please send me the following:

☐ Free Book, "How Shall I Tell My Daughter?"

☐ Special Teen-Age Package (enclose $1.50)

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

Daughter's Age_____

© P. P. C.—1951

I dreamed I was bewitching in my *maidenform® bra

Every little star is winking—even the man in the moon is carrying a torch! They're enchanted, entranced by a magic someone. "Who-o-o-o?" All the night owls know the answer... me... bewitching everyone in my charm of a Maidenform bra.*

Shown: Maidenform's Allo-ette in black satin. Also available in broadcloth and nylon taffeta, marquisette or lace... from $2.00. Send for free style booklet. Maidenform, N. Y. 16.*

There is a maidenform for every type of figure!

See Faith Baldwin's best loved stories on TV*. Tune in Maidenform's Theater of Romance, Saturdays at mid-day, ABC-TV coast-to-coast network.*

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Maiden Form Brassiere Co.

"What's the idea of your leaving?" Mel Goodwin asked. "Dottie and I were going to see the town. How about taking him along, Dot?"

"Sid just came around for some advice, Mel," Dottie said. "Career trouble."

Mel Goodwin smiled and walked across the room and patted me on the shoulder. "Career trouble?" he repeated. "That sounds like Washington. Well, Sid can tell me about it while you go in and put on what you call an evening frock."

Dottie shook her head. "Mel," she said, "would you mind very much if we all stayed here?"

Mel Goodwin looked at her quickly. "Why," he said, "what's the matter, Dot?"

"Oh," Dottie said, "nothing, Mel, except perhaps I've been thoughtless. Darling, I never dreamed that people would begin to talk."

Mel Goodwin clasped his hands behind him and glanced at me and back at Dottie. "Well," he said, "so that's why Sid's here."

"No, no," Dottie said, "it isn't Sid, but I imagine Sid agrees with me. I've been awfully thoughtless, Mel."

"Now let's get this straight," Mel Goodwin said. "You didn't feel this way when I called you up at noon. Someone's been talking to you. Who was it, Dot?"

"Oh, it doesn't matter, Mel," Dottie answered.

"Come on," he said, "who was it?"

It was interesting, for once, being an innocent bystander, especially when one remembered that Dottie had always been looking for a man. I was sure that she did not want to tell and I was just as sure that she was going to.

"It's about time for me to be going home," I said.

"No," Mel Goodwin said. "I want you to stick around, boy. Who's been so interested in me, Dot?"

"Mel," Dottie said, "promise me you won't be mad at him."

"That depends on who it is," Mel Goodwin said.

"All right," Dottie said, "have it your own way. It was Robert."

"Well, I'll be damned!" the General said. "So it was Bob, was it? Did you see him, Sid?"

"I saw him at the office," I answered. "He's worried about you, Mel."

The guileless eyes of Mel Goodwin held me for a second. "Do you think he's got a right to be?" he asked.

"Yes, sir," I answered, "he made me think so."

"What did you think of Bob?" he asked.

"I liked him," I said.

MEL GOODWIN smiled and the watchfulness left his eyes. "That boy is going to get along," he said, "if he just learns not to stick his neck out. It's nice, his being worried about the old man. You know, I kind of like it. What did he say?" He was asking me, not Dottie.

"He thinks you have a future, sir," I said, "if you don't stick your neck out."

"You know, that's sort of pleasant," Mel Goodwin said, "to know that the kid thinks that. Did you and Bob get along all right, Dot?"

Dottie smiled her warmest smile. "He loved talking about you, Mel," she said. "He was so sweet about you."

"Well, well," the General said, "maybe I should have taken this all up with Bob myself, but there never seemed to be any opportunity around the house in Alexandria. Maybe Bob's right about being around publicly. Well, let's all stay here and have a happy evening. I'm pretty proud of Bob. This is certainly a welcome change from Washington. That crowd in the Pentagon! It's full of people with battle records now, but a lot of the boys look confused."

I forgot that it was time I was starting home. I was in an atmosphere of revealing suspense as I watched Mel Goodwin and Dottie Peale. No matter what a man and woman might try to conceal, no matter what studied indifference they might display toward each other, anyone could ascerta much of what lay between them. I had nev realized until then how far things had go and how irrevocable things were betwe Mel and Dottie Peale.

It was fascinating, for instance, to obser when he sat down on the sofa that he unbu toned two buttons of his blouse. When y thought of the buttons of West Point and his subconscious preoccupation with appea ance, nothing could have been more revea ing than that unconsidered action. It told clearly as words where Dottie and M Goodwin stood.

"This is a fine idea," he said, "sitti around in a home this evening."

THIS was the second time, Mel Goodw was saying, that he had come home from war. He had been very junior on the oth occasion and this was easy to handle, but was no joke coming home as a general, wi a lot of missiles being thrown at you, i cluding custard pies and bricks. It seem down in Washington, even in branches the Department, that everyone was forge ting there had been a war and Washingt was sick to death of officers and their re ords. The truth was, combat officers we selling for about a dime a dozen, and y could not see the desks for battle ribbon

On his first day in Washington he ha dropped in to see "Snip" Lewis just for friendly chat and some informal orientatio on the off chance that Snip might not be t busy. Maybe he should have telephone Snip had been in a key position since t war, and as far as M Goodwin was concerne he deserved everythi he had, including t Legion of Merit and t D.S.O. and his compl mentary French and Bri ish decorations. He ha nothing at all agains anyone like Snip, who had been three yea behind him at the Point. Snip was an o Grimshaw man, and they had worked t gether in Washington before "Torch." was not Snip's fault that he had stayed on Washington; somebody had to stay, an Snip had been a fine exec for Grimshaw Nevertheless, he was surprised when H dropped into that Pentagon office. The thin that struck him right in the eye was Snip exec in the outer office. It was old "Froggy Jukes, sitting there pushing all the button

He wanted to make it clear that he ha nothing against Froggy. It wasn't any man fault if he suffered from emotional instabilit and did not make the grade in a front are because this might happen to the very bes Nevertheless, when Froggy Jukes was "Bullpup" in North Africa, he had droppe the ball at a crucial moment, and old Heinz had not taken him over to Italy, after tha little mix-up. Yet here he was, a brigadie in the Pentagon with three secretaries an secret filing cabinets and four telephones. H had nothing whatsoever against Froggy an he had not been mixed up with Froggy problems, but they had both been in "Bul pup," and he knew the score.

"Well, well," Froggy said, "I've bee wondering when you'd come here."

"Well," Mel Goodwin said, "it's nice t see you, Froggy. How have things bee going?"

You could see that things had been goin pretty well. Froggy had his North Africa ribbon, the Legion of Merit and the D.S.C and a Caribbean ribbon.

"I'm just the boss's errand boy," Frogg said, "but I'm busy as a bird dog, what wit all this unification. Let's see, you were i 'Bullpup,' weren't you, Mel?"

Froggy knew damned well that he was i "Bullpup," if he had not lost his wits.

"Heinzy never understood me out there, Froggy said.

All you could do was to be nice about i and say that a lot of others hadn't hit it o with Heinzy either, but you could see tha Froggy still had it in for the "Bullpup crowd on general principles.

(Continued on Page 90)

The devil always paints himself black, but we always see him rose-colored.
—FINNISH PROVERB.

Which one is the daughter?

This beautiful Metropolitan Opera Star looks as young as her daughter!

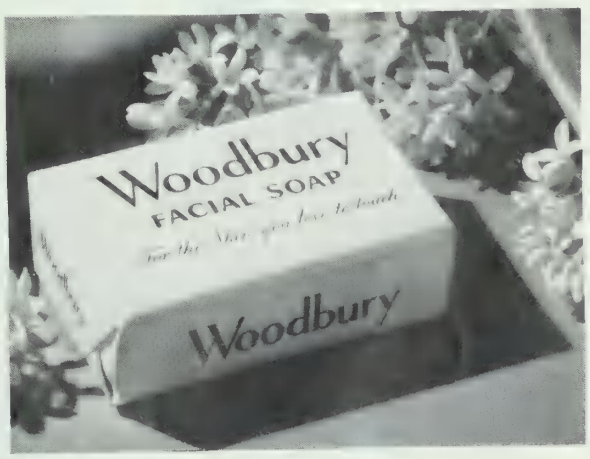
Both these lovely ladies are Jarmila Novotna!

Yet, though it's hard to believe, one of them is Jarmila the Younger — and the beautiful woman by her side is her mother!

Madame Novotna has long been a star of the famous Metropolitan Opera. Her thrilling voice is matched only by her exquisite beauty.

What marvelous secret does Jarmila Novotna know? To be one of the world's great beauties . . . with a daughter of 19?

Madame Novotna says: "If I have a secret, it's a well-known one. Complexion is the mirror of age. And there's only one regular care I give my skin—Woodbury Facial Soap."



There's a vital difference in Woodbury care. It's more than a cleanser, for skin scientists add an emollient beauty-cream ingredient to every cake.

This rich beauty oil is the very same skin-softener found in the most expensive face creams.

While some soaps may dry delicate skin, Woodbury smooths. The beauty-cream ingredient is intended to help replace the natural oils you wash away.

The living proof of Woodbury's complexion magic is Jarmila Novotna (the woman on the right). And proof, too, is her daughter — another radiant Woodbury Deb!

Try Woodbury Facial Soap yourself . . . and soon.

Woodbury Facial Soap ... with the Beauty-Cream Ingredient

for the skin you love to touch

Sensational Baking Recipes of the Century use WESSON

FOR YOU, THE BEST! America's No.1 Salad Oil NOW your liquid shortening

Millions change from solid shortening to Wesson Oil—for STIR-N-ROLL pie crust, biscuits—and Chiffon Cakes

You see it in magazines and newspapers. Hear about it on TV or radio! Exciting new recipes are being originated with Wesson Oil. You'll find that liquid shortening is easier, surer to use. And Wesson's delicacy naturally makes good foods taste better.

Wonderfully flaky pie crust and meltin' tender biscuits are made the sensational STIR-N-ROLL way. No more cutting in solid shortening—just stir in Wesson Oil!

Glamorous Chiffon Cake can't be made with solid shortening...but light Wesson Oil is perfect for that extra-light texture.

Wesson is modern. Pours to measure, pours to mix...blends by simple stirring. Ends all that fuss of "melting shortening" for waffles, muffins, brownies, fruitcakes, ends "melting fat" for frying!

And, don't forget—Wesson is America's favorite salad oil, too!

Bake the modern way with WESSON OIL

STIR-N-ROLL APPLE RAISIN PIE

A liquid shortening recipe by Betty Crocker. Flaky pastry at first try—you stir in Wesson Oil.

PREHEAT oven to 425°.

Make STIR-N-ROLL pastry for 9-in. two-crust pie (recipe below).

Cook (covered) until tender (about 5 minutes) in . . .
1⅓ cups seedless raisins
1⅓ cups boiling water

Stir in a mixture of 1⅓ tbsp. GOLD MEDAL Flour
⅔ cup sugar

Cook over low heat, stirring constantly, until mixture thickens and boils. Boil 1 minute. Remove from heat.

Stir in 1⅓ cups sliced apples
½ cup finely chopped walnuts or pecans
2 tsp. grated lemon rind (about 1 lemon)
3 tbsp. lemon juice (about 1 lemon)

Pour hot filling into pastry-lined pie pan.

STIR-N-ROLL pastry for 9-in. two-crust pie

1. Mix together
2 cups sifted GOLD MEDAL Flour
1½ tsp. salt

Pour into a measuring cup (but don't stir!)
½ cup WESSON OIL
and . . . ¼ cup cold whole milk

Then pour all at once into flour.

2. Stir lightly until mixed. Round up dough ...divide in halves. Flatten each half slightly.

3. Place one half between 2 sheets of waxed paper (12-in. square). Roll out gently until circle reaches edges of paper. (Waxed paper will not slip while rolling pastry if table top under paper is slightly damp.)

Peel off top paper. If dough cracks or breaks, mend without moistening by pressing edges together...or by pressing a scrap of pastry lightly over tear.

4. Lift paper and pastry by top corners; they will cling together. Place (paper side up) in 9-in. pie pan. Carefully peel off paper. Gently fit pastry into pan. Trim to rim.

TOP CRUST: Roll as above and place over filling. Trim to rim. Seal by pressing gently with fork or by fluting edge. Snip 3 or 4 small slits near center. Bake about 40 minutes (until golden brown and juice begins to bubble through slits in crust) in hot oven (425°). Serve warm.

*With GOLD MEDAL Self-Rising Flour, omit salt. Bake at 375° about 50 minutes.

STIR-N-ROLL POCKETBOOK BISCUITS

A liquid shortening recipe by Betty Crocker of General Mills. Stir up tender biscuits every time with Wesson Oil.

PREHEAT oven to 475°. Sift together...
2 cups sifted GOLD MEDAL Flour
3 tsp. double-action baking powder
1 tsp. salt

Pour into measuring cup (but don't stir!)...
⅓ cup WESSON OIL
⅔ cup milk

Then pour all at once into the flour.

Stir with a fork until mixture cleans sides of bowl and rounds up into a ball. Smooth up by kneading dough about 10 times without additional flour. With dough on waxed paper, press out ¼-in. thick with hands, or roll out between waxed paper.

1. POCKETBOOK BISCUITS: Cut dough into 3-in. rounds with unfloured biscuit cutter. Fold over...or place ½ tsp. of your favorite jelly in center before folding...then press edges together tightly. Bake 10 to 12 minutes on ungreased cooky sheet in very hot oven (475°). 12 medium biscuits.

2. ROLLED OR PATTED BISCUITS: Follow directions above, but do not fold or add filling. For high biscuits, roll dough ½-in. thick.

3. DROP BISCUITS: Mix as directed above, but do not knead dough. Drop dough on ungreased cooky sheet.

*If you use GOLD MEDAL Self-Rising Flour, omit the baking powder and the salt.

WANT LOTS MORE RECIPES using Wesson Oil for baking and frying? Send for these 4 free folders: (1) Stir-N-Roll Pastry, (2) Stir-N-Roll Biscuits, (3) Chiffon Cakes and Hot Breads, (4) Wesson for Frying. Send name and address to Wesson Oil, 210 Baronne St., New Orleans, La.

IL as LIQUID Shortening!

HY WESSON OIL IS REPLACING SOLID SHORTENING

Easier...faster...simplifies recipes.
en beginners get better results every time.

EASIER, FASTER

o ligging out" solid shortening, no "packing" n measuring cup...Wesson pours easily to xact measurements.

o utting in" shortening for pastry, biscuits... Vesson stirs right in, saves work.

o essy floured board...make STIR-N-ROLL pas- ry and biscuits the easy way with Wesson Oil.

BETTER RESULTS

la y pie crust and tender biscuits every time... amous STIR-N-ROLL recipes use Wesson Oil nd Gold Medal Flour.

h on Cakes so light, so luscious, can't be made vith any solid shortening...use light Wesson Oil and Softasilk Cake Flour.

e ate-tasting, delicious foods...Wesson is a fine egetable oil. It's finer than the oils used in he best-known solid shortenings.

e ily digestible...Wesson maintains digesti- ility better at higher baking temperatures han the best-known solid shortenings.

sson Oil is a reg. trademark of the Wesson Oil and Snowdrift ...pe. "Betty Crocker," "Gold Medal" and "Softasilk" are reg. ad arks of General Mills, Inc.

MARBLE CHIFFON CAKE

A liquid shortening recipe by Betty Crocker.
Angelfood light...luscious...made with Wesson Oil.

PREHEAT oven to 325° (slow mod.). Sift ample amount of Softasilk Cake Flour on a square of paper.

STIR these until smooth. Cool:

¼ cup cocoa — ¼ cup boiling water
¼ cup sugar — ¼ tsp. red food coloring, if desired

STEP 1...MEASURE (level measurements throughout) and SIFT together into mixing bowl:

2¼ cups sifted SOFTASILK Cake Flour (spoon lightly into cup, don't pack) — 1½ cups sugar, 3 tsp. baking powder, 1 tsp. salt

Make a well and add in order:

½ cup WESSON OIL — 5 unbeaten egg yolks (medium sized) — ¾ cup cold water — 2 tsp. vanilla

BEAT until smooth with spoon, or beat with electric mixer on medium speed for 1 minute.

STEP 2...MEASURE into large mixing bowl:

1 cup egg whites (7 or 8) — ½ tsp. cream of tartar

BEAT until whites form very stiff peaks by hand, or with electric mixer on high speed for 3 to 5 minutes. DO NOT UNDERBEAT. Egg whites are stiff enough when a rubber scraper drawn through leaves a clean path.

STEP 3...POUR egg yolk mixture gradually over beaten egg whites...gently folding with rubber scraper just until blended. DO NOT STIR.

Place ½ the batter in another bowl; pour cocoa mixture gradually over it, gently folding until blended. IMMEDIATELY pour alternate layers of light and dark batters into ungreased tube pan, 10 x 4-in. Bake 55 minutes in slow moderate oven (325°), then increase to 350° (moderate) for 10 to 15 minutes...or until top springs back when lightly touched. Immediately turn pan upside down, placing tube over neck of funnel or bottle. Let hang, free of table, until cold. Loosen from sides and tube with spatula. Turn pan over. Hit edge sharply on table to loosen. 16 to 20 servings.

If you live at an altitude over 2,500 ft., look on the folder inside the Softasilk package for Chiffon Cake recipe adjustments.

BROWN BEAUTY ICING: Combine in a bowl 1 cup sifted confectioners' sugar, 2 or 3 egg yolks (or 1 small egg), ¼ cup milk, 3 squares (3 oz.) unsweetened chocolate, melted, 1 tbsp. soft shortening, ½ tsp. vanilla. Place bowl in ice water and beat with rotary beater until consistency to spread (3 to 5 minutes.)

Can you answer these questions about ARTHRITIS?

1 Q What is Arthritis?

A. Arthritis is the term applied to many different diseases affecting the joints of the body. All of the arthritic diseases are characterized by inflammation or swelling of the joints, but these conditions differ widely as to causes, symptoms, and the kind of treatment required. In its various forms, arthritis affects more than 3 million Americans. In fact, it is a leading cause of chronic illness in our country today.

2 Q What are the most common forms of Arthritis?

A. Of all types of arthritis, the chronic forms, osteoarthritis and rheumatoid arthritis, are by far the most common. Osteoarthritis is primarily the result of aging, or normal wear-and-tear on the joints. It rarely develops before age 40 and it seldom causes severe crippling. Rheumatoid arthritis is a much more serious disorder. It usually strikes between the ages of 20 and 50, and unless it is properly treated the joints may become permanently damaged.

3. Q What causes rheumatoid Arthritis?

A. Although the exact cause of rheumatoid arthritis is unknown, a variety of factors are involved in its onset. In this condition, there is usually evidence of disease of the entire system—such as loss of weight, fatigue, anemia, infection, emotional strain, and nutritional deficiencies. Since many factors may be involved, doctors stress the importance of a thorough physical examination of each patient. This is essential to proper diagnosis and treatment, which in all cases must be based upon the patient's individual needs.

4. Q Is there hope of conquering Arthritis?

A. Yes, indeed! Methods of treatment for all types of arthritis are constantly being improved. The outlook for further advances is now more hopeful than ever before—thanks to research which is yielding new facts about the underlying causes of arthritis, especially the rheumatoid type.

5. Q Has a "sure cure" been discovered for Arthritis?

A. No, indeed! Yet, many people are still misled by claims that are made for certain "arthritis cures" or other forms of therapy that are worthless. Authorities emphasize that proper medical care offers the only hope of permanent relief from arthritis. Today, about 60 percent of the victims can be greatly benefited, and in some cases completely relieved, if proper treatment is commenced early.

6. Q How can you guard against Arthritis?

A. Doctors say there are certain precautions that everyone can take to help prevent arthritis, or to lessen the effect if it should occur. Here are some of them: keep weight normal . . . try to maintain good posture . . . get sufficient rest, sleep, and exercise . . . eat a balanced daily diet . . . have regular medical and dental examinations . . . maintain a calm mental outlook . . . see your doctor whenever persistent pain occurs in any joint.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company
1 Madison Ave., New York 10, N. Y.

Please send me a copy of your booklet, 1051J, "Arthritis."

Name_____
Street_____
City_____ State_____

(Continued from Page 86)

"I suppose you want to hit the chief for something," Froggy said.

Of course he was saying it in a kidding way, but it was not a nice way of putting it, considering who had the rank and record.

"If General Lewis has about three minutes," Mel Goodwin said, "I'd like to pay him my respects."

"The chief is pretty busy now," Froggy said. "It's a crowded morning, but I think he can give you five minutes."

"All right, ask him," Mel Goodwin said. "I'm pretty busy myself, Froggy."

Froggy opened the door to the inner office and slid through and closed it softly behind him. There was nothing about any of it that Melville Goodwin liked, but of course Snip Lewis had time to see him.

"Sit down, Mel," Snip said. "I wish I didn't have to get out of here in five minutes. We'll have to get you and Muriel over on the first clear night, and we'll get the Old Man. The Old Man wants to see you."

"Well, that sounds good," Mel said.

"We've got to find a groove for you, Mel," Snip said. "If there's anything you'd like particularly, count on me to put in a word."

This was all said in a kidding way, of course, and Mel Goodwin laughed because it was the right thing to do and not because he felt like laughing. "Well," he said, "if you've got a division running around loose, bear me in mind, will you?"

This was said in a kidding way, too, but it was curious to see the blank look on Snip Lewis' face.

"What do you want a division for?" Snip asked, and Mel Goodwin felt as embarrassed as if he had asked for something off color.

"Well, I know about them," he said.

Snip Lewis wrote something on his memo pad. "Listen, Mel," he said, "what would Muriel say? We can cook you up something higher than that. Now you're safe home we don't want to send you out to Bragg or Bailey. What would you do with a division, boy?"

He wanted to ask Snip Lewis what he thought the Army was about, but it was no time to sound off too freely, and besides, Froggy had just re-entered the room.

"General Councillor is outside, sir," Froggy said, "and the car's at the Mall entrance."

"All right," Snip said, "two more minutes, and take my brief case," and they both watched Froggy close the door.

"Froggy has been quite a find," Snip Lewis said.

"I'm glad to hear it," Mel Goodwin answered. "I'd be damned if I'd want him." He could call a spade a spade with Snip, and Snip laughed.

"I know," he said, "but right now we need more brains than brawn. Just get it through your head that you've got brains too. Goochy's here, and a lot of your old crowd. Take off the pressure, Mel, it's going to be all right."

I had never seen Melville Goodwin quite so completely frank. His face was more mobile than I had ever seen it, and it exhibited traces of uncertainty and worry that I had never observed previously. He was clearly talking to himself as much as to Dottie Peale and me, though at the same time he was conscious of both of us. He wanted to listen, although there was nothing either of us could contribute, because we were not familiar with the practice of administration. He passed his hand over his closely cropped hair and unbuttoned the top button of his blouse.

"Why don't you take your coat?" Dottie asked him.

"Maybe that's a good suggestion," he said, "but I wish you'd get in the habit of calling it a blouse instead of a coat."

"Oh, excuse me," Dottie said. "I always keep forgetting."

He rose and took off his blouse and hung it neatly on the back of a chair. "When I was a kid at the Point," he said, "I often dreamed of ribbons. Maybe there comes a time when you get too many. Maybe I've reached that period. I've got a queer sort of a feeling."

"What sort of a feeling?" Dottie asked.

"That maybe I might kick and hold anybody should happen to pin another cluster on me," Mel Goodwin said. "Maybe I've been a kid all my life and now I'm growing up. Maybe Sid sees what I mean. He was looking at me in his coolest way."

"Mel," I said, "you'd better remember just one thing."

"What one thing?" he asked.

"You'd better remember that you're too old to grow up."

For a moment he looked deadly serious and then he smiled his youngest smile. "Son," he said, "that shows you know about me and about the service. I don't believe you know how deep that cuts. I'm too old to grow up, but I can feel myself growing. Now maybe you can tell me what it's taking me."

"I wouldn't know," I said.

He walked across the room to the window. "All right," he said, "I wouldn't either. But something's got to give somewhere. That's right, isn't it, Dot? Something's got to give."

"Now, Mel," Dottie said, "don't worry about it now." She must have been referring to something between them that they had often discussed, and I could only listen.

"I'm not," Mel Goodwin said. "I'm used to shoving off whenever I know what's cooking." Then his mood changed. "Why haven't you stopped me sounding off about myself?" he asked. "You were saying that Sid had something on his mind. What's the matter with you, Sid?"

It was remarkable how quickly they could rearrange themselves. I was very glad to tell him my troubles and to get advice from him.

Dottie Peale had heard my story before. She sat looking abstractedly at the point of her slipper, but Melville Goodwin gazed straight at me, following every word and occasionally his forehead wrinkled.

"You see, it's what I've told you, Mel," Dottie said. "Sidney is always drifting and simply never seems to care."

"I don't know," Mel Goodwin said. "Sitting in on this with a purely outside point of view, I can make a few suggestions, but it seems to me Sid's done pretty well, too. He's getting the facts together and waiting to take action."

Gilbert Frary and the broadcasting staff had reached a military level, and Mel

(Continued on Page 93)

(Continued from Page 90)

odwin's voice had the ring of complete thority. He had taken over my problem. "Now, Mel," Dottie said, "don't forget out this man I know who wants a news ogram."

"I'm not forgetting," Melville Goodwin d. "There was an officer at the St. George otel in African headquarters in Algiers, med Ed Sturmer, holding a temporary nk of brigadier general like me. He was st like this Frary, flexible and without alty. He wanted to get my spot in 'Bull-p.' He was always telling me what a fine y I was and how he admired me, and then was always getting in to see the Old Man en I wasn't there, and finding little facts out me and giving them an unfavorable nt. Well, I let Ed run along with it until was all ready for him." Melville Good-n rubbed his hands together. "I waited til the Old Man had Ed and me alone th him there in the St. George," he said, oing over a map. I remember Ed was lding a pointer and arguing about some tle track behind the mountains. I inter-pted him right in the middle and spoke to e Old Man.

"'Sir,' I said, 'may I make a remark be-re General Sturmer finishes?'

"'Yes, what is it, Mel?' the Old Man said.

"'Heinzy,' I said, 'Ed is going to ask you, he hasn't asked you already, whether he n't have my spot in "Bullpup." If you want m and not me, I'd suggest you make the cision, instead of letting us both horse ound like kids at a cocktail party.'"

Melville Goodwin looked at me as though were Ed Sturmer, and I could feel in-rectly the impact of his words.

"There are times when you've got to stick ur neck out," Mel Goodwin said. "Sturmer mped so he damn near dropped the pointer, t old Heinzy didn't say anything for a arter of a minute. I had thrown the ball ght at him.

"'You're damned impertinent, don't you ink, Mel?' the Old Man said.

"'Yes, sir, I think so,' I told him.

"'Well,' he said, 'there's no need for such ocking manners, Mel. Go on and consider ere has been no interruption, Ed.'"

Melville Goodwin paused as though he d reached the end of the story.

"That was all there was to it," he said.

"But what happened?" Dottie asked.

"Nothing happened," Melville Goodwin id. "I was in 'Bullpup' until I got a piece hardware in my shoulder, wasn't I?"

It seemed to me that it was one of Melville Goodwin's better anecdotes, be-use it ended in suspense, even if Melville oodwin thought it ended perfectly.

"Is Ed Sturmer around the Pentagon ow?" I asked.

"Yes," Melville Goodwin said. "Ed's the Pentagon, but that isn't the point."

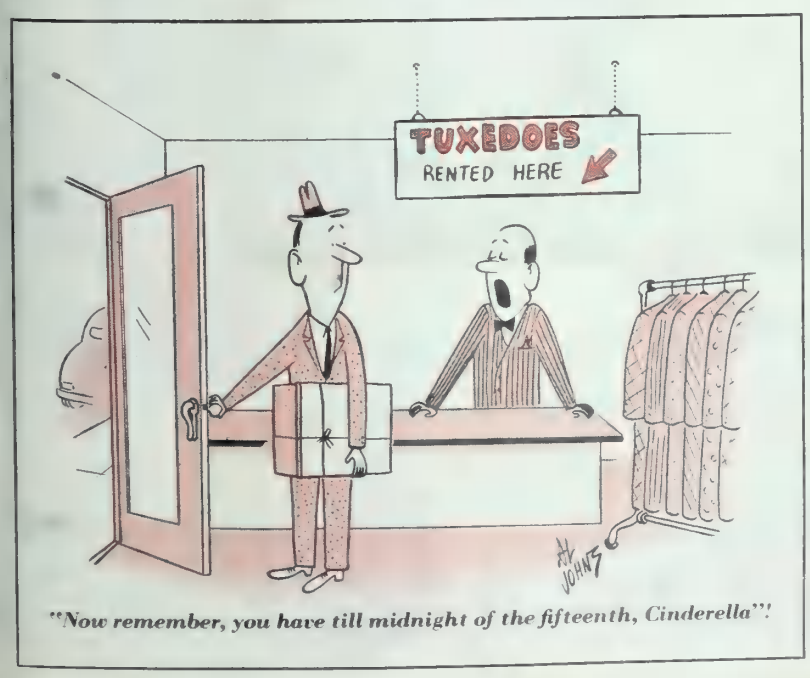
"Then what's the point?" I asked.

"Either you or I must be pretty dumb tonight, son," the General said. "The point is, you've got to stick your neck out sometimes. You get another job lined up and then go and see this Frary."

"Did you have another job lined up in Algiers?" I asked.

"Listen, son," the General said, "I'm talking about you, not me. Three other people were asking for me, and Heinzy knew it. Dottie will go around and see that man for you, and now you'd better get back to Connecticut. You have nothing further to worry about. Dot and I personally will handle your situation."

"Suppose I don't want you to handle my situation?" I asked.



Melville Goodwin smiled. "I used to think you knew something about women, son," he said. "Don't you know that Dottie will do it anyway?"

It had been Gilbert Frary's pet idea, as I have said before—and Gilbert always did have an instinct for showmanship—to move the broadcast about the country. This gave the broadcast, as Gilbert said, an on-the-spot reporting flavor. Though he was still out in Hollywood, he had laid all the plans by remote control. I was ostensibly to be in Washington looking into the Chinese situation, and somehow Gilbert had contrived to get the State Department interested and a man from the Department named Hubert Stillwater was to have a three-minute spot in which he would tell me all about China.

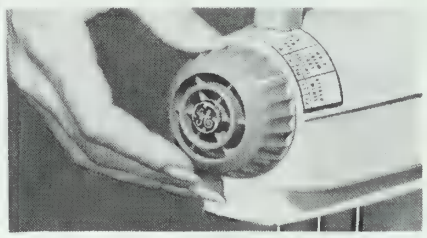
I was lodged in one of those suites in the Hotel Mayflower, all done in Empire and damask, designed apparently for foreign potentates with an entourage of equerries. We did not need all the suite, because Gilbert was still out there in Hollywood, but still, there was the entourage. There was Sammy Glick, who always traveled with the show to handle transportation reservations and general broadcasting arrangements. Then there was Miss Maynard, who helped out Sammy more than she ever helped me. Then there were Art Hertz and Miss Olson, his secretary, and one of the ushers named Jimmy, who handled bags and typewriters.

The suite and the entourage were all there ready and waiting for me, when I had arrived from New York at eleven o'clock in the morning, but there was not the same flair to the expedition with Gilbert Frary away in Hollywood. We all seemed like automatons without Gilbert's showmanship to pull us together, and there was also a perfunctory quality in everyone's attitude toward me which was more noticeable than it had been in New York. Sammy naturally gave me the largest room, but he did not buzz around as he had formerly. Art Hertz was in the adjoining room, and I noticed that Jimmy, who was unpacking his bags, did not leave them to take care of mine. There were two adjoining sitting rooms, one

(Continued on Page 95)

"Now remember, you have till midnight of the fifteenth, Cinderella"!

Frosteds, Waffles, Soufflés . . .



Whip them up in jig time!

It's quick and easy . . . with the new

G-E Triple-Whip Mixer!

Nothing like it for convenience! You'll use your G-E Triple-Whip Mixer round the clock, every day. Serves up fluffy-light and inviting dishes so easily, you'll keep it humming meal after meal!

New improved speed selector is up front in plain view. Result: you can get just the right power for the job at hand . . . without squinting or guessing!

Three beaters whip from center to sides of bowl. Nothing escapes them! And with no hard-to-get-at center shafts, the beaters are easy to clean!

Built-in light shines directly into bowl so you can keep a watchful eye on the fancier mixing jobs. You get a 2-quart and 4-quart bowl—and a wonderful juicer—with every mixer!

Whip Tip for October:

How to make wonderful Cheese-Popovers out of ordinary Popovers? Just add 4 tablespoons of grated cheese to your Popover batter while mixing. It's ideal for a change!

Write for your copy of the Triple-Whip Recipe Book. Address General Electric Co., Box L10, Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.

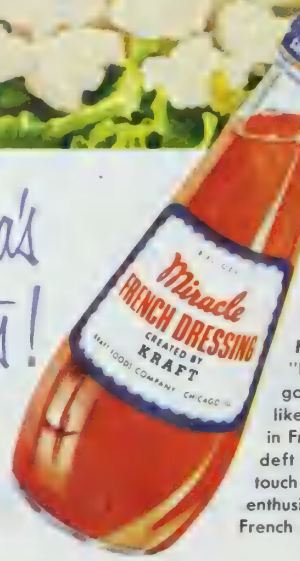
Specifications subject to change without notice.

You can put your confidence in—

GENERAL ELECTRIC

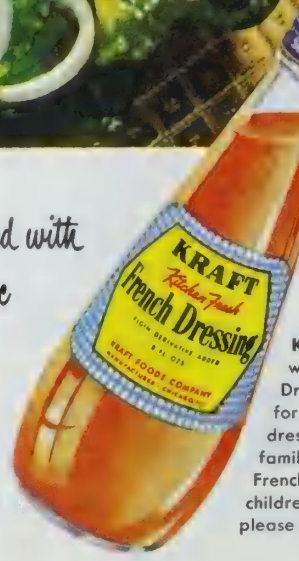
"Better than my own French Dressing!"

KRAFT FRENCH AND MIRACLE FRENCH ARE SEASONED SO DELIGHTFULLY...SAVE SO MUCH WORK AND WORRY...THAT HOSTS OF SALAD-FANCIERS BLESS THE DAY THEY TRIED THEM. WHY DON'T YOU GIVE THEM A WHIRL?



October Salad Platter

Leaf lettuce
Tomato wedges
Scored unpeeled cucumber slices
Shredded red cabbage
Cauliflowerettes
Carrot sticks
Onion rings
Miracle or Kraft French Dressing



Arrange 5 lettuce nests on a round chop plate. Fill the nests, respectively, with tomato wedges garnished with tiny lettuce leaves, cucumber slices, shredded cabbage, cauliflowerettes, and carrot sticks. Garnish the platter with onion rings and serve with a bowl of Miracle or Kraft French Dressing in the center. Kraft French and Miracle French are so immensely popular that they actually outsell all other French Dressings combined!

America's Favorites!

Deftly seasoned with onion and garlic

Miracle French has a "Parisian accent" that gourmets praise. If you like onion and garlic in French Dressing—a deft touch, just the right touch—you'll share the enthusiasm for Miracle French Dressing.

Creamy-th... with a smoo... yet zippy flavo...

Kraft French is the ... widely popular Fren... Dressing ever offere... for sale! A creamy-thi... dressing that the whole family loves, famous Kr... French is mild enough fo... children, zippy enough t... please grown-ups.

(Continued from Page 93)

r Art and Sammy and me, and the other r the girls, who had already set up their pewriters.

"Art," I called through the connecting oor, "is your room all right?"

Art entered my room in his shirt sleeves. Everything's swell, Sid," he said. "I've egun on a first draft—without waiting for ou." There was nothing to criticize in the ay he said it except that his manner was nduly positive.

"Go right ahead," I told him, "and see is man Stillwater too. I won't bother you ith any thoughts today."

"Oh, I didn't mean it that way," Art said.

"That's all right, Art," I told him, "and hen Gilbert calls up from the Coast, talk o him yourself. I have a lot of personal ings on my mind."

"Sid," Art said again, "I didn't mean it hat way."

"Neither did I," I told him. "This whole how runs like clockwork when I'm not ere."

"I don't know what's troubling you to-ay, Sid," Art began, "but if I've done any-hing you don't like, I wish you'd specify it."

Of course there was nothing to specify, nd nothing could have been gained by hav-ng it out with Art Hertz, who was only a traw in the wind.

"Don't you ever get depressed, Art?" I sked. "I'm only undergoing a mild fit of lepression, that's all. Don't worry about ne. I'll get over it."

I walked into the itting room.

"Miss Maynard," I aid, "will you get me Mr. George Burt-eimer in Chicago, lease?"

I said it loudly nough so that Art ould not miss hear-ng it, and Art did ot miss.

"Say, Sid," he said, 'you know how Gil-ert feels about any-ne else talking to Burtheimer."

"That's all right," I said. "I'm feeling onely," and I observed that both Miss Maynard and Art looked flustered.

The telephone was a wonderful invention. I only had time to sit down and smoke half a cigarette before Mr. Burtheimer was on the line, and by then all the connecting doors of the suite were open and everyone was listening.

"Hello, George," I said. "I'm here in Washington and I'm feeling lonely."

Then I asked him what he was doing for breakfast the next morning. I said I was lonely and I wanted to have breakfast with him and told him that I could take a night plane to Chicago. Then I asked Miss May-nard to see about a reservation. I had been thinking over this plan for several days, and I was gratified by the general reaction.

"Say, Sid," Art said, "have you told Gilbert anything about this?"

"Why, no, Art," I said. "The impulse just came over me."

"But what about tomorrow night?" Art said.

"Oh, I'll be back in New York in time," I told him. "You write it and I'll read it, Art."

Now that the lines were drawn, it was only necessary to let matters take their course. There was no need to embarrass Art Hertz by staying in the suite for the next few hours. All I needed was some good excuse to leave, and I thought of Melville Goodwin. I had the Goodwins' number in Alexandria.

"Will you please get me General Good-win," I told Miss Maynard.

When I did not recognize the voice of the woman who answered, I knew that Enid Joyce must be speaking. The General—that is, Mel—was not in, but Mrs. Goodwin—that is, Muriel—was right there, and she knew that Muriel would be so delighted I had called up, and she would get Muriel in just a second.

"Muriel," I heard her calling, "Muriel."

There was often a discouraging anticlimax in the sound of a disembodied voice, but Muriel Goodwin's had a clear, executive assurance surprisingly like that in the voice of Dottie Peale. Both voices had the same contagious warmth and enthusiasm, artificial perhaps, but nevertheless peculiarly effective.

She said, "Mel will be furious if he doesn't see you right away. He's at the Pentagon, and I'll have him call you, and what are you doing after the broadcast tonight?"

I could see what Mel Goodwin meant about her taking over. She had read all about the broadcast, and she kept on planning even after I told her I was taking a night plane to Chicago.

"We'll take you to the airport," she said. "We're having a steak fry in the back yard tonight. It won't be any trouble at all, Sid. Mel or someone can take you to the airport. It's only really a step." She had all Dottie Peale's executive powers, and an even greater certainty.

"That sounds wonderful," I heard myself saying.

No people in the world were more hospitable than service people. There was an invariable disregard for ordinary limitations. All I had to do was wait right where I was, and she would get hold of Mel and Mel would call me. All I had to do was wait until I had heard from Mel.

I did not have to wait more than a few minutes, either, before the telephone rang again. A captain by the name of Rattisbone was on the telephone. General Goodwin was at a meeting which he could not leave, but the General was looking forward to seeing me the moment he was free. In the meanwhile, if I would wait just where I was, Captain Rattisbone himself would call for me.

The Pentagon, I was thinking, was the greatest military monument in the world, dwarfing the Invalides and Napoleon's Tomb in Paris. It was endless and labyrinthian and, characteristically, had already grown too small for the clerical staffs and the documents that occupied it. It was the glorified temple of the services, and I could feel the invisible arms of discipline surround us as Captain Rattisbone and I walked up the steps.

"This way, sir," the captain said when we stepped off the moving staircase.

The corridor was leading us into the higher echelons. We were nearing the thrones of the hierarchy. Young Rattisbone opened a door on the right.

"This way, sir," he said.

We entered the outer room of a suite of offices, but the captain did not pause. Having led me past a row of empty leather-upholstered chairs, his hand dropped on the knob of a closed door. He turned it noiselessly and pushed the door cautiously, prepared to close it discreetly if we had arrived at an unpropitious moment.

"Will the General see Mr. Skelton now?" he asked.

Then I heard Mel Goodwin's voice. "Yes. Don't keep him waiting outside."

"You can go right in, sir," Captain Rattisbone said.

The offices were very comfortable in that part of the Pentagon. I have never heard who was responsible for the interior decoration, but whoever it was understood the value of setting. I was in a fine room, carpeted in crimson. A massive mahogany desk stood in front of three broad windows that looked

(Continued on Page 98)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Preference

By Elizabeth McFarland

I search for beauty that comes brief and spare—
Like dogwood blooming with its boughs leaf-bare,
Or like a thin-cheeked woman's silvering hair.

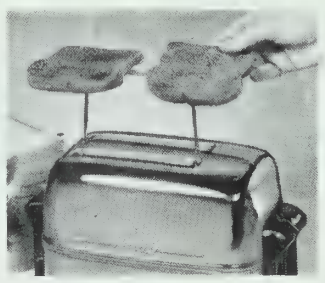
★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

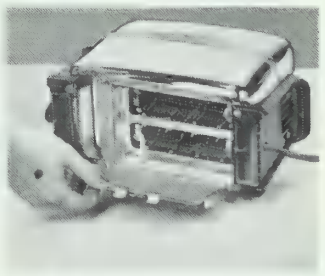
Toast as you like it



—hot till you want it!

Arvin

Toast-tested AUTOMATIC TOASTER



Exclusive Sta-Warm butter-melting shelf!

Arvin's your toaster—if you like every slice hot, with golden melted butter spreading to cover every inch of its crisp, tempting goodness! Only Arvin includes the Sta-Warm Shelf to keep first slices hot while the next slices are toasting! You'll like it 365 mornings a year!

Practically cleans itself of crumbs!

Arvin's your toaster—if you like easy cleaning! Arvin's hinged crumb tray gives instant access, practically cleans itself in a split-jiffy! Can't come loose and spill crumbs on the floor to crunch annoyingly underfoot. You'll say again that Arvin thinks of everything!

Every Arvin is triple toast-tested!

Arvin's your toaster—if you like to know every slice will be exactly as brown as you want it! Every Arvin must toast six slices, two light, two medium, two dark—before it leaves the factory testing table! And it must pass many other rigid tests to prove itself America's most ruggedly built automatic toaster.

A gift that gives a lift to any occasion!

Arvin's your toaster—if you're looking for a perfect gift! For beauty, for dependability, for years of complete satisfaction—and deep appreciation—give an Arvin! $22.95

Price subject to change without notice.
Arvin Industries, Inc., Columbus, Indiana
(Formerly Noblitt-Sparks Industries, Inc.)

Also makers of other Arvin Electric Housewares, TV, Radios, Car Heaters, Metal Furniture, Ironing Tables.

"M-m! Pancakes with Syrup, Butter, Bacon, and Coffee!"

Entice 'em WITH A Real American Breakfast!

Starring Aunt Jemimas

America's Favorite Pancakes... Now "fluff-whipped"!

Get set to bake the lightest, most delicious pancakes of your life! For Aunt Jemima's famous Old South recipe is now "Fluff Whipped" . . . a special blending process that whirls a wonderful fluffy lightness right into Aunt Jemima Pancake Mix. All you do is stir the creamy batter very, very gently, and bake. In a jiffy you're serving your folks the lightest, tenderest pancakes in the whole wide world!

Yes, it's easy now to make breakfast their favorite meal. See how eagerly they pull up their chairs to Aunt Jemima's "Fluff-Whipped" pancakes and all the trimmin's. Log Cabin Syrup, Swift's Premium Bacon and satisfying coffee. A feast of goodness that's truly American —any time, any day!

© Quaker Oats Co., 1951

The Red box for pancakes

The Yellow box for buckwheats

"M-m! Coffee with Pancakes, Syrup, Butter, and Bacon!"

Invite 'em WITH A Real American Breakfast!

Nothing takes the place of COFFEE at Breakfast Time ... At Any Time!

Whatever the hour—nothing hits the spot like a cup of coffee. Wonderful with a breakfast of Aunt Jemima Pancakes, Log Cabin Syrup and Swift's Premium Bacon. With any meal or in-between snack—no other beverage offers such a full measure of pure pleasure.

Honestly now, when you come to think of it—for sheer satisfaction—for old-fashioned goodness—you can't name anything that satisfies like coffee. At home or in a restaurant—morning, noon or night—nothing compares with America's best-loved beverage!

HOW TO MAKE GOOD COFFEE EVERY TIME

- Take 1 Standard Coffee Measure (2 level tablespoons) to each ¾ measuring cup of cold, fresh water.
- Brew in spotlessly clean coffee-maker and serve as soon as possible. Never, never boil or re-heat coffee.

AN-AMERICAN COFFEE BUREAU, 120 Wall Street, New York 5, N. Y. • Brazil • Colombia • Costa Rica • Cuba • Dominican Republic • El Salvador • Guatemala • Honduras • Mexico • Venezuela

"Rose Classic"... ever so pretty, ever so practical! Freda Diamond designed it to go with traditional and modern china. Complete services... stemware and tumblers all matching. Drinking edges* guaranteed against chipping. Gift-boxed. (Brides adore them.)

*"If the rim of a Libbey 'Safedge' glass ever chips, we'll replace it."

8 of a kind, boxed
Stemware $5.50
Tumblers $3.50

(above prices approximate)

All prices slightly higher in the South and West.
At leading stores everywhere.

ESTABLISHED 1818
Hostess Sets by LIBBEY GLASS

Copyright, 1951, Libbey Glass, Division of Owens-Illinois Glass Company, Toledo 1, Ohio.

(Continued from Page 95)

out over the Potomac. Melville Goodwin was standing near the desk with the cold light from the windows upon him.

"Well, well, Sid," he said. "So you got him, did you, son? Did he come without making trouble?"

Captain Rattisbone laughed appreciatively. "There wasn't any fuss, sir," he said.

Melville Goodwin smiled. "Just a minute now before you duck out and leave us here, captain," he said. "We're frying steaks at home tonight. Why don't you and Mrs. Rattisbone come over if you haven't anything else to do?"

"Thank you very much, sir," the captain said.

"And when you go out, see if you can find General Gooch and tell him I'm hungry, will you? Tell him Mr. Skelton's here, and it's time for lunch."

"Yes, sir," the captain said.

The General and I stood watching the door close noiselessly behind Captain Rattisbone. Melville Goodwin cleared his throat.

"I've been in two meetings this morning," he said, "or I'd have gone over to get you myself. They're going to decide what to do with me any day now. It's been sort of tense here this morning. I wonder what's happened to Goochy."

Melville Goodwin cleared his throat again. I could see that he was waiting to introduce me to General Gooch and that he was rather reluctant to start talking when we would be interrupted at any moment.

"Come to think of it," Melville Goodwin said, "Muriel was pretty tense this morning too. I wonder whether she knows something I don't or whether it's just this steak fry. I'm glad we're throwing a party, now you're here, Sid."

General Goodwin was an old hand in dealing with tensions. He knew only too well how to handle hours and minutes of suspense, each of which had its own peculiar agony.

"Mel," I said.

He turned toward me quickly and he must have suspected that I was going to say something that was out of line with convention. I was verging on a familiarity that I would never have ventured on a few weeks before.

"Mel," I said, "has anything happened to you?" It was the bluntest and most personal question I had ever asked him.

"What makes you think so, son?" he asked.

I was too old for him to call me "son," but there was still that ten-year gap in our ages. There was no implied rebuke in the way he called me "son." On the contrary, it was more like an acceptance of a closeness in our relationship and an invitation to me to continue.

"Because I think you're pretty wound up this morning," I told him.

I could see him thinking it over, but something inside him had relaxed. "Right," he said, "you're right on that one, son."

He walked over to the windows and looked out at the river. Then he walked back to where I was standing.

"I've been going through quite a lot lately—emotionally, I mean. I can handle it, but at the same time —— Do you ever get hunches, son?"

"Yes," I said, "occasionally."

"Well, it isn't a bad idea to respect them," he said. "I've noticed the further along a man gets, the more he's got to live with himself with a few hunches that come to him out of the air. There gets to be less and less to lean on except yourself and whatever it is that makes you work, and the hell of it is you don't know what that something is, except that it's a combination of everything that's behind you, and you'd better not get too analytical or you'll lose your grip. Do you think I'm talking sense?"

I nodded, and his glance moved slowly over the office and the woodwork and the soft upholstery.

There is nothing more notable in Socrates than that he found time, when he was an old man, to learn music and dancing, and thought it time well spent. —MONTAIGNE.

"This is all pretty new to me—all th ting around here, I mean, not the facts. is up pretty close to the throne, a lo close for comfort, but hunches are hu anywhere and I still know a hunch wh meet one. It begins in the stomach and els through the liver and then gets up the head. There's something inside me keeps saying, 'Listen, Mel, you're goi get it one way or the other. Be ready to it, Mel.'"

I was so completely captured by his eloquence that I was bracing mysel whatever it was that was coming.

"The dice are coming out of the box, he said. "I'm either going to get patte the head or kicked in the pants, and about time too. The air's thin here, a don't want to talk to Muriel about it more either. I wish there was a war."

He rubbed his hand over the back o closely cropped head. It was one of his indecisive gestures.

"Have you seen Dottie lately, son?" asked. He asked it abruptly, as thoug were changing the subject, but his mood not changed.

"No," I answered, "not since that nig

"I haven't either," he said. "Perhaps just as well."

He stopped, seeming to hope that I w make some answer that would be reassu

He said slowly, funny how many t I've had to lecture off on woman trouble, now I don't seem to the build to handle it self. New York's too to Washington." He passed me a memoran for my comment and tials, and he was wait

"I could say something pretty obvious said, "but I don't want to make you so

"Now, Sid," Mel Goodwin said, won't make me sore. I've stuck my neck haven't I? It's right out there a mile."

"All right," I said. "It might be a g idea if you were to pass up Dottie Peale.

"Sid," he said, "you're a nice boy."

"I'm glad you still think so," I answe "You know I'm only talking sense, d you?"

"You never did approve of this thing, you?" he said. "I know how it all looks. there's only one trouble with your sug tion. I'm just not able to take it, son."

I had to admire his frankness. He spent most of his life dealing in problem fact and he could apply the principles himself.

"Doesn't it occur to you that this is o a phase?" I began. "Nearly everyone g through something like this sometime."

Melville Goodwin nodded and he stare the floor as though it were a map. "Ye know," he said. "You've got it all on y side, son. I've said that to other people I've said it to myself, but I can only d with the foreseeable future. I don't kn whether it's a phase or not. The trouble i love her." If he had only said it with m emotion, it would have been easier to count. Instead, he made the statem sound inescapable.

"All right," I said, "but do you think loves you?"

"I wouldn't know," he said. "She says and I hope she does."

For a second the picture was all there black and white, without a bit of shadi Then an instant later it was gone, beca the door opened and all his storm and str was snapped away into the compartm reserved for his top secrets. His face clea and the whole office became bare and i personal.

"Hello, Goochy," Mel Goodwin sa "Where have you been? Let's go in to lun and I want you to meet my friend, Sid Sk ton, General Gooch."

As soon as I saw General Gooch, I realiz I had met him before in Normandy, bu had not placed him as the General's chief staff. That absurd Army nickname, "Lo

(Continued on Page 100)

You just made a magnificent impression

How could you do otherwise when right from the start you chose DEL MONTE Fruit Cocktail?

Look at those clean-cut, tidy gems of glorious summer fruit. Did you ever see anything so gay and glamorous—so full of promise, so easy to serve?

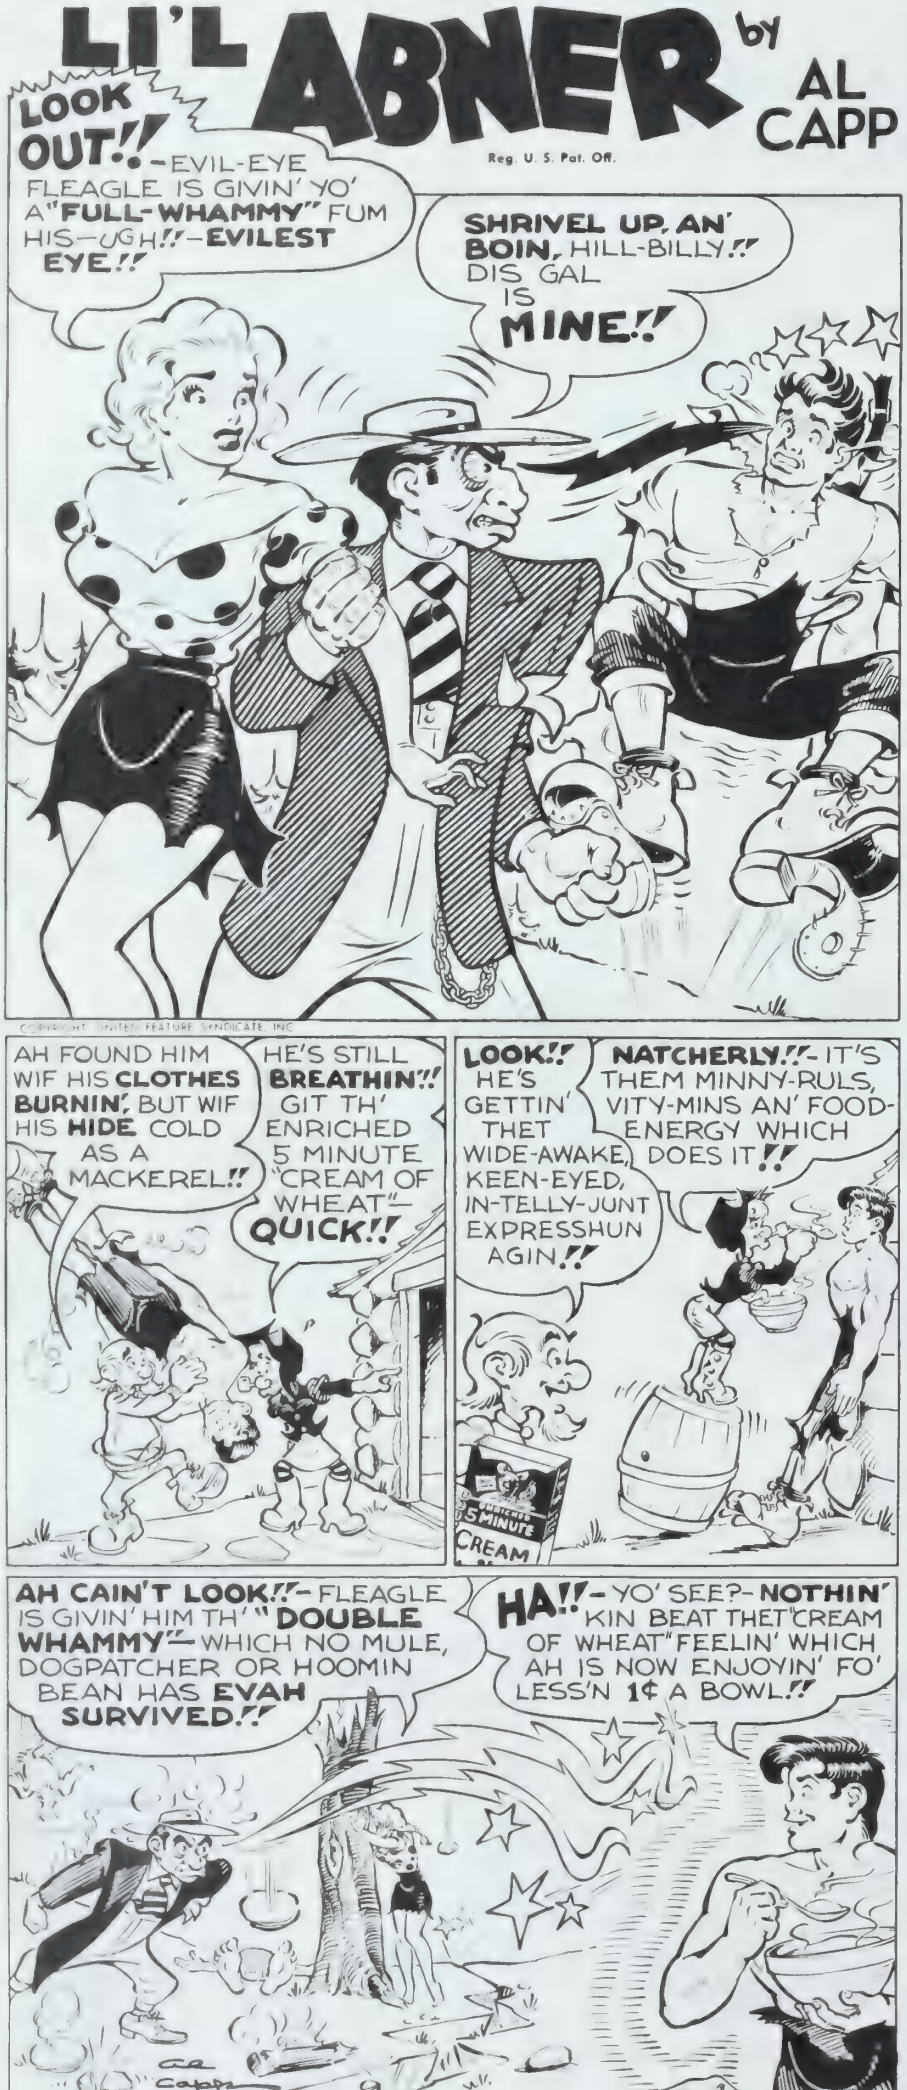
And what wonderful flavor, too! That's DEL MONTE's real distinction.

No wonder more women prefer DEL MONTE Fruit Cocktail than any other brand. Isn't that to be expected from the brand that's earned your confidence on so many other foods?

JIFFY FRUITED LEMON PIE

1¼ cups fine gingersnap crumbs
4 tbsps. melted butter or margarine
1 egg, slightly beaten
¼ tsp. salt
1⅓ cups (15-oz. can) sweetened condensed milk
½ cup lemon juice
1 #303 can DEL MONTE Fruit Cocktail, well-drained
Sweetened whipped cream

Blend gingersnap crumbs with butter. Press on bottom and sides of 8-in. pie plate. Bake 10 minutes in a slow oven (325°F.). Cool. Mix egg, salt, and milk. Stir in lemon juice and pour into crumb shell. Chill thoroughly. Top with the chilled, well-drained DEL MONTE Brand Fruit Cocktail and serve with whipped cream garnish. Serves 6 to 8.



Del Monte Fruit Cocktail

BRAND

—the brand that puts flavor first

(Continued from Page 98)

John" Gooch, was the reason for my error. It was one of those heavily humorous Army efforts. Instead of being tall, he would have been in the shortest squad at the Point, which was undoubtedly the reason they had called him Long John, unless they had given him the name because his face was long and concave.

Small Army men always looked harder and tougher than their larger counterparts. At any rate, General Gooch looked very tough. His dish face was leathery and hard and it contorted itself in an almost painful way when he smiled, and even his smile had a sour tinge that fitted the rasp in his voice.

"Glad to meet you, sir," he said. He did not look as though he were glad to meet me. He made me feel as though I were both an interruption and an unfortunate weakness of General Goodwin's.

In the seconds of awkward silence that followed, I saw Mel watching us both affectionately, but at the same time professionally.

"Let's get lunch, Goochy," he said.

"Where do you want to go, sir?" General Gooch asked.

Melville Goodwin smiled happily and spoke with a sort of artificial carelessness. "We're going to have lunch in there in the Secretary's Mess," he said.

"Who's shoving us into there?" General Gooch said. "Why not the General and Flag Officers' Mess, where boys can be boys?"

Melville Goodwin laughed merrily. "Goochy always swallows the wrong way when he sees civilian Secretaries," he said. "It's all right, Goochy, I asked Snip to fix it. I told him that Sid here is a VIP and that he ought to see the works."

"How about going to the Army and Navy Club?" General Gooch asked.

"No, no," Mel Goodwin said, "we're not dead on our feet yet, and I want Sid to see the top brass. Come on, Goochy."

I had never been to the Secretary's Mess, although I had heard of it, and judging from General Gooch's hesitation, he seemed to doubt whether I was up to it.

"I don't know whether we can get a small table, sir," General Gooch said.

"Then we can sit anywhere," the General said. "Maybe Sunny Minturn will be there."

General Gooch glanced at his wrist watch, and then his beady eyes met General Goodwin's wordlessly. I did not know who Minturn was, but his name appeared to convey something significant.

"He might be," General Gooch answered. "It's about his usual time."

"I have a hunch Sunny may have some news for me," the General said, and he and General Gooch exchanged another wordless glance.

"Yes, he might, sir."

MELVILLE GOODWIN gave a pull at his blouse, although it did not need straightening. "Well, what are we waiting for?" he said. "Come on, Goochy."

I followed Melville Goodwin through the outer office and out to the corridor with General Gooch walking close behind us. Everything we had said in the office was over and finished and filed for future reference. Melville Goodwin looked happy in the corridor.

"You know, this eating place is really something, Sid," he said. "Sometimes when I see it I wonder who let me in."

It was amazing how completely he could throw himself into any present. His adroitness in repressing himself would have been abnormal in me, but of course it was not in him. The drives inside him might lead him up or down, but the surface was serene.

"Oh, by the way, Sid," he was saying, "I didn't tell you, did I, that I have a civilian outfit now? I'm going to wear the tweed tonight. You wait till you see it, Goochy."

All the while he spoke the heels of his polished brown shoes were also speaking. We were all in step together and the cadence beat into my thoughts.

"The trouble is, I love her," I could hear his boot heels saying. "The trouble is, I love her."

He was all right in the Pentagon—he knew where he was going—but unfortunately he was going farther than the Pentagon, and into a strange country where his instinct or terrain would not assist him—only his instinct for self-preservation or destruction, whichever it might be.

I FOLLOWED Melville Goodwin into the secretary's dining room and for the first time in a long while I felt shy and callow. The mark which the Army had left on me was stronger than I had realized. That decorous clublike dining room was a suitable setting for the climax of careers. I cannot remember its details clearly, but I can recall its dignified and measured merriment. It was a room to sit up straight in and to take your soup carefully and to speak in a modulated tone. In fact, I found it difficult to speak at all.

"Gooch," General Goodwin said, and I thought that even his voice was low and tentative, "there seems to be a small vacant table over there."

"Yes," General Gooch said, "but I'm not sure ——" His words trailed off beneath the firm voices and the discreet sound of knives and forks around us.

Melville Goodwin cleared his throat and spoke to a Filipino petty officer who stood by the door. "May we occupy that small table over there, chief?" he asked.

"Which table, sir?" the Filipino asked.

"Over there in the corner," Mel Goodwin said.

"Certainly, sir," the Filipino said.

"Thank you, chief," the General said. "Come along, Sid."

I felt very proud of Melville Goodwin as I followed him. He did not walk too fast or too slow. He smiled and nodded to officers who looked up at him, graciously or deferentially according to their rank. We seemed to have walked a long way before we reached the table.

"Sit over there, Sid," the General said, "where you can see the show."

The faces at the other tables were all alike in spite of differences in features. They all bore the imprint of similar experience.

"There's Minturn over there," the General said. "Who's he sitting with, Gooch?"

"He's with General Candee, sir."

"That isn't Butch Candee, is it?"

"There's only one Candee that I know, sir," General Gooch said.

"Then it's Butch," the General said. "Where's Butch been keeping himself? I've never seen him around here."

"He's in from Japan, I think, sir," General Gooch answered.

"Yes, it's Butch, all right," Melville Goodwin said. "It's been ten years since I've seen old Butch. . . . It looks like a roast-beef day, and how about some roast beef? The beef is good here."

"Coffee with the meal, sir?" the mess attendant asked, but the General wanted coffee later.

We finished the roast beef and we were each working on a hard brick of ice cream, a variety that seemed especially invented for an American officers' mess. Throughout the Secretary's dining room luncheon was nearing over. Chairs were being pushed back. I saw General Minturn, with his three stars, looking at us across the room, and Butch Candee with his one star. Melville Goodwin sat straighter and waved his hand at them in informal greeting. A tall, pallid beanpole of a major general with an Adam's apple walked toward us, and he halted at our table, smiling at Mel Goodwin. General Gooch sprang hastily out of his chair, but Melville Goodwin remained seated for an appreciable moment. Then he, too, stood up.

"Hello, Snip," he said. "Sit down and join us, won't you? We're about to have coffee. This is my friend, Sidney Skelton I was telling you about. He used to be in P.R.O. Major Skelton—General Lewis."

(Continued on Page 103)

The most dangerous thing in the world is to try to leap a chasm in two jumps.
—DAVID LLOYD GEORGE.

Start Your Child's Day Right

with the Right Hot Drink at Breakfast!

A Nourishing Hot Drink Like Ovaltine in the Morning Acts As a "Spark Plug" for the day!

We parents all know how much a bracing hot beverage can mean to us in the morning. But we are apt to forget that children too can enjoy, and benefit from, a hot drink at breakfast that's really right for them.

Chocolate Flavored Ovaltine mixed with hot milk as directed is the right kind of hot drink for your child.

Authorities say that a good breakfast every morning can change a child's whole outlook on life and something hot is almost a "must" in a really good breakfast. Ovaltine is right three ways as a hot breakfast drink for children!

First, Ovaltine mixed with milk supplies essential vitamins, proteins and minerals that children must have for good growth and robust health. It is a rich supplementary food that fills in the gaps and chinks that may occur in children's breakfasts, even in the best of homes.

Second, its soothing, comforting warmth helps to put little folks at ease to enjoy and digest their breakfasts.

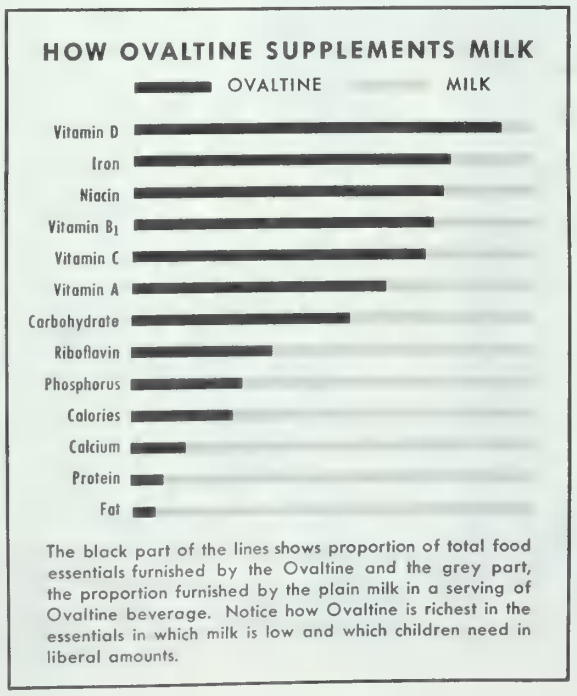
Third, Ovaltine is quickly and easily digested, starts giving out its bracing food-energy by the time children reach the schoolroom.

So, to insure a more adequate breakfast for your child, serve Hot Ovaltine along with the rest of his breakfast—as an addition to, not a substitute for, the foods he regularly eats. Start in tomorrow! Let your child enjoy delicious hot Chocolate Flavored Ovaltine at breakfast every morning.

Children Like Their Own Hot Drink at Breakfast!

Hot Ovaltine Takes No Extra Time!

"Eat a good breakfast to start a good day," ys the U. S. Bureau of Human Nutrition, d it adds, "Something hot is cheering, and nes up the whole digestive route." Hot nocolate Flavored Ovaltine is the right nd of hot drink for children's breakfasts. supplies food essentials that every child should have to start the day right after the long foodless night. And it's so delicious, it helps make breakfast a real joy for your child! Hot Ovaltine takes no extra time. While you wait for your morning coffee, just stir three teaspoonfuls of Ovaltine into a cup of hot milk and it's ready to serve!



Breakfast Considered Day's Most Important Meal, the Year 'Round!

utrition experts more and more e coming to recognize that breakst may well be the most important eal of the day.

They say, for example, that children should get from a fourth to a ird of their daily food requirements breakfast time.

And it is known, too, that children eed two or three times as much of ertain vital food elements, in proortion to their size and weight, as e adults do.

Scientific findings make it plain nat there is a real need among children for better breakfasts the year ound. This need exists for many hildren whose parents least suspect it.

The black part of the lines shows proportion of total food essentials furnished by the Ovaltine and the grey part, the proportion furnished by the plain milk in a serving of Ovaltine beverage. Notice how Ovaltine is richest in the essentials in which milk is low and which children need in liberal amounts.

Mid-Morning Fatigue Affects School Work!

If your child acts dull and listless in the middle of the morning, look first to his breakfast! Surveys indicate a shockingly large number of children fail to eat enough breakfast. Authorities say children cannot readily make up for it at other meals without over-eating.

An inadequate breakfast can cause poor concentration, lack of alertness, lower grades. A good breakfast gives your child the start he needs to do his best at school.

OVALTINE

THE HOT FOOD DRINK FOR CHILDREN THAT'S RIGHT FOR BETTER BREAKFASTS!

Ovaltine costs so little compared to the good it can do, you'll want to serve hot Ovaltine with your child's breakfast every morning! Use only three teaspoonfuls of Ovaltine to a cup of hot milk.

TWO KINDS: CHOCOLATE FLAVORED AND PLAIN

Dream dishes—double-quick!

See the special, speedy tricks—no other rice can do!

SUPER SURPRISE . . . IN 31 MINUTES

Tangy Ham Roll-ups. A show-off treat for special guests, yet Minute Rice's magic makes it quick to do. Prepare 1⅓ cups (5-oz. package) Minute Rice as directed on package. (Put it in water, bring to a boil. No more cooking's needed!) Heat ¾ cup tart jelly with about ½ cup rich prepared mustard. Combine ½ cup chopped parsley and hot rice; place equal portions on 8 thin slices boiled ham. Roll up, place in baking dish, cover with hot sauce. Bake 10 minutes at 400° F. Serves 4 lucky people.

MINUTE RICE PREPARES ITSELF —JUST BRING TO A BOIL!

MINUTE RICE DOES MAGICAL TRICKS WITH FLAVOR!

BUDGET BONANZA . . . IN 20 MINUTES

Beef Porcupines. A pound of beef makes a satisfying meal for 4 or 5 people . . . it's a special Minute Rice trick! Heat 2 cans bouillon in skillet. Combine ⅔ cup Minute Rice, 1 lb. ground beef, ¼ cup milk, 1 tablespoon grated onion, ½ teaspoon salt, ¾ teaspoon sage, and 2 teaspoons Worcestershire sauce. Shape into small balls. Simmer in bouillon 10 minutes. (The rich beef flavor is absorbed by every grain of rice!) Prepare another ⅔ cup Minute Rice as directed on package. Place meat balls on bed of rice on hot platter. Serve with gravy made of bouillon and 3 tablespoons flour. Wonderful!

POT LUCK DE LUXE . . . IN 18 MINUTES

Hot Diggedy Stew. Combine in saucepan: ⅔ cup Minute Rice, 1½ cups tomatoes, 2⅓ cups tomato juice, 1½ teaspoons sugar, 1 teaspoon salt, pinch of basil. Bring to boil quickly, cover, simmer 10 minutes. (Here's where the magic happens . . . Minute Rice takes on the rosy tomato color, the full rich flavor!) Sauté ¼ cup chopped onion and 3 sliced frankfurters in 2 tablespoons butter. Add to stew. Sprinkle with Parmesan cheese. It's a grand supper dish for 5 or 6!

BETTER GET THE TRIPLE ECONOMY SIZE!

Minute Rice now comes in 2 sizes. Keep the big 15-oz. box of this fancy, long-grained, pre-cooked rice on hand—and be ready to fix marvelous rice dishes in a wink!

★ NO WASHING! ★ NO RINSING! ★ NO DRAINING! ★ NO STEAMING!

For perfect rice without the work ★★★ pre-cooked

MINUTE BRAND RICE

A Product of General Foods

(Continued from Page 100)

I kept forgetting that my old rank could carried into civil life, if I wanted it, as a ceful acknowledgment of past services. In t, I could have been called colonel if I had cted to join the reserves.

"It's a real pleasure to have you here with Mr. Skelton," General Lewis said. "I'm ry the Secretary isn't here today, because would have enjoyed meeting you—but haps some other time."

"Sit down, won't you, Snip?" Melville odwin asked again.

General Lewis smiled and shook his head gretfully, but even that brief gesture conyed ease and charm of manner. I could ice him right away as just the sort of per- who would be selected to accompany a ief on an overseas mission that demanded ct and adroitness.

"I wish I could," he said, "and I hope Mr. elton will forgive me, but I'm due at a eeting in five minutes." He smiled at me nfidentially. "Unification. Mr. Skelton obably knows 're unification-nscious around re now. Mel, has nny Minturn seen u yet?"

Melville Goodn's glance travd across the room d back to General ewis. "How do you ean, has he seen e yet?"

General Lewis ad the conrned expression someone who had id too much. You would think, ouldn't you, that d know enough not let cats out of gs by now," he id, and then the ll charm of his nile was turned on lelville Goodwin. Anyway, it makes e the first to conratulate you, Mel. tep over here for a cond with me, will ou? Will you exuse us, Mr. Skelon, if two bad boys a little talking t of school?"

I had observed at playful manner efore in other quarters, and I could think of omen speaking of that charming General ewis. He had his arm through Melville Goodin's, and they moved a few paces away. Genral Lewis and General Goodwin were shakg hands, and I heard General Goodwin say, Thanks, I'll see you later, Snip." The tenon and the waiting were over. The decision r Mel Goodwin's professional future must ave been made that morning.

Melville Goodwin was walking back to us. Well, Goochy," he said, and his voice was oarse and he cleared his throat. "Well, oochy."

"Come on—what's the score?" General ooch asked.

MEL GOODWIN smoothed the wrinkles on is forehead and policed the lines of his outh. He sat down slowly and took a sip f water. He put his glass down carefully and olded his napkin neatly and slowly.

"Merriwell's asked for me."

I saw General Gooch's face light up. Boy," he said. "It's Plans."

"That's right," Melville Goodwin said, Plans."

"Say," General Gooch said, and I could eel the depth of his pleasure and relief, "see f you can get me over with you, will you?"

Melville Goodwin rolled his napkin into a eat cylinder and dropped it in front of him. Goochy," he said, "I don't know what's he matter with me. I know it's more than I deserve. I ought to jump at it, but ——"

"Say, Mel," General Gooch said, "how about coming to my office? We can scare up a cup of coffee there instead of having it here."

"Plans" and "planning" had always been breathless words for me when I was a P.R.O. I had always experienced a twinge of envy for any officer in Plans. Plans was so remote, so clouded and top secret that I never knew what happened there, except that Plans was the brains of the Army. You knew everything there was to know if you were in there. You had to be outstanding in some line and cleared for everything. It was the secret circle of the elite. I had felt pleased for Melville Goodwin. It seemed to me like a distinguished climax to his career and an ultimate reward for brilliant service.

MY imagination was building up the vision, but instead of looking elated, Melville Goodwin looked tired and discouraged. There were many worse things than Plans—Troop Information and Education for one, and I could think of others. I wanted to tell him so, but I knew when to keep my mouth shut.

"Never mind the coffee, Goochy," he said when we were back again in the office.

"Okay, Mel," General Gooch said. "Rattisbone," he called, and his voice crackled like bond paper. "Say I've stepped out if anyone calls. We don't want to be disturbed unless there's a telephone for General Goodwin."

He closed the door softly and decisively. It had a lock and when Goochy locked it, for some reason rank dropped away. In fact, I could almost call him "Goochy" and I could finally see why Melville Goodwin liked him.

"Listen, Mel," he said, "let's cut out the horsefeathers. I haven't seen you this way since they ordered us out of Maule. Nothing you say in here is going any further unless"—his black eyes bored into me—"unless it's Mr. Skelton."

I had never heard Melville Goodwin raise his voice before. He did not raise it much, but it sent a shiver down my spine. "Sid's all right," he said. "Besides, we didn't pull out of Maule."

"No, we didn't, and we nearly got a court for it," General Gooch said.

General Goodwin rocked back and forth on his heels. "They couldn't give me a court," he said "because we saved the whole corps, and you know it, Goochy."

"Now listen, Mel," General Gooch said, "don't you know how to take what's coming to you? What's the matter with Plans?"

Melville Goodwin jabbed his hand into the side pocket of his blouse and pulled out his cigarettes and his lighter. Then he jerked a cigarette from the pack and lighted it, with the same sort of one-two motion that an infantryman used on the bolt of his rifle at inspection, and the lighter made an appropriate decisive click.

"I don't know what's the matter with me, Goochy," he said, "that I don't jump at a good thing when it comes my way. I was in with the chief half an hour yesterday. He didn't say a word about moving me into Plans. I want to know what Fancy Dan fouled me up in this. I wish they'd ordered me out to SCAP. It would take me out of here for a while."

Next Month

How soft and gentle her name sounds when I whisper it. It lingers on the tongue, insidious and slow, almost like poison. . . .

HE had no sense of foreboding. But when Ambrose went to spend a winter in Italy, Philip Ashley was never to see his cousin again. Ambrose wrote first that he'd met a distant connection of the family, the Contessa Sangalletti—or Cousin Rachel, as she liked to be called. Within weeks, Ambrose had married her. Within months, he was dead. And Rachel had disappeared.

The author of Rebecca tells the story of a young man's search for the truth about a beautiful woman born, it seemed, to bring tragedy with her.

MY COUSIN RACHEL

By DAPHNE DU MAURIER

Beginning in the November JOURNAL

RATE YOUR RANGE...

HOW CLOSE DOES IT COME TO Perfection

Check the gas range you are considering against the features below. Only the Perfection Gas Range rates a perfect score. If the range you have in mind hasn't all of these values, it does not measure up to Perfection! (Complete detailed score sheets for gas, electric and oil ranges can be obtained by writing.)

PERFECTION / OTHER RANGE

☑ ☐ "Lift-out" Burners, lightweight, no larger than teacups

☑ ☐ Burners made of stainless steel, lifetime guaranteed

☑ ☐ Burners operate at peak capacity immediately after washing

☑ ☐ "No-Turn" Broiler, broils both sides of meat at once

☑ ☐ Smokeless broiler, meat can't catch fire

☑ ☐ High-level, fixed position for broiler pan, eliminating guesswork

PERFECTION / OTHER RANGE

☑ ☐ Removable oven rack-holders, leave smooth interior for easier cleaning

☑ ☐ White or blue Flavoramic oven with Televue window and interior light

☑ ☐ Oven bakes evenly on any of the seven rack positions—no food shifting

☑ ☐ Broiler converts to extra, economy oven, doubles its usefulness

☑ ☐ Extra oven is smaller than Master oven, saves on fuel

☑ ☐ Regular & timed electric outlets for toaster, grill, coffee maker

☑ ☐ White Titanium porcelain finish is acid, scratch and stain resistant

☑ ☐ Cooks automatically "By the Clock"—frees you of oven-watching and guesswork—gives you more time to relax, shop or visit

PERFECTION STOVE COMPANY
7339-A Platt Avenue • Cleveland 4, Ohio

You can't beat Perfection Gas . . . Electric . . . Oil Ranges

Company Dinner with that

French's flavor

Savory Roast Pork

Sprinkle 6 pounds pork shoulder with salt and ¼ teasp. French's Black Pepper. Roast in shallow pan on rack, fat side up, in slow oven (325° F.) for 4 hours. Combine 1 cup broth or water, ½ cup lemon juice, ½ teasp. French's Oregano, ½ teasp. French's Fennel, ⅛ teasp. French's Nutmeg, ⅛ teasp. French's Garlic Powder; cook 5 minutes. Baste every 30 minutes with herb mixture until used, then with pan juices. Sprinkle potatoes with French's Parsley Flakes.

Ginger Glazed Carrots

Boil 8 small carrots until almost tender. Rub off skins under cold water. Dry thoroughly. Heat 3 tablesps. butter or margarine and ½ teasp. French's Ginger in a heavy skillet. Roll carrots in 2 tablesps. sugar and place in skillet. Simmer until glazed, turning frequently. Garnish with French's Parsley Flakes. Yield: 4 servings.

Chocolate Cake

Melt 4 sq. unsweetened chocolate in ¼ cup hot milk; cool. Cream ¾ cup shortening: slowly add 2 cups sugar; beat well. Add 3 egg yolks, one at a time, beating well after each addition. Add chocolate. Sift 2 cups all-purpose flour with 1 teasp. baking soda and ½ teasp. salt; add to batter alternately with 1 cup milk and 2 teasps. French's Vanilla. Fold in 3 egg whites beaten stiff. Turn into 2 greased 9" pans. Bake at 350° F. 30 minutes, or until done. Cool; spread layers with whipped cream flavored with ¼ teasp. French's Vanilla. Combine into layers.

® French's SPICES and EXTRACTS

"And just who would be wanting you in SCAP?" Goochy asked. "Why don't you get the lead out of your pants?"

I did not understand the technical significance of the last question, and Mel Goodwin paid no attention to it. Instead he began pacing back and forth across the office rapidly, as though there were no weight in his pants at all.

"I wonder how the wires got crossed," he said. "Do you know what I think? I think it's Muriel."

General Gooch laughed rudely, but Melville Goodwin paid no attention.

"You know, this is just what Muriel wants," he said. "She'll be crazy about this. Me settled down in the Pentagon with Merriwell to ride me!"

"Oh," Goochy said, "when did you start getting so particular? Just what's the matter with Lieutenant General Merriwell? He was a damned good corps commander, wasn't he? I didn't hear you gripe about Merriwell in Normandy."

Melville Goodwin stopped his pacing. "He's a fussy old s.o.b."

"They all are," Goochy answered, "but he's only got another year."

"I know," Mel Goodwin said, "and maybe I'll get another star out of it if I live right—but a year with Sister Merriwell!"

I knew that I was hearing more about the Pentagon than I would ever hear again, but the conversation was too technical and intimate to follow.

"Don't you know when you have it soft?" Goochy said. "You and I can't be buzzing around forever—and we've had a lot of fun."

I had not known that General Gooch could speak so gently. His words seemed to make Mel Goodwin feel his age. I would not have called it fun that he and General Gooch had been having, but they always called active service fun in the Army, and perhaps it had been fun for Goodwin and Gooch.

"Damn it, Goochy," Melville Goodwin said, "this place is getting you calcified. Pull in your belt. You and I aren't through just yet."

"I didn't say we were," Goochy answered. "You'll end up with a corps when you get out of Plans."

"I know I don't make sense," Mel Goodwin said, "but after paper-passing for two years in Frankfurt, I suppose I hoped I could be connected with troops in some way."

"Can't you ever get troops off your mind?" Goochy said.

Melville Goodwin moved toward the desk very slowly and ground the end of his cigarette hard into a glass ash tray. "Say," he said, "no matter what they shower on me, I know what I'm meant for and what I'm made for."

"Horsefeathers," Goochy said. "You'll go where they send you, Mel."

Melville Goodwin smiled his most mechanical smile, but for once it concealed nothing. "Will I?" he said. "Maybe—but I could retire."

THERE was a dead, queer silence, and he seemed to hold and control all that silence.

"Say, Mel," General Gooch said, "has that little skirt in New York been getting to you again?" It came so suddenly that I caught my breath.

"Never mind that now, Goochy," he said, and that peculiar silence was back with us.

Then the telephone rang and the spell or whatever it was that had held us was broken. Before the ring was over, General Gooch was at the desk.

"General Gooch speaking," he was saying. He closed his wiry hand over the mouthpiece and nodded. "For you, Mel," he said. "The Chief's office calling."

Melville Goodwin grabbed the telephone. "General Goodwin speaking," he was saying.

The rank was back. The world was moving again by the numbers. There was a sharp decisive click as General Gooch unlocked the office door.

"Yes, sir," General Goodwin was saying. "I'll be there directly, sir." The telephone gave a little thump as he set it down. "T makes it official," he said. "I'd better sa long, Sid. I'll see you tonight, and b your baggage; someone will get you n board that plane. Wait for me, will y Goochy?"

"Thanks for the lunch and good lu sir," I told him.

General Gooch smiled his most pai smile. "Congratulations, Mel," he sai "on everything."

The sound of the wish was as acid as smile that had gone before it, but Melv Goodwin was already gone.

I HAD my own sources of information the broadcasting business, and these all dicated that Gilbert Frary was definit planning to throw me over. It was time plan carefully what I would say about program to George Burtheimer in Chica and what I would say to Gilbert Frary eit in New York or Chicago, for it was certa Gilbert would fly east promptly. I had already made my business plans and conta Dottie Peale had taken over as she had s she would, and I had seen my lawyers a Dottie's friend in White Wall Rubber. was time to put my cards into order acco ing to suit and value. Yet somehow I co not do any of this after I had left Pentagon.

Again, the intrigues in which I was gaged seemed petty and insignificant. dilemma of Melville Goodwin was larger more tragic. I could see myself worry along in some way, but it would be differ with Melville Goodwin. I did not possess intensity, or his liking for personal risk the belief in myself that would allow me throw over a comfortable future for so thing indefinable.

Instead of keeping my mind on mysel thought all afternoon of his infatuation Dottie Peale. His personality was lik cloud that obscured everything I did, an did not want to see him end in nothing. I not want to see small things ruin him.

All that afternoon and evening, I w through the motions of my own living, I did not recall a single detail of the bro cast ceremony or what there was in script or how I read it. I only remember t I wanted to know what was happening Alexandria.

People in the service seldom displa much imagination about their home surrou ings, perhaps because they could not aff imagination. When my taxi stopped in fr of the house in Alexandria, I could not esc the idea that I had seen the whole pict many times before. It was about eight in evening and rather cool for a steak fry, l in the small back yard a good many peo were clustered around the outdoor grill, a there were more on the sun porch and in living room. Everyone was talking lou and having a wonderful and half-off-t record time, as one often did on those serv occasions. It was a military party, but l others of its sort it had, to an outsider, quality of fancy dress, because so many the male guests were out of uniform.

When no one answered the doorbell opened the door myself and entered the l ing room, followed by the General's driv carrying my suitcase.

"That's all right," I said to the driv "just put down the suitcase," and he v gone in an instant, because he did not belo there.

I was about to move out to the sun po to look for my host and hostess, when eye lighted on Captain Rattisbone, w sprang up instantly.

"General and Mrs. Goodwin asked me keep an eye out for you, sir," he said. " tell the General, if you'll wait here."

Captain Rattisbone returned with M ville Goodwin. It took a second for me adjust myself to his appearance. Melv Goodwin was out of uniform and he fit into no preconceived pattern, because I h never seen him that way before. I had ne known him to assume an awkward pose, h now mediocrity had suddenly overtak him. He looked like a plump and mido ge nonentity, whom you might meet at a ol ub and immediately forget.

d course it was the cut of the clothes. A od tailor might have set off his figure ty ly, but even so, Mel Goodwin would ot ave known how to manage a civilian oa at any rate, a service budget demanded ea -made clothing, hastily altered. The Fe al wore a tweed coat and gray slacks.
w ed that I might have gone with him
h he had bought his outfit, but then he ro not have settled for quiet colors. After ea of olive drab he would have revolted ga st monotones. The coat he had selected a viciously heavy and unkempt garment.
ts ain color was reddish russet brown,
u grid of violent green had been woven t the brown texture. It was belted in he ack and full of pleats. His gray slacks
e a hideous imitation of an English
o , with accordion pleats around the belts aist. His soft shirt was a rich blue. His e as red with green diagonal stripes.

here was the o win gone, I was i ing, who had to there in the e gon prepared to s if he could not en with troops?
Wh e was Goodwin
f rth Africa and Go win of Saint-Lô
n Goodwin of the Bu e? He may have ea some of my n ghts, because he fu had an unex-
e dly sensitive ing

lo you got here,
i you, boy?" he ai "How do you
n I'm looking?"
Like something ff Scottish moor,"
d him.
That's right," he and appeared hted. "It's Harris
d, and you can
l it and it says
the label. Well, take that suit-
of yours upstairs,
n then you can
the crowd."
e Goodwins and
oyces must have completely con-
al to have lived
her in that small se, which was
ly designed for a e family. There
d be, I was sure,
so-called master's bedroom, the smaller le children's room, a communal bath-
, and finally a hall bedroom which at time would have been called a sewing
, and I was right all the way.
Here," Melville Goodwin said, pointing e hall bedroom, "we can stick the suit-in my dressing room."

had referred to it as his dressing room, it doubtless was for the time being, but as really a spill-over room whose denimred studio couch was available at any ent for any unexpected guest.
There certainly is a crowd downstairs," aid. "You never can tell who's coming n Muriel throws a party. Let's go."
Just a minute first," I said. I could treat almost brusquely now that he was in tweed coat. "I know it isn't any of my ness, Mel, but I can't help being curious ut what happened to you this afternoon."
Oh," he said, "oh, that."
Yes," I answered. "Are you going to take job or aren't you?"
e gave me his blankest, dullest stare.
sten, boy," he said, "in the Army when boss puts you in a good spot, you don't
e. I did tell him I was disappointed, for onal reasons, just a little disappointed."
he anticlimax fitted perfectly with Mel-Goodwin's tweeds and slacks, but it also made me happier. "So you didn't resign?" I said.

Melville Goodwin still looked at me blankly. "Listen, son, you don't do things that way. You don't show any immediate superior when you're browned off. You pull the lines together first and get organized and do a little quiet cerebration. I'm waiting and thinking for the moment, son, and, you know, I've got quite a lot to think about."

"Well, that's fine," I said. "I've been worrying about you. Have you explained your reactions to Muriel?"

HE rubbed his hand over the back of his head. "I suppose you'll think this is funny," he said. "I started to, but she's so happy that I couldn't. This whole party's by way of turning into a celebration. Maybe I haven't any guts when it comes to Muriel. She's been through a lot and I don't like to spoil it for her—at the moment. Let's go downstairs."

It should have been the end of a perfect day, but no one could ever evaluate the reasons for another's discontent. He belonged with that crowd downstairs. He would have been a fish out of water anywhere else, and I had to tell him so—no matter what his reaction might be.

"Wait a minute," I said. "Mel, don't you know you belong right here? If you try to fit anywhere else, you'll be as silly as you look right now in those clothes."

"Now wait a minute," he said. "What's wrong with these clothes?"

"They're grotesque," I said.

"Now, Sid," he said, "let's get this straight. What's wrong with you tonight?"

He was reaching the center of the situation, and perhaps there was more wrong with me than there was with him, because I did not have his capacity for adjustment. I asked:

"What do you think you'll look like if you leave this for Dottie?"

"Sid," he said, "what makes you think I'm going to?"

"I've been watching you," I said. "You've been thinking about it, haven't you?"

"Yes," he said, "I've been thinking."

"Well, think some more," I said. "Think what you have and what you'll lose."

The moment that followed was one of those uncertain beats of time. Neither of us took his eye from the other.

"You see a lot more than you ought to, boy," he said.

"You're pretty obvious sometimes," I answered.

Melville Goodwin drew a deep breath. "Boy, it's funny," he said. "I ought to be mad as hell at you." Suddenly he clenched his fist, moved his hand upward slowly and tapped me gently on the chest. "There's just one thing I want straight from now on out. I don't need any more advice, son. You understand?"

"You won't get any more," I said.

"Everyone has to run things for himself, in the final analysis. You understand?"

"Yes," I said, "I understand."

"It's funny I don't get mad," he said. "I would, except you mean well, don't you?"

"That's right," I said, "I mean well."

"Come on," he said, "let's go downstairs and get a drink."

(Continued on Page 107)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Ultimate

By Archibald Rutledge

Beyond your valleys lie no vales
for me;
No mountains rise above your
mystic hills;
No ocean rolls beyond your azure sea.
Your love for me my final hope fulfills.
After your blooms there are no
flowers forever;
No heavens past your eyes, my eyes
to meet;
No waters flow for me beyond your river;
No forests lure beyond your wildwoods sweet.

Strange was the way I came, and long and far,
O end of all my world, all beauty's
verge;
My harbor, haven, terminal you are.
For me no lights beyond your light emerge.
I see one star above life's lonely
hill;
I see no other, and I never will.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

3 ways to give leftovers that French's flavor

1 A GOURMET'S SAUCE FOR COLD MEAT SLICES

½ glass currant jelly Equal quantity French's Mustard

Melt currant jelly over low heat, add slowly and blend in an equal quantity of French's Mustard. Serve hot with slices of leftover roast pork. Or, meat and sauce together may be placed in frying pan, covered tightly and simmered slowly till hot. This sauce is equally delicious with cold ham, lamb or chicken.

2 HAM AND POTATO SALAD

1 cup cooked ham, diced
2 cups cooked potatoes, diced
1 cup diced celery
3 hard cooked eggs, chopped
½ cup mayonnaise
¼ cup French's Mustard
Salt and pepper to taste

Mix mayonnaise and mustard together and combine with other ingredients. Serve on a bed of crisp lettuce leaves.

3 CHEF'S CASSEROLE

1 cup cooked rice
1 cup cooked fish
½ cup milk
1 egg, beaten
¼ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon melted butter or margarine
1 tablespoon French's Mustard
1 teaspoon French's Parsley Flakes

Combine all ingredients and pour into greased casserole. Top with buttered bread crumbs, and bake in a moderate oven (350 F.) for 45 minutes. Serves 3-4.

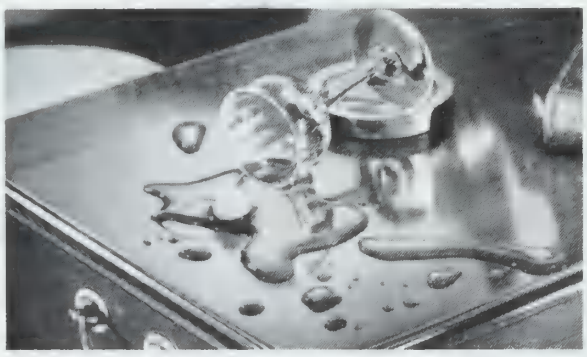
(Also made in Canada)

French's is smoother, creamier . . .
Millions prefer it!

free Handsome new recipe book "DINING DELIGHTS"

Send name, address to The R. T. French Co., 1697 Mustard St., Rochester 9, N. Y.

*Name*_____



*Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

New! Furniture shines like a mirror with a few easy wipes!

And the luster lasts for months! Now—in a few minutes—you can make your furniture gleam with all the rich, natural beauty of an expensive hand-rubbed finish. Simply smooth on O-Cedar Dri-Glo—the new, non-oily silicone polish—and let it dry. Then, with a few easy wipes (actually, with no more pressure than you use when dusting) your furniture shines like a mirror.

Drinks won't mar a Dri-Glo surface.

A damp rag removes sticky finger prints.

Easy to dust as a glass-topped table.

Dri-Glo removes most surface dirt.

98c bottle of Dri-Glo shines all the furniture in an average 6-room house.

O-Cedar dri·glo 98¢

Big 6-Room Size

A NON-OILY SILICONE POLISH
by the makers of the famous O-Cedar Sponge Mop

O-Cedar Corp'n
Chicago, Illinois

O-Cedar of Canada, Ltd.
Stratford, Ontario, Canada

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

GUARANTEE! Your mo back if you aren't complet satisfied Dri-Glo lives up every claim made for it he least we knew where we were, and was no need for double talk. General knew, too, that it was Dottie Peale had upset the balance of his life. The had gone around already about that skirt in New York. Melville Goodwin nly realized that the shadow of scandal ight behind him. I was pleased with f that I had again had the intestinal ide to bring up the subject of Dottie st one thing more," I said, and I d at the head of the stairs.

(Continued from Page 105)

d," he said, "I'm pretty well browned ht now."

st one thing more and I'll be through. our imagination," I said. "Try to think ou'd look with Dottie in New York."

could find a good civilian job," he said.

es," I told him. "Dottie can find you l right."

e could get a ranch somewhere," he "We could travel."

es," I said, "and how would you look ng the bags?"

n I knew I had gone too far. I had ated something that he had to keep ate. His face had grown brick-red and ice shook.

ome on," he said, "get going before I ou in the pants downstairs."

st see you don't kick yourself down- ," I said, and I turned back toward the room.

here are you going?" he asked.

or my suitcase," I told him. "I'm leav- ow."

ait a minute," he said, "don't do He had controlled his face and voice, e shook his head slowly. "I told you," id, and his voice was very restrained, ld you to stop riding me. Don't do it , son. Don't you see there are some s I can't help?"

es," I said, "I see."

hen shake hands," he said. "You and n't make this world."

neone downstairs was beginning to play iano, and he grasped my arm just above lbow.

ud," he called as we were going down- , "come here. I want you to meet Sid on, and call to Joe to fix him up a —rare." We were back at the party, from our rough trip together, and it quite a party—almost a celebration.

you grew in experience, and grew to rstand people and their motives, you leveloped a sense of discrimination and mprehension of your own tastes and ations. A few years ago I might have happy with all that group, because I would not have known any better. Now I had lived too long, and I had become too specialized. I was like a child at a strange party. They were all as polite to me as they would have been to a strange child, but I was not in the service and I possessed none of the drives and worries connected with it. This did not mean for an instant that I did not like the crowd. I knew enough about them to understand that they were more valuable by far to the world than people like Art Hertz or Gilbert Frary or most of the newspaper crowd and the writers I played around with. I both admired and envied them. I might have been one of them if I had shared their years of apprenticeship and indoctrination, but now it was too late. I floundered there like a fish out of water.

THE steps from the sun porch descended onto a small lawn, bright under a floodlight. It was not unpleasantly cool outside, and some of the women were wearing evening cloaks and some of the men stood around the dying embers of the grill. I saw Muriel Goodwin at once, completely in command.

"Sid," she said, "this makes everything perfect."

There were so many people she wanted me to meet, she said, and she was so sorry that Helen was not with me, but there would be another time. Before I met anyone, she was going to be selfish and talk to me for just a minute. She drew me away so that we stood apart from the guests on the lawn.

"Have you seen Mel?" she asked. "It's the first time in years that Mel's got anything he deserves. He doesn't seem to understand that at last we're really going to be able to settle down." She lowered her voice. "He's right on his way to almost anything and he doesn't know it."

I nodded, but I did not answer. I could not say anything to spoil it for her.

"He's been so restless," she said, "and he's been so repressed lately. He's never let himself unwind since he got back from Germany. It's been so hard wondering how I could help him."

"He still seems pretty restless." That was all I was able to say and the only way I could put it.

"I know," she said. "They all are restless when they come back from overseas. I'm going house hunting tomorrow, and Mel can have his golf. All he needs is to get back into a routine."

"It's pretty hard to settle down," I said.

"It will be all right now things are fixed," she answered. "He never can believe that he has a future. I won't have to sit and wait any more and wonder where he is. You don't know what waiting and watching means, because you're a man."

"I don't like girls, but you're different—you can fight."

Don't miss these beautiful, guaranteed KENTILE FLOORS

KENTILE DEALER'S PRICE ONLY $48.50* INSTALLED

Only your KENTILE DEALER has them

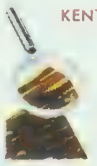
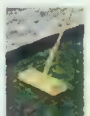
GUARANTEED as long as you live in your home



IF HIGH PRICES—or limited choice of other materials—are holding up your home decorating plans...here's wonderful news! Kentile Dealers can still give you a full selection of the smartest new colors...expertly installed in any design you may plan.



Only your Kentile Dealer gives you this opportunity to create your own floor ...to achieve custom smartness in any room with low-cost guaranteed Kentile. Look under FLOORING in your classified directory for the name and address of your nearest Kentile dealer—get a FREE estimate.

*Price quoted for 8' x 9' kitchen floor. Your Kentile Floor may cost even less or slightly more depending on the Kentile colors you choose, design, size, type and condition of your floor and freight rates to your city. Kentile colors in kitchen are: Travertine and Fleecy Cerulean. Kentile colors in playroom are: Lamartine and Veined Carnelian.

KENTILE • KENCORK • KENTILE RUBBER TILE • KENTILE, Inc., 58 2nd Ave., Dept. F-3, Brooklyn 15, N. Y.

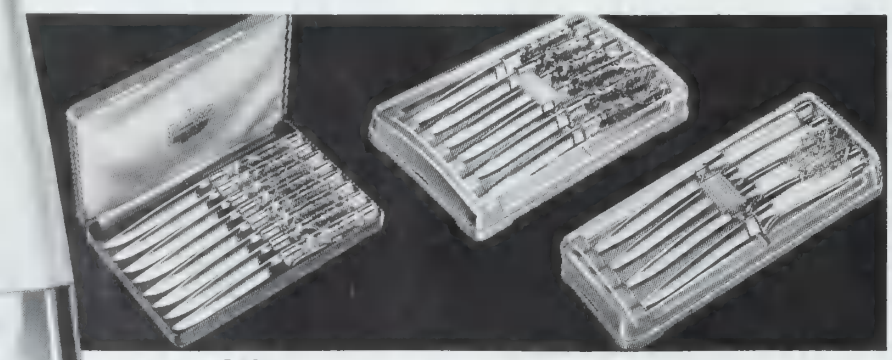
Colors Built In! Kentile colors can't wear off—they extend right through to the back of each tough, durable tile.

Dirt Locked Out! Dirt or stains can't penetrate the smooth surface of Kentile—easiest of floors to keep clean

KENTILE®

The Asphalt Tile of Enduring Beauty

"So very useful and correct"— Emily Post



". . . Carvel Hall Steak Knives cut steak and chicken as though they were butter."

MRS. POST SAYS: "Carvel Hall blades make neat, complete carving of tiny squab, turkey wings and chops an easily acquired skill." These famous Micrometal® blades are hollow-ground, scientifically honed chrome-vanadium steel. Service guaranteed for life!

THREE LOVELY HANDLE STYLES! Designed with your individual tastes and home decor in mind. Vogue handles in ivory Lustrex with shimmering trim. Classic handles in ivory Lustrex with fine silver filigree overlay. Regal handles in ebony Lustrex overlaid with pure silver filigree.

Reflects 100% of Money Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping If Not As Advertised Therein

Carvel Hall FINE CUTLERY by Briddell ®

EIGHT STEAK KNIVES with Classic handles, Aristocrat Case—$43.00; Six Steak Knives with Regal handles in Jewel-Box Chest—$31.50; Four Steak Knives with Vogue handles in Jewel-Box Chest—$13.50. Many other sets.

IDEAL GIFTS! At better jewelers, gift shops, department stores.

FREE BOOKLET COUPON

CHAS. D. BRIDDELL, INC., Dept. L-10
CRISFIELD, MARYLAND.

Please send my FREE Gift Book at once.

Name _____

Mail coupon now for FREE GIFT BOOK
. . . full of ideas!

Make your next gift something different, lovely, lasting and remembered. Send for this wonderful, colorful little book—full of priceless Carvel Hall gift ideas for every occasion. Absolutely FREE . . . but supply

He was the hunter home from the hill with all his field service behind him, absolutely safe.

"And now you'll have to meet everyone," she said.

Hardly anyone in the house was below the rank of colonel. I saw a general doing card tricks, and two other generals, surrounded by officers' wives, exhibiting Roman wrestling. Melville Goodwin had already gathered a group in the living room and they had been singing Smiles and I Want a Girl Just Like the Girl and other songs of World War I. Melville was standing beside the piano and General Gooch in a pepper-and-salt suit stood on one side of him and General Snip Lewis in a dinner coat on the other side. Suddenly, I heard his voice, entirely off key, but booming with deep fervor, "Bless 'em all, great and small." One of the beauties of that song of the Pacific was the secret meaning you could put into it, which acted as a balm to lacerated feelings.

"And now I want you to meet General Merriwell," Mrs. Goodwin said. "He's Mel's new chief, you know."

General Merriwell was the only three-star general present. He stood alone three paces behind the crowd at the piano, not singing but listening tolerantly, like someone who had no ear for music or too few drinks.

"Muriel, my dear," he said, "this is a delightful party."

General Merriwell also wore a dinner coat. His face lacked the aggressive lines of the singers around the piano. It was both shrewd and pedantic.

"I just wanted to say, Muriel," he said, "how pleased I am to get my hands on Mel and to have him in the next office. The work has been crowding up lately. It's time we had more men in Plans with long and practical combat records, but I'm a little afraid, from something that transpired this afternoon, that Mel is reluctant."

"That's just the way Mel always is when he starts with desk work," Muriel Goodwin said. "He always expresses doubts."

"Somehow or other," General Merriwell said, as though he had not heard her, "officers with combat records are often restless. Well, if Melville did not want this, he should not have rated so high at the War College. I went over all Mel's qualifications off the record with Foghorn. By the way, his arthritis is pretty bad lately."

"Yes, I know," Muriel Goodwin said. "Mel and I called on him yesterday afternoon."

"I made that pilgrimage, too, yesterday," General Merriwell said. "Whenever anything important comes up, I like to get the Grimshaw angle. There's always that jump between combat and no combat—a different thought pattern, as Foghorn put it. Foghorn told quite a funny story about the first time he saw you and Mel. Where was it?"

"Why, at Bailey," Mrs. Goodwin said.

"Bailey, that's right, at the old Small Arms School," General Merriwell answered, "and you fixed a sandbox for him. Well, Grimshaw says not to worry about Mel. He says put Mel anywhere and he can do anything."

"That's awfully sweet of Foghorn," Muriel Goodwin said. "Melville, come over here."

MELVILLE GOODWIN stood attentively in front of us. "Yes, what is it, dear?" he said.

"I just wanted to tell you what your new boss has just told me that General Grimshaw said about you," Muriel Goodwin said. "He says put you anywhere and you can do anything. Now aren't you pleased?"

"Yes, dear," Melville Goodwin answered, "very pleased. Thank you for passing that on, sir. Sid, I think you and I ought to leave for the airport pretty soon."

I had never thought that General Goodwin would take me to the airport. I had thought that I could simply call a taxi, but he seemed anxious to go with me, but somehow I still rated a Public Relations car, which Goochy had ordered. People were leaving already, he said, and his ducking out for a few minutes would not break up the party.

"Airport, son," he said to the dri , and then he added, "the commercial ines" and he turned up the glass windo that separated us from the driver's seat.

I was a little constrained, but he ed as though there had been no words betwen us and I remembered that he must ha lived through lots of torrid scenes.

"Driving out here makes me el as though I were pushing off somewhe myself," he said. "I wish I were—anywhere."

He must have been thinking of Ha ard from which Air Transport planes use to be loaded and from which I had left myself with Dottie Peale and that trope of VIP's for Europe, and it would ha been better for Mel Goodwin if that C- had never made the flight.

"I USED to like these parties of Muriel's," he said. "I don't know why I'm not in the mood for them now. Sid, do you e Jeff as though you'd missed something? mean something you've never known about."

"Yes," I answered, "I suppose everybody feels that way sometimes."

"I keep thinking what I've been doing with myself all these years," he said. "Do you know when that idea first came to me?"

"No," I said.

"Well, it came over me all at once in Paris when I saw you and Dottie Peale. That's why I began reciting about Ulysses. Old Ulysses must have felt just this way, and he had the brains to recognize it."

"That only goes to show that people like you should never mess around with civilians, Mel," I said. "You can't be me, and can't be you. Nobody can have everything."

"All right," he said, "let me ask you this one question. You wouldn't want to be me now would you?"

"No," I said, and then I was afraid that had sounded rudely fervent. "I wouldn't have what it takes."

"All right," he said, "then you ought to see why I don't want to be myself. Dottie does."

I seemed to be standing in front of a mental fluoroscope watching the simple motives of General Goodwin.

"Yes," I said, "Dottie would. Dottie doesn't want to be herself either."

"Poor kid," he said. "I know. Dottie never had a break."

"How's that again?" I asked.

"You don't understand Dottie," he said. "You don't try to. She's like a —" He stopped. He was not good at similes.

"Like a what?" I asked.

"Like a bird fluttering in a cage," he said "and Dottie knows what I'm going through. She's got a lot of insight, Sid. And I'll tell you something else about Dottie."

"What else?" I asked.

"Dottie's got guts," he said. "Dottie and I have that in common. If we had a war we could both go down the line together. Dottie wouldn't be afraid."

Dottie had done what she wanted with him, and he was sewed up now. He was at peace with himself momentarily because in his thoughts he and Dottie were walking away from the Pentagon together, walking from General Merriwell and Plans, walking from humdrum fact and into a roseate future whose details did not matter because they had insight and infinite patience and understood each other. It did not occur at all to Melville Goodwin that there would be a morning after.

"Mel," I began, "take hold of yourself," but he stopped me.

"Don't give me any more advice," he said. "I told you I'm handling this myself from now on out."

As the driver was opening the door he made one last remark. "Don't bother to come inside with me, Mel. Go back home where you belong and try to stay there."

"Well, good night, son," he said. "You must remember, we have to work out these problems by ourselves. Happy landings, so to speak."

"Happy landings, Mel," I said.

Suddenly I was sickeningly sure of what he was going to land. I felt as though I were walking away from a wreck.

(To be Concluded)

WHAT WOMEN DID IN GARY

(Continued from Page 51)

ders are quickly brought into court and hed to the full extent of the law. The are brighter at night, and you can down the streets after dark with safety. job isn't done, by any means. The en are the first to tell you so.

isky-voiced, tense little Mrs. Russell T. th puts the attitude of the Women's ens Committee in words: "Of course is lots more to be done. We can't stop minute. But we aren't tired. Why, I'll this thing if it kills me." The mother of mall children, with no regular domestic Mrs. Griffith still plans to be making about candidates and issues right up to on day. Friends say, "Peg's a regular inder. She makes everybody feel like ng the flag and shouting the The Star-gled Banner when she speaks."

understand how the big steel city of furnished such fertile soil for the th of vice gangs and racketeers, one look to its history. The site was selected 05 as the perfect spot for a steel town, teel interests whose executives saw in location at the conjunction of Lake igan and the Calumet River, near the railroad center of Chicago, and within shipping distance of limestone and ore sits, as well as a supply of coal and er, the perfect combination for their ose. Here land was cheap and available. he steel companies paved streets, built es, planted trees on the sand dunes, pre-ng for the steelworkers who would oc-this brand-new town.

"When Gary was laid out," Mrs. Collins ts out, "the north side was planned for r residences, while the more modest lings of the many foreign-born workers were later imported to fill the jobs were e south. There is a natural boundary een the two sections: the railroad tracks the river. I have always felt that this had d psychological effect—with the tracks g as a physical as well as a social barrier een the two residential sections."

new town grew beyond expectations. population leaped during the two world s. Still more workers had to be im-ed—many of them Mexicans, Negroes Puerto Ricans. They settled for the most in what is now called the "Central rict" in the heart of town. This is a poor hborhood, reaching almost down to the t of Gary's business section. Probably use the property has never been worth h, the streets are poorly paved and ly lighted. Row upon row of unpainted e shanties characterize the section. The ugly, festering eyesore seems to stretch on for miles. It is here that an unwritten real-estate agreement keeps Gary's Negro, Mexican and Puerto Rican population. Under these atrocious conditions it is no wonder the incidence of crime in this section is very high.

Lake County, of which Gary is a part, also includes the big towns of East Chicago and Hammond, which fringe Chicago's south side. They, like Gary, attract a transient population. Moving out from Chicago, the vice interests some years ago found the prospects good, the restrictions easy to dodge, in this sprawling lakeside settlement, where money came easy to many who weren't accustomed to it and sought liquor, gambling and women on which to spend it.

MISS MARY CHEEVER was buried Monday afternoon, March 7, 1949. That night 2000 women, called by a handful of leaders of various women's organizations, met in Seaman's Hall. Filled with righteous indignation as they listened to demands for law enforcement, the women in one accord leaped to their feet to march the three long blocks to City Hall where city council was in night session.

An ultimatum was read to Mayor Eugene Swartz and the city council: "The women of the City of Gary long have suffered from lack of police protection in their homes and on the streets; they have endured the humiliating and unsavory reputation of their home town spread across pages of national magazines. They have watched helplessly as neighbors and friends have been attacked on the streets and robbed in their homes and automobiles, with no aid from the law-enforcement division of the city government." Citing Gary's flagrant record, they demanded that the superintendent of the Indiana State Police, Arthur M. Thurston, be called in immediately to survey the situation and make recommendations. They gave the mayor two weeks for action. Then, they said, "If the city government does not clean up the city, give it protection and make it safe for the citizens and their families, the women can and will, with God's help!"

It was Hylda Burton, a schoolteacher, who suggested that first night of the indignation meeting, "I move that this group be made a permanent organization, called the Women's Citizens Committee, and that the women who called us together be appointed on an advisory board."

"Our organization was really as simple as that at first," Beryl Ann Brownell, serious-minded young women's-page editor of the Gary Post-Tribune, remembers. "We had no

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

To a Favorite Dachshund Burying a Bone in a New Overstuffed Sofa

BY JOAN AUCOURT

Beloved dog, whose busy paws
Impose antique and jungle laws
Upon the idle and effete
Appurtenances of this seat,
Believe—I understand your case,
And with what feeling nose you trace
The glorious spots of grease and gore
That mark your small but valued store.

But oh, consider, if you can,
The duller struggles of mere man.
I, too, have dubious battles fought;
And paid, what's more, more than I ought,
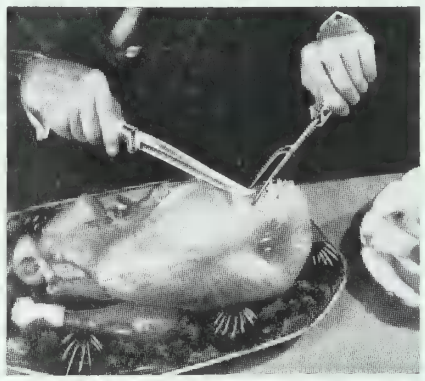
Just to possess my larger bone—
To wit, the sofa—for my own,
And have transported it into
The deepest jungle that I knew—

Again, to wit, my living room—
There to lurk in ancestral gloom.

Conspirators are we at heart,
But with objectives worlds apart.
For you, dear dog, the natural end
Of all the energy you spend
May very well be said to be
The wise increase of gluttony.



Whereas, for me, it's not so easy—
The human stomach being queasy—
My sofa's not to taste or smell
Nor lend romance to dinner bell,
But me to solace and sustain
When marketing is long and vain.

Therefore, sweet beast, desist, I pray:
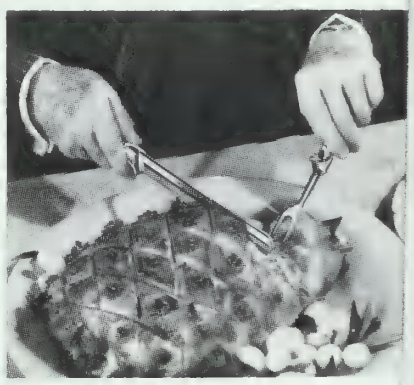
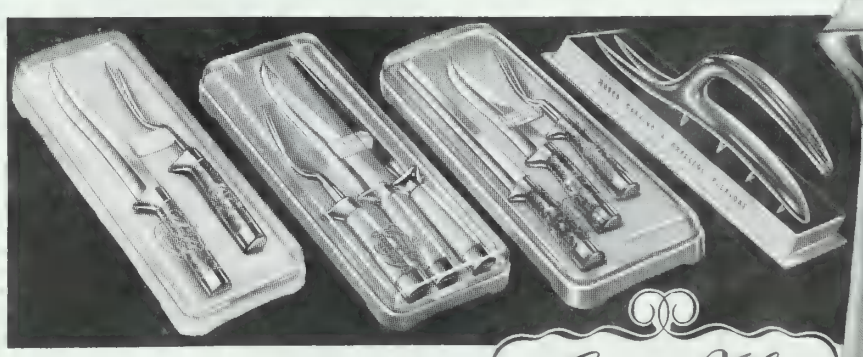
Bones are less rare than rest today.



"Help your husband carve with ease"— Duncan Hines



"... these fine Carvel Hall Carving Sets are the same ones I use in my own home."

FAMOUS MICRONED® BLADES! Slice even, tempting servings of the tenderest meats. These blades are scientifically honed to a microscopic edge, unconditionally guaranteed against defect . . . bear a lifetime service guarantee. Three handsome handle styles . . . to match Carvel Hall Steak Knives.

CARVING TOOLS FOR EVERY JOB! Expert carvers demand the proper blade for each carving task. In Carvel Hall Carving Sets you'll find smart, slim Slicers . . . keen, curved Carvers . . . sure, steady Forks . . . small Steak and Game Sets and host-helping Ham & Roast Holders.

33 HANDSOME CARVING SETS TO SEE! Regal Carver and Fork, $25.00; Vogue Carver, Fork and Steel, $25.00; Classic Carver, Slicer and Fork, $34.00; silver-plated Ham and Roast Holder, $7.95. Give Carvel Hall Carving Sets to yourself, to friends.

Carvel Hall FINE CUTLERY
by Briddell ®

FREE BOOKLET COUPON

Send now for famous Duncan Hines Carving Guide—FREE!

Help your husband become an expert carver. Send today for this special reprint of carving lessons from Duncan Hines' new book.

Duncan Hines' complete book, "Adventures in Good Cooking & the Art of Carving in the Home" available at book counters, $1.50

CHAS. D. BRIDDELL, INC.,
Dept. L-10 Crisfield, Maryland

Please send Duncan Hines' Carving Guide, Free!

Name _____

Address _____

Give this low-cost supper dish a prize...
It's made with CHATEAU* Cheese Food!

CHEESE FESTIVAL
fill-'em-ups!

WHEN APPETITES are big as all outdoors, let the satisfying flavor of Borden's Chateau cheese food come to your rescue!

You'll find Chateau rich with the mellow-mild flavor of fine American Cheddar cheese. Packed with concentrated whole-milk nourishment. Ideal for sandwiches and salads. And it's the best-behaved cheese food you ever cooked with!

Get Borden's Chateau in the ½-lb. package or penny-saving 2-lb. loaf at your food store today and try this new recipe:

4 large baked potatoes
½ cup hot milk
2 teaspoons chopped onion
1 teaspoon prepared mustard
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
½ cup diced Chateau
8 frankfurters (1 lb.)
8 slices Chateau (from the 2-lb. loaf)

Cut potatoes in half lengthwise. Scoop out centers. Mash well with milk and seasonings. Stir in diced Chateau. Put back in shells. Place one frankfurter on each potato half. Cover with Chateau slices and broil 3 inches from flame till cheese melts.

*T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

For sandwiches that go to school—
BORDEN'S CHEESE SPREADS!

You'll find Borden's Cheese Spreads are the happiest fillings you ever sandwiched between two slices of bread!

Such a variety! There are sharp, zippy ones like Vera-Sharp, Cheese 'n Bacon, Smokey; and Cream Cheese blends like Pimento, Olive-Pimento, Pineapple, Relish, and Blue! Creamy, smooth, and very nourishing! They come in crystal-clear, re-usable "Party Glasses" that you'll be proud to use. Get Borden's Cheese Spreads today, and collect a set.

©The Borden Company

BORDEN'S FINE CHEESES

Folks who know cheese say "BORDEN'S, PLEASE!"

definite plans. We were simply united by the desire to clean up Gary."

Two weeks after their first visit to the City Hall, the Women's Citizens Committee marched again to see Mayor Swartz. He said he had done what he could to clamp down on gambling and prostitution. He refused the police-department shake-up the women demanded. He denied the existence of syndicated gambling. "We'll take this to the governor," the women said. And they did.

The fifteen-minute interview Gov. Henry F. Schricker promised the Gary delegation stretched out for almost four hours. "The governor began by gallantly complimenting us on the fine spring weather we brought with us," Mrs. Benjamin Saks, one of the spokesmen of the group, recalls. "When we had finished, I don't think he cared what the weather was like outside. It had been very stormy in his office." At one point in their talk, Governor Schricker, who is a Democrat, accused the women of being Republicans, come to harass the incumbent administration. "Why," retorted Mrs. Saks, shaking an indignant finger, "I'm as good a Democrat as you are. We want good government and we don't care if we get it from the Democrats or the Republicans."

By the end of March, convinced the women were in deadly earnest, Mayor Swartz took what seemed to be a positive step toward cleaning up Gary. He appointed Capt. Peter Billick, a police officer whose reputation was above reproach, as a special investigator of vice, and fired the old vice squad, some members of which the Women's Citizens Committee had charged were working hand in glove with many of the "joints." (These men promptly threatened to sue Mrs. Saks for $40,000, claiming she had defamed their reputations. "We tried to get the case brought into court, but it never was," Miss Brownell charges.)

"Captain Billick worked night and day," Peg Griffith remembers. "He and his men followed tips of their own and many which we received through calls and letters. The trouble was that once the arrests were made, everything stopped. Case after case was dismissed, or the defendant released with a small fine."

By midsummer of 1949, Mayor Swartz assured the Women's Citizens Committee, "There's no open gambling or prostitution here now." After a conference with and encouragement from Captain Billick, the women decided on action which would focus the attention of the whole town on the illegal traffic going on right under the nose of the public. Then followed the famous two days when 160 women, representing as many different organizations (all members of the Women's Citizens Committee), "picketed" eighteen of the worst taverns, brothels, gambling houses.

"People jeered at us, called us names, or simply stood by and stared. It was scalding-hot weather in late July. We didn't carry signs or make trouble. We simply walked up and down, took notes of the things and people we saw. One tavern operator was so angry he rolled back his awning so we wouldn't get any of its shade. But we hurt their business. We were simply proving to Mayor Swartz and the public of Gary that there were still plenty of wide-open joints in operation. We also showed our enemies that the Women's Citizens Committee was not just a small group of special interests, but represented all the women of Gary," Mrs. Collins has pointed out.

ALTHOUGH Billick and his squad made remarkable progress throughout 1949, Mayor Swartz transferred him at the end of the year to the Records Bureau of the Police Department. "This made him completely ineffective so far as law enforcement was concerned," the women say. Despite this setback, however, they refused to be discouraged.

Since the courts of Gary were one of the weakest links in law enforcement, the Women's Citizens Committee began a program of court observation. Under the direction of Mrs. Marshall Iams, wife of a Gary attorney, teams of women were assigned to every session of the Gary Municipal Court. "As a citizen interested in government, your presence in court need no explanation," she instructed the watchers. "Don't make yourself conspicuous or discuss any case outside the court." Mrs. Iams herself sat in court day after day, from April, 1949, until the end of the year, despite the fact that this meant hiring sitters to care for her two preschool-age children. "We found the process of justice in Gary was a farce," she charges. "Although a Municipal Court judge receives a salary of $[illegible] per year, he spent about twelve hours a week on the bench. Indiana law permits a 'special judge' to be appointed for certain court sessions. When things got hot, the judge usually wasn't there. He divided these court appointments among a group of attorneys. Often them would sit on the bench one day, and would be seen the next defending someone whose case he had previously heard."

POLL watching was another step taken by the Women's Citizens Committee to improve better government. "We are convinced there were many irregularities at the polls, and although we couldn't take any direct action we could prevent overt cheating," Mrs. Collins says. "In one precinct during our first observations, over half the voters asked to be assisted. In each case we insisted that both a Republican and a Democrat judge be called in." Since poll watching has been practiced, she believes there has been steady improvement in voting practices.

As time went on, it became evident to the leaders of the Women's Citizens Committee that many officeholders in Gary, Lake County, and even the State of Indiana, were committed, willingly or not, in subtle ways to the big gambling interests. They believed a clean sweep of officeholders was necessary. But to point up the relationship between officials and graft to the voting public, they realized they needed more than hearsay or opinion. It seemed that ineffective action on the part of Gary's police force might stem from Chief of Police Michael Matovino, a hangover from the regime of Joseph A. Finerty, Gary's former mayor. There was good reason to believe that Jack Doyle, so-called Gary Crime Syndicate head (subsequently summoned before the Kefauver Committee), was running several gambling houses in Gary and Lake County and conspiring with various politicians. Further responsibility for the wide-open existence of vice they attributed to Lake County's prosecuting attorney, Benjamin Schwartz, and his chief deputy in Gary, Paul A. Lucas, who served a prison term in [illegible] as a result of his conviction on a liquor-conspiracy charge. So the women enlisted the help of men in Gary they knew were as eager to clean up the town as were they. The Gary Crime Commission was formed, dedicated to ferreting out proof of the tie-up between vice and local officeholders.

Bernard Spong, pastor of the Bethlehem Lutheran Church in Gary, is chairman of the commission. "The Crime Commission is really the 'baby' of the Women's Citizens Committee. Our board is made up of fifteen men, twenty-one women, the latter from the Women's Citizens Committee. This gives the ladies the controlling vote in any controversial decision. They trust us," and he smiles, "but they want to be sure we do what they think best. Actually, the two groups work very closely together, and it is the women who keep us alive!" (The WCC's recent protest over the withholding of a grand jury report on a probe in Lake County led the Senate Crime Committee to ask Criminal Court Judge William J. Murray for an explanation.)

With typical directness, when funds were needed to finance expert advice to the organizations and for the dissemination of information to the public, the women simply started ringing doorbells. Within six weeks the Women's Citizens Committee treasury boasted $15,000, received in amounts ranging from $1 to $25. "One dollar made you a member of the WCC for two years. We soon had 9000 members. And other people contributed to the cause because they agreed with us," they explain.

om the time of its organization in the g of 1949, until October 1950, the Gary e Commission's work was quiet and in- icuous. But two weeks before the No- er elections, the Commission made ing revelations concerning graft in the ty prosecutor's office. Since Schwartz unning for re-election, their timing was ct for his defeat. In a pamphlet entitled Microphone Speaks, the Crime Com- on related in detail a series of conversa- between Blaz A. Lucas and a steady m of bootleggers, panderers, gamblers professional bondsmen, many of whom defendants in Lucas' own court when as sitting for Municipal Court Judge I. Ruberto. To gain this information, Crime Commission had planted secret ophone equipment in Lucas' office, with s leading to a recording machine in a adjacent to the office of Marshall Iams, ember of the Commission. It was five ths before Lucas discovered the wires. ose records told everything we hoped would," acknowledges young Dr. Mar- Avery, Jr., a dentist in Gary, and a er chairman of the Crime Commission. ne little pamphlet painted a sorry pic- of case fixing, collections from policy gambling racketeers during political paigns, and collusion with the operators rothels, carried on right in the deputy ecutor's office. Even blasé Gary citizens shocked, and thousands in this strongly ocratic community split their tickets for first time to vote a Republican, David nton, into the prosecutor's office. Stan- s record was good, and he promised to do best to promote better law enforcement. evidence of this he soon had Captain ick back on active duty as special in- igator. The Crime Commission called for investigation, and the Disciplinary Com- tee of the State Supreme Court filed dis- ment proceedings, which are still pending, inst Lucas.

he Women's Citizens Committee dipped i» its treasury that first year of their or- ization to purchase a drunkometer, a de- for determining the amount of alcohol in an individual's system. "We knew that t of Gary's bad traffic record stemmed n drunken driving," Marian Iams said, " we made the drunkometer a Christmas sent to Mayor Swartz and Captain lick."

EGINNING as political novices, the leaders the WCC had to learn through mistakes l hard work what they lacked in experi- e. "We were so sincere in our purpose, so e our ends were right, we barged in any- ce. Once we interrupted the governor at a vate luncheon to ask how he was pro- ding in the investigation of Gary," Mrs. s smiles in recollection. Their work paid idends, however, when, for example, the te Legislature recently passed overwhelm- ly two bills their organization had spon- ed. The first provided for four special in- stigators in Lake County to assist the osecuting attorney search out law viola- s; the second was designed to reduce by lf the number of taverns in Lake County. Ours was the only county in the state which uld legally have one tavern to every 500 people," the Reverend Mr. Spong declares. "And Gary had many more than that."

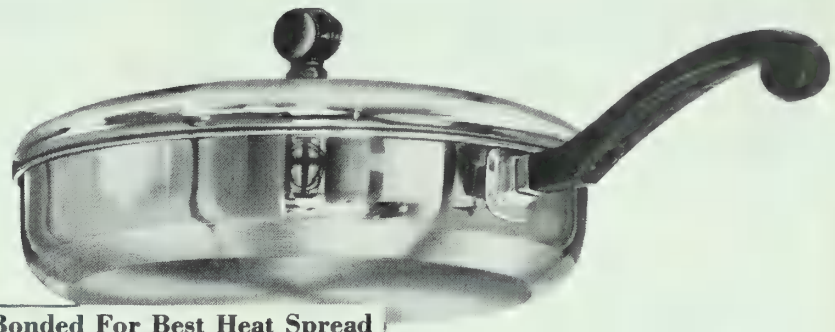
Each member of the Women's Citizens Committee advisory board approaches her work with serious spiritual dedication. "We begin each meeting with prayer," they say. The clergy of Gary, Catholic and Protestant, were quick to encourage their work.

Although the birth of the Women's Citizens Committee was almost spontaneous, its development has been carefully nurtured. The eighteen-member advisory board, which serves for two years, is the executive body of the organization. Thus far there has never been a permanent chairman, and members of the board take turns holding this post for two-week periods. Representatives of more than 300 different women's groups in Gary act as a steering committee for the group, meeting on call to vote on major decisions. Individual members now number 18,000 of the ultimate goal of 25,000 women.

THE women who have worked faithfully with the WCC since its inception represent a good cross section of the civic-minded in the city. There are white-haired, gentle Mrs. Frank H. Collins, long a worker in Catholic organizations, who remembers that during that first year, "I never had time to iron my husband's shirts—the phone was always ringing"; diminutive Marian Iams, a graduate of the University of Chicago, who continued to work in spite of the fact that Blaz A. Lucas' friends tried to disbar her husband after the recording machine was traced to his office; Beryl Ann Brownell, whose reporting of the WCC's activities won for her in 1950 the title of "Woman Who Has Contributed Most to Journalism in Indiana"; eloquent Mrs. Benjamin Saks, who had worked with the Jewish women's organization, Hadassah, and has intimidated many an oily politician with her ability to "think on her feet"; fiery little Peg Griffith, who once laughed into the phone when a lisping thug warned her to "Lay off, thithter, it won't work"; Mrs. Catherine Johns, veteran principal of the Jefferson School, who has taught in Gary since 1907; Mary Jessee, trust officer at Gary National Bank; and Mrs. William P. Swan, a Negro, whose husband is principal of a Gary school.

After a particularly bitter denunciation of Gary's officeholders, Mrs. Hylda Burton and her small daughter were threatened with being "bumped off" in a mysterious call. Undaunted, Mrs. Burton filed as a candidate for mayor of Gary on the Democratic ticket. Although she didn't win in the May 8 primary, many members of both parties believe she garnered enough votes and interest to swing the election the way the WCC wants it to go. On November 6, the WCC will have at the polling places 200 women volunteers—trained as watchers.

In a recent bulletin written by their protem chairman, WCC members were warned, "The people who don't want good government would be happy to have us all go back to our knitting. Will you make them happy? Or will you continue to work for a Gary you can be proud to call your home?"



The answer, it would appear, will bring no cheer to enemies of Gary's cleanup campaign.

THE END

NOTHING IS NEW

Back in the eighteenth century, tea and coffee had been but recently introduced to the Scandinavian countries. Argument ran high about the beverages—would they or would they not poison those who drank them over a period of time? Sweden's King Gustavus III settled the issue by using modern scientific methods of testing. A pair of identical twins, sentenced to death on a murder charge, gave the king an idea. He offered to change the sentence to life imprisonment if they would agree to imbibe huge daily doses of the controversial drinks. The twins readily agreed. From there on in, one drank tea every day, the other coffee. The press of the time carried reports of the health of the men: daily at first, then weekly, finally just once a month. And as the years dragged by, news of the twins got into print only once a year—on the anniversary of the start of the experiment. The tea drinker finally died at the age of 83, but the coffee-testing brother lived on and on. The Swedish people today have the largest per capita consumption of coffee of any nation in the world.

Bonded For Best Heat Spread

Only FARBERWARE bonds ⅛" thick aluminum to the entire bottom of each stainless steel utensil. Unequalled for heat spread. You get better cooking . . . you forget about hot spots. Scorching and sticking are minimized.

Cleaning Is Less Work— and the beauty lasts for years!

And you'll appreciate— Specially Shaped Knobs to prevent burned fingers . . . Cool, Non-Slip Handles that won't burn even when pans are put in oven . . . the Smooth Edges which prevent cutting hands.

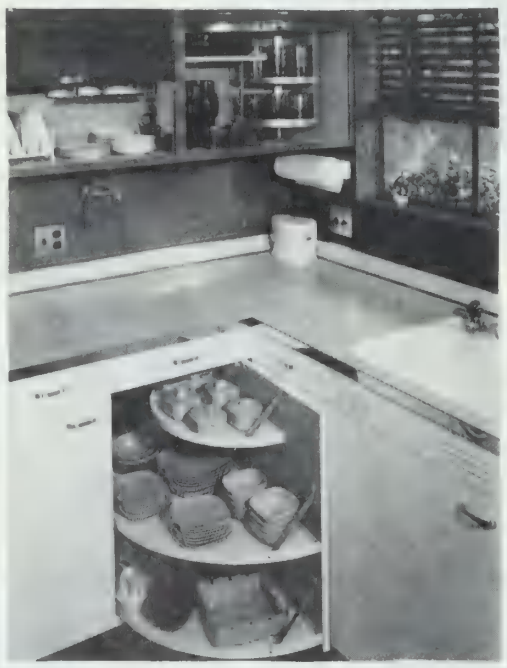
Only FARBERWARE, the finest cooking ware at any price, gives ALL these features!

COOKS BEST! LOOKS BEST! CLEANS BEST!



FARBERWARE

Trade Mark

heavy aluminum-clad Stainless Steel cooking ware

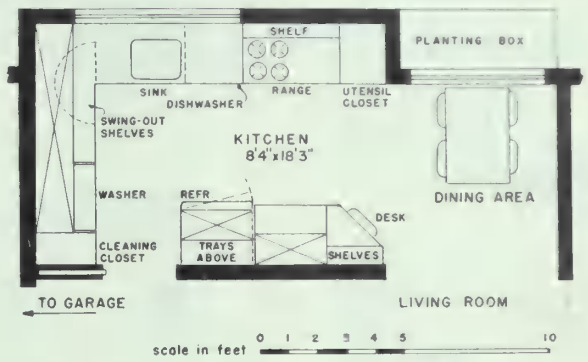
FREE! Write for Fashion Academy Award Folder. Dept. LH-9, S.W. FARBER, INC., NEW YORK 54

STUART-STEPHENSON

Half-round shelves below the counter swing into easy reach as door opens. To save reaching into far corner, upper cabinet shelves revolve, are adjustable.



Arm's-reach kitchen

IT all began with a reader letter about a kitchen problem. The p for an appealing new house were almost completed—a small spacious modern one-story home finished in rust wooden shingles with a yellow door. It had a window wall in the living room, a planned bedroom-and-bath area, an attached garage. But the kitc plan wasn't what the lady of the house wanted. However, in the stage, changes are easily made.

The arrangement seemed so satisfactory that, with a few chan it became a JOURNAL kitchen, and a breath-taking one indeed. Wi the dimensions—12′2″ by 8′4″—everything is in arm's reach, there is no feeling of being crowded. The kitchen has a leisu

The modern answer to casual meals. Dining nook links the kitchen and living room. Here on glass-topped iron table family meals are served or buffets spread for larger groups.

Practical small kitchen in modern one-floor house is arranged so work area is out of traffic line. Laundry center is conveniently located near rear entrance, and away from cooking area.

astic doors in wall cabinets roll up out of e way. The dishwasher between the k and the gas range opens like a drawer
r loading, allows for work space above.

Moved to the front, cabinet above refrigerator is useful as is tray rack in back of it reached from the side. Table-height desk-shelf doubles as extra serving counter.

By GLADYS TABER

harm, and it really goes to prove that you can have superefficiency d be as romantic as moonlight on magnolias at the same time.

Each of the major appliances has a place to work at and storage ace within arm's reach. The sink and under-counter dishwasher are nder a spacious sunny window, with the range at the right. A tall upboard by the range houses cooking utensils and tools, and, when ou swing open the door, everything you need to cook with is right here, and a place for everything. I think I envied most the space that s the pressure cooker and the roaster. For I believe if you added up he miles women fare with their roasters and pressure cookers, up rom the cellar, down from the (Continued on Page 114)

THE RANGE WITH ALL THE AUTOMATIC FEATURES...
ON ONE CONTROL PANEL

The exclusive Tappan Tel-U-Set starts, times and stops your cooking . . . gives you instant information about the time and temperature for cooking 100 foods . . . even notifies you by bell and signal light when cooking is done! And Tappan has more . . .

Tappan has lasting beauty—is easy to clean and care for . . . Visualite door of oversize, chrome-interior oven always lets you see what's cooking . . . a cove top gives you loads more counter space. And, in addition, an "Air-Freshen'r" that can be used to dispel household odors. There is a Tappan for every home and every budget. Models for city gas, Philgas, or other LP Gas. For descriptive folder write The Tappan Stove Company, Department L-101, Mansfield, Ohio. In Canada, John Inglis Company, Limited, Toronto.

Your guide to the best in modern automatic cookery

Range specifications subject to prevailing government restrictions.

TAPPAN Gas Range

Arm's-reach kitchen

(Continued from Page 113)

attic, they would go round the world five times any day.

The pot covers, too, which make fearful havoc in many kitchens, are right by their own pots, ready to pop on. The broiler rack has its home, and the dripping pan! I could really stand all day and just admire this storage cupboard and dream up dinners.

At the left of the sink, cabinets and counters flow smoothly around to the automatic clothes washer with cupboards above for laundry supplies, and next to that is a tall closet for cleaning supplies. The refrigerator, with its mixing counter and cabinets, is placed on the wall across from the sink, and here, stepped down 6" from counter height, is a small home-office desk—a miracle with its housing of cookbooks, radio, telephone, bulletin board and files.

There are two perfectly lovely space savers at the left of the sink. A swing-out unit below is large enough to hold a whole set of dishes, and a turnabout in the cupboard above to hold an entire set of glassware. This kind of storage unit is like magic to me. No hauling from dark corners, no reaching, no awkward stacking, and, at the same time, you have more storage room you can really use.

THE upper cabinets have roll-up plastic doors which are especially fine in a small kitchen. Open cupboard doors not only bang your unwary head at times but make the room seem tighter all over. The roll-ups vanish away at a touch!

The placing of the space for a dining table is one of the happiest answers I've seen to the no-dining-room question. There is space for a table large enough to seat six comfortably, and yet it doesn't seem to be a part of either the kitchen or the living room. A low big window looks out on the garden, now glowing with fall colors. The garden, of course, is actually a planting box next to the front entrance of the house—but it's a garden within arm's reach too.

The dining furniture is charming, modern but not stiff-looking. Substantial, but light enough to move easily. The chairs are easy to sit in and yet good to pull up to the [table] for dining. The seats and backs are of [cane], closely wound. I do love comfortable chairs.

For lighting, this kitchen has a long [strip] of fluorescent light recessed in the ceiling above the sink, and similar lights are set in the soffit overhanging the work counters.

Even the door is used for storage. Heavy, bulky utensils like the pressure canner and roaster are at the bottom, lighter utensils are kept in slots at the top. It's a one-handed job to reach any item here.

This gives glare-free illumination. The ta[ble] is lighted by a hanging fixture which refle[cts] light against the top and diffuses it. A [de]cry from fixtures of yesterday.

The color used in the kitchen seems to bring the outdoors inside, making it, too, [in] arm's reach. Wallpaper on the dining [wall] has a flower-garden pattern with pink ge[ra]nium, leaf-green and the yellow of the [co]yarrow. The roll-up doors of the cabi[nets] are a true summer gre[en] and the outside of [the] wall cabinets and [the] walls are painted [to] match. Clear geran[ium] color lines the cupboa[rds]. Counter tops are la[mi]nated plastic in [a] country yellow. The c[ei]ling echoes the yellow a[nd] the floor is a marblei[zed] green plastic tile.

The window treatm[ent] adds a final note [of] charm. Green fabric-c[ov]ered valances have [a] wooden frame which [has] been painted to l[ook] like the iron of the c[ook]ing set and wound [at] intervals with cord [to] match the chairs. U[n]lined leaf-green drapes fall softly to the s[ill] framing the box garde[n] outside. Green Venet[ian] blinds keep the room c[ool] and airy and control [the] sunlight.

As I stood in the do[or]way of this kitchen, I [re]minded myself that [we] are not supposed to ha[ve] things perfect in t[he] world, but I rea[lly] couldn't think of a[ny] small thing wrong in t[his] room. Perfection, I t[hink] myself, is certainly wit[hin] arm's reach right here [at] any rate! THE E[ND]

Mixing center is close to refrigerated supplies. Enamel dip-in bins for sugar and flour, now available for installation in cabinets, are covered as drawer closes. Rack in drawer keeps knives sharp and orderly. Wall cabinet includes step arrangement for holding spices and a narrow shelf for measuring cups in graduated sizes.

new patterns
new colors
new decorating ideas

DOGWOOD
One of Nature's loveliest woodland blossoms — to bring the spirit of Springtime to your table all year long. Ask for pattern 5234.

Columbus Blenback® Oil Cloth

See them now — the gayest, smartest designs ever offered in Columbus Blenback Oil Cloth. So colorful you'll be proud to use new decorative Blenback every day — and for special occasions, too. Blenback is durable. Its exclusive water-repellent fabric backing gives extra strength, outlasts synthetic substitutes. Blenback is thrifty, never needs laundering, never stains. Wipes clean with a damp cloth, always ready for service.

Pick your favorites! The patterns illustrated and dozens more come in your favorite color combinations for kitchen, breakfast room, dining room — every room! Select yours soon — keep your home color-bright all through the year. Choose Blenback, spend little to add beauty and save work. Ask for Columbus Blenback Oil Cloth by name and pattern number. On display now at variety, 10 cent, department and housewares stores everywhere.

HIGHLANDER
Bright colors with an authentic Scottish accent. Have extra yards on hand for party tables. Ask for Blenback pattern 5257.

FRUIT HARVEST
A colorful, tempting fruit and gingham theme. Lends good cheer to kitchens. Buy pattern 5172.

STRAWBERRY
Beautiful big strawberries and blossoms to make your tables brighter. Ask for pattern 2117 (below).

Blenback ready-to-use Ensembles. For a complete room beauty treatment choose an ensemble pattern and use it throughout! Ensembles include these matching items: yard goods, table covers, chair backs. chair cushions, shelf oil cloth, edging and scarfs.

HOMESPUN. Warm and colorful. Everyone likes the gingham effect. Buy pattern 2138 with ensemble items to match.

free! "Do-it-yourself Decorating Ideas." Now in its 5th printing by popular request! 12 idea-packed pages show clever ways to make your home smarter, more colorful, more livable. Easy-to-follow instructions for making Hollywood headboard, vanity table skirt, Mother & Daughter aprons, handy catch-all bags, closet decorations, many others. It's yours for a postcard. Send name and address today to address below.

COLUMBUS COATED FABRICS CORPORATION, Dept. LJ-101, Columbus 16, Ohio

RANCHO. If your cowboys spill spinach on Rancho, a damp cloth wipes it clean. Buy pattern 2214.

SOLID COLORS. Brilliant single colors, so gay for holiday decorations. For special effects, spread your favorite solid color under a lace table cloth!

Blenback To identify Blenback be sure to look on the back for the solid-color water-repellent coating in pink, or blue, or yellow, or green. The back color always harmonizes with the principal color in the pattern.

FELSO

WASHES EVERYTHING BETTER!

...and so Gentle on hands!

FOR BETTER WASHINGS, USE THE BETTER PRODUCT FELSO

There's only one "proof of the pudding" when you buy washing products. That's to try them . . . at home . . . with your own wash. Compare . . . feel your FELSO-clean clothes.

Try FELSO. You'll see that gentle just-right suds give you the freshest, most fragrant, sweetest-smelling wash. Did you ever see whiter sheets and shirts . . . brighter, more colorful prints? Did you ever feel softer, fluffier laundry . . . or any so easy to iron? And how soft and smooth your hands are after you use FELSO.

A SMALL MIRACLE

(Continued from Page 68)

d hair smooth and shining, her white se fresh and immaculate, everything ut her uncluttered, serene. Serenity! ely it had come to seem to him perhaps most valuable quality in life, the ttainable opposite of the haphazard noil which had become his world.

Don't you ever get fed up with this job? een or twenty kids a day. Problem kids hat."

he shook her head, smiling. "I'd prob- y get fed up with yours fast enough—the nmas. But you see I really enjoy children; akes all the difference."

He supposed it did. She stood with her k to him reaching for puzzles on a high lf, her slim black skirt pulled above her es by her upraised arms. She had good s, the seams in her sheer nylons admirably ight.

He shook his head at himself, at the phi- derer in every male, even the most loyal sband and father. And since when had started thinking of his relationship to t and the children in terms of anything so npulsive as loyalty?

He asked himself the question, quite hon- ly, more than once during brief interludes that hectic, futile day. Futile because, as was forced to remind himself once again, men were not realists. Not that he be- ved such generalizations sound. But there s Pat, who bewailed Susie's jealousy of l, then fanned it, as she d done this morning by r own impetuous be- vior. And these women o flocked here to the ic, they came osten- ly seeking advice but reality demanding a racle—a painless solu- n to their problems in- lving neither time nor uble. Like Mrs. Kelly w, the last of the miracle kers for today, thank aven, bulging on her air across the desk from n, shushing the baby she held in her arms.

"But, professor, where am I going to find e time? What with the washing and the ning and the scrubbing and always three als a day to get, and the dishes and every ne you turn around one of the kids with t pants or needing his nose wiped ——"

He sighed. Ought he to remind this woman the tired face and shabby coat that he s, after all, only a mortal trained in the alysis of certain limited problems—not d, not a worker of miracles? Little Jimmy elly, aged three, now waiting with Ellen ndriesen in the playroom, had been found anding over his baby sister's crib with a mmer. Sibling rivalry, a matter of degree— d parental handling. Susie hadn't taken ter Bill with a hammer yet.

"I'll try and do like you say, professor"— rs. Kelly bulging at the door now, the by crying in her arms—"I don't know w, but I'll try." She went on out into the ayroom.

He leaned back in his chair, eyes closed, laxing. After a day like today a man needed quiet space for the restoration of his soul, d he would not find it at home. There ad been a time—when he and Pat were rst married—— Incredible then how the hole day had waited for the evening. Pick- g Pat up at her office on his way home om the university (he had been on a fel- wship working for his doctorate), then he two of them stopping at the delicatessen, oking with Mamma Bertini, who ran it, pening cans and scrambling a meal to- ether in that closet of a kitchenette. Later, reaming over coffee of the time when e would have his degree, Pat could quit ork, and they could live a "normal life." Well, this was it, no doubt, the dream come rue, the normal life! Certainly those eve- ings seemed abnormal enough now in their nbelievable serenity, a world forever lost.

Ellen Andriesen came in with a sheaf of case notes, observations on the playroom attitudes and reactions of today's crop of children. "I'm going to add that little Jimmy Kelly to my adoption list." She went over to the files. "Did you get a look at him? He's a perfect cherub."

"Do you want the rest of your adoptees worked on with a hammer?"

"Nonsense. He needs a little love and attention."

"How many are there on the list as of this moment?" It was a standing joke between them.

"Oh, about forty; I'm going to have to start eliminating."

"You might do better, genetically speaking, to have five or six of your own."

"I'd love it; that is, if I could have at least six. I never have been able to see the point to spending all those years raising just a child or two. The only difficulty"—her eyes met his levelly—"I'm afraid I'll have to find a father first. And all the best fathers get snatched up."

Unaccountably he felt himself reddening, like an adolescent, and ducked for academic cover. "How about borrowing those Kelly notes for tonight if I guarantee to have them back by nine in the morning?"

She brought them over to him, stood beside him while he slipped them into his briefcase. "You're not working on your book tonight? After a day like today!"

There was something bolstering in her incredulity, her understanding of the effort of will involved in those evenings of work. He thought of Pat's comments on his latest chapter: "There's nothing lovelier than a theory, is there, unless it's an ivory tower?" Ellen Andriesen spoke as one who shared this most univory-towerish nightmare with him.

"Sadism spurs me on," he told her; "the delicious thought that once the thing's in print I can compel my students to buy it even if no one else will."

"I doubt if you'll have to flog them with knotted thongs." She smiled her quiet smile.

There had been a time when he and Pat had enjoyed their own small quiet jokes, when Pat had been less caustic about his work.

"If there's nothing else you need, I'll go clear up the playroom." Ellen Andriesen locked the files. "Mrs. Kirkwood phoned to ask you to bring home a pound of hamburger. I thought it wise to wait till the last minute to remind you."

Tolerant acceptance of his academic absent-mindedness mixed with something too close to pity. "Very wise." He managed an answering smile, rejecting the pity. But inwardly he was furious.

Pat had had the car today; surely she could have managed her own marketing. After all, it had been only a few years since Pat had had, as copy writer in a New York advertising agency, to organize her work. And now this fatal disorganization which had overtaken the household ever since Bill was born ——

He got home with the hamburger under his arm, got inside the front door by playing hopscotch through a set of Susie's strewn dishes filled with mud pies—not, however, without an image of Ellen Andriesen serenely picking up toys, restoring order out of chaos. Here was only chaos.

The kitchen window was open, but the smoke was visible and the air had an aroma of charred flesh. Pat, in blue jeans and rumpled plaid shirt, stood at the sink scouring a pot. Bill, in his play pen, was furiously hurling blocks.

(Continued on Page 119)

"When I die," said dear, whimsical old Doctor Pyecroft, "I shall have a bell hung on my headstone, with an inscription asking the compassionate passer-by to ring it long and loud. And I shan't get up."

—R. L. HINE.

—From Confessions of an Uncommon Attorney (Used by permission of The MacMillan Company).

Rival STAINLESS STEEL STEAM-O-MATIC®
STEAM and DRY IRON

2 WONDERFUL IRONS IN ONE

You'll never know how wonderful an iron can be until you discover this new Streamlined Beauty with the Steam-O-Magic* circle—which distributes steam over 3 times greater area for effortless ironing. Today see why STEAM-O-MATIC Does more than Other Irons Claim!

with 10 BRAND NEW FEATURES

Check these 10 Features against any Steam or Dry Iron

VISUAL TILT-TOP FILLING

USE ORDINARY TAP WATER

STAINLESS STEEL STEAM CHAMBER

NEW IRONING SPEED

FULLY GUARANTEED

STILL ONLY $19.95 FED. EXCISE TAX INCL.

SEE the New STEAM-O-MATIC Today—Try its Sensational Performance!

EXCLUSIVE STEAM-O-MAGIC* CIRCLE

LIGHTEST STEAM IRON when filled

NEW IRONING COMFORT FOR STEAM OR DRY IRONING

NEW "BUTTONEER*" TOE

NEW "NO-BUNCHING" BEVEL BACK!

NEW FABRIC SELECTOR DIAL

TESTED AND GUARANTEED BY PARENTS' MAGAZINE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

CAN-O-MAT®

THE MOST BEAUTIFUL CAN OPENER EVER MADE

New Removable cutter. Cleans easily. No levers . . . no oiling. Gay Colors and Chrome.. $4.98
With Magnet . . . $5.98
Other Can-O-Mats from $2.98

See Rival products demonstrated at your favorite Appliance, Hardware, Department Store.

GRIND-O-MAT SHRED-O-MAT ICE-O-MAT JUICE-O-MAT *T M

RIVAL MANUFACTURING CO., KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI
Rival Manufacturing Co. of Canada, Ltd., Montreal

Food Saver ! Money Saver !! Wife Saver !!!

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER

World's Leading

FREEZERS

PROTECT YOURSELF AGAINST SHORTAGES

A Size for Every Family, Every Home!

You can do something about possible food shortages, high food prices . . . with an International Harvester Freezer!

Your IH Freezer stores as much as 553 pounds! Months of mouth-watering meals—luscious fresh fruits, vegetables; juicy, tender meats, poultry—the whole family's food favorites always at hand!

Your IH Freezer freezes fast . . . on all five interior surfaces! Lets you stock up when food prices are down! Cuts kitchen time, shopping time in half!

See All Three Sizes—7.0 cu. ft., 11.1 cu. ft., and 15.8 cu. ft. —at your IH refrigeration dealer's . . . now! For name of the one closest to you, see your Classified Telephone Directory.

COPYRIGHT, 1951, INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER COMPANY

Giant Model 158
Holds 553 Pound

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER COMPAN
180 NORTH MICHIGAN AVENUE • CHICAGO 1, ILLINO

International Harvester Also Builds Refrigerators . . . McCormick Farm Equipment and Farmall Tractors . . . Motor Trucks . . . Industrial Pow

(Continued from Page 117)

Sacrificial offering?" he sniffed.

Burnt stew." Pat turned, pushing damp s off her forehead with the back of her d. He gave her a kiss, said "Hi" to . From upstairs came a thin high wailing, nd of mourners at some primitive funeral. Susie?"

at nodded. "I put her to bed without supper."

Ie noted the too-thin line of her mouth, too-vigorous scouring of the pot, and ed no more questions. But now Bill, ry of the everlasting play pen, joined in funeral dirge floating down from upstairs.

You know"—it might not be the mo-nt, but he did have certain obligations ard his son—"he'd be a lot happier se. Confined like that he gets bored, and that he's learned crawl, his natural e toward loco-tion ——"

Yes, I know," Pat in, "he's frus-ted. Well, so am by the walls of s jail." Her hands k in the kitchen, house. "But turn n loose, do what-r you want with n. Only I'm afraid s got wet pants."

'Mainly he's a uch graham-ckery."

Pat opened a wer, took out a shcloth, wet it der the faucet, nded it over with-a word.

He washed his son's e and hands, then isted him high ove his head with lere we go in the , fellow!" and ickly set him back wn again. "I'm aid it's not just pants."

Pat went on calmly aping hamburgers. 'here are diapers, o soap, oil and cot-n in the bathroom."

'And there are nes"—he tried for ocose note—"when fellow needs his ther. Right, son?"

Pat opened her outh, shut it again, mmed the ham-rgers under the oiler. "Watch them. they burn, we'll eat bread and milk." She nt upstairs with Bill.

The hamburgers did not burn, but they re cold by the time Pat came back down ain, without Bill.

"I plopped your son into bed early," e announced. "He doesn't seem to mind d Susie's quiet at last. Who knows, per-ps by some miracle we can eat a meal in ace."

HERE it was again, the persistent feminine y for a miracle. He had visions of a female orus, world-wide, hands joined as in ring-ound-a-rosy, all chanting, "A miracle. Pro-ssor, send us a miracle."

They sat down to cold hamburgers, lettuce lad, canned Lima beans. "It smelled like a autiful stew"—Pat made a face at the mburger—"I even poured the last of that ttle of claret in. And then Mrs. Walsh me by to ask me to 'assist about the oms' at the Faculty Wives tea, and life t out of hand."

Involuntarily he found himself scrutiniz-g the soiled jeans, the rumpled shirt. Mrs. alsh was the wife of the head of the epartment.

"Oh, don't stare in horror"—Pat an-wered his unexpressed thought with that marital telepathy which had its disadvantages—"I still had on my doctor-going clothes. We were all quite presentable. Only, of course, Susie had to oblige with one of her better performances."

"What now?"

"TEASING Bill again. The old snatch-and-grab routine, this time with the cat. She'd bring the kitten up to the play pen—which would have to be parked in the middle of the living room, naturally—Bill would reach out to pet the kitten. No cat. Screams from Bill. Then just as things are settling down, repeat the whole performance over again, till finally I lost my temper and dumped her into bed."

He gave up trying to eat the cold hamburger; the cat could have it.

"Poor darling." Pat came round the table, rumpled his hair. "I'm sorry the food's so awful. I'll get the coffee. And we've got chocolate-chip cookies; Susie and I made them this morning before we took off for the doctor's." She poured the coffee, passed him the cooky plate.

He took one, laid it on the edge of his saucer. "We had a boy in this afternoon, a three-year-old, who was found standing over his baby sister's bassinet with a hammer. Punishment hadn't helped."

Pat set down her coffee cup, spilling coffee on the tablecloth, put her head down on her arms, her shoulders shaking. He got a towel from the kitchen, mopped up the coffee, let her sob—the needed release of tears. Only when she was finally quiet did he go round the table, put a hand on her shoulder.

"Sorry. I shouldn't have brought it up tonight, you're tired. Why don't you go to bed?"

"Yes, why don't I!" She raised her head and eyed him belligerently, drying her eyes. "I've only got the dishes to do, formula to make, diapers to get up from the basement and fold ——"

"Couldn't it all wait till morning?"

"Stick around some morning and see." She got up and began clearing the table.

Wearily he sat down at his desk, began revising the chapter he had finished last night, the one which had produced Pat's outburst about there being nothing lovelier than a theory. He could hear her out in the kitchen rattling dishes, then upstairs in response to Susie's inevitable, "Toidy, mommy, toidy."

Much later she came in and picked up the manuscript he had worked over, sat down on the studio couch with the sheets in her lap. Ordinarily he welcomed her criticism: she had a knack with words, the copy writer's touch. But tonight he wanted no more about the ivory tower. He ignored her, and was amazed when she interrupted him with:

"Darling this is wonderful, so down to earth."

He turned from the typewriter. She was staring at the pages in her lap.

"This, for instance: 'In the very nature of the parent-child relationship a degree of hostility is normal. When, however, a chronic

Definition

By Eleanor Alletta Chaffee

Kitchens should be rooms without a lock;
Having a low shelf for a cooky
crock,
A table over whose edge anxious eyes
May mark the progress of unfinished pies.

Kitchens should not be tidied up too soon;
A mixing bowl, a golden, battery
spoon
Possess a special polish when licked clean,
And there should be broad sills
where elbows lean

While ovens breathe hot fragrance, and hopes rise
Out of all ratio to a small boy's size.
Science for kitchens has changed
many things,
But not the one who at her baking sings;

Never the hungry boys who, restless, wait
With fresh-washed hands, but
scorning proffered plate,
Running on noisy feet through any door—
Disorder like this is what a kitchen's
for!

For draining and drying fresh-washed fruits, use extra-absorbent ScotTowels!

NEW ScotTowels
– so strong when wet

YOU CAN USE THEM LIKE A CLOTH!

SCOUR BREADBOX—inside and out—with ScotTowels. So pliable, they get into corners easily. And so strong when wet, they do dozens of cleansing, polishing jobs.

FLOUR MEATS AND FISH on fresh, clean ScotTowels. Then throw used towels away—and you're rid of a messy clean-up in one motion. Saves work, saves time!

WIPE MILK BOTTLES with handy, fabric-soft ScotTowels before storing. Spotless ScotTowels whisk off dirt in a jiffy—help keep refrigerator clean, help protect your health. Scott Paper Co., Chester, Pa.

SOFT-TUFF PROCESS keeps them soft, absorbent

150 SCOTTOWELS TO A ROLL

"SCOTTOWELS", "SOFT-TUFF" REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

ONLY the NEW

Sunbeam

MODEL IO AUTOMATIC

MIXMASTER

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

gives you all these advantages

IGHTER...
IIGHER...
INER-TEXTURED CAKES!

lore EVEN mixing and reater AERATION with hese NEW, LARGER OWL-FIT BEATERS

ee how all the batter is arried into and through hem—how their surfaces
onform to the actual con-ours of the bowl. No pilng up of dry ingredients
n the outer edges. No nmixed whirlpools. No
y-passed pockets. All the atter gets a thorough,
ven mixing in LESS
IME—automatically.

The larger outside
OWL-FIT beater is urved to fit the contour
f the bowl all the way
o the bottom. The larger nside BOWL-FIT beater
s shaped to cover the
at bottom surface all
he way to the center.
ou get these exclusive owl-fit Beaters only in he new Automatic Sun-
eam Mixmaster.

NEW, LARGER HEAT-RESISTANT BOWLS
The large bowl now holds 4 quarts for generous quantities of batter, potatoes for whipping, etc. The smaller bowl is now sufficiently large to whip 6 eggs for a double-meringue, etc.

unbeam Mixmaster
oes the perfect mix-ng job because the owls revolve auto-natically. The new BOWL-FIT eaters are in correct relation to he bowl. ALL the mixture goes nto and through them for EVEN nixing every time. Your hands re always FREE to add ingredi-nts in correct proportion.

Actual photograph of angel food cakes made in baking tests with ordinary food mixer and with the new Sunbeam. You can SEE and TASTE the difference. Sunbeam Mixmaster's higher, lighter, finer textured cakes are a result of the better mixing and greater aeration the new larger Bowl-fit beaters give you.

ONLY THE NEW SUNBEAM MIXMASTER has all the marvelous new eatures that give you higher, lighter cakes—creamier, fluffier mashed potatoes—elvet-smooth icings and sauces—better, easier food-preparing around the clock. Mixmaster's new larger Bowl-fit beaters ▪ Automatic Bowl-Speed Control • New owerful EVEN-speed motor • Automatic Beater Ejector ▪ Automatic Juicer and the famous Mix-Finder Dial are the advantages you want and deserve in the food mixer you choose. So be ure the mixer you get (or the one you receive as a gift) is the NEW Sunbeam—the original and he ONLY Mixmaster. There's only ONE by that name. Nearly seven million enthusiastic users re its best advertisements. It is also the mixer for which there are such marvelous attachments as he combination Food Chopper-Meat Grinder, Hi-Speed Drink Mixer, Butter Churn and others.

AUTOMATIC MIX-FINDER DIAL
Perfect mixing speeds right at your fingertips. EASY-TO-SEE, EASY-TO-SET.

AUTOMATIC JUICE EXTRACTOR
Oscillating strainer automatically jogs juice out of pulp. Faster. Easier-to-use.

AUTOMATIC BEATER-EJECTOR
Tilt the handle—out drop Bowl-fit beaters individually, for easier cleaning. No pulling.

SUNBEAM CORPORATION, Dept. 50, Chicago 50, Ill. • Canada: 321 Weston Rd., Toronto 9

Famous for Sunbeam TOASTER, IRONMASTER, COFFEEMASTER, SHAVEMASTER, etc.

tension develops between mother and child ——' Chronic tension; what a wonderful phrase, like chronic indigestion or chronic appendicitis, only this is more painful. 'When, however,'" she began reading aloud again, "'a chronic tension develops between mother and child, temporary separation is to be recommended. Even a brief separation will often serve to give the mother a fresh perspective.'"

She looked up at him from under lashes that were the original of Susie's. (There was the crux of the problem: mother and daughter were too much alike. Bill was more stable, less affected by Pat's impulsive discipline.)

"When is spring vacation?"

"It starts this week end officially, but I won't have my grades in before next Wednesday at the earliest."

"Maybe I oughtn't to leave before Thursday, then? Or to be safe, even Friday?" She counted on her fingers. "Friday, Saturday, Sunday—three whole days. I have an idea I could gain a lot of fresh perspective in three whole days."

"Where were you thinking of going?" Even to himself he sounded stiff; she knew perfectly well he had planned to spend spring vacation working on his book.

"New York." Her tone implied he might have been expected to know. "Mary's been after me to come for ages." Mary had been Pat's roommate back in the old premarital, advertising-agency days. "I can sleep on her studio couch and do a little sponging elsewhere. It won't cost much besides bus fare. But I've kept writing her, 'Impossible!'—thinking of the children, of course. Which is what comes of losing perspective, I guess." Her mouth turned up at the corners in Susie's sudden smile. "That's the wonderful part of being married to a psychologist."

She left Thursday evening on the bus and was gone Friday, Saturday and Sunday—"three whole days."

Friday was a fine day, a day to make a man wonder how any woman could complain of the monotony of child care and domestic routine. For pure joy, simple contentment, he had seldom spent such a day. Of course he changed the routine. Susie put in the morning happily washing the breakfast dishes, standing on a chair at the sink with a bath towel tied round her middle, managing, naturally, to get herself and the kitchen floor quite wet, but only in the process of building the most magnificent sapsuds castles. Bill, released from the confines play pen, explored his forbidden world with a curiosity that was a delight to watch, crawling from room to room in a frenzy of motion, removing pots and pans from the cupboards, magazines from the magazine rack, dish towels from the drawer, upsetting an ash tray here and there, but doing no real damage, nothing that could be measured against the liberation of body and spirit, the freedom to learn and grow.

After lunch the children had naps and he—with the lunch dishes stacked in the sink—lay down on the studio couch and read an article he had been trying to get to for weeks. Time and again he had tried to convince Pat she ought to relax while Susie and Bill were napping, only to have her snap, "When do you think I get my work done?" The week end would be a success, he decided, if only it gave her enough perspective to rechart her day.

After their naps they went for a walk, Bill in his stroller, Susie pushing her doll in the squeaky doll buggy. And, more relaxed than he had been in weeks, he discovered the world through Susie's eyes: the small round rock so wonderfully smooth in the palm of the hand, the fat woolly Sealyham on the corner shaking with joy at their approach, and down the street in a sunny spot by the garden wall the marvel of yellow daffodils just coming into bloom. For Susie had that joy in little things, the childlike joy most people lose. Had Pat now lost it, too, so that

WAYS and MEANS

New ideas for work, new inventions to try—add it up and it's fun to keep house

By MARGARET DAVIDSON

• With party or school-play time just around the corner, it's a ve precaution to flameproof cotton costumes and play clothes for youngsters. Particularly those worn to campfire parties. The Workshop recipe: Mix 7 ounces borax and 3 ounces boric acid with 2 quarts water. Dip cottons in that. While not completely fireproof, treated clothes will not flame.

• An ounce-of-prevention idea. To keep dark wood chair backs from smudging light walls, use small, inconspicuous black bumpers on backs of chairs. They're like rubber-topped thumbtacks. Lest rubber leave a mark, coat with clear liquid plastic or nail polish. That's the way the walls in Mary Bass' JOURNAL office are protected.

• Turning tables, a druggist wrote us for a prescription. Seems he's the family chief putter-upper of food for freezing and wanted a way to keep peaches from turning sun-tanned color. Our answer: ½ teaspoon ascorbic acid with each quart of sirup. We've learned, too, that peaches look and taste better if really ripe so skins slip off without scalding. If scald you must, keep the time short—three seconds.

e no longer drew happiness from such a y as this?

That evening, after a supper of the cold
m and gelatin dessert Pat had left in the rigerator—the children in bed, the dinner ishes stacked in the sink along with those m lunch—he settled down to an evening work on his book. Pat complained of the lling of the mind that came from house-rk, but his mind had never seemed fresher.
rtainly concentration was easier than after lay at the clinic, or even four or five hours lecturing to classes. The house was quiet, e fire burned cheerfully in the fireplace, mind turned easily. He worked till two
M. and went to bed well satisfied with nself as writer and parent.

Saturday started out well enough. After eakfast he took Susie and Bill to the clinic d dumped them on Ellen Andriesen while went over some problems with Doctor nes.

The children obviously had a fine morng, and apparently Ellen Andriesen did,
o, because she insisted on coming by e next day and taking them to the park ile he got some work done on his book.
hen he protested that would be too much a busman's holiday, she reminded him ce again that she honestly enjoyed chilen. Which seemed to him an admirable ntiment, only by late that afternoon he as not sure that he himself honestly did.

It was noon when they got home from the nic, and they were hungry. But the furnace e had gone out and the house was cold.
aving the children in their outdoor clothes, descended to the basement. Ten minutes er he came back up to find Bill in his ht-blue snow suit, seated inside the fire-ace eating the ashes of last night's fire.
hile Susie—in the far from waterproof nk coat-and-legging set Pat's mother had nt her for Christmas—was joyously wash-g dishes at the sink. As he scoured Bill o something less like a chimney sweep and opped up Susie and the lake that had once been the kitchen floor, it occurred to him that—the development of human personality notwithstanding—there might be disadvantages to the full and free exploration of environment by the immature.

It was one o'clock by the time he got them moderately clean and dry. There was still one bottle of the formula Pat had left in the refrigerator. He put it on the stove to warm, but the refrigerator was too cold or the stove too hot or he was in too great a hurry. Anyway, the bottle cracked, leaving him with the necessity of making formula. But before he could make formula he would have to wash bottles and a kettle, and before he could do that he would have to clear the sink of yesterday's dishes to make room for hot water and soap. Meanwhile Bill was screaming with hunger. He persuaded Susie that she was a big girl, big enough to sit on a high stool and spoon strained peas into her baby brother while daddy made formula.

That worked very well for a time. But when Susie saw the beautiful soapsuds in the sink she lost interest in being a conveyor of strained peas and came dragging a chair. "Me wash, me wash."

"Not today." He shooed her away. "Daddy's in a hurry. Susie can wash tomorrow." (Though who should know better than he that in the world of two-and-a-half there is no tomorrow?)

Susie lay in the middle of the floor sobbing out her disappointment, with Bill and the cat joining in on the choruses—the cat, meowing, pushing his empty dish about the room by way of a gentle hint. Pat's insistence on making formula while she washed the dinner dishes had long seemed to him one of her more obstinate stupidities. Now, faced with one hazard after another, he became less dogmatic in his opinion.

Susie, it seemed, had broken a glass in the course of her most recent dishwashing. He cut himself in the process of making the discovery, and a bleeding hand did nothing to speed things up. But he had finally got

• It burns me up! Electric timers on modern ranges have such dainty little numbers that to tell time you have to walk right up and peer at them. We know one homemaker who had dinner ready an hour early. Luckily it wasn't soufflé. We vote for clock numerals clear enough so they can be read from across the room. And let's have automatic timers so simple you don't forget from one Sunday to the next how to set them.

• Greasy gravy is even worse than curdled custard. That's why we use a tube-and-bulb baster to siphon extra fat from roast drippings. It's easier and more certain than spooning. In our kitchens, the gadget is also used to water plants, skim cream from milk, exhaust air from plastic freezer bags before sealing, and, naturally, to baste things. Oh, yes, it does come apart for washing.

• A restoration suggestion for blankets shrunk from bed to cot size. It's a two-person job. Wash the blanket. While it's still wet, grasp opposite ends and pull, pull, pull. Then with a wire brush—the kind used to curry canines—brush vigorously to loosen fibers and bring up nap. Don't worry if some nap comes out. After this carding, pull again. It's work, but for badly felted blankets as much as four inches can be regained—enough to cover cold shoulders. As a bonus, the blanket looks fluffier.

• Another make-do idea for blankets. Stitch a strip of old sheeting to one end. It gives tuck-in length for anchoring.

• Everybody likes the long-handled cellulose-sponge mop for floors. It's slick for walls too. The handle extends your arm's reach, no need to risk the stepladder. We were pleased with the way the thirsty sponge dried the wall, left no streaks. The sponge is squeezed with a lever so hands never soak. Memo to the manufacturer: Why not a short-handled one for bathtubs? Windows too?

• Ever get locked in a zippered dress—or girdle? Two ounces of prevention: one, when ironing, press seams flat around slide fasteners, so no fabric can get caught—better still, catch fabric with blind stitches; two, rub a small stick of zipper lubricant on the back side of the fastener. Available at notion counters. We all like zippers—let's keep them sliding.

Sunbeam
DOUBLE AUTOMATIC IRONMASTER
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

heats quicker, stays hotter, irons faster

Give Sunbeam and you give the finest

You've got it UNDER YOUR THUMB!

Easy to see... Easy to set!

RAYON
SILK
WOOL COTTON LINEN

Sunbeam IRONMASTER

HOT in 30 seconds

SAFE steady Low heat for rayons in 30 seconds. Will not scorch the finest lingerie.

Until you've used Sunbeam Ironmaster, you've no idea how much faster and easier ironing can be. No waiting for it to heat up—it's ready to go in a split minute, and always delivers the correct, steady heat for whatever fabric you're ironing. That's why you finish quicker, feeling fresher with a Sunbeam on the job.

SUNBEAM has Double-Automatic Heat Control . . . Thumb-tip Regulator Dial up in the handle . . . air-cooled, wrist-resting handle . . . larger ironing surface . . . permanently attached cord set . . . new streamlined beauty. Now available in two weights: the 4 lb. Ironmaster with the famous Hard Steel Chrome-plated sole plate, and the 2½ lb. Ironmaster with the aluminum alloy sole plate for lighter weight. See your dealer.

QUICK steady High heat for your heavy, dampened linens in 2½ minutes.

© SUNBEAM CORPORATION, Dept. 50, Chicago 50, Ill. • Canada: 321 Weston Rd., Toronto

WITH GRIT-FREE

BON AMI

TWO HANDY FORMS POWDER AND CAKE USE THEM BOTH

A super-shine as you clean—it's yours with Bon Ami Cleanser! You see, Bon Ami is grit-free . . . it can't scratch or dull the shiny surfaces of your sink, bathtub, pots and pans . . . and it won't roughen or redden your hands, either. That's why it's the one fast cleanser that's safe for everything you clean. No wonder millions of women won't use any other. But see for yourself! Get Bon Ami Cleanser and try it today!

The safe, speedy cleanser

BON AMI "hasn't scratched yet!"

the bottles washed and sterilized and the formula ready to bottle when the laundryman knocked at the door. Leaving the kettle of unbottled formula and the sterilized bottles on the drainboard, he went upstairs to the bathroom clothes hamper for the shirts, the only part of the laundry Pat sent out. When he came back down again the bottles were still on the drainboard, empty. Bill, exhausted, had fallen asleep with his head on the high-chair tray. Susie was quiet too. But the kettle of formula was gone from the drainboard, and over in a corner the cat was greedily lapping milk. He gave the laundryman the shirts, closed the door. Then he turned Susie over his knee and paddled her—hard.

"Kit-nen hongry," she protested reproachfully.

Sunday morning, the morning of the third day, he was in the basement washing diapers when Ellen Andriesen appeared, keeping her promise. She came down the steep basement stairs in her high-heeled sandals: "Susie let me in." She had on a blue suit and the ever-immaculate blouse, and her hair was smooth and shining. "It's a sin to stay in a dungeon on a morning like this." She came and stood beside him at the washing machine, smelling, in the midst of the diapers, of some fresh flower scent. "It's such a beautiful day," she said, "that I thought we might all go to the park."

"Sorry"—he started the wringer and she moved away out of range of the spattering soapsuds—"afraid I'm stuck here. We're running out of dish towels."

"Dish towels?"

"The next best substitute when the diaper supply gives out."

She laughed. "Isn't there a diaper service in town?"

"There is"—he ran the diapers through the wringer, burning his cut hand as he fished them out of the soapsuds—"but it doesn't cater to customers on an academic salary." (And she was expecting to raise the six children she was looking for a father for, with benefit of diaper service?) He piled the clothesbasket high, refilled the machine. "Let's go hang these out."

She went up the stairs ahead of him and he noted mechanically that the seams of her nylons were scrupulously straight, then his mind shifted to the weight of the clothesbasket. How did Pat, slight as she was, ever manage to lug it up these stairs?

Out in the fine May sunshine, Bill sat listlessly in his play pen sucking his thumb.

"It seems a shame"—Ellen Andriesen made the obvious comment—"to keep him cooped up like that—a child as eager and active as he is."

"It is a shame"—he hung up a diaper—"but it is also practical if you have clothes to wash in the basement and no nursemaid or policeman on tap upstairs."

But Ellen Andriesen was gazing beyond him with horrified eyes. He turned. Over in a corner by the fence, Susie was beating the kitten with a stick.

"Susie"—he dropped the diaper he was hanging, got the stick away from her while Ellen Andriesen picked up the cowering kitten—"what are you doing?"

"Daddy punishment Susie; Susie punishment kit-nen." Her explanation was simple and quite unabashed.

"I lost my temper yesterday and paddled her," he elaborated for Ellen Andriesen.

"You're joking?"

He shook his head.

"But her venting it on the kitten—that's sadism!"

SELDOM had he seen a problem mother more disturbed. So it was a clinical serenity, after all, flourishing in the carefully controlled atmosphere of a test tube—or a sunny, well-arranged playroom where for a few hours a day one could manage, observe, and make notes. And he, the trained analyst of human behavior, had been taken in by it.

"Quite right"—he shook out another paper, hung it in the sun—"but I'm afraid it's also life—cruelty received, cruelty given, in endless chain."

"And you accept it calmly?" She looked as though she might get Susie's stick and prod him, turn him over, a white slug found lying in her path.

"On the contrary." He hung another paper. "I did consider slitting my throat, I could have found someone to make formula, wash diapers and stand guard here. By the way, do you know what time the grocery stores close on Sunday? We're running out of ham and gelatin."

She continued to stare at him. "But . . . the whole future personality of the child—Why, in your own book ——"

ALL through his book he had been at great pains to avoid being trite. Now the only words that occurred to him were most undeniably trite.

"Miss Andriesen"—he took time out to rescue Bill, who had somehow managed to get his knee stuck between the slats of the play pen—"have you ever lived with children?"

It was ten P.M. and he had collapsed on the studio couch with the funny paper when Pat got home.

"Oh, I had the most wonderful time!" She came in with shining eyes—the small round rock so wonderfully smooth in the palm of the hand. "Two plays, and both of them good, and the ballet, and ravioli and frogs' legs and shashlik and blintzes ——"

"Not all at one meal, I hope?"

She came over and kissed him. "You have no idea how good it is to eat food you haven't cooked yourself."

"And you have no idea," he assured her, "how tired I am of ham and gelatin."

"Poor darling!" She laughed. "How are Susie and Bill? You know, I really do think I've gotten some perspective, seriously. Maybe I won't lose my temper so quickly." She went on out into the kitchen. "What, no dishes! I didn't expect to be able to get through to the sink."

"That was last night." He followed her out.

"And formula all made and bottled!" she exclaimed. "And diapers dry and folded. And here I was all ready to pitch in and start the night shift," she said. "Why, it's a miracle!"

Maybe that was the answer after all—a small miracle now and then for each of us? A pause to gather strength for the daily struggle.

"How about a cup of coffee?"

She reached for the percolator on the high shelf, the only place in the crowded, inconvenient kitchen where there was room for it her skirt pulled high by her uprais arms, the seams of her sheer nylons beautifully straight.

"Mrs. Kirkwood"—he came up and put his arms around her—"did anyone ever tell you you had good legs?"

"Yes, long ago someone did mention it," she told him.

"I've missed you."

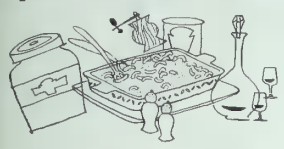
"That's good." She smelled of some new perfume, heady and not at all serene. There had never been anything serene about their life together; he knew now that there never would be. "Did you get anything at all done on your book?"

"I'm starting a new one," he told her. "It's going to be called Parents are People."

"Oh, darling, the week end must have been terrible. It's bound to be a best seller though."

"If it is," he assured her solemnly, "we'll have an automatic washer right there by the kitchen door, and a built-in nursemaid in the basement."

She looked at him inquiringly, but he did not offer an explanation. THE END



Second-rate minds are apt to be confirmed in their inferiority by education. This is why a liberal education so often results in illiberal opinions.

—J. A. SPENDER: Comments of Bagshot
(Used by permission of the executors of the J. A. Spender estate).

GOOD EATING

● For a super Sunday night supper, take large slices of boiled ham, spread thinly with Heinz Brown Mustard, cover with Heinz Cooked Spaghetti, roll up and fasten with toothpick. Broil until crisp.

● A generous dash of Heinz Brown Mustard lends fascinating new flavor and appeal to a casserole of macaroni and cheese.

■ ■ ●

Heinz Brown Mustard Has A Strong, Full-Bodied Flavor That Makes Many A Plain Dish Downright Exciting!

Full-Strength BROWN

Add That "Certain Something" with HEINZ OLD-FASHIONED MUSTARD 57

Mild, Tangy YELLOW

Made By A Fast-Grinding Process That Helps Retain The Fresh, Perky Flavor Of Choice Mustard Seeds, Heinz Yellow Mustard Is Extra Smooth And Tasty!

• • •

● Spread open cheese sandwiches with Heinz Yellow Mustard—top with thick tomato slices—sprinkle with bacon fat—and broil. This sandwich is a lunch in itself!

● Before frying fish, spread them with Heinz Yellow Mustard and dip them in cornmeal. They'll be golden-brown and crisp!

You Know They're Good Because They're HEINZ!

DO YOU REMEMBER ROCKY?

(Continued from Page 58)

Saul S. Streit. Rocco D'Agostino pleaded not guilty on the fifth of April.

He had been in jail almost two months when I talked to him for the first time. I was his first visitor. He was subdued, still confused, but eager to talk to somebody. He was disgusted because he had been labeled a "tough guy" in the newspapers.

"Those papers are very much wrong," he told me. "I'm not a tough guy. I never saw any of those people before in my life—none of those they took my picture with. You can ask them. Ask more than one of them. This guy comes in my room, says, 'All right, where's the gun?' I says, 'What gun?' He says, 'Are you trying to be funny or something?' That's how that all come about my saying no cop would ever take me alive."

He brightened when I said I was going to write a story about him for a magazine.

"What do you want to know?" he said. "This guy, Kelly ——"

"I know all about Kelly," I told him. "Let's start here: Is your father dead, Rocky?"

"Yeah. He's dead. He died when I was two years old."

"That would be 1932?"

"Yeah. He died in 1932."

"Tell me about your mother—how is she getting along now?"

"She's sick. She lives with my sister. Are you going to see my mother?"

"I'll see everybody, Rocky. Is there anything you want me to tell your mother?"

"Just give her my love and tell her I'll be out of here in no time. What else do you want to know? I'll write it all out about Kelly—about my arrest—and send it to you."

In a few days his letter reached me by mail. Meanwhile, from police, relatives, acquaintances, former teachers, employers and public records, I had learned a great deal about the life and times of Rocco D'Agostino.

Rocco, the seventh and last child of Salvatore and Frances D'Agostino, was born on May 9, 1930, in Manhattan at an address in the vicinity of East 101st Street and Second Avenue. The section was then, and is still, a brick-walled mass of "huddled poor." Two blocks from his birthplace, the towering East River Housing Development, for families with incomes of less than $3000 a year, has now replaced some of the worst slum dwellings in the United States.

This is the fringe of East Harlem—the district of pro-Communist former Congressman Vito Marcantonio—populated by large numbers of first- and second-generation Italians, Negroes, and a more recent influx of Puerto Ricans. It is a raucous neighborhood—grimy and littered with refuse. The architectural pattern is a simple one of four- and five-story gray shells, laced with fire escapes.

Every morning, streams of children with bright faces of many hues flow through the narrow streets to school. Many start out in fresh, clean clothing, but the day soils them more quickly here: they play punchball against walls, wrestle on the pavement and sprawl on the curb to rest. From doorways and narrow passageways between buildings the hot sun brings up the heavy smell of urine. When spring rain comes it does not stir the fragrance of green growing things; a faintly acrid odor arises like that of saliva against a hot iron. Even the air is foul—no fresh breezes stir it.

Rocky began life as the great depression, following the crash of the stock market in 1929, was settling to its lowest trough. Downtown, in the Wall Street area, formerly wealthy men were leaping from the windows of tall office buildings to escape facing poverty and debt. In midtown Manhattan, less dynamic individuals were selling apples on the street. In the poorer sections, where poverty always had been familiar and toler-

(Continued on Page 125)

"Hand-done" perfection in washing clothes with the new G-E Activator-Automatic!

1. "Each piece of my wash is so sunshiny-clean. A fine hand-laundress couldn't do better."

Yes, like careful washing by hand, G-E Activator® Washing Action is thorough. Each piece is passed through 3 zones of washing action—vigorous, medium, light.

2. "My very finest things are washed so gently—when they are done the General Electric way."

Each piece of your wash is dipped, flexed, and gently cleansed individually—just as in fine hand laundering. NOT just sloshed around in a tangled mass.

3. "My whole wash smells so sweet and fresh. And to me that's a test of clean, clean clothes."

G-E complete rinsing—a spray rinse to kill suds, then a deep rinse—removes loosened soil and hidden soap film, leaves clothes clean-looking, clean-smelling.

4. "My G-E-washed clothes feel fluffy-y. After spin-drying, there's not enough water left to wet my hands."

Spin-drying is most important. Unless rinse water is removed thoroughly, some dirt stays. The drier clothes are spun, the cleaner they are!

1-YEAR WRITTEN WARRANTY ON ENTIRE WASHER • Never needs oiling • Water-temperature Selector automatically mixes hot and cold water • No bolting • Porcelain top and washbasket. Baked-enamel front and sides • ALL THESE, PLUS 21 OTHER GREAT FEATURES. Model AW5B4 Illus.

AND ALL YOU DO IS SET A DIAL!

This new General Electric is completely automatic.

It washes, rinses, damp-dries your clothes, and shuts o— with one setting of the dial. But you can re-set it to shor n or repeat any cycle.

And you can tell—as you SEE, SMELL, and FEEL y r G-E washed clothes—that here is a wash you'll be eve so proud of.

NOT THE OLD WAY...

NEVER do clothes come out of this washer tangled, matted, soggy, dripping!

BUT THE NEW WAY!

CLOTHES are washed indivi ally and many pieces come dry enough to iron.

Your G-E dealer has the new Activator-Automatic now

Go in and see him today and look it over. And while yo looking, we hope you'll remember that there is one outsta ing feature that you can't see.

That is famed General Electric dependability!

You will find your nearest General Electric dealer lis under "Washing Machines" in your Classified Teleph Directory. General Electric Company, Bridgeport 2, Conn

Trim and specifications subject to change without notice.

You can put your confidence in—

GENERAL ELECTRIC

(Continued from Page 123)

like a delinquent friend, the people were erate, in the most factual ways, for food warmth.

f the D'Agostino family of seven chil-n, five were under the age of ten and two r daughters were married. The family isted on Home Relief, amounting at this to about $46 per month. The married ghters could not help because they needed themselves. The father, Salvatore, d his occupation on applications as orer—unemployed"; he was only forty-years old in 1930. Both he and his wife born in Italy, but had been living in the ed States for nearly twenty years.

oday, Mrs. D'Agostino still cannot speak lish articulately, although she under-ds the language with little difficulty. As d promised Rocky, I went to see her—he first and most important person on a list of those I thought would remember rances D'Agostino is a short, plump and id woman with graying black hair bed in waves of precise tidiness about Italian-cameo face. She looks ill, but far nger than her age; as we talked it ned to me that mentally her grasp on ity is fading—as she wills it to fade. Her ghter is impatient with her.

he made it clear that she had seen very e of Rocco for almost two years—since e of 1949, when they had been evicted n a "railroad" apartment for nonpay-t of rent. The few times she did see him would not say what he was doing for a g.

I'm on my own," he told her, "and what is nobody's business."

s sister believes her mother has been too ent with Rocco all his life. She never nked him—oh, maybe a cuff now and n, but never a beating. Mrs. D'Agostino, had been sitting quietly and speaking in monosyllables, recoiled almost with or and remonstrated volubly in Italian he idea of beating her son. "He never ld listen to his brother or anybody," his r answered her. "None of us ever could him anything. He is better off where he She left the room to take care of a child was crying.

Irs. D'Agostino told me that she had not e to see Rocco because her hearing is not d and she knew, from previous experiences, she would not be able to talk to him. (Relatives are permitted to converse with inmates, while guards stand by, through a mouthpiece or "muffle board," designed to prevent whispered conversations by making hearing difficult.) It was also impossible for her to get about on New York subways alone, and—she indicated with a shrug—what could she do for Rocco now? I learned that her husband did not die but had been deported from the United States to Italy when Rocco was two. When I asked her why, she shrugged again.

"Rocco said to give you his love and tell you he'll be out of there in no time. Do you have anything you want to tell him?"

"Tante amicizie lui dalla mia parte," she replied. ("Give him my regards.")

THE first cataclysmic experience in Rocky's life occurred before his memory began. After the "death" of his father, the family was split up. The three girls and his brother, who is two years older than Rocky, were sent to a Catholic children's home. Rocky went to a foundling home; his mother to a hospital. ("She has always been sick," Rocky explained. "Asthma, cardiac trouble, a heart condition—you know what I mean?") According to an older sister, Rocky suffered a broken nose while in the foundling home, and it was allowed to heal without medical attention. As long as anyone can remember, his nose has been slightly twisted and scarred.

Being the baby, Rocky was the first child to be returned to his mother, about a year after her hospitalization. She was still being supported by welfare funds. His brother was not released until two years later, and the girls stayed on into their teens.

Rocky's earliest memory is of tripping over a toy and severely burning his hand against a hot stove when he was four years old. He recalls that his mother applied coconut oil and butter and a poultice of dried potatoes. One other preschool impression meant a great deal to him: when he was a little over five years old, he discovered he had a brother. For him it was a great and pleasant surprise and marked the beginning of a crescending awareness.

When he was six years old, he was enrolled in the kindergarten of Public School 168, and he attended that school for eight and a half years. P. S. 168, like many other public schools in the city, is a forbidding H-shaped building wedged in a solid block. The play

"Believe me, Miss Frimel, the world wouldn't be in such chaos if people were more friendly."

"Brentwood"—Spacious extension table with decorator styled Duncan Phyfe base. Stainless Steel apron. Heavily padded, deluxe chairs trimmed with brightly polished tacks.

Young How America Dines . . . with

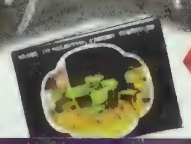
Virtue BROTHERS OF CALIFORNIA

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY

CHROME DINETTES

For gay hospitality of dining room entertainment...for carefree and happy family living...in patio, dinette or kitchen ...for radiant color and sparkling beauty...Young America prefers the Chrome Dinette with the most quality features...Virtue Bros...."The Chrome Furniture that stays beautiful longer."

"Budget"—Quality, economically priced. Balanced MICALITE* laminated plastic table top resistant to alcohol, ink, fruit acids, and heat (275° F). DURAN* upholstery tailor-welted. Seats four comfortably.



"Del Rey"—"Young America's" favorite. Good looking extension table has room for six. Posture formed chairs have patented non-marring Virtue Backs and exclusive rubber mounted shock absorbing Smoothie-Cushion-Glides.

*TRADE MARK
U. S. PAT. NO. 2,51[illegible]

VIRTUE BROS. CHROME FURNITURE IS SOLD IN LEADING FURNITURE AND DEPARTMENT STORES WEST OF THE MISSISSIPPI ONLY

FREE! Send for colorful, illustrated booklet, "Guide to Selecting Chrome Furniture."

VIRTUE BROS. MFG. CO.
The West's largest manufacturer of chrome furniture
5701 WEST CENTURY BOULEVARD
LOS ANGELES 45, CALIFORNIA

Tucked into the flower freshness of an Eaton envelope... you!

That's YOU winging through the mails on Eaton's lovely Open Stock Letter Paper . . .

Every letter you write IS you, the innermost you — your moods, your wishes, your hopes. And the paper you write on reveals you as surely as the words you use.

That's why you choose Eaton's Open Stock Paper . . . whichever of the countless styles you select for your very own, you pick an exquisite symbol of your own fastidiousness . . . one that can be yours always, for you can replenish paper or envelopes whenever you wish.

Thrifty, too: at home or travelling, you can match orphaned envelopes to companion letter sheets, leftover paper to nice fresh envelopes. Nothing's wasted.

Three of many charmingly boxed styles available in fine stores, everywhere:

EATON'S CALAIS RIPPLE — White, Blue, Grey. Deckled medium-weight paper, interlined envelopes. Boxed single sheets 95c; 25 envelopes 50c.

EATON'S PETERSBURG — White, Blue, Grey. Fine laid-patterned paper, interlined envelopes. Boxed single sheets 95c; 25 envelopes 50c.

EATON'S HIGHLAND LINEN — White, Pink, Green, Blue, Grey. Pen-inviting linen-textured paper. Boxed single sheets 75c; 25 envelopes 35c.

WE DO NOT SELL DIRECT

Eaton's Fine Letter Papers in Open Stock

PITTSFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS

area consists of two small courtyards—and the streets. The courtyards are enclosed by brick walls mounted with iron grilles, and the heavy sliding iron door is closed and locked when school is not in session to prevent broken windows and vandalism, which frequently occur anyway. The turreted, prisonlike building (much inferior to the new city jail) has long since accumulated the maximum effective coat of grime. The exterior walls are scribbled with such a tangle of hearts and obscenities that it is no longer possible to distinguish one from the other. Enrollment has varied in recent years from 1800 to 2200. Currently about half the pupils are Italian-Americans; 23 per cent are Negroes; and 22 per cent, Puerto Ricans.

Rocky liked school—for the first few years, at least. He claims now he never hated it. The first year he received a grade of A in conduct. During his entire stay at P. S. 168 he was never graded lower than B in conduct. He was seldom absent or tardy. But he had other troubles—lots of them. The big boys soon found it was easy to make him cry.

Of the teachers at P. S. 168 who were there when Rocky was, few remember anything about him, except by reference to records. "Oh, yes, I remember Rocco," one teacher said. "He was such a pale, anemic-looking little boy." But that was all she could recall. According to Principal Katherine Sullivan, who has been head of the school for thirteen years: "He certainly was never an outstanding problem that we ever had to do anything about." Rocco remembers only one teacher by name—Miss Kathleen Smith, who taught him in the sixth grade. "She was the only teacher that ever took any interest in me, but I don't know if she's still around. She was an old lady then." (Miss Smith retired from teaching in 1949 at the age of seventy, after having taught for fifty years at P. S. 168. Among her pupils, she specialized in the "problems"—and later attended the weddings of their children; she died in the spring of 1951, while Rocco was awaiting sentence.)

If ever you meet a woman who succeeds in convincing you that you are an exceptionally fine fellow, be very, very careful. She has far more intelligence than you.

In schoolwork, Rocco was slow from the start. He repeated the third grade and the second half of the fourth. His worst failures were in reading and English. On May 2, 1940, when Rocco was ten years old, he was given a complete psychological examination by the Bureau of Child Guidance. The reason given for the examination was "disinterest in school, temper tantrums and outbursts of crying on the playground." He was recorded as "imaginative in making up stories and telling lies to get attention." The report describes him as "a pale, thin boy, small for his age, and poorly nourished." While taking the tests, he "fidgeted nervously and played with his pencil."

ACCORDING to Binet tests, his was a "borderline to dull normal mentality," but he was judged higher in intelligence than an ordinary Binet test indicated. He was somewhat handicapped by his Italian-language background. Nevertheless, he scored low on both verbal and nonverbal tests. (He has a variety of I.Q.'s, ranging from 64 to 86.) He scored highest in tests involving rote memory and was accorded 'ninth-year level in recognizing absurdities." He was resentful of having been placed in a class of slow pupils and is quoted as saying, "They put me in the dumb class because I wasn't nice on the playground." The report recommended that emphasis in his school training be placed on manual activities. He was judged "socially immature." Teachers noted that he was "very tidy," but "not sure of himself" and "loses interest easily," although he was "never late and never absent from class."

Although he did failing work in the fifth grade, he was allowed to go on to the sixth because he was over thirteen years old and it was considered better for him to stay with his age group. At this time he was 59" tall and weighed 95 pounds, and, according to his health report, had "no headaches, no emotional disturbances."

Outside of school, Rocco's life had p ceeded at a faster emotional pace. Alwa physically small, he was frequently bull and beaten on the streets by stronger bo Although he was never punished at home, often came home bloody, bruised and ba ing. There was little anyone could do abo it and his mother did nothing. (His broth well ahead of him in school, was t mu help; he left P. S. 168 in 1940 and went Patrick Henry Junior High School. He w graduated from this school in 1943 with excellent conduct record and adequa grades.)

IN the summer of his ninth year, wh splashing in the water from an open f hydrant with a crowd of youngsters, Roc fell and broke his right leg. After hospitali tion, he spent two weeks at Camp Carey the Boys' Club camp on the north shore Long Island—which he remembers vivi because it was his first, and last, excursi from city streets. The following summer learned to swim at the Thomas Jefferson c pool, at First Avenue and 112th Street. spent a good deal of time at this pool, hopi to become a lifeguard, but he was to "You're too puny. You'd never make i

While attending P. S. 168, Rocky clai to have spent some of his time at a "pla land" in the basement of St. Lucy's Chur where he was confirmed, but his sister sa "He never went to church," and two prie said they did not remember him at all. T basement of the church is no longer used a recreation center. It is unlikely that he spe any time with churchgoing children—r did he belong to any ga As he reached puberty, had both physical and em tional reasons for keepi away from groups as mu as possible.

In this neighborhoo young boys between t ages of ten and fourte find secret recesses betwe buildings to demonstra to each other their sexual prowess. They ha been observed by teachers and others in t type of sex play (as they have been observ smoking "reefers"—marijuana cigarette Only the reticent—or the different—ha trouble with the other boys. A comm diversion is to catch some smaller boy, mo modest or less developed, and "take pants down." Trying to fight off one of the attacks—and failing—resulted in the severe beating that Rocky experienced at P. S. 16 He would not (or could not) engage in su sexual demonstrations at the age of twel As a probation officer for youthful offend pointed out, "He was possibly not a norm boy!"

He was subject to at least one other "em tional disturbance" the doctor did not d cern. Perhaps as early as the age of ten, wh the teachers noted "outbursts of crying the playground," but certainly before he l P. S. 168, he learned the truth about h father's deportation. As a child he had be allowed to believe that his father had died 1932 (and this fiction, like many others, still prefers to the truth), but bit by bit learned the whole story. He grew in the bel that lies were necessary and he became ade at telling them in any situation. He d trusted people.

Yet he still remembers being a monit once in the school corridor, and several tim he was given special privileges for drawin "They trusted me," he said of his teache with some awe, speaking from a barred ce He was not much interested in drawing, b Miss Smith was, so he drew, especially f the Christmas decorations—"Santa Cla and sleds and things like that." At home spent a lot of time tearing down and rebuil ing an old bicycle, and making kites. (Que tion: "Where did you fly kites in that neig borhood, Rocky?" Answer: "From the dan roof. Where do you think I'd fly the from?") He once won an award—the on award he ever received—for kite building a contest held on Randall's Island. He members, "It was a medal shaped like

(Continued on Page 128)

A truly great new sterling pattern

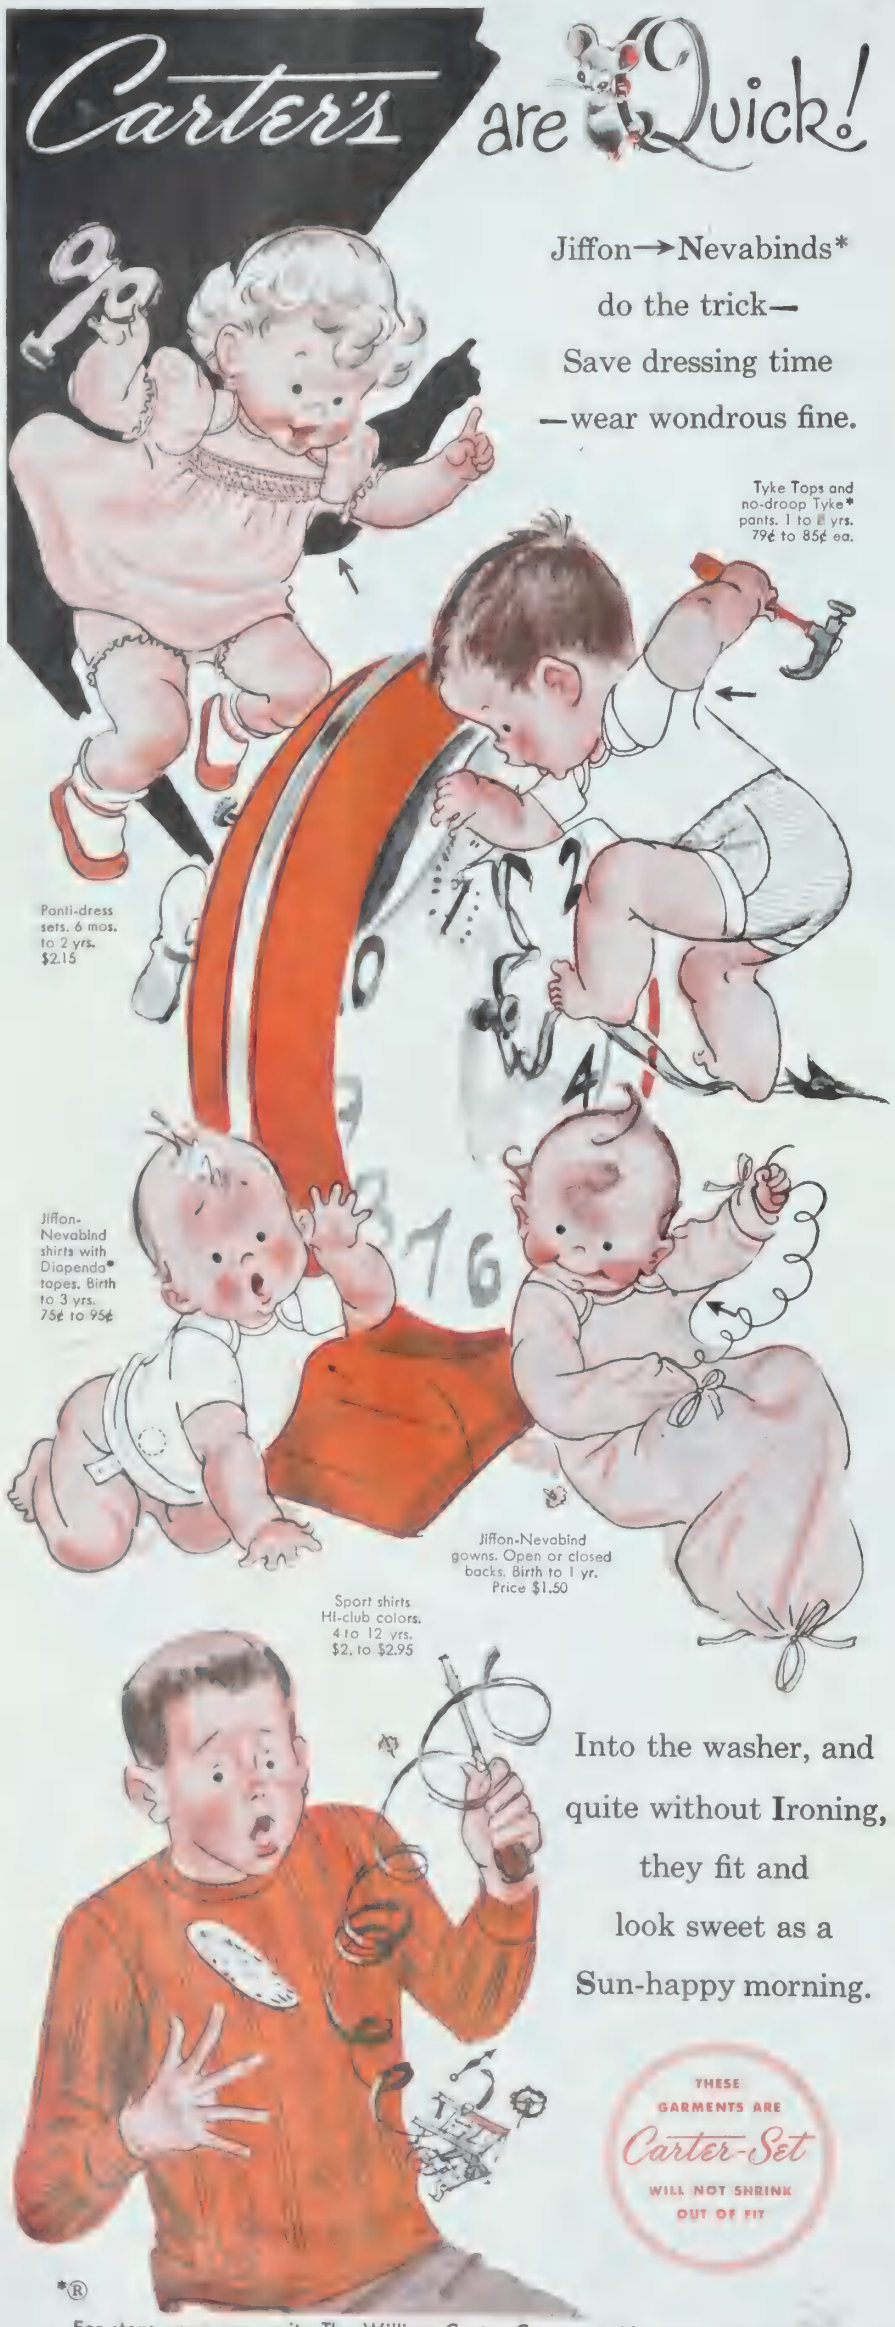
Stanton Hall

by

HEIRLOOM STERLING



One of the most beautiful silver patterns ever created. Picture your initial in Stanton Hall's monogram medallion!

All the elegance, the graciousness of a luxurious yesterday . . . re-created in the beautiful new Stanton Hall by Heirloom* Sterling. Wonderfully heavy, with deeper, richer carving, Stanton Hall* is timeless in its grace. And yet for all its feeling of tradition, this great new sterling pattern is fresh, contemporary . . . in its swift clean lines, its clear-cut contours. Especially beautiful—the handsomely enclosed monogram medallion, specially designed to frame your initial in sweeping curves! Go in to see Stanton Hall at your jeweler's today—begin your own family tradition of this magnificent new Heirloom Sterling now!

*Trade Marks © 1951, Oneida Ltd., Oneida, N. Y.

(Continued from Page 126)

four-leaf clover, covered with probably fourteen-carat gold or something." At that time he thought if he could not be a lifeguard he would be an aviator. (Question: "Who was your ideal person, Rocky?" Answer: "Never wanted to be nobody but myself.")

When the teachers decided that eight and a half years was long enough for him to spend in elementary school and permitted him to go on to junior high, his last teacher at P. S. 168, Miss Kathleen Smith, sent along these terse comments: "Work poor, draws well, likes rhyming, makes kites, mother ill. He co-operates in any way he is able. This child needs individual attention."

But in junior high at P. S. 171 he found things tougher in every respect. No one there learned to know him well enough to remember him—other than as a truant. In one term he was absent 81 days, present 9; in another he was absent 30 days, present 60; when "discharged as a runaway" in June, 1945, he had been present 21 days and absent 49 of that term. He was noted as un-co-operative and unreliable, a failure in scholarship and a poor reader, and unsatisfactory in courtesy, health and conduct.

"Discharged as a runaway" means that the truant officer was unable to locate him in the city, but in Rocky's case it is more likely the truant officer got tired of going after him. He says work kept him out of school. His story—and his stories get increasingly difficult to believe—is that an official recommended that he quit school and get a job to help support his mother, who was still getting welfare money. World War II had been going on for several years; man power—even boy power—was in demand. His brother joined the Merchant Marine. All his sisters had married and started families of their own. Rocky was the man of the family.

Never teach false morality. How exquisitely absurd it is to tell girls that beauty is of no value, dress is of no use. Beauty is of value, her whole prospects and happiness in life may often depend on a new gown or a becoming bonnet, and if she has five grains of sense, she will find this out.
—SIDNEY SMITH.

For the next three years he had many jobs for short periods of time: with a drugstore, a camera concern, a film-processing company, a motorcycle shop and a metal shop. His job at the drugstore lasted one week. He was unemployed about as much as he was employed, and collected state unemployment insurance for several months. His record with employers is similar to his record at P. S. 171. No one remembers him offhand, except one former co-worker who said, "Yeah, I think I do. He's a real good punk."

Before he was eighteen, Rocky's social activities had shifted to the west of Central Park—specifically, to the area just above West 101st Street on Columbus Avenue—where he found men who accepted him. Many Spaniards and Puerto Ricans live in this section; it is dull-appearing in the daylight, but certain spots get livelier after midnight. The aroma is garlic; the music, Latin. On dance floors performers do a version of the mambo described as "some shake, some snake, some jump, some bump." Between the hours of two and six in the morning, junkies, bearing packs or capsules of white powder, move like beetles out of the walls.

ROCKY'S first arrest had nothing to do with narcotics—although he frequented places where drugs are commonly used. (At P. S. 171, five boys recently admitted "snorting" heroin in the back of a classroom.) Rocky was first picked up by the police after a street-corner brawl; brass knuckles were found in his wallet. He says he had carried them there for two years, having found them on the sidewalk after being attacked by two Spaniards. ("You see how my nose is sort of twisted and scarred? Them Spaniards did that.") For him brass knuckles fulfilled a long-felt need—but he never used them. He pleaded guilty to possession (considered a misdemeanor) and was sentenced to thirty days in the workhouse.

He had a great deal of trouble keeping himself employed, for most employers were disposed to fire him after a few weeks. One job—with a camera firm—he did like and kept for almost six months, but the place went out of business. For a long time he was without work and drew unemployment insurance—"It was just enough to eat on." Then, in June of 1949, he and his mother were evicted from their apartment on East 102nd Street. This he considers "the most tragic experience of my life." His mother went to live with one of his sisters—and Rocky "visited" wherever he could.

FOUR months later he was arrested with a gun in his possession. Again his memory of the incident is the exact reverse of the observation and experience of the police: Two men accosted him while he was walking down the street with a girl; one pointed a gun at him; he disarmed the fellow and was about to throw the gun over a fence when a cop interfered and "completely misinterpreted the situation." Rocky found himself back in jail, charged this time with a felony. He pleaded guilty and got six months.

Out of jail the second time, he found his brother and sisters reluctant to share their apartments with him, and he could not get work. His brother finally did permit him to stay—although he had only two rooms himself and his wife had just given birth to their first child. For several weeks he slept in the kitchen on an Army cot; then he moved to a room of his own on the West Side.

Less than three months later he was again arrested—this time for the possession and sale of a narcotic drug, a type of crime natural and easy for him to turn to. This is his account, as he wrote it in his own quite excellent handwriting, of the circumstances of his third arrest:

My introduction to narcotics, eventual addiction and imprisonment occurred in the following order:

During early February of 1951, I met Kelly in a restaurant where it was customary for me to have supper. In the days that followed I had occasion to speak with the friendly stranger and felt that I had gotten to know him quite well. Upon one such meeting he confided to me that he was having difficulty in obtaining employment, meeting his expenses, and that he had recently been evicted from his lodgings. Acting on a sympathic impulse, I offered to allow Kelly to share my lodgings until such time as he could re-establish himself.

While living with me I discovered that Kelly was addicted to drugs. When I questioned him about it, he readily admitted his addiction.

One evening, in a moment of weakness and depression, I accepted "a shot." The general effect of the drug seemed to induce a state of semiconsciousness. This was followed by acute illness—vomitting, as the effects of the drug began to receed. Feeling miserable, I consulted Kelly, who advised that I must have "another shot" as a curative measure for my illness. From that time forth it appears that my every thought and motive centered around obtaining a daily supply of the accursed powder.

On March 17th Kelly had come home with a package containing narcotics. He told me that a friend of his would call for the package. Early the following morning Kelly's friend arrived; I handed him the package and was immediately arrested by "Kelly's friend," whom I have discovered was a detective from the narcotics squad. Whereupon I was charged with sale (selling) of narcotics—a very serious crime.

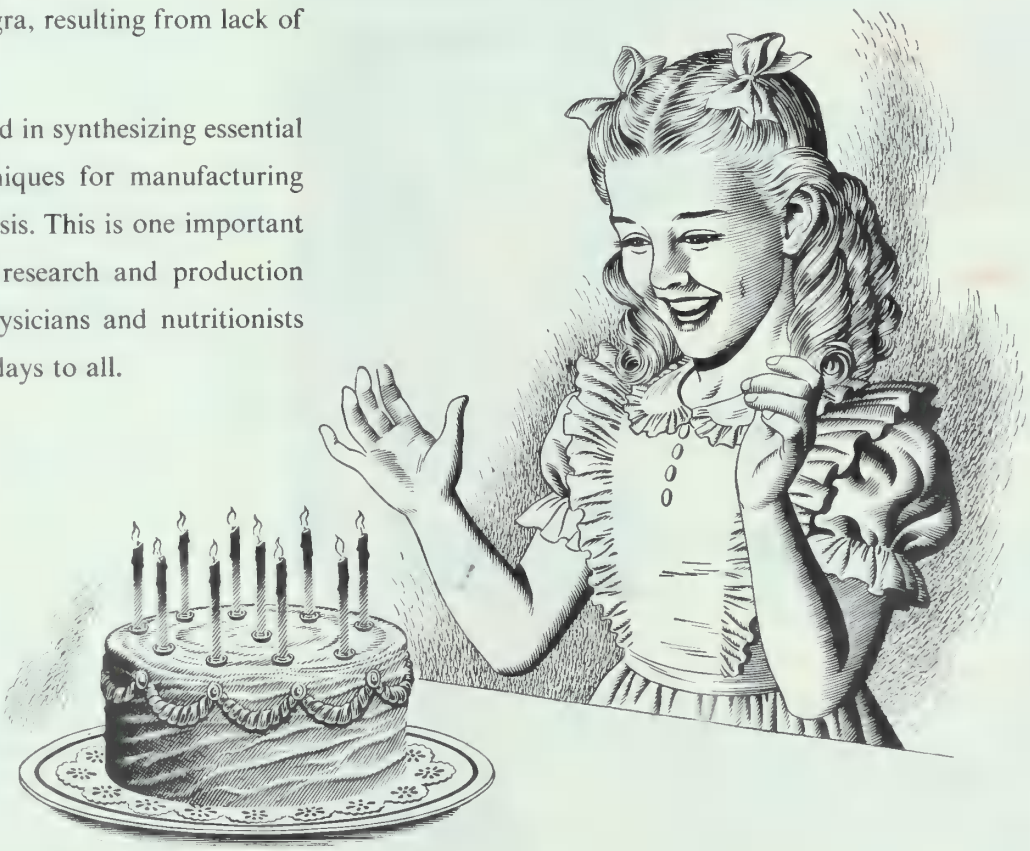
After my arrest and detention in the City Prison (Tombs), and numerous appearances in court, it developed that Kelly, I have learned, had acted in co-operation with the narcotic squad. He received a term of only six months! A term usually given for petty offenses! Kelly is the lowliest of man in the lowest of occupations.

Sincerely yours,
Rocco D'Agostino

On the basis of this disappointing "friendship," Rocky insisted he was going to "have

(Continued on Page 130)

SCIENCE REPORT



Healthier and happier birthdays

CHILDREN who celebrate their tenth birthday this year share another birthday of vital importance to their health —the Tenth Anniversary of Food Enrichment. For ten years bakers and millers of America have been enriching bread and flour with health-giving vitamins—thiamine, riboflavin and niacin.

More buoyant health and greater mental and physical vigor are rewards of the scientific use of vitamins in nutrition and medicine. Less and less common have become the devastating diseases such as pellagra, resulting from lack of vitamins.

Merck & Co., Inc. has pioneered in synthesizing essential vitamins and in perfecting techniques for manufacturing them on a large-scale, low-cost basis. This is one important result of the continuous Merck research and production program—devoted to helping physicians and nutritionists bring healthier and happier birthdays to all.

Vitamins help her grow up stronger

Research and Production for the Nation's Health

MERCK

MERCK & CO., INC.
Manufacturing Chemists
RAHWAY, NEW JERSEY
In Canada: MERCK & CO. Limited—Montreal

(Continued from Page 128)

a party" (jury trial), even though his counsel warned him it would be difficult to explain away the $250 in small bills which the detectives had found in his room. According to the detectives, he was not a user of narcotics and he showed no violent withdrawal symptoms while in jail. Rocky claimed to have become addicted only recently, and there are a few spots on his arm which might be perforations of the needle. A relative said one time Rocky slept continuously for forty-eight hours in a room in her apartment. A narcotics-squad official conceded he might have done a little "joy-popping" (scratching or puncturing the skin with a hypodermic needle), but he was not a "mainliner" (one who takes heroin by injection into the main vein of the arm).

ROCKY persisted in his plea of not guilty until after the trial of Augustine Castillo, a young Puerto Rican, who had been arrested under similar circumstances the same night he was. The following excerpt from the cross-examination of Detective Alfred B. Spinosa, witness on behalf of the People, by Castillo's Legal Aid attorney, Mr. Della Volpe, clarifies Kelly's relationship with the police:

Q. Officer, there has been testimony that there was another man on the scene who was not a police officer. Did you know that man?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is he what is commonly known as a stool pigeon?

A. It is hard ——

Q. You heard the expression?

A. When you say commonly known ——

Q. Let us put it this way: known to the police as a stool pigeon?

A. (Shakes head in the negative.)

Q. Do you know if he was a drug addict?

A. I am not sure whether he was or not.

Q. Was he, by any chance, doing your squad a favor, or isn't the question clear?

A. What do you mean by a favor? I don't know.

Q. Helping you out?

A. He certainly was helping us out; yes.

Q. Was he on the pay of the Police Department?

A. Was he what?

Q. Was he on the pay of the Police Department?

A. That question is not clear to me.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge whether he was or was not on the pay of the Police Department?

THE COURT: You are on the witness stand, officer. You have to testify to what you know.

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir. I don't understand what you mean by on the pay.

THE COURT: He means what anybody else would mean.

Q. You are in the pay of the Police Department?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was this man in the pay of the Police Department just as you are?

A. He received money from us.

The jury decided Castillo was guilty after ten minutes of deliberation, or long enough to take a vote. Rocky, who had been waiting in the "bullpen" for an appearance in the courtroom, "copped out," as the police like to say. Through his counsel, he withdrew his plea of not guilty and pleaded guilty, as he had been doing practically all his life.

The last time I saw Rocky before his sentencing, he seemed considerably relieved. "I am not bitter," he said, "but I get downhearted thinking what my sentence will be. I don't worry. I know I can get along all right with the boys in here, or where they send me. I might learn something. You never can tell."

"I have no friends," he said. "Ever since I got in trouble the first time, I have no friends, but I can't blame anybody except myself."

On the day of the sentencing, his mother, two sisters and a brother-in-law were early arrivals outside the courtroom of Judge Edward McCullen. Because of many instances of hysterical outbursts, female relatives of prisoners to be sentenced were excluded from this part of the General Sessions Court. A chair was placed just outside the door for Mrs. D'Agostino. Looking weak and ill, she sat there silently for three hours, her face a mask of uncomplaining woe.

DOUBTLESS she remembered, as Attorney Robert Brown reminded the judge, other unhappy courtroom scenes in her long and difficult life. In 1917, Salvatore D'Agostino, who was to become the father of Rocco, appeared before the Criminal Division of the Superior Court in Waterbury, Connecticut, charged with the crime of assault with attempt to murder. For this he served one year in the prison at North Haven. And then, in January of 1933, he appeared before Judge Morris Koening, in a section of this same General Sessions Court in New York, and pleaded guilty to the crime of "attempted assault in the second degree." The complainant was Frances D'Agostino, his wife.

A neighbor, who lived near their old flat at 2184 Second Avenue, recalls that Salvatore had beaten her "nearly to death." The father of Rocco D'Agostino, at least twice in his life

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Farm Woman

BY ALMA ROBISON HIGBEE

Grandma used to tell about the time
the drought was bad,
And Grandpa, young then, lost almost everything he had,
Got disheartened one day, as men will get, and said
They'd best give up, load up and hit the road instead.
But that night, while he did the chores, she fixed things up,
With hand-wove tablecloth, with china plate and cup,
The ones brought from the East,
with gold and roses scrolled,
The pewter pitcher and the silver, thin and old
That she had saved for best, with her crochet rug.
Then she put bright leaves and berries in the baby's mug.

A man may go by signs
And things that were;
A woman knows, for earth
Is kin to her.

My man's a quiet, gentle man,
hard-working and good,
God-fearing and stouthearted,
strong as hickory wood,
Yet last night, when the wind blew
rugged from the south
He got that tight and lornsome look around his mouth
As he watched the clouds pile up,
blurrylike and dim,
And said to lose the wheat again
would surely finish him.

Today the wagon wheel of sky is almost buckwheat blue,
Though from the south a little tomboy wind steals through,
But as I lay the table, with snowy linen spread,
Set out the flowered plates and slice
the homemade bread,
And lay out grandma's silver, all
sparkling and clean,
A meadow lark is singing, down in the wheat field's green.

A man sees but the grain
In golden sweep,
A woman feels the strong
Roots running deep.

'They've always been uddlesome . . . now they're olorful, too!"

DENTONS

best-known

knitted Sleepers

ince 1895

ow, choose Dentons in lovely reamland pastels...PINK, BLUE, AIZE, MINT GREEN...made of
)0% long staple, premium cot-
n. Or the traditional LIGHT
RAY, fine wool-blend sleeper, mous since 1895. Whichever our choice, Dentons assure you
e best in appearance, comfort, armth and health protection.

- Denton Fabric has a luxurious, cashmere-like finish, lightly napped for extra wear.
- Generous sizes . . . do not shrink out of fit.
- Nine-thread seams . . . smooth and strong.
- Full-cut seat, with elastic closure.
- Adjustable, snug-fitting double-ribbed cuffs.
- Gripper fasteners . . . no "button bother".
- Exclusive extra-heavy single-thickness feet are ankle height for maximum wear and quick drying.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

COMMENDED PARENTS MAGAZINE

Sold by leading department stores and baby shops . . . coast to coast

DENTON SLEEPING GARMENT
MILLS, INC.
Centreville, Michigan
Agencies in Canada: Mercury Mills, Ltd., Hamilton, Ont.

guilty of murderous assault, was sentenced to two years and six months in the state prison and subsequently deported from the United States. He died in Italy in 1940.

Preceding Rocky in the day's calendar of sentences, Augustine Castillo, whom a jury had found guilty of a similar charge, was sentenced to "not less than five nor more than six years" in the state prison. Then Rocky, neatly dressed in a light gray sports jacket and bright yellow shirt, appeared before Judge McCullen. In a plea for leniency, Attorney Robert P. Brown, who served as court-appointed counsel without fee, stressed factors of Rocky's environment and personality. He said, "In the most literal sense, he throws himself upon the mercy of the Court."

Judge McCullen replied, "The Court is always interested in individual justice, but it also measures collective justice. What the defendant has done not only affects him, but everybody else. Who is responsible I cannot say. I wish I had the answer. I wonder if anybody has. The Court approaches such a matter as this in the same way it approaches all similar matters: What is best for the individual and what is best for the public? This young man perhaps needs care. I must measure everything as I find it. For that reason, the judgment of this Court is that he go to the Elmira Reformatory."

An indefinite sentence to the Elmira Reformatory, limited to young inmates who are given the opportunity to learn a trade, was received thankfully by Rocky's relatives. But Rocky was not at all satisfied. "I hear from boys who have been there it's pretty rough," he told his attorney later. He would have much preferred a minimum definite sentence to Sing Sing—where older, more important criminals go.

YOUTH BEFORE THE JUDGE

(Continued from Page 59)

judgment are least developed. The life of almost any individual is apt to be the result, to some degree at least, of what catches his attention and fires his imagination in his youth. Young people are apt to be worshipers of heroes, and where real ones do not exist, imitation ones are often made to serve. It is unfortunate that vice can more readily be dramatized than virtue. Our police and our courts know that criminals, generally, are a drab, crude, unattractive lot. Yet criminals and their activities are sometimes presented so dramatically in the news that to certain limited minds their criminality actually appears as a kind of heroism, worthy of esteem and imitation.

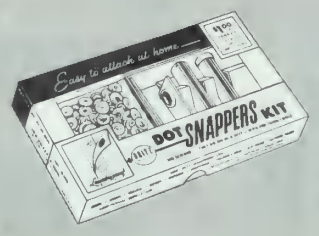
Youth needs heroes in which it can believe. Crime is said to be noticeably less prevalent during any well-contested World Series. There is no way to gauge the good accomplished among our youth by a Babe Ruth, a Joe DiMaggio or a Jackie Robinson.

Let us work to get schools that will dramatize the still unparalleled opportunities of America, that will stress the heart-warming appeal that lies in honesty and honor, that will teach the responsibilities that we, as citizens, must assume;

. . . churches that will reach those now inadequately cognizant of their duty to God, to decency and right;

. . . public examples that once again will tend to strengthen belief in the honorable principles upon which America was founded;

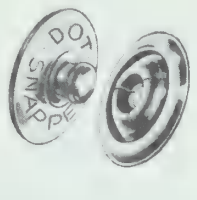
. . . law-enforcement agencies that will honestly dispense even-handed justice that is tempered, especially where youth is concerned, by understanding and sympathy.



Among our youth a new America is in the making. It will have its weaknesses, as the nation we ourselves have made now has. But it will have its virtues and its strength, for young people in general, by their very nature, are clean and forward-looking. I am convinced that the youth of America are rising above their heritage. Let us, by all means, aid them to overcome their weaknesses, but let us not forget to glory in their strength.

THE END

Two to get ready? It's a Snap!



When you've a double order of toddlers to dress, you're twice as grateful for the speed and convenience of snap creepers. Dot Snappers are a big help in any mother's life. They work in a flash, stay fastened under strain, are completely laundryproof and durable. Make it a point to ask for snap creepers. They're just one example of many ways in which Dot Snappers and other United-Carr products make life easier for you.

SMART SEW-AT-HOMES

Put laundryproof Dot Snappers on the clothes you make with the Dot Snappers Kit. Complete with professional attaching tool. At notion counters, $1 a box, refills 25¢.

Laundryproof
DOT SNAPPERS
®

UNITED-CARR, FIRST IN FASTENERS, CAMBRIDGE 42, MA

The Make-Believe Twins

Gallop - a - galloping down the street, here comes Penny and here comes Pete. You can easily tell from their tossing heads that these two Horses are Thoroughbreds.

Now they canter into the yard. They're Saddled and Bridled! They whinny hard and paw at the ground. It's time for the race.

Hurrah!

They're off!

It's a Steeplechase, with the willow stump for a noble jump, then twice round the Garden and back to place.

Which of them wins?

It doesn't matter, for out comes Mother with a heaping platter of cinnamon Cookies that she's just made and a big glass Pitcher of Lemonade.

By PHYLLIS McGINLEY
DRAWN By ROBERTA MacDONALD

Beautiful beginning
Tender ending

This is a short story. It's about the life of a pea. It's short because they're Green Giant Brand peas.

These peas are farmed with such care in soil so rich that they grow to a good size while still babies in tenderness. They're picked at their fleeting moment of perfect flavor and packed within three hours from the vine, dewy-fresh.

That's the whole story. Oh, one more part. It's when you eat them. Most folks think it's the best part. How about you?

Improving the breed. Here a Green Giant scientist fertilizes a pea blossom by hand. Result: finer seed, more tender peas.

Green Giant BRAND Peas

SEE THE GREEN GIANT TV SHOW, "LIFE WITH (ART) LINKLETTER," ON ABC-TV

Green Giant Company, headquarters, Le Sueur, Minnesota; Fine Foods of Canada, Ltd., Tecumseh, Ontario.
"Green Giant" Brand Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. ©GGCo.

Praises easy-to-use Dry Yeast

Busy Mother Is Prize-Winning Cook

Ever since school days, Mrs. Wallace W. Eidson has been winning prizes for her cooking . . . and she's still at it! Last fall, at the DeKalb County Fair, she won ribbons in 5 different cooking contests. And over the past 20 years she has made an impressive record at the Georgia State Fair as well. Here she shows her latest awards to her children at their home in Dunwoody, Ga.

Of course, Sandra, Wally, Bobby and Gene agree that their mother's cooking is tops. And, like top cooks all over the country, Mrs. Eidson uses Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast. "This speedy yeast is a grand help," she says. "I count on Fleischmann's for prize-winning results."

Who can resist delicious goodies made with yeast! Their rich, nourishing goodness will delight the whole family. When you bake at home, use yeast. And be sure you use the best—Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast. It's so fast—fast-rising and fast-dissolving! Get a supply of Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast today.

KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS

Serve Mushrooms with stuffed peppers, creamed peas, escalloped potatoes, spinach! Treat the family to

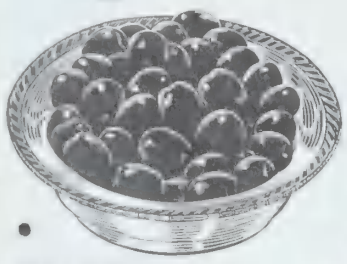
KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS

"—it's the Quality Pack"

Enjoy these finest of Cultivated Mushrooms packed at their peak: packed vitamin-fresh by a process that retains all tenderness and fresh mushroom flavor. If your Grocer doesn't have KEYSTONE Mushrooms send his name. For FREE Recipe Book write Keystone Mushroom Co., Coatesville, Pa.

RITZ

There's a Ritz Cloth for every household cleaning purpose



RITZ Since 1892

On sale at leading hardware and department stores

CLOTHS

JOHN RITZENTHALER, 73 FRANKLIN ST., N. Y. 13

Ripe Olives... in Sandwiches

Elegant!

Make CHIQUITA SANDWICHES

Here's how: Cut ½ cup ripe olives from pits into large pieces. Blend with ¼ cup sliced green onion, ¾ cup grated American cheese, ¼ cup chili sauce. Salt to taste. Toast 4 slices bread under broiler on one side. Spread untoasted side with olive-cheese mixture. Broil until cheese melts. Serves 4.

ELEGANT . . . and so easy to serve, so versatile in your cooking. Keep ripe olives on hand always. For free booklet of Elegant Ripe Olive Recipes, write: Olive Advisory Board, Dept. D-10, 16 Beale Street, San Francisco 5, California.

RIPE OLIVES from CALIFORNIA

CUT OUT AND PASTE ON CARD FOR YOUR RECIPE FILE

DIARY OF DOMESTICITY

(Continued from Page 38)

because gathering was just beyond my intelligence. And as a matter of fact, still is!

For October, we like robust meals. Poor Man's Stew for supper is delicious, and so kind to the budget too. I make it in the big iron kettle and hang it over the fire in the fireplace. I dice 4 good slices country salt pork and try them out in the kettle, then add 4 medium onions, diced small. When the onions are golden and tender, I add 3 cups milk and 3 cups hot water and, finally, 4 large potatoes, diced. I season well with freshly ground pepper and chopped parsley, and simmer until the bouquet that rises makes everyone watch the clock to see how soon we can eat.

This is the kind of dish the early families who lived here must have had often. And like squash and cabbage and potatoes, it has a good homely charm. With it I serve small hot squares of corn bread, currant jelly and coffee. If the neighbors drop in, a jar of freshly made applesauce is easy to open.

The cellar is filled with the last garden vegetables: the deep emerald acorn squash, the pale butternut squash, the cabbages, the potatoes, the winter carrots. Those big winter carrots take on a new life, I discovered, if they are thinly sliced lengthwise with a potato slicer, and the curls dropped in hot butter or margarine, covered and cooked quickly.

Peppers are a misunderstood vegetable often. They can be stuffed or made into relish or diced in a salad bowl, but they are also good sliced thin, the seeds removed, and the slices dropped in boiling salted water and parboiled five minutes or so. Then, drained, they go in a hot spider with butter or margarine, and I shake the spider back and forth until the slices are slightly browned. Seasoned with salt and pepper and MSG and maybe a dash of Worcestershire, they are fit for Mr. Churchill himself.

The highest towers begin from the ground.
—CHINESE PROVERB.

Austrian potatoes are another sound supper dish. To make them, you wash and peel and slice thinly 6 potatoes and fry them gently in 3 tablespoons shortening (bacon fat especially good) until tender and golden. Turn into a baking dish. Mix together 2 cups cottage cheese, 3 tablespoons thick sour cream, 2 beaten eggs and 1 teaspoon salt. Pour this over the potatoes. Bake in a slow oven (275° F.) for about 10 or 15 minutes or until mixture has set. Serves six, if it has to.

WHAT'S good with Austrian potatoes is a dish of broiled country bacon, a green-salad bowl, and for dessert a bowl of rosy polished apples and a wedge of creamy Muenster cheese. Not a dieter's meal, but very fine after a day outdoors in October.

This is the time, next to Christmas, when we like best to have a big buffet dinner. The weather is mild enough so guests can arrive without frozen fingers, we are almost certain no blizzard will cut off the current we live by, and it isn't too hot in the kitchen to cook a mort of food. I always feel young and hopeful, too, in the crisp dramatic season.

Stillmeadow is a small house—it was built in 1690, when families were large, but houses snug and tight. So we set up the aluminum table in the "parlor" where once the little organ stood when the parson had his services there. We put the Wedgwood platter that was my mother's in the center, with all the little canapés that I call the nip and tucks, for you nip them up and tuck them in. Tomato juice spiced with herbs can be hot in little cups or cold in small glasses, and we serve the liquid from the top of the radio-phonograph, and who cares? Then the table holds egg canapés, shrimp dipped in sauce, crispy crackers with cheese and red pepper, and plenty of it, and broiled until bubbly. That round wheat breakfast cereal braised in butter and garlic is very nice to dip into. And those ineluctable smoked oysters that I got in my stocking last Christmas—well, it's not so long until another Christmas, so there they go, on scarlet and blue toothpicks.

Jill takes frozen flounder fillets, poaches them gently and mashes them in the mortar, with the pestle, and adds tartar sauce and seasoning, and heaps the delicate bits on crackers. Nobody can tell what it is, but thinks it is lobster or crab. Then there are clams, minced and mixed with cream cheese and broiled briefly. And for a final touch, the celery and carrot curls bedded in olives.

IN the taproom, which is the family room, and the room we live in all winter long with the fire leaping in the great old fireplace, we set out plates and silver and paper napkins, but big comfortable ones, and the hot casseroles. And a nice home-cured ham for Steve to slice thin, for Steve is a carver to end all carving. I notice the casserole of home-baked beans always goes so fast, it has to be replaced immediately. I still stoke up the wood stove in the back kitchen and do it the way mamma did. Sometimes I add cloves and cinnamon for spiced flavor, but the buried onion and the thick dark molasses and the mustard and brown sugar are all there, as they were, no doubt, in 1690.

For the great salad bowl for a party, I take the bowl and hunt around in the refrigerator. Sour cream is a good beginning, French dressing nice, a soupçon of remoulade sauce left over from yesterday, a few chopped slivers of dill pickles, and all the diced and sliced things that look salad-minded. Then the lettuce—it keeps growing long after that killing frost—and a whisk of Roquefort, and a slice or two of ham cut up fine or a bit of chicken breast—and there you are, a salad that is one of a kind, for you can never repeat it.

I learned from Johannes, who learned it in the great old kitchen of his Viennese home, to begin with the bowl, make the dressing in it, and then add the salad material proper. The whole thing marinates better, and blends in so smoothly.

My pièce de résistance for dessert for a buffet dinner is generally angel-food cake, because we have eggs from George and because I can make it a day ahead and not worry. And it is easy to serve. And after all the neighbors have finished, and the kitchen is a whirligig of everyone bringing things out, we like to bring in fresh coffee and arrest the stampede.

The evening is no trouble. The music lovers go in the front room and play records, the taproom fireplace has a group discussing a new variety of tomatoes to plant next year or the best kind of fertilizer for the upland fields or what to do when your child won't eat! Olive shares a fabulous new curry recipe, Moe expounds a fine dog-training theory, Erma and George are talking about brown Swiss cows. Everybody is conscious of the world, it isn't a self-centered world, but it is country, and in the country we realize that every day has its own piece of living to be done and we share it.

After everyone has gone, Little Sister emerges from the seclusion of under-the-bed, for she is just not social, and Esmé utters her Greek-tragedy moan for more food, and Jill turns on the kennel lights and pushes out in the chill air to give Jerry and Daphne a last bowl of milk—they are always hungry.

I look out at the stars and the moon, and the little house makes those settling sounds an old house always makes. And I wish I could share the cool sweet dark with all lonely, tired people in the world, ask them in to sit a few moments by the ebbing fire, and maybe have a curried egg and a slice of country ham. Surely, I think, seeing the lights of the cars go down the road, we are all neighbors, all of us in the world.

Little Sister nudges me; she wants to put her black-and-white head on my pillow and get some rest.

But I say a last good night to the world before I turn out the lantern light at the picket gate, and look once more at the silver sail of the moon that is always new, and always beautiful. THE END

6 Ideas for every mother with children in school

Milk-rich lunches to go on... to grow on lunches to carry

Take-to-school lunches can be varied . . . tasty . . . something warm . . . and full of MILK-rich goodness, too. Here are three that satisfy!

4 Hot out of a thermos bottle—Cream of Tomato Soup! Crackers. Ah-h-h, then . . . a delicious, "stick-to-the-ribs," BUTTERED Egg-and-Lettuce Sandwich. So good, with a refreshing glass of MILK. And for a fortifying finish, Custard and BUTTER Cookies!

5 Greet that pent-up, noontime hunger with BUTTERED, CHEESE-and-Ham Sandwiches. With them a thermos of Hot Cocoa . . . or refreshing Chocolate MILK. And to top off these good things from home . . . Sponge Cake and a Banana! What a food foundation for education!

6 "Oh, see what we've got today!" BUTTERED Meat-Loaf Sandwich . . . followed by a Pimento CHEESE-Spread Sandwich . . . with a pint of fresh MILK . . . loaded with health and plenty of energy. Top it off to complete satisfaction with Fruit Salad and BUTTER Cookies! M-M-m-m, what eatin'!

lunches to come home to Racing footsteps . . . eager appetites . . . and here are lunches packed with MILK-rich taste and energy . . . to "go" on . . . to grow on!

1 Creamed Chipped Beef on BUTTERED Toast . . . M-M-m-m . . . how good! Glass o' MILK . . . for health, growth . . . the spark of life! Flavory apple sauce . . . with chocolate Brownies! "M-M-m-m, yummy . . . thanks Mother!"

2 Piping hot Cream-of-Corn Soup . . . "Oh, Boy!" with Crackers! That's a tune-up for a Grilled CHEESE, BUTTERED-Toast Sandwich . . . taste-tempting, satisfying! Glass o' MILK, of course . . . for the "lift that lasts" . . . topped off with BUTTER Cookies and ICE CREAM. Each a relished treat . . . all quick and easy for you!

3 Loaded with goodness! Devilled Eggs in CHEESE Sauce on BUTTERED Toast . . . Smack!—Smack! Cold glass of rich, fresh MILK . . . to "go" on . . . to grow on! And to satisfy the "sweet tooth"—Butterscotch Cake . . . and Gelatine Dessert with CREAM. Back to school . . . well-fed and happy!

School lunches—at home or to carry—can be taste-temptingly varied, yet simple and easy, inexpensive, too, with life-giving MILK and other nutritious DAIRY FOODS.

AMERICAN DAIRY ASSOCIATION

"Voice of the Dairy Farmer"

20 N. Wacker Drive Bldg., Chicago 6, Illinois

LIVE BETTER (longer, stronger) WITH DAIRY FOODS

The difference between this...

and this...

is often this...

JOHNSON'S BABY OIL

Mild, pure, made specially to agree with delicate skin—Johnson's Baby Oil helps prevent irritations, soothe and smooth baby's skin after bath and at diaper changes.

JOHNSON'S BABY POWDER

Silky-soft, with a fresh, delicate scent—Johnson's Baby Powder is such a pleasant way to chase away prickles and chafes, keep baby comfy and contented.

Johnson & Johnson

HERB KRATOVIL

The handicap of poor vision can usually be corrected. The problem is discovering it—even when signs are obvious.

Guard Your Youngster's Eyesight!

By Dr. Herman N. Bundesen

President, Chicago Board of Health

IF there were just one idea that I could put across to mothers, it would be this: When things aren't going well in your child's world, look into his physical condition first of all!

This doesn't mean that factors in the environment may not be at fault, or that a youngster's difficulties may not spring from emotional causes. But I find many children still being classed as "stupid" or problems, when in reality they are ill, or have a physical condition that needs remedying.

For instance, when a child is "dumb" in school, or irritable at home, how many parents think to have his eyesight examined?

Take Dickie. His parents were professional people of much more than average intelligence. Dickie himself was a bright lad—outside of school. In school he made mistakes so stupid they seemed to be deliberate. Instead of trying to do better, he spent his time in mischief-making. Every report-card period meant a painful session for Dickie with his mortified parents.

Fortunately for Dickie, he acquired an ailment which called for a complete physical examination. Then it was discovered that he needed glasses very badly. The first night that Dickie wore them, he sat down to dinner and looked about him with astonishment.

"Why," he said, "the table's round. I always thought it was oval!"

When Dickie could not even see the outlines of the dining-room table, what a garbled impression he must have had of the things the teacher wrote on the blackboard! Seeing things as they really were was all Dickie needed to turn him into a good student, and thereby improve his behavior.

It is not hard to understand how a visual defect can go undetected unless parents and teachers are vigilant. Until a child goes to school and has to learn to read and write, his visual tasks are not exacting, and in most cases only a careful examination can reveal variations from normal vision. Even when he begins to read, the child who doesn't see clearly is not himself aware of this fact, because he has had no experience to show him what normal sight should be.

Then, too, I am sorry to say, bad lighting in many schools and homes produces poor

(Continued on Page 138)

DOCTOR BUNDESEN'S booklets, used by many thousands of enthusiastic mothers, cover all phases of baby care. They are:

BEFORE THE BABY COMES (prenatal months), No. 2383, 50c.

First series of booklets, covering first eight months, 50c.

Second series of booklets, covering nine months to two years, 50c.

OUR BABIES (complete book and invaluable supplement to the monthly booklets), No. 1345, 50c.

A DOCTOR'S FIRST DUTY TO THE MOTHER (breast-feeding helps), No. 1346, 6c.

Address all requests to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

Bringing Up Baby

HINTS COLLECTED BY Mrs Dan Gerber
(MOTHER OF 5)

Mrs. Gerber

One of the things an infant never seems to learn is to lie still while being changed. One way to cut down the wiggles is to have a special favorite toy that you give him only at changing time. Distract him just before you lay him down, and he'll probably stay interested long enough to forget somewhat about squirming.

* * *

For future reference. Wondering where to put your summer snapshots? A file box such as the kind recipes are kept in, makes a good storage container until you get around to mounting your snapshots in a family album.

* * *

Happy endings at mealtime begin with Gerber's Desserts! Have you discovered how fond babies are of Gerber's Strained Desserts? Three to choose from, too! Custard (Vanilla), Chocolate Custard and Orange Pudding! So smooth! So delicious! And very nourishing because they're made of egg yolks and whole milk.

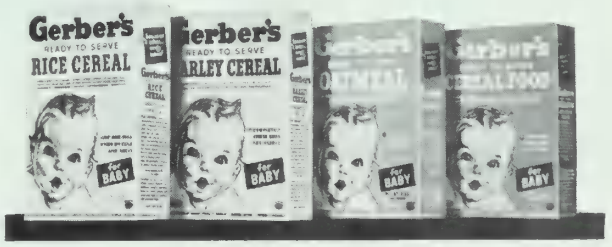
* * *

Very reassuring to know that Gerber's Desserts, like all Gerber's Baby Foods, are accepted by the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association.

* * *

Check weather reports to help you decide whether baby needs an extra sweater for his airing, or extra cover at naptime or at night.

* * *

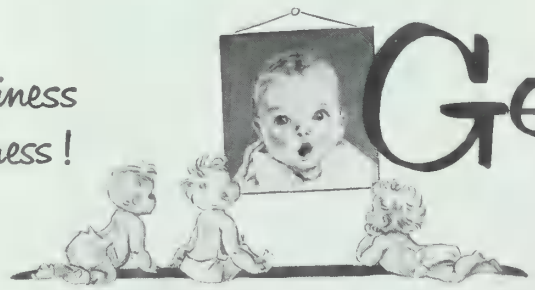


Vanishing act. To loosen milk ring in baby bottles, put in a half teaspoon of baking soda and fill with water. Otherwise, brush with a modern detergent. To prevent milk ring, rinse bottles in cold water as soon as possible.

* * *

Absolutely free! Samples of Gerber's famous Cereal Quads: New Rice Cereal, Barley Cereal, Oatmeal, and Cereal Food. Just write me, Mrs. Dan Gerber, Dept. 810-1, Fremont, Mich. In Canada, Gerber-Ogilvie Baby Foods, Ltd., Niagara Falls, Canada.

4 good "starters" for your tiny beginner



That first spoonful of cereal is the beginning of a brand-new experience for your tiny tot, so make a start you'll both enjoy with the Gerber Cereal your doctor recommends.

Four to grow on. Gerber's make four starting cereals for babies. There's the new Rice Cereal (the one doctors asked for), Barley Cereal, Oatmeal, and Cereal Food. All four contain generous amounts of added calcium, important B-vitamins and iron—so important to your baby's growth and development!

Appetite-builders, too! Each Gerber Cereal has its own pleasant flavor and smooth-to-the-tongue texture. This is important, for sooner or later your doctor may advise you to rotate all four for appetite-building variety. All come ready-to-serve. Just add milk or formula, and stir!

As your baby's food needs increase, you'll discover that Gerber's also offer the most complete selection of Fruits, Vegetables, Soups, Meats and Desserts. All prepared by experts who make baby foods and nothing else. So you see, there's truth to the remark that next to you, nobody thinks more of your baby's needs than Gerber's.

Babies are our business
...our only business!

Gerber's
BABY FOODS

CEREALS — STRAINED AND JUNIOR FOODS — MEATS

(Continued from Page 136)

vision in a host of children who started to school with perfectly normal eyes. Teachers and parents must be alert to the signs of poor vision.

In modern school systems, teachers are taught what these signs are: improper or strained posture, such as "hunching" over the book or page; irritability, fatigue or restlessness during reading and writing periods; redness of the eyes, or watering, signs of strain; consistent failure to recognize letters and words that are easily distinguishable to other children.

Yet it is astonishing to find how often the most obvious signs are overlooked. I have gone into a classroom many times and noticed that a youngster was reading or writing with his head cradled in his arm, or even with his head flat on the desk. Yet when I have suggested that the child be sent to the doctor for an eye examination, everyone was surprised.

Sometimes, of course, Johnny or Dickie may simply be overtired when he reads with his head cocked to one side or cradled on his arm. But if this happens consistently, it is almost sure to mean visual trouble. If a note from Johnny's teacher suggests an eye examination, lose no time in having one made!

A man never sees all that his mother has been to him till it's too late to let her know that he sees it.
—WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS.

The most common forms of visual defect in children are nearsightedness (myopia) and astigmatism. In most cases of nearsightedness, the eyeball is elongated so that instead of coming to a focus exactly at the retina, the image is focused in front of the retina, and the picture that is transmitted to the brain is blurred. In order to bring the focus back into its proper position, the youngster must move the object viewed closer to the eye.

Astigmatism is an irregularity in the curvature of the cornea, or lens, which causes light rays to be bent unequally so that the focus of the retina is blurred. Here again, the child may resort to tricks of posture in an effort to achieve a clear picture. If the astigmatism occurs in only one eye, the child may find that cocking his head to one side enables him to see better.

Whatever the difficulty, a doctor's thorough examination will quickly disclose it. Properly fitted glasses can refract light rays in such a way as to overcome or compensate for the defect. When glasses are prescribed, they should be obtained and worn exactly as ordered by the doctor. I am sorry to say that mothers of little girls, in particular, sometimes think that glasses detract from appearance, and fail to get them, or do not insist that they be worn as the doctor has prescribed. Today, children feel no strangeness or embarrassment about wearing glasses unless the parents show undue concern.

Quite a number of mothers ask me about popular movements of late years which offer "better sight without glasses," through a regimen of exercises aimed at strengthening the eye muscles. While it is true that there are some visual disorders, particularly in older persons, which are due to muscular weakness and can sometimes be helped by exercise routines, by far the greater number of poor-vision cases in children are caused by variations in the structure of the eye itself. No amount of exercise can possibly cure conditions of this kind.

I remember one twelve-year-old girl whose irritability and discontent were attributed by her doctor to constant eyestrain. He advised glasses. The parents, however, had read a book about eye exercises. They decided the doctor was old-fashioned, and had the girl do eye exercises instead. Her disposition and eyesight both grew steadily worse. Finally they did get the glasses. When I saw this girl a year later I didn't recognize her; she had grown so much plumper and prettier, as a happy expression had replaced her former sullen, rebellious one.

Of course there are many other causes of poor vision besides the two principal ones I have discussed. Like myopia and astigmatism, however, most of these can be corrected if they are discovered promptly and diagnosed accurately by a competent doctor. In many cases, the condition itself will grow worse if corrective measures are not taken.

In the home, parents should take care to provide good lighting for the children's reading and other activities which call for concentrated eye application. PTA's should make it a project to see that schoolrooms are properly lighted. The first signs of visual trouble in individual children should have prompt medical attention. Thus you may guard your child against poor vision—one of a parent's most important responsibilities.

THE GREAT COMPANIONS

(Continued from Page 42)

strained at it, sliding it open, a gust of wind whistled past him, and he felt a twitch of fear that it would waken the boys. Quickly he crawled out on the stone ledge and pulled the window shut behind him. It was scary here, clinging by his fingers, with tree branches whipping at him out of the darkness; but he thought of Spook and knew that if he didn't get home Spook would die.

His eyes could make out the big limb of the maple now, swaying just above his head. He swallowed hard—and jumped for it. His arm hooked the limb; he dangled perilously for a few seconds, then began scrambling down. Tad was strong for his eight years, and when he touched the lowermost branch of the maple, he hung by his hands, and dropped the last eight feet to the ground. His ankles stung as he picked himself up; then he set off at a limping run toward the wall. He could see better now, for the sky was bright, spotted like a leopard with scudding clouds. A howl of wind reminded him of Mr. Swaile's dog—and he hobbled faster until he had made the wall and was clambering over it.

In the road he glanced back. The institution humped its black shape against the sky like some hideous crouching monster; and as Tad blinked, the moon pounced out at him from a jungle of clouds. He started to run, frantic dread snatching at his coattails.

The moon had gone, but Tad could see the Four Corners ahead. That meant he had covered more than a mile. He stopped, winded, pain knifing his side. Then he saw the man, not twelve paces away, standing with his arms stretched out. A chill rippled up Tad's neck. Crazy Carl! It was along in here that the Rinkes boys had seen Crazy Carl and he had chased them and scared the tar out of them. But now, as Tad crouched, trembling, the moon sailed out again—and the man in the road was only a signpost! Still shaking, he hurried past the signpost and turned left on the Mill Road.

From here to his mother's place was more than nine miles. It might take all night to get there, walking. And the dark was alive with so many fearsome things; he never knew when it would come tearing after him. Worst of all, he would have to pass the graveyard: the graveyard where Will Teeple and some boys had been playing, the day they took the marble dove off a tombstone and a dead man's hand fluttered up out of the grave, clutching at them! Tad shivered.

But more earthbound miseries intervened, for the moment dulling his terror. The tight button shoes had blistered both heels. Sitting down, he pulled them off, and the stockings with them. When he trudged on again he began to whistle—tunelessly but loudly, to take his mind off the wind shrieking out of darkness, twisting the trees until they groaned in torment. The cold road felt good to his feet and he swung a shoe in each hand.

He had run all the way from the graveyard and his chest hurt so that he could hardly

Evenflo® Original EVERYTHING
nurser with

- Bottle-Nipple-Cap All-In-One
- Finger Tip Control for regulated, uninterrupted feeding
- Easier To Nurse with the Patented Twin Air Valve Nipple
- Pure natural rubber nipple nurses by compression as well as suction
- Handier To Use with the Sure-Grip No-Slip Cap

COMPLETE NURSER
Only 25c
NIPPLE & PARTS
Only 10c

SMART CHOICE
Springfoot Sox®
FOR BOYS FROM SIX TO SIXTY

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
COMMENDED BY PARENTS MAGAZINE
THEY WEAR WELL!

SIZES 6 to 13
39¢ to $1.25 A PAIR

Featured by selected leading retailers of boys' and young men's apparel. For the name of your nearest dealer write:

WILMINGTON HOSIERY MILLS, INC.
WILMINGTON 17, DELAWARE

catch his breath. It was still dark, but over the hill to eastward the sky had grayed. Back of the woodshed he halted. This was where he had watched them carry out the long pine box and one of the neighbor women had told him he wouldn't see ma any more. Thinking of ma made his eyes smart, but no tears came; he had cried himself out. Then he remembered Spook—and quickly fumbled for the hasp and pushed open the door. The woodshed was black as a cave, but its cool smells were familiar: oak chunks for the kitchen range; hams that had hung here after the smokehouse; machine oil; and the vague gamy odor of a little forest animal.

"Spook!" He took another step. "Spook!" But there was no answering sound. For a dreadful moment Tad thought he had come too late: Spook was dead—starved to death; or somebody had let him loose! Then he heard the faint jingle of the chain and his heart beat fast. "Spook!" In the darkness he found the tin matchbox and struck a light. There, above a pile of stovewood, gleamed the weird black-ringed eyes of a raccoon. Tad started toward it. "Everything's all right, Spook," he said, and unhooked the chain from a ring in the wall.

But for Spook everything was not all right. Two days of imprisonment and neglect had restored his primal suspicion of men, and as Tad approached he sprang away, jerking the chain free. Tad struck another match—in time to see the raccoon scurry through a half-open door into the kitchen.

On the kitchen floor a large Negro, wrapped in a blanket, awoke with the impression that a ghost had just traipsed over his body, clanking its chain. He sat up, and by the eerie dawn in the window saw two terrible black-ringed eyes staring at him. With a leap he was out of his blanket—and out of the house, shouting a fervent appeal to the Lord.

In front of the barn stood a van-shaped wagon, from which the horses had been unhitched for the night. As the Negro sprinted toward it, the rear door flew open and a tall, rangy man stepped out into the dawn.

"Little early for prayers," he yawned.

The Negro halted, panting. "I saw something!" He pointed a shaky hand at the house. "I saw it as plain as anything, doctor!"

"Another ghost?"

"It was supernatur'l, I know that."

THE tall man stretched elaborately; then ran his fingers through his thick, dark hair. "Enoch," he said, "remember me telling you how I offered fifty dollars cash to any spirit medium in the city of Chicago that could trot out a ghost?"

"But, doctor, you told me yourself about Hamlet."

"Hamlet wasn't all there." The doctor tapped his high forehead. "Had so many domestic problems, one thing another, he was kind of off his rocker."

Then both of them noticed a frightened little boy in the doorway, with a raccoon in his arms.

"Well," said Doc Tilbee briskly, "there's your ghost. Bloodthirsty-looking too. Don't blame you for running." And while Enoch gaped, he called out, "Hello, sport!"

Tad hung back in the doorway, staring at them and at their wagon. It was like the wagons he had seen in the gypsy camp that day, near Springville. But the tall man did not look like a gypsy. With his long hair and his trousers tucked in boots, he looked like those pictures of cowboys and plainsmen in the book.

Doc Tilbee walked toward him. "Couldn't raise anybody last night," he remarked pleasantly. "Took the liberty of camping here. Your folks around?"

The boy shifted his bare feet uncomfortably, but did not answer.

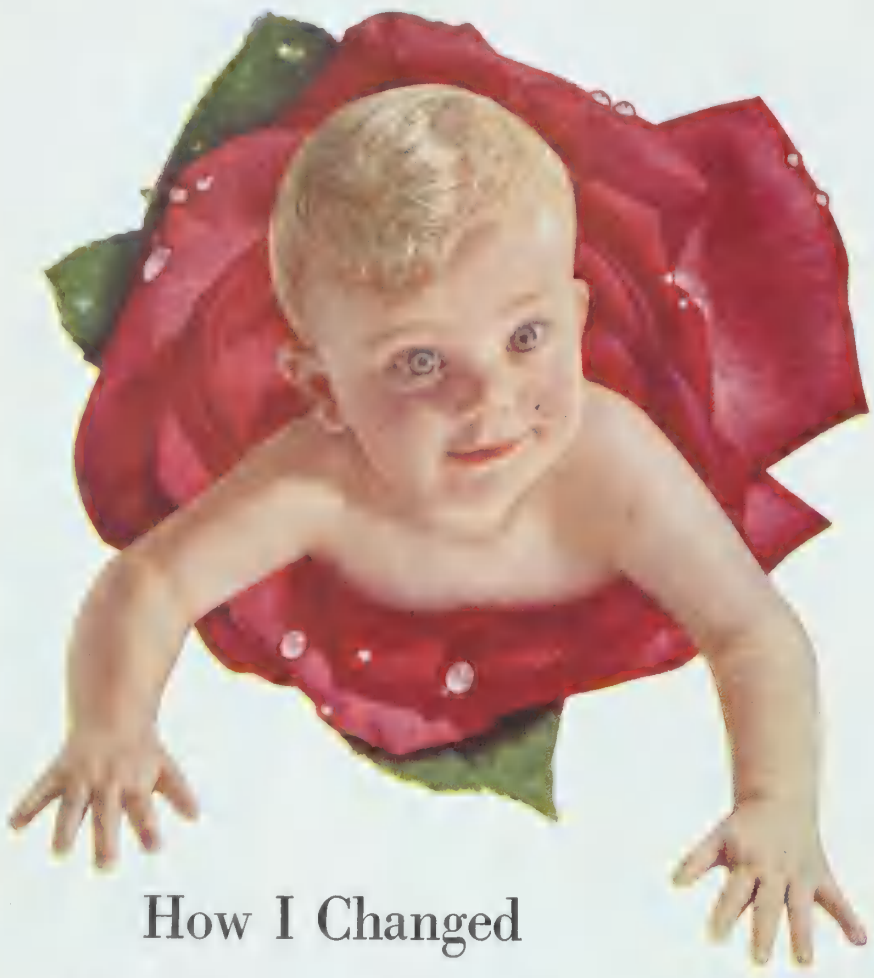
"Nobody home?"

Tad shook his head.

"You mean you're here all alone?"

Tad glanced away quickly, and Doc, watching the small sensitive face, saw the chin quiver.

"Tell you what, sport"—he reached in his pocket and jingled some coins—"give you a dime if you'll bring me cream for my coffee."



Help your baby make the most of those priceless posture-building hours. KANTWET provides the lasting firm, level support that's so important in developing a strong, straight back. Recommended by more doctors, more mothers, more stores — KANTWET is the original posturized crib mattress — the only one to bring you all these constructive health and posture features:

IMPROVED DORSAL CONSTRUCTION — greater firmness, greater resilience, greater posture help. Better by actual test — you can feel the difference!

- BUILT-IN straight line support!
- FLEX-O-LOC INNERSPRING — lasting firm resilience!
- DOUBLE-SEALED TUFTS — keep filling in place, keep moisture out!
- WETPROOF, WASHABLE COVER — stays sweet, clean, sanitary.

THERE'S A KANTWET PAD FOR EVERY NURSERY ACCESSORY

How I Changed
My Personality With

Mennen Baby Magic

Diaper rash had me howling,
Wailing and yowling,
My skin was so sore 'twas tragic!

Mummy said: don't you cry,
I know what we'll try,
That wonderful thing that's called Magic!

Now my skin feels divine,
So soft, smooth and fine,
I'm gay as a bird in a tree.

I'm fresh as the dawn.
Diaper problems? All gone!
Baby Magic worked magic for me!

the only skin care that checks diaper odor and diaper rash...in nursery-safe, unbreakable Squeeze Bottle

Reminder for mother: Don't forget, when you buy Baby Magic, to get a superfine powder, too. None is purer, softer, smoother than Mennen Baby Powder! Delectably scented. Helps soothe chafing, prickles, itchy, irritated skin. Amusing Built-in Rattle . . . Mother Goose pictures on sides—at no extra cost!

MENNEN
BABY PRODUCTS

Tad looked up at him. The smile was friendly and reassuring. He nodded and set the raccoon down, hooking its chain on the doorknob; then he made off at a lope. In the springhouse he crouched and sniffed at a crock of milk resting in the cold water. It was still sweet, so he began skimming the thick cream off the top, as he had watched ma do it, into the china jug. When the jug was full he started back, carrying it gingerly.

The sun was up now, and Enoch had built a fire near the wagon and there was a delicious smell of fresh coffee in the air.

Doc Tilbee stood lathering his face in front of a mirror hung on a nail by the back door. He eyed the jug of cream Tad set down, and nodded approval.

"Here you go, bub." A coin flashed in the sunlight. Tad caught it with both hands, pleased. "Nine more of those and you'll have a dollar," said doc. "A round silver dollar—the chariot wheel of success."

Tad leaned against a tree, turning the dime in his fingers and thinking about a chariot that had silver dollars for wheels. Doc whipped off his belt, deftly stropped a straight razor on it, then, with the air of a surgeon performing a delicate operation, he began to shave. Tad watched, fascinated—until a waft of tantalizing aromas drew his attention to the fire. Enoch knelt at a skillet, one hand turning strips of golden bacon, the other toasting bread on a long fork. In a sacerdotal flourish he lifted the coffeepot from the blaze and poured two tin cups full.

"Breakfast, doctor."

Doc wiped his angular sun-brown jaw and put away the razor. Then he buckled his belt tight and pulled on a corduroy jacket. There was something impressive about the man. He looked forty—and handsome in the manner of those Western adventurers that Frederic Remington had lately made popular. His tall, lithe figure was erect and broad of shoulder, and he walked with a rather pronounced swagger.

"Never smell bacon and coffee on a fall morning I don't think of the last time old Rain-in-the-Face led a band of Sioux on the warpath," he said. "I was with the Seventh Calv'ry. We drove 'em back to their reservation." He seated himself cross-legged on the ground and heaped a tin plate with fried eggs and bacon. "Rain-in-the-Face was the cuss that killed Gen'l Custer's brother Tom and ate his heart." He speared a slice of toast. "Bacon's delicious, Enoch—just crisp enough." Then he noticed the boy with the tame raccoon hovering nearby. "Had breakfast, bub?" he asked. Tad shook his head. "Well, now ——" Doc gestured hospitably with his knife. "Enoch!"

"Yes, doctor." Enoch laid aside his own food and filled a plate and gave it to the boy, who took it without a word and fell to eating ravenously.

"Had a good many dealings with Indians." Doc was addressing no one in particular. "Never heard one of 'em say 'Thank you.' That's the big difference between a savage and a civilized human being."

TAD stopped chewing and flicked a glance at him. The doctor was blandly sipping coffee, but Tad knew what he meant, and it chalked a mark on his spiritual slate: he would always remember to say "Thank you."

When he had finished eating, Doc brought out a cigar, bit off the end with his strong teeth and lighted it carefully. Smoking, he watched the boy feed scraps to the raccoon; then he turned and appraised this down-at-the-heels farm: the pinched little house with a sagging roof, and the old unpainted barn that looked as if a good wind would blow it over. There were no farm animals to be seen, not even a chicken. He looked back at the boy, puzzled.

"Where are your folks, sonny?"

Tad's hand, patting the raccoon, paused. His eyes clouded. "Haven't got any," he answered quietly.

Doc puffed at his cigar, frowning, sensing the tragedy. A cynical intuition warned him that no good would come from prying into it, yet he could never resist his compelling cu osity about people.

"Know how you feel," he said. "I was ju about your size when my mother and fath were killed and scalped by a war party Cheyennes."

Tad's mouth opened. The impact of this a tonishing statement had jolted his own sc row right out of him. He swallowed har "Scalped?"

Doc nodded. "I crawled off in the dar caught one of the hosses and got away. We later I was picked up by Gen'l Miles' scouts

Then adroitly he switched the talk to Ta and before Tad realized it he was telling abo ma, and how, the day after she died, peop she owed money to had taken everything the place: horse, cow, chickens, even the fu niture. The doctor's story of escaping fr the massacre of his family made him want appear brave as he described the institut where he had been shut up. "Committe was the word Mr. Swaile used, explaining th it was because Tad had no kith or kin—no living relation except an uncle who had go to the Klondike and was never seen again. finished this recital breathlessly, embarrass at having talked so much.

DOC, smoking silently, scowled at a clu of alder bushes. Enoch had washed the dish under the pump, and stood by listening. was a gentle, somber man, born in slave and sometimes the woes of the world seem reflected in his round dark eyes. He look down at Tad.

"What you goin' to do now, boy?" I rumbling voice had scarcely a trace of South, for he had been reared in Illino

"Soon as they find you r away, they bound to co after you."

Abruptly Doc flung as his cigar and rose, wha ing the dust from trouser seat. "Hook u he ordered gruffly. "L get going."

Love is like hash. You have to have confidence in it before you can enjoy it.
—LEAVE IT TO THE GIRLS.

The colored man's troubled eyes turned him. "What'll happen to this here orp boy, doctor?"

Doc ignored the question and flipped ou thick silver watch. "Nearly seven. Time w on our way." He wheeled and strode off.

The colored man glanced again at the b then sighed deeply and shambled toward barn.

Doc hoisted the rattling box of camp ut sils into the back of the van, and reached for his gray slouch hat and clapped it on head. This orphan boy was no concern of He felt annoyed that he had let himself involved. But fortunately, he wasn't involv The kid was nothing to him. There were ple of people in trouble anywhere you went man couldn't sashay around the country c forting the afflicted. Let the Salvation A do that. Enoch was just a softhearted mo Angrily he slammed the back door of the v Then, as his conscience rationalized the m ter, it occurred to him that he could ill aff to loiter here. The city of Jackson lay c twenty miles east—and that potbellied ho keeper might have complained to the pol Well, the fellow should know better tha play poker with a stranger!

Tad sat with the raccoon in his arms, wa ing Enoch lead out a handsome pair of dap gray horses. Their sleek rumps shone in sunlight and their brass-studded harness tened as he backed them up to the wa tongue. The van itself had red wheels somehow resembled a circus wagon, ex that its sides were covered with plain g canvas, buttoned neatly. Tad noted a ra skylight on the roof and a small smokest with a ventilator top that spun in the w It was like a trim little house on wheels; t men could live in it while traveling. E was buckling the traces now, speaking s to the restive horses.

Doc crossed to the fire, kicked some over it to put it out, then turned to "This is for stable room last night." He up a silver dollar and tossed it to Ta landed in the dust by Tad's feet.

"Thanks," the boy mumbled. But he n no move to pick it up. Money didn't see

new bottle and nipple brushes with sanitary NYLON bristles

Your baby's bottles and rubber nipples can be easily kept clean and sanitary with these nylon-bristled brushes. Springy, resilient Du Pont nylon bristles not only clean bottles and nipples cleaner—they can be kept clean and sanitary themselves. For nylon, unlike other bristle materials, can be sterilized by boiling.

Springy, non-matting Du Pont nylon bristles stay resilient . . . never get limp or brittle . . . don't wilt or fall out. They work efficiently at all times . . . clean quickly . . . and durable nylon bristles last longer.

You can sterilize Du Pont nylon bristles by boiling. Easily kept clean and sanitary, they help you keep baby's bottles and nipples hygienically clean. Specially designed brush-ends aid thorough cleaning.

Whenever you buy any brush, ask for one with Du Pont nylon bristles, because . . .

The best brushes have DU PONT NYLON BRISTLES

DU PONT
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

Better Things for Better Living . . . through Chemistry

mean much now. In a few minutes they would be gone and he would be left alone. Then what would become of him? Mr. Swaile might be on the way already, to take him back to the institution. His heart was beating very fast, and he hugged Spook in a kind of desperation.

Doc Tilbee had walked back to the van. One foot on the wheel hub, he paused and canted his slouch hat jauntily over one eye; then he swung up onto the seat and took the reins. The Negro climbed up beside him.

Doc clucked to the horses. "Bess! Charlie!" He kicked off the brake, and the equipage moved forward. Enoch, staring at the forlorn little figure hunched in the dust, coughed uncomfortably. As they tooled past, Doc jerked the whip from its socket and waved at Tad with unnecessary bravura. "So long, scout!"

Tad sat very still, squinting after them, the sun in his eyes. His throat was choked, the way it had felt when he watched that long pine box being taken away in the spring wagon. Suddenly he heard the doctor shout "Ho!" at the horses, and the van stopped. The doctor's head stuck out.

"Look here, bub," he called, "you sure you've got no relations—anywhere?"

Tad shook his head miserably.

"No place for you to go except back to that—that institution?"

Again Tad shook his head, and a hot tear slid down his cheek.

Enoch said something then, and the doctor growled. "Never mind that guff about flying in the face of Providence!" He spat vehemently over the wheel. "All right, sonny—I guess we're elected."

Tad blinked at him.

"Come on," bellowed Doc. "Haven't got all day!"

GASPING, Tad snatched up the silver dollar, tucked Spook under his arm and raced toward the van. At the wheel he halted, his tear-streaked face incredulously happy.

"Get your things," ordered Doc briskly. "Whatever you want to bring along."

"I haven't got anything," Tad said, swallowing, "excep' Spook."

"Wait a minute, now." Doc eyed the raccoon sternly. "We're not Hagenbeck and Wallace!"

"He won't be any trouble," begged the boy. "He's clean an' ——"

"Don't know how Beezark'll feel about sharing the billing with a trained animal. What's that song, Enoch: If the Man in the Moon Had a 'Coon?"

Tad heard Enoch's rumbling laugh; then Doc had reached down and lifted him up over the wheel—and there they were, the three of them, and Spook, too, side by side on the broad, cushioned seat. Doc cracked his whip; the dapple grays pranced and the van jolted on down the lane. In that moment Tad's calamities were forgotten—and it seemed to him that he must be the happiest boy in Calhoun County or in the whole state of Michigan. But he wondered who Beezark was.

They had come out of the lane, past the wild-cherry trees, onto the main road. Ahead three cows were ambling along, followed by a scrawny woman with a stick. When one of the cows stopped to nibble at roadside weeds the woman thumped its lean flank with her stick, and as the van rolled by she glared at the occupants of the driver's seat. Then her bead eyes discovered the boy.

"Tad!"

Doc saw Tad shrink back against the seat. Saluting with his whip, he nodded politely. "Morning, ma'am"; and flicked the horses into a trot.

The woman stood still in the road, and they heard her scream after them: "Where you going with that young one?"

"Trouble!" Doc rubbed his chin with the whip butt.

Tad squirmed. "That's old Mis' Burgey. She's mean."

"By Caliban out of the Witch of Endor," said Doc.

Enoch looked worried. "She'll tell she saw us."

It was characteristic of Doc never to dwell on portents of misfortune. "Hup, there, Bess," he admonished the off horse. "Way you shy

(Continued on Page 143)

1- PROTECTION AGAINST DIAPER RASH!

Now Chix Diaper Liners are treated with an antiseptic agent* highly effective against germs causing many cases of diaper rash (Ammonia Dermatitis). Safe for baby's delicate skin! Don't wait until baby suffers from diaper rash! Use a Chix Diaper Liner with every diaper change.

2- PROTECTION AGAINST SOILED DIAPERS!

Just put a Chix Diaper Liner inside regular diaper. The liner gets soiled—but not the diaper! No mess! No stain! Diaper washing is easier than ever. Soiled liners are just flushed away like toilet tissue. And Chix Diaper Liners are sturdy . . . won't wad or fall apart when wet.

*Methylbenzethonium chloride.

Cottoned Soft* and Antiseptic, too . . . an important step forward in baby care!

Chix Diaper Liners have a downy-soft cottoned surface (not paper) that goes next to baby's tender skin. They're delicately scented, too. And now—every Chix Liner is treated with an antiseptic agent to provide protection against Ammonia Dermatitis (diaper rash). Use Chix Liners . . . a new and convenient safeguard for baby's health . . . and work-saving wonder for mother!

Accepted For Advertising In Publications Of The American Medical Association

Commended by the Consumer Service Bureau of Parents' Magazine

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

By the makers of famous CHIX Gauze Diapers, CHIX Crib Sheets and CHUX Disposable Diapers.

SEND FOR FREE SAMPLES!

CHICOPEE MILLS, INC., Dept. LHJ 1-10
47 Worth Street, New York 13, N. Y.

Send FREE samples of NEW Chix Protective Diaper Liners treated with an antiseptic agent.

Name.....

Address.....

City.....Zone....State.....

Though briefs and shirts don't expect to be seen
They stay in top form when labeled Durene

There's no woe-be-gone look about anything with the Durene label—whether it's underwear, outerwear or socks. Because everything made of Durene mercerized cotton just naturally keeps its shape. Doesn't stretch or sag. Doesn't pinch, pull or shrink-up to the "choking" point. Feels more comfortable all the way . . . thanks to the amazingly fast absorbency of Durene yarn! And that nice soft lustre is in for keeps. That's why, for quality and value, the Durene label is tops!

To protect you. Everything labeled "Made of Durene yarn" is backed by the Durene Quality Control Plan. This means that not only the yarn has to meet high quality standards . . . but the finished garment is subject to tests of performance and workmanship. Look for the Durene label and be doubly sure you're buying the best!

(Continued from Page 141)

a cow, you wouldn't be much account on a uffalo hunt. Puts me in mind"—this to ad—"of the last time I hunted with my iend Buffalo Bill. Course, we didn't call him at then. Just plain Colonel W. F. Cody. e'd been an Army scout, one of the best." nd as they rolled along through the pleasnt Michigan countryside, he told the story the iron horse, the railroad, pushing west ross the plains, where Buffalo Bill and other nters were under contract to furnish meat. ad listened, enthralled at the description of e shaggy herd thundering down the Monna hills. "Cody and I were riding together, azing away at 'em. 'There's one for you, . F.'—I always called him 'W. F.'—'and e for me!' I got three more'n he did that ay, if my memory serves me right."

Enoch often wondered whether the doctor's emory did serve him right. This buffalo hunt as alleged to have taken place in '69; and, cording to a previous statement, the doctor ad been born in '64. That would make him ly five years old at the time—probably the oungest buffalo unter on record! ut, out of loyalty, noch never ques oned the legends at his employer re ted with such ro antic gusto.

"Matter of fact," oc was saying, "it as Buffalo Bill put e on the road. I aveled with his cir s four seasons, one Europe. We showed efore all the crowned eads, the whole ka oodle of 'em, and I ot to shake hands ith the Kaiser and e Prince of Wales. hat's Edward VII, e present King of ngland," he added. Nice fellow too."

"Kings, now ——" noch liked to ask uestions that would ring out the doctor's nowledge of history nd world affairs. You think kings is good idea?"

"Depends." Doc leared his throat. We don't need one—we've got Teddy to wing that big stick. But you take England. he king is a symbol of stability. Long as the eople can see him riding down the street in gold carriage, they feel the gov'ment's right ide up and their money's safe in the bank. ll that pomp and ceremony is smart busiess—because one of the profound truths of he universe is, people love a parade."

It was Tad who spied the horse and buggy earing rapidly toward them on the road that ed from the institution. He sat bolt upright nd gathered Spook into his arms. Doc noiced his alarm, then saw the approaching ehicle.

"Bub, you'd better ride inside till we're out f this neck of the woods." He reached behind the seat and slid open a panel.

As Tad peered back into the van, he had a quick impression of a little room like the cabin of a ship. There were a bunk, a table, a stove and several wooden boxes. He started to climb over the seat, when a brown-and-black dog rose out of a basket, growling. Tad hesitated.

"Quiet, Beezark! He won't bother you," said the doctor. "He's a hospital patient." And Tad saw the neat splint on the dog's foreleg. "Just keep your fur-bearing friend out of his way till they get acquainted."

Clutching Spook, Tad crawled over into the bunk. Beezark's growls had subsided, but he sat up in his basket, sniffing at the raccoon indignantly. The panel banged shut.

With a professional eye Doc observed the high-stepping action of the bay horse; then he saw that the driver was a woman. As they drew near, the woman raised a yellow-gloved hand. Doc pulled up his team. The buggy came to a stop alongside—and Doc, saluting with his whip, noticed that she was young and very pretty.

"Morning, ma'am."

"Have you seen a little boy?" She wasted no time on the amenities, and her voice was crisp, a trifle too crisp.

"A little boy?"

"About eight years old." Impatience darkened her blue eyes. "He ran away from the detention home last night, and I've got to find him."

Doc was coolly inspecting the details of her costume: the low-crowned hat with a cluster of roses; the pink shirtwaist, tight over a rounded bosom; the gray skirt. Creations of a small-town modiste, he surmised, but worn with something of an air. He admired the tawny hair framing her face: it had the sheen of a horse chestnut in the sun. Her nose was pert, but he disapproved of her severe mouth and purposeful chin.

"You haven't seen him?" she demanded.

Doc's scrutiny returned to the chill blue eyes. "A little boy, you say."

"I'm in a great hurry." Her voice had an edge of annoyance. "I'll describe the boy again. His name is Theodore Bayliss ——"

"I've got the description," nodded Doc. "If I see him, who'll I get in touch with?"

"Notify the Springville Detention Home, please."

He looked at her. "That's an awful word to apply to 'home,'" he said, "detention." Then, before she could reply: "But if I should run across him, I ought to have your name."

"Mrs. Wing." At once she was irked with herself for telling.

Doc's face lit up. "Mrs. Lucius Wing?"

"No—just Mrs. Wing," she told him.

"Well"—he smiled and lifted his hat—"I wish you luck on your . . . errand of mercy," he said.

Mrs. Wing did not like the mockery in his voice or in his eyes. "If I don't find him"—there was almost a threat in the way she said it—"a sheriff's posse will be searching this whole township by nightfall!" And, slapping her horse with the reins, she drove away.

Doc cracked his whip and the team moved off at a lively trot. He frowned uneasily. The thought of a sheriff's posse was disturbing.

"Doctor," Enoch said, "how come you ask that lady was she Mrs. Lucius Wing?"

"Because," replied Doc, "the spineless modock that'd be the husband of a shrew like that ought to be named Lucius!" He spat disgustedly into the road. "It cracks my faith in human nature! The face of an angel and the disposition of a wasp—hounding eight-year-old boys! Sheriff's posse. You heard her say it."

To him a sheriff's posse meant an ultimate interview with the Jackson hotelkeeper who had played such poor poker. But to Enoch it evoked an atavistic sympathy with runaway slaves, and he could hear the terrible yelping of the bloodhounds. His blue-white eyeballs shifted to Doc.

"She'll meet that woman with the cows, an' come after us an' ——"

"And inhale our dust," growled Doc. The crossroads was just ahead. He glanced at the signpost, then jerked one rein sharply—and the van careened around the turn on two wheels. His whip cracked and the team broke into a gallop. "We'll be out of this township

After Rock and Danger

By May Williams Ward

I live on a plain, so I had to climb a mountain
To see if it were as fair.
I edged past a waterfall and a crag,
uncertain
If there were an inch to spare,
And sat on a ledge half hid by a foggy curtain;
My seat had a back rest of air.

I found it good, the knowing of rock and danger
As well as the placid ring
Of prairie horizons. Water the daring plunger
And water calm in a spring
Are kin to me, both. Suddenly out of my wonder,
Out of my joy, apprehending both over and under,
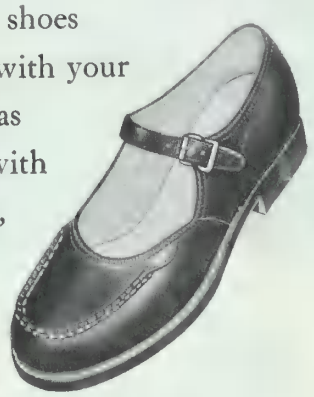
I find I must sing.



SKILLED HANDS

and your child's feet

All growing feet need experienced care, and none deserve it more than your child's. STRIDE RITES are made by skilled hands . . . to provide the comfort, support and growing room so essential to young feet. And these fine shoes remain in skilled hands when placed with your STRIDE RITE dealer . . . to be fitted as carefully as they are made. For only with accurate fit, based on individual needs, can they fully encourage normal development. Place your child's feet in the skilled hands that make and fit STRIDE RITES . . . now, and throughout the formative years.

Green Shoe Mfg. Co., Boston, Mass.

THE STRIDE RITE SHOE

Van Raalte

GLOVES • STOCKINGS • UNDERTHINGS

SUITS JANE DERBY

Petite, Tall or In Between...
No nylons fit like Van Raalte nylons

Take the stockings you're wearing now —do they fit perfectly at ankle, calf and thigh? Are they proportioned to you, whether you're tiny or tall, slim or sturdy, or nicely in between?

If they're Van Raalte nylons, they fit without sag, strain or swerving seams. Teens, Average or Lengthies, sizes 8 to 11, all with the exclusive Flextoe* for extra wiggle room. At better stores, from $1.50 the pair.

Only Van Raalte nylons have the exclusive Flextoe*, for extra comfort, better fit, longer wear.

"BECAUSE YOU LOVE NICE THINGS" *®

before you can say John Robinson!" Doc grinned. "He's a good circus man too."

The sun was low in a pallid September sky. They had crossed the township line three hours ago, but Doc had kept going; and now the sweat-dark horses were tired, plodding along at a slow, jerky walk. Enoch sat sprawled, half asleep, humming to himself.

Doc leaned forward abruptly. "This'll do."

Enoch opened his eyes and watched him turn the team off the road into a hickory grove bordering a stream. He drove expertly among the trees, deep into the grove, and drew rein. After Enoch had unhitched and fed the horses, he went out to pick up firewood, and when he looked back neither van nor horses could be seen from the road.

Kicking the stiffness out of his legs, Doc examined a clump of water cress. As he had suspected, there was a spring under it. He scooped a dipper of cold sweet water and drank. Then he opened the rear door of the van. Tad lay stretched out on the bunk, sound asleep. Beezark had crawled out of his basket and sat thumping the floor boards with his tail, peering intently up at the raccoon on top of the bookshelf.

"Beezark," reproved Doc, "that's no way to treat a guest." He lifted the dog out, careful of his splinted leg, and set him down by a tree. "The Russians and Japs are chewing one another up, over there in Port Arthur, but I expect more from you—you're civilized."

After sundown, when supper was ready, Enoch woke Tad up. He came out and sat down hungrily by the fire, where three pieces of beef were broiling over the coals.

"Funny thing about the human appetite," said Doc. "Food always tastes better after a man washes his face in cold water."

Without embarrassment Tad rose, walked over to the stream and knelt and washed his face. It didn't seem to be discipline: the doctor's way of saying things made him feel that he was being treated like a man. Besides, he couldn't always tell when the doctor was joking. As he returned to the fire, he heard him say to Enoch:

"That blue-eyed virago isn't likely to prowl this far looking for the boy. But I don't feel easy."

Enoch, setting out the tin plates and cups, looked up. "Glad for one thing, doctor: you didn't tell a lie to that lady. You let her think you hadn't saw Theodore Bayliss an' you hadn't—because you didn't know that was the boy's name."

"You religious people," said Doc, "get mighty technical sometimes, figuring ways to grease your conscience." Then he noticed Tad, and looked him up and down, as if seeing him for the first time: the tousled hair and the freckled face with questioning gray eyes; the wrinkled jacket that was too small; pants patched at both knees; grimy bare feet. "Enoch"—he frowned—"that song of yours isn't accurate: all God's children have not got shoes. That is, if we can discount the theory of original sin and assume that our passenger is one of God's children."

Enoch felt uncomfortable. He suspected that the doctor had begun to regret the responsibility of this runaway.

"So you're Theodore Bayliss," Doc said to the boy. "What do your friends call you?"

"Tad."

"Tad. Tad the raccoon trainer."

The boy smiled shyly.

"What's your middle name?"

"Haven't got any."

"Well, you've got one now," said Doc. "Theodore Roosevelt Bayliss. In wild country like this you never know when you might encounter a Republican!"

The supper by the campfire was the finest meal Tad had ever eaten in his life. Afterward, when it grew dark and fireflies flickered through the trees, Enoch brought out a banjo, and played and sang some of the new popular songs, Bedelia and By the Watermelon Vine. That was the last thing Tad remembered—Enoch's rich deep voice singing, "Meet me, pretty Lindy, by the watermelon vine." Then he fell asleep.

Enoch carried him into the van and rigged a canvas hammock above the bunk and put

You, too, could be more confident appealing charming

Millions of women have found Odo-Ro-No a sure short cut to precious charm. For over 40 years we have conducted hundreds of tests on all types of deodorants. We have proved Odo-Ro-No safeguards your charm more effectively than any deodorant you have ever used.

- Odo-Ro-No is the only spray deodorant guaranteed to stop perspiration, odor for 24 hours or double your money back.
- The only spray deodorant in the jewel-like blue bottle — pre-tested to spray perfectly, always.
- No other spray deodorant is so harmless to fabrics.
- No other deodorant is safer for skin.

Double your money back if you aren't satisfied that new Odo-Ro-No Spray is the best deodorant you've ever used. Just return unused portion to Northam Warren, New York.*

ODO-RO-NO
SPRAY

GUARANTEED
Full 24 Hour Protection

o it, with a blanket tucked around oc was standing by the bank of the gazing up at the stars, when Enoch
it.
it's a nice boy, doctor," he said.
e doin' a powerful good deed."
d deeds are not in my line!" Doc and the firelight showed annoyance
yes. "It was a mistake to bring the ng. Why should I tangle with the er a ragged brat I never saw before!"
outburst was so sudden that Enoch open-mouthed. "But doctor," he
, "the Good Book says ——"
read it," snapped Doc. "I've dealt ckers too long to be one myself. To-I'm taking him back!" He flung is cigar, turned and stalked off.

breakfast, as Enoch hitched the he observed Doc standing with Tad, ng the dog and the raccoon go through inary skirmish of getting acquainted.
as a hopeful sign, Enoch thought. He nly pray that the doctor, being in a ood this morning, would change his bout taking Tad back to the deten-
me.
appeared pleased when Tad asked ns about the wagon. "Had it made own specifications, by the Studebaker er in South Bend," he explained. "I the 'Contraption.' It's part bus and era house."
wasn't sure what that meant; he had een an opera house. But he was fasby the ingenious features pointed him: an icebox and a drinking-water nder a trap door; buckets, lanterns long toolbox bealso a roll of cand some poles that a shelter for the
in foul weather.
at little stove was a
al range, on which,
ssured him, Enoch
ook a meal as fine d get at the Brown Palace Hotel, in goes!" Tad glanced up eagerly. "Are ' as far as Denver, doctor?"
an instant Doc seemed taken aback,
e turned and walked up to the team sied himself with one of the tugs. Tad d him and fastened the other tug.
ll," Enoch said, "you quite a handy an
, I can do plenty to help," Tad an-er gravely. He patted the back of one sleek horses. "I guess these here are the fastest dapple grays in the whole orl'
eam was a subject Doc could not rest. They cost six hundred dollars at the lwaukee stock show," he said proudly; ended, "I won 'em in a poker game. Felwned 'em was a good judge of horseesh—ut a poor judge of cards." He smiled miscently. "I spotted him for a modock efo we'd played two hands."
hat's a 'modock'?" Tad asked.
odock's an old carnival name for those ttle dummies on a rack—that you knock er with baseballs, three for a nickel, at irg unds."
T nodded. He understood: a modock as inferior being—a kind of nobody.
F the first time Doc appeared to take an terest in the boy. "What're you going to be he you grow up, sport? You've got the orl before you—forty-five states and four rritories."
T looked at him with glowing hero wor-
hip. "I want to be like you," he declared.
Ju travel everywheres an' see the coun-ry an' not do anything but play poker with ocks!"
D cleared his throat. "Young man"— e frowned severely—"I'll have you know I wor as hard as any doctor in North, South
r Central America—with the possible ex-epti n of old Doc Gorgas, down there in ma fighting disease so's they can build anal!" He climbed over the wheel, onto at, and picked up the reins. "Got to oving."

Enoch boosted Tad up, and clambered up beside him. Doc cracked the whip and the team started forward. When they had come out of the grove he reined in. To the left, the road led back to the detention home; to the right, sixteen miles or so, lay the city of Marland. Enoch held his breath.

Doc turned to him. "Might be smarter not to sashay over there," he said. "I don't hanker for a brush with that blue-eyed termagant. And she may have law officers on the lookout for us. Tomorrow"—one eyelid flickered faintly—"a certain party can be sent back on the train. Get my drift?"

"Yes, doctor." Enoch's extraordinarily white teeth gleamed. This meant a reprieve of twenty-four hours for Tad.

THE whip cracked, and the dapple-gray team swung toward Marland. It was odd, he mused: no matter what kind of abusive names the doctor called Mrs. Wing when he spoke of her, he always mentioned the color of her eyes. . . . As they drove west Enoch glanced behind every few minutes, to see if they were being followed.

James Rollins, constable of Springville, had just opened the shutters and lighted his after-breakfast pipe when Mrs. Wing walked in. Despite a sleepless night, she looked fresh and lovely, and the constable, who had known her since she was a little girl, greeted her with rusty gallantry.

"Zerelda—if anybody should drive up an' ask me, you're prettier'n a peach!" James Rollins told her.

"Did they find the boy from the detention home?" Zerelda Wing asked eagerly.

"Not yet." The old man pulled out a chair for her. "Wouldn't mind havin' more crimes in this township if you'd take an interest."

"Jim, I'm very serious about this."

"I can see you are."

He caressed his tobacco-stained white mustaches, thinking what a pity it was that she had never married again and had children of her own. She had not been in love with pompous George Wing, he felt sure. One of those hurry-up wartime marriages in '98, when George, a lieutenant in the militia, had gone off to kill Spaniards and had got killed himself—not by the Spaniards, but by tainted meat in a Florida camp. After that she had gone to keep house for her father, the doctor—and since he died she seemed always looking for something to occupy her time. Pretty girl like her ought to marry and settle down, the constable was thinking. . . . But she needs a strong man. Man of character. Nobody around Springville big enough for her.

"Zerelda," he said gently, "I don't see why a little boy runnin' away from the detention home is such a matter of life an' death."

"I took this job to get something done, Jim." Her mouth tightened and her blue eyes were very grave. "It's my duty to bring him back."

"You're always doin' some kind of a duty."

"This is serious. There's a legal complication—the poor board is involved. If we don't get him back, there'll be a perfectly horrible row!"

"All right." The constable sat down and plucked a pen from the crusted inkwell. "I'll telegraph a warning to nearby towns. The boy won't get far."

"We must locate that man," said Zerelda Wing firmly. "The man in the wagon."

"What type of wagon was it?"

"Sort of a gypsy van. And yet"—she frowned—"the man didn't appear to be a gypsy."

"No rings in his ears, eh?"

"Certainly not."

"Can you give me a description of him?"

"Well, he wasn't bad-looking. I mean"—she corrected herself—"he was good-looking in a way, but he had a bad look, if you know what I mean."

"Sort of a handsome scoundrel?" The constable's pen scratched loudly.

If we could deceive others as easily as we deceive ourselves, what reputations we'd all have! —JOHN POMERENE.

Truly a Miracle of Mildness!

New, Improved VEL* now brings you the safest way of all to wash fine fabrics

New Vel bursts into suds in cooler, safer water than even the finest soap flakes . . . and every woman knows the cooler the water, the safer it is! Yes, even delicate washable colors stay lovely up to 10 times as long. New Vel is mild enough for heirloom laces . . . the softest skin. Even after washing dishes, your hands will prove how mild new Vel is.

Stockings stay sheerer looking, lovelier longer—no soap scum . . . no soap fading . . . no alkali.

VEL for DISHES STOCKINGS LINGERIE WOOLENS So Kind to Hands! COLGATE

*VEL is the trade-mark of the Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Co.

New VEL is unbelievably Mild!

Are you in the know?

When two boys ask you to dance, should you choose—

☐ The better looker ☐ The lad who asked first ☐ Via the coin-flipping method

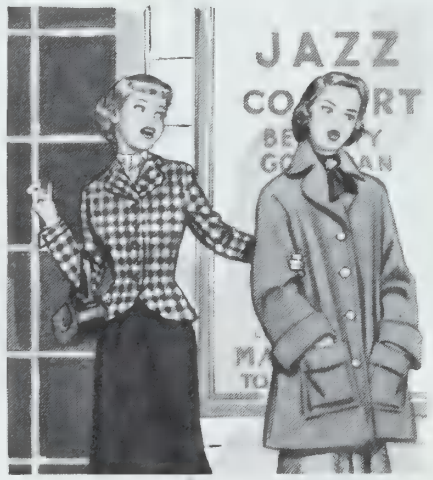
Both stags ask to be your leading man—so what should a doe do? Choose the one who spoke up first; even if the other bid seems more alluring. You can't lose by playing fair—and ten to one Dreamboy will re-pop the question, next dance. And next time your calendar says "Don't go," on date night—speak up; ask for Kotex. You'll find this napkin is made to stay soft while you wear it; gives you new, downy softness that holds its shape—helps you stay really comfortable. And because those special flat pressed ends of Kotex prevent revealing outlines, confidence is sure to follow.



When dining out, would a smart doll—

☐ Disregard prices

☐ Wipe the silver ☐ Swipe the silver

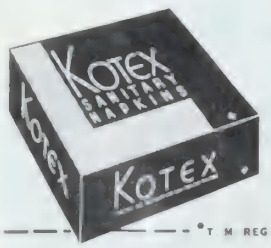
All wrong? You're right! When ordering, a smart doll considers her guy's wallet; doesn't filch tableware "souvenirs." And unless she's dining at The Greasy Spoon she won't wipe off the silver; there's no need, and it's bad manners. As for "certain" needs, it's smart to have just the right answer . . . so try the 3 absorbencies of Kotex (different sizes, for different days). See how very right you'll be with Regular, Junior or Super!



If you're a high-brow, should you—

☐ Conceal the fact

☐ Spurn jazz ☐ Languish in the library

We're talking about foreheads—not brains; and a different hair-do can change your looks. A lofty brow worries you? Bring it down with a bang—or with a concealing half-bang or wave. And why not down those problem day worries? With Kotex you get extra protection, thanks to a special safety center—not to mention the soft, special edges that resist moisture, outlaw chafing. (Kotex can be worn on either side, safely!)

More women choose KOTEX than all other sanitary napkins*

3 ABSORBENCIES: REGULAR, JUNIOR, SUPER

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

What assures daintiness on problem days?

☐ Bath salts ☐ Powder ☐ Occasional showers

Takes more than daily tubbings to stay dainty at "that" time. So, smart gals sprinkle a powder deodorant on their sanitary napkins. Choose Quest powder! You'll find Quest best for napkin use, because, unlike most creams or liquids, this deodorant powder has no moisture-resistant base: doesn't slow up absorption. It's safe. Soothing. Unscented. Positively destroys odors. To avoid offending, buy a can of Quest* deodorant powder today! Ask for it by name.

P.S. Have you tried Delsey*? Delsey is the new bathroom tissue that's safer because it's softer. A product as superior as Kotex . . . a tissue as soft and absorbent as Kleenex.* (We think that's the nicest compliment there is.) Won't you try Delsey, next time?

"I suppose that would describe him," said Zerelda Wing.

They were spanking along the Marland road, and the afternoon sun was warm on their hands. On one side the creek curved lazily across a meadow that swelled into wooded hills. Beyond a snake fence, to their right, untidy rows of apple trees bristled with fruit.

"Two things pleasing to the nose: perfume on a beautiful woman—and an apple orchard." Doc sniffed knowingly. "Russets and Seek-No-Furthers. Had more time, we might stop and pick a pailful." He leaned back and took a deep breath of the fragrant September air. "Tad," he said, "all through here was Indian country not so long ago. The first great wilderness—that had to be conquered, so America could grow."

"I found a flint arrowhead last year!" The boy's eyes were big.

"You see"—Doc nodded—"that makes you part of it. The early settlers here—your great-grandpa, like as not—were every bit as important in U. S. history as the pioneers that drove beyond the Rockies in Conestoga wagons. Yes, sir, bub, you can be proud of your Middle West heritage," Doc told him.

"What's heritage?" Tad asked.

"Well"—Doc cleared his throat—"it's something your folks give you—like a strong back or a sound pair of legs, only ten times more important. Your heritage is what makes you just as good as any man in the world. And you don't have to pay taxes on it!"

The Contraption rumbled over a hill; and below them spread a serene valley, mellow with the colors of early autumn. Doc pointed his whip at a white church spire beyond the trees.

"Marland," he said. "Sweet a little town as you'll find. Historic too. Famous for the Cross-White Case, in 1847, that made Henry Clay put through his fugitive-slave law—one of the di-rect causes of the Civil War."

Enoch's expression was somber. Two of his own brothers had been fugitive slaves.

"What're we going to do here?" Tad asked.

"Benefit mankind," Doc replied briskly. "And at the same time pick up a little loose change."

All his life Tad would look back on this as the magic evening. Standing in the crowd on the lighted street corner, eating buttered popcorn and listening to the music, he could scarcely believe it was happening to him. To begin with, there was the new brown suit the doctor had bought when they got in town this afternoon—and the hat and the shoes. The shoes were yellow elkskin—he had picked them out himself; and the hat, a little fedora like the one the doctor wore. Conscious of this finery, Tad strutted among the crowd. Marland was a big city: 4500 population, the sign said; and he had an expansive feeling that he belonged in this metropolitan atmosphere. But most amazing of all was the spectacle taking place across the street.

THE Contraption stood there—strangely metamorphosed since the horses had been unhitched and led away. Its decorous canvas side curtains were rolled up, revealing a veritable circus wagon, scarlet and gold, embellished with fancy lettering that spelled TILBEE'S WONDER TONIC.

And now Tad understood what the doctor had meant by saying it was "part opera house," for the rear end had been opened up to make a little stage, draped in red velvet. On either side burned a bright gasoline are. As Tad watched, fascinated, the red vel curtains parted and a resplendent ure emerged carrying a banjo and a guitar. ad stared hard. It was Enoch—Enoch dr sed in a purple-and-yellow minstrel costume ith a huge wing collar! He sat down on a mo chair and began twanging The Camp was Races on his banjo. The small crowd dly curious, moved closer. This was free e er-tainment—and, anyway, they had no ace to go. Enoch finished with a loud flou sh dropped the banjo, stood up with the gtar and sang Ida, Sweet as Apple Cider. fter that he snatched up the banjo and wha ed out Sousa's Stars and Stripes Forever in ir cus tempo.

A spatter of applause was wrung fro he thin crowd—and, taking instant adva ge of it, Doc Tilbee made an entrance thr gh the red velvet curtains, striding forwar n-der the glare of the torches. Enoch had is-appeared.

Doc paused, a handsome and impo ng figure, one hand thrust between the lape of his Prince Albert coat. His eyes flashed iz-ing up the audience; then he raised a fi er high, with the dignity of a statesman a ut to utter a mani to that would stir the u-preme Court. Sudd ly his finger swung do n, pointing at the cr d.

"Does your wife e you?" he deman d. "I ask you, my fri d! Does your wife e you?"

Someone laug d and three startled en peered around sh p-ishly, uncertain w h had been designate

"My good peo e, this is no laughing m t-ter," Doc adju d them. "The grea t tragedy of modern c lization is chronic i-cord between husb d and wife! A trag y that annually bre s thousands of heart-leads to the divo e court — brings de h and destruction in s wake! And what s causing this calamitous collapse of fam y life? Nine cases out of ten it is nothing m e nor less than that tired, run-down feeling!"

The crowd, attracted by the gaso e flares and the echoes of oratory, was incre ing. Doc lowered his voice confidentially

"Friends, the male sex is responsible many of the world's tribulations. We ca deny it. But let us be fair—and I know, a look into these intelligent faces, that y want to be fair! The ladies are not entir blameless! How many can truthfully s they are never cross, peevish or cantanker when evening shadows fall? Whether th have been bending over a hot washtub day—or whether they have done noth more backbreaking than to crochet A Lizzie's initial on a doily—the ladies do n always display angelic dispositions. And w not? I'll tell you why not, friends. The ladi too—and I say 'God bless 'em!', where wo we be today without 'em!—the ladies, t are often victims of that home-wrecki malady, that destroyer of conjugal felici the tired, run-down feeling!"

He had the crowd now. His eloquence and some curious magnetism in his perso ality—gave him power to sway them at w He made them laugh with the story of "fine, strapping Juno of a woman, married a chinless modock that looked as if couldn't lift a cup of tea without help"; th he told a pathetic tale of a young girl who chances for marriage were ruined and w was "at last hounded to the grave by t specter of ill-health. . . .

"Friends," declared Doc solemnly, "th girl could have been saved. The Science Nature has effected miraculous cures. A

(Continued on Page 149)

The world is, of course, "incurably religious." Why? Because everyone who reflects at all must have conceptions about the world which go beyond the field of science; that is, beyond the present range of intellectual knowledge. There are two sorts of dogmatists in the field of religion. One calls himself a fundamentalist; the other calls himself an atheist. They seem to me to represent about the same kind of thinking. Each asserts a definite knowledge of the ultimate which he does not possess. Each has closed his mind to any future truth. Each has a religion that is fixed. Each is, I think, irrational and unscientific. Religion will be with us so long as man hopes and aspires and reflects upon the meaning of existence and the responsibilities it entails.

—ROBERT A. MILLIKAN:
from Today is Mine, compiled by Thomas Curtis Clark
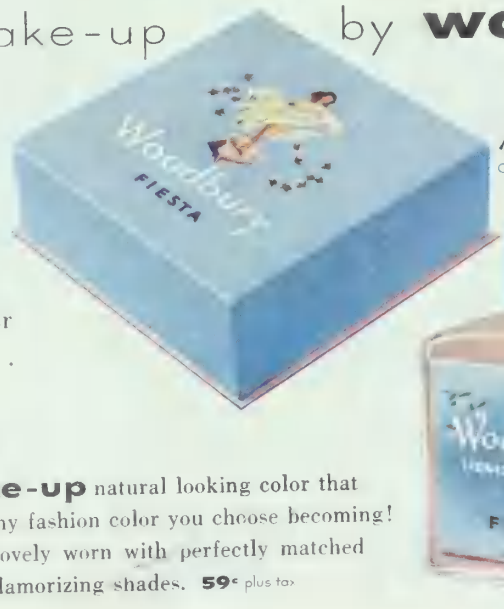
(Harper and Brothers, 1950, used by permission).



Fiesta

new ultra-feminine look in make-up by woodbury

The newest, most appealing look yet . . . fresh, sweet . . . and deliberately pretty! All yours with Fiesta, a luscious cream-of-pink delight . . . the Woodbury Powder shade that gives your skin the delicate, pearl-tinted prettiness of a Romantic Beauty! And how men love it!

and how you'll love that heavenly Woodbury Powder! The only powder with the special foundation-cream ingredient that brings your skin fabulous satin smoothness with no "powdery look!" Plus longer cling . . . lingering fragrance. Woodbury holds its magic for hours and hours!

new . . . big 50¢ box . . . other sizes 15¢, 30¢, $1.00 plus tax

new* woodbury liquid make-up natural looking color that smooths, tints and glorifies your skin. Makes any fashion color you choose becoming! Completely wonderful in itself! Or twice as lovely worn with perfectly matched Woodbury Powders. In "Fiesta" and 3 other glamorizing shades. 59¢ plus tax

From the top of his head to his ten little toes, your baby's skin needs your loving care. Everything that touches that tender skin must be whisper soft, gentle as your own caress. His skin actually is thinner than yours, you know. Skin studies show it might chafe more easily, become irritated sooner.

Guard his thinner skin with care

More mothers every day are finding this ideal combination of "tender skin" qualities in gentle ScotTissue. You will discover too, that ScotTissue's greater value makes it the perfect choice for the whole family. You get 1000 generous-size sheets to a roll. ScotTissue goes further, lasts longer. "ScotTissue," "Soft as old Linen," Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

You change him often—to keep that thinner skin dry and comfy. It's importan too, when choosing his bathroom tissue to check for 3 "tender skin" qualities. O linen softness that doesn't chafe. Instant-quick absorbency for clean cleansing. Th right strength to resist tearing or shredding.

1000 Generous-Size Sheets—Soft as old Linen

(Continued from Page 146)

t is why I am here tonight." He leaned ward. "I want to ask each and every one you—are you getting the most out of life?" As he paused for the effect of this rhetorical question, a man on the fringe of the wd shouted, "How about you, professor?" Doc silenced the laughter by pointing a matic finger at the heckler. "I'm glad asked me!" He gave a sudden tremenus leap into the air, kicked his heels toher like a Russian dancer, turned a cart eel—and landed gracefully. "Can you do it, my friend?"

Cackles and squeals of laughter erupted m the crowd. The heckler was silent. Doc d them warmed up now.

"Friends"—his voice was vibrant—"to ch your fair city I have traveled hunds of miles—over frozen mountains and rning desert wastes—to bring you one of ture's most precious secrets!" The thump a drum grew loud back of the velvet curns. "I learned this secret from the medie men of the Arapaho Indians—after I d lived for years among them, a blood ther of the tribe." He turned, with a gese, and intoned, "Wah-nee-way, ha!"

The drum thumping stopped, and out m the curtains stalked a tall Indian in a thered war bonnet and a long red blanket. s dark face was streaked with vermilion int and he was wearing Enoch's patentther shoes.

"Right here, chief, if you please," said c.

From behind the curtain the Indian lifted folding table on which were balanced a zen quart bottles of wn liquid, and carried to the edge of the stage.

"My friends"—Doc ked up one of the bots—"the dictionary says word 'tonic' means an xir that prolongs life. t you don't need a tionary to tell you that onder Tonic prolongs life: you can feel ur life being prolonged!" He held up the ttle. "Right here the label says, 'It puts into you.' And that is exactly what it does. iends, this is a scientific preparation made m a secret formula for which I have been ered one hundred thousand dollars cash by large company in New York City—but ich I refuse to sell. Why? Because, like ur family doctors—and they are all good en—I have dedicated my life to the service suffering humanity! It is my privilege to ing Wonder Tonic to my fellow countryen who are victims of that tired, run-down ling!"

He was talking very fast now and there s a hypnotic rhythm to his voice. A hand ached up, waving a dollar bill.

"Thank you, sir!" Briskly Doc passed wn a bottle, thrusting the money into an en black satchel. "This gentleman knows is not spending a dollar—he is buying life surance! Because Wonder Tonic puts life to you! It tells you right on the label. . . . hank you, madam. One out of five!" He ade two more sales—and now people were ging forward. "Don't crowd," Doc rned them, holding up another bottle.

n flamboyant phrases he proclaimed the nic's power to dispel fatigue, whet the appe-e and bring roses to the cheeks. He noted—somewhat inaccurately—from the assics and reminded his audience that they ere paying only one dollar for this full art bottle, which in New York would cost e. He warned them to beware of substites and offered positive assurance that in nter the tonic helped coughs and colds, hile in summer it was a specific for summer mplaint and heat exhaustion. The sales ere coming faster now, and the Indian was sisting him in making change.

At one point Doc's eloquence flowered in he statement, "Lips that touch Wonder onic are the lips a sweetheart loves to ss! . . . Thank you! Two bottles. Here you e, sir—two out of five."

From the opposite curb Deputy Sheriff attick observed these proceedings cynically. His black slouch hat was tilted over his small eyes, giving him an air of furtive watchfulness; and he stood, thumbs in galluses, exposing a German-silver star on his bulky chest. Abruptly he spoke aloud: "That's the feller!" Spitting out a toothpick, he buttoned his coat resolutely and strolled up Hamilton Street toward the telegraph office.

The noontide was overcast, and warm with a hint of equinoctial rain. Enoch sat on an upturned pail outside the Contraption, cleaning harness and singing a spiritual—with Tad squatting beside him, watching his raccoon coyly repel the advances of Beezark, the three-legged dog. They were camped in a willow grove below the fairground; and after lunch Doc had saddled one of the horses and ridden into town.

THE spiritual Enoch was singing had been composed, words and music, by Doc himself, and suggested a rigorous celestial etiquette:

"You'll never see the Promised Land,
The Promised Land, the Promised Land,
You'll never see the Promised Land—
Excep' the Lord invite you."

Enoch's deep bass rumbled mournfully:

"You'll never shake your Maker's hand,
Your Maker's hand, your Maker's hand,
You'll never shake your Maker's hand—
Excep' the Lord invite you."

Tad's freckled face reflected satisfaction with the moment, untouched by any qualms for the hereafter. "Enoch," he said, "you fooled me for fair. That Indian chief—I didn't know it was you."

Enoch accepted his friend's tribute modestly. "How you like our show?"

"Oh, I liked it fine." Tad wanted to talk. "Enoch—the doctor's tonic, now, that must be about the best medicine in the whole world."

"You heard what the doctor say, boy."

"It'll cure ever'thing that ails people, won't it, Enoch?"

"Well," Enoch replied cautiously, "lot of remedies do you good if you think they do."

"What's in it, Enoch?"

"Don't nobody know that excep' the doctor. 'S a secret formulum."

"Worth a hundred thousand dollars cash!" Tad's eyes were big.

"M-m-m."

"That's what the doctor said, didn't he?"

As Enoch rubbed the harness buckle his religious scruples were rubbing his loyalty to his employer. "It's this way," he declared, frowning: "The doctor, he's the finest man ever I knowed. Them things he says—well, sometimes he approximates, kind of. We shouldn't ought to take him too literal. Like when he tells about how he missed the Custer massacree by twenty minutes—well, like as not it really happen, you understand, but maybe it happen to some other fellow. The doctor he kind of approximates."

Tad chewed a straw. "I guess the doctor's about the greatest man there is anywheres."

"That's right," Enoch nodded, relieved.

"Jingoes!" Tad leaned forward. "Look—he's back a'ready!"

Across the field came a gray horse on a dead gallop, with Doc bending low in the saddle. Enoch got to his feet quickly. Something was wrong! He had felt it in his bones all morning.

Doc pulled up the sweating horse and threw himself from the saddle. "That woman's on her way here! Modock in the buggy with her looks like the law!"

Tad had gone white, trembling like a bewildered puppy. Enoch flung a protective arm around him.

"I'll have to hand him over." Doc tied the horse to a wagon wheel. "Can't get mixed up with the police."

Tad stared up at him, frightened. "Don't let them take me back," he pleaded.

Doc looked away uncomfortably, wiping his face with a clean blue bandanna. "They can have me run out of town!"

(Continued on Page 151)

It is useless for the sheep to pass resolutions in favor of vegetarianism, while the wolf remains of a different opinion. —DEAN INGE.

For you! The world's most luxurious lotion! Revlon's new

AQUAMARINE LOTION

Fabulously fragrant! Fondles every blessed inch of you!

Lavish it on—you've never known such luxury!
A miraculous blend of balms scented with costly imported perfumes—keeps hands and body silken-soft, divinely fragrant.
Discover this rich, creamy-blue luxury lotion today!

NEGLIGEE: TULA

New! The only soap with a lotion's loving touch!

Revlon's Aquamarine Lotion Soap

made with precious Aquamarine Lotion

Color comes first...with Fashion's First Women. They choose Samsonite Luggage

Jo Stafford,

glamorous singing star of Club 15 and the Contented Hour over CBS, is also widely noted for her excellent clothes sense. She says: "I travel constantly; am in the spotlight off stage, too. My travel costumes must be perfect...with never an off-note. That's why I chose Samsonite—the luggage that is as fashion-right as my clothes."

High note with any travel costume... brilliant SAPPHIRE BLUE

Ceil Chapman,

fabulous designer, known everywhere as a leading figure in the fashion world and also renowned as an outstanding creator of "best-dressed" women, says: "A well-planned travel costume should include beautifully designed luggage like Samsonite ...color-keyed to costume colors. Without well-chosen luggage the complete costume effect is marred."

Fashion favorite from Cannes to California... ADMIRAL BLUE

Mrs. Walter Bedford Sharp, jr.

lovely Houston socialite, known to concert audiences as Juliana Larson, one of the "best-dressed women in America," says: "Combining public and private life keeps me constantly on the go. That means my luggage must have stamina as well as beauty...and my Samsonite luggage looks as well after many trips, as it did on the first."

For glamour on-the-go... BERMUDA GREEN.

Smart women choose Samsonite!

For its streamlined styling...beautiful colors...better-than-leather covering. Why not you—when two pieces cost less than you'd expect to pay for one?

Shown in Natural Rawhide finish:

A. Train Case	$17.50
B. Vanity O'Nite Case	17.50
C. Ladies' O'Nite Case	19.50
D. O'Nite Convertible	22.50
E. Ladies' Wardrobe	25.00
F. Pullman Case	27.50*

*ALL PRICES SUBJECT TO EXISTING TAXES

Samsonite

Fashiontone Luggage

Also available in:

SADDLE TAN

COLORADO BROWN

Shwayder Bros., Inc. Luggage Division Denver 9, Colo. Also makers of Samson Folding Tables and Chairs. Folding Furniture Division Detroit 29, Mich.

(Continued from Page 149)

Enoch spoke, quietly and respectfully: "I never thought no woman could run you anywheres, doctor."

Doc stood scowling down at his boots, then he turned and growled an order: "Put the kid in the toolbox."

They hurried around to the rear end of the contraption and Enoch got down and opened the toolbox under the springs. It was five feet long, made for shovels and road implements, and there was room in it for a small boy. They hoisted Tad in, feet first.

"No need to be scared," Doc reassured him. "Same thing happened to me one time in a Conestoga wagon on the old Chisholm Trail. Only it was redskins after me!" He closed the cover. "Plenty of air through the cracks. Just take it easy, bub."

While Enoch led the horse away to unsaddle him, Doc put the dog and the raccoon inside the Contraption and sat down under a willow tree to plan his course of action. He was calmly whittling a picket peg when Zerelda Wing drove up with Deputy Sheriff Gattick. The officer descended first and ostentatiously assisted Mrs. Wing. Neither spoke.

As they approached Doc rose and faced them. "Good afternoon." There was a polite question in his greeting.

"Let's see your license," said Deputy Sheriff Gattick.

Doc showed him his pitchman's license, signed by the chief of police. "Let's see yours."

GATTICK scowled, opening his coat to reveal the German-silver star. Mrs. Wing had said nothing. Doc's quick eyes observed her costume: the gray suit, the peekaboo waist and the hat with a pert red feather. She had more style today than the last time. Probably because she had to make the train trip to Marland.

"We're after a runaway boy." Gattick's manner was belligerent. "Boy named Bayliss ——"

"I explained all that before," said Zerelda Wing.

"We got reason t' believe he's here."

"Here?" repeated Doc guilelessly. He gestured toward Enoch, standing a few feet off. "You can see there's nobody here but my assistant."

Gattick wanted to impress Mrs. Wing. "I intend t' search these premises!"

"Go right ahead." Doc turned to Mrs. Wing. "Can I offer you a chair, ma'am—or will you join in the search?"

"Thank you." She turned her back on him and followed Gattick around to the rear door of the Contraption.

GATTICK jerked the door open and peered in at the crippled dog in his basket. Then he discovered the raccoon. "What you got here?" Seizing the chain, he hauled the terrified little animal out. "This yours?"

"No," Doc answered.

"Who does it belong to?"

"Who do the stars belong to?" said Doc blandly. "I never liked zoos. Always figured a wild animal belongs to the Creator."

Mrs. Wing looked at him, perplexed.

"Listen here"—Gattick started to pick up the raccoon—"I won't stand for no funny business. A-agh!" He leaped back, wringing his hand. Spook had bitten him.

"Better let me cauterize that," said Doc. "Raccoon bites are poison. Hate to see you lose your arm."

"I'll show you!" Pain and rage made the deputy sheriff hop, as he dragged Spook by his chain to the nearest tree. "Your license don't allow you to keep wild animals." He knotted the chain around the tree and stepped back.

"What are you going to do?" Mrs. Wing came forward, distressed.

"I'll fix him!" Gattick whipped out a shiny revolver and aimed at the raccoon.

"Just a minute, sheriff!" Gattick turned. Doc stood there, balancing a long, ivory-handled .38 in one hand. With the other he took a deck of cards from his pocket. He

Ask any Woman

By MARCELENE COX

A BRIDE becomes a wife, full-blown, when she can resign herself to the accumulation of things that need fixing carried over from year to year.

"Don't let daddy make the decision, mother! He'll decide in favor against it."

One father discovered a perfect disciplinary procedure: he invented a "secret pal," who writes notes, hides rewards. Since secret pals can walk where fathers fear to tread, much headway in character building results, proof of which:

"Dear Secret Pal: I'll try harder to be good, but please forgive me when I don't seem to be trying hard enough. Someday I'll please you.

"I love you always,

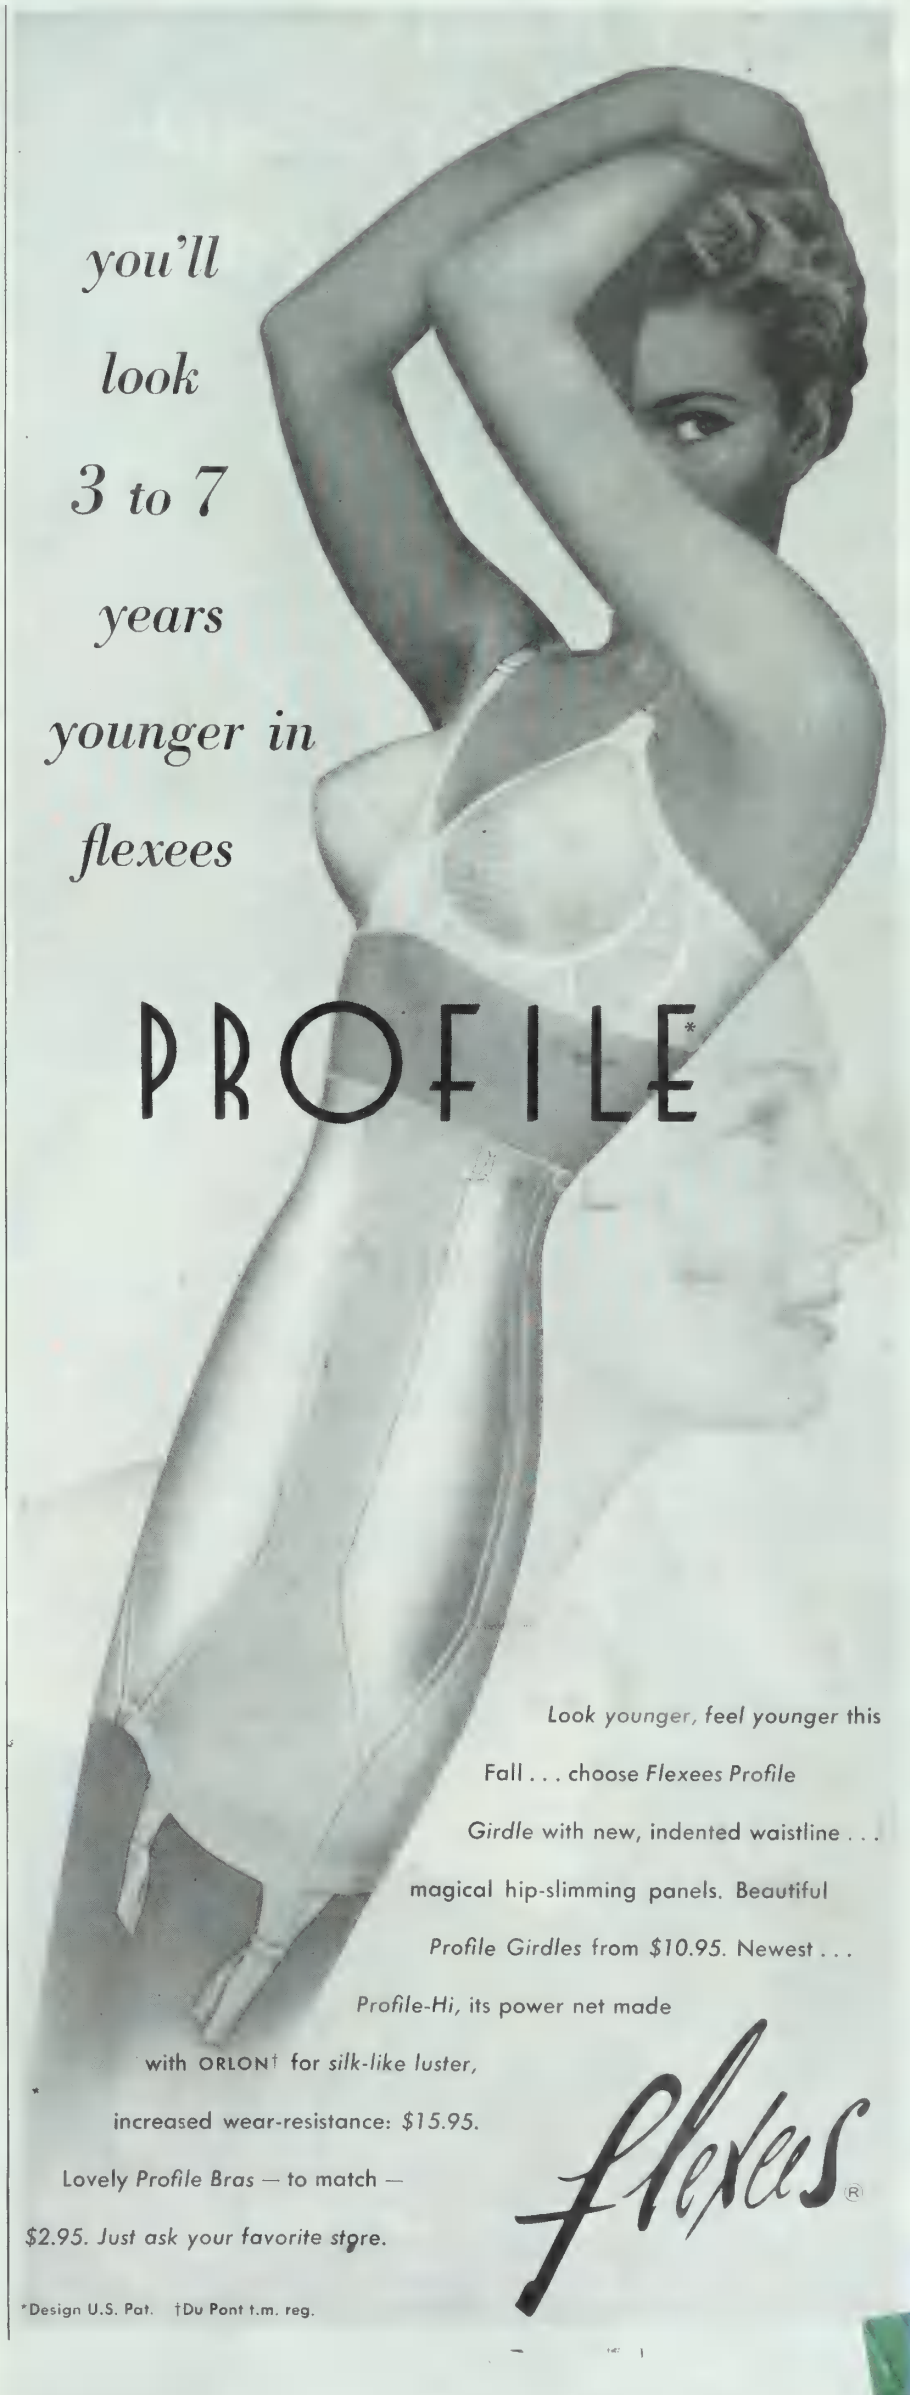
"Your S. P."

When a woman is defeated by her house she stares her burden in the face in every nook and corner of the place . . . while a man turns a key in an office door.

"My wife wants every gadget under the sun, several hundred feet of worktable space and all the automatic appliances which have been invented," says our plush neighbor. "Then we go to the mountains for a couple of weeks and the meals that woman cooks on a two-cylinder stove in three cubic feet of working space would win her a citation from a cooking school."

What we ate when I was growing up came under two large headings: "Actual Food"—meat, potatoes, vegetables, cakes, cookies and pie—and "Treats"—oranges, bananas, candy, ice cream.

Her exit reminded one of a seal returning to the pool.



When our collie, distinguished Sir Cyrano, tips over his water pail, the neighbor with psychiatric leanings says it's because he wants attention.

At our house it began when the kids assisted in a paper drive. From the huge bundles collected they salvaged fifty or more comics which became the original investment and with which they have haggled, bled and managed to swap another ten thousand at least.

"My wife can never make up her mind until she asks me," observed an old friend from Indiana on a recent visit. "Then she knows exactly what she wants. It's whichever one I didn't choose."

Jack Sprat, he liked his fat;
His wife, she liked her lean;
But with the current prices
They found their platter clean.

Every woman's club is divided into Doers, Delegates and Diehards.

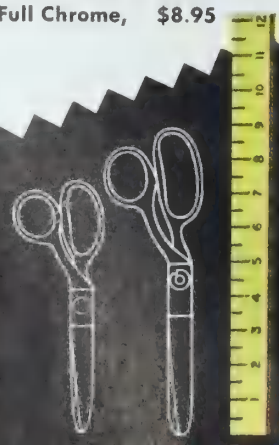
Look younger, feel younger this Fall . . . choose Flexees Profile Girdle with new, indented waistline . . . magical hip-slimming panels. Beautiful Profile Girdles from $10.95. Newest . . . Profile-Hi, its power net made with ORLON† for silk-like luster, increased wear-resistance: $15.95.

Lovely Profile Bras — to match — $2.95. Just ask your favorite store.

flexees®

*Design U.S. Pat. †Du Pont t.m. reg.

WISS Model C
Pinking Shears
Now available in 2 sizes



New Improved
WISS Model C

Both the new small size Model C 7 and the Standard Model C 9 bring unparalleled ease and efficiency to pinking. Developed after years of research, either size will cut perfectly the widest possible range of fabrics and even several thicknesses of heavier material. For the best possible buy in pinking shears . . . test them! . . . look for the name WISS on the blade and ask for Model C.

New Smaller Model C, Actual Size

Mod. CB 7-7½" Black Handles, $6.95
Mod. CC 7-7½" Full Chrome, $7.95
Mod. CB 9-9" Black Handles, $7.95
Mod. CC 9-9" Full Chrome, $8.95

WISS Shears and Scissors

WISS NEWARK, N.J.

J. Wiss & Sons Co., Newark 7, N. J. Over 100 years of quality shears
Manufacturers of shears, scissors, pinking shears, metal cutting snips and garden shears called, "Enoch!" Enoch hurried to him. "Pick a card," said Doc coolly. "Any card."

Enoch picked a card. It was the ace of hearts. Without a word, he backed away ten paces, then halted, holding the card over his head. As Mrs. Wing and the deputy sheriff stared in amazement, Doc raised his pistol and fired. Enoch held out the card—with a hole in the middle.

"Pick another card," ordered Doc.

Enoch came over and picked another. It was the four of spades. Again he backed off and held the card over his head. Effortlessly Doc fired four times. There were four holes in the card: each spade pip had disappeared.

Doc turned to Gattick. "Think it over," he said quietly.

Gattick's face glistened with sweat. "I'll see the chief of police about this!" He shoved his revolver into his pocket and started toward the horse and buggy.

Zerelda Wing looked at Doc. "What a show-off you are," she said contemptuously. Then she turned and followed the deputy sheriff.

Doc stood watching them drive away. After their rig had disappeared through the trees he handed Enoch his pistol to clean. "Can't remember ever meeting a woman as ornery as that one. And now she's got me in trouble for fair. That modock'll come back here with a warrant." He spat into a clump of weeds six feet from his boots. "We'd better vamoose—and fast!"

WHILE Enoch hurriedly trotted out the horses and began hitching up, Doc released Tad from the toolbox. The boy raced across to Spook, still chained to the tree, and crouched, gathering him in his arms.

"Put that man-eating animal aboard," Doc ordered gruffly. "We've got to look for more country." As he turned to help Enoch with the team he stopped short. A woman had emerged from the trees, walking rapidly toward Tad. Mrs. Wing! Here was a complication he had not expected. She must have left the deputy sheriff and circled back to take him by surprise. "The sly minx!" he muttered.

Tad stood, with the raccoon in his arms, uneasily watching her approach.

"I felt sure there had been some mistake. Theodore is here." She came up to them and Doc saw with surprise that she was smiling. "I can understand your . . . suspicion of deputy sheriffs," she said crisply. "I suppose that's natural in a man of your—shall we say?—irregular profession."

Doc bristled. "Nothing irregular about my profession."

"I'm not here to discuss you, Mr. Tilbee."

"Doctor Tilbee, if you please."

"Oh, really? Well"—her eyes were m[o]ing—"at any rate, I thought you migh[t] less embarrassed without the officer, s[o] I came alone." She nodded at Tad. "I'll t[a]ke Theodore back with me."

"Back where?"

"Perhaps I should explain. I'm from [t]he Springville Township Poor Board."

"It must be a poor board," said Doc, "if they can't do better for their orphans."

"That's not very humorous."

"Nothing humorous about that B[la]ck Hole of Calcutta they locked the kid up i[n]"

HER smile disappeared. "We have no [or]phanage building yet—and the infirm[ary] which keeps some orphans, is full. Theod[ore] was temporarily put in the detention h[o]me because ——"

"The detention home—and you ough[t] to smile when you say that—is no fit place [f]or him! He told me what it's like. Jam[med] with boys that'll be sent to reform scho[ol]—one of 'em's crazy ——"

"I told you it was only temporary."

"It's not even temporary." He loc[ked] straight into her hostile blue eyes. "Bec[ause] you're not taking him back there."

"Indeed? And what will prevent me?"

"I will."

Their glances held, the antagonism [be]tween them burning bright.

"Exactly how does this concern you?" [she] demanded. "The boy is no relation of you[rs]"

"Oh, yes he is."

"How?"

"Maybe you never heard of the brot[her]hood of man."

"I won't listen to such claptrap!"

"I didn't ask you to listen," said I[.] "This interview was your idea—and [it]'s over now, far as I'm concerned."

"Look here, Mr. Tilbee—or doctor [or] whatever you call yourself—you'll be in [se]rious trouble if you persist in interfering." [Her] voice was sharp-edged. "This boy has no [re]latives, so he's a ward of the poor board. H[e] is to be returned to the detention home [u]ntil ——"

"I wouldn't put a dog in that firetra[p]"

"—— until," she finished coldly, "we h[ave] made proper arrangements."

"I've already made proper arrangeme[nts]. I'm taking him with me." He turned to T[ad]. "Get in, sport."

Tad scurried to the van and Enoch li[fted] him onto the front seat.

"Sport!" She looked at Doc disdainfu[lly]. "That's fine language to teach a little bo[y]"

"When you improve conditions for the [or]phans," Doc retorted, "I'll improve my l[an]guage." He touched his hat and strode [off]

(Continued on Page 155)

". . . and jumble things up in your purse so you can't find anything. It makes them feel superior."

(Continued from Page 152)

the van. A few drops of rain were sifting through the willow trees.

Deputy Sheriff Gattick will be back in a minutes." She came hurrying after him. u won't be so glib when the law ——"

've done nothing against the law!" His nation was almost too righteous. Rain begun to fall in earnest now. He climbed nto the driver's seat. "Any legal matll have to be discussed with my attorney lbion—when I get there." He kicked off rake and the horses started.

You can't do this," Zerelda Wing pro- d angrily. "I have authority from the board ——" have authority from the Great Jeho- " said Doc. "And the Continental Con-. Hup there, Bess!" He cracked his whip the team swung into a trot.

relda Wing stood, frustrated and furi- in the rain. As she realized that the red from the feather on her hat was running n her sleeve, the last rib of dignity ked.

Wait till the police get their hands on y," she shrilled. "You—you impudent p!" oc drove at a smart clip out through the w grove. Noticing that Tad was still tened, he winked reassuringly at him. ere, bub"—pointing his whip at the drip- trees—"you see why they're called ping willows. These got to feeling so y for Mrs. Wing, they shed real tears."

noch kept glancing back nervously. Just the doctor to make jokes at such a mot, he was thinking: doctor had more nerve Jesse James. This n't the first time they had to clear out of a e in a hurry—"look- for more country," doctor always said. this time Enoch felt ed. He glanced back in to see if the deputy sheriff was in it.

The triangle never fits into a family circle.

—DUVALL AND HILL: When You Marry (Heath Cranton, Ltd.).

he Contraption jolted and swayed through lack rain-swept night. Tad, snug in his mock, should have been asleep; instead, was pretending they were in a United tes cruiser steaming toward Manila Bay, ch the doctor had told him about, and the le of rain against the roof was gunfire n Spanish shore batteries. Then he heard doctor talking to Enoch on the driver's outside. As he listened his heart began to mp, and fear spread through his small y.

I could kick myself all the way to St. Joe, ssouri!" Doc's voice was harsh. "Just n the pitch is good for four days in Mard, I've got to haul my freight out! I not y lose that take, but now the rurales are ting haystacks looking for me! And all be- se of a wet-nosed kid that's no business of e—no business whatsoever!"

noch, deeply uncomfortable, reached over l tightened the rubber storm curtain. ere rain was trickling in. When the doctor steamed up like this, it was no good argu- with him.

The day I first took the kid along, I didn't nk. It was just what you might call an im- se. I wanted to help the little weasel. I'd ght to known better." Doc snorted dis- stedly. "I wish to the gold-plated heaven never set eyes on him! Then that woman ck her nose in. She riled me so I couldn't her take him back. Just pure cussedness. d that's when I caught my pants in the r trap. Should've let her have him!"

"THE Kingdom of Heaven," said Enoch etly, "is peopled with the softhearted."

"Other places are peopled with the soft- nded—and that's my category! When I nk what this kid's cost me, I'd ought to owned him back there where we crossed river!"

They drove on for a time in silence.

"That scheming shrew—that Mrs. Wing!" c bit off the words savagely. "There's a son in this. Yes, sir, there's a lesson in this anybody like you that gargles gospels all day. Vanity is the downfall of man. Never knew it to fail. Why did I outshoot Annie Oakley to scare that human rutabaga, that deputy sheriff? Vanity! I had to show off in front of Mrs. Wing. Pair of blue eyes blink — and I high-dive into the manure pile!"

He bellowed at the horses, invisible in wet blackness except when a gleam from the swinging lantern showed their hoofs sloshing through the mud.

"Wouldn't mind so much if I'd got in trouble over my card hand being a little quick," he growled. "That's a matter of professional ethics. But to be played for a chump—and driven out of town—by a woman!—that's what chokes me!"

As the Contraption jolted and creaked along, Enoch found himself sympathizing with his employer. To Thomas Jefferson Tilbee, who had adventured up and down the world, a Samaritan was a sucker. Two days ago, by accident and against his better judgment, he had been jockeyed into protecting a helpless orphan—and this good deed had promptly brought trouble crashing down upon his head. Enoch sighed deeply.

For the past hour the going had become heavier and heavier in the storm, until now the horses seemed scarcely to be moving. Doc thrust his face through the flap in the rubber curtain. A gust of rain blew in, and Enoch wondered how the doctor could see anything in this darkness, even though—as he often boasted—his eyes were sharp as an eagle's.

"Like I thought," Doc muttered. "We got off the main road somewhere." He pulled the team to a stop. "Never make Yaigee's place tonight. Have to camp here. Get my slicker, Enoch."

Enoch slid open the panel behind them and lighted the lantern inside. Then his breath whistled out sharply. "Doctor!"

"Well?"

"He's not here," Enoch gasped. "Tad! He's gone!"

Doc swung around and peered back into the Contraption. Beezark whimpered forlornly. The hammock was empty, and the raccoon, too, had disappeared. On the bunk, in a neat pile, lay the new brown suit and the yellow shoes and the small fedora. The rear door stood open, swinging.

"Poor little fellow," Enoch murmured. "He musta heard what—what was said." There was no reproach in his voice, only sadness. "He knowed you didn't want him. . . . Poor little fellow."

"Well," Doc roared, "don't sit there moaning—we've got to find him! He hasn't been gone long or we'd heard that door banging. Crawl back and shut it."

As Enoch, with unsuspected agility, climbed over the seat, Doc shouted at the horses and began turning them in the heavy mud.

By the time Enoch reappeared, the storm curtains were open, flapping wildly—and Doc, with rain slashing in on him, was whipping the team back over the road. "Light that reflector lamp," he ordered. And while Enoch fumbled with matches that the wind blew out, Doc raged at his clumsiness. Enoch had never seen him upset like this before. Finally the reflector lamp was lighted, and as he sat flashing it into the black ditches along the roadside, Enoch's lips moved silently, praying.

They found Tad a mile up the road. The beam from the reflector lamp picked out two tiny points of light that changed into a raccoon's eyes—and there was Tad, holding Spook in his arms, cowering under a snake fence in the rain. Doc pulled the horses to a stop and sprang out.

"Come aboard, sailor." His voice sounded so relieved it was almost jovial. "That 'coon looks like he's had enough swimming for one night."

Enoch, holding the horses, noticed how gently the doctor picked the boy up, and it gave him a warm feeling that fate had decided the issue. Now the doctor would never let them take Tad back to the institution. And yet—with law officers looking for him everywhere—what chance did he have?

DISCRIMINATING PEOPLE PREFER

HERBERT TAREYTON

MRS. R. STUYVESANT PIERREPONT, JR., charming socialite of New York and Old Westbury. Discriminating in her choice of cigarettes, Mrs. Pierrepont says: "Only Herbert Tareyton gives you a cork tip, extra length and such really mild tobacco."

Discriminating people prefer Herbert Tareyton. They appreciate the kind of smoking that only fine tobacco and a genuine cork tip can give. The cork tip doesn't stick to the lips . . . it's clean and firm. And discriminating people prefer Herbert Tareyton because their modern size not only means a longer, cooler smoke, but that extra measure of fine tobacco makes Herbert Tareyton today's most unusual cigarette value.

THERE'S SOMETHING ABOUT THEM YOU'LL LI

Copr., The American Tobacco

...you need the LOTION MADE FOR BUSY HANDS!

If, like most people, you use your hands hard in daily work, you're likely to find that no ordinary, "cosmetic-type" lotion will keep them from getting rough and dry. What you really need is the lotion especially made for working hands . . . Italian Balm.

Different from all other lotions, rich Italian Balm contains medically-proved ingredients that are good for your skin. Soothes and softens chapped, rough skin overnight. Then, like an "invisible glove", it constantly protects your skin—from work, weather and water—even helps safeguard against infection (contains an antiseptic).

With Italian Balm, your hands will feel better, work better, look better almost immediately. Economical, too. One drop does it! Only 25¢, 50¢, 1.00.

So simple: Just use a drop of Balm after each exposure to work, weather or water, and at bedtime. Your hands will always feel smooth and comfortable.

So good, one drop does it!

Italian Balm

A CAMPANA PRODUCT

Zerelda Wing sat at the marble-topped soda fountain in Helmholtz's drugstore, sipping a cherry phosphate. Since her arrival this morning she had visited every lawyer's office in the city of Albion, only to discover that Doctor Tilbee had treacherously deceived her. He had referred her to "his attorney" in Albion—but no attorney in Albion had ever heard of him; and the realization that she had again been outwitted by this man was more than her volatile temper could bear. In her anger she failed to notice that she had finished the cherry phosphate until her straw made a loud burbling in the bottom of the glass.

"Have another, Zerelda?"

She turned quickly. Alonzo Moultripp stood there, smiling. He had been one of her beaus when they were undergraduates, and now he was an assistant professor of English at Albion College.

"'Lonzo!" Even in her irate mood she was glad to see him, for, like most women, she found something agreeable in meeting a former suitor who had remained a bachelor. "I was thinking of you just the other day when I found a lovely poem you wrote to me," she smiled, "on the back of my dance card for the Valentine Cotillion in Ann Arbor."

"My poetry was bad—but my intentions were good. Unfortunately." The professor laid aside his green flannel book bag and kissed her hand with a flourish.

"So Continental, 'Lonzo!"

"Uncontrollably—since I had that six weeks in France." He pushed a Byronic lock of hair out of his eyes and sat down and looked at her musingly.

"Zerelda,
Zerelda. . . .
How long since I've held her
Close in my arms ——"

"A cad's confession," she protested.

"As we waltzed," the professor finished. "Just something I dashed off in the heat of the moment. But tell me what you're doing in perfidious Albion."

"M'm." Her eyes clouded swiftly. "'Lonzo, I was never so blazing mad in my life." And she related, in crisp phrases, her experience with the infuriating Doctor Tilbee and the orphan.

The professor listened attentively. "How did you get mixed up in this, in the first place?"

"Well, I took a job with the poor board."

"These jobs you're always taking! Why? You don't need the money."

"Oh, they don't pay me. I'm doing it because we have such a problem with the orphans."

"Beautiful young widow finding life stale, flat and ——"

"Well"—she shrugged—"a girl can't sit home all day burning Indian heads on leather pillow covers!"

"The restless modern woman," he commented. "Do you know what I think? All your frantic chasing around—I think you're on the defensive, just to avoid marrying Chilly Corr!"

ZERELDA blushed to her ears. "What nonsense!"

"Touché." The professor laughed wickedly. "You never liked Chilton, did you?"

"He is my favorite Horatio Alger story. From the day he won his first high-school debate the Boy Orator of Paw Paw Lake has been marked for nauseating success. Two years ago he was elected city attorney of Lost River; next we'll hear he is running for Congress. Nothing but an untimely den can keep him out of the White House. An must concede, Zerelda, you would make ornamental first lady of the land."

"'Lonzo, you are unkind."

"Merely jealous." He gave her an owl smile. "But I find myself grateful to itinerant Doctor Tilbee."

She gasped. "You what?"

"Pursuing him around the country has least temporarily taken your mind off Boy Orator of Paw Paw Lake. Yes, sympathies are with Doctor Tilbee."

FRESH indignation surged up in Zerel "How can you say such a thing? He ——"

"He sounds like a romantic figure, if y ask me. D'Artagnan peddling patent me cine."

"Fudge!" she exclaimed angrily. "T man is a crook and I'm going to have h arrested."

"If you catch him."

"Oh, we'll catch him all right. He'll h out in the country nearby—he won't d go into any town."

"Why didn't your gendarmes arrest h in Marland?" the professor asked her.

"Well ——" F an instant she w flustered. "There's legal technicality th could get us in a of trouble." She ro abruptly and gat ered up her glov and reticule. "Whi reminds me—I'm d at the sheriff's office

In her eyes was bright, hard look had never seen befo "By Jove, Zerelda" he stared at her "you're really gri about this!"

"Yes, I am. If don't get the boy ba the consequences c be very serious."

"So it's the hue a cry for poor D'Art gnan?"

"D'Artagnan"- she frowned distast fully—"will land the Bastille!"

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Rendezvous

BY JOHN A. CAPPON

Quietly waiting me, you hold
  Something like pride above your passion,
And outwardly I have controlled
  My own in some halfhearted fashion.

We are adult. I offer you
  Proof of our cordial-casual meeting;
Deceit for passer-by to view:
  My hand, in simple, proper greeting.

The passer-by goes on his way
  Blind as the old Amalekite;
He saw no pillar of cloud by day,
  Or fire by night.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The sun was hig when Doc drew rein a the top of a hill to rest the horses. Belo the brown-green Kalamazoo River serpe tined through lush countryside, disappearin in a forest over which hung a streamer smoke.

Enoch watched the doctor uneasily. The had thrown off their pursuers in the storm last night, but Enoch could tell that th doctor was worried.

Abruptly Doc made a decision. "That what we'll do." He nodded toward the smok on the horizon. "We'll go there!"

"But"—Enoch looked startled—"tha there's a city."

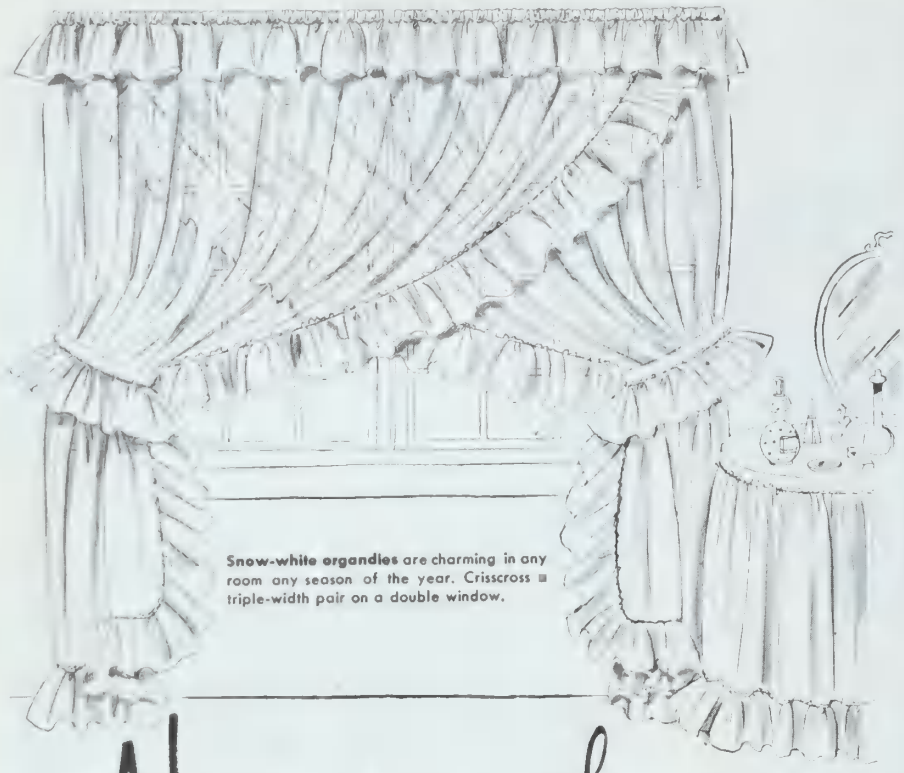
"Just why we'll go there." Doc's eye brightened. "Study the great military cam paigns." He turned to Tad. "Why did I tel you Gen'l Washington crossed the Dela ware?"

"To surprise the British," Tad answere promptly.

"Right," said Doc. "Element of surpris is what does it. They'll figure—Madam Win and her rustic constables—that I'm hidin out in the country. They won't expect me t sashay into a city—so that's exactly wha I'll do." Doc turned to Enoch. "We'll hav chow."

Tad grinned happily. He had watche with interest this morning an operatio which the doctor called "foraging": haltin at farmhouses where he was greeted like a old friend and where bottles of Wonde Tonic were bartered for food. Their larde was richer now by a smoked ham, two appl pies, three loaves of fresh-baked bread and a shoe box full of fried chicken. And as he sa

(Continued on Page 158)



Scotties* are softies!

Scotties are thrifties, too!

Every day more and more families are buying Scotties. You'll see how thrifty they are when you compare their value with all others. Scotties are soft and snowy white yet they have 2-way strength for practical family use. You can "blow" into them and they don't go to pieces. They don't crumble when you remove make-up. Scotties are ideal for the whole family, children and grownups alike.

* another tissue by Scott that's "soft as old linen"

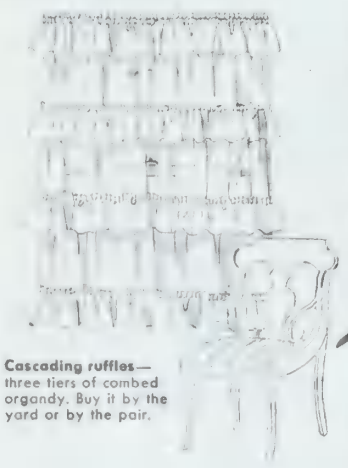
"Scotties," "Soft as old linen," Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.



Snow-white organdies are charming in any room any season of the year. Crisscross ■ triple-width pair on a double window.

New ways with Combed Organdies

To give every room in your home new beauty and freshness all year 'round, hang snow-white Berkshire combed organdies. Berkshires are easy to wash in mild, lukewarm suds, keep their crisp finish without starching.

Berkshire Curtains are the finest combed organdies you can buy. They're cut extra-full with lavish, picot-edged ruffles, and beautifully finished with extra-high headings and ample rod slots. They're a complete window decoration in themselves. Order Berkshire Curtains in any standard size from your favorite store or send coupon below for information.

Cascading ruffles—three tiers of combed organdy. Buy it by the yard or by the pair.

Berkshire Combed Organdies are also available in 8 fashion-right colors selected by House & Garden's panel of experts.

Berkshire®

FINE CURTAINS

Producers of the finest combed cotton fabrics for apparel and home furnishings.

NEW BOOKLET ONLY 10c. Send for "New Ways with Windows" showing 14 different window treatments with Berkshire Organdies—also name of nearest store where you can buy these curtains.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

BERKSHIRE CURTAINS, Dept. LJ 10-51
Madison Sq. Sta., Box 159, New York 10, N. Y.

I enclose 10c. Please send me a copy of "New Ways With Windows" and name of nearest store selling Berkshire Curtains.

Name_____

Address_____

(Continued from Page 156)

with the doctor and Enoch, eating delectable fried chicken, while the horses contentedly munched the oats in their nose bags and Beezark and Spook played under a big oak, Tad understood why the doctor had chosen this life of the open road. There was nothing like it—nothing so free and fine in the world; he was sure of that. His unhappiness of last night—the near tragedy of running away—all were forgotten in this perfect moment, with this perfect fried chicken.

Close at hand a cricket sang in a rasping monotone. "Spell of warm weather ahead," said Doc.

"How can a cricket tell that?" Tad asked.

"Crickets're about the wisest insects there are." Doc lighted a cigar carefully. "What's more, they're good companions. If one of 'em ever comes in your house to pay you a visit, treat him right. He'll bring you good luck."

The expression "good luck" puckered a frown over Enoch's eyes. He wondered how much longer the doctor's luck could hold out, with the law breathing down the back of his neck. Venturing into a city just now was taking a fearsome chance. He felt that the doctor wouldn't take such a chance except that he needed money—needed it badly.

But the doctor appeared unconcerned; and when they had set out again, down the long hill leading through Verona to Lost River, his mood became expansive. He picked up the theme of the American Revolution where he had left off yesterday, and explained to Tad how the thirteen colonies had struggled through desperate years following the war and how they were forged into a strong nation. Tad listened attentively. History had never sounded like this at the district school; somehow the doctor made places and people come alive.

Women are notoriously bad judges of a man till they get to an age where it doesn't help them.

From: WHIPPED CREAM, by Geoffrey Moss, copyright 1926 by Doubleday & Co., Inc.

"The peace was worse'n the war," Doc said, "but we had big men in those days—old Ben Franklin, my namesake Mr. Jefferson and some others—and they knocked the colonists' heads together and forced 'em to listen. It was a fight to make people see what a great country they had—but the fight was worth it. That's why you're lucky, bub"—he turned to Tad. "You're one of the luckiest fellows on earth—to have the chance to grow up with this country. I've seen 'em all—I've been to Paris, France, and Berlin, Germany. But you take this country, a fellow like you can grow up to be just about anything he sets his cap for." He squinted off over the trees. "English poet name of Percy Bush Shelley wrote a high-toned tribute to America once." And in his resonant baritone he recited:

"That land is like an eagle whose young gaze
Feeds on the noonday beam, whose golden plume
Floats moveless on the storm, and in the blaze
Of sunrise gleams when earth is wrapped in gloom;
An epitaph of glory for the tomb
Of murdered Europe."

Doc shook his head. "Now that's what I call sublime."

"Certainly is," Enoch agreed. "Yes, sir, certainly is."

"Why was Europe murdered?" Tad asked.

Doc's mouth opened. "Well, that's a moot point. Some juries might bring in a verdict of suicide." Then he coughed and bellowed at the horses, "Hup, there!" And with a crack of his whip, abruptly he changed the subject. "When I was driving the Deadwood stage I had a lead hoss name of Bajo. Spanish word for 'mean,'" he explained to Tad. "And he was mean, Bajo was—but one day he saved my life."

"How?" Tad's eyes were wide.

"Well, sir, I had a passenger that y... prob'ly the most famous woman in the w... West—Rita Paloma, the actress. Grea... star since Lola Montez: an angel in hu... form. Matter of fact," he stated solem... "it was seeing her perform that influence... to take up a Thespian career. Following ... I joined the Belnap and McCoy Enterpris... Shakespearean repertory, touring the So... ern States. Worked my way up to whe... was playing some important roles."

"I saw Othello, by Shakespeare," ... Enoch. "In Kansas City, it was. You ... play the role of Othello, doctor?"

"NEVER actually played it." Doc tossed ... cigar away. "Got up in the part, tho... Twice. Understudy for J. J. Belnap, the s... He was having a little trouble with delir... tremens that season—but by some alcoh... miracle he always made the stage in time... his cue. Otherwise I might have got ... chance and been a star myself. Never tru... a man that drinks since. You remem... Othello's entrance, Enoch? Where Iago s... 'Though in the trade of war I have s... men ——'"

"How did the lead horse save your lif..." Tad asked.

Doc turned to him, not in the least ... noyed by the interruption. "Tell you ... bub. Hundreds of miners and cow hand... that camp had been waiting months to ... the famous star, Rita Paloma. They ... tough hombres—the toughest in the We... and if I hadn't got Rita Paloma there, the... have strung me up to ... nearest tree! As it ... we pretty nigh didn't m... it. Only two hours be... showtime—ten miles ... rough mountains to ... and my hosses all lat... pelting rattlety-b... downgrade at a gallo... when suddenly I see ... rear wheel go past, s... ning down the road lil... silver dollar on a mahogany bar! Then ... turned over."

While Tad and Enoch listened, spellbou... Doc described the runaway of the six hor... modestly recounting his own part in the ... venture: how he captured Bajo, the l... horse, in an arroyo, mounted the plung... animal, swung Rita Paloma up behind ... and galloped the last ten miles to the mir... camp, arriving in the nick of time. Tad's e... were big as Doc dramatized the miners ... cowboys swarming out of the theater, fi... their six-guns into the air in wild salute, ... only to the beautiful actress but to him...

The Contraption turned into a wider roa... and ahead stood a battered yellow stree... at the "end of the line," with the motorm... and conductor swinging the trolley aro... by hand.

"Here we are," Doc exclaimed, "ente... the purlieus of civilization. First move i... beard the chief of police in his lair and sh... a license out of him. If"—he frowne... "Mrs. Wing and that broomtail sheriff dic... get there first."

"We goin' keep our fingers crossed," En... said fervently.

Doc turned to the raccoon: "And you k... your paws crossed!"

The morning was bright with Septem... sunshine and Tad and Enoch were in h... spirits, grooming the horses in their camp... the river. Enoch's cheerfulness could be tra... to the doctor's success with the chief of po... last evening. Apparently Mrs. Wing's c... paign was a teapot tempest in her own to... ship, for no word of it had reached I... River, and Chief Faring not only issue... pitchman's license to the doctor, but ... taken him to dinner at the Green Moon C... The truth was that Chief Faring looked ... ward to the doctor's annual visits. He fo... Wonder Tonic a pleasant apéritif and Doc... Tilbee a raconteur of rare talent—parti... larly when describing his exploits as a Pi... erton detective in the Southwest. This mo... ing the doctor had taken the streetcar i... town to "look up" other acquaintances: B...

(Continued on Page 160)

COURTESY LENOX, INC.-KARHULA CRYSTAL FROM FINLAND HOUSE

LUNT'S Sweetheart Rose

STERLING

How proud you will be . . . when your luncheon or dinner guests are seated around you and there, glistening before them, rests the sterling loveliness of Sweetheart Rose. For you will know that, spoken or unspoken, their very first thought will be "What exquisite taste she has!" Sweetheart Rose, though not ostentatious, nevertheless does clearly assert its right to distinction. A quiet dignity pervades its flowingly graceful lines. A "not too much nor too little" rightness distinguishes the subtle placement of its delicate rose sprays. To everyone the inherent good taste of its design is instantly apparent. So it is not surprising that Sweetheart Rose is chosen and cherished by those whose discriminating judgment is impeccable. Please send for literature and prices, addressing Dept. L-6.

THE SWEETHEART ROSE CORSAGE. Florists everywhere are featuring this smart new fashion accessory for Fall inspired by the new LUNT Sterling design, Sweetheart Rose.

LUNT Silversmiths

GREENFIELD · MASSACHUSETTS

In 4.9 Seconds A Giraffe Can Run 100 Yards... But In Only

TWO SECONDS

Bayer Aspirin Is Ready To Go To Work!

MAKE THIS TEST!

To see how fast it's ready to go to work, drop a Bayer Aspirin tablet in a glass of water, and time its disintegrating speed. What happens in the glass, happens in your stomach.

How fast you get relief is important when you have an ordinary headache, neuritic or neuralgic pain. And because genuine Bayer Aspirin is actually ready to go to work in two seconds, it brings relief that's amazingly fast.

But there's more to pain relief than speed. Dependability is also important. And Bayer Aspirin is one pain reliever you can rely upon. For its single active ingredient is not only so effective doctors regularly prescribe it for pain relief, but is also so gentle to the system mothers give it even to small children on their doctors' advice.

So when you are in pain, and want fast, dependable relief—don't experiment with drugs that have not stood the test of time. Instead, use genuine Bayer Aspirin. And always be sure to ask for it by the name "Bayer" when you buy.

NOW... BAYER ASPIRIN IN CHILDREN'S SIZE

New 2½ grain tablets (containing half the amount of regular size Bayer Aspirin tablets) provide proper children's dosage as prescribed by your doctor. They're neither flavored nor colored, so they cannot be mistaken for candy. 30 Tablets—25¢.

Because no other pain reliever can match its record of use by millions of normal people, without ill effect, one thing you can take with complete confidence is genuine

BAYER ASPIRIN

(Continued from Page 158)

Gray, editor of the Banner, and Bert Beelom, the druggist, at whose prescription counter in the rear of his store some of the city's leading citizens convened daily over a glass of medicinal whisky. Enoch knew that Lost River was a "live" town, good for ten days' pitch—or even three weeks, if the weather kept fine. Things were looking up; he sang as he worked.

Tad was happy because camping on the outskirts of town was as adventurous as if he were in the Black Hills with General Custer. Today the bandage had been removed from Beezark's leg and the little dog frisked in circles around his more sedate friend, the raccoon, whose chain was attached to a wagon wheel. For a time Tad watched their antics, then rejoined Enoch; and it was at this moment that the raccoon slipped out of his leather collar and, unnoticed, glided away through the elderberry bushes.

"There's a big house over the hill," Tad told Enoch. "They got horses an' ever'thing. A little girl lives there, an' her pa. He's cross-lookin' an' kind of ornery, her pa is. An' they got a sick horse."

Enoch's hands, oiling a hoof of one of the dapple grays, paused. "How you know all this, boy?"

"I seen 'em—saw 'em," Tad said. "Sundown last night I crep' up there—an' I reconnottered. They got a black man looks after their horses——" He broke off, sudden shame reddening his cheeks, fearful lest he had offended his friend. "I—I didn't mean ——"

"Tha's all right." Enoch smiled gently. "The black is only skin-deep, Tad."

Miss June Dunbar crawled through the fence and set off across the pasture, followed by a large coach dog. Beneath her starched blue-and-white gingham frock, Miss Dunbar seethed with revolt. It was not only that Hilda had refused to let her go barefooted this morning, but she had inflicted on her one of those enormous butterfly hair ribbons that always caught on branches. Miss Dunbar had had about enough of Hilda, who was her nurse and also "did" the upstairs; and once out of sight of the house, she took decisive action. Off came her shoes and stockings—and were stuffed under a bush. Next she jerked off the odious hair ribbon, summoned Spots, the coach dog, and tied it around his neck in a gala bow. Spots, who was accustomed to such indignities, promptly disappeared and Miss Dunbar was left alone.

As she crossed the pasture, sometimes digging her bare toes into the sun-warm turf and sometimes hopping over clumps of fur dandelions, it occurred to her that she had been left to play alone much of the time since mummie and her brother went away. How long ago that had been, she was not sure—for, being only seven herself, her concept of time was somewhat vague; but she had heard Maggie Riley, the housekeeper, say that from the day it happened her father became "a dark man and no happiness in him." This confused Miss Dunbar—because Luke, who took care of the horses, was a dark man. Sometimes she wondered why she saw her father so seldom, but she assumed that he wasn't interested in little girls. And as there were no children to play with, she had to make up her own games, one of which was Tea-with-the-Grasshopper-Family.

She had arrived at their home, a fledgling bush against the fence at the lower end of the pasture, where an assortment of lively grasshoppers could always be found; and crawling in, she made herself comfortable. Usually she pretended to serve tea, talking aloud to the grasshoppers, who were singularly retiring in conversation; but today the game lacked zest, and she sat wriggling her toes and wishing there were other children to play with.

For an instant her eyes closed—and when she opened them she recoiled in fright. Within a wild animal crouched three inches from her. Miss Dunbar screamed. Spook, the raccoon was more frightened than she: too frightened to move when the coach dog came rushing at

By Munro Leaf

One of the most annoying and unpleasant things we know to have around is a Gloater. It smirks and grins and rubs it in when somebody else has to work and it doesn't. Gloaters make other people feel unhappy and they are as selfish as anyone can be. If Gloaters aren't decent enough to help when they can, the least they can do is go away where we can't see them.

WERE YOU A GLOATER THIS MONTH?

Baby your baby with the swab doctors use!

To be sure of the finest sterilized swabs for baby, do as your doctor does — use 'Q-Tips,' the original cotton swabs. More 'Q-Tips' have been used by doctors than any other prepared swabs.

They're made of softest, finest quality cotton anchored securely at both ends of the applicator, correctly shaped for gentle baby care. 'Q-Tips' are sterilized right in the package by the best hospital method. Don't take a substitute . . . take 'Q-Tips.'

Mothers —here's a new idea for you

'Q-Tips' are also a wonderful aid in making up. Wet one end of swab and use to clean make-up and powder from eyebrows. Use the dry end to brush brows shiny. Use 'Q-Tips' also to clean up smeared mascara . . . remove excess lipstick . . . for manicures and pedicures. For beauty's sake, reach for 'Q-Tips.'

29¢, 49¢ and 98¢ pkg.

Q-TIPS

he original cotton swab in the famous blue box

TIPS INC., LONG ISLAND CITY, N. Y.

him. He was cornered against the fence and the big coach dog bore in on him, barking and snapping viciously, while Miss Dunbar continued to shriek.

Events moved with speed and fury. A shape of brown-and-black fur shot out of the bushes—and Beezark's teeth closed on the coach dog's throat. The horrible sounds they made drowned Miss Dunbar's screams. She saw a small boy dart through the bushes to snatch up the raccoon in his arms; and in the same instant Luke, the stable hand, appeared from nowhere, flailing the little dog with a rake to make him let go. Then a much larger colored man vaulted over the fence, charged at Luke and knocked him spinning like a pin wheel.

Miss Dunbar stopped screaming when she saw her father. He was in riding clothes—and as he came running she could see that he was very angry. She watched him rush at the twisting, snarling mass of black-and-white and brown-and-black fur and heard him shout for someone to bring red pepper or hot water.

It was at this unfortunate moment that Doc Tilbee, returning from town, chanced upon the scene. He gave a quick glance at the strange Negro on the ground, rubbing his jaw, and at the young man in English riding togs, berating Enoch. Then he observed that Beezark was about to kill a valuable coach dog. With a great leap he was in the midst of the fight, trying to avoid the coach dog's teeth while prying Beezark loose. Suddenly it was all over: the coach dog had streaked out of sight and Doc had handed Beezark to Enoch and was wiping blood from his wrist, where the coach dog had nipped him.

"What's the meaning of this?" The young man in riding clothes strode toward him angrily.

"Well," said Doc, "the only meaning I can see is that dogs haven't much more judgment than people about picking fights."

Edan Dunbar halted, scowling. "Are you the squatters camping out on my property below here?"

"I didn't know it was your property," Doc answered mildly. "But we're not squatters—we've only made camp while ——"

"You'll have to move," Dunbar cut in. "This is private property."

Doc looked at him, seeing beyond the sullen expression and sensing some inner tension, some deep discontent.

"Do I make myself clear?" Dunbar took a step forward. "I want you to get off my property. If you don't I'll call the police and have you thrown off!"

"That's kind of violent language," said Doc, "in front of a lady."

Dunbar swung around. His daughter and a freckled boy clutching a raccoon were staring at each other with guileless curiosity. "Go to the house, June."

Miss Dunbar did not appear to hear him, so fascinated was she by this handsome stranger holding the raccoon. "Aren't you afraid he'll bite you?" she asked.

"Naw," answered Tad, with the disdain a lion trainer might display to a circus goer outside the cage. "Spook wouldn't bite nobody. *Any*body," he corrected.

Edan Dunbar frowned. "Who's that boy?" he asked.

"One of our party," Doc said cautiously. "Is that his raccoon?"

"It's hard to say," Doc replied, "whether the 'coon belongs to him or he belongs to the 'coon."

Some of the harshness had gone out of Edan Dunbar's expression. He spoke again to the little girl: "Go up to the house, June."

She turned and, without a word, walked slowly away. Tad stared after her.

"Beautiful child." Doc's voice was elaborately casual. "Don't know as I ever saw such a beautiful child."

Dunbar looked embarrassed. "You understood about camping down there," he said. Then abruptly he crossed to the Negro on the ground. "Where's Rani?"

The Negro scrambled to his feet, pointing across the pasture at a chestnut horse lying under a tree. Dunbar started toward it, the Negro at his heels.

(Continued on Page 163)

SAVED
. . . THE E-Z WAY

Who-o-o-oo-ee — here comes the E-Z brigade to help mothers select the right size underwear and sleepwear—by WEIGHT! "To the rescue", they shout, "weigh us for size—get perfect E-Z fit every time". How right they are! Weight is the surest guide when buying for children, so E-Z labels show weight as well as size. Famous EZ-ON* Necks fit snugly, whisk on and off quickly. The E-Z Pin-Up Shirt has sturdy diaper pin tapes to save shirt—keep diaper in place. Save yourself time and money—buy E-Z Underwear, Sleepwear and Hosiery.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

E-Z

UNDERWEAR • SLEEPWEAR
HOSIERY • "FOR ANY CHILD OF ANY AGE"

E-Z MILLS, INC., EMPIRE STATE BLDG., NEW YORK 1, NEW YORK

*PATENTED

THESE LOOK ALIKE...WHEN NEW

These brocade draperies cost over $25.00

These Velon draperies cost under $10.00

SO DIFFERENT...SIX MONTHS LATER

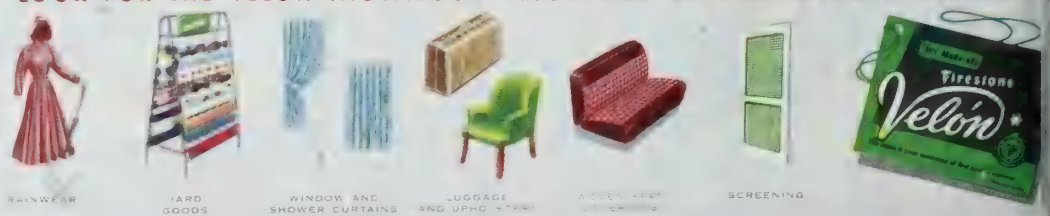
The brocade draperies need expensive dry-cleaning

The Velon draperies were wiped clean with a damp soapy cloth

You get longer-lasting beauty on a budget with draperies made of Firestone Velon

Live in a city? Live near a highway, railroad, or factory? No matter where you live, you'll appreciate the beauty of new three-dimensional fabric-textured draperies made of Firestone Velon. They look like fine fabric. They feel like fine fabric. But unlike fabric, Velon presents no cleaning problem. A damp, soapy cloth takes care of grime, smog and most household stains. No heavy laundering or dry-cleaning. You can enjoy Velon in light, smart decorator colors—in brocade- and damask-like patterns: Canadia, Persia, Sea Lace, Moresque. Your favorite store has a stunning collection of draperies made up by leading manufacturers in Firestone Velon.

Moresque



Canadia

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

*Trade Mark © 1951 Firestone Plastics Company, Pottstown, Pa.

Enjoy the Voice of Firestone Monday Evenings on NBC Radio and Televis

LOOK FOR THE VELON TAG...YOUR ASSURANCE OF FIRST QUALITY MATERIAL

(Continued from Page 161)

c stood with Enoch and Tad, watching
h go. "Well," he remarked, "social dis-in ons are drawn kind of taut around here.
V have to look for more country."

hey got a sick horse," Tad said.

c glanced at him thoughtfully. "So?"

ke, the stable hand, was walking the lame
h nut mare back and forth on a lead rein, vt Edan Dunbar observed the action of e bandaged hind leg. Doc came toward h slowly, holding a bloody handkerchief g st the wrist that had been torn by the o dog's teeth. Without a glance at Duna r the horse, he strolled over to a trash ir urning on a bare patch of ground, and x ined an iron rod that stuck out from the la s. He stirred it with his boot toe, reveal-n red-hot end in the fire bed.

an Dunbar turned with a frown of curis . To his astonishment he saw Doc reach c and wrap his handkerchief around the o andle and pick it up.

What seems to be wrong with the mare?"
asked casually. And as he spoke he o ied the glowing red-hot iron to the wound
r is wrist. There was a hiss of burning le —but his only reaction was a twitch of a nuscles, then beads of sweat glistened on ii ace. Dunbar winced and the Negro was t ng in goggle-eyed horror. "Looks like h had that lameness for some time."
ly Doc tossed the iron rod away.

Yes." Dunbar tried to pull his eyes from h cauterized raw wound. This flamboyant
o ition of courage had jarred him.
s if nothing had happened, Doc walked r nd the mare.

Who put that bandage on?" he asked.

The vet," said Dun-

M'm. What's he treat-
n ner for?"

Curb."

Mind if I have a look
it ?"

Why—no," Dunbar
u vered.

Easy, girl." Doc ran a hand over the r e's flank, lifted her near hind leg gently u unwound the bandage. He felt of the p c. "No curb here." Then he scraped some h d mud from her hoof. The mare jerked p vously. "Like I thought," Doc muttered.
' rush. Look at that frog."

Dunbar came close, peering at the diseased
h f.

Left her standing a long time in mud, n en't you?" Doc glanced from the owner to n Negro groom. "Or maybe the floor of her st l's not well drained and dry. As for these sh es, they must've been put on by a plumber.
S was cold-shod!"

You're right," said Dunbar.

Doc released the lame leg. "Some of these b omtail vets don't know a splint from a s vin." He turned to Dunbar. "But between u you and I can fix this lady up. Week or t , she'll be nimble as a toe dancer."

Dunbar nodded. "I—I'm very much o ged." He hesitated, embarrassed. "Isn't t re something we can do for that dog bite
o your arm?"

Think nothing of it," Doc told him. "In t last Sioux campaign an old trooper name
c Shonk in my squadron got a bullet through t foot. When it swoll all up with blood pois . Shonk hacked off the foot with his hunt-i knife." He smiled nonchalantly. "Let's t e this mare up to the barn and go to work."

Who seeks more than he needs hinders himself from enjoying what he has.
—IBN GABIROL.

The week that followed, Doc's luck held.
Ich night his pitch attracted sizable crowds the street corners of Lost River, where nder Tonic was sold as fast as he could nufacture it. Domestic difficulties, too, d abated. The chestnut mare was well on e way to recovery, and Edan Dunbar had t only invited them to camp there as long i they wished, but had taken to sending wn choice delicacies from the kitchen of e big house. Tonight Doc sat by his fire in e twilight, dining on roast duck and claret at had arrived with Mr. Dunbar's complients.

"Seem like the Lord's mighty good to us."
noch's voice exuded gratitude. "Our cup is ll."

"Mine isn't," Doc objected. "Pour me a little of that vino." And as Enoch poured the wine: "Did you cultivate Dunbar's stable hand, like I told you?"

"Luke? Yes, doctor."

"Has he pardoned you for knocking him end over teakettle at the dogfight?"

Enoch looked abashed. "Luke's pride was hurt."

"I poulticed his pride," said Doc, "telling him you used to box with Jack Johnson."

"But, doctor—I never did ——"

"Well, you saw Jack Johnson box once. Amounts to the same thing, practically." He took a sip of claret. "Find out anything more about Dunbar?"

ENOCH reported the latest intelligence on the dour young landowner: that he had inherited a food factory and was so rich he never went near it; and that he had been devoted to his wife and small son, both of whom were drowned several years ago, when a sailboat capsized on Bird Lake.

"Since then Mr. Dunbar hasn't never been the same," Enoch finished. "Luke claim it's why he acts so grouty. He loved his wife—and he was all wrap' up in the little boy."

"M'm." Doc squinted at the garnet gleam in his wineglass. "That explains a good many things." Then a sudden thought turned his eyes to Tad, who sat munching a duck wing. "Cousin Tad, what social progress did you make when they invited you for lunch yesterday?"

Tad swallowed his food before he replied. His manners were improving. "We had fun." He smiled. "She's got a pony—but she was scared of it an' I learned her ——"

"Taught her."

"Yes, sir—taught her how to ride bareback. Her father saw us an' I guess he liked it—'cause he told me I could come up there every day an' play." The boy's eyes shone in the firelight. "Tomorrow's June's birthday an' she's goin' to have a birthday party an' I'm invited!"

"That calls for a present." Doc drew a silver dollar from his pocket. "Here you go!"

The coin flashed and Tad caught it eagerly. "Thank you, doctor. Jingoes! A whole dollar?"

"A gentleman," said Doc, "always spends more'n he can afford on a present for a lady—or he's not a gentleman." Then, leaning back and taking out his wallet: "Enoch, I'm ready for a gill of Java."

While Enoch poured the coffee Doc took a newspaper clipping from his wallet and read it for the tenth time since it had appeared in yesterday's Banner. His friend Billy Gray, the editor, had had him "written up" and the article was so flattering that his ego purred like a kitten each time he reread it. Half a column of provincial journalese announced Dr. Thomas Jefferson Tilbee's arrival in town, "representing a well-known medicine," and described his "colorful" career as a cowboy, Shakespearean actor, Indian fighter, driver of the famous Deadwood stage, gold prospector, Pinkerton detective, deputy under Pat Garrett when Billy the Kid was killed, trick shot with Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show, and so on. The final paragraph eulogized his heroism as one of Teddy Roosevelt's Roughriders at San Juan Hill.

Doc shifted uneasily. "They kind of laid it on a little too thick, at the last."

Enoch looked at him searchingly. The article disturbed Enoch, because he had a passion for truth and suspected that the doctor had been "approximating" again.

"You was there, wasn't you, doctor?" he asked. "With the Roughriders?"

Doc coughed. "What? Oh, yes—certainly. But ——" He broke off, frowning.

Enoch watched him fold the clipping and return it to his wallet. "I wisht they hadn't never printed it at all," Enoch said quietly.

"Why, this is high-class propaganda. You'll see it'll help business."

Enoch looked worried. "Some folks might read it—some folks you druther they didn't know where you are."

Doc eyed him sharply. "For instance?"

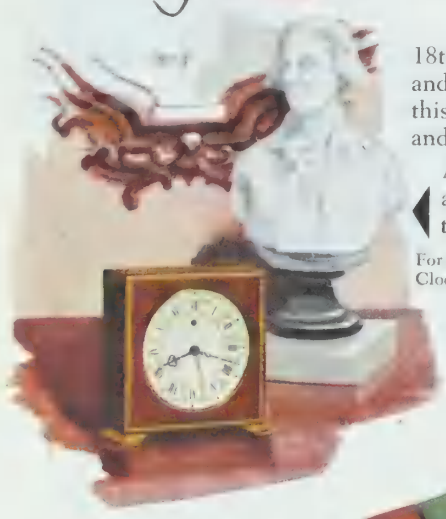
YES! That's what everyone is saying about the new CherryMODERN bedroom furniture by Kling. It's so smart and so entirely different! And it is genuine solid native cherry.

For only solid wood lends itself to the graceful shaping that distinguishes the drawer fronts and bed ends of the CherryMODERN suite. You'll be happy and proud to have CherryMODERN, with its polished brass drawer pulls, large bevelled mirrors and beautiful craftsmanship, in your home. See it at leading furniture and department stores.

Send 25¢ in coin (no stamps, please) for big, beautiful, full color booklet, "Your Bedroom and You". Contains a wealth of helpful suggestions on bedroom decoration and arrangement and care of furniture. Address Dept. J10, Kling Factories, Mayville, N. Y.

KLING BEDROOM FURNITURE

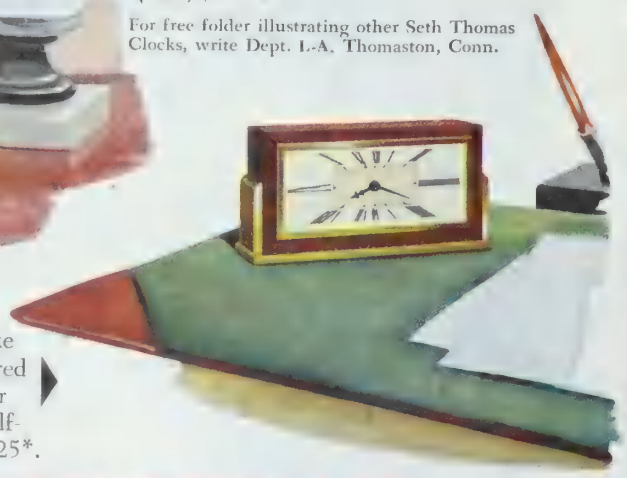
KLING MEANS SOLID CHERRY • MAHOGANY • MAPLE



OUR 40th ANNIVERSARY YEAR

Fashioned from a solid block of satiny wood, the new Seth Thomas† "Belwyn" looks beautifully at home on a modern telephone table or antique desk.

Fine hardwood, finished in mahogany, maple, or blond. Pleasant alarm. Electric, 4¾" tall, $8.95*. With luminous dial, $9.95*.



New faces for small spaces

18th century simplicity of form and grace of detail distinguish this little mahogany clock, framed and footed in shining brass.

Aptly named "Poise," even its alarm is mellow. Electric, 5¼" tall, $17.50*.

For free folder illustrating other Seth Thomas Clocks, write Dept. L-A, Thomaston, Conn.

A small important clock like "Baxter" is hard to find. In red or black lacquer; or blond or brown mahogany. Brass half-frame. Electric, 4¼" tall, $25*.

SETH THOMAS

FINE CLOCKS & WATCHES

"Legacy." Westminster Chime. 14½" tall. $115*.

"Tradition." Striking clock. 20" tall. $95*.

"Northbury." Westminster Chime. 11" tall. $75*.

†Reg. U.S. Pat. Off. *Tax extra; prices subject to change.

"Well—Mrs. Wing."

"She don't see the Lost River papers." He could not admit how often he had thought of her during the past week.

Enoch shook his head. "Things been goin' too good. They's trouble somewheres around—I c'n feel it. Las' night I had a dream about a black cat ——"

"Man of science like myself can't be bothered by superstition. As old Walt Whitman said: 'Henceforth I ask not good-fortune, I myself am good-fortune!'" He gazed up at the evening sky and stretched exuberantly. "Trot out the team, Enoch. We'll start for town and tangle with the madding crowd."

It seemed to Enoch, sweating under his Indian blanket and feathers, that the doctor must be wound up like a musical top tonight. Never had his pitch sounded more eloquent, and this crowd, jostling beneath the gasoline flares, was buying Wonder Tonic faster than Enoch could make change. There appeared to be more women than men out front, and whenever such a phenomenon occurred Doc gave them the "magnetism" pitch. He was giving it to them now, his resonant baritone holding them spellbound.

"What is that magic power which draws a man to a woman?" he declaimed. "What is that cosmic force which hurls a male and a female together like two meteors flaming in the heavens? I'll tell you what it is, friends. Magnetism! But is this some occult charm granted only to the high priests and votaries of love? No! You yourself may obtain the secret of magnetism! Each and every one of you may possess the power to attract the object of your romantic choice!"

On the edge of the crowd stood a tall, derby-hatted young man in a dark suit and a pretty girl in brown, wearing a smart brown velvet toque.

"Watch these women," whispered the young man. "You'd think this fellow was a matinee idol!"

But Zerelda Wing was watching the "fellow" himself. To her astonishment she saw him whip off his coat, displaying muscular shoulders and biceps rippling under a skin-tight blue silk jersey.

"Friends," he intoned, "the secret of magnetism lies in good health! Physical fitness! How can a man contemplate love if his liver is out of condition? How can a woman enjoy Cupid's sweet enchantment if she suffers from headache, indigestion or spots before the eyes?"

He stooped and picked up an iron bar bell marked "300 lbs." and as he lifted it, apparently without effort, he reminded the crowd how the great lovers of history—Antony and Cleopatra, Romeo and Juliet, Tristan and Isolde—had scrupulously avoided stomach trouble and ailments of the intestinal tract.

Dropping the bar bell with a resounding thump, he strode forward, seized two bottles of tonic and enjoined his audience to take advantage of this golden opportunity. Wonder Tonic offered the way to health and magnetism, the lodestar of love—all for the special price of one dollar.

Zerelda Wing was frowning, her full lips tightened in a thin line of disapproval.

The crowd surged forward in a flurry of buying, and many of the women ogled Doc blatantly. "You look plenty magnetic yourself, doctor!" a feminine voice called shrilly. The crowd cackled with laughter.

"I was weaned on Wonder Tonic," Doc replied, flexing his muscles, and the crowd laughed again.

He was bending over, changing a ten-dollar bill, when he saw Mrs. Wing—and for an instant his legs felt unsteady. A man's hand was still held out, and Doc, not realizing what he was doing, gave him back his ten-dollar bill with a bottle of tonic. The fact that she had located him meant trouble. Immediate and serious trouble. And through this confusion came a hot stab of embarrassment—at being caught by her while doing the magnetism pitch. Slowly he straightened. His mouth felt stuffed with cotton.

"That's all for tonight," he said stiffly backed up, signaling Enoch. The red ve curtains closed, shutting out the crowd.

"Ain't you feelin' well, doctor?" Eno face, beneath streaks of sweat and war p was anxious.

Doc glanced at the canvas hamm where Tad lay asleep. "Get the team hook up," he ordered, "in a hurry!"

"Something wrong, doctor?"

"Very wrong," Doc snapped. "She's there!"

After Enoch had removed his feathers war paint and gone to fetch the team, sat in darkness inside the Contraption, ing for a knock on the door. But it did come. Outside he could hear the crowd persing down McCloud Street, then the clop of the horses approaching. He locked rear door on the inside, opened the f panel and slid out onto the driver's Enoch was backing the team up, and sprang down to help him fasten the tug

"Good evening!"

He turned. She stood there alone, an the light of the sputtering arc lamp looked so lovely that he stared, o mouthed, without speaking.

"Well, we were just as stupid as you ured we'd be." Her voice had the same i crispness. "We lost your track—until luck, the sheriff saw that grotesque artic the Banner. So I got here tonight in tim your inspiring entertainment. My, I woul have missed that for the world!"

The mockery in her voice stung him, he could think of no adequate answer.

> There is only one rule for being a good talker: learn how to listen.
>
> —CHRISTOPHER MORLEY.

"It must be wond to radiate such an irre ible appeal. The women!" Her eyes bright with derisive la ter.

Doc straightened resentment boiling in him.

"Really," she taunted, "you should h had a good look at yourself tonight—cape around like a fiddler crab in the mating son!"

"Only a frustrated female would ge riled up over it," Doc retorted.

Her cheekbones colored. "I deserved t I suppose." She hesitated. "If you were a cent, fair-minded man you'd see how w it is to keep a little boy in this—this so environment."

His gray eyes narrowed. "And what so gilt-edged environment do you offe he asked.

"I've told you," she argued, "he mus back to Springville ——"

"That institution?"

"I didn't make the law. But it's my d to take the boy ——"

He cut her short. "Have you got a w rant?"

"I wanted to explain about that. I hav a warrant because ——"

"Then don't waste my time!" He tur his back to her and swung up onto the d er's seat. Enoch, beside him, handed him reins. "I'm tired of this game of ring-arou a-rosy!". Doc kicked off the brake. "N time you have anything to 'explain,' w my congressman!" He cracked his whip, horses started and the Contraption rumb away.

Zerelda Wing spun on her heel and wal across the street to the tall young man w ing on the curb. "Chilton," she fumed, " body could be as odious and unreasonabl that man!"

Chilton Corr set his derby squarely on well-shaped head. "I told you you should me handle it, Zee."

"No—I must do it myself." Her chin firm. "I'm going to make one more try. I I think I know a way."

"All right, darling." He buttoned his glo briskly. "But if you fail, I'm going to ste And when I do I'll put the picturesque D tor Tilbee where he won't bother anybod Possessively he tucked her arm under "That's one advantage of having the city torney in love with you."

(Continued on Page 166)

Designed for your living!

the personality group

by KROEHLER

SELECT the furniture that expresses your individual taste . . . does the most for your living room, whatever its size or shape!

Make your choice from this assortment of very livable furniture . . . choose from the newest, most luxurious of fabrics! The Kroehler Personality Group features a new style designed for today's living . . . soft, relaxing comfort with strong, sturdy construction. See these outstanding values at your Kroehler Dealer's now!

Home Fashion Time

"Take Your Home to Your Heart"

Act Now!

Buy on Easy Budget Terms!

WORLD'S LARGEST FURNITURE MANUFACTURER

Only KROEHLER furniture is Cushionized*

(Say KRAF-LER)

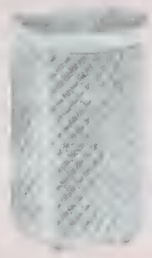
General Offices: Chicago 11, Illinois • In Canada: Stratford, Ontario

*Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

Happy is the home that gets these heavenly NEW Hampers

"Bench" hamper; Duroweve construction, $10.95

"CUSTOM BUILT" by



PEARL-WICK®

Covered with WASHABLE, QUILTED

Koroseal*

"Hassock" hamper; solid fibre construction, $9.95

"Halfmoon" hamper, Duroweve construction, $8.95

"Upright" hamper; Duroweve construction . . $11.95

Matching wastebasket $3.95

America's best known hamper, now more beautiful—and more practical—than ever! Place one in each bedroom, and one in the bathroom . . . like fine furniture, they're fashion-right everywhere. Made of sturdy, long-lasting fibre, covered with luxurious, satin-like, quilted Koroseal flexible material—stain and scuff resistant—easily cleaned with a damp cloth. Each has an all-clear interior—no bulky wooden framework—nothing to snag or catch.

In 9 Decorator Colors: Dubonnet • Fern Green • Heavenly Blue • Sunkist Yellow Petal Rose • Jet Black • Oyster White Pearl Grey • Hunter Green

AWARDED Academy of Designing GOLD MEDAL

Look for the world-famous Pearl-Wick label—at your favorite store. Other Pearl-Wick Duroweve hampers, from $4.95 up.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

PEARL-WICK CORP., Long Island City 2, N. Y.

*T.M. Reg. B. F. Goodrich Co.

(Continued from Page 164)

Zerelda did not hear him. As they walked down the street the insult still buzzed in her ears. "Frustrated female!" The impertinence of that man! Frustrated! She was startled to find herself recalling how his chest stood out like Greek sculpture under his blue silk jersey. And what fools those women had made of themselves! The whole thing irritated her beyond words—but she could not put it out of her mind.

Mixing day was always an event. Because of Wonder Tonic's "secret formula," Doc locked himself in the back room of Beelom's drugstore while he poured the ingredients into a large wooden washtub. The ingredients were nothing more than prune juice, alcohol and water; however, properly mixed, with a dash of bitters added, this concoction became surprisingly potable. And since it cost only twelve cents a quart to manufacture—and sold for a dollar—there was a sound profit in it.

But today, as Doc stood knee-deep in empty bottles, stirring the tub of brown liquid with a stick, his mind was not on his work. Zerelda Wing's remarks still rankled; he could not scratch them out of his thoughts. It had never occurred to him before that there was anything to be ashamed of in this medicine-show environment. True, at odd times during his "colorful career," as the newspaper called it, he had engaged in enterprises that might, from a strict ethical point of view, be considered questionable. But this setup, this Wonder Tonic pitch, what was wrong with it? A fine wagon and team, and free to travel anywhere he liked—who could ask for a better life than that? His frown deepened. Why had she said what she said? Was it true he had no right to keep Tad, living this way? Or did she merely reflect narrow, provincial prejudice? He could not figure her out. At moments he was amazed to find himself conjuring her up as a goddess—a beautiful and human one—unselfishly dedicated to the cause of neglected children; and at other times he railed against her for being a smug busybody, broad-minded as an angleworm. This morning, thinking of her, he was confused and troubled.

Enoch knocked at the door. "You finish the tasting yet, doctor?"

Doc put down his stick and unlocked the door. Enoch came in, glancing at him suspiciously. There had been occasions when the doctor had found it necessary to taste each batch with a thoroughness that transcended pure scientific experiment—resulting in incidents like the one in Ponca City, Oklahoma, when he had tossed a temperance lecturer through a plate-glass window. But Enoch could tell from his thoughtful expression that he had indulged in no overt tasting. Moreover, when they began funneling the stuff into bottles, and Beelom, the druggist, appeared with the offer of an "eye opener," Doc refused.

BERT BEELOM had a red nose, which he talked through, and a curly mustache which he fingered incessantly; and the ruffled elastic bands holding his shirt sleeves were as fancy as the garters of a burlesque queen.

"You don't look happy," he accused Doc. "Come in and join the boys in a nip of squirrel whisky. Two drinks makes you climb a tree!"

But Doc was in no mood for the convivial prescription counter. Telling Enoch to finish the bottling and labeling, he put on his coat and went out the back door. Enoch peered after him, wondering what was wrong.

His horses, picketed under the trees, sto watching something intently, their ears u and Doc knew that an intruder must be the camp. He walked lightly, making sound—then he stopped short. Zerelda Wi was sitting in his canvas chair. When she sa him she rose with a start and came towa him; and Doc, for all the hostile things had been thinking, felt a quickening of h heart.

"I'm sure you never wanted to see n again"—she gave him a wry little smile "but I had to talk to you. Our"—s paused to find the right word—"our dipl matic entanglements have been so *un*dipl matic, from the start."

Doc took off his hat and tossed it on t seat of the Contraption. He made no answe but he was thinking that a woman must ha some good points if she could laugh at herse this way.

"Last night," she continued, "I'm afra I was rude to you."

"We evened it up."

"Yes—I must say you haven't behave like an archangel, yourself." Zerelda's bl eyes became suddenly grave. "I came he to appeal to you," she told him, "becaus the case is more serious than you realize.

He gestured t ward a chair, b she shook her hea and went on:

"I took this jo because our town ship poor board is i trouble. We haven' enough money t build the orphanag we need—things'v been handle slackly—and there' going to be a stat investigation whic will get everyone i a dreadful mess Now"—her voic tightened—"I com to the point. Thi little boy, Tad Bay liss, was put in th detention home th day his mother died and the next nigh he ran away. Mr Swaile, the superin tendent, who's a good man but incompetent neglected to fill out the records. Which means that we have an orphan—a dependent ward of the township—missing and unaccounted for. The legal complications can get us all in very serious trouble the minute the state investigation begins."

He rubbed his chin. "So that's why you didn't tap me with a warrant. You couldn't bring it out in the open."

"I'm being completely honest with you." She came a step closer. "I'm telling you this in confidence—because you've got to realize the consequences. If Theodore—Tad—isn't returned, the state will bring charges of negligence against us. Do you know what a disgrace that would be—in a little community like Springville? Oh, I'm not just thinking of myself—but Mr. Swaile has a family. And it will ruin poor Mr. Elkland!"

Doc leaned against the wagon wheel. "Who's Mr. Elkland?"

"He's president of the township board—a dear old man. He was my father's best friend."

"Why isn't he running the show?"

"He doesn't even know this has happened. And we can't get in touch with him—we don't know where he is. He went to Illinois two weeks ago—to buy cattle—and left no address."

"Cattle fancier, eh? What strain does he breed?"

"Herefords. But the ——"

Doc was gazing at her with such intentness that for an instant she forgot the trend of the talk.

"What's the matter?" she asked uneasily.

"Just occurred to me," he said, "that you're the most exciting-looking woman I've ever seen."

(Continued on Page 169)

NEXT MONTH

"You can stay here with me, and you'll have all the love and devotion I can give you. But if you go to that church I'll know you don't care whether I live or die."

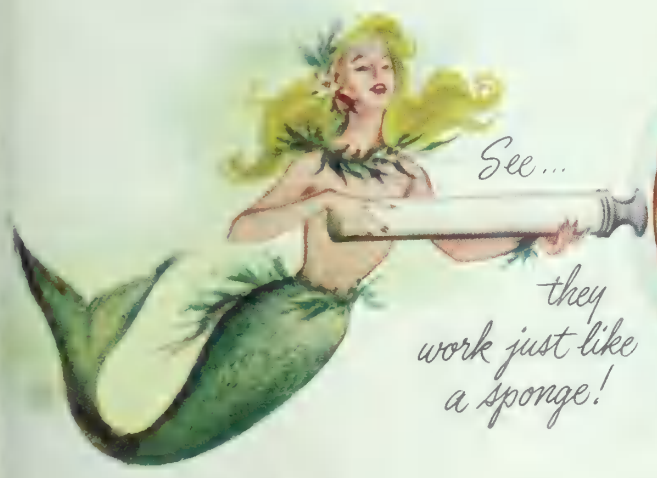
THESE are the words of the mother of the bride, words spoken to her daughter ten minutes before the wedding. What can a girl do when her mother, a charming woman who has never grown up, will not let her live a life of her own?

Too Young to Marry

By SHERRILL LEE

Novel complete in the November JOURNAL

New quick luxury drying at popular prices



CONE TOWELS

with the Super-Spongy Texture and Bath-Beauty Colors

The Superiority is Basic: CONE TOWELS soak up moisture just like a sponge . . . then dry right back to their original springy softness.

The Reason: new improved balanced construction with lofty loops produces sponge action . . . gives you Super-Spongy texture . . . quick, luxury drying.

Ask Your Favorite Store for CONE TOWELS in fashion-fresh Bath-Beauty colors that will bring out the decorator in you . . . at prices you'll emphatically approve.

ther Members of the Famous CONE Fabric Family

CONE

deeptone® Denim
Play Denim
Velvelette®
Plisse
Corduroy

®CONE EXPORT AND COMMISSION CO., INC.
59 WORTH STREET, NEW YORK 13, N. Y.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

BUY-LINES

AN ADVERTISING P

GOOD FRIENDS MEAN WELL . . . but when my baby was ready for cereal feeding, I consulted my pediatrician. And, like many child specialists I know, he recommended CREAM OF RICE . . . for this creamy-smooth rice cereal has 3 distinct advantages over any other kind of cereal. What are they?

1. CREAM OF RICE gives more energy . . . "boasting" a higher digestible carbohydrate content with Vitamins B_1, B_2 and Niacin added, plus Iron for rich, red blood and better growth. 2. Gives quicker nutrition . . . new life begins to pour into the system in a few minutes. 3. And CREAM OF RICE is easier to digest . . . and is least likely of all kinds of cereals to cause allergic reactions.

And how my young member of the "bib and crib set" loves CREAM OF RICE . . . eats every luscious spoonful every morning. So, when your baby is ready for a cereal, consult your doctor . . . I'm sure he'll recommend CREAM OF RICE, too.

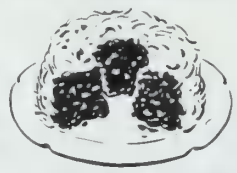
BREAKFASTS BLOOM with sunny goodness when you serve tall, sparkling glasses of DEL MONTE Unsweetened Pineapple Juice . . . for it's truly a drink of tropic magic. And know why? Because DEL MONTE'S exclusive strains of pineapple have true tropic flavor . . . then are picked only when natural tartness and sweetness are in perfect balance. This makes the juice not too tart and not too sweet . . . but the most delicious and refreshing pineapple juice ever packed into a can. Let your own taste prove it . . . just compare DEL MONTE Pineapple Juice with any other brand and see for yourself what a treat it is. It's good for you, too . . . abounds in natural fruit sugars and also contains Vitamin C. Still, it's very economical . . . and I think the perfect juice for all 'round use. So don't serve it only at breakfast . . . enjoy its bright, sunny goodness and sparkling flavor with meals and snacks from morn to night.

HAVE you ever wondered how, and when, Halloween began? I have . . . and just the other day I learned that "trick or treat" comes from the harvest festivities of ancient Rome, while the ghosts 'n' goblins entered the picture with the Druids of Briton. They believed that the souls of the wicked were punished by being confined in the bodies of animals for one year . . . then, on October 31st, these sinful spirits were "released" and the Lord of Death wandered over the earth collecting them. So, today, the customs of sharing the harvest have been combined with symbols of the supernatural . . . resulting in our wonderfully eerie frolic known as Halloween.

JUST IMAGINE . . . now you can make smooth, s-m-o-o-t-h candies in only 12 minutes . . . without beating! How? With BORDEN'S Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk . . . for smooth is the word for anything made with Eagle Brand . . . and magic-quick, too. These Magic Truffles prove it . . . why not try them today:

Melt 1 6-oz. pkg. semi-sweet chocolate pieces, stirring a few times, in top of double boiler. Remove from heat. Add ⅓ cup plus 1 tbsp. BORDEN'S Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk, pinch of salt, ¼ tsp. vanilla or imitation rum extract, 3 tbsp. ground nut meats; stir only until blended. Turn into container lined with waxed paper and press into block about 1" high. Chill in refrigerator until firm (about 2 hrs.). Turn out of container, remove waxed paper and cut into serving pieces. Makes more than ½ lb. of delicious candy.

FREE RECIPE BOOK with 70 thrilling, speed-easy magic recipes . . . peak treats you'll want to repeat often. For your GIFT copy, write Nancy Sasser, Dept. J1, 271 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y.



KNOW MY NOMINATION for delicious, nutritious protein main dishes . . . at a budget-pleasing price? DEMING'S Recipe Pink Salmon with its delightful, taste-enticing flavor . . . so versatile and satisfying . . . yet so inexpensive to serve. And, while DEMING'S Recipe Pink has many "talents," I think this Hot Salmon-Celery Roll is one of the best . . . see what you think!

Drain and flake 1 1-lb. can DEMING'S Recipe Pink Salmon. Add ½ cup diced celery, ½ cup mayonnaise, 1 tbsp. lemon juice. Prepare 2½ cups biscuit mix according to directions on package. Roll out thin (¼-inch), spread with salmon mixture and roll up like jelly roll. Cut off 1-inch slices and place on greased baking sheet. Bake 20 minutes in hot (400° F.) oven. Serves 5–6. For special occasions, top with hot mushroom sauce (milk-thinned canned mushroom soup).

And remember DEMING'S Sam-o-lets, that delicious light-meat salmon with exclusive skin-removed feature. I nominate it for the world's best croquettes, salads and sandwiches . . . see for yourself!

IT'S NO TRICK . . . this new, inspired recipe—Chocolate Coconut Chiffon Ring—proves once and for all that home-made is always best! Rich and fluffy and refreshingly delicious. Do get KNOX Unflavored Gelatine today and delight your family with this out-of-this-world dessert:

Soften 1 envelope KNOX in 1½ cups cold milk. Add ⅓ cup sugar, ¼ tsp. salt, 2 squares Walter Baker's Unsweetened Chocolate. Cook over hot water until chocolate melts and gelatine is thoroughly dissolved. Beat with rotary beater until blended. Cook and stir 3 mins. longer. Cool 10 mins. Add ⅓ cup sugar to 3 beaten egg whites; beat to stiff peaks. Blend in chocolate mixture; add 1 tsp. vanilla and ½ pkg. Baker's Coconut, cut. Turn into 1-qt. ring mold. Chill until firm. Unmold. Spread with ½ cup chilled heavy cream and 3 tbsp. Walter Baker's 4 in 1 Cocoa Mix beaten together until fluffy and thick. Top with ½ pkg. coconut. Makes 8 servings.

And try the other wonderful recipes you'll find in the KNOX package.

A BORN COOK is an outmoded phras... for, with today's ... wondrous kit... helps, even a begi... can be Queen of ... sine. Like ma... gravy, for examp... thanks to KITC... BOUQUET, ... don't have to rely on risky pan brow... alone or trust to ordinary gravy ai... gives you perfect gravy the first time, ... time . . . always extra-rich, extra-brown ... extra-delicious. But that's not the only ... son good cooks give thanks for KITC... BOUQUET . . . it's a delicate blend ... choice vegetables, herbs and spices ... unlike many gravy "assistants" I've ... it never adds any artificial flavor ... simply brings out the true natural g... ness of any meat or fowl. Easy to see ... KITCHEN BOUQUET has been t... favorite of "born" cooks for over 75 yea... and why I urge you to make all ... gravies the KITCHEN BOUQUET ... Costs amazingly little, too . . . but its ... luscious gravies are priceless.

OF COURSE, YOU'RE A WONDERFUL HOSTE... but mind if I tell you how you can ... even your nicest parties a little nicer? ... serve TRISCUIT Shredded Whole W... Wafers . . . for nothing I've ever tast... so crisp and crunchy, so a-tang ... hearty whole-wheat goodness! Th... salted to a "T," too . . . then toasted to a golden fare-thee-well. And, of course, TRISCUIT Wafers are made purely for your pleasure . . . by National Biscuit Company! How should you serve them? I can't begin to count the ways . . . they keep perfect "company" with soups, sa... meats, drinks, appetizers . . . practi... everything. However, for an extra-sp... treat, I often do this:

Blend one 3-oz. pkg. cream cheese, 1 ... anchovy paste, 1 tsp. minced onion and ... tle cream. Spread lavishly on 12 TRISC... Wafers.

Your family will love them . . . so. ... were you, I'd get several packages ... time. Just be sure you get TRISC... Wafers, though . . . the distinctive bi... made only by NABISCO.

I'VE MADE UP MY MIND at last . . . the best pressure cooker you can buy is a PRESTO COOKER. And know what convinced me? Only PRESTO COOKERS have the Pressure-Tru Indicator Weight . . . which tells all, shows all, saves all. Let me explain:

It shows exactly how much pressure there is in the cooker from start to finish . . . no guessing, no tedious watching and no listening. It tells exactly when to start timing . . . indicating exactly when pressure has reached 5, 10 or 15 lbs. and when there's no pressure in the cooker so that the indicator weight may be removed. It saves health-giving natural vitamins, minerals, precious nutrients and food flavors . . . as well as saves food by reducing evaporation and shrinking. No annoying whistles, either.

So remember all this when you shop . . . don't accept anything less than a PRESTO COOKER with its exclusive Pressure-Tru Indicator Weight.

But do hurry . . . for, once you try Presto Cooking, you'll never be satisfied with any other kind.

THE BEST INSPIRATION you could have for breakfast is a new GENERAL ELECTRIC Automatic Toaster . . . for it takes care of the toast for you while you concentrate on the rest of your menu. You don't have to give it a thought . . . just put the bread in, set the control to dark, medium or light and forget it. Your G-E Automatic Toaster will serve the toast exactly the way you "ordered" it . . . pop it up or keep it down until you and the breakfast are ready. Another thing I like about this sleek, shining G-E beauty is that it's ABC-easy to clean . . . with its exclusive Snap-in Tray taking the "bows." You just snap out the tray, brush the crumbs off and snap back in again . . . it's as simple as that!

Truly, a GENERAL ELECTRIC Automatic Toaster is a luxury beyond compare . . . in everything but price. Drop in at your G-E Appliance Dealer's . . . and get him to show you this modern marvel soon.

YOUR SEASON IN THE SUN is over now . . . time to re... your natural loveliness for the glamo... days and nights ahead. And to r... your beauty "treatments" easier ... better, I recommend CO-ETS . . . h... quilted cotton squares that are ... derfully soft, smooth and absorb... They answer your every need to pe... tion . . . but, since beauty begins w... lovely skin, let's concentrate on replenishing the na... oils you lost this summer:

Apply cleansing cream to face and rub in thoroughly ... gently . . . paying particular attention to the areas ar... nose, eyes and mouth. Remove cream with a CO-ET... then saturate a clean CO-ET with skin freshener and sm... on briskly. Choose a foundation rich in oils . . . and a... with a CO-ET.

A CO-ET is your best bet wherever beauty is served . ... use them for applying rouge and powder, removing ... polish and so on. Cost only 35¢ for the large econ... package with 80 quilted squares . . . 19¢ for 40. All ... and Cosmetic Counters.

Nancy Sasser

For You and Yours!

ARING A SECRET IS FUN . . . so let me tell you my favorite beauty secret for beautiful looking hair. It's KREML Shampoo . . . the shampoo John Robert Powers, famous beauty authority, recommends to all his models. The reason? Because, unlike drying shampoos that leave hair dry, brittle and unruly, KREML Shampoo has a natural oil base . . . leaves hair silky soft, an angel to manage and even encourages any natural curl. But that's not all I like about KREML Shampoo . . . its special cleansing qualities bring out all your hair's natural highlights and make it sparkle with natural radiance and glossy sheen. Try KREML Shampoo yourself . . . your mirror will prove that it does bring out the beauty of your hair. And don't neglect Friend Husband . . . get KREML Hair Tonic to keep his hair neatly groomed and handsomely in place. Comes in a new package, now at the lowest price in KREML tory . . . the 16-oz. size saves you up to 40%.

NGING UP A BABY? I am, too, and there's one thing I learned early in my "career" . . . baby's special needs require very special care. Take cotton tips, instance . . . since they're put to such delicate, exacting use, you nt the very finest. That's why I always get JOHNSON'S OTTON TIPS . . . because no one else in the world has such perience and skill in making baby products. And they give you so ny peace-of-mind advantages . . .

ey're baby-soft . . . made of the world's finest cotton. And they're y-safe . . . sterilized right in the box and guaranteed by the famous nson & Johnson quality-control method. The cotton is spun directly the sticks, too . . . stays firm and doesn't twist in use . . . with double tips for extra convence and economy.

handle your baby with care . . . by insisting on JOHNSON'S COTTON TIPS. me in 29¢ and 49¢ sizes.

AT DO YOU THINK . . . that all home permanents are pretty much alike? Well, I've got news for you . . . for I've been "sleuthing" and find that only a TONI HOME PERMANENT guarantees you a wave that's so wonderfully soft and silky u can't tell it from naturally curly hair. at's because the TONI Creme Waving tion waves your hair ever so gently . . . fact, it's gentler than any other permant you can buy. And only TONI has the w and more thorough neutralizer that nditions your wave to silky softness and akes it last much longer.

TONI requires no more care than turally curly hair, too . . . so give yourf a TONI HOME PERMANENT. he cost? Only $1 for the Refill Kit with ntle TONI Creme Waving Lotion and rmafix neutralizer. Get one today . . . the softest, loveliest, most natural oking wave you ever had.

LET'S FACE FACTS . . . when you're suffering from a painful, burning corn, you want fast, effective relief. And that's exactly what you get with new BLUE-JAY Corn Plasters . . . thanks to their new Wonder Drug, PHENYLIUM (pronounced "Fen-ill-ee-um"). It's the first really new medication for corns and calluses in over 70 years . . . and in actual tests went to work 33% faster than other leading remedies. Here's how it works . . . PHENYLIUM gets down under the corn and helps push it out . . . from underneath. That's why New-Formula BLUE-JAY Corn Plasters with PHENYLIUM bring quicker, surer removal of corns than any other treatment known . . . and why 3 out of every 4 corn sufferers who tested it say: "It's better than any corn treatment I ever used before!" So why use old-style corn remedies . . . depend on the amazing new Wonder Drug, PHENYLIUM, to bring you the quickest, surest corn removal you've ever known. Available only in BLUE-JAY Corn Plasters and Callus Plasters.

GH ON MY LIST of things couldn't do without is a eVILBISS Atomizer . . . s my first thought for first d when anybody in my mily suffers from colds, y-fever and similar comaints. Why a DeVILBISS tomizer? Because it's especially engiered to apply any nasal or throat solution ur doctor may prescribe . . . even penilin and other new antibiotics which reire a super-fine mist. Furthermore, it ovides the easiest and best method of covring all the infected area of nose and throat, which is important . . . for, naturally, relief is more prolonged when treatment is thorough. I could go on and on telling you about the DeVILBISS Atomizer . . . how it's noncorrosive, so compact it fits into any medicine chest and designed to last a lifetime. But I'm sure you already agree with me that you owe it to yourself and your family to have one . . . so stop by your Drug Counter today. Comes in two styles and sizes . . . only $1.25 and $1.75.

(Continued from Page 166)

"Please!" Her eyes darkened with annoyance.

"Well, I lay my cards on the table."

"I hoped you wouldn't be like this."

He smiled. "You knew what I'd be like."

She raised her head angrily. "If you think I came out here like one of those cheap ——"

"Let's not get back to feuding."

"I don't want to quarrel. I'm only trying to make you understand." Her eyes were pleading now. "You must see what this means!"

Doc straightened up. "I see what it means to you people." He hooked his thumbs in his braided Navaho belt. "But what about the boy? Where does he come off?"

"We've already begun improvements at the home. Conditions will be much better, believe me. He'll be well looked after."

"How well looked after can he be—in an orphan asylum?"

"Don't call it that."

"But that's what it is. It's a public institution—and they're all the same. You may improve this one—I hope you do—still, it won't offer any kind of life to a kid."

"But," she argued, "it's a question of law!"

"The way I see it, it's a question of heart."

"And do you think," she demanded, "that I have no heart?"

"If you haven't," he said, "I'll be the most disappointed man in forty-five states and four territories."

She glanced away, flustered. "I—I've told you why Tad must go back."

"Can't let you have him," Doc said quietly.

For an instant he thought she was going to cry, and he felt a strong impulse to take her in his arms; then abruptly she turned, her manner so brisk that it stopped him in his tracks.

Make yourself an honest man, and then you may be sure there is one rascal less in the world. —CARLYLE.

"Will you let me see him?"

"He's not here." Doc pointed toward the Contraption. "You're welcome to search."

"Where is he?"

Tad had gone up to the big house for June's birthday party, but they might be playing anywhere on the Dunbar acres.

"I don't know where he is."

Zerelda's glance was skeptical. "I prefer to assume you're telling the truth."

"That's white of you."

"Don't you see"—her voice was brittle—"you can't just walk off with this child."

"Poor little devil's entitled to a home."

"But can you provide that? Are you in position to give him a proper upbringing? How can a man like you ——"

"Easy with the whip. You don't know anything about me."

"I know more about you than you think. I'm a pretty good judge of character." She looked at him with shrewd appraisal. "For one thing, you're the sort of man who has dodged responsibility all your life."

"What you need," Doc retorted, "is a crystal ball and a tent."

SHE shrugged. "I'm trying to be logical," she told him.

"Old Brigham Young used to say, 'Watch out for a logical woman!'"

"I'm sure Brigham Young"—her nose wrinkled distastefully—"knew very little about women."

"That's possible," Doc acknowledged. "Maybe he couldn't see the trees for the forest. But he was a mighty handy woodchopper."

Zerelda seemed determined not to be amused. "I'm afraid you don't realize what you've blundered into."

"I blundered into it, all right." He smiled ruefully. "No doubt about that. On the road, this way, I need a family about like I need a toothache." The smile faded and his expression was somber. "But these things aren't always in our control. What happened was natural, I suppose. The kid's come to mean a good deal to us. A good deal," he repeated. "Don't know how we'd get along without him, now."

"But he's a legal ward of the township."

"'Legal ward'—'township'; those words sound like they came out of a dusty desk! We're not talking about a deed to an alfalfa field—we're talking about a human life!" He pointed a long bony finger at her. "If you knew this kid—as I know him—you'd understand. He's got intelligence. He's something special, as kids go. You can't commit him to one of those institutions! It'd kill his spirit! It'd kill him!"

HIS fire and sincerity had affected her. She hesitated—then stiffened. "That's—that's all very fine. But you don't think for a minute they'd let you adopt Tad?" One small hand fluttered toward the Contraption. "This nomad carnival existence ——"

"I'm no carnival wallah." He lifted his head. "But if I was, I'd be proud of it. People that follow the poorest little carnivals are free. I don't think you know what that means. One time you called me an impertinent tramp. I apologize for the impertinence—but if I'd been a tramp, I'd never apologize. Because even a bum, riding the rails, has a soul he can call his own. He's better off than many a respectable citizen that settles down and rots like a turnip in some jayhawk town!" His eyes were scornful. "Old Walt Whitman knew what it was all about. Remember ——

"From this hour, freedom! . . .
Going where I list, my own master,
total and absolute."

"Why do you try to impress me by quoting other people's thoughts?"

"I'm particular whose stuff I quote!" he retorted. "Every time those wise men state a truth it makes a little more light in the darkness. Even for the blind."

She stared at him, confused. Then she looked down at the toes of her trim shoes. "So—you insist on fighting us."

"Call it what you like."

"Well, there's nothing more to say." When she looked up her eyes were bright and cold as sapphires. "I'll have to take it to law. I'm sorry."

"At least I'll be seeing you again," he said. "Good-by, ma'am."

"Good-by." She turned and walked rapidly toward the road, and Doc noticed a hired surrey, with a driver and a fly-netted sorrel horse, that had apparently come back for her. He stood watching her climb into the surrey; then they drove off toward town.

"So she'll take it to law." Doc swung round. Edan Dunbar was leaning against a tree, smoking a pipe. "I didn't mean to eavesdrop—but perhaps it's a good thing I did." He came forward, hands in the pockets of his Norfolk jacket, and Doc saw that his lean, dark face was tense.

"Draw up a chair."

"Thanks," said Dunbar. "I want to talk to you about Tad."

The crowd under the gasoline torches had just begun to warm up, and Enoch, in blanket and feathers, was placing the bottles of Wonder Tonic on the platform.

"Friends," Doc orated, "research on the digestive habits of the savage pygmy tribes in darkest Africa have proved ——"

He never finished the sentence. A tall figure in a slouch hat was coming through the crowd, followed by two policemen in buff-colored helmets. Chief of Police Faring, a sad-faced man with turkey-wing mustaches and a bobbing Adam's apple, halted.

"Sorry, Doc," he apologized, "this is a pinch."

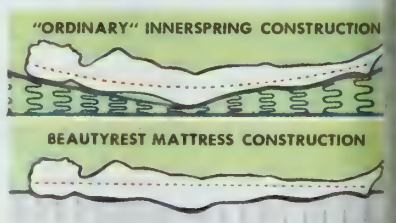
Without a word Doc signaled to Enoch, then stepped back—and the red velvet curtains closed.

The lights were on in the city attorney's office, and Chief Faring opened the door and moved aside to let his prisoner precede him. "Sorry as heck about this," he muttered. "But I got my orders."

"Sure." Doc's eyes were on the handsome young man seated at the desk, under a green-shaded lamp, writing. Doc walked toward

(Continued on Page 171)

When you need rest most...you need Beautyrest ...yours for only 2¢ a night!



WHAT A JOY . . . when you're ter and tired . . . to be able to lo forward to nights of deep, satisfyi rest on a Beautyrest mattress.

And what a double joy to know th you can own a Beautyrest* for only few pennies a night. Yes, the world most comfortable mattress—prize kings and presidents—is yours t only 2¢ a night!

Own one tonight! Stop in at yo dealer's. Let him show you ho Beautyrest is made differently fro all other mattresses. Why it gives yo an entirely different conception sleeping comfort. Stop in today!

Proof . . . No Sags! Glass of wate placed on any one of 837 Beautyres springs won't tip when nearby spring depressed. For springs are NOT wire together. Can't pull each other dow Can't sag!

You Get Perfect Support. Top char shows how ordinary mattress lets bod slope—hammock-like. Beautyrest (botton chart) gives perfect "Levelized Support" to your body. No hollows.

Proof: Lasts Longer! Beautyrest took 740,744 more poundings from special "Torture-Tester" machine at United States Testing Co. Lasted twice as long as any mattress tested. A real SIMMONS value!

Only Simmons Makes

Beautyrest

ALSO FROM THE HOUSE OF SIMMONS: Matching Beautyrest Box Spring, Deepsleep* Mattress, Hide-A-Bed* Sofa, Ace* Spring.

*Trade-mark Reg. U. S. Patent Office.
Copr. 1951 by Simmons Co., Mdse. Mart, Chicago, Ill.

(Continued from Page 169)

Faring at his elbow, and the two police- bringing up the rear. In front of the desk paused, but the young man went on g and did not look up. A slow minute d, disturbed only by the scratching of en; then Chief Faring coughed respect-

h—Mr. Corr ——"

ast a moment!" There was a rebuke in Corr's voice. But more than that, the suggested a studied oratorical effect, as if h. Corr enjoyed listening to it himself.

e felt his temperature rising. He resented han, with his neatly brushed blond hair, st as much as he resented Zerelda Wing, was responsible for the arrest.

th irritatingly deliberate movements the ttorney laid aside the paper, racked his n a fancy brass inkwell, then glanced up, ing. "Well, chief?"

brought Doc Tilbee," said the chief, you ordered."

h." Corr focused his alert brown eyes on In prosecuting criminals he always used accusing stare, as he said, "to put the of the Lord in 'em"; but Doc stared back n coldly. This appeared to annoy Corr, e got up from the desk. Being a tall man him an advantage; but Doc was an inch . "Tilbee, you know about this."

No, I don't," said Doc, "and I stand on ights as a citizen. My business has been fered with ——"

rr cut him off harshly: "You're a pitch- operating on a license that can be re- d at any time. So consider it revoked, as now."

By what right ——"

rr picked up a filing card. "I don't think d remind you that you giving aid and shelter to escaped inmate of a ic institution."

Escaped inmate," Doc ted. "Sounds like a y desperate charac- for an eight year-old

I'm not interested in your comments. are to hand over that boy to the proper orities at once."

Where is he?" Doc asked blandly.

Don't try to be funny with me," Corr atened. "If you have him hidden, I'll you exactly one hour!"

oc looked at him. "The kid is not with

You refuse to produce him?"

How can I produce him if I haven't got ?"

Look here," Corr snapped, "I don't like r attitude."

While we're on the subject," said Doc, "I 't like yours."

ngrily Corr struck the desk top with his n hand. "I order you to get that boy and g him here."

Can't be done."

Why not?"

c looked at him calmly. "Can't be done, t's all."

Then you leave me no alternative." Corr ng round to Chief Faring. "Lock this n up."

he chief's Adam's apple bobbed twice. r?"

Lock him up." Corr sat down at his desk.

On what charge?" Doc asked.

The charge"—there was no emotion in r's voice, merely an ominous legal chill— he charge is abduction."

Doc and the police chief stared at him. Doc his lips. "Abduction?"

Kidnaping—if that makes it plainer." rr turned and picked up some papers on desk. "Take him away, chief."

In the thriving town of Lost River two rsons spent a restless night. Hour after ur, as Doc Tilbee tossed on the hard cot in cell, he cursed the avenging goddess, the ue-eyed nemesis whose complaint had ded him here.

And through these same hours Zerelda ng, in her comfortable brass bed at The vern, lay wakeful and worried. It was not the strangeness of the hotel room, as she had tried to convince herself, nor the pattern of light on the ceiling, cast by a street lamp below, which kept her awake. It was Chilton Corr's late telephone call, telling her of Doctor Tilbee's arrest. That had shocked her. Turning it over and over in her mind, she could not sleep because she knew that Doctor Tilbee would think she had done it.

At seven-thirty she was dressed and waiting for the dining room to open, standing at the door beside an immense bear, carved from some black foreign wood and holding in one paw a glass of toothpicks. Over her third cup of breakfast coffee Zerelda made the decision. She would go to the jail and tell Doctor Tilbee the truth: that she had had nothing to do with his arrest. In a befuddled way she resented the man, but it disturbed her to think of him in that cell, hating her for putting him there.

TWENTY minutes later, when she walked, embarrassed, into the station house and asked to see Doctor Tilbee, the policeman behind the desk refused.

"Doc's bein' held"—the policeman consulted an open ledger—"he's bein' held in-commun-i-something. Anyways, it means nobody can see him. City attorney's orders."

As she went out she passed a large Negro slumped disconsolately on a bench, and recognized him as the doctor's assistant. He rose and tipped his hat politely—and for an instant Zerelda hesitated, feeling that she should say something to him. But there seemed nothing to say, and, with a confused little frown, she hurried on. It was a relief to get out of the building, which reeked of five-cent-cigar smoke; but, once in the street, she found herself at a loss to know what to do next.

Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it. —PROVERBS 22:6.

On the morning of the second day Doc awoke to find himself the central figure in a cause célèbre. On the front page of the Banner, smuggled in by Chief Faring, stood two headlines: one stating that President Theodore Roosevelt might negotiate peace terms to end the Russo-Japanese War; the other announcing the arrest of Doctor Tilbee. A half-column news story reported this incident with tongue-in-cheek gravity, followed by a later bulletin:

Doctor Tilbee, formerly one of Teddy Roosevelt's Roughriders, and known to a host of friends in our city, is being held incommunicado. Several witnesses are alleged to have stated that Tilbee merely befriended a homeless orphan.

"That'll blow it higher'n a kite!" Chief Faring's Adam's apple bobbed excitedly. "But take a look at the editorial."

Doc's unsteady hand turned the page. Under a heading, ARE WE LIVING IN TERRORIST RUSSIA? his friend Billy Gray had written a scathing editorial that named no names but pointed the finger of scorn at highhanded tactics employed by a "certain city official" who would be up for re-election next spring. With all the fire of a Horace Greeley diatribe against slavery it likened the city official to a modern Fouché, condemned his legal practices as smacking of the Spanish Inquisition—and concluded on a warning note: "If this carpetbagger thinks the voters of our city will stand for such arrogant highbinding, he's got another think coming!"

Doc whistled. "This is hot."

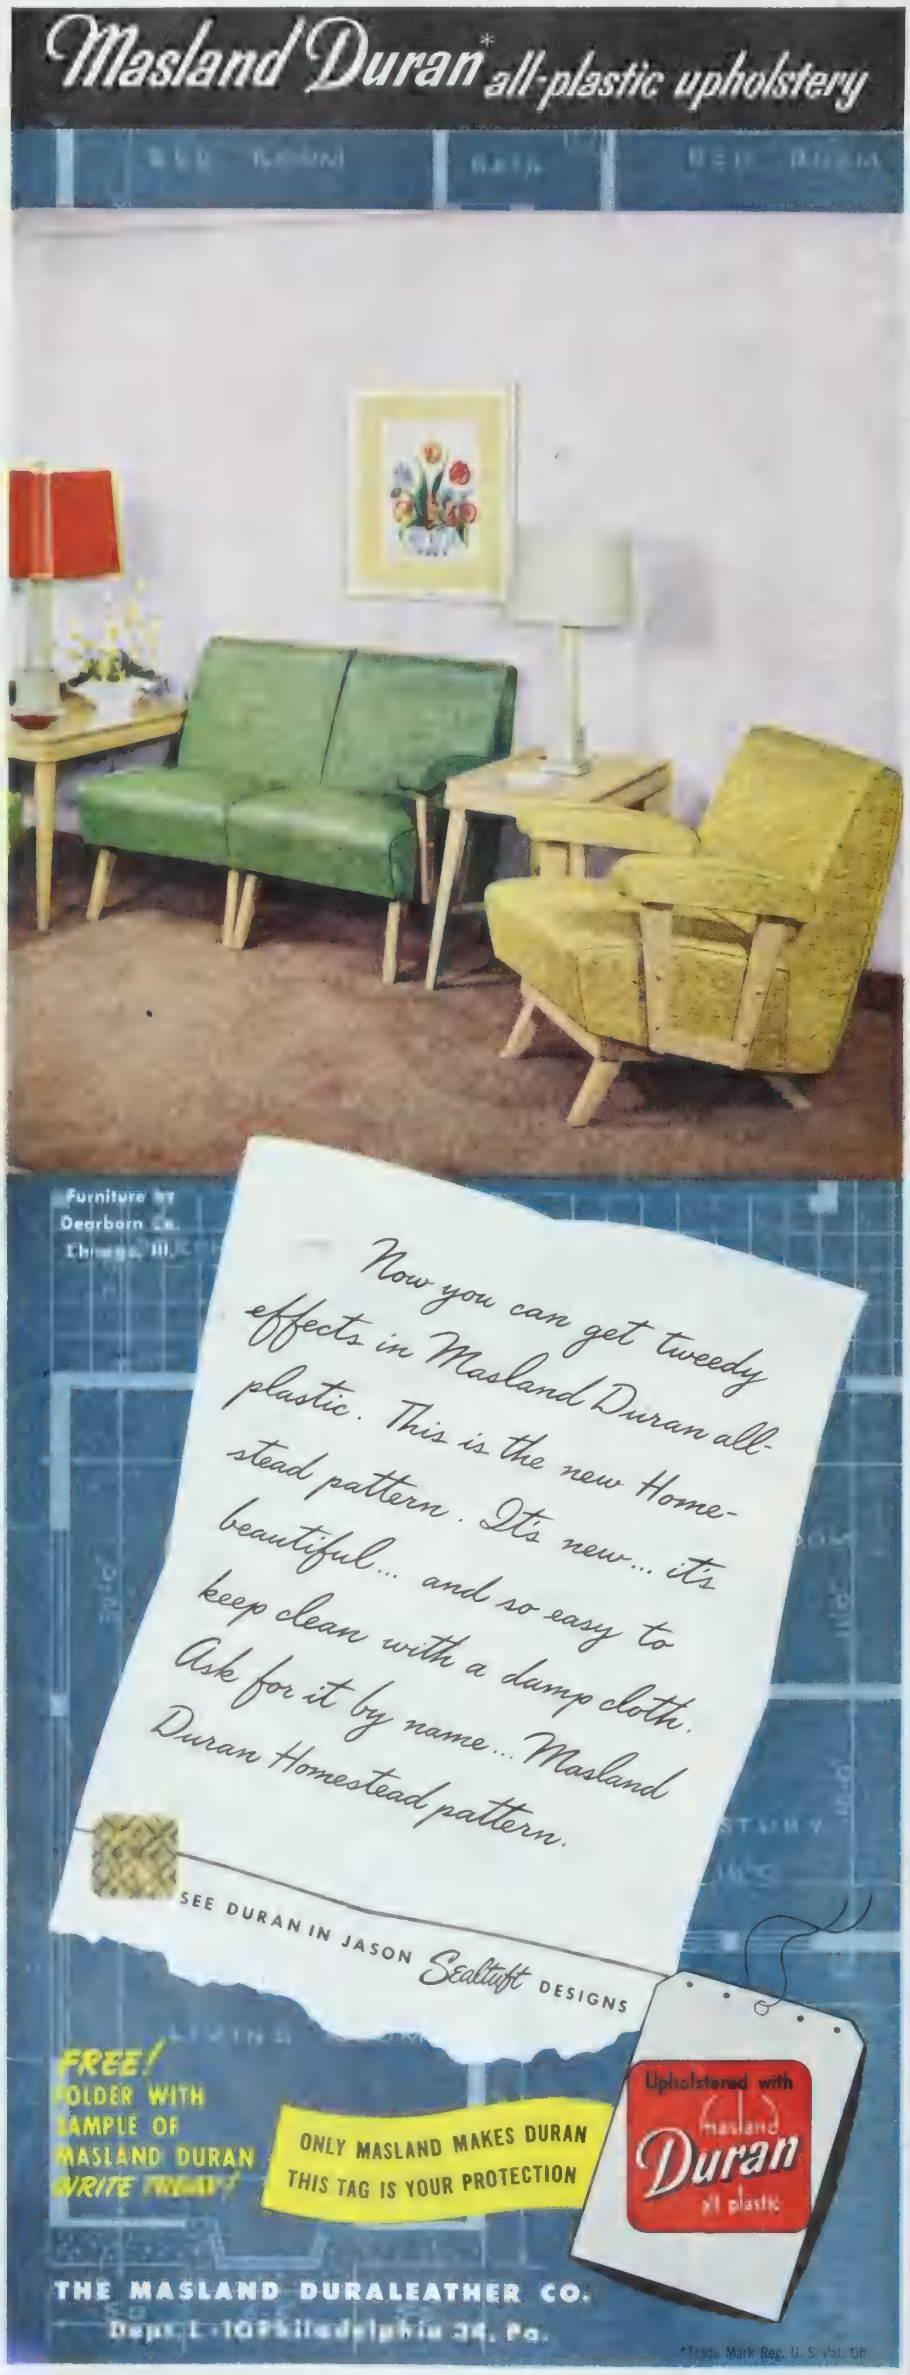
"Carpetbagger—get that?" Gleefully the chief pointed to the editorial. "Corr wasn't a local boy—he moved here from Paw Paw Lake. Knows how to get the votes, though. He's a silver-throated gink."

"We may have to operate on his throat," said Doc.

Chief Faring chuckled. "You'll get action on this—in a hurry."

The chief was right. Action followed in less than twenty minutes. Doc first learned that the "incommunicado" ban had been lifted when Enoch appeared bearing an elaborate breakfast tray from the Green Moon.

"The forces of evil will not prevail," Enoch quoted piously.



- Won't crack or peel
- Won't fade or mildew
- Permanent designs
- Electro-heat welded seams
- Stunning colors

This gay, new exclusive design is printed on genuine, long-lasting Vinylite*. You'll enjoy its fresh beauty for years! Scranton Showers give you superb quality—smart detailing—at surprisingly low cost. Matching window curtains available, too. See them at your favorite store. *Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

Scranton
CRAFTSPUN SHOWER CURTAINS
ALSO MAKERS OF LACE DINNER CLOTHS • LACE NET CURTAINS

"Right now," said Doc, "I'm not so much interested in the forces of evil as I am in those ham and eggs."

While he ate, Billy Gray was admitted and they shook hands warmly through the bars of the cell. Gray was a tall, spare young New Englander who had migrated West after graduating from Columbia University a decade ago; and under his editorship the Banner had flourished. Their friendship, though casual, was sound.

"Billy"—Doc held a forkful of ham and eggs in mid-air—"there's nothing I can say to ——"

Billy Gray brushed his thanks aside. "I got Corr"—he called it Caw—"on the phone myself, and demanded your release on bail." When he was serious he had a habit of squinting fiercely. "After some tall rhetoric, Caw finally agreed—then got back at us by settin' your bail at twenty-five hundred dollahs!"

Doc stared at him. "Why, that's more than ——"

"Unfortunately"—Gray squinted again—"there isn't a bail bondsman in town. But you've got friends."

Doc smiled sadly. "Only none of my friends has twenty-five hundred simoleons in his poke."

"You've got a weird assortment of friends, Doc," the New Englander told him, and tossed his cigarette stub into a fire bucket. "They're all out—right this minute—takin' up a collection to get you out."

"No!" said Doc.

"Fact. Bert Beelom; Sun Hong-kee, the laundryman; Mittig, the cigarmaker; Clara Brink, the blonde that runs the boardin'-house ——"

"Clara!" Doc exclaimed. "Well, I'll be a ——"

Clattering footsteps interrupted him—and a plump Chinese came hurrying in. Doc called a greeting in bad Canton dialect, and they shook hands through the bars. Sun Hong-kee—Doc knew him as "Jim"—produced a rack of wooden beads on which he made some mysterious calculations, then announced that his group had thus far raised the sum of seven hundred and forty dollars.

"Mistah Glay"—Jim grinned at the editor—"velly good—fi' ahna dolla."

Doc looked at his friend gratefully. He knew that Billy could ill afford five hundred.

"Some"—Jim shook his fat face—"not so good. Some on'y fi' dolla. I go back—make squeeze."

Doc rubbed the stubble on his chin. That these friends—many of them little people—should have rallied to him this way was touching. He found himself, for once in his life, unable to think of anything to say.

"Need twelve hundred and sixty"—Billy Gray squinted fiercely—"before we can get you out of here."

THEN Chief Faring walked in, escorting Edan Dunbar. From the chief's manner it was obvious that Dunbar was one of the town's substantial citizens. Doc introduced him to the Chinese laundryman.

"I wish I'd known about this," Dunbar said unsmilingly. "I'd have been here sooner." Then, as if embarrassed by any mention of money, he turned to Chief Faring. "Whatever the bail is—I'll write my check for it."

"Yes, sir!" The chief rattled a key in the lock and the cell door swung open. As Doc came out, a legal paper was thrust in his hand. His trial by jury, on a charge of kidnaping, would take place October sixth. Less than two weeks off.

It would have been hard to find a house more faithfully reflecting the dernier cri of 1904 interior decoration than Chilton Corr's (his mother always mentioned it as their "residence") on Chestnut Street. The living-room motif was established by such items as a mission table, a multicolored glass "a" lamp, a puce velveteen chair that "rock" on a track, and a couch upholstered in bl leather, with a souvenir pillow from the Louis Exposition, which Chilton and mother had "taken in" that summer.

The wallpaper was a bold pattern of and white stripes, festooned with pink ro and over the mantel hung an engraving of Colosseum by Moonlight. The other side the room were brightened by Chilton's plomas from the Paw Paw High School, U. of M. and the Cincinnati Law Sch photographs of his various graduating cla and one of himself in cap and gown. On fumed-oak upright piano stood an enlar snapshot of a barefoot lad dangling a sun on a string. "I love that one of Chilton," mother frequently remarked to friends. " just all boy."

BETWEEN the three small "Oriental" r stretched open spaces of hardwood flo waxed to such high polish that crossing to dining room became a major hazard. M Corr had never slipped on this floor, and ten, when helping to pick up some less for nate guest, laughingly referred to herself "Old Surefoot"—though she knew perfec well that she did not "look" her age. She a buxom woman ("Not a gray hair in head," Chilton said) who exuded an alm muscular cheerfulness. She laughed a gr deal, but the laughter did not show in brown eyes behind pince-nez; and on casion her glance came so sharp that appeared to have eyelashes. Howeve she played the pia well, and "doted" entertaining you people.

"You chillun go rig in the living room, a make yourselv comfy," she said, wh they had finished di ner. "I've got to go o and give Frieda wh for. She forgot the fi ger bowls again—a that piecrust was like cardboard!" M Corr laughed gaily, as if relishing the oppo tunity to berate an immigrant girl who, six dollars a week, did all the cooking, hous work, washing and ironing. "I did wa everything to be nice tonight," she add sweetly, "so we could show Mrs. Zee Wi how we do things." And she disappear through the pantry door.

"I'm glad you and mother hit it off well." Chilton Corr took Zerelda's arm a guided her across the perilous stretch waxed floor. "She likes you, Zee. I can tell Zerelda's expression was thoughtful. S had detected a faint emphasis on the "Mrs. when his mother spoke her name; as if the were something not quite proper in Chilton being in love with a girl who had been ma ried before.

"You don't know," he was saying, "ho happy it makes me to have my two swee hearts friends like this."

Two sweethearts? Zerelda asked herself.

He stooped and touched a match to the ga log—which gave off violet flames and smell. Now, why would anyone put a gas log a real fireplace? Zerelda was thinking. (Late she learned that Mrs. Corr had installed th gas log because wood splinters and ashes wer so untidy; and besides, a gas log was th "latest thing.")

"How d' you think you're going to like liv ing in our town?" He stood at the mante filling his pipe. "Of course, we think thi house is jim-dandy—but if you want any thing changed ——"

Zerelda hesitated. "Where . . . would you mother live?"

"Why, here with us, darling." His aler brown eyes smiled. "You'll find she's joll company. It's that youthful spirit! I'll neve forget—my first year at college mother close our home and moved to Ann Arbor, to kee house for me. Loves young people."

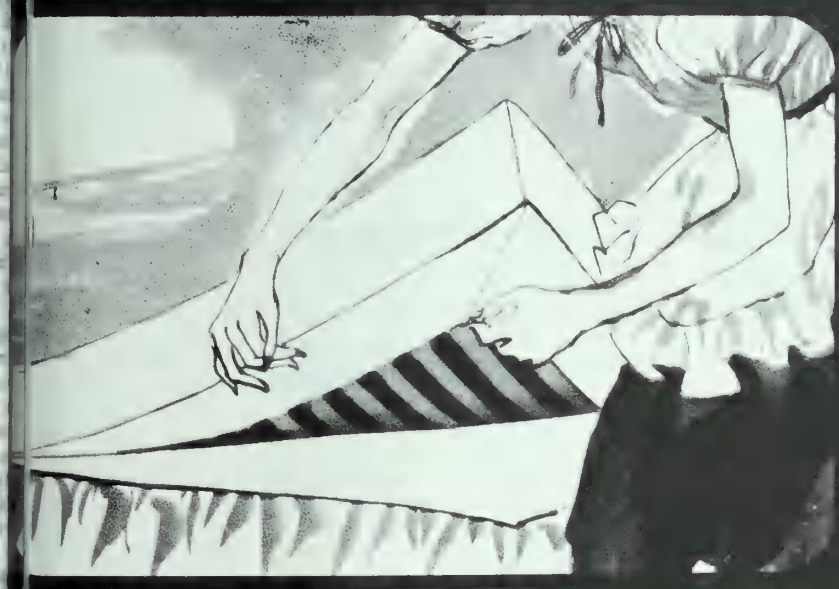
(Continued on Page 174)

IS YOUR BOY AT COLLEGE?

The father of a student at the University of Illinois was talking to a friend about his son's activities at college. "College must be something these days," said the father. "All my son does is to write homie for money, go to parties, and run around with the pretty young girls. I made a great mistake."

"What mistake did you make?" asked the friend.

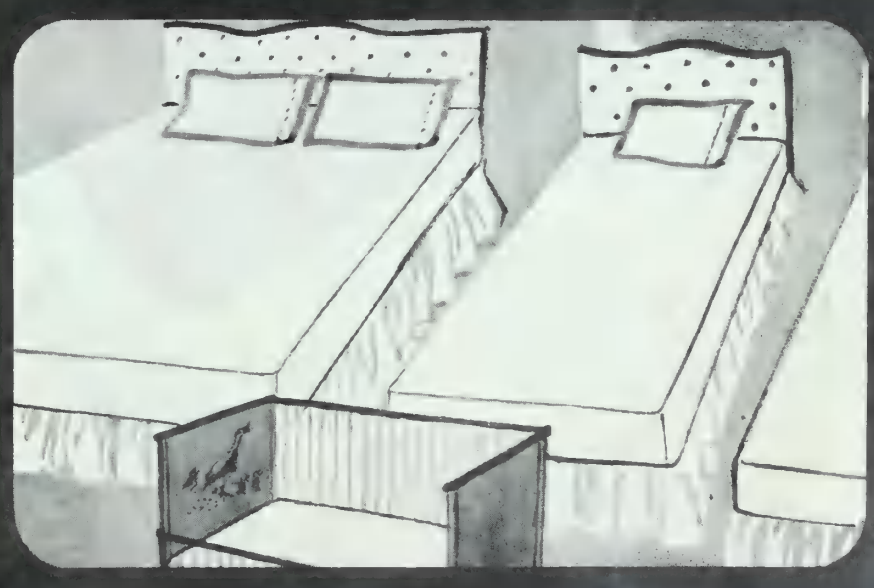
"I should have gone to college myself!"



Is day-to-day bedmaking a chore?

If you have to remake the bed completely each morning because the bottom sheet pulls out

2. you need a CONTOUR SHEET*—it can't pull out, won't wrinkle, stays smooth all night long!



3. Four mitered, sewn-in corners cap the mattress. A shaped tuck-under on all 4 sides

4. holds the sheet drum-tight no matter how you toss and turn. When you get up your bed is half made!

5. A Contour Sheet is easy to launder, won't shrink because it's Sanforized* Ironing's optional

6. Combed percale or muslin in standard sizes_ doubl twin, youth, crib_ that adjust to mattress thickne

At your favorite store, or write for folder and name of nearest dealer to Pacific Mills, Dept. DD10, 1407 Broadway, New York 18, N. Y.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off

ontour...a PACIFIC sheet BY PACIFIC MILLS . . . WEAVERS OF FINE COTTONS, RAYONS, WOOLENS AND WORST

M-M-M-M-M it's Brach's!

Bigger, juicy cherry

Thicker, rich chocolate

Smoother, cordial creme

Brach's ROYAL ANNE Cherries MODIFIED CHOCOLATE COVERED IN FONDANT ONE POUND NET

Brach buys only the biggest, plumpest, juiciest cherries. Then each big cherry is centered in triple whipped, extra smooth vanilla creme. Double coated with Brach's own thick chocolate . . . cordialed to perfection . . . you can taste the difference! Yes, Brach's taste better because they're made better. Try some today and see for yourself.

Taste The Difference!

Buy Brach's Chocolate Covered Cherries

WORLD'S LARGEST MAKER OF CHOCOLATE COVERED CHERRIES

(Continued from Page 172)

Zerelda frowned. Something had flickered across her memory: Alonzo Moultripp's story of how Chilton got his start as an orator, while a freshman at the Paw Paw High School. He had won the prize with a recitation, written by himself, entitled A Tribute to My Mother, and Alonzo took delight in quoting from it: "The one, absolute, unselfish friend that man can have in this selfish world, the one that never deserts him, never proves ungrateful or treacherous, is his mother." Some months afterward, they had taken the prize away from Chilton when it was discovered that the precocious youth had cribbed the whole thing from Senator Vest's Eulogy on the Dog—merely substituting the word "mother." But by that time Chilton was firmly entrenched on the high-school debating team.

Zerelda shook these disloyal thoughts from her mind. Anyway, Alonzo had always been jealous of him. She looked up at Chilton, standing there, tall and strong, smoking his pipe, with the lamplight on his clean-cut, handsome features. ("Good-looking as any Harrison Fisher magazine cover," she had once heard a girl say.) But it was his strength of character that, from the beginning, had appealed to Zerelda. He was making something of his life. (Of course, Alonzo Moultripp would deride it as "crass ambition." But Alonzo was a cynic, to whom all politicians were either bandits or buffoons.)

She realized that she had meant to speak to him about the case. "Chilton"—she stirred uncomfortably—"are you sure you're doing the right thing in the Tilbee ——"

"You're not bringing that up again!"

"But it's been bothering me, Chilton," Zerelda told him. "Having the man arrested—and on such a serious charge as kidnaping ——"

"Now, now"—he blew a smoke ring—"don't you bother your pretty head. I told you before, I'll handle it," he said.

"But the way the Banner wrote it up this morning ——"

"Did you see this evening's Record? How City Attorney Corr keeps crime down by being tough with criminals? Wonderful editorial. It ought to be"—he grinned—"I wrote it myself and took it to the Record office!"

"But he isn't, though."

"Who isn't what?"

"I mean . . . he couldn't be a criminal," she persisted. "He certainly doesn't seem like one. And he has so many friends everywhere. He ——"

"Wait a minute, Zee." All the warmth had gone out of his voice. "Am I to understand you're defending this man?"

"It—it's not that I'm defending him ——"

"Then what are you trying to get at?"

"I'm not trying to get at anything. It's just"—she rose, conscious that her heart was beating very fast—"it's just that I think he may be a more decent sort of person than we gave him credit for."

"When I sent for him," Corr said sharply, "and asked for the boy, he got smart with me. Well, I don't take that from any cheap fly-by-night grifter!"

"Chilton, I believe he's sincere."

"Sincere!" His laugh was short and sarcastic. "And there's talk of letting women vote! This certainly proves they ought to stay where they belong—at home. You're really naïve!"

It had all happened in less than a minute, but as they stood facing each other she knew that nothing would ever be the same for them again.

Corr was not so perceptive. Always the dominant male, he rapped the ashes from his pipe. "Remember, Zee, you're the one who first complained about Tilbee. And no matter how 'sincere' you find him now—he's headed for state's prison. So let's drop the subject."

At the same hour Doc and Edan Dunbar sat at dinner in front of a log fire in Dunbar's oak-paneled dining room. Miss Dunbar, in a blue velvet frock and huge pink hair ribbon, stood beside her father—having been brought in to say good night. Her nurse, Hilda, a dumpy woman in black, hovered in the background.

"But when will Tad be back?" Miss Dunbar's voice was plaintive. "We had lots of fun and everything."

"Tad has gone away for only a little while." Her father put an arm around her. "But you mustn't forget, darling, we're not to say anything about Tad. No matter who asks us. Do you understand?"

"Yes, daddy."

"It's kind of a game we'll play while he's gone." Dunbar kissed her lightly. "Now say good night to the doctor."

"Good night, doctor," she said shyly.

"Good night, June."

Something in his gray eyes reassured her. "When Tad comes back," she asked, "will he bring Spook too?"

"He will," Doc answered. "Those two don't get separated far. Meanwhile you've got Beezark to look after."

She smiled. "Beezark's a very nice dog," she said.

"He's a deep thinker," Doc said.

The child looked puzzled. "Is that why sometimes he just sits and sits?"

Doc nodded. "He's got a lot on his mind."

"Come along now, June."

Miss Dunbar gave her nurse a glance of veiled hostility, then said good night all around again and suffered herself to be led out.

When the door had closed, Doc said, "You're sure Tad's all right there?"

"Absolutely. Maggie Riley's been with me for years and she'll take good care of him. Her sister has a place in the country—miles from anywhere. Nobody will know the boy's there. But the devil of it is—we miss him. All of us." Dunbar glanced at Doc's plate and untouched glass of wine. "You aren't eating anything."

"Not very hungry. They served such rich food in that jailhouse." Doc smiled wryly.

Abruptly Dunbar asked, "How will we do about this?"

"The man's name is Elkland. J. W. Elkland," Doc said. "He's in his sixties, I should judge."

Dunbar wrote it down in a small notebook.

"Locating him won't be easy. Know anybody in Chicago?"

"There's a law firm that looks after his business."

"They can get the information for you, but you'll have to go yourself," Doc told him. "And it must be done on the quiet—so Elkland won't get scared off. If you're lucky you'll find him at a Hereford-cattle sale somewhere in Illinois—can't say where. Breeders' association'll tell you where the auctions are and the dates."

"How did you figure this out?" Dunbar asked.

"My old Pinkerton training. I found he breeds Herefords."

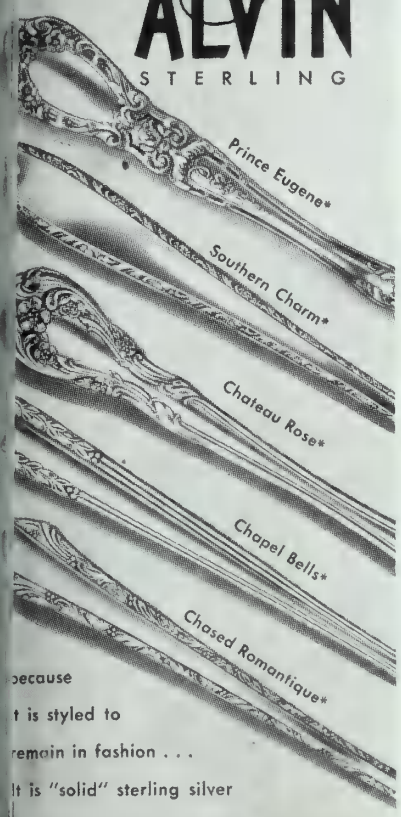
There was excitement in Dunbar's eyes. "I can catch a train for Chicago tonight at nine-fifty-five."

They drove to town in Dunbar's carriage with Enoch on the box. Since the Contraction and the dapple-gray team had been impounded by the city attorney, Enoch was quartered in the hayloft over Dunbar's stable, and assisted his friend Luke in odd jobs.

On the platform of the Michigan Central station Doc waited with Edan Dunbar while the Chicago train puffed in. They shook hands gravely.

"It's a long shot," Doc said, "but worth trying—for the kid."

He stood watching the train pull out, until the red light on the last car shone reflected in the dark river curving alongside the tracks. Then he walked slowly out his spirits were lower than the cold cigar butts on the floor of the empty station.



Dunbar's carriage was at the curb, but instead of climbing inside, Doc swung onto Happiness is not a station you arrive at, but a manner of traveling.

—MARGARET LEE RUNBECK.

It's smart to buy

ALVIN*

STERLING

because it is styled to remain in fashion . . .
It is "solid" sterling silver through and through and constant use will only enhance its beauty.
Modestly priced for satisfaction and service, year after year,
for a lifetime.

SEE IT . . BUY IT . . AT YOUR JEWELER'S
Write us for free illustrated price folders of these and other ALVIN patterns.

THE ALVIN SILVERSMITHS
Makers of Exclusive Silver Designs for over Sixty years PROVIDENCE 7, RHODE ISLAND
ademarks

The bright idea

for plain foods!

each for a jar or can of whole Sunine Pimientos when you want to rk up a casserole, add color to a tato or egg dish, dress up a meat or lad. Sunshine Pimientos have such vid red beauty, such mild, spicy avor, that the best cooks rely on em for inired meals.

your antry helf ocked?

POMONA
RODUCTS COMPANY
Griffin,
Georgia

box beside Enoch. They drove in silence up the hill, past the steam-pump company.

Finally Doc spoke. "Nice pair of cobs."

Enoch touched the off horse with his whip. "Yes, doctor," he said glumly, "but nothing like our team."

Both were thinking of days and nights on the road—under summer stars or the warm autumn sun.

"Dunno what'll happen to us," Enoch murmured. "Seem like the bottom kind of drop out of ever'thing."

Doc roused himself. It would never do to let Enoch see how deeply depressed he was. "Not on your tintype!" he declared with a flurry of bravado. "They haven't got me licked yet!"

"Mis' Wing kind of done us in."

"I don't want to talk about her," Doc said curtly.

"Mr. Corr, the city attorney ——"

"That splayfooted shitepoke! He'll be running for cover before I get through with him."

"But, doctor, he's got the cards stacked against you."

"The last hombre that stacked any cards in a game with me got carried out feet first! He was a big man too. Weighed so much they had to get two extra pallbearers."

In the dark street the carriage stopped before Clara Brink's boardinghouse—where Doc had been given a front room, with the compliments of the proprietress. Doc stepped nimbly onto the horse block.

Enoch sighed. "I been fretted consid'able, doctor. What's agoin' to happen to Tad?"

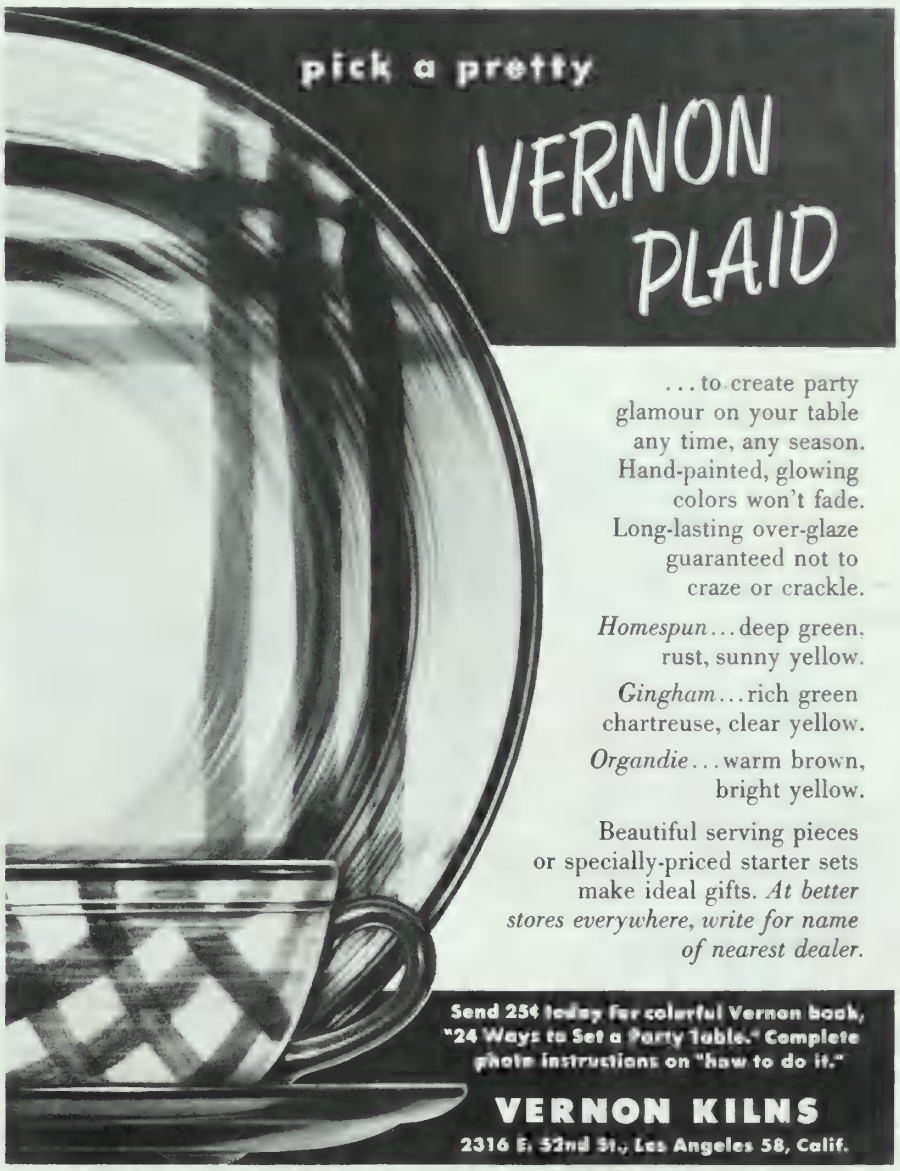
"Tell more about that in a couple of days. Keep your chin up." Doc started away, then turned. "Enoch, you talk about this city attorney stacking the cards—don't forget old Doctor Tilbee can still manipulate an ace or two up his cuff!"

ZERELDA had written the letter three times before it satisfied her. It was not an apology—somehow she could not apologize to him—so much as an explanation; she wanted him to understand that she was not the cause of his arrest. She had crossed out "cordially yours" as too arch, substituted "sincerely yours"—and crossed that out. Traditional letter-writing etiquette was so absurd: she was not "his" at all. In the end she had merely signed her name.

No one seemed to know his address—and she certainly could not inquire from Chilton Corr. (This morning Chilton had sent a box of red roses and a note saying that he hoped she would forget their little tiff, and so on. Tiff, she thought. He reveals his real nature—an unattractive exposé—and then shrugs it off as a tiff!)

But she had discovered where Tilbee's wagon and team were impounded and had decided to leave the letter there. It was a livery stable near the fire station, and as she walked through the open door an incredibly dirty man appeared, carrying two buckets of mash.

"Ain't seen Doc, m'self," he told her, "but the p'lice brung in his team an' ve-hicle. Ve-hicle's over yonder." He nodded toward a dim corner.



Zerelda saw the Contraption among a row of buggies and surreys. Slowly she walked over to it. The dirty man had disappeared, and the only sounds were an occasional hoof stamp, somewhere out back, and the flutter of doves on the roof. The Contraption's canvas curtains were rolled up, so that the scarlet-and-gold TILBEE'S WONDER TONIC stood out bravely in this half-gloom.

She stood for an instant, undecided, then opened the rear door and climbed up the little steps, inside. She glanced around, seeing how it was furnished: the polished stove, the table, the neat bunk. As she laid her letter on the table she noticed a book: Primer of American History. It looked new, and, curious, she opened it. On the flyleaf was written in a bold scrawl:

To Theodore Roosevelt Bayliss
from his friend
Thomas Jefferson Tilbee
Sept. 20, 1904

Thoughtfully she put it down. Overhead was a rack holding a dozen battered volumes.

(Continued on Page 177)

pick a pretty

VERNON PLAID

. . . to create party glamour on your table any time, any season. Hand-painted, glowing colors won't fade. Long-lasting over-glaze guaranteed not to craze or crackle.

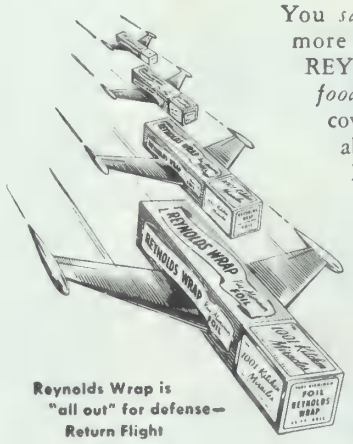
Homespun . . . deep green, rust, sunny yellow.

Gingham . . . rich green chartreuse, clear yellow.

Organdie . . . warm brown, bright yellow.

Beautiful serving pieces or specially-priced starter sets make ideal gifts. At better stores everywhere, write for name of nearest dealer.

Send 25¢ today for colorful Vernon book, "24 Ways to Set a Party Table." Complete photo instructions on "how to do it."



VERNON KILNS
2316 E. 52nd St., Los Angeles 58, Calif.

Remember these ways to save food, save time, save work...

Reynolds Wrap is "all out" for defense—Return Flight Guaranteed!

You save meat (less shrinkage, more flavor) when you roast in REYNOLDS WRAP.* You save food when you wrap leftovers and cover bowls with this bright, reusable foil. You save work when you line pans with foil (no scouring)! Government order now limits the manufacture of REYNOLDS WRAP household foil. Military needs come first. But production of aluminum is expanding. Look and ask for REYNOLDS WRAP,... for "1,001 Kitchen Miracles!"...

REYNOLDS WRAP
the pure aluminum foil

REYNOLDS Aluminum

*MADE ONLY BY REYNOLDS METALS COMPANY, LOUISVILLE 1, KY. ASK FOR IT BY NAME

Did you ever?

Did you ever see a cake with so much let's-eat-it-right-now appeal? Ever know that your own cake can be just as fine and luscious and even-textured as the one you see here? All you do is get one of those neat blue-and-white packages of Pillsbury Cake Mix (White or Chocolate Fudge) and add milk. Ever stir up such an easy triumph? Did you ever hear so much wonderful-really-mean-it praise from your family? Did you ever

Just add milk—

Milk is all you add—no eggs, flavoring, or extras of any kind required. These are complete mixes.

Pillsbury BEST XXXX Mixes

Remember—
You and Ann Pillsbury can make a great tea

Pillsbury CAKE MIXES

WHITE AND CHOCOLATE FUDGE

(Continued from Page 175)

Zerelda glanced at the titles: Shakespeare's Tragedies; Bird Life of North America; Famous After-Dinner Speeches; U. S. Cavalry Manual; Bancroft's History of the United States, Vol. III; The Trial and Hanging of Tom Horn; The American Commonwealth; Diseases of the Horse; Great Battles of the Civil War; Gray's Anatomy; Leaves of Grass and Other Poems, by Walt Whitman.

She remembered something her father had once said: "You can get a pretty fair impression of a man from the books he keeps by his bedside." But who could get an impression of this man?

Idly she reached for the volume of Whitman. It had always annoyed her that Leaves of Grass was considered too "indecent" for a college girl's reading—like Shakespeare's Venus and Adonis. Those alleged educators who built fences to shut off the horizon ——

One page was marked with a Little Roseland cigar band. The Open Road. She began to read—and found the lines he had quoted to her that day. It was easy to understand now why this poem meant so much to him. She read on farther:

Allons! Whoever you are,
Come travel with me!

"A woman, you say?" Doc looked down at the stable hand, squatting on his haunches in the sun.

"Yup." The man spat tobacco juice at a dragonfly poised on the door. The dragonfly shimmered away unscathed. "Missed," the man said with surprise.

"How long ago was she here?"

"'Bout ten minutes. Right pretty piece she was too."

Puzzled, Doc entered the very stable and crossed to the Contraption. He had come to get some personal belongings out of his locker—things he would need in the nine days before the trial. Then he saw her—standing inside, reading a book!

Zerelda turned, startled. "Oh! I hope you don't mind my walking in this way." The blush that her friends teased her about colored her cheeks. "You see ——"

"What're you looking for?" he cut in harshly. "Why don't you let the cops search my stuff?"

She stared at him, shocked. "You don't think that? I—I ——" She was hopelessly confused now. "It's nothing like that." She put down the book and picked up her letter. "The fact is, I . . . came here looking for you."

Doc waited—watching her, his gray eyes cold.

"You must believe me." Her embarrassment was pathetic. "I wrote this to you." She held out the letter, but he made no move to take it. His rudeness hurt her. She turned away, dropping the letter in her coat pocket. "I only wanted to tell you," she said in a small voice, "that I . . . had nothing to do with your arrest."

He blinked. "You what?"

"I didn't know you'd been arrested—till afterward." And then, for some inexplicable reason, she added, "I'm dreadfully sorry about what happened."

"Well"—Doc coughed—"why didn't you say so!"

"I tried to. I went to the jail, but they wouldn't let me see you."

"No? Well, I'll be ——"

For a few seconds neither of them spoke. Then both started to speak at once: "I ——" They laughed then—and the tension cracked.

"You were reading," he reminded her. "What was it?"

"The Open Road." She picked up the Whitman volume. "There's a wonderful bit here." And she read aloud:

"'Be not discouraged, keep on,
there are divine things well envelop'd . . .
More beautiful than words can tell ——'"

"The next line," Doc interrupted, "is, 'Allons! We must not stop here!' And I second that. It's too beautiful a day to waste here, breathing hay dust and horse perfume—let's take a walk."

She had a flash of doubt: the propriety of being seen in public with him. What would people say?

Doc was aware of her hesitation, and in the same instant remembered that he was a prisoner out on bail. "Maybe you'd better not."

"No." Swiftly she raised her head. "I think I'd like to."

They found their way, by quiet tree-shaded streets, to the other side of town, beyond McCloud Park. It was a perfect day, cool in the autumn sun, with yellow maple leaves scattered over the walks and bonfire smoke on the air. And, walking, they had discovered many things about each other.

Doc talked as if he had no worry over the outcome of his trial, and would be setting forth on the road again the moment this annoying business was settled. And when he described the freedom and pleasures of the road, Zerelda felt a stirring of restlessness that had plagued her before. Often she had wakened in the night with a dread that life was passing her by—and that she would go to seed in a little town on the edge of nowhere. She could not confide this to him, but, defensively, she told him about Springville, and about her house there, and the garden that she tended herself. To Doc it had a sound of warmth and contentment and security.

"Snug harbor," he said, almost to himself. "I suppose every rolling stone, sometime or other ——"

"What?"

"Nothing." He changed the subject as a flight of birds passed overhead, flying high. "On their way south. We'll be heading south, too, before the cold sets in." And he told her how he followed the seasons in the Contraption.

"But," she asked, "don't you ever stay and take the weather?"

Take the weather. He turned it over in his mind, recalling another day—and her accusation that he had dodged responsibility all his life. This woman was no fool. Suddenly it occurred to him that in his whole life she was the only one he had known who wasn't a fool. . . . "Don't you ever stay and take the weather?" Hard to answer.

"I'll tell you," he evaded, with a quick smile, "there are some things I've got to stay and take—I haven't thought much about the weather. For instance, that shyster city attorney!"

She glanced at him warily. Then she saw from his bland expression that he knew nothing about her and Chilton Corr, and she felt relieved. Probably she should tell him, out of loyalty to Chilton. Yet she was uncertain whether her loyalty belonged to Chilton—or to this adventurer whom she had involved in such serious trouble. After all, it was she who first turned in the alarm.

Abruptly she said, "What I did about Tad was wrong. Selfish—and pretty awful. I realize it now. . . . When I came after you to get him back, I'm afraid I was thinking more of the poor board than of the boy. What's happened is my fault."

"Every time a woman turns honest," said Doc, "she gets to ranting and raring like a revival meeting!"

Zerelda laughed.

"But before you got so honest, you wrote me a letter. If you don't mind, I'd like to have it."

"Oh," she protested, "I've told you what's in it."

"No matter"—he held out his hand, smiling—"I'd like to have it."

She gave him the letter, avoiding his eyes. An uneasy, almost sick feeling had come over her. All this last hour they had talked so blithely, discovering each other, while every minute was bringing him closer to the courtroom where Chilton Corr would put him on trial. And Chilton Corr would see to it that he got a conviction. That would mean prison for Doc.

A cheerful old man or old woman is like the sunny side ov a woodshed, in the last ov winter. —JOSH BILLINGS.

Name it.. and you can bake it!

It's no trick at all with a Westinghouse

America's Leading Roaster

Cakes, pies . . . cookies, bread . . . anything and everything you can think of bakes to perfection in this versatile Roaster-Oven. What's more, it turns out a grand job each and every time, thanks to sure, even heat, thermostatically controlled. You'll love the way it roasts meat . . . cooks taste-treats for 5 or 50 . . . takes over complete meals, too. And it's portable besides!

Yes, the Westinghouse Roaster-Oven is 2 square feet of cooking magic, cooks everything, plugs in anywhere. Has exclusive Look-in Lid, handy Lift-Out rack, complete set of glass ovenware dishes . . . all at no extra cost. See this wonder-cooking appliance at your Westinghouse retailer's. Westinghouse Electric Corporation, Mansfield, Ohio.

ROASTER-OVEN, Only $39.95

Complete with Dishes

Price subject to change

Cooks Complete Meal for eight or ten . . . all at one time.

Look-in Lid. No need to lift the cover to see what's cooking.

Convenient Cabinet, also Timer, Broiler-Grid . . . optional.

Give Electric Housewares . . First Choice for every Gift Occasion

LOOK TO WESTINGHOUSE FOR TV's TOP ENTERTAINMENT . . . Exclusive Telecasts of Outstanding COLLEGE FOOTBALL GAMES . . . plus WESTINGHOUSE "STUDIO ONE" every week

YOU CAN BE SURE...IF IT'S Westinghouse

She watched him placing her letter carefully in his wallet—and of a sudden she knew that she must do something to help him.

"First letter a man gets from . . . a particular woman is a valuable document," he said. "More important than a lot they keep under glass in the Smithsonian Institute."

She smiled, but she was pale now. And she thought, I must go to Chilton.

The city attorney was in a bad mood. For the past two days the Tilbee case had continued to attract attention in the press, much of it unfavorable. Even Kalamazoo and Grand Rapids papers had picked it up, while the Banner editorials went on lambasting him. An hour ago the county chairman had telephoned to remind him that this hornet's nest wasn't helping him politically.

"Why'd you ever start it in the first place, Chil?" the county chairman had asked; and Chilton Corr had answered in such high-minded rhetoric that the county chairman cut him off with a sour laugh. "Save that speech for t'night's rally!"

The county chairman's reminder of the rally brought him up with a start. He had not had time to compose his speech—and it must be a good one. If he "got" them at the rally it would wipe out the slurs that the Banner had printed on the Tilbee case. From the bookshelves he selected a black volume: Addresses by William Jennings Bryan.

He turned to the famous Cross of Gold speech. You could always "rearrange" that a bit and come up with something powerful. Having paraphrased the speech often, he knew it by heart; and taking an attitude in front of the mirror, he began to extemporize: "My fellow townsmen. As your city attorney, I would be presumptuous indeed ——"

Doc Tilbee pushed open the outer door. The reception room was empty, but a burning cigarette stub indicated that the male clerk had only temporarily evacuated his desk. Doc sat down on a hard bench and waited. The shelves of calfbound lawbooks and the cold musty air of the place made him vaguely uncomfortable. He got up and walked around, wondering for the hundredth time why the city attorney had summoned him. A rasping, self-important clock ticked off ten minutes—and still the clerk did not appear. Through the closed door of the next office Doc could hear someone talking. After another ten minutes he rose impatiently and opened the door. Chilton Corr stood making a speech to himself in the mirror.

". . . With a zeal approaching the zeal which inspired the Crusaders of old, our party must go forth in this election ——" He broke off, startled, seeing Doc Tilbee in the doorway. "Well?" he demanded. "What are you doing here?"

Doc looked at him levelly. "You ought to know—you're the one that sent for me."

"Oh, yes—so I did. But I made the appointment eleven o'clock ——"

"It's twenty past," said Doc.

Corr scowled at his watch. "M-m. All right, as long as you're here." He had recovered his aplomb. "Close the door." He seated himself behind his desk and waved Doc toward the chair in front. "Now, then, Tilbee—I'm going to show you that justice can be tempered with mercy."

"I could use a little of both," said Doc.

Corr leaned back, one hand toying with the gold Debating Society emblem on his watch chain. "I'm prepared to offer you immunity," he said.

Doc stared at him. He had not expected this.

"I'll call off the trial—quash the indictment—and let you go scot free."

Doc's pulse had jumped. But he was thinking, There must be a joker in this.

"If ——"

Here it comes!

"If," Corr repeated, "you will do the right thing and hand over the boy." Then, as Doc frowned: "Before you answer, think what it means to you. You'll have your wagon and team returned. You'll be able to leave this town in one hour's time! A free man! Think what that means, Tilbee. All you have to do is hand over the boy—to be returned to Springville, where he belongs. Well? What do you say?"

Doc said nothing. In all his life he had never been so tempted.

"This is a very generous offer." Corr leaned forward. "All I'm asking in return is that you do the right thing."

Doc cleared his throat. "Maybe you and I don't have the same idea what the 'right thing' is."

"That boy ——"

Doc did not hear him. In the back of his mind a thought quivered: If I had Tad over—then suppose the deal with Dunbar should go through? It's a long shot—but suppose he finds the old man ——

Corr's voice cut in. "You've heard my offer."

It seemed several minutes, but actually only a few seconds had passed. Doc stood up. "Nothing doing."

"You mean—you refuse?"

"I do."

"You must be crazy."

"Maybe so."

"Look here," Corr snapped, "I'll give you one more chance ——"

"Save your wind," Doc told him, and picked up his hat.

Corr sat without moving. Only his alert brown eyes moved—and in them glittered a rage such as Doc had once seen in the eyes of a trapped jaguar. But when he spoke his voice was perfectly calm. "Very well," he said, and pressed a buzzer on his desk.

The door opened and the clerk came in. He was a seedy little man in a rumpled suit, with paper cuff protectors.

The city attorney pulled a large sheet of paper toward him. On it were printed lines, with writing, and Doc read the heading: COURT CALENDAR. Corr picked up a pencil and scratched out a line. Then without looking up he said, "Our kidnaping case is moved forward—from October sixth to September thirtieth."

"But"—the clerk blinked—"that's day after tomorrow!"

Corr nodded. "Day after tomorrow." He turned to Doc. "You heard that."

Doc made no answer.

"And I advise you not to try to jump your bail," Corr said. "Our policemen are all good pistol shots."

Doc put on his hat and walked out.

Late that evening the three of them sat at a corner table in the Green Moon, talking quietly.

Orrin Godsmark was an eager, florid-faced young man, considered one of the town's able lawyers. He leaned forward. "This case should be tried by the county. But Corr spiked that—and it's too late for me to appeal. Moving it up to day after tomorrow is

(Continued on Page 181)

Rise of Fog

By Daniel Smythe

The flood is seeping over walls,
And past bull thistles in a line.
As the rock pasture dampens, falls,
We watch the fading of the pine.

The thin creek is a muffled rope
As the familiar boulders drown.
Mist deepens on the hardest slope;
The tall, established woods go down.

And now the rough fence, bark and joint,
Is buried to the last wet log;
And firm but blurring road signs point
To what may stand beyond the fog.

This new Lemon Gold Cake has a special secret!

HERE'S THE RECIPE:

2¼ cups sifted cake flour	6 eggs, separated
1½ cups sugar	¼ cup cold water
1 tablespoon baking powder	2 teaspoons fresh Sunkist lemon juice
1 teaspoon salt	1 teaspoon grated Sunkist lemon rind
½ cup Kraft Salad Oil	½ teaspoon cream of tartar

Sift flour, sugar, baking powder and salt together in a bowl. Make a well and add in order the Kraft Salad Oil, egg yolks, water, lemon juice and rind. Beat with spoon until smooth. Add the cream of tartar to egg whites and beat until very, very stiff. Pour egg yolk mixture gradually over the whipped egg whites, carefully folding with a rubber scraper just until blended. Do not stir. Pour immediately into an ungreased 10 x 4-inch tube pan. Bake in moderate oven, 325° F, for 70 minutes or until the top springs back when lightly touched.

After removing cake from oven, turn pan upside down, placing tube part over the neck of small funnel. When cold, loosen sides with spatula and remove cake from the pan. Frost with

LEMON FLUFF FROSTING

½ cup Parkay Margarine	4 cups sifted confectioners' sugar
Dash of salt	3 tablespoons Sunkist lemon juice
2 teaspoons grated Sunkist lemon rind

Cream margarine. Add salt. Add part of sugar, and cream well. Add remaining sugar alternately with lemon juice, creaming until light and fluffy. Add lemon rind and mix until thoroughly blended.

The secret is Kraft Salad Oil—the lighter-bodied oil that blends better with other ingredients!

Try this recipe soon! It will make you famous as a cake baker even if you've never baked a cake before!

You can't fail if you follow directions carefully—and if you use Kraft Salad Oil as the shortening— because Kraft Salad Oil is a very special kind of oil. It was perfected by Kraft at Salad Dressing Headquarters —specially for salad dressings and baking.

Get Kraft Salad Oil at your grocer's today.

Delicious salad dressings, too!

The lighter body that makes Kraft Salad Oil blend so perfectly in baking also helps you make grand homemade salad dressings. Write Kraft Kitchens, c/o Kraft Foods Company, Chicago 90, Illinois, for free collection of new salad dressing recipes.

Kraft superfined Salad Oil

Created especially for salads and baking

Amazing New Powder Bleach Safely Bleaches Nylon, Rayon!

"ALMOST UNBELIEVABLE!" . . . that's how 'snowy' bleach impressed this lovely young bride. She just couldn't imagine using a bleach on her net-trimmed nylon slip. But 'snowy' bleach is completely different. It's so gentle. After just three washings with 'snowy,' all the yellow disappeared and her slip was white and sparkling as new. You too will like 'snowy' bleach.

'snowy' Bleach Gently Whitens Dingy Gray Slips, Blouses, Bras, Lingerie

The miracle women have waited for all these years is here! A revolutionary new kind of bleach in powder form that is completely safe for nylon, rayon, silks, woolens—fabrics women could never bleach before.

New! Gentle! 'snowy' bleach is brought to you by the Gold Seal Co., (makers of famous 'GLASS WAX'). Remarkable 'snowy' bleach safely whitens and brightens even sheerest lingerie. Grateful women for the first time in history now trust their finest washable fabrics to this wonderful powder bleach discovery . . . marvel at how safely it acts to banish that dingy gray or yellowed look.

Mrs. Olga Kaar

As Mrs. Olga Kaar says, "I'm never embarrassed any more about dingy gray showing on my slips." No more soiled look at the hem. No more half moon under-arm stains on bras. 'snowy' bleach ends fear of dingy undies—assures complete feminine daintiness!

You Can Trust Even Baby's Things to 'snowy'

A gentle bleach that's safe as safe can be for precious baby things has completely won the confidence of today's careful mothers. So gently, so tenderly does 'snowy' bleach treat baby diapers, knits, fine lawn dresses and embroideries.

Mothers, Attention! The Gold Seal Company, makers of 'snowy', assures you 'snowy' bleach leaves sweaters and blankets softer and fluffier. Harmless and non-irritating to baby's delicate skin.

'snowy' is the first powder bleach to be accepted by the American Medical Association for advertising in AMA publications.

Safely Bleaches Sweaters, Woolens, Even Silks, Satins!

Never before possible! Women never dreamed of bleaching such things as wool sweaters, blankets or silk and satin garments—until 'snowy' bleach came along.

Now—as Mrs. H. Carlson reports, "I've never had a qualm about trusting my best wool sweaters to 'snowy'. They come out soft and fluffy every time. And even my silk things have stayed as soft and lustrous as new. I call 'snowy' my washday insurance."

Brightens Tub-fast Colors, Too

Another first for 'snowy' bleach! So gentle, so safe is this amazing new powder bleach, you can actually use 'snowy' bleach to clear and brighten your pink, blue, peach—all your dainty tub-fast colored washables. 'snowy' won't harm even the most delicate tub-fast pastels or prints. And how you'll love the way it helps to make dulled, cloudy colors clear and fresh once more.

'snowy' Costs Only Pennies per Wash

Just think! This safe beauty care for your finest lingerie costs you only a penny or two with each laundering. Softens water and saves on soap and detergent besides. Get a big 20-ounce package of 'snowy' bleach for 49¢.

At Last a Bleach That Smells GOOD— 'snowy' Is Pleasant News to Your Nose!

There's good news in the air! That wonderful new powdered bleach for nylon and rayon, 'snowy' bleach, has a pleasant fragrance, too. It smells mild, fresh and clean as the out-of-doors.

Enthusiastic young housewife, Marie Tate, reveals: "I've simply fallen in love with 'snowy' bleach. It gets my underthings white as can be—and it's so easy to use a powder bleach and one that smells so nice. I just dip my lingerie in the washbowl and add a little 'snowy' as I wash. It all comes out so white and smells so fresh. I never saw anything like it."

Delighted career girl, Doris McLeod, observes: "That's so important when you do your lingerie and things indoors—they don't get out in the sun. But now with 'snowy' bleach, they still have that clean, outdoor fragrance."

Women everywhere are thrilled by this added miracle of 'snowy' bleach. What a wonderful thing to feel sure that your dainty nylon or rayon underthings are always clean and sweet-smelling—delightfully fresh with 'snowy' powder bleach.

Doris McLeod

49¢ BIG 20 oz. PACKAGE

GOLD SEAL'S SAFE BLEACH 'snowy'

The Powdered Bleach with the Pleasant Odor

'snowy', Gold Seal and 'GLASS WAX' are trademarks. © Gold Seal Co., Bismarck, N. Dak.

(Continued from Page 178)

of his highhanded methods. Of course, ...se is a crowded court schedule—but ...'t give us time to prepare properly." "C...r wants to get it over with quick—... of the papers." Billy Gray signaled ...er for more coffee.

"N...v, here is the kidnaping law." Gods... drew a memorandum from his pocket ...d: "Section 25—so on and so forth—...ed Laws of Michigan, 1897. 'Every ...who willfully, maliciously and with... ful authority shall forcibly or secretly ... or imprison any other person within ...te against his will . . .' Against his ill. ...at's our whole case, right there. All ...e to prove is that the boy traveled ...u willingly. You see, Tilbee, why we ...oduce him in court?"

"I...." Doc looked at the ash on his cigar. "But ——"

"You must produce the boy," said Gods... "You want an acquittal, don't you?"

"N...ur'ly. Only ——"

"C...y what?"

Doc ...esitated, frowning. "Again, the devil ...ket...im up into an exceeding high mountain, ...d ...eweth him all the kingdoms of the ...orld..." Years ago he had come across it in ...bo...wed Bible, while looking for quota... ...ons ...use in a pitch. Once before today he ...d ...n tempted: Corr had offered him im... ...uni...—and he had re... ...used ...because he could ...ot t...n Tad over to them. ...erh...s this was his last ...han... Without Tad in ...court Godsmark could not ...t h...n acquitted. But if ...e c... bring Tad into ...court if he had to, to gain ...s ...n freedom—they ...could ...ake Tad. There was ...a ...inction, already is... ...ued, which would send ...ad ...ck to the home. . . . ...ut was a way out. . . . Th...devil taketh him .... . ." Doc discovered ...at was sweating.

"I ...don't understand ...our ...esitation," Gods... ...ark ...aid. "Do you realize ...he ...riousness of this ...ar... against you?"

Doc did not hear him. He was listening to ...er ...ice: "You're the sort of man who has ...dg...responsibility all your life."

"J...lge Yarbaugh is tough. Particularly on ...hat ...e calls 'foreigners'—that is, anybody ...ot a ...cal resident," Godsmark said. "If we ...ope ...o beat the case, we'll need the boy."

Doc ...hought of Dunbar, over in Illinois ...arc...ng for old Mr. Elkland. Last night's ...leg...m reported "No luck yet." But Dun... ...ar ...s still trying—and if he found him ...hen ...ad would be ——

"I...ten, Doc!" Gray was squinting at ...im ...rcely. "You bring the boy into court— ...and ...rin here does the rest. It's as simple ...as th..."

"I...t it isn't, Billy. It isn't simple at all." Doc ...iped his face with a blue bandanna. "You ...see—I can't bring him into court."

"W...hy not?"

"He's got to stay where he is."

"A...d where is he?"

"I...an't tell you that."

Godsmark looked insulted. "I'm either our ...awyer or I'm not!"

"...ou are," Doc told him. "But I can't tell ...ou ...here the boy is."

Gray snorted. "I never heard such non...ense!"

"I'm sorry," Doc said. "That's the way it is."

For several seconds they sat looking at ...im ...n puzzled disapproval. It couldn't be ...nsc...nce, Billy Gray was thinking. After the ...le ...c has led, his conscience must be atrophied ...ard ...than a rhinoceros' horn. But some ...eir change had come over him. You ...oun...t associate Doc Tilbee with anything ...cial—and yet ——

Clara Brink tooled up in front of the Green ...Mill with a flourish. As the town's most spectacular blonde, known for elaborate hats and clothes, she cut a fine figure driving her open maroon "skeleton," with vermilion wire wheels, behind a fast-stepping black horse. A man shuffled out from the dark alley. Clara recognized him.

"Joe," she called briskly, "go in and tell Doc Tilbee I'm waitin' for him. He's that good-lookin' Westerner ——"

"I know Doc," said Joe.

"Here." She tossed him a quarter.

"Thanks, Mis' Brink." He disappeared through the family entrance.

ACROSS the street, lights blazed from the Fraternal Order of Falcons Hall. Clara's attention was drawn by loud hand clapping inside, then the doors opened and a crowd began streaming out. She noticed the canvas banner:

VOTERS' RALLY TONIGHT
CITY ATTORNEY CORR
WILL SPEAK

"Whoa, you old fool," Clara said to her horse.

Joe came out of the Green Moon. "Mis' Brink—Doc says five minutes."

"Thanks, Joe." Five minutes wasn't long to wait, she was thinking. She had waited five years for him already. The first time she had set eyes on him—making his Wonder Tonic pitch on a Jefferson Avenue corner, five years ago August—...had decided that he was the man for her. But somehow he had always eluded her. Once she had even got up nerve to say it, in so many words. "Honey," she had said, "I'll give you a half interest in the boarding-house. You can sit on the porch, with your feet up, and not do a tap of work the rest of your days. Anything I've got is yours for the asking." She could not remember what he had answered, but it was something evasive and funny. He had made her laugh, then he had kissed her. . . . Really, it went back to the first kiss—the night they met. From then on, no other man had meant a thing. But always the road had called to him, and he had driven away, heading east or west, north or south. That road, she thought bitterly. What is it a man can see in a life like that?

Doc came out of the Green Moon, followed by Billy Gray and Godsmark. They exchanged good nights, and he crossed the sidewalk toward her.

"Clara." He lifted his wide-brimmed hat with grave politeness.

His manners always reminded her of the character in that new novel, The Virginian. "Jump in, you good-lookin' son of a gun," she said, making room beside her.

As Doc moved to step into the buggy he halted suddenly, peering at something across the street. Clara glanced over. In front of Falcons Hall, Corr, the city attorney, was leaving a crowd of admirers to walk beside a smartly dressed girl.

"Why," Doc said, as if to himself, incredulously, "that's Corr with her!"

Clara looked at him. "D'you know her? Her name's Wing—from out of town. I hear they're engaged to be married."

He swung around, staring at her. "Married?"

"Why not?" Clara laughed. "Some people still get married. It's a nice old custom that hasn't died out altogether!"

He turned then, and watched them. Corr took Zerelda's arm, talking to her eagerly—and they disappeared down the street.

Clara noticed his hand, under the lamp, gripping the seat rail so hard that the knuckles stood out white. "Get in," she said nervously. "I've got a supper party rigged up at the house. The folks are waiting." He did not answer, and she prattled on, ill-at-ease: "It's in your honor, the party is. I invited a few old friends—and a real jolly couple that're playing at the Bijou this week.

TO TAKE WITH A GRAIN OF SALT

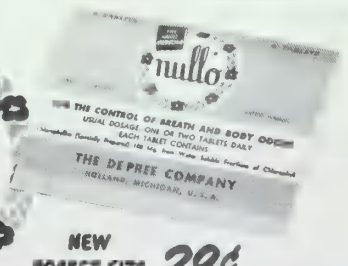
Salt was a rare and costly commodity in ancient times. Its properties were not understood, and it was thought to have magical powers. It was sprinkled on food suspected to contain poison. Hence, it became customary to eat a questionable dish only when salt had been added. A man in doubt might say, "I'll take some—with a little salt." So, when in doubt about the accuracy of a statement, a person is likely to say, "I'll take that with a grain of salt!"

—WEBB B. GARRISON

Take NULLO like a Vitamin

GOODBYE BODY ODORS and Bad Breath

It's so easy, so simple. Just swallow a tiny sugar-coated Nullo tablet once or twice a day. Then no matter how hot the day, how stuffy the room, what time of the month, you're as fresh as though you'd stepped right out of a shower.



Nullo is naturally effective because it works internally, safely. Don't sacrifice peace of mind, don't worry and wonder, don't be noticed for something unpleasant—it's all so unnecessary!

Yes! Head to foot protection all day long! There never has been anything like Nullo before. It's chlorophyll—Nature's Deodorant—specially processed and concentrated. The De Pree Co. Established 1906. Manufacturers of Nurse Brand Drugs and Wheatamin Vitamins.

SAFE AS A LETTUCE LEAF! Nullo is nature's chlorophyll. It's in the green vegetables you eat every day. Nullo does not stop normal healthy perspiration. Taken internally like a vitamin it safely and effectively deodorizes. It's easy to carry . . . easy to take!

30 day supply $1.25. Economical family size (100 tablets) $2.95

nullo® CHLOROPHYLL TABLETS

NEW POCKET SIZE 29¢

©1951

SHLB* Robs You of a Good Night's Sleep!

The Comfort Twins

ORTHO-FLEX and SI-LATEX

Will Keep You Sleep Happy!

Slumberon

INNERSPRING MATTRESS

That old "Sleep Thief" SHLB* is a dead dragon when he runs up against Slumberon's exclusive Comfort Twin combination.

ORTHO-FLEX . . .

Burton-Dixie's patented innerspring unit. Hundreds of "magic fingers" provide individual coil control to give you a more level sleeping surface . . . buoyant controlled body support.

SI-LATEX . . .

Burton-Dixie's miracle comfort cushion that makes Slumberon America's smoothest, most luxurious mattress. Si-Latex insulates all spring feel and assures longer mattress life.

BUY ON PROOF

Make the convincing "Seeing is Believing" test at your favorite store. Prove to yourself, before you buy, why Slumberon is the mattress that is just right for you.

KOT-N-TOP

Personalized Pillows

Patented inner lining for smoothness . . . Izolin processed for purity and long life. Choose the exact softness you personally prefer.

5 Degrees of Full Plume Softness

1 Extremely Soft
2 Soft
3 Medium Soft
4 Medium Firm
5 Firm

Sags, Humps, Lumps and Bumps

Burton-Dixie

CORPORATION • CHICAGO 8, ILLINOIS

MAKERS OF FINE SLEEPRODUCTS

ALSO MAKERS OF DOWN COMFORTERS, DELUXE BEDSPRINGS, BURTONIGHTERS, STUDIO COUCHES

The Bonzellos. They're acrobats—headliners. You'll like 'em. . . . Get in, Doc."

Slowly he climbed into the buggy, beside her. "Just what I need tonight," he said, "acrobats."

Zerelda Wing was a confused and unhappy young woman. Yesterday—the opening day of the trial—not being needed in court, and thus spared the dreary rigmarole of impaneling a jury, she had taken a long walk, alone, out past Mayne's Woods to the lakes. A day in the brisk air of early autumn should have cleared her mind of plaguing phantoms, but she had returned more troubled than ever. Doctor Tilbee again! Always Doctor Tilbee. He had behaved with such abominable rudeness that she could never forgive him. Never!

This morning, sitting where Chilton Corr had personally placed her, near the judge's desk, she recalled with painful clarity every detail of their accidental meeting two days ago. They had come face to face as she emerged from Chilton's office—and, feeling an incredible pleasure in seeing him again, she had stopped and held out her hand. If she lived to be a thousand she would never forget the humiliation of what happened next. Doctor Tilbee had deliberately ignored her hand.

"Why, Mrs. Iscariot!" he had exclaimed with brutal joviality. "Go right in—the city attorney's waiting. I didn't know, till I saw you canoodling down the street last night, that he's the honey boy. My congratulations" —lifting his hat in a mocking bow.

She had tried to say something, embarrassed, wanting to tell him the truth—that she was here to beg Chilton not to make her appear as a witness against him—but at this moment Chilton himself had walked out of his office.

"Hello, darling," he greeted her, "come in." Then he had glanced from her to Tilbee, sensing that something was wrong. "What's this?" he said truculently. "Tilbee, are you making yourself obnoxious again?"

"On the contrary," Doc had replied. "I was just wishing you both happiness." His gray eyes were cold as stones. "Two fine, honest young people like you certainly deserve each other." And he had turned and walked away.

Sitting here in the courtroom, thinking of it, her cheeks were hot with resentment, and she wished—as she had wished a hundred times in the past two days—that she had never met Tilbee or Chilton. Then she saw him come in, with the bailiff and Chief Faring. They stopped, just inside the door, as if waiting for someone, and Zerelda promptly looked the other way.

Doc stood watching the crowd fill up the back seats. Some of his friends were in the front rows: Jim Hong-Kee; Mittig, the cigarmaker; Miss Malino and her old father, the Italians who ran the fruit shop; Pat Patting, the Negro policeman, off duty for the day; Reverend Meed, to whom he had once given the proceeds of an evening's pitch, to help build a new church; Richard Ricks, secretary of the steam-pump company; Mr. Mickles, the threshing-machine magnate; Miss "Fluty" Caylock, a penniless spinster, whose father, half a century ago, had been the town's richest banker; Pete Zimos, the candy-store man. . . . Others. Some nodded encouragingly, and Clara Brink waved her lace handkerchief. Doc smiled.

Then he saw Zerelda—pointedly avoiding him—and his smile faded. He straightened up with a kind of arrogance, and glanced out at spectators' faces that were not friendly: hostile, many of them. No trial had aroused such a furor of town opinion since the Hulb kidnaping in '01.

"Where's your lawyer at?" The bailiff touched his elbow. "He's late—an' you can't keep the judge waitin'."

Doc looked at his watch. Godsmark was to have met him here ten minutes ago.

"Mr. Godsmark's little girl's got the mumps," Chief Faring said. "Mebbe he was detained."

"Don't make a dang bit of diff'ren— can't keep Judge Yarbaugh waitin'. The bailiff was a bald, fidgety little ma blew his nose frequently in a soiled ha chief. "You better git him here."

"He'll be here," said Chief Faring. to sit down, Doc?" His manner was th solicitous friend, though Doc was technical custody.

"No, thanks, Bill."

Another door opened. Doc turned, ing Godsmark—but instead, twelve s men came filing in and took their pla hind a railing. The jury!

These were the men who would jug fate. Twelve faces. Doc looked then shrewdly, as if sizing up a pitch auc eight modocks, two chumps, a cornhu and that doubtful dingo on the end, t with a face like a fox terrier.

Corr came in and crossed to Zerelda's to whisper to her with smiling intimac did not appear glad to see him, but D not observe that: he had turned away, to put her out of his thoughts. What be delaying Godsmark? He had othe ries too. Dunbar's last telegram, from kakee, reported that he had not locate land. Bad news. . . . And late last night had turned up at the boardinghouse state of panic after receiving a subpo appear as a witness for the prosecutio Enoch's dismay was no greater than h for he knew Enoch's fanaticism about the truth: under oath he might divulg awkward items. It would be up to Gods as a clever lawyer, to divert Enoch's cious honesty. But where was Godsm

> Another good way to tell a man's age is to ask him at what age women are in their prime. —ROBERT QUILLEN.

Then he saw Godsm clerk, a scrawny, necked woman in a bustling toward him heard her telling breathlessly that Godsmark and his daughter both had m Doc stared at her.

Chief Faring swung round. "Doc means you got no lawyer!"

The woman thrust a sheaf of paper Doc's hands. "Here's Mr. Godsmark's on the case, list of witnesses, so on a forth. It's just terrible," she added "but what can we do!"

"You better do somethin'—an' quick!" The bailiff blew his nose loud

Chief Faring's face was grave. "Do got to get you another lawyer."

"An' git him in a hurry, mister," the nagged. "You can't keep this court wa

Corr walked up. "What's the trouble

Chief Faring explained, and Corr li with no change of expression.

"Well"—he turned to Doc—"I'll b to get a lawyer for you."

"Thanks," Doc told him. "Just kee broomtail bailiff off and give me ten mi I'll find a lawyer. Where's the telepho

But he had overplayed his hand. end of twenty minutes, assisted by mark's female clerk—who was apparen the edge of a nervous breakdown—h called a dozen lawyers. Some were town, others too busy; three flatly refu touch the case. Billy Gray could off assistance, being still asleep, with the re off the hook; he had worked till the B went to press at three. His other ad Bert Beelom, was attending a Knig Pythias funeral.

"Judge wants you in his chambers." bailiff again.

As Doc went out he smiled at Godsm clerk and thanked her for her assistanc never," she told friends later, "met a courtly gentleman!" For several nigh dreamed about him.)

Doc followed the bailiff into the j "chambers": a small room replete w desk, a chair and a heroic-size brass dor. Corr was standing beside a gaunt, haired man at the desk. In his adve some life Doc had encountered magis of various sorts—but none, he decided, disagreeable than this one who sat glar him. Judge Yarbaugh had eyes like an snapping turtle and a sprinkling of da

M THE RUG-A-BOO!

KE BOYS WHO MAKE AIRPLANES.
MEANS LOTS OF NICE LITTER
GRIT TO GRIND INTO MOTHER'S EXPENSIVE RUG.

SCUTTLED!

Y A BISSELL CARPET SWEEPER!
WHISK! THE DIRT IS GONE.
O'S MY CHANCE FOR FOUL PLAY.

BISSELL® MAKES QUICK CLEAN-UPS
SY. "BISCO-MATIC"* BRUSH ACTION
VEEPS CLEAN WITH NO PRESSURE
THE HANDLE. CLEANS PERFECTLY
EVEN WITH HANDLE HELD LOW.

ON'T LET THE RUG-A-BOO
GET YOU!
ET A "BISCO-MATIC" BISSELL

Only $6.95 up
A little more in the West.

BISSELL SWEEPERS

issell Carpet Sweeper Company
Grand Rapids 2, Michigan

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Bissell's full spring controlled brush.

on the shoulders of his black suit. He suffered from indigestion and, for reasons best known to himself, always sat on an inflated rubber ring.

"No lawyer, eh?" he barked at Doc. "You realize you're holding up the procedure of this court?"

"I beg the court's pardon," Doc replied solemnly, "but mumps are—or is—an act of God."

The judge opened his mouth, then closed it again. "H'mph!"

"If your honor will permit"—Corr's voice was oily—"and as it is our responsibility to provide legal representation for the accused, I have taken the liberty to call in a promising young attorney, Frank P. Dibble."

Anyone could see that the judge did not think much of the promising young attorney. "Wasted enough time already." He scowled at Doc. "Dibble satisfactory to you?"

Doc bowed. "I'm at the mercy of the court."

Judge Yarbaugh gave him a second look, then snapped, "Where is Dibble?"

"He's waiting, your honor." Corr opened the door. "Mr. Dibble!"

A PLUMP, sleepy-looking young man in a baggy brown suit ambled in. Doc had him sized up as a modock before Corr finished introducing them—but there was nothing anybody could do.

"I'll give you till ten o'clock to familiarize yourself with the case." The judge stood up, one hand pressing his flat stomach. This was carnival time for his indigestion—an hour after breakfast. "That's all."

Dibble bowed, fussing with his cuff links. "Thank you, judge."

Outside, Doc handed him Godsmark's notes and the list of witnesses.

"Excuse me, I'll be right back," said Dibble. "I have to get a drink of water."

Doc watched him saunter away with a rolling knock-kneed gait. "Who is this human sofa pillow?" he asked Chief Faring.

The chief's Adam's apple bobbed apologetically. "It's kind of a bad break for you, Doc. Dibble's a lawyer, all right—but I dunno's he ever won a case. Most usually he does odd jobs for Corr."

"So that's it." Doc's jaw tightened.

"Around the city hall they call him 'Nemo' Dibble."

Doc was familiar with Winsor McKay's Little Nemo—the comic-supplement fable of a boy who lived his adventures in dreams.

"You can see why they call Dibble 'Nemo,'" the chief explained. "If he ain't dreamin', then what is he doin'? It don't seem like he's awake."

Doc shook his head. "Things were tough enough when I didn't have a lawyer. Now I've got one, I'm worse off than before!"

The trial was under way at last. For ten minutes, in his opening statement, Corr had been elaborating on the charges—"City of Lost River versus Thomas J. Tilbee; at least he says that's his name"—in a contemptuous, cocksure manner. (Just before the judge entered, Corr had boasted to the clerk of the court that he would "wrap this case up" in a hurry, as he had a committee meeting at four o'clock.)

Doc sat at the table only half listening to the eloquent voice accusing him of an index of crimes: kidnaping, interfering with the processes of law, threatening an officer, illegal use of firearms, malpractice, and so on. At the moment he was more concerned with the behavior of his lawyer. Nemo Dibble could not sit in a chair without appearing to lie down in it. His eyes were half closed and he was breathing somnolently through his mouth. Doc's elbow jabbed him; he sat up, startled.

"Have you studied those notes of Godsmark's?" Doc whispered. Nemo nodded. "All ready with your questions?" Nemo nodded again. Doc watched him rearrange himself comfortably. But at least he was awake.

"I will prove to you, gentlemen of the jury"—Corr's voice—"that the accused is no mere harmless peddler. This self-styled 'doctor' is known to be a dangerous charac-

SO NICE TO COME HOME TO

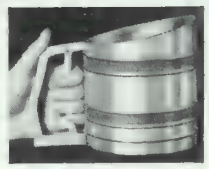
You come home to sleep in real comfort on Thomaston Sheets. Here are sheets and pillow cases you can depend on to stay white and soft and smooth through years of faithful service. Intimate pleasures like Thomaston Sheets give meaning to the expression—So Nice to Come Home To."

DIGNIFIED GEORGIAN

Thomaston Sheets

Ask for Thomaston Sheets at your favorite store — PAGE, TYPE 140 FIRESIDE, TYPE 128 • TAVERN, TYPE 140 • PILGRIM, TYPE 128 PEDIGREE, COMBED PERCALE—a quality for every purse and purpose.

DEPENDABLE THOMASTON Fabrics SINCE 1899



WRIGHT'S
CLEANS—WITH LOVING KINDNESS

America's Largest Selling Silver Cleaner

PROTECT YOUR STOVE TOP
ARISTO-MATS
INSIST ON THE GENUINE • ACCEPT NO SUBSTITUTES

Genuine "SIFT-CHINE" With Triple Screen

The Standard of Flour Sifter Perfection For More Than a Quarter of a Century

Insist upon a GENUINE "SIFT-CHINE" for guaranteed satisfaction

"SIFT-CHINE" is the truly sensational SIFT-ing maCHINE which foremost cooking authorities have used and so highly recommended for years. One hand holds and operates. "Just squeeze the handle"—stir as you sift. A "must" for better baking. No more scattered flour. No more lumpy cakes or biscuits. Super quality—designed and built for years of service. Highly polished finish with two encircling bands of yellow, red or green. TRIPLE screen, one operation sifts flour 3 times, $1.65. DOUBLE screen, sifts twice, $1.35. SINGLE screen, sifts once, $1.10. Prices postpaid if your dealer cannot furnish. Stamps accepted. MEETS-A-NEED MFG. CO., 2941 Utah Avenue, Seattle 4, Washington.

No Tack Marks with Smoothedge Carpet Installation

MAIL COUPON TODAY—Send for your Free copy of this colorful, interesting booklet. An invaluable aid to everyone interested in beautifying their home. Full-color illustrations show how the new SMOOTHEDGE tackless installation method makes possible the utmost loveliness of wall-to-wall carpet.

WITH SMOOTHEDGE WITH TACKS

The Roberts Co., Dept. BX
1536 North Indiana Street
Los Angeles 63, California

Gentlemen: Please send me your Free color book, "New Carpet Beauty."

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ Zone____ State_____

'DRY CLEAN' WINDOWS IN HALF THE TIME—

GLASS WAX

AND O-CEL-O SPONGES

—TWICE AS THRIFTY WHEN YOU USE 'EM BOTH!

"Dry clean" windows with "GLASS WAX" . . . let chemicals do the work. No water, no muss, no fuss. Apply with cellulose sponge. It's twice as easy, twice as thrifty. Sponge on, wipe clean, that's all. "GLASS WAX" cleans 30 kinds of dirt in 30 seconds!

29c • 59c • 98c

'GLASS WAX' is a trademark of Gold Seal Co., Bismarck, N. Dak. ©GSC.

ter—a Western bad man—who has sneaked into a decent community where he is unwelcome."

Doc, watching the faces of the jurymen, saw that they believed what Corr was saying; and suddenly he felt a cold anger spread into his arms and legs. Then he heard Zerelda's name called, and saw her make her way to the witness chair. As she took the oath she seemed nervous and very pale. Doc's heart was drumming.

With quiet deference Corr asked her to tell the court what she knew about the Theodore Bayliss kidnaping. Doc leaned forward. Zerelda appeared to balk at the word "kidnaping," and Corr suavely encouraged her to describe the incident in her own words. So low was her voice that they could scarcely hear her—and twice the judge interrupted, asking her to speak up. Her story was just what Doc had expected: the bare facts. She avoided his gaze—and when she had finished, Corr thanked her and turned to Dibble.

"Any questions?" It was obvious that he expected none.

Dibble sat up and cleared his throat self-consciously. Then he shook his head.

"Yes, you have a question!" Doc whispered. Dibble turned to him, confused.

"Very well," Corr was saying, "since the defense has no desire to interrogate this witness ——"

Under the table, unseen by the judge, Doc gripped Dibble's fat wrist. "You've got to ask this question!"

DIBBLE'S eyes were wide open now. Doc leaned close and whispered in his ear. Dibble pulled away. "I—I couldn't."

"You go through with this," Doc hissed, "or, so help me, I'll have you disbarred!"

Dibble hesitated, his pink tongue licking his lips. Then he scrambled up. "I would like to ask the witness"—he got control of his voice—"I would like to ask the witness if—if the city attorney has ever—uh—mentioned marriage to her!"

In the courtroom the quiet cracked like an egg; spectators and jurymen stirred in their seats. Doc saw a terrible embarrassment come over Zerelda's face—and in the same instant Corr shouted angrily, "Your honor, I object! That question is ——"

"Just a minute!" The judge shook his gavel at Nemo Dibble. "Are you hinting at collusion?"

Nemo flicked a glance at Corr, w glaring at him, shocked at his dis Then he looked down at Doc. Do were menacing. Nemo turned to the "I"— he swallowed—"I stand on m tion."

"Your honor," Corr cut in scathin object to that question as not only irr and immaterial, but beyond the pale o

"Objection sustained."

DOC scrutinized the faces of the jur though the judge had upheld Corr, t of collusion might quiver in their Then he saw Zerelda leaving the cou and a cold, empty feeling settled in hi ach. He was sorry he had done it to h Corr's tactics had made him so mad.

Tilting back in his chair, he exhaled to let his anger cool. It was the same fighter in the ring: you could win o keeping your head. He glanced at h yer's double-chinned profile and tried ure him out. Dibble owed allegiance t yet he was committed to make some effort to defend his client. Studyi round head, Doc decided that Dibble dishonest: he was merely intimidated a dominant politico, had the bee o Doc realized that he could never win quittal by threatening this reluctant There must be a smarter approach.

The next witness was Deputy Sher tick. While he was being sworn i nudged Dibble. "Sorry I got over about that question." He smiled disarm

Nemo gave him a sidelong glance skittish colt.

"I want you to know," Doc said, " every confidence in your ability."

Nemo nodded uncertainly.

Gattick had begun an involved acc the Marland incident wherein the a had "threatened" him with an ivory-h .38 and proceeded to shoot the sp playing cards.

Doc leaned closer, confidentially. any kin to the Hon. Artemus A. Di Nemo shook his head. "That's odd, Doc, "you're a dead ringer for him Hon. Artemus—now deceased—was the greatest trial lawyers in the countr went on, inventing an incident as he h vented the name. "I'll never forget h got his start. He was kind of tied in wi district attorney—owed him a good de

ten commandments for kitchen safety

At mother-daughter cooking sessions, safety lessons are as important as perfect biscuits.

1. Wear aprons that do not have ties and sashes to catch on equipment.
2. Keep big pot holders near the range.
3. Be careful where you store knives—a special holder is good. Stick a cork in that ice pick.
4. Hang an approved fire extinguisher where you can grab it.
5. Store matches in a noninflammable container.
6. Use a step-stool for high reaching not the edge of a chair.
7. Cut away from your own han when you slice or peel foods.
8. Turn handles of cooking pans awa from the edge of the range.
9. Lift the far side of the lid on t bubbling kettle so the steam go away from you.
10. Clean up broken glass with a dam paper and wrap up the splinters b fore dropping in the rubbish baske

CHEN Smells from cooking fish, cab-e, cauliflower, onions, vanish in seconds!

THROOM No more embarrassing odors. tant freshness with one Good-aire spray.

ill unpleasant odors in seconds with instant-action

Good-aire*

ay indoor odors away with Good-aire—quickly, so easily! A touch of thumb re-ses a fine spray which kills unpleasant ells in seconds. No waiting. Can't spill—n't stain. Ideal for kitchens, bathrooms, ng rooms, closets. Keep your whole home olesome with instant-acting Good-aire. t Good-aire today at your drug, grocery, dware or department store.

MEMBER: "Good-aire is Good Etiquette"

ge nomy $1.89

gular 98¢

ghtly higher Canada

Special Offer to Good-aire Users!

Famous 8-inch KLEENCUT UTILITY SHEARS ($1.29 Value) FOR ONLY 50¢ and special wrap-around label from a Good-aire container.

Offer limited by coupon conditions

BRIDGEPORT BRASS CO., Bridgeport 2, Conn.

World's Leading Producer of Aer•a•sol Products

*Trade Mark

one day Artemus Dibble got a chance to fight a case on his own. Well, sir, he rared back, defied the district attorney, won the case—and walked out of the courtroom a success! That's the way careers are made in the legal profession."

"Very interesting," murmured Nemo, straightening up in his chair.

When Gattick had finished his testimony Corr asked sarcastically if the defense had any questions. Nemo gave Doc that sidelong nervous look. Doc shook his head. Nemo rose. "No questions." Then he sat down, amazed at his own daring.

Before Corr dismissed Gattick he turned to the jury. "Gentlemen, you have heard from the witness—a law officer of our own county—how Tilbee threatened his life, brandishing a six-shooter as if he were swaggering about some frontier mining camp! Gentlemen, is this the lawless West? Can we permit our peace officers to be intimidated by a desperado? I say to you, no!"

"Get on with the evidence," Judge Yarbaugh warned him.

Doc leaned toward Dibble encouragingly. "Corr plays dirty pool—but you can cut rings around him when you get your steam up." He thought he observed a responsive gleam in Dibble's eye.

THE door opened and the bailiff entered escorting a red-faced, heavy-set man. Doc started. The hotelkeeper with whom he had played poker in Jackson! This was bad. On the stand the man described the poker game, which had been enlivened by some peculiar goings on. Though a poor loser, he was a good witness, and with Corr's prompting attested to Tilbee's remarkable talent for dealing himself nothing but kings and aces.

Doc seized a pencil and scribbled a line on the memorandum pad. Shoving it toward Dibble, he whispered, "Ask him this."

Corr, pleased with the damaging effect of the hotelman's story, turned to them arrogantly. "Any questions this time?"

Nemo Dibble got to his feet. "I would like to ask the witness if it is true that his wife left him because he suffers from hallucinations."

"I object!" protested Corr.

"Objection sustained."

Doc had scribbled another note and slipped it to Dibble.

"Your honor"—Dibble was gaining self-confidence—"my next question is important to every law-abiding citizen in Michigan. How does it happen that the witness serves liquor at all hours in his hotel—when he has no bar license?"

"Object!" Corr shouted. "Irrelevant and immaterial!"

Judge Yarbaugh rubbed his nose. "The witness is not on trial," he said. "Objection sustained."

Corr gave Dibble a look of triumph. There was something else in the look, too, as if he would have plenty to say to his protégé when he got him alone. Dibble sat down, crestfallen.

"Never mind," Doc reassured him, "it gave the jury something to think about. In their own minds they'll discount a bootlegger with hallucinations!"

But to himself he admitted that it was not going well: the faces of the jurymen reflected all too plainly that Corr was building a strong case against him. And even though Dibble had taken the bait and asserted himself, still he was unequipped to oppose such a skilled prosecutor.

With ebbing spirit Doc heard Corr dismiss the witness and thank him for "exposing this gambler." He thought of Zerelda—and an odd fancy crossed his mind. Always he had derided deathbed penitence, yet he was thinking now that if he had it to do over again he would have liked to make Zerelda a promise never to play another hand of poker so long as he lived. But it was too late. In all probability he would not see her again.

"Gentlemen of the jury"—Corr's voice—"we have shown that behind the slick exterior of this ——"

"Your honor"—Dibble was on his feet—"the city attorney is attempting to prejudice the jury unfairly."

SPONGE IT ON— WIPE IT CLEAN!

O-CEL-O

GENUINE CELLULOSE

SPONGES

AND 'GLASS WAX'

—TWICE AS EASY WHEN YOU USE 'EM BOTH!

You can't beat an O-CEL-O sponge for the easiest window-cleaning ever. Millions of big and little pores in this cellulose sponge pitch in and work whenever there's any cleaning going on. Use O-CEL-O to easy-clean just about everything you own.

5 delicate colors—many handy sizes

AT STORES EVERYWHERE FOR AS LITTLE AS 19c

O-CEL-O is the registered Trade Mark of O-CEL-O Inc., Buffalo, N. Y. © 1951

The Secret of Lovelier Hair for More Than a Century

Leading hair stylists, experts in loveliness, stake their reputations on perfection.

They find one shampoo outstanding for immaculately clean, soft, lustrous, hair, just right in "feel" to take and hold its wave—Conti Castile Shampoo.

Conti has been the preferred shampoo for generations, and today is the choice of millions of women. First made by dissolving famous Conti Castile Soap, imported since 1836, it now comes to you ready prepared, containing pure imported olive oil to give your hair added loveliness.

Conti does wonders for every type of hair. Pure, mild and safe for children and all the family. It contains no harsh chemicals, no synthetic detergents, no mysterious ingredients.

Use Conti Castile Shampoo regularly to make your hair lovelier. Its natural oils do a complete job—no conditioners or after rinses needed.

Photograph by HORST
Hair Styled by Bergdorf Goodman Beauty Salon

Conti Shampoo

PURE CASTILE

Now also available in Canada

BEFORE YOU GET AN ATOMIZER

You should know . . .

There is an exactly right type of DeVilbiss Atomizer for each solution your physician may prescribe.

When you get a DeVilbiss Atomizer you can be certain that you are getting exactly the right one for your needs. For, as each new DeVilbiss Atomizer is perfected, your pharmacist is kept informed as to just what type of solution may be used in it.

Follow your physician's and your pharmacist's advice when purchasing an atomizer. They are not prescribed for convenience, but in order to reach more of the affected nose and throat areas.

Always specify DeVilbiss—the oldest and most famous name in Atomizers. The DeVilbiss Co., Toledo 1, Ohio, and Windsor, Ontario.

DeVILBISS

The First in Atomizers, Nebulizers and Vaporizers

"Confine your remarks to the evidence," Judge Yarbaugh admonished Corr.

Doc saw Enoch's bulk fill the doorway behind the little bailiff, and he shuddered inwardly.

Dibble leaned over. "I don't suppose we need worry about this colored man? He's your friend."

"He's my friend," said Doc wryly, "but he's more closely affiliated with the Lord."

After taking the oath, Enoch sat down gingerly in the witness chair and rolled a worried glance at Doc.

Corr walked up, his manner patronizing. "All I want from you is the truth. If you don't tell the truth you'll be in trouble. Do you understand?"

Enoch nodded twice. "Yes, sir."

"Very well." Corr came a step closer. "How long have you known the accused?"

"The who?"

"The accused!" snapped Corr. "This man Tilbee!"

ZERELDA paused in front of the courthouse. For three quarters of an hour—since she left the trial—she had been walking around, trying to think things out, and now she found herself in front of the courthouse again. She had read, in a new detective story by Anna Katharine Green, that a murderer always returns to the scene of his crime. Perhaps that was why she had come back. Absurd. Yet this sense of guilt persisted. More than ever, she blamed herself: if she had minded her own affairs in the first place, this would never have happened to him.

When she rushed out of the courtroom she had been shocked and embarrassed by his lawyer's question, linking her and Chilton. But, going over it in her mind, she realized that a man on trial, faced with prison, must defend himself any way he could. She was no longer angry at him: her resentment, for some reason, kept centering on Chilton. To think, only a week ago she had considered marrying him!

Without quite knowing why she did it, Zerelda turned and re-entered the building and hurried along the corridor to Judge Yarbaugh's court. A policeman at the door let her in and found a seat for her in the last row.

Chilton Corr was pacing up and down in front of Enoch. "You know that Tilbee is a liar, don't you?"

"I object!" Dibble leaped to his feet. "Leading question!"

"Objection sustained."

"Your honor"—Corr swung round indignantly—"I intend to prove that Tilbee's entire existence is based on a fabric of lies!"

"Phrase your question properly," growled the judge.

Corr faced Enoch. "Have you ever known this charlatan to tell the truth?"

"You mean the doctor?" said Enoch.

"Doctor!" Corr jeered. "How do you know he's a doctor?"

"Well ——"

"Can you state categorically that he is a doctor? Does he possess a diploma from a medical school?"

Enoch was taken aback. "All's I know is, everybody calls him 'doctor.'"

"Just another attribute of his swindler's profession!" Corr pointed a finger at Enoch. "Tell the jury what other lies you've heard Tilbee ——"

"Object!"

"I will restate the question," said Corr. "How many times a day do you hear Tilbee lie—on one subject or another?"

Enoch shifted uncomfortably in his chair. "I couldn't exac'ly say ——"

"Ah, you couldn't exactly say!" Corr pounced on it. "Then you mean he lies so often you can't keep count?"

"Object!" protested Dibble.

"I'll put it this way," said Corr. "In your opinion, is Tilbee a liar?"

Enoch looked pained. "I wouldn't say the doctor is a liar, no sir. But ——"

"But what? Go on."

"Well—sometimes he kind of approximates."

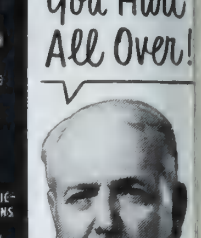
"You mean he falsifies—distorts ——"



"No, sir, the doctor he just kind of approximates."

When Your

FEET HURT

You Hurt All Over!

GET Dr. Scholl's FOR

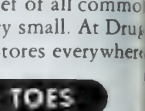
FAST RELIEF



Don't suffer from your feet. Dr. Wm. M. Scholl, the noted authority on the feet, has formulated and designed over 100 Remedies, Appliances and Arch Supports for the relief of all common foot troubles. Their cost is very small. At Drug, Shoe, Department and 5-10¢ Stores everywhere.

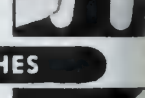
CORNS—SORE TOES

Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads quickly relieve and gently remove corns; stop painful shoe friction; soothe, cushion, protect the sensitive spot. Help prevent corns, sore toes, blisters. Also sizes for callouses and bunions.

PAIN HERE?

Dr. Scholl's LuPAD, a soft featherweight cushion; loops over forepart of foot; relieves pains, cramps, callouses, burning, tenderness at ball of foot. Flesh color, washable.

WEAK ARCHES



Dr. Scholl's Foot-Eazer and exercise relieve tired, aching feet, foot and leg pains, when due to weak or fallen arches. Light, flexible. Adjustable as condition improves.

HOT, TIRED FEET

Dr. Scholl's Foot Balm quickly relieves, refreshes feverish, tender, sensitive, tired feet, due to exertion or fatigue. Puts you right back on your feet—comforted, rested, refreshed. Economical!

TENDER FEET

Dr. Scholl's Foot Powder relieves tender, hot, tired, chafed, sensitive feet. Soothes minor skin irritations; eases new or tight shoes; helps prevent Athlete's Foot. Cultivate this fine foot health habit.

SEVERE BUNIONS

Dr. Scholl's Bunion Reducer, of soft rubber, relieves pain from shoe pressure, hides the bulge, helps preserve shape of shoe. For wear over the stocking, ask for Dr. Scholl's Leather Bunion Protector.

ATHLETE'S FOOT

Dr. Scholl's Solvex quickly relieves itching feet and toes; kills fungi of infection it contacts; helps rapid healing of red, raw, cracked, peeling skin of Athlete's Foot. Liquid, Powder or Ointment.

RELIEF—PROTECTION

Dr. Scholl's Kurotex, soft, cushioning, protective foot plaster, relieves shoe friction and pressure on corns, callouses, bunions and tender spots on feet and toes. Easy to cut to any size, shape and apply.

Dr Scholl's

FOOT COMFORT® REMEDIES, APPLIANCES
ARCH SUPPORTS AND SHOES

'Explain what you mean by 'approxi-
es.'"
Enoch squirmed. "Well—it's like somein' ain't quite is and it ain't quite ain't."
Laughter rattled across the courtroom.
r turned quickly, annoyed. "Gentlemen
he jury, the witness has proved my point.
w, one final question." He turned to och threateningly. "Tilbee has been heard ay that Tad Bayliss, the boy he kidnaped, is cousin. He has been heard to call him usin Tad.' Tell the court—is that boy bee's cousin?"
Enoch hesitated, swaying back and forth he chair. He looked appealingly toward c, but Doc was staring out the window.
"The truth," Corr bullied.
sweat glistened on the black brow.
'ell ——"
"Remember you're under oath! Is that his cousin?"
Enoch shook himself. "No, sir."
"The boy is not his cousin?"
"No, sir."
"That's all!" Corr smiled elatedly. "Your ness, Mr. Dibble."
Doc shook his head at Nemo. "No quesns," said Nemo.
"Witness excused."
Enoch left the chair, bewildered. He rted out—then paused and came toward
c.
"This way out," called the bailiff.
Enoch did not hear him. In front of Doc's le he halted, his face heavy with remorse.
Doctor," he mumbled, "I'm sorry."
Doc smiled. "It's all right, Enoch," he said.
ou couldn't help it."
Enoch's eyes filled with tears. He wheeled d shuffled dejectedly toward the door.
"Gentlemen of the y," Corr began, "you
ve heard four witnesses
ablish the accused's aracter. Or shall I say,
k of character."
The judge grumpily
led recess for lunch.
red by the bell, Doc was nking. But he knew that he was not saved.
ough damage had been done—and more uld be done this afternoon. . . .
"We'll go over to the boardinghouse,
c," Chief Faring was at his elbow. "Clara's
ed a little lunch."
Doc stood up. He was in the chief's cus-dy, and lunch at Clara's seemed a pleasant angement—if anything could be pleasant such a time. Going out, he observed Corr iting for Nemo Dibble—as a hawk might it for a robin.
"Mr. Dibble," Doc said, "I'd like you to me with us."

GRATEFULLY Dibble turned and scurried er them. In the street outside they climbed o the open patrol wagon, drawn by two ite horses, and when they drove away a few ople in the crowd called to Doc, wishing n good luck. But their voices were sub-ed, as if he had already been found guilty.
Zerelda stood watching from the court-use steps. In the past twenty minutes she d seen enough to realize that the trial was ing disastrously for him, and that some-ng must be done. She did not know the itor of the Banner, but she had a feeling at he could help. Down the street was e hack office, in the forepart of a livery able. She stepped into a battered, strongelling hack and asked the driver to take r to Mr. Gray's house.
A handsome dark-eyed woman opened the or, and Zerelda had a glimpse of a sunny om with New England furniture. Three oston bull terriers capered around, snuffling.
"Could I see Mr. Gray?" Zerelda said.
t's—it's urgent."
"He's just having his breakfast—the paper nt to press so late." Mrs. Gray had a endly Eastern voice. "Could you tell me at it's about?"
"It's about Doctor Tilbee."
"Oh—yes." The dark, intelligent eyes iled. "Won't you come in?"

Lunch at Clara Brink's boardinghouse was t a gay affair. Clara—who prided herself on "setting a fine table"—had served Doc's favorite delicacy, fricasseed chicken with dumplings, but neither he nor his nervous lawyer nor the chief of police appeared to have much appetite.

"Doc"—the hospitable blonde fluttered around him, as always concerned for his welfare—"you're just pickin' at your food."

"The condemned ate a hearty meal." Doc smiled grimly.

"Now don't you say that," Clara protested. "It's not like you to be so down in the mouth. You haven't lost this verdict yet."

"No, sir," agreed Chief Faring, "not by a jugful!"

"JUGFUL," Clara exclaimed. "That reminds me!" She hurried out of the dining room and returned with a bottle and three glasses. "I put this on the ice—I know the chief likes to wet his whistle." Doc saw that it was a bottle of his own Wonder Tonic.

"My favorite painkiller," the chief declared. "Clara, you're all wool an' a yard wide."

"You needn't mention my beam!"

The chief cackled, lifting his glass. "By jinks, when this stuff's ice-cold it's better'n champagne wine!"

"Mr. Dibble?"

"No, thank you," Nemo demurred, "I never touch intoxicants."

"Why, son, this here won't hurt you," the chief said. "It's medicine. Show him the label, Clara. Nothing but a tonic—good for young and old."

"Well"—Nemo held out his glass timidly—"just a drop."

"Doc?"

"Cup of tea, please, Clara," Doc said.

"Tea," sniffed Clara, "at a time like this. Well, I never!"

The chief downed his tonic at a gulp and refilled the glass.

Nemo took a cautious sip. "This isn't bad at all."

Doc pushed back his plate. "Let's see our list of witnesses." Nemo gave him the list, and he read it gravely. "Got my doubts if these'll cut any ice."

As the case stood, Corr had not definitely proved kidnaping. He had touched on it; that was all he could do, lacking conclusive evidence. But he had contrived to establish Doc as a lawbreaker, gambler and menace to the community—so that when it came to his final spiel to the jury, they would believe what he told them. Up to now Doc had more or less taken the trial in stride—because he knew something that they didn't know. He was betting all his chips on Edan Dunbar. At any minute a telegram from Illinois would settle the Tad Bayliss case, once and for all.

Clara came in with the tea. "Enoch's back."

Enoch appeared in the pantry doorway, and Doc sat up eagerly. "This time you've got it, Enoch!"

"The telegram?" Enoch shook his head. "No, doctor."

"What? Are they sure?"

"Nothin' came in."

Slowly Doc leaned back in his chair. Dunbar must have failed. Well—that was the end of that. . . . A bitter smile came into his eyes. He remembered an old chromo, The Gambler's Finish, that hung in his grandmother's house in Virginia City: a wild-eyed destitute man in a garret, appealing to two policemen about to arrest him.

My luck's run out, Doc was thinking. Bound to happen sometime, but you never expect it to happen to you. The Gambler's Finish!

"Honey, you're not eatin' a thing," Clara's perfumed hand rested on his shoulder. "Let me get you a nice piece of apple pie. I made it for you myself."

"I'm doing fine, Clara." He patted her hand. "Thanks."

This was the unluckiest part of the jinx—being in love with the wrong woman. He knew that he would never see Zerelda Wing again.

"Another drop of that delicious tonic, if you please," said Nemo Dibble.

Depend on the rabbit's foot if you will, but remember it didn't work for the rabbit!
—R. E. SHAY.

X serves you just one-at-a-time

Pure...so lint-free. Only finest ingredients go into Kleenex . . . from pulp to package. Pure cellulose fibers, with absolutely no ground wood. That's why you won't find weak spots or hard particles in this tissue. And test after test proves Kleenex freer from lint. Won't aggravate sore noses, during colds.

Ends waste...

...saves you money

The Secret of Lovelier Hair for More Than a Century

Leading hair stylists, experts in loveliness, stake their reputations on perfection.

They find one shampoo outstanding for immaculately clean, soft, lustrous, hair, just right in "feel" to take and hold its wave—Conti Castile Shampoo.

Conti has been the preferred shampoo for generations, and today is the choice of millions of women. First made by dissolving famous Conti Castile Soap, imported since 1836, it now comes to you ready prepared, containing pure imported olive oil to give your hair added loveliness.

Conti does wonders for every type of hair. Pure, mild and safe for children and all the family. It contains no harsh chemicals, no synthetic detergents, no mysterious ingredients.

Use Conti Castile Shampoo regularly to make your hair lovelier. Its natural oils do a complete job—no conditioners or after rinses needed.

Photograph by Horst
Hair Styled by Bergdorf Goodman Beauty Salon

Conti Shampoo

PURE CASTILE

Now also available in Canada

BEFORE YOU GET AN ATOMIZER

You should know . . .

There is an exactly right type of DeVilbiss Atomizer for each solution your physician may prescribe.

When you get a DeVilbiss Atomizer you can be certain that you are getting exactly the right one for your needs. For, as each new DeVilbiss Atomizer is perfected, your pharmacist is kept informed as to just what type of solution may be used in it.

Follow your physician's and your pharmacist's advice when purchasing an atomizer. They are not prescribed for convenience, but in order to reach more of the affected nose and throat areas.

Always specify DeVilbiss—the oldest and most famous name in Atomizers. The DeVilbiss Co., Toledo 1, Ohio, and Windsor, Ontario.

DeVILBISS

The First in Atomizers, Nebulizers and Vaporizers

Back in court, Doc sat alone at the table, dejectedly watching the jury file in. For the first time in his life he felt no incentive to go on fighting. . . . Chief Faring had brought him back in the patrol wagon; Clara was bringing Dibble in her rig. He wondered what could be keeping them. Then Faring came over.

"Doc"—the chief's turkey-wing mustaches twitched—"you ought to see your lawyer!"

"What's wrong now?" Doc sat up.

"That tonic of yours done what Nature couldn't. Made a man of him!" The chief chuckled silently. "I never believed what it says on the label—'puts life into you'—but I believe it now. It sure put life into Nemo, all right! He's illuminated like Paine's Fireworks! Minute ago, outside in front of the reporters, he walked up to Corr and bawled him out for bullyragging witnesses!"

Nemo swaggered in. Gone was his timid, apologetic manner; he waved the bailiff aside and sat down at the table.

"Doctor, that Hon. Artemus Dibble you told about this morning will always be an example to me in my legal career." His eyes glowed like carriage lamps. "I'll get you a verdict of acquittal or burn down the courthouse!" He leaned closer, redolent of Wonder Tonic. "I just found out—Corr's so overconfident he's not bothering to call his last two witnesses. It's my turn now."

"There's only one small beetle in the butter," Doc told him. "We've got no plan of defense."

"Just watch my smoke!"

The judge seated himself and the bailiff whined his "oyez" mumbo-jumbo. Nemo bounded out in front and called the first witness for the defense: Major Gringfobb.

Major Gringfobb entered with a spry step, took the oath and sat down. He was a spruce little man, a G.A.R. veteran with a pink complexion, silver hair and a chin whisker that waggled incessantly as if he were chewing something. His voice had the harp tonelessness of the very deaf, but he knew the questions that Dibble was going to ask him.

"How long have you been acquainted with ——" That was as far as Nemo got. Major Gringfobb was off.

He talked very fast, stating that he had known Doctor Tilbee for more than a decade; knew him to be a man of unimpeachable integrity; a comrade in arms, though they had fought in different wars; a benefactor of humanity. His meeting with Doctor Tilbee was an event he considered second in importance only to Lee's surrender at Appomattox.

TWICE Nemo sought to inject a question, but nothing could stop Major Gringfobb. Since he had been taking Wonder Tonic he had never known a sick day. To Wonder Tonic he attributed his vim and virility. He was seventy-three, he said—happily married to his second wife, and the proud father of a four-year-old son.

Doc felt relieved when the major paused for breath. He was too good a witness: the jurymen showed signs of amusement and there were snickers among the crowd. Doc signaled to Nemo and Nemo hastily turned to the city attorney.

"Any questions?"

"Nothing," said Corr contemptuously.

The major, who could not hear what they were saying, started off again: "Doc Tilbee was a man who ——"

"That's all," Nemo shouted. "Witness excused!" He waved his arms.

Nemo swooped back to the table. "Now, I'll call Bert Beelom ——"

"Hold your hosses." Doc looked worried. "We're in trouble. Our whole string of witnesses'll have as much effect on that jury as a belch in a balloon. If we could pull a surprise ——"

There was a stir among the spectators, and a sound of hurrying footsteps. Doc turned. Down the aisle came Billy Gray and Zerelda. But Doc saw only Zerelda. They came straight toward him, and he stood up, his heart beating fast. Billy Gray spoke in an undertone to Nemo.

Nemo leaped to his feet. "May I beg the court's indulgence for one minute? Extreme urgency."

"DOC," Gray whispered, "Mrs. Wing has volunteered to do a very gracious thing. She knows the whole story about Tad Bayliss—and she's willing to go on the stand and testify in your behalf!"

Doc stood looking at her. In all his life there had never been a moment like this.

"Nobody thinks you've got a chance—unless something extraordinary happens." Gray had a newspaperman's sense of drama. "Well—Mrs. Wing's that extraordinary something."

Doc was looking straight into her eyes. "She certainly is," he said.

"Here comes Corr." Gray nudged Dibble. "Tell the judge that you're puttin' Mrs. Wing on—at her own request—as a witness for the defense!" he told the attorney.

Among the jurymen and spectators there was a craning of necks as Corr went up to the little group. "Did you wish to speak to me, Zerelda?"

"No," Zerelda answered.

Dibble was addressing the judge: "Your honor, I request ——"

"Hold it," Doc cut in. Billy Gray seized his arm. "I can't let her do it," Doc said.

"What's happening here?" Corr demanded suspiciously. "Can't let her do what?"

Nemo shook a finger at him. "Mr. City Attorney—you run your department; we'll run ours."

The judge's gavel rapped several times. Corr's angry glance fastened on Zerelda. "Do you know what you're doing?"

Her blue eyes were defiant. "Yes, Chilton, I do."

This was the end for them—and both knew it. Corr turned and walked away.

Doc stood looking at Zerelda as if there were no one else in the room. "Someday I'll tell you how much this means to me," he said. "But I can't let you do it."

"I want to," she pleaded.

"You're a thoroughbred"—Doc smiled gently—"but I couldn't let you run in this mud."

Billy Gray started to speak.

"Billy," Doc said to him, "you and I understand each other. This is no kind of a mess for her to be dragged into." He took Zerelda's hand in both of his. "Just coming here—it's like you'd brought me a birthday cake in jail, with a file and a six-shooter in it." He straightened up. "I'm going to blast my way out!"

"Look!" exclaimed Nemo Dibble.

Doc turned. Enoch came sprinting down the aisle, waving a telegram.

"Your honor"—Corr's angry voice—"I protest against this irregularity!"

"The defense will proceed with their next witness," ordered the judge.

Doc was tearing open the telegram. He seized Zerelda's hand again. "Edan found him! Found Old Man Elkland!" Then, to Enoch: "This was sent yesterday morning. He's on the train now!" His excitement had infected the group around him. Judge Yarbaugh's gavel pounded. "You two," Doc whispered to Zerelda and Gray, "get down

(Continued on Page 190)

PAPER PATH TO THE MOON

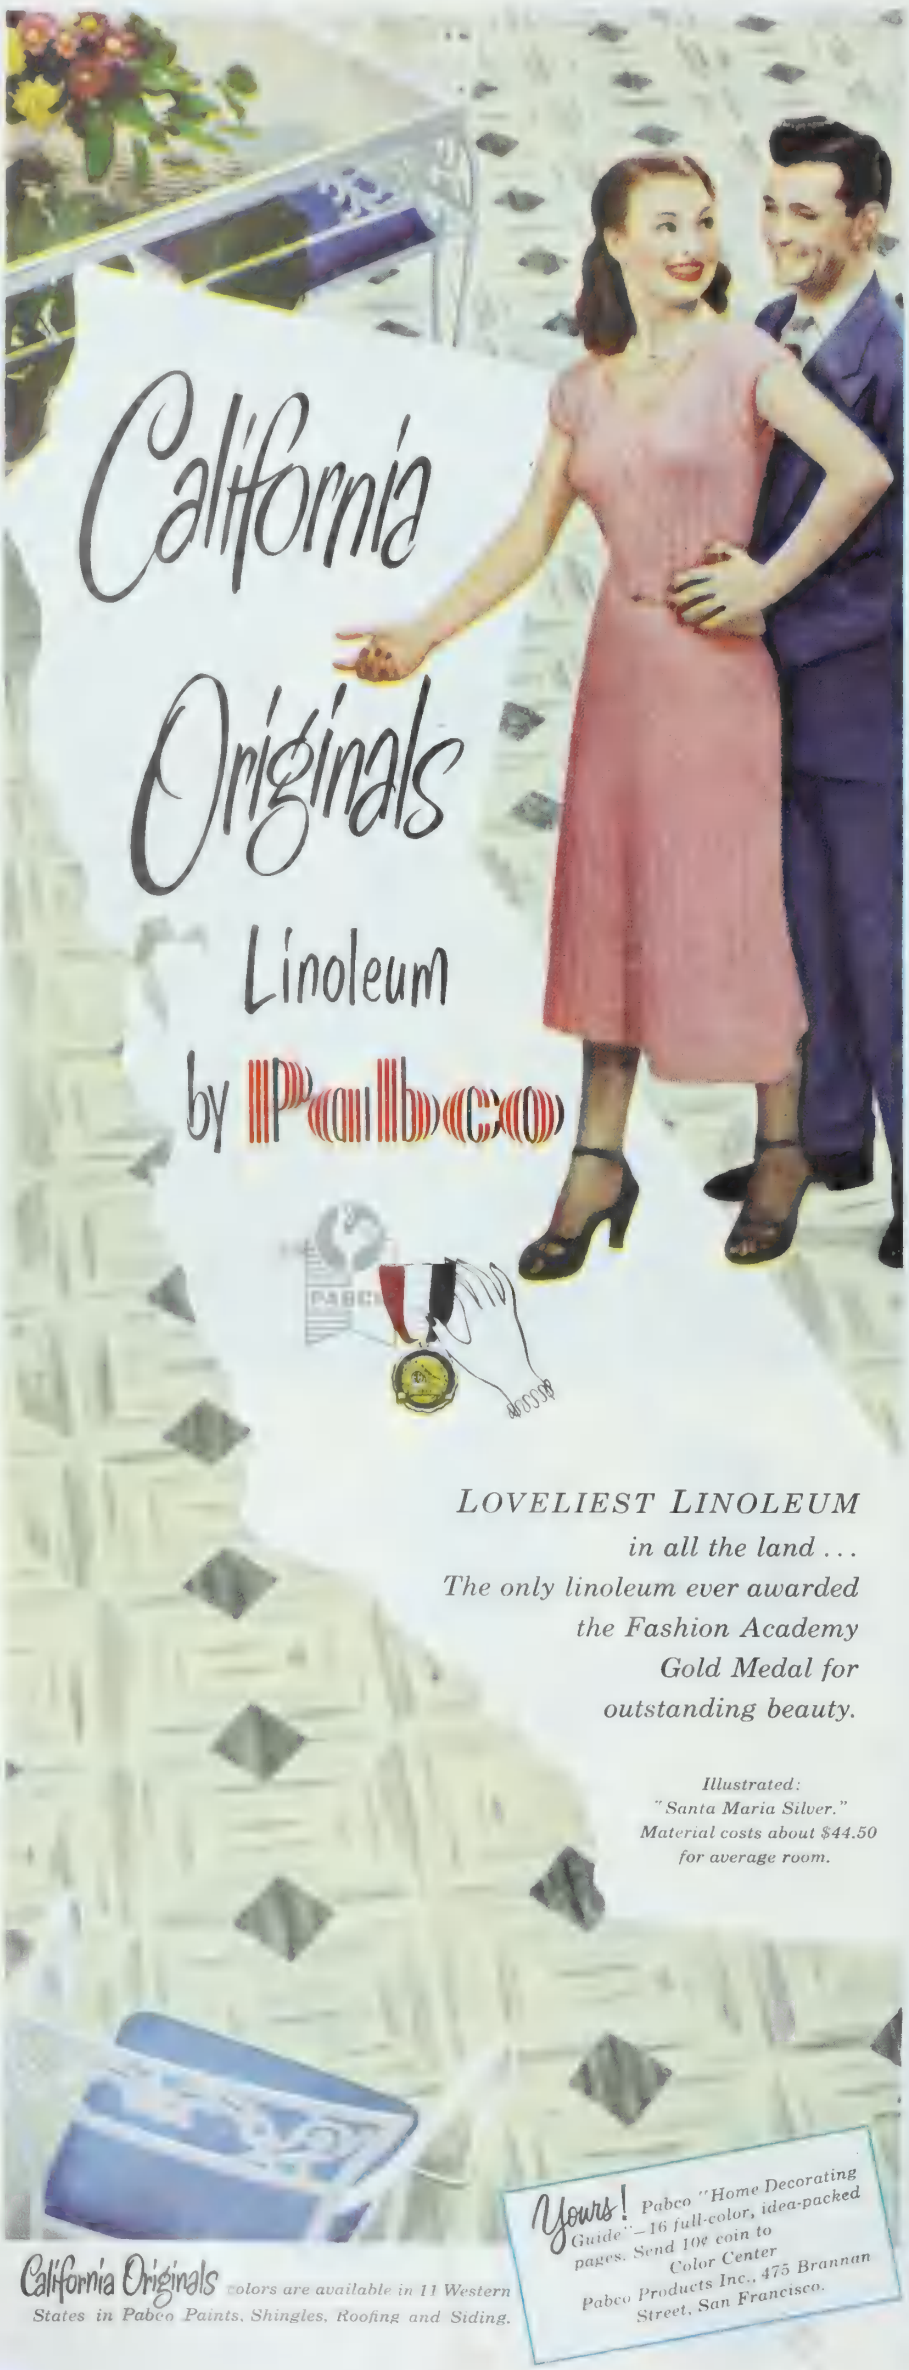
Which would be easier to do—fold a piece of paper in half fifty times or reach the moon? It's not a riddle; accomplishing either is equally possible. Because, if you were to manage the fifty-fold business, your paper would be so thick that it would reach beyond the moon! Sounds impossible? Here's the way it would work out: just three folds will make the paper eight times its original thickness and seven folds will make it 128 times as thick as it was in the first place. Beyond that the figures are as fantastic as those of our national budget. Just thirty folds would result in a diameter just about that of the earth, and the forty-fourth would reach the moon. Theoretically the stunt is possible—if a sheet of paper the size of the United States were obtainable.

See how KLEENEX serves you just one-at-a-time

Perfect balance. Of course you want a soft tissue—a strong tissue. Kleenex® has the "just right" combination of softness and brawn. (Thanks to a special process.) And each Kleenex tissue is perfectly uniform: always the same top-flight quality you know you can depend on for every use—from colds to makeup removal.

Pure . . . so lint-free. Only finest ingredients go into Kleenex . . . from pulp to package. Pure cellulose fibers, with absolutely no ground wood. That's why you won't find weak spots or hard particles in this tissue. And test after test proves Kleenex freer from lint. Won't aggravate sore noses, during colds.

Saves as it serves. No other tissue has the handy Serv-a-Tissue box. With Kleenex you pull one double tissue at a time (not a handful), and the next pops up. Ends waste—saves trouble, saves money. So don't take just "tissues." Insist on wonderfully soft, strong Kleenex—your best buy in tissues.



Ends waste . . .

. . . saves you money

Get several boxes when you buy—you'll always have a good supply

® REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

(Continued from Page 188)

to the station, meet Edan Dunbar on the three-forty from Chicago—that's an hour from now. I can't explain—just do it, will you? Bring him here."

"But"—Zerelda's eyes were troubled—"what will happen to you in the next hour?"

"Plenty," said Doc. "I'm taking the stand myself!"

"You can't do that," Nemo chattered. "If Corr gets you on the stand he'll cut you to pieces!"

"Mr. Dibble," Doc told him, "your surprise witness is me. Get going."

Zerelda had seen that belligerent thrust of his jaw before. She smiled swiftly. "Good luck!"

"You've given it to me," he answered. She turned and followed Billy Gray up the aisle.

The judge's gavel was pounding again. "I warn the defense ——"

As they walked out of the courthouse Billy Gray squinted at Zerelda. "You know, there's something magnificent about that scoundrel."

"But," said Zerelda, "he isn't a scoundrel."

Billy grinned. "Purely a figure of speech."

Doc had told his story. In a simple, forthright manner he had related the details of meeting Tad Bayliss at the abandoned farmhouse and taking him along in the Contraption. That was all there was to it.

When he had finished, Nemo Dibble took a deep breath. He could do no more with it. Reluctantly he turned to the city attorney. "Any questions?"

Corr rose with ominous coolness. "There are several questions I am interested to know if the accused can answer."

Nemo sat down and peeked at his watch. The Chicago train was not due for twenty-five minutes—and in twenty-five minutes Corr could tear Doctor Tilbee apart, limb by limb.

CORR turned his back on the witness chair and faced the jury. "Gentlemen, you have listened to the ingenious story the accused has just told." His voice was heavy with sarcasm. "That story might carry some weight if there were a word of truth in it!" He stalked across to the witness chair.

Doc saw the fury in his eyes. The only chance I've got, he thought, is to get him madder. Keep jabbing him.

"Here is a list of statements you have made"—Corr flourished a sheet of paper. "Not one of them true! Not one! Just now you yourself referred to the boy Tad Bayliss as 'Cousin Tad.'"

"That's right."

"Are you telling this court that he is your cousin?"

"In the Shakespearean sense."

"'In the Shakespearean sense,'" j Corr. "What do you mean by that?"

"If some people," Doc said, "spent time reading Shakespeare, instead of ticing political speeches in front of a ror ——"

"Your honor, I protest."

"Answer the question," Judge Yarb warned Doc.

"Begging the court's pardon," said "I was only pointing out that reading Sh speare is kind of a humanizing educat

"Confine your comments to the quest snapped Judge Yarbaugh.

"I will, your honor." Doc bowed t bench. "My colleague, here ——"

"I am not your colleague!" Corr i rupted hotly.

"WELL, whatever you are," said Doc, trying to tell you that in Shakespear you'd ever read him; and a little cu doesn't hurt any of us—in Shakespeare, friends call each other 'cousin.' Ergo—T dore Roosevelt Bayliss and I are cousir

"Your honor ——"

"Proceed with your questioning." honor looked perplexed.

Doc glanced at the jury. In a Repub community like this it was a fair guess most of the jurymen were Republicans—the name "Theodore Roosevelt Bayliss" sh have had some effect on them.

Corr came at him with waspish ar "Among other falsehoods, you have st that you were 'born in the shadow of Alamo.' Where were you born?"

"On the Red River in North Texas," Doc.

"Ah!" Corr pounced. "Is that 'in shadow of the Alamo'?"

"The Alamo casts a long shadow," said.

There was some laughter from the cr and two of the jurors smiled. He contin before Corr could intervene:

"The Alamo's more than a geograph location—it's a state of mind. A symb liberty and courage, you might say, for whole of America."

Four jurors appeared to like that.

Corr shifted his attack. "Exactly how you make a living, traveling around the co try as a quack?"

"Can't answer that," said Doc.

"You can't answer that, eh?"

"Because I'm not a quack," said D "The dictionary defines a quack as 'a tender to medical skill.' I don't pretend medical skill—I sell medicine. And I co produce thousands of witnesses—satisfied tomers that've been benefited by my —

"Benefited?" Corr cut in. "I suppose are familiar with what the great Fre dramatist Molière wrote on that subjec

"You still think it's not too early to start developing his creative ability?"

"OK" for all Septic tank systems

She knows—scientific tests proved it to her—that Sani-Flush can't harm any septic tank system. So she happily uses Sani-Flush to clean the toilet bowl—no messy scrubbing. Sani-Flush cleans and disinfects, removes invisible film where germs lurk. Quick, easy, sanitary. Follow directions on can.

Would you like to see the proof? Write for "Report of Scientific Tests." The Hygienic Products Company, Dept. 11, Canton 2, Ohio.

Sani-Flush

t all grocers—
in the familiar yellow can

BOWLING BALL!

OU can easily earn one of these nationally advertised Mineralite Bowling Balls, bored to fit your hand, hin the next week.

end us only nine 2-year Ladies' Home Journal subptions or five 2-year Saturday Evening Post subscripis, which you sell to persons living outside your home he full subscription price. Renewals count the same as subscriptions. (2-year subscriptions L.H.J., $5.00, ear S.E.P. subscriptions, $10.00.)

Write subscribers' names and addresses on plain white er and mail to address below, together with your e and address and checks or money order for the l amount.

n return, we'll send you a gift certificate entitling you a standard Mineralite Bowling Ball. Your initials will out on ball without charge. This offer is good in Conental U. S. only, until December 31, 1951. Your own our personal gift subscriptions will not count. Sorry, cannot sell these bowling balls.

URTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

JOHN DOE
$ SELL NAME PENCILS
EARN EXTRA MONEY FROM THIS UNUSUAL ITEM
pencils imprinted in gold with person's full me. Gift-boxed. Perfect, inexpensive gift idea for ildren, students, businessmen, housewives. Ideal mpanion item to sell with greeting cards. Send trial order today. Print plainly. Enclose only 80c for set of Sell set for $1.25. Money-back arantee on every purchase
RSONAL PENCIL CO., Dept. W
Dyckman Street, New York 34, N.Y.
24 FOR 80¢

YARN at TREMENDOUS SAVINGS!
Knitting yarns, new fall novelties. Send 10c for catalog 400 sample yarns. Money back guarantee . . .
Melrose Yarn Co. Inc., 345 Grand St., N. Y. City, Dept. H-10.
SUPREME MELROSE YARNS

MATERNITY DRESSES FREE CATALOG
Fall styles
Dresses suits for morning, street, afternoon, or sports. $2.95 to 22.50. Also maternity corsets & lingerie. (Catalog mailed in plain envelope.)
CRAWFORD'S Dept. A, 729 Balt., Kansas City 6, Mo.

He turned to the jury, as if letting them in on something good. "Molière wrote, 'Nearly all men die of their medicines—not of their diseases'!"

"The Bible's a better drama than Molière ever wrote," Doc retorted. "And the Bible says, 'The most High hath created medicines out of the earth, and a wise man will not abhor them.'" He turned to the jury. "That's from Eccleastics."

It had a solid impact on the jury; Doc could feel it. Well, the Bible never failed.

Corr stopped skirmishing. "I have here"—he jerked a newspaper clipping from his pocket—"a list of . . . picturesque professions in which you are alleged to have engaged. You claim that you were once a cowboy. Can you prove that?"

"Well"—Doc smiled—"I'm a little bowlegged."

"Your honor," Corr protested, "this levity ——"

"Answer the questions properly," growled the judge.

"Can you prove," Corr demanded, "that you were ever a gold prospector?"

"It was a long time ago."

"You claim to have been a deputy marshal under Pat Garrett, at the time Billy the Kid was killed. Can you prove that?"

Doc rubbed his chin. "I don't know where old Pat is today ——"

"Can you prove that you were a deputy marshal under him?"

"Well, there were quite a few of us deputies."

"Can you prove that you were one?"

Doc stirred uncomfortably. "I'd have to make a trip down to the Southwest ——"

"But you can't prove it to this court now—can you?"

"I don't suppose I can," Doc admitted.

"You claim"—Corr's voice had a bitter incisiveness—"that you drove the Deadwood stage."

"Correct."

"Can you prove it?"

"Well"—Doc frowned—"that's hard to ——"

"So you can't prove it!"

"I didn't say that." Doc was trying to keep his temper. "The company that ran the stage has been out of business for ——"

"I'm not asking you about the company," Corr cut in. "I'm asking you to prove that you drove the Deadwood stage!"

Doc wiped his face with a blue bandanna and peered at the clock. Three-forty-five. Past traintime! He had been straining his ears for the locomotive whistle.

"Obviously you can not prove that you ever drove the Deadwood stage."

Doc looked around helplessly. Nemo got to his feet. "Your honor, I object to this line of questioning!"

Corr's dignity was impressive. "It is my intention, your honor, to prove that the accused has falsified and misrepresented the activities of his past life—and that such falsification and misrepresentation have a direct bearing on this case."

"Proceed."

The judge's postmeridian indigestion had begun in earnest. As a thirsting man in the desert conjures up the vision of a frosted glass of beer, the judge's abstraction spun about a goblet of baking soda mixed with water. He had no relish for the city attorney, whose cold-blooded ambition repelled him, nor had he so much as a twinge of sympathy for the accused, who was probably a mountebank. Interesting fellow—but too healthy, the judge speculated sourly. Tilbee looked like a man with a copper-riveted stomach, a man who could blithely devour steak and onions and top it off with lemon-meringue pie. The judge closed his eyes and swallowed. There was only one hopeful aspect of this case: it would soon be over. Corr was dismembering Tilbee as if carving a roast duck. Roast duck! He must stop thinking of things like that. . . . He glowered at the spectators. Stupid lot of mutton. Imagine coming to sit in a courtroom when you didn't have to! Suddenly he noticed Prof. Alonzo Moultripp, of Albion College, in the first row. Now, what would bring Alonzo here?

KENMAR Contour RECLINING CHAIR

...FOR YOUR HEALTH AND COMFORT

Scientifically designed to cradle and support the entire body—reclines to any position, sitting . . . lounging . . . sleeping.

- COMFORT for ARTHRITIS and ASTHMA PATIENTS
- AIDS IN RELIEF OF NERVE TENSIONS
- AIDS DIGESTION . . . BLOOD CIRCULATION
- WONDERFUL RELAXATION FOR TV $129 and up

at better stores everywhere

Write for FREE Catalog No. 4 KENMAR MFG. CO., EAST PALESTINE, OHIO

FREE Catalog

Save on Cottons

Substantial savings on hundreds of selected Cottons! Buy direct from famous cotton specialists! Beautiful styles, fabrics, household Cottons . . . all fine guaranteed quality! Join the hundreds of thousands who buy and save year 'round . . . outfit entire family and home! Get FREE CATALOG to show you how NOW! Just send name and address!

SOUTH CAROLINA MILLS, Dept. 655, Spartanburg, S.C.

Rooms Smell Nice Quick with VAPAIR
ROOM DEODORANT
Bomb or Wick

VAPAIR BOMB
For instant killing of odors. Just press the button

VAPAIR WICK
For continuous killing of odors. Just pull up wick

Now Two Sizes
Full 10 oz

A CLEAN HOME PRODUCT

$1.69
98c

REPLACEMENT REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

69c

Sleep like a Queen

OSTERMOOR SINCE 1853

You'll awake with a happy, healthy zest for life—buoyed up by the supreme night-long comfort of Ostermoor's hand-crafted Mattress and Box Spring! For the sleeping qualities of an Ostermoor are as famous as its century-old name! See your Ostermoor dealer. Ostermoor & Co., Bridgeport 4, Conn., Chicago 16, Ill.

Make yours an OSTERMOOR MATTRESS®
AND BOX SPRING

America's Quality Mattress for nearly 100 years

Corr held up the newspaper clipping and struck it contemptuously with his hand. "I shall not take the court's time with the full list of these Münchhausen meanderings. But"—he walked close to Doc—"there is one allegation which, in the interests of justice, I cannot overlook! You have stated that you served with the Roughriders at San Juan Hill! You have been heard to refer to Theodore Roosevelt—our great President—as your 'comrade in arms'! And there, Mister Tilbee, you go too far!" His voice rose in the forensic style of William Jennings Bryan: "I say to you, gentlemen of the jury, that this wanton disregard for the truth cannot be tolerated by a righteous citizenry!" He pointed a finger at Doc and shouted, "How can you answer that?"

"Well," said Doc, "going on the theory that the larynx is more important than the logic ——"

"Answer the question!"

"What was the question?" Doc asked blandly.

"Do you still assert that you were with Roosevelt's Roughriders?"

Doc hesitated, listening for the sound of the train whistle.

"Answer the question!"

"Yes," said Doc, "I was there."

"Can you prove it?"

"Well ——"

"Can you prove it?"

"The records are in the Adjutant Gen'ral's office in the War Department."

"VERY convenient," jeered Corr. "You expect us to hold up this trial—wasting taxpayers' money—while we search a lot of records in Washington?"

"You wasted taxpayers' money on this trial in the first place!"

"Your honor ——" Corr protested.

"I will hold you in contempt," the judge threatened Doc.

Corr came at him again. "Can you prove that you were with the Roughriders?"

"You mean," said Doc, "do I carry proof around in my pocket? No."

"So far," Corr exclaimed triumphantly, "you have not been able to offer one iota of evidence that you were ever—at any time—any of the things you claimed to be!" He looked at the jury, as if taking them into his confidence, then nodded curtly at Doc. "That's all."

Doc started for the table like a boxer returning to his corner, knowing that he had just lost the round and wondering how it happened.

NEMO DIBBLE was standing at the railing talking in whispers to a serious-looking young man with a lock of hair over one eye. He motioned excitedly. "This is Professor Moultripp ——"

"How are you?" said Doc. Then he turned worried, to Nemo. "That train ——"

"The train's an hour late," Nemo told him jauntily. "But wait ——"

"An hour!" Doc felt sick. "That'll finish us. We can't hold out—Corr'll snatch a verdict ——"

"But Professor Moultripp has brought good news!"

The professor shook hands briskly. "I'm a friend of Zerelda Wing's." His eyes twinkled. "This is quite a lark!"

A lark, Doc thought. Here I am, practically hanging from a sour-apple tree—and this broomtail calls it a lark! Then he jumped. "Did you say you're a friend of Mrs. Wing's?"

Professor Moultripp smiled. "A discarded suitor. That's why I hurried over as soon as it arrived this morning."

"What arrived?"

"I suppose I should explain how I became implicated." Moultripp brushed the lock of hair from his eye. "When I read that first piece about you in the Banner, my insidious curiosity impelled me to write to him direct ——"

"Write to who? Whom?"

"Then this morning," Moultripp said jubilantly, "the answer came!"

"The answer to what, for the love of ——"

"Your bouncing barrister will soon tell you." The professor pointed at Nemo, who had rushed up to Judge Yarbaugh, waving a sheet of paper. The judge took it from him and read it, scowling. Then he put on his

Only one soap gives your skin this

Exciting Bouquet

And Cashmere Bouquet is proved extra mild . . . leaves your skin softer, fresher, younger looking!

Now Cashmere Bouquet Soap—with the lingering, irresistible "fragrance men love"—is proved by test to be extra mild too! Yes, so amazingly mild that its gentle lather is ideal for all types of skin—dry, oily, or normal! And daily cleansing with Cashmere Bouquet helps bring out the flower-fresh softness, the delicate smoothness, the exciting loveliness you long for! Use Cashmere Bouquet Soap regularly . . . for the finest complexion care . . . for a fragrant invitation to romance!

Complexion and big Bath Sizes

Cashmere Bouquet Soap

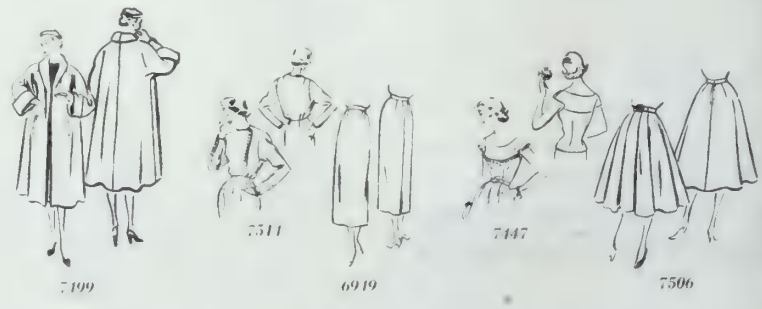
—Adorns your skin with the fragrance men love!

Back and Other Views, Sizes and Prices of Vogue Patterns on Pages 66 & 67

Vogue Design No. 7499. "Easy-to-Make" coat; Small (28–30), Medium (32–34), Large (36–38). 75c.

Vogue Design No. 7514. Blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 6949. "Easy-to-Make" skirt; 24 to 32 waist measurement. 50c.



Vogue Design No. 7447. "Easy-to-Make" blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 40c.

Vogue Design No. 7506. Skirt; 22 to 30 waist measurement. 40c.

Vogue Design No. 7488. Suit; 12 to 20, 30 to 40. 75c.

Vogue Design No. S-4251. One-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. $1.00.

Vogue Design No. S-4252. Coat; Small (28–30), Medium (32–34), Large (36–38). $1.00.

"Venida rules the waves"

VENIDA
HAIR NETS
AND BOB PINS

keep your hair exactly the way
you arrange it!

VENIDA
The Guaranteed
HAIR NET rules the waves

Make More Money

SELL WOMEN'S WEAR

Up-to-minute styles—DRESSES—street—house—DRESS GOODS—cotton—rayon—HOSIERY—LINGERIE—GREETING CARDS—Beautiful Samples—Splendid Values—Make EASY SALES—GOOD PROFITS—without experience. Exclusive. Be First. Write now.

MITCHELL & CHURCH CO.
Dept. 140 Binghamton, N. Y.

HOW TO GIVE

Quick rest

TO TIRED EYES

—Make this simple test today!

EYE FEEL TIRED? Put two drops of gentle, comforting Murine in each eye. Then feel the sensation of cool, soothing refreshment that comes instantly. You get—

QUICK RELIEF from the discomfort of tired eyes. Murine's seven important ingredients are scientifically blended to cleanse and refresh overworked, tired eyes. Use Murine morning and night and whenever your eyes tell you to.

MURINE
FOR YOUR EYES

glasses and read it again. Rapping with the gavel, he announced that he would allow the defense to introduce a letter as evidence.

This was the high point of Nemo's career. As he read the letter his voice quavered:

"'The White House, Washington, September 24th, 1904. Professor Alonzo Moultripp, Albion College, Albion, Michigan. My dear Professor Moultripp: In answer to your query I am delighted to say that I remember "Doc" Tilbee very well indeed. He served with the Roughriders throughout the campaign and was most certainly present at the San Juan Hill engagement. Tilbee was the best vet we had, and not only took excellent care of our horses, but was himself an intrepid fighting man. If you should see him, please give him my warm regards. Sincerely yours, Theodore Roosevelt.'"

An instant of silence—then spectators were buzzing and twittering. Someone applauded—but the judge's gavel stopped that.

"Professor," Doc whispered gratefully, "you're quite a man!" His heart was hammering against his pocketful of cigars.

Corr strode across to the high desk. "May I see that letter? It could be a forgery!" He fairly snatched it from the judge's hand.

"Here's the envelope, with the Washington postmark," Judge Yarbaugh told him acidly. "And that signature is authentic."

Corr read the letter and flung it down. "This has no bearing whatever on the guilt of the accused!" He turned and walked away.

The judge's indigestion was killing him. He called a five-minute recess and made the distress signal to the bailiff.

Doc watched Corr standing motionless at the drinking fountain in the corner, tin cup

Men should be careful lest they cause a woman to weep, for God counts their tears. —THE TALMUD.

poised in air. He could see that trapped-jaguar expression on his face again. Corr was scheming to overset the White House letter. He was out to win this case, and he'd allow nothing to stand in his way. People said he would convict a penniless widow, with starving children, any day in the week if it would advance his reputation as a prosecutor. And this case involved more than his reputation: it had now become a personal feud, because of Zerelda. Doc knew that they must move fast—the recess would soon end.

Nemo came skittering over. "Wasn't that letter a humding——"

Doc cut off his effervescence. "It won't give us an acquittal. You heard what Corr just said. Remember, he gets the last shot at me. We've got to think of something." He glanced at the clock. "Train's not due for forty-three minutes. It'll take 'em two minutes to get here from the station. That's forty-five minutes." His fingers drummed the table. "If we could only ——" He saw Corr drop the drinking cup with sudden decision. "That thimblerigger's thought of something! Here it comes." His frantic eyes sought the judge, who was being handed a glass of milky fluid by the bailiff. "What's that?" He jabbed Nemo's ribs. "What's he giving the judge?"

"Soda," said Nemo. "The poor old gentleman suffers from dyspepsia."

"He does?" Doc's mind worked fast. "Look here ——"

The bailiff was calling the court to order. Corr sat at his table, grimly scribbling some notes.

"Look here," whispered Doc, "can you put me back on the stand? I mean, is it legal?"

"Yes, but"—Nemo looked pained—"Corr will only go at you again hammer and tongs."

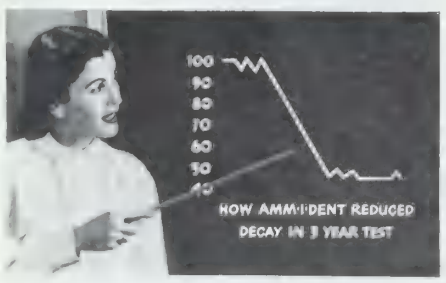
"We won't give him the chance!" Doc said. "If I can keep talking till that train gets in ——"

"But how ——"

"Just put me on," said Doc. "Every time I begin to fold you say, 'Doctor, tell the court in your own words ——' That's all—I'll do the rest!"

MARTEX
French Touch

. . . definitely, the smartest towel of the season, Martex Chalk Stripes in dreamy French pastels—pink, blue, lemon or green. Set of 2 bath towels, 2 guest towels, 2 face cloths, about $7.95. At fine stores, or write: Martex Department, Wellington Sears Company, 65 Worth Street, New York 13.



A PRODUCT OF WEST POINT MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Healthy Teeth! Beautiful Teeth!

She Helps Prevent Cavities with Amazing Amm-i-dent Toothpaste

Amm-i-dent's results have been amazing, with children and adults alike. Test after test has shown tooth decay reduction like the chart above. Only Amm-i-dent's patented ammoniated formula has produced these results.

More dentists recommend Amm-i-dent Toothpaste and Tooth Powder than any other dentifrice in America. Thousands of wise mothers have bought Amm-i-dent for their children, on the advice of dentists.

Richard J. Hodge, Philadelphia, and his daughter Judy proved Amm-i-dent's ability to reduce decay. With an ordinary dentifrice, Mr. Hodge used to average 3 or 4 cavities per dental visit—and Judy had a decay problem, too. They changed to Amm-i-dent, and at last dental checks, no cavities at all for either one!

Did you have too many cavities last year? If your answer is yes, then change your toothpaste. Change away from the toothpaste you were using when you got those cavities. Change to Amm-i-dent.

Amm-i-dent Reduces Tooth Decay Because It's Ammoniated!

"But ——"

"Quick!"

As Corr opened his mouth to address the judge Nemo spoke—returning Doctor Tilbee to the stand for further questioning. Corr sat down disgustedly.

Doc went toward the witness chair, a covey of thoughts flying at all angles through his mind. He had never been in such a tough spot. If he failed—prison. Maybe they could appeal the case later—but later would be too late. A man once convicted of felony could never go to a lovely creature like Merelda Wing and ——

His knees shook as he seated himself. Dibble was shuffling papers at the table. Forty minutes. . . . Doc rubbed his chin nervously and peered at the jury. Even if he could hook their interest it would do no good: the judge was the man that ran the show. So the judge had a bad boiler. He soaked his boiler all day with baking soda.

Nemo, frowning dubiously, said, "Doctor Tilbee, tell the court in your own words ——"

Doc cleared his throat, gripped the arms of the chair and started to talk. For the first three minutes he had no idea what he was talking about. He could hear his voice, apparently going on without him. That was the old pitchman's training. (And he had a fleeting notion that politicians probably did the same thing.) When he caught up with himself he found that he had led off with an incident involving Teddy Roosevelt's heroism at San Juan Hill. Not a bad beginning: it tied in the White House letter.

Teddy's letter had lauded him as a vet. This led naturally to a tribute to the horse: the Cavalry horse, which had played such a heroic part in America's wars, and horses in general. He went on to tell about a favorite horse of Buffalo Bill's.

"Your honor"—Corr jumped up—"I object to the introduction of such extraneous twaddle."

"Your honor," said Doc, "no page in the history of our glorious country can be called 'twaddle.'"

The judge scratched his head and then nodded. "Proceed."

Doc proceeded. From the anecdote of Buffalo Bill's horse he launched into an account of his travels with Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show. He had unconsciously swung into the oratorical rhythm of the pitch, and his voice took on resonance as he narrated the progress of the Bill Show—"that little band of true Americans: cowboys and Indians"—through European capitals. He described a command performance given in England for the Prince of Wales, now King Edward VII. Buffalo Bill and Annie Oakley were summoned to the royal box—and at this unfortunate moment the Prince was seized with an attack of indigestion.

"I object!" Corr shouted. "What has indigestion to do with this case?"

Doc said, "I'm coming to that, your honor."

The judge looked interested. "Proceed."

Doc put all his pitchman's art into describing the scene at the royal box at the moment Buffalo Bill sent for him to minister to the Prince of Wales' indigestion. On previous occasions, when Colonel Cody himself had indulged in indiscretions of eating and so on, Doc had cured him with a secret prescription obtained, he said, from medicine men of the Arapaho tribe. And the prescription did the trick again—bringing instant relief to the heir to the British throne. It was this incident which impelled the decision to devote his life henceforth to the service of his fellow man.

Flipping the blue bandanna from a hip pocket, he wiped his forehead and covertly glanced at the clock. He had been talking for twenty minutes. Another twenty to go.

"Doctor," Nemo prompted, "tell the court in your own words ——"

"Had I failed that day in England," Doc declared fervently, "the British Empire might have been bereft of its beloved king-emperor—a tragic consequence which would have shaken the entire civilized world!" He went on to pay a graceful compliment to the English people—and spoke for five minutes on the need for Anglo-American accord as a means of preserving peace among the nations.

"Your honor"—Corr was up again—"I object to the inclusion of such meaningless trivialities!"

"'Your honor,' Doc challenged, "how can this city attorney—or any other man—say that peace among the nations is a meaningless triviality?"

Applause spattered from the crowd. Judge Yarbaugh banged his gavel sharply, then scowled at Nemo Dibble. "I must ask the defense what bearing this testimony has on the case."

"I'm just getting to that, your honor," Doc replied. "There is an old French proverb: 'The destiny of nations depends on what they eat.' That gives us something to think about. Gastronomic politics, you might call it."

He was making a spectacular pitch. The clock showed ten minutes still to go, and as he increased his tempo, using every dodge known to medicine-show spellbinders, he listened for the sound of the train whistle. He was talking against time now—throwing in everything he had heard or read in his whole random career: fragments of history, philosophy and poetry; quotations from Shakespeare and the Scriptures; oddments of information on every subject from the breeding of Thoroughbred horses to marriage customs among the Congo tribes.

Corr made three indignant attempts to stop him. Each time the judge threatened to put an end to his testimony. Doc injected some astonishing statement that halted the judicial gavel in mid-air. He spoke with an eloquence such as these people had never heard, and there was a compelling magnetism in his eyes and in his gestures. But he realized that he was tiring; his voice had become hoarse. And the clock seemed to be standing still. He tried resting his voice by telling, quietly, how Gentleman Jim Corbett defeated John L. Sullivan for the championship of the world, through training on his own—Tilbee's—tonic. This did not go too well, and he veered quickly back to the main thread of testimony, from which he had wandered. As he started to elaborate on his journeys across America, through an open window drifted the sound of a distant train whistle. Sudden excitement died up his spiel. He opened his mouth—but no words came.

> The man who trusts men will make fewer mistakes than he who distrusts them.
> —CAVOUR.

And now Corr was on his feet. "Your honor," he protested pathingly, "must the jury be subjected to this hurricane of hot air?"

The judge sighed. He had been such stimulating oratory that he had forgotten his own ailment. But enough was enough. He scowled at Nemo Dibble. "I trust you have finished with your 'further questioning'?"

"Judge," said Doc, "I haven't finished."

"Your honor," Corr shouted, "I object to this distortion of ——"

"If the court will give me a chance," Doc put in, "there is something I must say."

"You said just about everything," rasped the judge.

"But this is a conspiracy!" Doc's voice rang out. "A man is innocent till he's proved guilty!"

Cheering broke from the spectators. The judge's gavel pounded.

"Your honor," Doc pleaded, "all I ask is a chance ——"

"You had it!"

The train whistle sounded nearer now.

"Your honor, I ask you to give me what every American citizen is entitled to—the right to a fair hearing!"

The crowd applauded wildly. Beating the desk with his gavel, Judge Yarbaugh threatened to clear the court.

Doc could hear the train, puffing around the bend below the bridge. He was desperate now. If they took him off the stand ——

(Continued on Page 196)

Beautiful Hair

B R E C K

BRECK HAIRDRESS KEEPS HAIR SOFT AND IN PLACE

Breck Hairdress[illegible] a liquid cream hairdressing. A few drops w[illegible] make the ha[illegible] easier to manage and easier to keep in place. Breck Hairdress helps make dry, brittle ends of the hair smooth and silky. Breck Hairdress may be diluted and used as a final rinse after a shampoo. Breck Hairdress does not leave an oily appearance. The daily use of Breck Hairdress will keep your hair looking its best at all times. It offers you the easiest, quickest and best way to care for your hair.

Breck Hairdress is available at Beauty Shops and wherever cosmetics are sold.

[illegible]ECK INC · MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS · SPRINGFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS
[illegible]K · SAN FRANCISCO · OTTAWA CANADA in just 4 minutes... you're lovely from "good morning" to "good night"

Use Tussy Emulsified Cleansing Cream; then stimulate with Tussy Dry Skin Freshener.

Now Finishing Touch; perfect foundation for Tussy Midnight Face Powder, Rouge, Lipstick.

Smooth Tussy Wind and Weather Lotion or Hand Cream on your hands, arms and legs.

Tussy goes on faster: keeps you lovely longer! Tussy Emulsified Cleansing Cream smooths as it cleanses dry skin... because it's extra rich in emollient oils. Tussy Finishing Touch gives a flawless look to your skin: keeps the hauntingly fragrant Tussy Midnight Make-up clinging all day long. And be lavish with Wind and Weather Lotion: it softens: is never sticky!

TUSSY

Tussy Emulsified Cleansing Cream, $1.25, $2., $3.50. Dry Skin Freshener, $1., $1.75, Finishing Touch, $1., Midnight Face Powder, $1., Rouge, $1.25, Lipstick, $1., Wind and Weather Lotion; Hand Cream, $1., $2. Allegrance Elizabeth

Coat by Lawrence Gaines

(Continued from Page 194)

"May it please the court"—Corr spoke coldly—"I move this testimony be stricken from the record as irrelevant and immaterial."

The judge rubbed his nose, then nodded. As he turned to instruct the clerk, Doc stood up.

"Your honor," he said gravely, "the only thing that matters is for the jury to hear the truth." He paused. "I want to make a confession."

A heavy silence flattened the courtroom. No one moved but Corr. Doc saw him draw back like a copperhead about to strike. Then he heard the judge say:

"What is your confession?"

Doc took a deep breath and drew himself up. "The whole thing started with a 'good deed.' I guess I hadn't had much experience with good deeds. If I had, I'd have known they can get you into a lot of trouble. . . . Anyway, I took the little orphan boy, Tad Bayliss, along with me on the road. I got into this good deed without meaning to. I tried to drop it two or three times. But it stuck like a mustard plaster to my soul! And I'm going to tell you why."

He began to tell them—with no attempt at eloquence, no fancy phrases, but quietly and simply—the story of his own boyhood in an orphanage in the West. He was making the pitch of his life now—because he was telling the truth. It had no sentimentality, no appeal for sympathy in it; only the bitterness of mean surroundings and desolate loneliness.

"You—all of you—have homes," he said. "At least I hope you have. I hope you've never known what it means to be shut up inside walls—never seeing the world outside. . . . I hope your childhood meant something more than a lost feeling that not a human being anywhere cared what became of you."

She behaves as if she were beautiful. Most American women do. It is the secret of their charm. —OSCAR WILDE.

No one—not even Doc himself—heard the Chicago train grind to a stop in the station across the river; every man and woman in the courtroom—from the judge on the bench to the janitor in the doorway—listened, in a kind of enchantment, to what he was saying.

("I never seen anything like it," Chief Farring told Clara Brink later. And Clara, a far-away look in her eyes, answered, "Somehow he looked like a preacher, standin' up there. And sounded like one—darned if he didn't!")

"I'm trying to make you understand," Doc said, "why I couldn't let that little boy Tad Bayliss go back to the orphan asylum ——"

A commotion in the rear of the courtroom interrupted him. The doors were flung open—and down the aisle rushed what seemed to be an endless procession of people. He saw Edan Dunbar and Billy Gray and Zerelda among them. The judge appeared too surprised to use his gavel. Lost River's most distinguished lawyer, John Daly, a ponderous, bald-headed man, had reached the bench and was speaking in legal language.

Doc stood wiping his face with the wet blue bandanna. His hands shook and his knees felt unsteady. Then he heard Daly's sonorous voice:

"Section 8777 of the Compiled Laws of Michigan of 1897, Section 2, paragraph (d)—provides that adoption of an orphan shall be 'by consent of the director of the poor of any city or township of which such child is a resident.' Your honor, here is the consent for the adoption of Theodore Roosevelt Bayliss by Edan Dunbar, of Lost River, signed by J. W. Elkland, chairman of the Township Poor Board, Springville Township, County of Calhoun, Michigan. Properly witnessed and notarized. Mr. Dunbar has assumed all legal responsibilities for the boy."

The courtroom was still. Judge Yarbaugh glanced at the document, rubbed his nose vigorously, then scowled at Corr. "It's clear to me," he said, "that the boy wasn't kidnaped—he was adopted. Case dismissed."

There was such an uproar all about him that Doc could not hear the things people were saying to him as they wrung his hand and slapped him on the back. He saw Zerelda coming toward him. It seemed a long time ago that he had first looked into those incredibly blue eyes.

Then the bailiff touched his elbow. "Judge wants you."

Judge Yarbaugh, his expression more disagreeable than ever, was beckoning to him. Doc walked over to the high desk and the judge leaned down to speak to him. "What was the name," he asked, "of that tonic you were talking about?"

It was a blue-and-gold October day, with just enough tang in the air to make the dapple grays feel their oats. Enoch had trouble keeping them quiet while he groomed them in the camp beside the river. They had been stabled too long in town; and now, like cavalry horses, they stomped and tossed their manes, sensing action ahead. Harness, hanging under the trees, had been polished until its brass studs glistened, and the Contraption stood there, canvas curtains neatly buttoned, ready for the road.

Enoch suspected that they would soon be on their way, and as he worked he sang, in his rich bass, the other spiritual Doc had composed:

"We'll travel on the o-pen ro-oad—Leadin' to the Great Beyond. . . ."

There was a cheerful lift to his voice, because he was happy for the first time in weeks. But he was concerned over the doctor. A man would think that after his victory in court—and the new respect people had for him—the doctor would have slept the sleep of the just last night. But Enoch had heard him stirring restlessly in his bunk. He himself slept on the broad front seat of the Contraption, which made into a comfortable bed, and long after midnight he had heard the doctor get up and go outside. He couldn't see him—dark of the moon—but twigs crackled, and he knew that the doctor was pacing up and down out there. Something on his mind. Could be Mrs. Wing. Could be lots of things.

Below, around the river bend, Doc sat against a tree in the warm sun, smoking his after-breakfast cigar. Opposite him Tad squatted, cross-legged, sifting a handful of sand through his fingers and watching Spook and Beezark. The raccoon crouched, poking a deft paw into the stream for fresh-water shellfish, of which he was very fond, while the little dog watched with interest.

Tad had on the brown suit and yellow elk-skin shoes, and his hair was slicked down. As Doc looked at him he saw a tousle-headed boy, barefooted, in patched pants, with grimy tear-stained cheeks and fear in his eyes. This aware, well-scrubbed boy in the new brown suit had come quite a distance. Pleasant spectacle to watch, Doc was thinking. A young American on his way.

"Set of books'll come for you one of these days, Tad," he said. "Called Animate Creation. Tells about every kind of animal from rhinoceroses to raccoons—with colored pictures."

"Jingoes!" Tad said, pleased. "Thanks, doctor!"

"And I'm going to leave my bird book for you. Fellow with an inquisitive turn of mind ought to know every bird in these regions. You can tell June about 'em."

The boy's face clouded. "Why do you have to go away?" he asked quickly.

"Well, you see ——" Doc had been dreading this interview. "Coming on fall, we've got to head south. I'm late as it is. Got hung up in town, one thing another." He began talking fast, avoiding Tad's wistful eyes. "We'll head down through Indiana and Kentucky to Tennessee. Then across Georgia. Like as not I'll winter in Savannah—or ricochet over to St. Petersburg, Florida. Plenty of old codgers huddling in the sun down there need Wonder Tonic to warm their bones."

"Why can't I go with you?" Tad asked.

(Continued on Page 199)

only by Vanity Fair

We are one of the very few who actually manufacture in our own mill lovely lingerie from the raw yarn to the finished garment.

Hence this remarkable value!

Vanity Fair lingerie saves you money because one garment takes the place of and outwears several others—saves you time and work because it washes and dries in a flash—needs no ironing.

Treat yourself to this beautiful slip #3-8-6, a wonderful value at about $5.95 in regular sizes, and sizes 9 to 15; tall length; about $6.95.

Save your money, time, work!
Wear the finest, most economical lingerie in the world.

© 1951 VANITY FAIR MILLS, INC. • EXECUTIVE OFFICES, READING, PA.

fresh from the English countryside

. . . the lilting fragrance of Lavender is brought to you by Yardley. Subtly blended with precious oils, there is only one Yardley Lavender. Though it's luxurious beyond compare, you will want to use it as generously as toilet water. It's right for all your doings. Enjoy this unique fragrance, too, in creamy-lathering Lavender Soap.

BY APPOI ENT PERFUME TO
H. M. QUEE MARY
YARDLEY. LONDON

YARDLEY

English Lavender

Yardley English Lavender, from $1.75, plus tax

Dusting Powder, $1.65, plus tax

Lavender Soap, $1.35 (box of three)

Bath size, 75c ■ tablet

Yardley products for America are created in England and finished in the U.S.A. from the original English formulae, combining imported and domestic ingredients. Yardley of London, Inc., 620 Fifth Avenue, N.Y.C.

(Continued from Page 196)

About a thousand and nine reasons why
." Doc replied with forced joviality.
ou're going to live in the big house and o school and learn something."
I learned things traveling with you and ch."
A man's got to have a real education se days," Doc said briskly. "Cowboys and ing stones and such don't get anywhere.
sed to think I didn't need to get any-ere—just so it was pleasant along the way.
I know different now. . . . That's why I nt you to grow up to be an educated tleman everybody'll be proud of."
But"—the boy's eyes were troubled—you go away I won't see you any more—Enoch—or Beezark ——"
'I've been thinking about Beezark," Doc in hastily. "Now that he and Spook are tners in the fish business, I guess I'll ve him with you."
'You will?" Tad's face brightened for an tant. "Then will you come see us real en?"
'Oh, sure," Doc nodded. "And I'll send a post card from here and there."
Through the trees a childish voice was ling, "Tad! Ta-ad!"
Doc rose, whacking the dust from his users. "There's June and your dad." He nted to get it over with. "Come along, ut."
Tad got up slowly and tucked the raccoon der his arm. "Couldn't we talk for maybe ittle while longer, doctor?"
"Your dad's going to take you in to the ool." Doc said. They walked along a path ewn with October leaves, and the little dog cled around them. "Mighty important day a fellow's life—starting a fine school."
Ahead, through the
ve of elms, Edan Dun-
r and June were waiting a smart trap, behind a ek bay horse.
"W-will you say g'by
Enoch for me?" The boy's chin quivered.
"Oh, you'll see Enoch again." Doc frowned they walked along. "I want to tell you mething about your new dad," he said.
Any father can have a son. That's just a rtunate accident. But your dad, Edan Dun-r, picked you out. Of all the boys in this hole country, you're the son he wanted."
Tad looked up at him gravely. "I am?"
"Yes, siree, you are. And that means mething. Tad," he said, "you're a lucky ot. Remember what a good time you had,
e few days you stayed up at the house?
ell, it'll be like that from here in—only tter. You're part of the family now. You'll ve a sweet little sister and the greatest dad forty-five states and four territories!
ou'll have a horse to ride—and Spook and eezark to keep you busy. And when you get der you'll go to college." He realized sudnly that he was making a pitch.

HEY had reached the lane and June was aving to them from the trap. "Hello!"
unbar called smilingly. The grim tension at had always held him seemed gone; and oc was thinking how much he had changed nce the day of their first meeting.
He hoisted Tad into the trap and Dunbar nd his little girl made room for him and the accoon and the dog.
"You'll surely drop up and say good-by?"
unbar asked. "We'll be looking for you."
"Good-by is something I never say," Doc nswered. He patted the little dog's head.
Beezark ——" Out of the corner of his ye he saw a small tear sliding down Tad's heek. He turned away abruptly. "Toppy oss you've got here, Edan," he said.

Zerelda waved her parasol at Billy and Mrs.
Gray, driving away in the surrey. They had aken her for a spin out past the sanitarium, nd tonight they were coming here to dinner,
ith Doctor Tilbee. Charming, friendly eople—the first New Englanders she had ver known. It would be pleasant to visit
New England someday. She wondered fleet-ngly if Doctor Tilbee went that far east.

Walking into The Tavern, Zerelda recalled what Billy Gray had said about him, in summing up the case: "Do you realize what that scoundrel did?" (He always referred to Doc as a scoundrel.) "He hid the boy away—refused to produce him—then went on trial and took the chance of prison—to give Dunbar time to find the old man and get the adoption! That's what Doc did. And don't tell me it didn't take tremendous guts!"

"Billy," Gertrude Gray had said, "you weren't going to use that dreadful word ——"

"Guts? What else can you call it?" He had looked around, squinting. "Mrs. Wing, your friend the Roughrider is quite a man. Quite a man." And Zerelda had blushed.

Doc, waiting in the hotel's small "Oriental" lounge, saw her before she saw him—and his depression lifted. She looked so inexpressibly lovely, coming through a pattern of sunlight in that blue dress and wide hat with the roses.

SHE was surprised to see him, and her questioning eyes searched his face. "You've been saying good-by to Tad," she said. "I know how he must have felt."

"Tad's all squared away." He stood there, close to her, hat in hand.

She went on, confused by his nearness: "Now that it's over—when I think of the chance you took—the danger you were in ——"

"Flapdoodle!" Doc frowned at her. "Why, if it hadn't been for this little fracas I'd never have met the most terrific woman in the Western Hemisphere! I'll even include Asia, Africa and the Hanseatic League!"

She laughed then, but tears were clinging to her eyelashes.

He glanced around. They were alone in the little room. "Haven't we wasted enough time talking? Seems like I've been talking all my life."

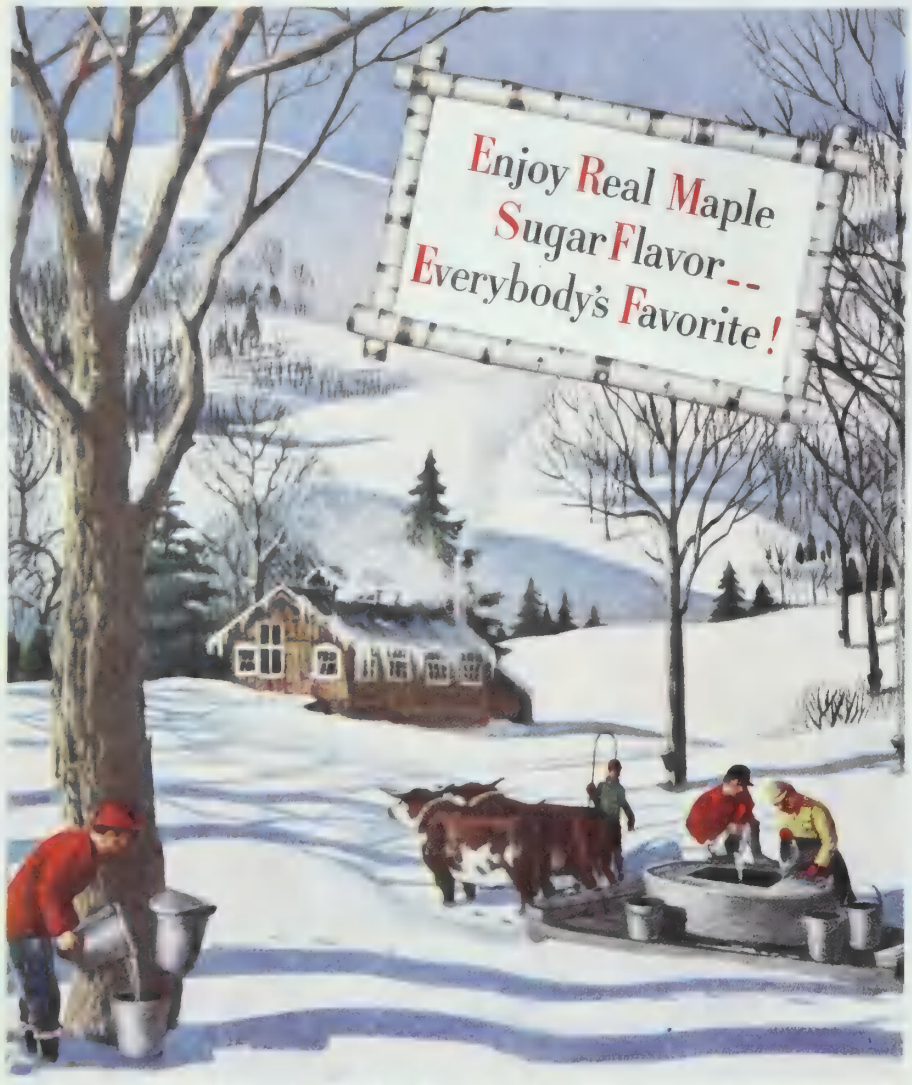
He drew her to him. She was trembling, and her arms went about his shoulders. After he had kissed her—when he could think again—he thought, I've kissed women in every language—but there's never been anything like this. Then a swift doubt cut through his mind like the blade of a Gurkha knife: You can't get away with it.

He took her hands and held them for an instant, releasing them gently. "I won't be able to come over tonight," he said. "I—I'm leaving sooner than I expected."

She watched him, but made no answer.

He took a long breath. "Going back to the road is the only way I can work things out for myself. And I've got a good many things to work out. Making a living's only one. I don't know how much longer I'll be able to keep on with what you once called my 'irregular profession.'"

"I'm sorry I said that." Impulsively she reached out and touched his hand.



"No—you were right," he said. "And if Congress passes that pure-food-and-drug act they're talking about, it'll be more irregular. But making a living isn't as important as to get squared away with myself. In view of the new addition to my family—namely, a conscience." He smiled wryly. "The kind of life I've led—and whatever kind of man I've been—can't be made over all in a minute. . . . I remember what a job we had getting the Sioux off the warpath and settling 'em down on the reservation."

Zerelda smiled, looking at the way his hair was brushed back from his forehead, and at the lean angle of his sun-browned jaw. "I understand," she said quietly. "To tell the truth, I was expecting this." Then her smile deepened. "But I'm glad you came to tell me. I thought you'd write it in a letter. One of those letters beginning 'By the time you read this I will be ——'"

"I did write you a letter!" Doc pulled a crumpled piece of paper from his pocket. "Not a letter"—he smoothed it out—"just some lines by our old friend W. Whitman. But it's what I wanted to say to you. Only, I know now that I've got to figure certain things out first. And if I'm lucky ——" He handed her the crumpled note. "This is the

Everyone wishes to have truth on his side, but it is not everyone that sincerely wishes to be on the side of truth. —ARCHBISHOP WHATELY.

At maple-sugaring time folks head towards the sugar camp for "Sugar-on-snow" for pancakes and waffles at their best...

Vermont Maid Syrup

Vermont Maid Syrup on pancakes and waffles makes them taste extra good. No wonder it's everybody's favorite!

To make Vermont Maid, skilled blenders select only maple sugar that is unusually full-flavored; then blend it with cane sugar. This perfect blend gives you—at moderate cost—real maple sugar flavor that is always the same, always delicious! At your grocer's in attractive glass jugs—24-oz., or 12-oz., size.

Penick & Ford, Ltd., Inc., Burlington, Vermont

Table Tips...

For French toast that's very French indeed—use half-inch slices of French bread. Dip quickly into beaten egg and milk, brown in butter. Serve it with plenty of Vermont Maid Syrup!

Your morning grapefruit will taste delicious if you pour on Vermont Maid Syrup. To make it especially delectable, pour the syrup on the night before; let it stand overnight in the icebox.

Here's a maple sundae any soda clerk would be proud of. Yet you can make it at home in a jiffy! Just pour plenty of Vermont Maid Syrup over vanilla ice cream. Add chopped nuts—and you'll have a wonderful, maple-sweet treat!

Made by the makers of My-T-Fine Desserts and Brer Rabbit Molasses.

way I hoped it would be." He straightened up. "We won't say good-by. I'll just start out that door and keep walking. I'd like to kiss you again," he said gravely. "But if I do I'll never go. So ——"

All her life she would remember the way he smiled. Then he was gone. Zerelda looked down at the crumpled paper in her hand:

I give you my hand!
I give you my love more precious than money,
I give you myself before preaching or law;
. . . . Will you come travel with me?
Shall we stick by each other as long as we live?

Constable Rollins opened the shutters and took a breath of the October-morning air. It was good air—crisp, and fragrant with burning leaves. Made a man feel chipper. He peered up and down the street. Somebody else feeling chipper! Since Zerelda Wing's return to Springville two days ago everyone said she seemed a different person: cheerf and with a smile in her eyes as if she expec something wonderful to happen.

Constable Rollins couldn't understand Nor could he understand what Orthwaite the bank, had told him yesterday ab Zerelda's buying the Springville Stock Fa Why in the world would a pretty girl like want to go in for raising blooded horses?

Up the street Zerelda turned into Aust Crockery and Notions Store. Mr. Austi who looked Armenian, but was from Yankee stock—emerged from behind a du pile of soup plates.

"Good morning, Mrs. Wing," he palave "And what might we be interested in toda

"Good morning," said Zerelda. "I'd to buy a lamp, please."

"And what kind of a lamp, Mrs. Win

"Oh, any kind"—Zerelda smiled—"t will look well in a window!"

MRS. FREMONT'S DAUGHTER

(Continued from Page 75)

talking or whispering on the front porch. She went down the stairs of the old Victorian house where her husband, as his father and grandfather before him had done, practiced medicine. She wished fervently that Dan were not out on late call tonight. She wasn't a clinging woman, she thought; it was more that she shared all things with the tall, spare man who was her husband.

She'd fallen asleep reading about the various selves that went to make up a person, the different I's of which one was composed. She had lingered in her reading, thinking of the I's of herself, the bright, bewitching girl she had been, the I Jerry and Bob and Trevis had wanted to marry, and finally Doctor Fremont, Dan. She'd been visiting in town and had caught the flu. She'd opened fevered eyes as he bent over her with a stethoscope, listening. She met his cool gray glance, and that was her answer. The best possible answer, she thought now, as she turned off the bright hall light and switched on the small table lamp instead. What would the tragedy of her long childless years have been like without the deep, sustaining love of a man like Dan?

Betsey roused herself from an interval of memory to which she seldom gave thought room. She opened the front door, but there was no sound.

"Joanie," she called softly, "it's late."

Most arts require long study and application, but the most useful art of all, that of pleasing, requires only the desire. —LORD CHESTERFIELD.

There was no answer, so she stepped outside. The porch was empty, so were the walk and the street leading up to the house. She could see down Church Street as far as Main, and all of it was in darkness. A short wind rapped a branch of the syringa bush against the porch railing. The sound emphasized the lateness, roused the worry in her. This wasn't like Joanie. She was never late; even at noon today, when she'd gone to the library, she'd called to say she was having a sandwich with Margie.

Jimmy, Betsey murmured to herself, that Jimmy! No, she wasn't sure of him at all, she hadn't quite liked him, the very little she'd seen of him. He wasn't one to hang around; he'd just ring the bell and whisk Joanie away somewhere as fast as possible. But he was the big wheel of Colton High, the star athlete. A dreamboat, Joanie called him. All Betsey could see was a tall, broad-shouldered redhead with an engaging grin, not very good manners, and a habit of telephoning often and lengthily. She'd give anything to know what sort of things he said. Joanie's end of the conversation was always murmurous, provocative, punctured every so often by soft rippling laughter, and a small secret glow that she kept for a while after she'd hung up.

If Betsey said, "My goodness, what was on Jimmy's mind all that time?" Joanie came out of the dream abruptly, said, "Oh, nothing much."

The hall clock sounded twice, two clear, reminding chimes. Two, Betsey supposed, wasn't so awfully late, if she could be s about Jimmy. She found the telephone bo looked up Jimmy's number. She sat star at the name, wondering if she dared, o her doubts of Jimmy would creep into voice and offend his parents. Yet what she know of him? His picture in the pa after the big games, his name on everyo lips, his voice on the telephone.

Just last Sunday he'd appeared at front door. "Hi! Is Fremont home?"

It took her a second to realize that meant her daughter. "Oh, good afterno Jimmy," she said. "No, Joanie isn't ho but she won't be long. Won't you come in

"Well, no. Give her this, will you?" A he handed her a book.

"Oh, yes," she beamed, "her math boo Then quickly, brightly, "What are y studying for, Jimmy, something special She'd just draw him out, she thought, get know him better. "Have you selected yo college? Your father's, probably, or are y going to choose your own?"

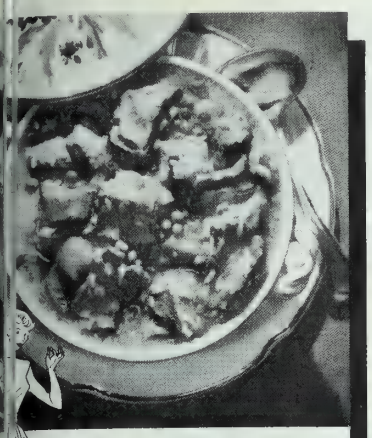
"I don't know." It was just a flat statemen

"Are you the oldest, do you have brothers sisters with college loy ties?"

He just mumbled son thing, she couldn't dr him out at all.

Not much to go on, s thought, consulting t clock again. She tried t front porch once more, but no one was in sig Without further qualms, she went back to t telephone and dialed the Sardons' number. rang three times, rather bleakly she decid then a man's voice answered, "Hello."

"Mr. Sardon?" She sounded breathle "This is Mrs. Fremont calling, Joa mother." Her voice rallied a bit. "She we to the high-school dance with your son t evening and they haven't come back y I'm sorry to disturb you, but ——"



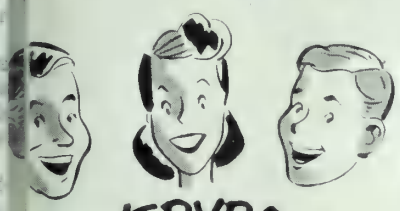
He interrupted, "Jimmy came in an ho ago, he's sound asleep."

"But ——"

"That's all I know," he said. "Sorry."

Betsey sat staring at the telephone, feeli the terror rise in her, the anger. Jimmy ho an hour ago! As though it was no concern his, as though he said, "What kind of daug ter do you have?"

"Joanie!" Betsey called aloud sudden listening. Then she sat back, defeated. S didn't want to phone anywhere else; s didn't want anyone else to know, to cri cize—anyone like Margie's mother, M Hawley. And yet she was afraid. This was like Joanie, not like her at all. Had she co home earlier, while she, Betsey, slept; h she called out something about spending t night with Margie? Betsey went to the d ing-room window and peered down t street, but you couldn't see much from the She started to reach for her glasses, but s saw herself an old woman peering throug curtain and she turned away. Joanie m have gone to Margie's.

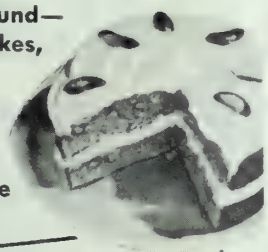


Tempting Flavor on a Budget

SPANISH LAMB STEW—Brown in fat, 2 lbs. lamb breast, cubed. Add quart each, hot water, and Herb-Ox Bouillon. Simmer covered 1½ hrs. Add sliced large onion; chopped green pepper; ½ c. washed, raw rice; ¼ tsp. pepper. Simmer 20 minutes. Add 2 cs. cooked peas, 1 cup cooked tomatoes. Cook 10 minutes longer. Thicken with flour if desired.

! Send for "The Herb-Ox Money-Saver" booklet! It's filled with 28 delicious menus and recipes. Herb-Ox flavors bring out the goodness of low cost meats. Bouillon or Chicken cubes add zest to stews, meats, make rich soup stocks, or gravy...improve flavor, stretch budgets! Send to The Pure Food Co., Inc., Maplewood, N. Y. Dept. LHJ-10.

Herb-Ox



BOUILLON CUBES

EVERYBODY LOVES Brazil Nuts

SAYS KERNEL NUT OF BRAZIL

Use them sliced, chopped, grated, ground—for pies, cakes, cookies, candies, toppings, salads and main course dishes.

SMART HOLIDAY IDEA

Brazil Nut Chips

Simmer Brazil Nuts 2 to 3 minutes in boiling water, then slice lengthwise. Spread in pan, sprinkle with melted butter, salt and toast in moderate oven (350° F.) until light brown—20 to 30 minutes. A real taste treat for the holiday nut bowl!

FREE: big, illustrated Brazil Nut Recipe Book. Write: Brazil Nut Association, Dept. LHJ-10, 100 Hudson St., New York 13, N. Y.

Betsey moved slowly back to the telephone. She must call and find out. She didn't want to call. She didn't want to for the same reason that she usually avoided Margie's mother whenever she possibly could. She could see the woman, Cora Hawley, slight, fortyish, thin-lipped and ferret-eyed, mother of Margie and two young brothers. She could hear the sweet slur of her speech. Surely Joanie wouldn't go there. But she might. There was something of Mrs. Hawley in Margie, the jealous overtones that fell so lightly on Joanie's youth and that struck with such sharp discord on her mother.

"Another new dress! Joanie Fremont!" The tone did it. You couldn't answer a tone. Anyhow, Joanie never heard it. Mrs. Hawley wasn't so subtle. "What a lovely dress Joanie had on," she would say, "that bright blue. Margie's quite wistful about wearing her beige again."

"It's lovely on her," Betsey would comfort. "Margie always looks lovely."

"Oh, thank you. That's just what I told her. 'Margie, be your own sweet self. Don't depend on clothes. You don't need so many of them.'"

Yes, Betsey heard. She never answered. There was no answer to the Margies and the Mrs. Hawleys. Nor would she tarnish Joanie's generous young mind by showing them to her. So, just possibly, Joanie had gone there for the night, called out that she was going, never dreaming her mother hadn't heard.

It was not probable, but it was possible, just as this lonely waiting night was. She had better call. Betsey moved slowly back to the telephone, drew a deep breath and dialed. Even the phone seemed to ring with a soft purr that ended in the gentle asking, "Yes?"

"Mrs. Hawley, this is Betsey Fremont."

"Why, Betsey, what's wrong?" The last word was flung at her.

"Nothing's wrong," Betsey corrected firmly. She thought, Except that my daughter's beautiful and yours isn't. Aloud she said, "It's just that I've been a bit forgetful and I can't remember who was having the snack party tonight. Is it at your house?"

"Snack party! I haven't heard of any snack party."

BETSEY thought, Of course you haven't, because there isn't one. I just have to use the indirect method with you so you won't twist something back on Joanie. Honesty is such a luxury. She said, "I thought Joanie said something about going on somewhere after the dance and I just wanted to remind her that it's time to come home."

"Well ——" Betsey's words were weaving through the tortuous path of Cora Hawley's mind, they were forming a thought which emerged presently. "Betsey, I know what a worry that child is to you. I've been worried for you all evening. Margie and I have just been talking over the dance. The way we always do. You know we're very close, she tells me everything. We'd been talking about our family, you know, the kids and all, and she said, 'Mamma, I feel so sorry for Joanie. I can talk to you, but someone actually asked Joanie the other day if Mrs. Fremont was her grandmother. And like tonight, she didn't even come to the dance.'"

"Oh, of course." Betsey's laugh was a little shrill. "You know I fell asleep reading and I forgot all about the square dance at Marling Center. Imagine!"

There was a slight disbelieving pause. Cora's soft voice came out of it. "I know just how upset you must be, Betsey. Why don't you call the state police? They'll know if anything's happened."

"Why, here she comes this minute," Betsey called out. "Hi, darling. . . . Good night, Cora." She got the receiver back. She swept tortured eyes about the quiet, empty hallway. Her body shook uncontrollably. It shook in queer places: in her cheeks, her upper arms, and within the tight circle of pain about her waist.

Joanie, where are you, what has happened to you? Surely you know you could tell me if something is wrong. No matter what it is. Because there's nothing I wouldn't do for you.

She checked herself. I must take this slowly, I must think carefully, I mustn't let a jealous for coffee with a College Education!

Every Wear-Ever coffee-maker, perk or drip, has built into it the results of exhaustive research at a great American university that determined the exact coffee-pot construction for making the best coffee every time. They're typically Wear-Ever, for lasting durability. Users say "More cups to the pound of coffee, too."

insist on a

WEAR-EVER

Coffeemaker

DE LUXE

Sauce pan set

They'll be a joy to use over long years to come. No rivets, rounded corners, for easiest cleaning. Comfortable Bakelite handles. Because they're aluminum, heat spreads evenly, fast. Most cooking can be done over low heat.

WEAR-EVER Aluminum

WEAR-EVER TACUCO ALUMINUM Trade Mark Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

©TACUCO 1951

WORTH WAITING FOR

Because so much aluminum is used for defense, your dealer may be temporarily out of stock of some types. Ask him to save your favorite roaster from his next shipment.

THE ALUMINUM COOKING UTENSIL CO., DEPT. 1810, NEW KENSINGTON, PA.

woman create something for me. But where are you, why didn't you go to the dance? You got all dressed for it. I got everything ready for you. You liked the new dress.

It's Jimmy! Her thoughts deepened. You went somewhere with him on Friday after school and you were very late getting in for dinner. I put the box with the new dress on your bed when I came in from town, and I went in to give daddy his phone calls. I told him you hadn't come in yet and he said, "She'll be along. Remember me, Joanie's father?" I stood on tiptoe to kiss him and I heard you come in. "There she is now," I said and I called, "Is that you, Joanie?" I thought you didn't hear, because you ran right upstairs without speaking.

Betsey closed her eyes and brought back the scene. She said to Dan, "She didn't hear me, I guess. I'll go up."

She went up slowly, realizing she was a bit tired after the day in town, but impatient for Joanie to see the new dress. Halfway up the stairs, she could see her, already seated at her desk, a book open before her. For just a second it seemed as though Joanie weren't real, as though she didn't breathe or move, as though she were waiting. It was only a second, because Betsey called out as she went the rest of the way up, "Surprise! The box is on your bed."

"Have a nice day shopping?" Joanie asked, without turning.

"Yes, wonderful. I found the most adorable dress, red jersey, just the right shade of nice bright red."

Joanie rose then, slender in the plaid jumper with the big pocket, her dark gold hair not cut jaggedly short, but parted in the middle and held back with two little combs. Her brown eyes were quiet and reflective as she said, "Oh, I didn't see the box."

She made no move to open it, but Betsey swept forward and undid it eagerly. "For the dance tomorrow night," she said. She swung it out, held it up.

"It's—it's out of this world," Joanie said. Her voice didn't sound quite right, perhaps she didn't like it.

Betsey rushed on enthusiastically. "With the old, gold bracelets." She opened the rose leather box on the dresser top, rummaged through it for the bracelets and the gold locket that had belonged to her grandmother. "See, they go perfectly. And you know what," she confided beamingly, "I think I'd tie my hair back with a small black velvet ribbon. You know, just a touch."

Joanie smiled, and with her smile Betsey felt an overwhelming relief. Joanie said in a low, amused voice, "Mother, that dress would look wonderful on you. I really think you should wear it and come to the dance."

Betsey laughed. "I've had my pretty dresses," she said lightly. "I used to have a new dress for every dance."

"Oh, never," Joanie said.

"That was before, of course."

"Before what?"

"Oh, before the war—the first war. It was gay. That's how I know what girls like and want, I suppose. Well, I'd better get back to the kitchen or there won't be any dinner, gay or otherwise."

"I'll help you," Joanie said quietly.

"Oh, no, no. It won't take me long." And it wouldn't, she thought.

Yes, Joanie had liked the dress. In the dim, waiting hallway, Betsey rubbed her hands over her elbows. It was a gesture of age, of indecision. She had seen it in countless other women and pitied them a little.

Finally she rose and walked through the prim old parlor, switched on all the lights. She stood staring at the mahogany, the sofa and chairs she'd upholstered herself in rose damask, the big framed picture of Joanie, aged five, her laughing elfin face uptilted, her blond hair shining. "I wouldn't take a million dollars for that," Dan often said, "it's everything she is, and everything she means to us."

Everything! She is everything to us, Betsey thought. She opened the door of her husband's office, sought his desk calendar,

STYLIZE YOUR KITCHEN around this plastic

Lustro-Ware

CANISTER SET

Smart-Colorful and Rustproof

You'll thrill to the cheerful color accent of sparkling Lustro-Ware Canisters. Practical, too, for their compact, modern design holds more, easier to clean, always sanitary. Over 100 other Lustro-Ware Plastic Housewares in matching colors to glamorize your home . . . welcome gifts. At stores everywhere . . . love that budget price. For catalog write COLUMBUS PLASTIC PRODUCTS, INC., Col., O.

Extra Capacity 4 piece set in spark kitchen colors, at most stores $3.4

Cookie Jar $

Bread Box $

Chef size Salt a Pepper set w screw tops

Slightly higher in Can

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

COMPARE • You'll Say Lustro-Ware

"MEXENE ADDS NEW LIF TO FAVORITE SPAGHETTI!"

Says Mrs. John H. Burks of Benton Harbor, Mic

No matter how commo place the meal, Mexe adds that special flav that wins compliments f the cook. Just ask Mr Burks! She uses this A Purpose Seasoning, unique blend of rare peppers and spices, to ad new life to spaghetti and to give taste delight meats, poultry, seafoods, soups, and vegetable Ask your grocer for the one and only Mexene A Purpose Seasoning. A can or bottle costs less than 20¢.

Photo posed by professional model

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Walker's AUSTEX Chili Co.

AUSTIN, TEXAS

CHILI • TAMALES • BEEF STEW
BRAISED BEEF HASH • SANDWICH SPREAD
SPAGHETTI and MEAT BALLS

I cook lik the world great chef

It's easy! When the recipe calls for oil- I use Pompeian Olive Oil. It gives cooke foods a marvelous, nut-sweet flavor! An when you fry with it—what delicate extr crispness Pompeian gives. No wonder th world's best chefs use Pompeian Olive O for cooking and delicious salads. Try Pompeian today and see for yourself! Write for recipe book—Department L.

POMPEIAN

PURE IMPORTED VIRGIN

OLIVE OIL

Pompeian Olive Oil Corp., Baltimore 24, Maryland

EXTRA MONEY—Sell ALL maga subscriptions f your home. No door to door. No investment. Few h weekly. Can earn $20–$25 or more.

"Turner" Dept. 351, 30 Irving Pl., New Yor

d at his calls. The last one was Watand a rural phone number. She sat at sk and called it. At least the Watkinses awake and unoffended. The doctor, said, had just left.

r first upsurge of relief was followed by old thought that, on late calls like this, en stopped along the line for a bite and of coffee. Where, she didn't know. She her hand tightened about the telephone, mind bursting with worry. Something's ened, I know it, I feel it. I —— She tried wn the panic. Nothing is wrong, she told lf sternly. Her hand released the tele-, beat a restless tattoo on the desk. Margie and I are very close, she tells me hing." Joanie didn't. Joanie didn't er anything.

Was that Jimmy who called?"

Yes, mother, it was."

What did he want?"

Oh, nothing special."

Did the girls like your dress?"

Yes, they did."

What did they say about it?"

Say? Oh, nothing, I guess."

What did Margie ?"

She didn't have a dress."

Does Margie have y invitations?"

About as many as I I guess."

, she and Joanie n't close. She 't know why. She d her so much. S knew about h and fun, her youth had been that. She could h back so easily the years, as gh they didn't , to that thought feeling of being about sixteen. B she couldn't reach nie. There was stillness in her, forbidding, motiless quiet, as gh she were in e invisible room w a gently closed r. No, she and nie were not close; matter how hard sl tried, they were er close.

ust this morning, when Joanie came dstairs, she asked her, "Shall I wash r hair for you?"

I've just done it myself," Joanie said. "I g up early."

Oh, darling." Betsey was aghast. "Did rinse it carefully?" She loved the soft gl of her daughter's hair, the wave she h cherished since babyhood. She brought J nie's breakfast to her, pressed her fingers a inst the fair curls. "It looks wonderf" she said, "but I'd have been glad to do i or you."

I have to go out," Joanie said, "to the l ary. I have to look up something for English class."

ROBABLY meeting Jimmy, Betsey thought. t what fun could there be in a public libury, more than in your own home? Of rse their parlor was stiff; they'd left it, rilly, as it had always been. Perhaps they uld do it over, put in easy chairs, install tevision.

Joanie had phoned at noon to say she was ving a sandwich with Margie. That was e way Joanie was, she always phoned. Bet- got out the red dress and pressed it, hung on a hanger in the closet doorway. She spread e old necklace and the bracelets out on the esser top, found the little black velvet rib- for her hair, the lace-trimmed slip and e sheer stockings. She brushed the black de pumps carefully. That was this afternon.

The hall clock sounded the half hour. Bet- 's mind clung to the sound so that she rose and followed it. She came alive with the movement and sought the porch, stood on the steps, her eyes knowing she would still find the street empty and dark.

"Joanie didn't come to the dance." Why hadn't she gone? What was she doing? Margie was home, Jimmy was home. All Colton lay in darkness. Perhaps she'd left a note.

Betsey went back into the house, sped up the stairs, paused in the doorway of her daughter's room again. There it was, mute and waiting in the dim light, a dream of a room. No one in Colton had anything like it. Not even herself. There was the peignoir, the matching gown and the rosebud slippers. There was no note!

BETSEY peered into the trash basket, bent to retrieve a small slip of paper, a bill. She reached in her pocket for her glasses, carried the bill to the light. Kane's! That was a cheap store downtown. They never bought there. She squinted at the item, "Dress $5.95. Pd." What was Joanie doing with a cheap dress? Betsey went to the closet, pushed aside the array of expensive, well-chosen clothes. Too many, perhaps. Yes, too many. Oh, but only if you were jealous and critical. There was no dress from Kane's.

Betsey's nerves beat in a swift crescendo of fright. "That child." But she wasn't that child, she was her child. She didn't know her very well, she wasn't close to her, but she was sure of her.

If you're sure, why are you afraid? You were afraid about Jimmy, but he's home. She isn't with him. Where did he leave her? You must speak to him, you must find out.

She went slowly down the stairs, her eyes on the phone as though it were a live thing, live and menacing. That child! "Jimmy came in an hour ago. Sorry." "Why don't you call the state police? They'd know if anything had happened." Betsey found the number of the state police and dialed carefully.

"This is Mrs. Fremont, on Church Street," she said. "The doctor is out and I'm worried about my daughter. She hasn't come home yet."

"How long has she been missing?"

Betsey didn't like the word missing. "She's never later than about one-thirty," she told him, "and it's twenty-five minutes of three now."

"Look, Mrs. Fremont, she'll come home." He actually chuckled. "She's probably parked ——"

"Oh, no, no," Betsey interrupted indignantly. "Not my daughter, she isn't like that. She's a very ——"

"I know, I know," he placated. "That's what they all think."

"I don't think, I know," Betsey snapped. "Something has happened."

"Sure," he agreed mildly. "She's met a guy she likes. Look, if I started out hunting for every girl who's an hour late getting home, I'd have something to do. Now if she's missing any length of time, we'll get a description of her and send out a seven-state alarm ——"

"Oh, no," Betsey repeated, shocked. "It's nothing like that." That sounded like things you read in the papers.

The voice sighed, "She'll be home."

Betsey hung up. She could only wait. Even a word to anyone else, and it sounded sensational, awful.

(Continued on Page 205)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

In Memoriam

By Helen S. White

Perhaps another fall
I need not, hands clenched, twist
my thought
To stop imagining you, window-bound
Lying so sickly, and your eyes that sought
Whatever bird may fly
In a city sky.

It may be that the years will take away
Your startled eyes, the moment of no breath.
Death is an utter silence.
I shut my eyes in pain—the memory of your eyes Humorous, patient, and your pale mouth smiling
Tells me not to cry.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

To rake or not to rake? Authorities differ on which is best for your lawn, but the kids are settling the problem anyway. Might as well relax—their antics are just a sign they're healthy and well-fed. Keep them that way—with real, genuine Minute Tapioca Cream—full of milk, eggs, and country-kitchen goodness! Try this . . .

Light 'n' luscious treat

So quick...so easy...so good... made the real Minute Tapioca way!

STRAWBERRY TAPIOCA

1 recipe Minute Tapioca Cream Strawberry Jam

Prepare Minute Tapioca Cream according to simple package directions. (Just add milk, sugar, egg yolk; bring to boil; fold into beaten egg white.) Chill. Then, into sherbet glasses, spoon alternate layers of Minute Tapioca Cream and homemade strawberry jam. (Or any favorite jam or jelly.) Makes 4 or 5 delicious servings. Minute Tapioca fluffs up light as sunshine. And as for flavor, no ready-made dessert comes close. It's easy to see why real, genuine Minute Tapioca is America's No. 1 pudding dessert!

REAL TAPIOCA! MINUTE BRAND TAPIOCA

FULL OF COUNTRY-KITCHEN GOODNESS!

Did you know that Minute Tapioca is the best possible thickener for fruit pies? If your recipe calls for cornstarch, substitute the same amount of Minute Tapioca. If it calls for flour, substitute slightly less.

FREE! Over 50 recipes for pies and other delicious desserts made with Minute Tapioca. Send your name and address to Minute Tapioca, Box 815, New York 46, N.Y.

Offer expires April 1, 1952. Good only in U.S.A. Product of General Foods

For every woman who leads a double life...

ENDLESS PARTY DISHES keep your hands endlessly busy "washing up." But even so you needn't have dry, red, rough hands! Not if you guard them with Trushay, the "beforehand" lotion. So different, so oil-rich, Trushay protects hands even in hot, sudsy water. Use Trushay BEFORE every wash-up task. Then, at party time, it's . . .

PARTY-DRESS HANDS—lovely hostess hands, so soft and feminine. You can hav them, no matter how busy you are—with Trushay's beauty insurance. And remembe Trushay's "beforehand" protection is only part of its magic. It's a luxurious, quic softener, too—a finishing touch you'll want to use any time. Begin today to use Trusha

TRUSHAY... the "beforehand" lotion... guards your hands even in hot, sudsy water!

A fabulous skin softener, too! Trushay's liquid velvet smooths away roughness on elbows, heels and knees—keeps them baby-soft.

A delightfully flattering powder base! Just stroke on Trushay—see how your powder clings for hours without that streaky, made-up look!

Wonderful for chapped hands! What soothing relief! Oil-rich Trushay rescues hands from rough redness. Keeps them comfortable!

A PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-M

(Continued from Page 203)

er a while she opened the front door, ned the darkened street again. It seemed strangely still now, as though night settled upon it with finality and she expect nothing more of it until morn- The syringa bush snapped against the railing again. The sound was dismal, achful. Betsey turned toward the , and then she saw the box, tucked be- he umbrella stand. She didn't want to it, she didn't want to see the black s that spelled "Kane's" across the cardboard or the bit of red dress that d from beneath the cover. She left it . She came in and closed the door.

e went into the parlor and sat uncom- ly on the edge of the stiff sofa, her s clasped in her lap, her legs and feet d in a gesture of almost peasant humil- er eyes on the picture. She kept think- f the red dress: that she had bought it Joanie had liked it, that she had looked etty in it.

e had come down and turned about for ather. "How do you like my new dress, y?" she asked.

I'm-m," Dan said. "Where did you get '"

Mother picked it out."

Your mother's a good picker," he said, ning, and Betsey had hurried on with dinner dishes to the kitchen so Joanie dn't insist on helping, spot her dress or her manicure. She actually hadn't seen eave the house.

t you liked the dress. Why did you buy a one and leave the nice one hidden here? t sort of dress is it? It's d, that's all I know. A dress you bought your- You've gone someplace e you didn't want to a red dress. You must run upstairs and ged while I was in the en, then you hid the o I wouldn't know. Someone asked her if Mrs. Fremont was grandmother!" Betsey let the words slowly. She was fifty-five, her hair had thick silver streak through it. She was trim and slender, her dimples still flick- in her cheeks. She had been young and and popular, she had danced till dawn. hadn't forgotten. But now she was fifty- And there had been those long years of al, the ones when the world seemed filled other people's children, when Christmas a mockery, when vacations or trips nt strangers inevitably bringing the con- ation around to whisking out pictures, ing before her tortured eyes the bright hing faces, recounting the sayings, the arkable happenings. And, almost when couldn't bear it, Dan's eyes would meet . kind and quiet and, somehow, healing. n, unbelievably, she had borne a living l.

nbelievably! Betsey's eyes were fastened he picture. That was Joanie, her child. really did have her, going on sixteen, d and beautiful. For that child she could nything.

that moment she heard the steps on porch, the front door opening.

Joanie!" she called. Suddenly alive, she across the parlor to the hallway. Joanie d there, starting up the stairs, the dress under her arm. From beneath her tan there showed a cheap beige dress. She not turn. "Joanie," Betsey pleaded, "hat's wrong, dear?"

Wrong!" The voice was low and un- ndly. "Why should anything be wrong?"

But it's late, dear, it's very late. Jimmy home an hour ago."

So you called Jimmy," Joanie stated bit- y. She turned then and faced her mother, d her chin as though she were flinging off il. Her face was white and unhappy, her deep and dark. "I didn't go with Jimmy ght. I went with another boy, out to the ern, just to get away from the whole darn g. I didn't wear your dress. I wore one of own. I did that for you, so no one would who the girl in the red dress was. 'Oh, Mrs. Fremont's little girl. I wonder how she likes that.'"

"But the dance?" Betsey trembled. "Why didn't you go to the dance?"

"Because . . . Jimmy and I are through. He's dropped me. Now . . . he likes Margie instead. He took her tonight." It was tragedy, aged fifteen, but her child was hurt with it, and, because she was, Betsey was hurt too.

"He took Margie?" she asked. "Oh, Joanie!" The memory of Mrs. Hawley rose in her throat and choked her. "If you'd only told me, dear. I wouldn't have called there either. I'm so sorry, darling, so terribly sorry. What can I do?"

"Do!" The word came with thin patience through Joanie's hurt young lips. "Don't do anything. That's why I had to get away tonight, that's why I stayed out all day today, and Friday after school, so you wouldn't know. So you wouldn't do anything. You think for me, you breathe for me, you dress for me, you even dream for me. Would it be too much to ask to let me have my own broken heart?"

"Oh!" Betsey stepped back as though she had been struck.

Joanie's face softened, so did her voice. But the softness was worse. "I'm sorry, mother. I know. You have only me." It was a gentle hopelessness, but only for a moment. Then Joanie shifted the box under her arm. "One thing," she told the dim hallway, "I'll never bring up an only child. I'm going to have five children." She took the steps quickly, and closed her bedroom door.

We are none of us as other men or other women when we are young. At about thirty-five we begin to be like other people. —MOTT.

Betsey Fremont stood frozen, her eyes frozen, too, in that swift upward glance. No matter what this night may bring, she had promised herself. She tried to wrench her eyes from Joanie's closed door. She forbade herself the privacy of her daughter's tears. "You even dream for me!" She tried to shut out the picture of the red dress and the bit of black velvet ribbon.

The telephone jangled sharply. She shuddered at the sound. Emergency call . . . state police . . . Mrs. Hawley It shrilled on. When it stopped ringing, at last, and Betsey gathered up the broken bits of herself and started up the stairs, the voice of Cora Hawley danced after her in horrid haunting whispers.

"Mrs. Fremont . . . her grandmother." Betsey's cheeks sagged, her legs and hips felt heavy and old, her hand on the railing was work-worn and brittle. The skin on it puckered a bit. "Margie and I are so close, she tells me everything." She and Joanie weren't close, Joanie didn't tell her ——

Betsey paused, her hand gripping the rail. Yes, Joanie did tell her. Joanie had looked her in the eyes and given it to her straight, the truth. She had said, "Stop living for me, I can live for myself." And then she had been sorry she had hurt her and tried to understand. She had understood, too, as much as she knew.

A sweet, slow pain stirred Betsey's heart to life again, brought a fine mist to her eyes. Her cheeks lifted in a proud, secret smile. She would not be possessed, her daughter, not by anyone, even her mother. And she, Betsey, would never possess her again. The dresses, the dances, the phone calls, even the heartaches, were Joanie's, not hers. She paused outside her daughter's room, her hand touched the knob. She would tell her, she would make it right.

Please, darling, her heart wept, now I know. Her lips parted to speak, but closed again. Those weren't the right words, there were no right words, there were no words at all. "Oh, the red loafers, Joanie. If you really like them better, I just put them in your closet. I ——"

Don't do anything! Her hand dropped from the knob and she turned down the hall, her lips still curved in their smile. Joanie had told her, and now she knew. She would never do anything, ever again. After a while Joanie would know, too, and they would be very close.

THE END

Stokely's Finest NEW PACK Peas

The Pick of the Crop

ENJOY THEM TODAY

FRESH-PICKED

FRESH-PACKED

FRESH-TASTING

Stock your shelf for winter with this sweetness of summer

Look · Listen · Enjoy — Stokely-Van Camp's Little Show
Tues. and Thurs. Evenings · NBC-TV Network

Stokely's Finest
SINCE 1898

2 GREAT NAMES IN FOOD that mean QUICK MEALS for you

Van Camp's
SINCE 1861

During rush periods at accountant Jim McCoy's office, whole family pitches in. Joyce runs adding machine, Jimmy and Stevie fold bills, "stuff" envelopes.

No candy allowed for between-meal "piecing" but carrots, raisins okayed.

Chef-in-the-making Jimmy, master of the 'burger, stirring cherries for pie.

Joyce, like mother, loves decorating, gets particularly high grades in art.

FIGHTING THE BUDGET with the James McCoys

A part-time working mother with a "pattern for living"— Juanita McCoy, of Topeka, Kansas.

by HILDEGARDE DOLSON

Nita's biggest mealtime aid (next to Jim, who brews a mean pot of coffee) is home freezer unit, acquired from customer as payment of a bill.

JUANITA McCOY, of Topeka, Kansas, is a five-foot-two mother of three children, who has no use for "career wives who want to wear the pants," and is working half days in her accountant husband's business—a bookkeeping service—to help win the Battle of the Budget.

Along with her small, round figure, curly black bangs and wide-set hazel eyes, she has a voice so soft and melodious that when you first hear her discussing business and budget costs, you're as respectfully astonished as if you heard a mourning dove quoting the stock-market report. She and lanky, genial-mannered James McCoy took a depth-of-depression leap into marriage in 1933, when they were both twenty-one, and they've had plenty of practice in making a dime act like a dollar; but now, with their income higher on paper than ever before, they say they've never felt so pushed for money. In 1950, the five-year-old business netted $6350. Of this amount, the McCoys lived on $5220, and the rest went toward paying off the $8000 bank loan that financed the expensive calculating machines and other equipment for the small downtown office. "Those machines cost more than our whole house!" Nita McCoy tells you.

Sitting in the tranquilly attractive living room of the $4750 ex-farmhouse, on the leafy edge of Topeka, she talked about the good and bad sides of their budget problems: "Jim's and my most serious arguments have been over money, and the office equipment is an example. Maybe I'm almost too thrifty and cautious, but I still think we could have started the business with, say, one calculating machine,

PHOTOGRAPHS BY ESTHER BUBLEY

Biggest problem for the Jim McCo

Cowboy clothes, TV rate high with Stevie. Crisis-averting decision: his 24"-wheel bike was faster, handier than larger one.

and expanded gradually. But Jim likes to do things up royally, or all of a sudden he'll get an extravagant streak."

She said her husband decided recently that they should trade in their secondhand 1948 Chevrolet sedan for a new station wagon. "He pulled a mean trick," Nita explained, "because first he talked it up to the children until they were all excited, and then he tackled me. I just said flatly it was out of the question, so then everybody was sore at mommy."

Inside McCoy home is pleasant fam- liv ing; exterior remodeling is a "to be ne

Her aura of wifely exasperation was replaced by an indulgent smile as she described Jim's splurging on presents. "Whether we're broke or not, he'll bring me a corsage on our anniversary, and for Christmas he'll turn up with a satin-and-lace nightgown when what I really need is a slip. But it gives me such a feeling of being loved and glamorous that it's worth it. And when I get really angry at him—like once when he bought a motor scooter—then I soon cool down and start stacking

Nita discusses plans for money raising with women's group at church which all McCoys attend. Jim sings bass in the choir, believes firmly in power of prayer.

Jimmy, 11, and an enthusiastic Scout, is momentary victim of first-aid practice. His patrol is called the Flaming Arrow, and meets in the church building.

Stevie makes mer a birthday party, forge first-gradeshock. (Clas

Jim lunches in town: Nita and the youngsters at home. Stevie, 6, is at the stage of saying an automatic "No" to everything before doing it.

Nita once planned to be a costume designer. She makes most of Joyce's clothes, frequently copies basic patterns from fashion illustrations.

happiness can't buy money.

up his good qualities against that one fault. He's just about the most deeply kind and good-tempered man imaginable, and he adores his family and would do anything for us."

Her glance went to the $400 television set enthroned in a corner, and she smiled again. "I couldn't say no to that, because an appliance dealer suggested a swap to Jim—bookkeeping services in exchange for the set." She said the young McCoys—pretty fourteen-year-old Joyce, eleven-year-old Jimmy and new-to-school Stevie—had felt swaggeringly rich ever since the set arrived. "And they've done without so many of the things their friends have that Jim and I get a big kick out of seeing them with TV." She made a rueful face. "Although when I think how we scramble to meet our insurance payments, it seems like an awful luxury to have a set that cost as much as a year's premiums."

She and her husband often talk over a major financial problem, such as the bank and insurance payments, with Joyce and Jimmy. "Because we'd rather explain it to them reasonably than have them overhear us stewing and fretting later." Mentioning that tall, wiry Jimmy, now in seventh grade, is the most sympathetic and affectionate of the children, she said, "But he's almost too responsive to Jim's and my moods. Last year he was daydreaming too much in school, and not doing his lessons, and I think it was partly because I'd been too worried over money problems, and wasn't showing enough interest." Nita and Pretty 14-year-old Joyce and overnight guest Susie discover they can play a recognizable version of Chopsticks—the hard way.

told all" about Santa. "I suppose," he accused Nita, "you're Easter Bunny too.")

One watched pot that defies the old adage about never boiling (probably showing off for the girls). Joyce in jeans is not unusual, but pretty clothes catch her eye.

Membership of the Sertoma ("Service to Man") Club of Topeka is drawn from Masonic professional men. The club—Jim is secretary-treasurer—meets Tuesday nights.

Jimmy, as good a salesman as his father, once expressed envy of ticket-selling rival, whose prospects were "all rich and all civic-minded!"

New to the young set: the Charleston. Jim taught Joyce to dance, still practices with her. He and Nita love to dance, but are "too darn busy."

"World War II in the Philippines" still rages in the McCoy neighborhood. Jimmy has built a three-story fort in yard; boys attack with real rifles (unloaded).

"If you learn to live successfully within the family, relations outside should be easier."

the teacher had a helpful talk, and Jimmy is taking more pains with his homework, although he still prefers Jack London, shack building and Scout activities. To improve his arithmetic and help maintain his B average, the McCoys play a quiz game when they are riding in the car, featuring such posers as How much is 9 times 6?

Nita says she herself is terrible at arithmetic, and that her morning's work at the office consists mostly of picking up and delivering bookkeeping accounts, payroll, Social (Continued on Page 220)

Picnics at Shawnee Lake, with boating and fishing afterward, are pleasant prelude to the big event of the McCoy year: their two-week camping trip together—and, they agree, they would "hock anything" before missing the fun. Cost last year: $150.

Jim was a cagey and persistent suitor, says Nita is "the perfect companion and always has been." Most serious arguments, Nita says, have been over money—Jim has extravagant streak. "I can live on a little or a lot, but I enjoy being thrifty."

See them! Taste them! You'll agree with millions...

KRAFT DeLuxe SLICES are best ever for cheese sandwiches!

BETTER FLAVOR! PERFECT SLICES!

By a marvelous new Kraft-patented method the fine process cheese is formed into slices as it comes from the pasteurizers—with extra-good flavor sealed in every one. Every slice is perfect. (No slivers or "curling" dried edges. No broken slices.)

KRAFT-PROTECTED!

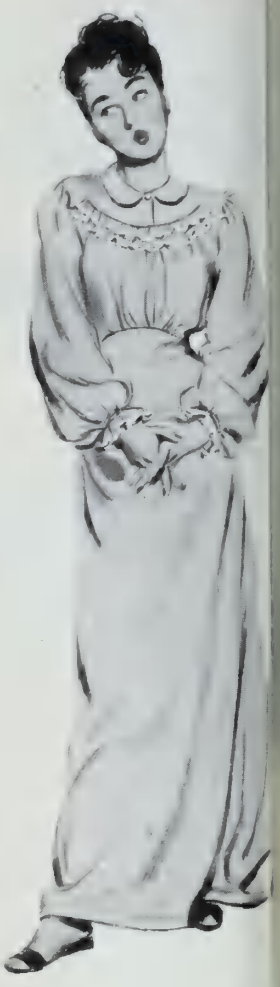
Immediately after pasteurization, 8 big, perfect slices are sealed in a neat ½-lb. package by Kraft—protected until you slit the wrapper in your own kitchen. Discover these fine slices and you'll never be without them!

HANDIER!

At room temperature these slices separate so easily it's "almost like peeling a banana." And they keep beautifully—are always ready at a moment's notice for snacks, and cheese trays, and husky toasted luncheon sandwiches.

FIVE DELICIOUS VARIETIES!

Besides the extra-mellow Kraft Pasteurized Process American there's Pimento, nut-sweet Swiss, Brick and sharp Old English Brand. The packages stack so neatly in the refrigerator, are such space-savers you'll keep several kinds on hand.



THE WORLD'S FAVORITE CHEESES ARE MADE OR IMPORTED BY KRAFT

All dressed up for dreaming

. . . in Munsingwear Bals

And you are dressed . . . to sleep pretty . . . and cozy. Munsingwear balbriggans are softest cotton, close-knit to keep you warm even if you do turn and toss your blankets. Chin-high, wrist-long and ankle-long coverage makes Munsingwear Bals the best cold-snubbers ever!

"Wynken" Gown . . . Aqua Mist, Blue Heaven, Pink Dawn, Redskin. 14-20. About $4.50

"Tip-Top" P. J.'s . . . Blue/Navy. Gold/Brown, Gray/Redskin. 14-20. About $4.95

Matching P. J.'s in children's sizes 4 to 16. About $3.50

"Pretty-Prim" Gown . . . Aqua Mist, Blue Heaven, Pink Dawn. 14-20. About $4.50

It's knit . . . it's nice . . . it's Munsingwear . . . at better stores everywhere

T. A. HOBAN

Attractive Nita McCoy always finds time to give her daughter a helping hand—enjoys "fixing her up!" Here, she puts the final touch on Joyce's hairdo.

How do you Rate with your Daughter?

By Dawn Crowell Norman Beauty Editor of the Journal

FIFTEEN-YEAR-OLD Joyce McCoy is as popular, likable and attractive as any teen-ager we know. And the behind-the-scenes heroine who's responsible for the poised, well-mannered Joy is her mother, Nita McCoy. Nita knows that it's hard for any teen-age girl to bridge the gap from awkwardness to glamour, and is always available with a helping hand in selecting a becoming shade of lipstick—or applying nail polish and setting pin curls, where Joy is "all thumbs." What's more, Nita's own standards of good grooming set a goal for Joy. Who realizes that her attractive mother is knowledgeable about good looks, and seeks her advice. Nita can see that her efforts in her daughter's behalf have been more than rewarded, for Joy is a cheerful, co-operative girl who unconsciously extends to her mother everyday courtesy and respect. And Nita has the satisfaction of knowing that a great part of her daughter's self-confidence, and therefore her happiness, is the result of her efforts to guide Joy in making the most of her good looks.

The Case of the Unwanted Freckles

Take, for instance, the matter of Joy's freckles. She has more than her share of them: in fact, the "sprinkling" extends beyond her nose to take in her entire face.

"Joy's father and I have always known that she hated having so many freckles," Nita says. "But it wasn't until I discovered she was trying to hide them behind a thick mask of make-up that we realized something had to be done. That night Jim and I discussed the situation. Without a doubt, Joy was fated to live with her freckles. This meant it was up to us to see that she not only tolerated them, but that, if possible, she actually made an asset of them. We had an idea. It may sound silly—but it was successful. We started talking 'freckles' to Joy, something we had never done before out of deference to her attitude toward them. Jim did it in a special way. Joy became his 'cute little freckled-face girl.' Joy's freckles (he assured her) were an important part of her McCoy personality. Joy's friends were attractive (he conceded), but they didn't have that piquant freckled-face look he thought was terrific! Gradually, Joy's disparaging references to her freckles became less vehement as well as less heartfelt. Finally (about three months later) Joy came to us one day and announced solemnly and sincerely, 'I guess I don't really mind having freckles. In fact, out of all of them, there are only two I don't like!'"

(Continued on Page 224)

CAN YOUR DAUGHTER DEPEND ON YOU?

If she were to bring a gang home at this moment, would she be pleased with the way you look?

Do you ask her advice about your own appearance, as well as give her advice about hers? Take into consideration her likes and dislikes about what you wear, how you do your hair, so she'll be proud of the way you look?

Have you learned the knack of being a helpful "other hostess" to her friends, without personally sitting in on their fun?

Do you compliment her when she looks especially fresh and pretty, with the knowledge that your praise will prompt more-consistent grooming efforts on her part?

Will the everyday manners and social graces your daughter is learning at home prepare her for meeting the outside world with confidence and good grace?

CAN YOUR MOTHER DEPEND ON YOU?

Do you thank her for the routine jobs she does for you (straightening your room, mending your clothes) and occasionally show your appreciation with a surprise gift, an unsolicited favor?

If you think she would look prettier with a new hairdo or make-up, do you offer tactful, helpful suggestions, rather than just register your complaint?

Do you think of your mother as an independent being with an individuality of her own—not just as "my mother," who's convenient to have around?

Do you keep her in touch with your whereabouts to avoid having her worry unnecessarily?

Do you do your share of housekeeping without having to be asked?

Your legs can be your prettiest accessory

IN SHEER SHEER

Berkshire

stockings

For the luxury touch that can make your legs your prettiest after-dark accessory, ask for the stockings that shape a prettier curve . . .
fabulous Berkshire 60s in sheer sheer 15 denier.

"60" means more stitches
to the inch . . . for smoother texture, more snag resistance, longer wear.

SMOOTH AND SHARP... FOR IMPACT AFTER DARK. PLAY SMOOTH BLENDING COLORS AGAINST ONE OR TWO SHARP ACCESSORY NOTES THIS NEW WAY:

SMOOTH: THE BERKSHIRE 60 GAUGE STOCKINGS IN "SMOOTH TAUPE" TO BLEND WITH THE INKY BLUE OF A CLEVER LITTLE COCKTAIL HAT AND FRIVOLOUS OPEN-HEELED SHOES TO MATCH.

SHARP: THE HOT PINK OF THE 16-BUTTON GLOVES, AND LACE-SHEATHED CLUTCH PURSE.

SMOOTH AND SHARP: THE BLUE, GOLD AND GLITTER NOTES OF JEWELRY AND THE BIG FAKE SILKEN ROSE. ALL FROM H. & S. POGUE, CINCINNATI.

7:30 A.M. finds Mrs. McCoy readying breakfast in checked gingham, Vogue Design No. 7336. Apron from extra yard.

8:30 A.M. Out of the house in basic flannel dress, crisp black-and-white chintz or taffeta collar. Vogue Design No. 7483.

10:30 A.M. Back to the house to pick up her coat . . . in bright red fleece that slips into and out of car easily. Note collar and pocket detail. Can also be belted. Vogue Design No. S-4188.

$100 WORKING WARDROBE

Nita McCoy's wardrobe must be suitable for office as well as home, for that is where she spends half of each day. Her red fleece coat goes over everything. Her gray flannel basic dress has many neckline changes . . . she wears it to the office with crisp collars, at home with a chiffon scarf and a flower at the neckline. Her black suit (actually a slim dress with matching jacket) does double duty. Worn with the jacket, it is perfect for town; the dress looks pretty for entertaining at home. A pretty checked gingham with matching apron and a pastel wool-flannel housecoat complete her wardrobe. Mrs. McCoy keeps an eye on the budget and feels the $100 investment in these fabrics is a sound one. By NORA O'LEARY

HOW AMERICA LIVES

TANA HOBAN

7:30 P.M. Putting finishing touches on the table, guests due any minute. Slim black dress without the jacket, jeweled pin.

4:30 P.M. For engagement in town she wears black wool dress, matching jacket, velvet trim. Vogue Design No. S-4235.

11:00 P.M. At last, time to relax and read in her soft blue flannel robe. Silk collar and cuffs. Vogue Design No. 7440.

© VOGUE

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont. (*Connecticut residents please add sales tax.)

Other views, sizes and prices on Page 250.

A PAINTBRUSH AND A SEWING MACHINE did wonders for my roon

HAROLD ROWLER

Fresh paint, gay draperies and slip covers disguise the old c and keep the McCoy living room charmingly up to date.
McCoy plans a favorite color scheme, then does the whole job he

By taking out a partition, the living room, below, and the dining room, above, were joined to make one big spacious room for family activities.

By HENRIETTA MURD
Interior Decoration Editor of the J

"I HAVE painted and papered all my rooms several ti and while the results aren't perfect, the budget take it." Mrs. McCoy, as clever a decorator as sh a dressmaker, has every reason to be proud of her acc plishments. "Our secondhand sofa cost about $18.50 inc
ing a rebuilt job. We paid $1.50, $2.50 and $3.50 for our club chairs, and of course I made the draperies slip covers myself. A beginner should make her first cover slowly, fitting it right side out, pinning it, marking the seams, turning and basting before final sew
At all fabric counters there are illustrated booklets w show you how, but good fitting (Continued on Page

HOW AMERICA LIVES

FRIENDS AND RELATIVES

UNGER SISTER: "When I get married, ant yummy Cannon Percales like yours. t moonlight yellow. So romantic!"

DWAGER AUNT: "The chambermaid? t very good, my deah! She used aquamarine eets. On this bed I always use sunrise peach!"

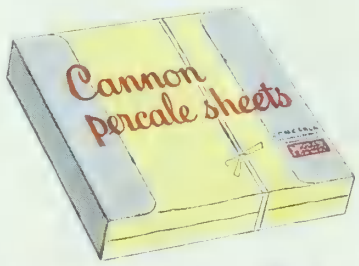
UNCTUAL FEMALE: "Cannon Percales are so ht, easy to wash—I'll be through by, say :25 . . . meet you for lunch at 1:05 sharp!"

GREEABLE MOTHER: "Yes, I'll play horse. t watch those spurs! I've got on my autiful new Cannon Nylon Stockings!"

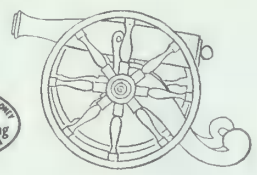
STUDIOUS COUSIN: "Our home ec teacher said Cannon Combspun* Percales were the intelligent thing to buy. Excellent wearing qualities!"

HAVE-YOU-HEARD GIRL: "Mrs. Miller's cousin is coming! A real movie star! Mrs. Miller was buying Cannon Percales—lagoon green."

OLD FAMILY FRIEND: "Cannon Combspun Percale! COMBSPUN! C-O-M-B-S-P-U-N! With the cotton combed so that only the long, smooth-weaving fibres remain!"



JUST-MARRIED CHUM: "And here's my pink-and-white room. See? Shell pink Cannons for top-sheets, white for bottom. Pretty!"



FRIEND WITH IDEAS: "I can just see it . . . a SWOOSH of sunset rose draperies! Expensive? Nonsense! Make 'em with Cannon Percale sheets!"

COMPLAINER: "Just my luck! My sister sends me Cannon Percales and the postman comes when nobody's home! Another day to wait!"

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

TRADE MARK CANNON

CANNON Combspun PERCALE SHEETS

*REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

CANNON TOWELS • STOCKINGS • BLANKETS • BEDSPREADS • CANNON MILLS, INC., N. Y. 13, N. Y COPR. 1951, CANNON MILLS, INC.

YOU CAN'T BEAT MOTHER NATURE'S

HONEST FOOD FOR FAMILIES!

AND HERE IT IS!

NABISCO SHREDDED WHEAT ...100% WHOLE WHEAT...

WITH MILK IT'S AMERICA'S GREAT BODY-BUILDING BREAKFAST!

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

You get the real thing when you buy the one-and-only NABISCO SHREDDED WHEAT! No fancy concoctions, just naturally nourishing whole wheat, including wheat germ and bran! And the flavor's so hearty, you'll want it every breakfast!

THE BREAKFAST FULL OF POWER FROM NIAGARA FALLS

ESTHER BUBLEY

Nita McCoy stokes the freezer on a once-a-week cooking day.

COOK IT AND FREEZE IT

By LOUELLA G. SHOUER

"I DO my cooking wholesale. Every week or so, I set aside a day or a couple of afternoons to cook for the freezer—doing as much as I can for the next week or more in one big cooking spree. Then on busy days I do almost no cooking at all. It's much easier to entertain, too, with food all cooked and in the freezer. And think of the advantages around the holidays to come!

"Making sandwiches for the children's school luncheons had always been a daily chore. Now I do them in quantity and freeze them. We set up a regular assembly line, and the children help on the project. Now sandwiches are always ready for the lunch boxes."

Have your cake and eat it too. If you don't fancy an all-day cook-off, you'll soon discover how easy it is to bake enough for another day while you're getting today's dinner. For instance, when Nita bakes a cake, one layer and a jar containing half the icing automatically go into the freezer for another meal, and there is no stale-cake problem. Or make an extra quantity of vegetable-beef soup, stews, hot rolls, spaghetti sauce, and so on, and you'll always have a supply on hand. It's all in getting in the habit.

Leftovers with a purpose. The freezer eliminates leftovers in the refrigerator. The rest of a roast—the holiday turkey, for instance—doesn't have to be served daily until everyone in the family loses interest. After you've had your fill of both hot and cold, give it a rest for a week. Take the remaining meat off the bones, wrap and freeze it for later use as a la king, and so on. Dressing and gravy, if there be any left, go in separate containers—the bones into the soup pot. The end of a roast can be cut in two and frozen as starters for good stews and ragouts. I have even squirreled away the extra uneaten cooked chop, the cooked steak tail, and so on, in the freezer, until I've accumulated enough for a stew or potpie. Nothing ever goes to waste and leftovers are always fresh and flavorsome when you are ready to use them.

Dinners From the Freezer

Fried Chicken Green Beans
Corn and Green Peppers
Celery and Carrot Sticks
Oatmeal Cookies
Sliced Peaches

Nita fries 6 or 8 chickens at a time. She has 4 big skillets and keeps them all going at once. The chicken giblets are simmered in salted water, then chopped, packaged and frozen for serving at some future time with rice. Necks and backs are cooked separately for good, rich chicken stock for soup, or to use in casserole dishes. When the fried chicken is cooled, it is boxed or wrapped in aluminum foil and frozen. Nita doesn't defrost frozen fried chicken. She puts it in a moderate oven, 350° F., and bakes it 20–30 minutes. It thaws and reheats at the same time.

HOW AMERICA LIVES

With frozen vegetables, sliced peaches and even the oatmeal cookies in the freezer, this is an easy meal to toss together on short notice.

Here is Nita's recipe for oatmeal cookies, which she freezes in packages of a dozen each. Her youngsters go to the freezer for cookies instead of to the cooky jar.

OATMEAL COOKIES

Cream 1 cup butter or margarine with ¾ cup sugar and ¾ cup brown sugar. Add 2 beaten eggs and add 1 teaspoon vanilla. Sift 1¾ cups flour with ½ teaspoon salt and 1 teaspoon baking soda. Add to creamed mixture. Then add 2 cups oatmeal and 1 package semi-sweet chocolate pieces and 1 cup chopped nuts. Drop from teaspoon on greased cooky sheets. Bake in moderate oven, 350° F., 12–15 minutes. Makes 6 dozen. Double the recipe if you have plenty of room in the freezer. Refrigerator cookies freeze well cooked or uncooked. We recommend freezing uncooked cooky dough in a roll as they then slice well when just out of the freezer.

Frizzled Ham
Baked Beans
Boston Brown Bread
Coleslaw
Cream Puffs

Baked beans freeze very satisfactorily—so does Boston brown bread. Since beans take 8 hours of slow baking, it is really practical and economical of heat to bake 2 or even 3 pots of beans at one time. Use casseroles with lids if you have only 1 bean pot. Enjoy them fresh for supper and have 2 pots to freeze for other meals. Cool the beans thoroughly when done and package for freezing in paper containers. This will take less room than freezing the beans right in the bean pot.

If you use quart-size aluminum freezing containers or shortening cans sealed with freezer tape, you may put them directly in the oven from the freezer, removing the lids first so the beans will brown.

We've had good luck freezing cream puffs too. They are best slit and frozen unfilled. Fill when you're ready to serve. Puffs filled with whipped cream or custard before freezing get rather soggy when thawed. But filled with ice cream and frozen, they are a big success.

BAKED BEANS

Soak 1 pound pea beans in cold water overnight. The next day, add enough

FOR FREEZER USERS

By Victoria Harris

Homemakers like Mrs. McCoy use freezers as a modern version of old-time pantries.

Double Service

* For reuse, don't heat-seal plastic bags. Twist top, turn down to form loop, wrap with rubber band. Pull doubled-down top and rubber snaps off.

* To reuse aluminum foil, warm to room temperature, flatten and wash. To patch small breaks, use freezer tape (it won't get brittle).

* Covered casseroles sealed with freezer tape are fine for oven-cooked foods held briefly.

* Shortening or coffee tins, scalded and aired, are handy; use freezer tape around lids of these too.

Timesavers

* New rigid box-type aluminum containers with press-on lids are made both for reuse and for heating frozen foods.

* Plastic funnel on stand aids filling bags and boxes. Stand is adjustable for tall and short containers.

Defrosting Techniques

* Special defrosting tools and plastic frost looseners won't harm freezer. They cut away icy crystals that steal freezer space.

* Freezers need not be emptied to remove frost from around doors or lids (usually every month or two). Spread papers or towels over frozen food to collect loosened frost.

* Completely defrost when freezer stores are low (usually every six months). Turn control to "Off," and set a fan or a pan of hot water inside freezer to hurry the melting. When defrosted, wash interior with soda water (one teaspoon per quart). Set the control at coldest position and leave a full day, then reset.

* Once a year clean the condenser with a stiff brush or vacuum-cleaner dusting tool. Dirt-clogged fins or coils make motor work overtime. Disconnect freezer while cleaning.

WORKS on dirt THREE WAYS!

Do you know why FELS-NAPTHA banishes "tattle-tale gray"?

It's because FELS-NAPTHA, and only FELS-NAPTHA, combines two great cleaning agents . . . good golden soap, with gentle dirt-loosening naptha. These really dig out the dirt. Then, third, FELS-NAPTHA adds a "sunshine" ingredient that restores whiteness to your white goods and gives renewed brilliance to colors.

Simple, isn't it—yet, housewives who've tried all kinds of washing products are satisfied that nothing can possibly wash cleaner or quicker. They're satisfied, too, that ounce for ounce, wash for wash, FELS-NAPTHA usually costs less than any other high-quality washing product.

MADE IN PHILA. BY FELS & CO.

FELS-NAPTHA comes in two convenient forms. The bar is handy for high-spotting specially dirty places. The chips make quick-acting suds in tub or machine. You'll find FELS-NAPTHA has dozens of uses around the house.

You'll be proud of your man's shirts, laundered with FELS-NAPTHA

Trust FELS-NAPTHA to get the dirt out of children's towels

Just a gentle FELS-NAPTHA sudsing makes nylons look like new

Washing precious wools with FELS-NAPTHA helps preserve them

BANISHES "TATTLE-TALE GRAY"

YOU CAN'T BEAT MOTHER NATURE'S

HONEST FOOD FOR FAMILIES!

AND HERE IT IS!

NABISCO SHREDDED WHEAT ...100% WHOLE WHEAT...

WITH MILK IT'S AMERICA'S GREAT BODY-BUILDING BREAKFAST!

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

You get the real thing when you buy the one-and-only NABISCO SHREDDED WHEAT! No fancy concoctions, just naturally nourishing whole wheat, including wheat germ and bran! And the flavor's so hearty, you'll want it every breakfast!

THE BREAKFAST FULL OF POWER FROM NIAGARA FALLS

water to cover and boil until the skin s. Remove rind from ¾ pound fat salt Gash and cut into 2 pieces. Put part of ans in the pot, then a piece of the pork, st of the beans and the other piece of n top of that. Mix 4 tablespoons molas- tablespoon salt, 1 cup boiling water and poon dry mustard. Pour over beans. roth beans were cooked in, so that are covered. Cover with the lid and lowly, 250° F., 7–8 hours. Add water ime to time if the beans cook dry. beans are about done, remove lid and baking.

CREAM PUFFS

cup butter or margarine in a saucepan d 1 cup water. Bring to boil. Then add our and a pinch of salt all at one time. he heat medium. Beat hard with a until the batter makes a ball and comes om the sides of the pan. Remove from t. Add 1 unbeaten egg and beat hard ooth. Add 3 more eggs—4 in all—1 at and beating hard after each addition. y spoonfuls onto greased cooky sheets, inches apart. Bake in a hot oven, , 20 minutes, or until puffed. Reduce moderate, 350° F. Bake 25 minutes Cool. Slit one side; remove any soft that may remain; wrap and freeze.

• • • • •

Swedish Meat Balls
Stuffed Baked Potatoes
Brussels Sprouts
Tossed Green Salad
Cherry Pie

of our latest freezing discoveries is l baked potatoes. Use a mealy variety ato—a special baking potato. Bake the es, scoop out and mash light and with heated milk and butter or marga- nd seasonings. Heap into the shells, cool rap. When ready to use, defrost at temperature one hour. Bake again 30 tes in hot oven, 400° F. If you like e on stuffed baked potatoes, sprinkle cheese just before the second baking, cheese toughens in the freezing.

edish meat balls freeze like a charm re so handy to have on hand. You like to make twice the recipe while about it.

a makes fruit pies 6 at a time. Cherry pple are favorites. You can either bake pies completely before freezing or them unbaked. Nita prefers this od. To bake, she puts the frozen pie in oven, 425° F., and bakes until the crust den and fruit is tender.

SWEDISH MEAT BALLS

¾ pound beef (or part veal and part and ¾ pound pork ground twice. Soak grated bread crumbs in ½ cup milk and with 1 beaten egg to the meat. Season with salt and pepper, a pinch of thyme, f marjoram and one of allspice. Stir in p finely chopped onion. Shape into small balls. Dust with flour. Brown in fat all sides in a large skillet. Do about a doze a time, so they can brown evenly. When are browned, add water to the drippings, meat balls in the gravy and simmer u gravy is a nice consistency. Cool, pack freeze. This quantity will serve 12—eno for dinner tonight and some night n month.

• • • • •

Stuffed Green Peppers or Chicken Croquettes
Mixed Vegetables
Tomato-and-Cucumber Salad
Lemon-Chiffon Pie

Maybe you've already discovered yourself that you can freeze such things stuffed peppers ready to bake, croquet ready to fry and the ever-popular chiffon ready to eat. We tried these on a hunch with very good luck.

STUFFED GREEN PEPPERS

Wash 6 green peppers. Cut in half lengthwise. Remove seeds. Blanch 3 minutes in boiling water. For the stuffing, brown 1 onion, chopped, in 2 tablespoons bacon fat or butter or margarine. Add 2 cups chopped or ground cooked ham, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, 1 egg, beaten, ½ cup bread crumbs, ½ cup canned consommé. Season with salt and pepper. Stuff peppers with this mixture. Wrap each pepper separately, put in carton and freeze. When ready to use, defrost 10 minutes at room temperature. Place in a casserole with ¾ cup water. Bake, covered, 10 minutes in moderate oven, 350° F. Remove lid. Sprinkle with buttered bread crumbs and bake 15 minutes more.

CHICKEN CROQUETTES

To 1 cup thick white sauce, add 1½ cups chopped cooked chicken, 2 tablespoons chopped onion and salt and pepper to taste. Cool, put in container and freeze. Defrost at room temperature before shaping, egging and crumbing for frying.

LEMON-CHIFFON PIE

Sprinkle 2 teaspoons unflavored gelatin over ½ cup cold water. Let stand a few minutes to soften. Meanwhile, mix ⅓ cup sugar and ⅓ cup lemon juice together. Separate 3 eggs. Add a pinch of salt to the yolks and beat until light-colored and quite thick. Add the lemon and sugar to the yolks. Put in top of double boiler and cook over hot water until custard coats the spoon. Stir all the while. Remove from over hot water. Stir in softened gelatin. Stir until dissolved. Pour into bowl and add 1 teaspoon grated lemon rind. Cool in the refrigerator until it begins to thicken. Don't let it really set. Beat the 3 egg whites just until they stand in peaks. Add ¼ cup sugar a tablespoon at a time, beating well after each addition. Fold into custard. Pour into a baked and cooled pie shell. Chill until firm. Freeze and wrap. To serve, defrost in the refrigerator overnight or set out at room temperature 2 hours before serving. Top with sweetened whipped cream.

FIGHTING THE BUDGET WITH THE JAMES McCOYS

(Continued from Page 210)

ity or income-tax records for the firm's s—professional men such as doctors, proprietors of small businesses, includ- leaners, drugstores and groceries. The oys take about half their income in nge services or merchandise from these mers, and Jim says that although Nita great little manager" of finances, it was for her when she could budget on ght salary, and juggle cash from one en- e to another.

he just thinks she's terrible at math," he on. "Why, she can stroll through three stores and tell you an hour later exa what each one is charging on forty or f food items: 'So-and-so is two cents highe a Number One can of beans.' I'm a pu accountant, but that's the kind of mat couldn't do in a million years."

In spite of this mathematical market the McCoys say their food bills have jum $10 a month—from $100 to $110. "Fo one thing I won't stint on," Nita says, " try to cut corners in other ways." Along doing all her own work, including laun she's saved impressive sums by her downr fessional skill at sewing. She makes most of her own and Joyce's clothes, Jim's shirts, and the boys' trousers and coats from remnants or relatives' hand-me-downs. Far from resenting this, the exuberant Jimmy and sturdy young Stevie bragged to schoolmates, "Mommy made this," until Nita suggested tactfully it could be a family secret. "Although I couldn't help feeling flattered by their attitude," she says.

Of the $200 spent last year on clothes, $80 went for Jim's suits, which Nita scouted out at clearance sales, and $46 went on the children's feet. In budget problems, the shoe problems literally, because all the McCoys have long, narrow, expensive-to-fit feet. Although Nita hasn't yet learned to tan a hide or make sandals out of an old lamp shade, she whacked down another expenditure—for barbering—by learning to cut her and Joyce's hair with a razor blade. In her first enthusiasm, she even attacked the crew-cut heads of her husband and sons, but had to abandon their locks because, she explains regretfully, "If you shave off even an inch too much it leaves bald-looking spots."

The healthy McCoys need doctors much less often than haircuts, and their Blue Cross insurance ($12 a year) took care of hospital expenses for a minor operation Nita had, although she is still paying on the surgeon's $50 bill. Glasses for Jim and the two oldest children account for almost half of the $200 allotted to health. Jimmy, according to his mother, has an uncanny talent for getting his lenses scooped on several times a year. She learned that the most worrying—and maddening—problem with the children is that Joyce reads much too late in bed, although the oculist warned against eyestrain, and she gets headaches because she won't wear her glasses enough. "We think she'll get over this foolishness about glasses," Nita said. "She really looks cute in them."

Joyce also looks cute in freckles that go with her coppery brown hair. Already taller than her mother, she has smoky blue eyes, an occasional rushing smile, and a sheen of shyness that vanishes when she settles down to talk. She has a B average in ninth grade, but gets straight A in art, goes to the free Sunday-afternoon art classes sponsored by the Junior League, and has shown real talent in designing hundreds of dresses for paper dolls. For her first formal dance this year she wore pale blue organdy strewn with forget-me-nots, and carried in her head a pleasantly firm parental order to be home by 11 P.M. Her 75-cent allowance covers candy, Cokes and occasional movies, and she earns vacation money baby-sitting at 35 cents an hour.

"Joyce is already good at getting a simple meal," Nita said, "and I want the boys to learn too." Carrying out this single standard for the sexes (domestic division), Jimmy, on a 35-cent allowance, alternates with Joyce in setting and clearing the table, washing dishes and scrubbing the bathroom and kitchen floors. Their mother said affectionately, "Ever since I started going to the office three years ago, they've been wonderful about helping me around the house."

She gives the children breakfast at 7:45—fruit juice, toast, cereal or eggs, and milk. (The McCoys buy skim milk in three-gallon cans, mix it with a quart of homogenized.) Then she sees Stevie off for nearby grade school, drives Jimmy and Joyce to junior high, and comes back to breakfast with Jim before they leave at 9:15 for the office—formally known as Topeka Centralized Bookkeeping. Plus the two McCoys, the staff consists of an accountant, a machine operator and a secretary.

Jim says Nita's efficient help saves paying an extra salary. And Nita says proudly that he still has practically every customer he started with—"and more all the time." The firm handles bookkeeping for 60 clients who pay fees of $15 to $150 monthly, and does income-tax work for 300 more. Almost two thirds of the approximately $20,000 gross earnings goes for overhead and salaries. Many large firms, because of the current shortage of office help, are now interested in the services Jim offers, and he spends part of each day interviewing prospects and outlining over-all plans.

"He's a wonderful salesman," Nita says. "And his oldest son takes after him." When Jimmy sells tickets for Scout or school doings, he does such a whiz job he usually wins several free ones. Rushing in for lunch one day recently, he told a visitor, "But what a block of prospects a friend of mine has—all rich and all civic-minded!"

Nita gets home in time to fix the children a sandwich-and-fruit lunch, and hear any such junior-sales-force reports. (Jim lunches downtown and reports on his prospects after 5 P.M.) The third male of the household, six-year-old Stevie, generally returns soon after school, and spends hours by himself, peacefully hammering nails into boards, or crayoning purple dogs. His parents say he's the most sturdily independent McCoy—"For instance, he wouldn't dream of putting on company manners for guests." His first year at school, although dandy scholastically, has had disillusioning aspects: after a classmate told him there was no Santa Claus, Stevie said to his mother in a jaded tone, "I suppose you're the Easter Bunny too." Being of a calmly forgiving nature, he went right ahead helping his brother build a Mother's Day surprise—a rose trellis outside the kitchen window.

Inside, the kitchen is a red Kemtone gaily spattered with decal roses. Nita explains that Jim planned where the stove, electric washer and ironer would go. "He figured it out like an efficiency expert. He even moved the sink so I could look out the window, and built all those cabinets, and knocked out the pantry partition so we'd have the dinette end. When he does a carpentering job, he wants to be the prima-donna star and have the boys handing him every tool. They love it, and they learn a lot too."

The center of attention is the $200 home freezer which Nita considers her white hope come true. She makes up large batches of pie and cooky dough to stash away, along with fruits and vegetables bought cheaply in season, twenty-pound lots of hamburger, a half-dozen chickens and a ham. Before going to the hospital, she prepared meals for a week ahead, and left them in the freezer all labeled, including the family's prime favorite, cherry pie;

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Country Custom

By Christie Lund Coles

It is a simple custom and by some condemned—
Bringing of food to those who are bereaved,
By neighbors and by sympathetic friend
(Plain country folk who long ago conceived
The thought of taking warm, new bread, preserves,
Meat roasted golden and a salad green).
These things, some say, intrude and one observes
That grieving hearts are more inclined to lean Toward the fasting than the feasting. Still,
I must maintain how it appears to me:
That with each loaf is sent the great good will,
The compassion and the quiet sympathy
Of an inarticulate, kind neighborhood
Which writes its homely parables . . . with food.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

WORKS on dirt THREE WAYS!

Do you know why FELS-NAPTHA banishes "tattle-tale gray"?

It's because FELS-NAPTHA, and only FELS-NAPTHA, combines two great cleaning agents . . . good golden soap, with gentle dirt-loosening naptha. These really dig out the dirt. Then, third, FELS-NAPTHA adds a "sunshine" ingredient that restores whiteness to your white goods and gives renewed brilliance to colors.

Simple, isn't it—yet, housewives who've tried all kinds of washing products are satisfied that nothing can possibly wash cleaner or quicker. They're satisfied, too, that ounce for ounce, wash for wash, FELS-NAPTHA usually costs less than any other high-quality washing product.

MADE IN PHILA. BY FELS & CO.

FELS-NAPTHA comes in two convenient forms. The bar is handy for high-spotting specially dirty places. The chips make quick-acting suds in tub or machine. You'll find FELS-NAPTHA has dozens of uses around the house.

You'll be proud of your man's shirts, laundered with FELS-NAPTHA

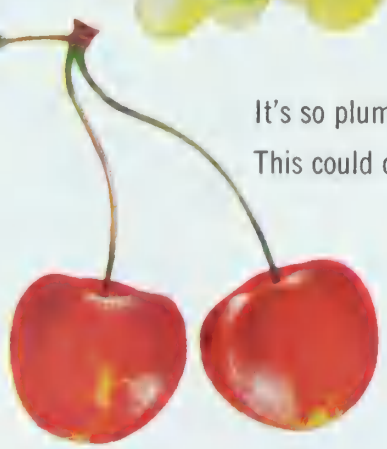
Trust FELS-NAPTHA to get the dirt out of children's towels

Just a gentle FELS-NAPTHA sudsing makes nylons look like new

Washing precious wools with FELS-NAPTHA helps preserve them

BANISHES "TATTLE-TALE GRAY"

Picture Puzzle



What rhymes with "dapple"?
Hawaii's own_____!

Who couldn't make a speech
In praise of the sweet_____?

You can tell by the shape
It's the Thompson Seedless_____!

It's so plump and merry
This could only be a_____!

Yes, it's a Bartlett____,
And its taste is really rare!

Answers? Why, you couldn't fail—
They're all in Dole Fruit cocktail!

Look for the Dole Label on True Hawaiian Pineapple—
the Treasured Island Fruit

and for a part-time working mother, the hours saved in marketing and fixing dinners have been a how-did-I-ever-do-without-it boon.

On her Saturday mornings off, Nita runs the vacuum upstairs and down, and bakes rolls her husband rates as the best in Kansas. "I'm not really a perfect housekeeper," she said. "Sometimes I get up at six A.M. to wash and iron, and sometimes I do it at night. And there may be dust around, especially if I'm on a sewing spree. But I've learned I can't worry about things in masses, or I get panicky and exhausted. I have to tackle one chore at a time, at my own pace."

Some of the chores she tackles would have an interior decorator bug-eyed with awe: for instance, she papered all four bedrooms herself, at costs per room of from seventy-nine cents to two dollars, and when a visitor exclaims over the charming results, Nita says happily, "The only trick is to get a few left-over rolls of good paper cheap." In the living room, she flanked the upright piano with bookcases, painted all three as a handsome matching unit, and used a moss-green velvet shawl bought at a rummage sale for ten cents to make upholstered seats—and a fine antique air—for the straight-back chairs. Last spring, when she was feeling especially debt-ridden, and depressed because Jim was working five nights a week on income-tax returns, she complained to him, "We're so poor I can't even afford a can of paint or a remnant." Jim told her cheerfully, "Oh, we'll never be as poor as all that," and at his urging she went right out and bought a can of white enamel and a cotton remnant for a bedspread. "Then I felt a lot better."

Jim says his wife's worst fault is apt to emerge around breakfast time. "If she's feeling pushed, she keeps nagging at the kids. For example, she'll fuss and heckle them about not being late for school." Jim himself offers the comfortable masculine theory, "Let them be late a few times and then they'll learn." He also said, "Nita never nags me. In fact, I'd say she's the perfect companion and always has been."

Next Month

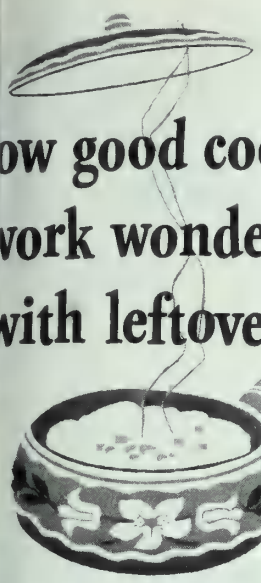
THE budget doesn't balance, leisure is limited—but the Raymond A. Hills, of Westminster, Maryland, are equal to the challenge. Jane shaves expenses by making most of her own clothes and the children's, likes to search out antique-shop bargains. Raymond, an engineer, eases the financial strain with the $1500 he receives as commanding officer of the Westminster detachment of the Maryland National Guard. And the four small Hills make it all worth while. Like to meet them? Read

"We Live by the Journal"

HOW AMERICA LIVES
in the November JOURNAL

SHE was Nita Ferguson, "wearing a Dutch bob and cute as a button," her husband reports, when they met in junior high. Nita, like Jim, had grown up in Topeka. Her father was an Oldsmobile dealer; her mother died when Nita was seven, and her Grandmother Ferguson managed the household, which included Nita's younger brother. Jim was an only child; his father, a C.P.A., taught commercial subjects in the high school. Both his parents were Christian Scientists, and had an openly affectionate family relationship. Jim, who inherited this Irish-warm temperament, promptly showed a marked fancy for the popular Miss Ferguson, and a fiendishly good-humored ingenuity in discouraging rivals. Whenever Nita went out on another date, he would go over to her house and play double solitaire with her grandmother; as the dating couple returned, Jim would leap to open the door. "He wouldn't even give the boy a chance to say good night to me alone," Nita said. "None of my dates stuck it out more than twice."

At the age of eighteen, her chaperon was shipped off to New Mexico Military Institute at Roswell. Nita went to Washburn Municipal University in Topeka, where she took up textile design and architecture, and also took up, she admits demurely, with some new young men. "But I already knew I'd marry Jim." In his junior year, Jim transferred to the University of Kansas, as did Nita, and majored in business courses. Both had C average, and Nita says now, almost fiercely, "Jim had the ability, but he just needed marriage as an incentive."



HE got it—in April of 1933. Both bride and groom had already left college, because of the depression's pinch. Jim was working in a filling station at $50 a month, and they had $300 in savings and wedding checks. The newlyweds had hotel reservations in Kansas City for a honeymoon week end, but after driving twenty miles, they suddenly couldn't wait to settle into their new $[illegible]-a-month apartment, and turned right around and came back. "We'd bought a sample carpet for ten dollars," Nita said. "My father gave us the bedroom set, and my stepmother taught me how to upholster and slip-cover anything. Our food was only two or three dollars a week, because we scrounged some meals with our families, and cooking came as naturally to me as sewing."

When Joyce was born, in 1937, Jim's monthly salary, as accountant for the Income Tax Division, had reached $150. After returning to the University for three semesters, finally graduated partly by his father in 1940 he had enough credits to teach, and taught commercial subjects in Weir, Kansas, High School. In 1942, Jim went into the accounting department of the Hercules Powder plant, earning $[illegible] a month. In 1946, he and his father recently retired from teaching, started the new business, and the [illegible] was just beginning to operate at a profit when Jim's father was killed in an automobile accident, in 1949. "That was a terrible blow," Nita says sorrowfully. "I adored him as much as Jim did, and even though I could never go all the way with Christian Science, I loved the serenity and sense of faith he got from religion."

Jim and Nita joined the Congregational Church together four years ago, because they didn't want the family divided over religion, and they both talk enthusiastically of their church's liberal viewpoint, and the fact that members of all faiths are encouraged to attend social evenings. Jim, who has a good bass voice, sings in the choir, and the two young McCoys are members of the junior choral groups, led by a director whose zest has sparked even small boys to become music lovers. The children also go to Sunday school regularly. Nita has been chairman of the Ladies' Aid food booth at the fair. (They cleared $1[illegible] She also helps with church suppers, and Jim and Jim go to all the Young Couples' dances in the big assembly room. "Everybody brings records for the phonograph, and the minister understands that dancing is a healthy, happy thing, instead of a sin."

In discussing creeds, Nita thinks the important thing is to give children a sense of family solidarity, and the will to serve one's church and community. Jim feels there must be something more basically spiritual as well. He believes in God as "a life force rather than a seven-cubit man in the clouds," and has great faith in prayer: "It calms me and clears my thinking, and I can go ahead then with more courage."

Along with their church work, the McCoys find time for P.T.A. meetings, fund-raising carnivals and operettas put on by parents, and Jim is also a member of Sertoma, a club of Masonic professionals who hold Tuesday dinner meetings. In politics, he and his wife vote as Independents. Topeka, in addition to being the state

How good cooks work wonders with leftovers

WHO LIKES LEFTOVERS? Nobody, you say. But try adding a touch of Ac'cent to a leftover dish—and listen to the family cheer! Ac'cent is the "third shaker"—the new miracle seasoning that makes food taste naturally better. Makes meat taste meatier, chicken more chickeny, makes vegetables taste "just picked."

TRY CHICKEN A LA KING THIS WAY. Take that leftover chicken from Sunday and use your own familiar recipe. Season as usual—but add a touch of Ac'cent, too. Then discover how much more flavor there actually is in those leftovers! Ac'cent adds no flavor. It's easy to use as salt. Ask your grocer for the handy shaker package. If he doesn't yet have Ac'cent, send us his name and address. Amino Products, 2 N. Wacker Drive, Chicago 6, Ill. Also in Canada.

Ac'cent®
PURE MONOSODIUM GLUTAMATE
...makes good cooking taste better!

® M. property of International Minerals & Chemical Corp.

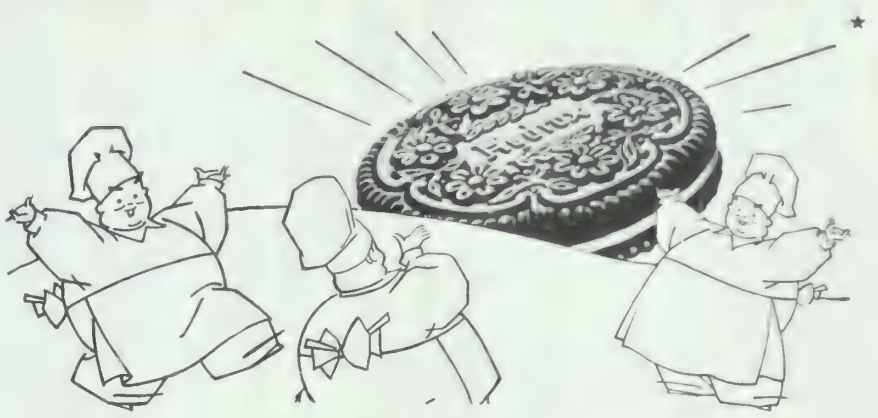
ital, and a bustling railroad city with 80,000 population, is noted for the Menninger Foundation, where Nita and Jim have heard some of the best psychiatrists in the country lecture. "They all stress children's needing love and security," Nita says. "And we think parents can't give it unless they have a long-range plan, so that part of the money spent builds toward the future."

In addition to lectures, Nita and Jim occasionally go to concerts, on season tickets loaned by Jim's mother. Saturday nights, they get together with three other couples for a covered-dish supper and canasta. When this group met last at the McCoys', the prize for top score was a pound of bacon, a 35-cent brand Nita had just discovered. On Sunday evenings, Joyce may take over the kitchen for a teen-agers' waffle party. Holidays are usually spent with in-laws, and Jim and Nita talk appreciatively of each other's families, including Nita's eighty-seven-year-old grandmother, who visits them frequently and lends a valued hand with cooking and mending. "They all think of nice things to do for us, and they're not the kind who want effusive thanks."

For all five McCoys, the peak treat of the year is their two-week camping trip in August. Last summer they chose Glacier Basin in Colorado's Rocky Mountain National Park. Total cost for fourteen days was $150, including gas for the car and food, and as Nita points out triumphantly, "We'd have had to eat even if we'd stayed home." With Army cots, two Coleman stoves, and a big tent rented for $13, they fared handsomely in the well-equipped campgrounds. (Entrance fee: $1 per carful of campers.) All the McCoys tell you happily about the trails to explore with a knapsack lunch, the free movies on plant and wild life, the community sings around the campfire. Jimmy and Stevie learned the names of every tree, discovered a brand-new cave, cooked fish like veteran woodsmen, and didn't quite share their mother's wee pangs over the lack of hot baths. Nita says, "Those vacations have given us the most wonderful feeling of sharing happiness, and storing up memories the children will have as long as they live. I used to say we couldn't afford a real vacation, but this kind is a physical and mental refresher we can't afford to miss."

Plans for some debt-free future include buying a rowboat, remodeling the high, narrow exterior of the house, and building a garage in the back yard. Right now there are lively family conclaves on what color to dye the old living-room rug, when they cut it down for the hall and stairs. At last reports, crimson was winning—and the McCoys were holding their hard-won ground in the budget fight. THE END

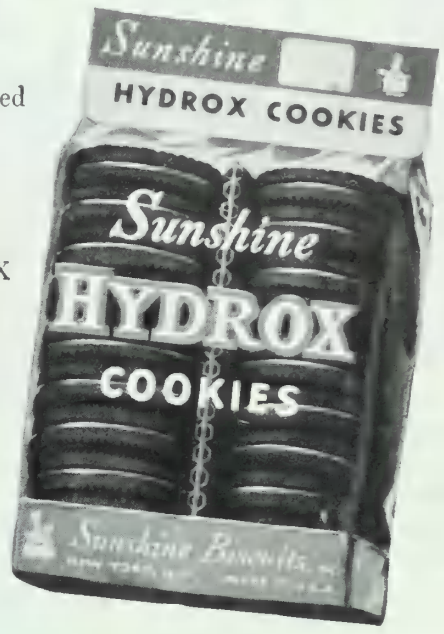
McCoy Budget for 1950



Cash Spent

House payments	$480
Utilities	260
Insurance	375
Doctors, dentists and eye specialists	200
Gas and car upkeep	550
Magazines, newspapers	40
Clothes	200
Church and donations	75
Camping vacation	150
Miscellaneous	500
Hot-water tank	140
	$2970

Exchange Services
(taken in credit)



Food	$1350
Drugstores	120
Cleaners	180
Television set	400
Freezer	200
	$2250

Note: No income taxes right now, because of deductible business debts.

Dawn of a Delicious Era!

1908! The first time two crisp chocolate wafers and luscious vanilla cream combined to become HYDROX . . . the original—the delicious masterpiece of cream-filled chocolate cookies! Today millions say Sunshine HYDROX is the Finest Ever Made!

Sunshine HYDROX COOKIES
THE ORIGINAL CREAM-FILLED CHOCOLATE COOKIE

Dazey Can Opener
$1.95 to $4.95
Model shown No. 80AC
All Chrome.

Cuts out entire lid of round, square, or oval cans. Lifts out of bracket or swings flat against wall when not in use. Available in a variety of colors and finishes. At department, home furnishings, and hardware stores.

Makers of the world's first and finest wall type can opener.

it's a DAZEY

POP SOME FOR HALLOWEEN
JOLLY TIME POP CORN
Guaranteed by Housekeeping

MAKE $27.50 A DAY
beginners sell 50 Christmas Boxes a day, make $27.50. Up to 100% profit with Gift Cards, Stationery, Napkins and Gifts.
FREE PACKAGE CHRISTMAS GIFT CARDS
32 PAGE MONEY-MAKING CATALOG
Write for best-selling boxes on approval
ORGANIZATIONS: Write for Fund-Raising Plan
FREE SAMPLES 40 for $1 IMPRINTED CARDS STATIONERY
ARMOUR Corp. Dept. JJ-4 200 Fifth Ave. N.Y.C. 10, N.Y.

KVP Paper Maids for Neater, Easier Living

Have Colorful Cupboards... So Easy To Clean!

Add an extra dash of cheery color to your kitchen, dining room, bedroom, utility room! Line cupboard and closet shelves with KVP Shelf Paper. Lies flat. Get economical "Glazed" for pastel shades — "Enameled" for brighter colors — "Kalafilm" for brilliance and washability. At your favorite store.

For brighter, cleaner shelves.

Perfect for gift wrapping.

KVP SHELF PAPER

5 Colors 8 Sizes
9 Colors 3 Sizes
9 Colors 3 Sizes

Paper Maids Save Time—Save Work

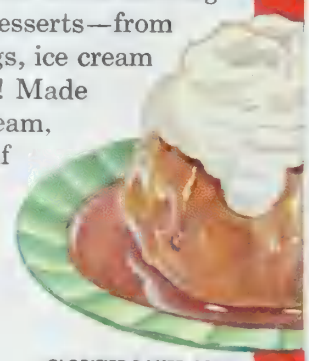
Shelf Papers • Freezer Papers • Heavy and Fancy Waxed • KVP and Mrs. Hayward's Dusting Papers • Pie Tape • Baking Cups • Place Mats • Cookery Parchment • Pressing Parchment • Kalacloths.

Your Guarantee of Quality

Kalamazoo Vegetable Parchment Co. Parchment, Michigan

You've Never Tasted Apple Pie...

until you've tried it the new Reddi-wip way



Everybody's favorite dessert made twice as delicious with Reddi-wip. Guaranteed to win you praises galore!

Glamorize All Your Desserts with Reddi-wip!

Once you try Reddi-wip, you'll agree that it's the greatest "dessert magic" ever! Gives exciting new appeal to all your desserts—from apple pie to cakes, puddings, ice cream and thrifty gelatins! Made with fresh, rich cream, Reddi-wip whips itself at the touch of a finger! No fuss—no bowl or beater to wash. Reddi-wip is economical, too. Dozens of delicious servings in every container. Keeps for days in your refrigerator. Get Reddi-wip now!

GLORIFIED BAKED APPLE
Reddi-wip gives this popular, simple dessert a new kind of lip-smacking goodness.

© GET Reddi-wip FROM YOUR GROCER OR MILKMAN

COMMENDED

HOW DO YOU RATE WITH YOUR DAUGHTER?

(Continued from Page 213)

The McCoy Technique

Your daughter may or may not have freckles. But the point here is that Joy's mother created self-confidence in her daughter by minimizing what Joy considered a physical defect—turning it, in fact, into an advantage. If your daughter is self-conscious about her height, for instance, you might apply the McCoy technique: through subtle suggestion, instill in her mind the idea that her height is an asset—"It takes a tall girl to wear that full, loose coat—it would make anyone else look dumpy." Point out how many beauties like Alexis Smith, Lauren Bacall and Katharine Hepburn are tall women; that 60 per cent of the Conover models are over 5′ 7″. Above all, teach her the principles of good posture, teach her to carry her height proudly—and look forward to Nita McCoy's success!

Do Something About it!

Many times, parents make a grave error in minimizing teen-age shortcomings when they are the kind a daughter can, and should, remedy. Many an overweight teen-ager has fretted for a miserable year or two over what her mother condoned as "baby fat," when a sensible diet and a few simple exercises would have made her a much more attractive, self-confident girl. If your daughter is overweight, suggest that she cut out the thoughtless, between-meal intake of peanuts, potato chips and ice-cream sodas that in most cases means the difference between being overweight and well proportioned. A small handful of peanuts, for instance, has about 150 calories—and how peanuts can disappear when teen-agers are sitting around talking! And suggest some low-calorie soda-fountain offerings to replace the ice-cream soda that contains 350 calories, or the chocolate sundae that has 400. An 8-ounce glass of fresh lemonade, with 1 teaspoon sugar, equals only 38 calories; an 8-ounce glass of tomato juice, 60 calories; an 8-ounce glass of buttermilk, 88 calories; an 8-ounce glass of skim milk, 88 calories.

If she is on the hippy side, here are some streamlining exercises to give her. She should begin by doing them ten minutes every day, and work up to thirty minutes, if she can.

Lie flat on stomach, head rested on folded arms, legs together and outstretched. Lift left leg, holding knee stiff, and describe a wide circle moving leg to left, up, to right and down. Without resting your foot on the floor, describe 10 complete circles. Repeat with right leg. Work up to 30 circles, each leg.

Lie on back, arms out at sides, palms up, legs together. Flex knees to make a right angle with body. Now, roll on h and thighs to slap floor first on right, t left, keeping upper back as flat on possible. Repeat roll 8 times each sid up to 16.

Complexion troubles seem to plagu all teen-agers. Joyce McCoy's probl freckles. Maybe your daughter is about the old, old problem of a bum Here, again, the worst mistake is "Wait, and you'll grow out of it,' minimize the importance of the probl one else will, your daughter least Teach her to care for her skin with p soap and water, and healing lotion Alba Lotio, or white lotion. Even m portant is a good diet with plenty fruits and vegetables, and few, if a desserts, sweets, fats or fried foods air and adequate rest are "musts." F ties, cover the offending spots with powder base in flesh tone. In additio obvious practical advantages of suc gram of skin care, just the very feeli she's taking positive steps to clear skin will be good for your daughter's But if her skin troubles do not resp home treatment after a few mont should consult a dermatologist.

Mother (Usually) Knows Be

It is surprisingly easy for a well-m mother to cramp her daughter's s undermine youthful independence. N Coy agrees, and gives an example turned out to be a revealing "lesson"

Nita and Joy have a fair-play for selecting Joy's clothes. Joy has a fr in choosing fabrics and colors, whi decides on the style. Usually this a ment goes off without a hitch, an wardrobe gets double approval.

But on one of their recent shoppin ditions, while Nita was considering a flared skirt she thought would suit J fectly, she heard loud exclamatio turned to find Joy in raptures over she had found. It was a full dirndl in that emphasized her plumpness. Nit proved and said so. Joy asked if sh try the skirt on. When Nita saw Jo huge skirt, she demurred again, but J on the verge of tears. Finally, she sp "But mother, everyone is wearing They're new!"

Joy got the skirt. Says Nita: "It re me of the little girl with red hair wh got to wear the red dress. Joy woul been frustrated for a long time if s not been allowed to wear what all th girls were wearing in school." THE EN

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Say it is Well

BY MAY SARTON

We cannot save, be saved, but we can stand
Before each presence with gentle heart and hand,
Here in this place, in this time
without belief
Keep the channels open to each other's grief,
Never accept a death or life as strange
To its essence, but at each second be aware
How God is moving always through each flower
From birth to death in a multiple gesture
Of abnegation; and when the petals fall
Say it is beautiful and good, say it is well.

I saw my mother die and now I know
The spirit cannot be defended.
must go
Naked even of love at the very e
"Take the flowers away." (Oh, had been their friend!)
And we who ached could do nothing more.
She was detached and distant as star.

Let us be gentle to each other th
brief time
For we shall die in exile far fro home,
Where even the flowers can no
longer save:
Only the living can be healed b love.

You Can't Make a Mistake

on any purchase you make... at A&P!

This is more than a promise — it's a guarantee that you'll never risk a penny on any item you buy at A&P.

To illustrate, let's consider cheese, if you please. Whatever type you crave — we probably have it. Last time we counted, there were over 60 different kinds. Sharp, mild and in-between. Domestic types and European. And because all our cheese is bought right, aged right, cut right and kept right — you just can't buy better!

Even more important, you can't make a mistake buying cheese (or anything else) at an A&P Super Market because of this guarantee: you must be completely satisfied as to quality, flavor and value, or your money is immediately refunded — without question. Come, shop with confidence — the sale is never completed until you are completely satisfied.

You Know You Can Get The Best When You Shop at A&P

6,000,000 people come to A&P every day for the best their money can buy in fine meats, vegetables, fruits, dairy foods, baked goods, and groceries. Folks know they don't risk anything when they shop at A&P . . . because everything's guaranteed. For over 90 years A&P has been providing more and better food for less money for families like yours. Why don't you change — now?

Customers' Corner — Have you a suggestion as to how we may better serve you? Do you find everything you want quickly? Is the merchandise displayed so that you can reach it easily? Are the stocks always ample? If not, the folks who serve you at A&P would like to know about it. Please write:

CUSTOMER RELATIONS DEPARTMENT

A&P Food Stores, Graybar Building, New York 17, N. Y.

Super Markets

Where the Sale is never completed until you're completely satisfied

AMERICA'S FOREMOST RETAILERS OF . . . FINE MEATS . . . FRUITS AND VEGETABLES . . . DAIRY PRODUCTS . . . GROCERY AND HOUSEHOLD NEEDS

Conversation Piece

Taste-test triumph: chicken fricassee with noodles, slaw, crackling corn bread. For contrast, scalloped tomatoes.

STUART

Day-before preparation cuts last-minute "musts" to a minimum.

By RUTH MILLS TEAGUE

THIS will be an Indiana meal—that is, it will be a meal that means Indiana to me. We'll begin with melon rings filled with green grapes and mint gelatin. In my memory a fruit concoction was considered a stylish first course, and for this menu it will be a fine compliment to the food that follows.

Chicken fricassee will be our meat, and if lovingly prepared this can be a superb dish. The secret of succulent chicken fricassee is to cook it in advance and let it stand overnight in the broth—and this fits perfectly into our prepreparation pattern. The pieces of chicken can be put in a casserole, masked with rich gravy and heated in the oven before serving.

Now comes my top favorite of all foods, noodles cooked in chicken broth. The noodles absorb the broth during (Continued on Page 228)

Vintage Beauty that grows richer through the years is yours in Gorham* Sterling. For Gorham gentles classic grandeur into easy lines that flow gracefully into our modern way of life. Shown here: ten patterns from the beautifully designed collection of sixteen Gorham patterns in sterling flatware. Start with a six-piece place-setting for one person: knife, fork, teaspoon, salad or pastry fork, soup spoon, and butter spreader for as little as $29.75 (Fed. tax incl.). Budget plans are available. And remember it's never too soon to pick out your pattern...there's someone who'd like to know.

Ask your Gorham dealer to show you Gorham's new exclusive one-piece sterling knife handle. Doesn't dent if you accidentally drop it—no seams to discolor—remains rattle-resistant.

America's Leading Silversmiths Since 1831. ALSO MAKERS OF GORHAM SILVERPLATE, GORHAM SILVER POLISH, GORHAM BRONZE, GORHAM ECCLESIASTIC WARES. *TRADE MARKS.

COPYRIGHT 1951 BY THE GORHAM COMPANY

3 De-luscious Desserts from the dream-team of the year

BAKER'S CHOCOLATE
and BAKER'S COCONUT

Chocolate Coconut Chiffon Ring

1 envelope unflavored gelatine
1½ cups cold milk
⅔ cup sugar, divided
¼ teaspoon salt
2 squares Walter Baker's Unsweetened Chocolate
3 tablespoons Walter Baker's 4 in 1 Cocoa Mix
3 egg yolks, slightly beaten
3 egg whites, stiffly beaten
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 package Baker's Coconut, divided
½ cup chilled heavy cream

Soften gelatine in milk. Add ⅓ cup sugar, salt, and chocolate. Cook over hot water until chocolate melts and gelatine is thoroughly dissolved. Beat with rotary beater until well blended. Pour slowly over egg yolks. Cook and stir 3 minutes longer. Cool 10 minutes. Add remaining ⅓ cup sugar to beaten egg whites; beat to stiff peaks. Blend in chocolate mixture. Add vanilla and half of the coconut, cut. Turn into 1-quart ring mold. Chill until firm. Unmold. Spread with cream and Baker's 4 in 1 Cocoa Mix beaten together until fluffy and thick. Top with remaining coconut. Makes 8 servings.

Everything chocolate tastes BEST when it's BAKER'S

COCONUT BROWNIES

Substitute ¾ cup Baker's Coconut for nuts in Brownie recipe on Baker's Premium No. 1 package.

CHOCOLATE COCONUT CREAM PIE

Make your favorite Chocolate Pie with Walter Baker's Unsweetened Chocolate—add Baker's Coconut, toasted, to the filling; top with whipped cream and more toasted coconut.

Conversation Piece

(Continued from Page 226)

Maple-Sirup Gingerbread served piping hot, with cold applesauce and whipped cream, is Maple-Sirup Gingerbread at its best.

cooking, and when finished have much the consistency of fine spaghetti.

Both the chicken and the noodles are bland, and a casserole of scalloped tomatoes will provide a sharp contrast. This is made of alternate layers of tomatoes and squares of bread which have been fried in butter or margarine and dried in a low oven. The bread squares draw in the juice of the tomatoes and the result is a fluffy, soufflélike mass that doesn't run. Each layer will be sprinkled with, in addition to salt and pepper, sugar—plenty of sugar for my taste, and I know where I acquired it. Indiana. Scalloped tomatoes without sugar? Not for me.

Creamed slaw just has to go with this meal—cabbage, carrots, onion and green peppers combined with a dressing I hope will become a specialty of the house with you. The dressing is creamy in taste and consistency, but it doesn't use a drop of cream.

Crackling corn bread will complete the main course, and do a good job of it too.

For dessert we'll have very hot maple-sirup gingerbread topped with ice-cold applesauce and whipped cream—and what a wonderful combination this is!

These recipes will serve six.

MELON RINGS WITH MINTED GREEN GRAPES

Get 3 large ripe cantaloupes, cut them in half and cut a thick slice from each half. Scrape out seeds and pulp from center of rings and peel carefully to remove rind and hard green fruit next to rind. Put rings on a cooky sheet lined with wax paper. From the ends that are left make 6 balls with a ball cutter. This won't use all the ends, but the rest can be eaten another day. Remove seeds from 3 cups of green grapes, or use the seedless variety. Pour 1¼ cups boiling water over 1 lightly packed cup of mint leaves, mash with wire potato masher, cover and let stand 15 minutes. Bring to a boil, strain and pour over 1 envelope unflavored gelatin that has soaked 5 minutes in ¼ cup cold water. Stir until gelatin is dissolved and add ¼ cup sugar, juice of 1 lemon and a few drops of green vegetable coloring. When gelatin mixture is cool, add the grapes and let stand in cold water until it begins to set. Fill centers of melon rings high with the grape-and-mint gelatin and top with a melon ball. Do this the day before and store in refrigerator. If you can't get fresh mint leaves, use the same quantities of gelatin, water, lemon juice and sugar and add a fe drops of mint flavoring. Serve sections lime with the melon rings and garnish plat with mint leaves, if available.

CHICKEN FRICASSEE

Get as large a fowl as possible and have cut into pieces for serving. Cover with 7 cu boiling water, add 1 tablespoon salt and coo until tender. If you use a pressure cooke give it 20 minutes at 15 pounds. If you use stewing kettle, bring to a boil, lower hea cover and cook gently until tender, abo 1½ hours. Let chicken stand in broth ove night in a cold place—either the refrigerat or out of doors. The fat will congeal on t top. Remove it, but don't throw it awa because it's excellent for frying. Potato pa cakes fried in chicken fat are really som thing. Take out the pieces of chicken, scra off the jellied broth which will cling to the and arrange them in a shallow casserole.

To make the sauce for the chicken, melt tablespoons butter or margarine and 1 tabl spoon chicken fat, stir in 4 tablespoons flo and cook 2 minutes, stirring constantly. Ad 1 cup chicken broth and 1 cup top milk a cook, stirring constantly, until mixture h boiled briskly for 1 minute. Add salt needed, and ¼ teaspoon cayenne pepper. few pinches of saffron will give the sauce lovely yellow color as well as a delicate flav all its own. If used, the saffron should added to the flour and fat with the liquid Spoon the sauce over the pieces of chicke in the casserole. About half an hour befo serving time, put casserole in a moderate 350° F.—oven. Before serving garnish wit parsley and sprinkle with paprika.

NOODLES

Break 4 eggs into a bowl, add 4 tablespoo cream and 1½ teaspoons salt and beat wit a fork until well blended. Now begin addi flour and continue to beat with fork unt dough is so stiff that this method is impra tical. Turn dough out on a well-floure board and knead in the rest of the flour wit your hands. You'll use about 3 cups flo in all. Divide dough in half, knead ea piece a little more and leave them on t floured board, covered with a towel, for hour. For rolling the dough you will need large board. My large ones measure 20" 27" and that's a good size for this jo Sprinkle board with flour, put a ball of doug on it and roll into a very thin sheet—le than ⅛" thick. Turn dough over ma ies during rolling, and use all the flour you ed to keep it from sticking either to the oard or to the rolling pin. Roll in all direcons so that the sheet of dough will be fairly ind, but if it has a peculiar shape it's thing to worry about. Transfer to a flat vel-covered surface and roll the other ball.

t them dry for about an hour and cut as lows:

Sprinkle board lightly with flour, put a et of dough on it and rub top with flour.
t through the middle and then lay one lf over the other, cut sides together. Rub o with flour—there mustn't be any sticky faces. Fold this slab in the middle, still eping cut sides together, so that you have hicknesses of dough, and starting at the ded side roll with your fingers moderately htly into a long cylinder. Starting at the t cut end with a sharp knife, cut the roll o very thin disks and shake disks out as u go along so that the noodles won't ck together. This is a quick method of tting and you can make the noodles as in as you like. When they are all cut, shake em out all over the board and let them nd until you are ready to cook. They can made the day before if you like, but ndle with care if they are thoroughly dried cause they will be brittle and we don't nt them to break into pieces. If you buy ckaged noodles instead of making them urself, toss them lightly with flour so that ey will thicken the broth.

Noodles require 8 to 10 minutes' cooking
ne and for perfection they shouldn't stand g after they are cooked. Put broth in a ge kettle. There should be 6 cups in all,
d if needed, water can be added to make at quantity. Bring to a brisk boil and rinkle in the noodles a handful at a time, rring gently with a big fork after each dition. After all noodles are in and have me to a good boil, lower heat so that they il gently. Stir occasionally with the fork d after 8 minutes taste to see if they are nder. Probably they will be, but they ight require a minute or two more. When ne, turn heat very low, cover burner with o asbestos mats and let noodles stand on till you are ready to serve, or put kettle er another kettle of boiling water.

SCALLOPED TOMATOES

emove crusts from 6 slices stale bread and read one side with softened butter or argarine. Cut each slice into 6 pieces.
elt butter or margarine in a skillet, put pieces of bread, buttered side up, and ok over low heat until delicately browned the bottom side. Turn pieces over, brown her side and transfer to a cooky sheet.
hen all pieces are browned, put cooky eet in a low—250° F.—oven and dry them oroughly. This can be done the day before you like.

Some time in the afternoon of the party
y open two No. 2 cans tomatoes and cut matoes into pieces. Put a layer of bread uares in the bottom of a casserole and oon a layer of tomatoes over them.
rinkle with salt, freshly ground black pper and sugar. Repeat layers until all the read and tomatoes have been used, and dot
e top generously with butter or marga-ne. Forty-five minutes before serving time
t casserole in a moderate—350° F.—oven.

CREAMED SLAW

o make the dressing, put contents of 1 can weetened condensed milk in top of double iler and let it cook over boiling water 10 inutes. Cool and empty into mixing bowl.
dd 1½ teaspoons powdered mustard, 2
aspoons salt and 1 tablespoon Worcesterire sauce. Beat rapidly with rotary beater nd add, gradually, ¾ cup cider vinegar.
ontinue beating for 1 minute after all vine-ar has been added. If you have an electric ender, all ingredients can be put in at one me and about a minute of buzzing will do e trick. Put dressing in refrigerator. When ld, it will be very thick.

The dressing can be made any old time—
e day before, two days before—but I think e vegetables for the slaw should be cut the ay they are to be used. Shred 1 medium nall head cabbage, grate fairly coarsely 4 carrots, chop 3 green peppers and 1 Spanish onion. You can cut down on the quantity of onion or leave it out entirely, but for my taster it should be there and plenty of it. Store vegetables in refrigerator so that they will be crisp and cold. An hour and a half before serving, mix dressing with vegetables and store in refrigerator. It needs this long period of blending. In fact, if there's any left over you'll find that it's perfectly delicious the next day. Sometimes I sprinkle in a teaspoon or two of caraway seeds when I mix the slaw. To serve, heap slaw in bowl or on a platter and garnish with lettuce.

CRACKLING CORN BREAD

Get ½ pound pork fat, remove skin, and cut fat into squares a little less than ½″ in size. Put 3 tablespoons water in the bottom of a small kettle, add fat and cook over moderate heat for about an hour. Stir fairly often at first, but as soon as the lard begins to render out the cracklings will float on top and from there on only an occasional stir is needed. When cracklings become a delicate brown, strain and spread them on paper towels. If we were concentrating on how much lard we could make, we'd press the cracklings to get the last drop, but they are much crisper if not pressed.

I'm going to suggest that you use a corn-bread mix rather than make corn bread from scratch, but of course that's up to you. After batter is mixed, stir in cracklings and bake according to directions. You can bake the corn bread ahead of time and reheat before serving.

MAPLE-SIRUP GINGERBREAD

Beat 2 eggs, add 1 cup maple sirup, or other table sirup, ½ well-packed cup light brown sugar, 1 cup sour cream and ½ cup melted shortening and stir until blended. To 2½ cups flour, measured after sifting, add 1 teaspoon baking soda, 1 teaspoon baking powder, ¾ teaspoon salt, 3 teaspoons ginger, 2 teaspoons cinnamon, ½ teaspoon cloves and ¼ teaspoon nutmeg. Sift dry ingredients together, stir them into liquids and beat until smooth. At the last add 4 tablespoons chopped candied orange peel. This recipe will fill a 9″-square cake pan. Grease pan, cover bottom with greased wax paper and fill with batter. Bake 35 minutes in a moderate—350° F.—oven, turn off heat and let the gingerbread stand in oven 5 more minutes. If your oven thermometer is at all tricky, don't trust this timing implicitly. When done, the gingerbread should be firm to the touch all over.

Have ½ pint cream, whipped until stiff, and a bowl of applesauce waiting in the refrigerator.

To serve, put large squares of gingerbread on heated plates and pass the bowls of applesauce and whipped cream. Of course you can serve the plates entirely in the kitchen, but it's partly the contrast of hot and cold that makes this dessert so good, and once the cold applesauce and whipped cream have been put on the gingerbread it should be eaten at once.

Service. You'll want to eat this dinner at the table, I feel sure—it's that kind of meal. The actual service doesn't present any unique problems, so I'll spend a few words on the oven problem. The chicken, tomatoes, corn bread and gingerbread all have a claim on that oven, and a rationing of time is indicated. If it's quite a large oven the chicken, tomatoes and corn bread will fit in all right and the gingerbread, already baked and wrapped airtight in a paper sack, can be slipped in the minute the other things come out. If you follow this schedule the oven should be turned very low when the gingerbread goes in. But if yours is a small oven, the chicken may have to be heated ahead of time, covered with aluminum foil and kept hot over a pot of boiling water. The tomatoes would respond favorably to the same treatment. The trick is in the planning, and if that is carefully done there will be no problem to floor you. Anyhow, I hope you like my Indiana meal; it has made me hungry to write about it and I just got through eating it. Many happy returns—and in our house there will be.

THE END

6 hints to help you make perfect meringue

—pie-baking suggestions from MARIE GIFFORD, the famous Armour home economist

1. Never use more than 2 tbsp. sugar for each egg white in making meringue.

2. The filling should be cooled before adding meringue. This prevents "weeping."

3. The meringue should always touch the edge of the crust to prevent shrinkage.

4. Meringue should be baked in a 425° F. oven until lightly browned.

5. Cool the baked meringue slowly. This also helps prevent shrinkage.

6. For a change, wreath the pie with meringue mounds, as shown in the picture.

But you only need one hint to help you make perfect pie crust. Use Armour Star Lard and your pie crusts will always be rich, flaky and tender! Armour Star Lard is America's perfect pie lard—the lard of pie-baking champions. And be sure to try Marie Gifford's famous 5-minute pie crust recipe that's printed on the handy self-measuring Armour Star Lard carton. It's an easy, can't-fail recipe—exactly the right recipe for this new-type lard that needs no refrigeration. You mix all ingredients at room temperature. Saves so much time!

Got a pie-baking question? Just write to Marie Gifford, Dept. 465, Box 2053, Armour and Company, Chicago 9, Illinois. She will help you with any pie-baking problem you may have. Write to Marie Gifford, too, for an interesting free booklet of her favorite baking recipes.

Armour Star Lard

the new-type lard that stays fresh without refrigeration. Remember, lard saves you money, too!

DATE WITH A HARVARD MAN

(Continued from Page 45)

It was her first date, her first real date with a boy. And what a date! Bruce Andrews was seventeen. He was nice-looking. He was on the basketball team. She savored these things with a kind of wonder. And he asked me, she thought. Why, she hardly knew him, really. His uncle was a friend of her father's and sometimes she would meet Bruce at church or on the street; they would exchange a few words and then Laurie would move away, feeling stiff-legged and awkward. And to think that she had made an impression on him after all! Obviously she had—or why else would he ask her for a date?

She turned the corner into her own street. Old Mrs. Pye was sitting on her porch as usual, and although Laurie rarely spoke to her she now waved, filled with happiness. "It's a beautiful day!" she called out. She smiled and it was almost as if she could feel her own charm spraying from her pores. It was funny how light and pretty and graceful she felt, the way she did sometimes coming out of the movies after identifying herself with the heroine for a long time.

When she reached her house, she ran up the porch steps without being conscious of her legs moving at all. In the dark hall, she put down her books and looked at herself in the mirror. Her reflection came as a slight shock. Her face was exactly the way it always was—pleasantly snub-nosed, lightly freckled. She leaned forward, half closing her eyes. She turned her head a little so that her face didn't seem so round. Ah, that was better: in the dim light, she looked older; there seemed to be a faint mystery in her eyes that she had not noticed before. Thinking of Bruce, she knew a secret thrill. I must have something, she thought.

She straightened, hearing Emma in the kitchen. Should she go in and tell Emma? Emma was more than a maid and cook; when you didn't have a mother, she was a whole lot better than nothing to have around. But now, hearing the flow of Sukie's and Carole's voices from upstairs, she decided to tell them first.

She moved up the stairs, smiling to herself, picturing their reaction. At the landing, she stood still, the smile fading. The voices of her sisters flowed steadily, pitched low for privacy. Something pinched at her heart. She thought as she stood there, I wish I had somebody.

But the feeling of sadness went as quickly as it had come. She moved across the hall. At the open doorway to the twins' room, she stopped, looking inside. Sukie sat on the bed, painting her toenails; Carole was on the window seat, an uncompleted Argyle sock dangling from her knitting needles. They were slender, well-formed girls, completely unalike in appearance, one dark, one quite fair, but each as beautiful as the other in her own way.

LAURIE sighed faintly as she looked at them. They were eighteen, she was fifteen and a half. Between them lay an abyss of two years and six months which she could not hope to cross. The twins were very popular; they were always going to dances and house parties with boys from Dartmouth or Harvard or Princeton. They were good-humored, assured, careless, very ambitious about life itself, fiercely demanding a great deal from it, as if promises had been made at birth and so far not completely kept. They were caught up in a hundred interests in which Laurie had no part at all.

They looked up and saw her. Sukie, the dark one with bangs, was talking about some affair they were going to on Saturday night and how hard it had been for the boys to get the four tickets. "Naturally," she said, "with Bunny Walters there in person with the orchestra."

Laurie was momentarily shaken out of her own world. "Bunny Walters?" she said, entering the room. "In person?" The twins had every record Bunny Walters had ever made and there was something even in the way they said his name that always gave her the rather awesome feeling that hymns should be chanted, incense burned.

"In person," Sukie said. "Not a motion picture."

Laurie's mind returned to her own momentous news. She had intended to mention it casually, as if it were of no great consequence, but instead she blurted out, "I have a date Saturday night too." She stood motionless next to the bureau, the color rising in her face.

"That's nice," Carole said kindly. "Are you going to a party with one of your little friends?"

Something seemed to burst inside Laurie; she gave a high, almost-hysterical laugh. "Little!" she said. Her eyes were bright with triumph. "He's over six feet tall, that's all! And we're not going to a party; we have a date. He asked me this afternoon, in advance." Her fingers began twisting the belt of her dress into a stiff spiral as she watched their faces.

Her sisters exchanged a quick look, smiling gently. It was the sort of look parents

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Her Beauty

By Dan G. Hoffman

She runs to meet me wearing all
The wild red darkness of the deer;
Ah, the long winds stroke her hair . . .
Her eyes are woodland, beautiful.

Such poise there moves in her sweet body,
Such passionate motion grace restrains,
Intemperate blood rides down my veins
And I am mastered by her beauty.

And mastered are my heart and mind
Till I forget this town is walled,
Forget the fears that stalk the world . . .
Remembering how her hands are kind.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

might exchange after a child had said something amusing. And then Sukie said, "Isn't that marvelous! Who is the lucky Lothario?" Her voice was rich with indulgence.

"His name is Bruce Andrews." Some of the excitement had gone out of Laurie. She thought, They just think it's kind of cute, like a Tom Thumb wedding or something. She felt slightly jarred, as if she had come down heavily on a step that wasn't there. "He's a junior. He's on the basketball team." She wished that she could truthfully add that he had a mustache and had served two years in the Marines

"Well, well," Sukie said, putting down the bottle of polish. "He sounds quite devastating, I must say." She yawned.

"A basketball player," Carole said. She sighed. "And only yesterday, it seems, she was in kindergarten majoring in sand piles." She looked up suddenly at Sukie. "Remember that lifeguard at Rocky Beach?"

Sukie giggled. "Scoop," she said.

"The rubber bathing suit," Carole said. She began to laugh hysterically.

"That popcorn," Sukie said, rocking back and forth with laughter. "And the fireworks. Holy Mother Machree." She began to hiccup.

Laurie leaned forward, her face painfully eager. "What lifeguard?" she said. "What happened?"

The twins stopped laughing suddenly. Carole picked up her knitting again. "Oh, it wasn't anything," she said, her face composed. "It was only funny if you happen to be there."

Laurie swallowed. Sukie and Carole spo a language all their own; their crypt phrases, their private code were as hard f her to decipher as ancient Persian. Som times she got a tantalizing glimpse of wh lay behind it and then, suddenly, the do was shut firmly in her face, as now.

"Oh, well," she said stiffly, straightenin She began to walk toward the doorway. have important things to do." She tried look mysterious, but she knew her siste weren't even faintly interested. The fact wa they were probably certain that she was goi for a soda or to the library—which was e actly what she was going to do. My life, sl thought with some bitterness, is an op book.

AT the landing in the hall, she looked bac The twins were murmuring again in lo intimacy, sitting together now on the wi dow seat. Laurie stood motionless. Sl wished that she had someone who wou look at her in just that way, someone wi whom she could share the close, war things. So many times she had felt th way—as if she were standing in shadow b fore a bright circle that was locked again her. And although she told herself that sl cared nothing about her sisters' crazy affair a formless longing without beginning or en gathered inside her.

In the kitchen, she told the tall, angul Emma about the date.

"No!" Emma shrieked at once, her middl aged, horselike face reflecting a genuir amazement and delight. "Will you lissen her!" She crossed her arms over her unde ripe bosom and regarded Laurie with brigl eyes. "How long you know this boy?"

Laurie felt a rich satisfaction spreadir through her. "Not very long," she said, sea ing herself on a stool. She had forked son leftover tuna fish onto a slice of bread an now her jaws worked rhythmically. "H never paid any real attention to me before.

Emma nodded wisely. "He was jest lookir you over," she said. "He musta decided yc were plenty pretty, finally."

Laurie lowered her eyes modestly. "Oh, dunno," she mumbled. But she was ver happy. She swallowed the last of the tur fish and looked up. There was something Emma's homely face, something warm an very gentle, that made her feel a sudde pressure in her chest. "Emma," she sai The color rose in her cheeks. "You're nic to have than sisters."

Emma looked at her for a moment an then turned away. "Ah, well," she sai "There's nothin' wrong with them girls She hesitated and moved to the stove. "It jest that you have a little catchin' up to do

"Who?" her father said, frowning, whe she told him at dinner. But his face cleare when he heard that the date was with M Sharpe's nephew. "Well, I suppose it's a right." He was a pleasant-faced, baldir man with a perpetually harassed expressior it was clear that the responsibility of raisir three motherless daughters was sometime too much for him. "Where do the two of yc expect to go?"

"I guess," Laurie said, "to the movies an for ice cream afterward." And she though I hope everybody from school sees the two of together. The mental picture of herself an Bruce coming out of the theater side by sic was so dazzling that she felt a choking sens tion in her chest.

It seemed that every passing moment du ing the next three days was merely a proje tion to seven-thirty Saturday night. Whe she awoke finally on Saturday, it was wi the nebulous feeling of something wonderf forming, gathering, swelling in the air lil an iridescent bubble about to burst. Only t more hours, she thought. She lay in bed, sta ing up at the ceiling, trying to recall Bruc

(Continued on Page 232)

Pick the peaches you'd pick yourself!

Pick LIBBY'S off your grocer's shelf, and you're picking the peaches you'd pick from the trees

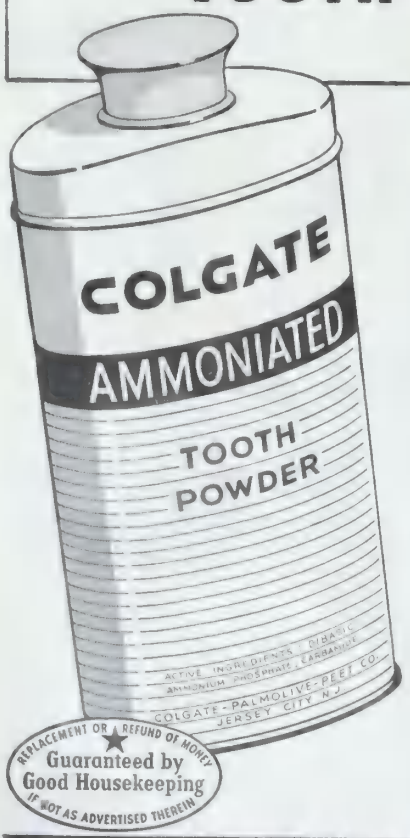
These are the peaches your eye would have chosen . . . the beauties you'd have reached for too. These are the peaches never picked till they themselves say, "Go!" . . . when their warm crimson "blush" announces the very hour that they're right and ready.



Luscious and sweet and full of flavor are these Libby peaches. How good to know that such peaches are on grocers' shelves! And at prices no higher (sometimes even lower) than others. Pick the peaches you'd pick yourself . . . PICK LIBBY'S.

Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago 9, Ill.

Dental Research Indicates You Can Help

Prevent Tooth Decay With COLGATE Ammoniated Tooth Powder

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Colgate's Scientific Formula Gives Extra Protection As It Cleans Your Teeth—and Breath!

1 REMOVES ACID FILM usually associated with tooth decay! Laboratory tests indicate that Colgate Ammoniated Tooth Powder may help you avoid pain, worry and expense of needless tooth decay, when used regularly as directed.

2 TEETH LOOK CLEANER, feel cleaner immediately. That's because Colgate's foamy cleaning action removes dulling film so well teeth get naturally, sparkling clean.

3 CLEANS BREATH, TOO . . . Removes tiny food particles that cause much bad breath. Has a minty, mouth-refreshing flavor that even children love!

Get Colgate Ammoniated Tooth Powder today for the whole family. Available at any toilet goods counter.

4oz. 47¢ 2oz. 27¢

With A Flavor The Whole Family Will Enjoy

(Continued from Page 230)

face. Somehow it wouldn't come to her mind. The smile faded; she felt troubled. And then she reasoned, After all, I don't know him very well.

Right after breakfast, she washed her hair and set it in neat wet circles. She wandered about the house, going into the kitchen from time to time to seek assurances from Emma, and because she was nervous she kept opening the refrigerator door and eating what she found in the leftover dishes.

Emma shook her head, frowning. "You keep that up," she said, "you gonna be bustin' at the seams tonight. Your feller'll think he's goin' out with a lady wrestler."

Everybody, it seemed, had plans for the evening. Laurie's father was attending a business dinner, the twins were expecting two seniors from Princeton who were in town because of the between-term week end. Emma, because Laurie was taken care of, was going to visit her sister. The whole house, Laurie thought, seemed to be holding its breath in anticipation for the hours ahead.

Supper was very early. Laurie couldn't eat; she felt an almost sickish excitement. Her hair had dried into flat, stiff circles around her head, her cheeks shone and she was wearing an old pink polka-dotted robe that was too small for her.

Sukie regarded her doubtfully across the table. "All you need right now is a teething ring around your neck," she said. "I hope you're planning to age a trifle when you get dressed. Maybe a mustache would do the trick."

"Ha-ha," Laurie said. Thinking of Bruce, she felt a surge of confidence. "Don't worry about me. I can look seventeen sometimes."

The twins exchanged a look. Carole cleared her throat. "Well, don't overdo it on that end, either," she said. "Don't look too matronly. Leave off your bifocals and don't wear your fringed shawl."

Laurie searched in her mind for a fitting reply, but, as usual, her older sisters' flip phrasing was too much for her. She was reduced to saying "Ha-ha" again. I don't care about them, she thought; tonight I have my own life to live.

At six o'clock she mounted the stairs, conscious of her heart beating faster. It's beginning, she thought; it's already beginning. She took a steaming bubble bath, gave herself a complicated facial, brushed out her hair. Before the mirror, she applied lipstick with hushed concentration and then got into her best dress, a pale-blue wool with a full skirt and a small round collar. Every few minutes she looked at the clock, but it was astonishing how slowly the hands moved. She was all finished dressing at twenty minutes to seven.

The arrival of Emma in her hat and coat was a welcome diversion. Emma's narrow face seemed flushed and she was looking downward, pulling furiously at her gloves. "Well, I'll be goin'," she said. "I'll be back before you. You have a good time."

"Okay," Laurie said, a little puzzled.

Emma hesitated and looked up. The color was high in her face. "There's a little somethin' on your pillow," she said.

Laurie stared at her and then turned her head. There was a small white box, tied with ribbon, at the head of her bed. She was astonished.

EMMA looked down again. "Ain't nothin' much," she said. "Guess I shoulda put it in the icebox, you would have found it quicker."

Laurie walked over and picked up the little box. She unwrapped it and found a little pin inside—a silver turtle resting on a bed of cotton. Turning slowly, she lifted her eyes to Emma, feeling a swelling inside her, deep and full. "Oh, Emma," she said, "it's beautiful."

Emma cleared her throat loudly. "I'm nothin' much," she said again. "A present gives a person confidence some I figured . . . the first time goin' out with a boy—well, that's a special thing."

Laurie met her eyes. For a long moment they stood motionless in the silence, gazing at each other. "Yes," Laurie whispered finally, "it's a special thing."

Emma turned abruptly. "Well, I'm goin'," she said. "You let him do most the talkin', now."

"I will."

After Emma had gone, Laurie turned to the mirror, her eyes very soft. She pinned the little metal turtle to her collar and then looked at the clock. Almost seven. Suddenly she wondered what Bruce was doing at that moment, and it came to her that he was getting ready too. Maybe, she thought, wonder, he's putting stuff on his hair to look nice; maybe he's getting out his best tie to look for me. A soft thrill of excitement went through her.

SHE went downstairs and turned on the lamps. For the next half hour she tried three different chairs until she decided that the light next to the sofa was the most flattering. She sat down, feeling her heart fluttering against her ribs. Any minute, she thought. She would hear his step on the walk; the bell would shrill suddenly —— All the delicious suspense of the past three days seemed to gather into a tight knot inside her chest.

Upstairs, the twins were talking, singing, slamming doors; Laurie could hear the sound of the shower. She sank back, drifting into a little dream. When she returned to reality her eyes went automatically to the clock. She saw, with a slight shock, that it was seven minutes to eight.

Immediately she chided herself. Naturally, you couldn't expect him to arrive on the dot, like a train. When a boy said seven-thirty he meant "around" seven-thirty, especially someone as worldly as Bruce. She sat back, arranging her skirt folds carefully. Any second now, he would come.

At five minutes of eight, Sukie called down, "What time is Sonny Boy coming?"

Laurie was standing by the window, looking out through the Venetian blinds at the street. She jumped sharply, but immediately composed herself. "Pretty soon!" she called up with false cheerfulness. "He's a little late!"

She moved away from the window and sat down, very carefully, on the sofa again. Detained, that's all, she told herself. Probably, in five minutes, you'll be walking down the street with him, laughing about the whole thing.

The hands of the clock seemed to move more quickly now—too quickly. Five minutes after eight, ten minutes. At a quarter after, Laurie jumped up and went to the window again, her eyes straining through the slotted blinds to the corner. He lived only a few blocks away. Why didn't he come? Why didn't he at least telephone?

The dark street was quiet, deserted, and then a figure moved, came into view—a man's figure. Her heart leaped and then plummeted down again. A middle-aged man leading a little dog. She turned away, suddenly sick. Her eyes went to the clock. Twenty-seven minutes after eight. Terror smashed against her heart. He isn't coming, she thought.

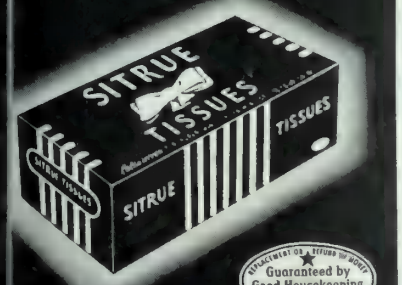
She sank into the nearest chair, heedless of her dress, and closed her eyes. She was very still. She had told everybody at school about the date. On Monday, all the girls would ask her what it had been like. She felt the quick, inner spasm of tears, but she wrestled it down. Dear God, she prayed, let him come, I'll never tell a lie again, I'll go to church

BUDDHA ON MARRIAGE

There are five rules that the wife should observe. First, when her husband enters she should rise and greet him. Secondly, when her husband is out she should occupy herself with cooking and washing as she waits for him. Thirdly, she must not attach her heart impurely to another man, and if her husband talks to her harshly she must not reply in like words or show anger. Fourthly, she must obey the orders of her husband and not conceal household objects. Fifthly, when her husband is resting she should not go to bed herself until she has closed the doors.

...OW...Real SALON-TYPE Home Facial...

...XCITING BEAUTY APPEAR IN 10 MINUTES
...henever you want to look your best



...hink fine salon clay facials a luxury? ...hen try one at home . . . for pennies with ...opper White Clay Pack. It's so easy! ...o wonderfully effective! Just smooth on ...opper White Clay. Let dry. Rinse. In ...) minutes, your skin looks clearer, finer, ...elicately aglow . . . you feel refreshed ...d relaxed. Money back if you're not ...elighted. *25¢ to $1. Also 10¢ trial size.

...OLLOW UP your Hopper ...ome Facial with extra-soft- ...ing Hopper Homogenized ...cial Cream. *plus tax

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

...PPER®
white clay pack
HOME FACIAL

NEW...Cellu-woven®
SITRUE TISSUES

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

...y the new Sitrue Tissues..."Cellu-woven" ... give feather-softness... firmer-fibered ...r added strength and extra absorbency!

CORNS
Removed by Mosco, also Calluses. Quick, easy, economical. Just rub on. Jars. 30¢, 50¢. At your druggist. Money refunded if not satisfied. Moss Co., Rochester, N. Y.
MOSCO ★CORN★ REMOVER

YARNS at NEW LOW PRICES
Latest novelty yarns for stoles, etc. Send 10¢ to Dept. L for big sample and color card (refunded with first order).
ONOCO YARN CO., 371 GRAND ST., NEW YORK 2.

Mistakes Parents make
Every parent should have this new book. It is free; no obligation. Simply address FREE BOOK
PARENTS' ASSOCIATION
Dept. 410 Pleasant Hill, Ohio

single Sunday, I'll help the poor—only please, please let him come.

She opened her eyes and caught sight of her reflection in the mirror. I'm homely, she thought; I'll never be loved, I'll never be happy. She saw herself as an old maid, with a fat face and big feet and black cotton stockings. That was the way it would be. People would refer to her as "poor Miss Laura."

She took a deep, desperate breath. She would count in tens to five hundred; by that time, maybe he would come. Her lips began to move. Ten, twenty, thirty—she swallowed—forty, fifty —— Her lips kept moving without sound. She was very white and there was a pinched look around her mouth.

The twins' room looked as if a hurricane had swept through it; there was a welter of scattered lingerie, half-opened bureau drawers and spilled powder. But the twins themselves, in the middle of the room, were shining and beautiful in their dark taffeta dresses and pearl dog collars, like two Aphrodites who had sprung full blown and radiant from the churning sea.

It was Carole who looked at the clock and frowned. "It's late," she said. "Didn't Laurie expect this date at seven-thirty?"

They stared at each other, suddenly appalled.

"You don't think," Carole said, "that he would ——"

THE room was very quiet. "Holy Mother Machree," Sukie breathed finally.

As if on signal, they turned and left the room, taking off their shoes at the stair landing. Halfway down the steps, they crouched in the darkness. They could see Laurie sitting in a chair, staring blindly ahead. She was very still and her face seemed very small. Slowly they tiptoed up again, picking up their shoes. In their room, they faced each other.

"A stand-up," Sue said with finality.

Carole's lovely mouth tightened. "That creep," she said.

"She looked so—so little," Sukie said. "As if she shrank or something."

They stared at each other. Carole drew in her breath. "We've got to do something," she said.

Laurie sat motionless. It was as if she were confined within some dark, narrow space from which she dared not move. She had heard, vaguely, the voices of the twins talking on the telephone extension upstairs, but the sound had not really registered. Disaster had curled over her in a great dark wave; now she floated under it, lost and drowning.

Suddenly the twins burst into the room. "Thank heavens he didn't come!" Sukie was crying out. "You can save our lives!"

Laurie looked up at them blankly. Her throat was locked.

"We were just talking to Buzz and Pete," Carole said in a rush of words, "and Buzz has a man visiting him with no date." She cleared her throat. "A Harvard man, and he ——"

"He's coming along," Sukie broke in impatiently. "We thought you could be his date."

"Me?" Laurie said. She had stiffened. "With a Harvard man?"

But Sukie was pulling her to her feet. "Come on!" she was saying. "They're on their way over! We haven't got much time!"

"Time?" Laurie echoed. The twins were pulling her toward the stairs. "Time for what?"

"We've got to get you fixed up," Carole said. "You said you could look seventeen, didn't you?"

During the next fifteen minutes, Laurie felt dazed, frightened, helpless. The twins, when they got rolling, were like a superb armored division going into action. Laurie stood motionless in her slip while they darted about feverishly into closets and bureau drawers. Dresses were hauled out, placed against her, withdrawn; things were smeared on her face; fingers fiddled with her hair. She felt like a large lump of dough being worked over by two pastry cooks. Finally

Fashion editors stress COVERED BUTTONS
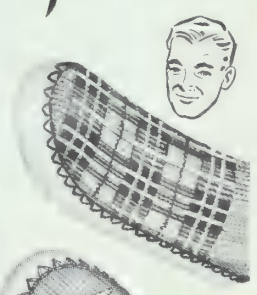
for a couturier look!

Now—with Prims Cover-your-own Buttons and Buckles, it's so easy to add that final fashion touch to your sewing craftsmanship. No tools! No paste! No sewing! Just snip the fabric—place it over the button—click the two sections together. Presto! covered buttons... the custom touch for dresses, gloves, hats, pillows, upholstery.

Choice of various sizes and styles 25c a card at button counters everywhere. (slightly higher in Can.)

YOUR PIN MONEY is well spent on rustproof Prym's Nobility pins.

The Original Prims Cover-your-own BUTTONS • BUCKLES



Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Suited to McCall's pattern 8595—Prims covered buttons and buckles

WILLIAM PRYM, INC., DAYVILLE, CONN.

Now Genuine Ripons® for the Entire Family

For cozy comfort there's nothing like a pair of Ripons — the most relaxing slip-ons ever designed! Washable soft, pure wool (or nylon) snuggle the feet and padded glove leather soles cushion the step. Grand for loafing and lounging around the house, for breakfast wear, after a day outdoors, traveling, at college, etc. Choice of many beautiful styles, colors and patterns. They make an ideal gift for anyone, anytime. Ripon Knitting Works, Ripon, Wisconsin. (In Canada, Forest City Knitting Co., London, Ont.)

Priced from $1.95 per pair.

America's Most Comfortable Footwear

© 1951

Honey-happy apple pie

WITH A SIOUX BEE ACCENT!

You'll be "honey-happy" too, when you spoon into this spicy-sweet deep-dish apple pie. Sioux Bee Honey, wonderfully delicate in flavor, adds a lusciousness that you have to experience. Words can't describe it.

Sioux Bee Honey is delicious in so many ways . . . with hot biscuits or rolls, waffles or pancakes, breakfast cereals or French toast. So is Sioux Bee Honey Spread, the crystallized kind that spreads like butter. And both are sweetness in its most healthful and digestible form.

The world's largest honey packers bring you these fine products, in the same high quality always. Ask your grocer for them . . . and just say "Sue Bee."

COLORFUL FREE BOOKLET contains a treasure of tempting honey recipes. Write for your copy —to Sioux Honey Association, Dept. L-1051, Sioux City 6, Iowa.

For finest honey, say "Sue Bee"

they gave her a little push toward the mirror. "Hey," Sukie breathed. "What about that?"

Laurie stared at her reflection. She felt a choking sensation in her chest. Dark-green dress, a little off the shoulders; her hair swept back into a waterfall of curls; bright lipstick on the right way; twinkling earrings ——

"She's a knockout," Carole said critically. "She even looks seventeen and three months."

Sukie shook her head. "Have we stabbed ourselves in the back?" she said. "Maybe we overdid it."

The bell rang downstairs and they all jumped. Laurie turned pale. "A Harvard man," she said hoarsely. "I don't think I ——"

But her sisters weren't listening; they were running out of the room. At the doorway, Sukie turned. "His name is Dick," she said. "He likes books, boats and Irish setters. He collects old guns or something." She was gone.

Laurie stood motionless. Her mouth was dry. And then she saw her discarded blue dress on the bed, the little turtle pin gleaming. Emma's voice came back to her: "A little present gives a person confidence sometimes." Laurie smiled softly and walked over to the dress. She took off the pin and fastened it to her shoulder.

"Laurie!"

She stood motionless. And then she took a deep breath and moved out of the room. She walked slowly down the steps, seeing them all at the foot, staring up at her. At the bottom, she heard the twins' voices making introductions; she looked into the male faces, so good-looking, so finished, so alarmingly old.

"Well, well," the one named Buzz was saying, looking at Carole. "And where have you been keeping this?" He looked back at Laurie, grinning.

She swallowed hard. They all seemed to be waiting for her to say something. Her hand went up nervously to her collar and stilled at the little metal turtle. Suddenly she let out her breath and grinned back.

"If you owned the Hope diamond," she said, "would you wear it every day? I'm only brought out on Sundays and holidays."

The three boys laughed. But the twins, Laurie saw with satisfaction, were staring at her with their mouths open.

It was the most wonderful evening of her life. It was more than the dancing, more than the fact that Dick was quiet and sweet and attentive, more than the delicious shock of her own reflection in the mirror. It was her sisters who made it so wonderful; it was the way they looked at her, talked to her. "Ask Laurie," they would say to the boys, "she might know"; or "What do you Laurie? You were always bright about like that." As if, she thought in wond were all the same age.

They played records; they danced talked. Once Laurie heard the kitche slam and she knew Emma was back. until I tell her tomorrow, she thought until I tell them all at school that I had with a Harvard man; they will die. H away Bruce Andrews seemed now! It to her that she hadn't cared about h all; she had cared only about the date

They piled into a car and went som for a hamburger. They danced some And at last they were home again, good night in twosomes at the doorwa

"Laurie," Dick whispered, "thanks I see you again?"

She looked up at him in the darkne eyes big in her face. She took a deep b "I—I think I should tell you," she "I'm only fifteen." She cleared her t "And a half."

He smiled gently. "I know," he "There are ways of telling. But I'd come back in about three years. Is it a d

Laurie smiled too. "A date," she pered. "I'll put it in my engagement b

And then it was all over; the boy gone.

In the house, Laurie turned to h sters. "Gosh," she said. She closed he "It—it was a divine evening." An something stirred in her mind, cam sharp focus. Her eyes flew open. " Walters," she breathed. "Tonight w night you were going to see him in pe Carole made a little gesture with her "Ah, well," she said.

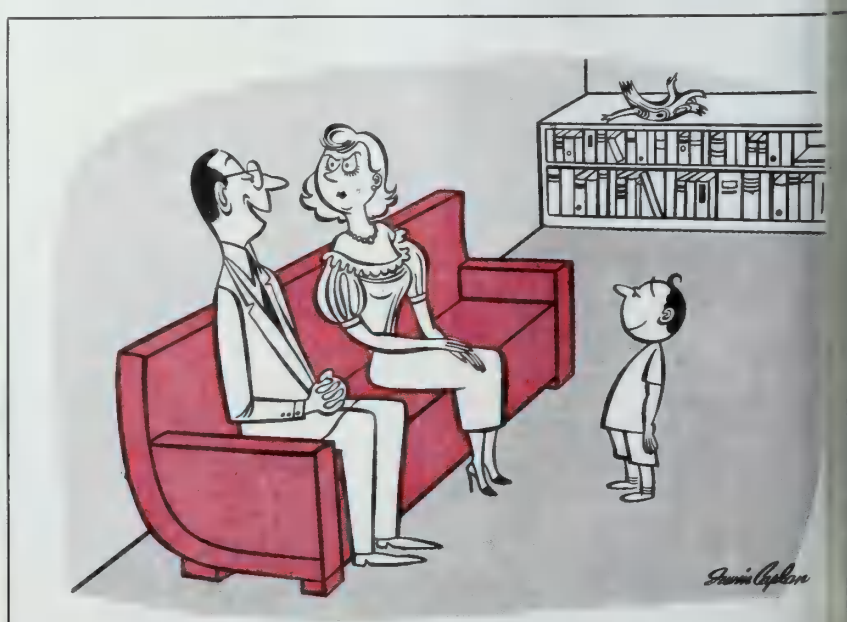
Laurie stared at both of them, and moment a great many things became "Why did you give up the evening whispered. "Why did you go to a trouble because I had a stand-up?"

The hall was very quiet. Sukie drew breath. She was smiling gently. "You sister," she said.

Laurie felt a pressure in her ches opened her mouth, but no words cam swallowed and turned away blindly. " our sister." It was so simple, so beaut



On the steps, Carole giggled suc "That fat boy," she said, "with th glasses."

"The clam chowder," Sukie said. gan laughing, one hand over her diap "Oh, brother, that dull plop."

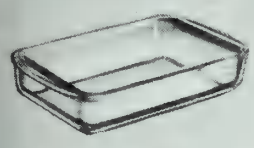
"And the girl," Laurie said. She wa ing, chortling, holding onto the banis support. "Those red sequins."

The three of them stumbled up the their hands over their mouths, wrap gether in love and memory and la with no difference between them at a

THE

"Oh, let your brother hang around if he wants to. There's nothing I was going to say that he couldn't hear."

Are all these PYREX® WARE treasures in your cupboard?



HOW'S YOUR personal PYREX Ware collection? Is it complete? Is it up-to-date?

Do you own those wonderful new casserole sets in color? Do you do your top-of-stove cooking in marvelous PYREX Flameware?

Check your cupboard against the dishes on this page. See all of these, and dozens more, at the PYREX Ware counter of your favorite store.

And when you're buying, be sure you're getting one-and-only, honest-to-goodness PYREX Ware—the original, top-quality glass cooking ware. Look for the name every single time—stamped in the bottom of every dish.

Special opportunity. See the 100th Anniversary Set at the bottom of this page? Take advantage of this reduced price now. The offer expires soon!

PYREX Utility Dish

Bake in it, serve in it! It's useful a dozen different ways. 12⅜-inch size 89¢. 14-inch size $1.00.

10½-inch size. 69¢

PYREX Hostess Ramekins

For baking individual meat pies, for serving soup, cereal. Red or yellow, 12-oz. size 39¢ each.

7-oz. size. Each 29¢

PYREX Flameware Saucepan

Lets you see what's cooking. With flat bottoms and lock-on covers. 1-quart size $1.95. 2-quart size $2.45.

1½-qt. size. $2.25

PYREX Oven Roaster

See how the Sunday roast is cooking. Big enough for 5-lb. chicken. Use top and bottom as separate baking dishes.

3-quart size. $1.39

PYREX Hostess Casserole

—in color! Modern casserole with cover, in gay red or sunny yellow. For baking and serving. 1½-quart size $1.95.

2½-qt. size. $2.25

PYREX Flavor-Saver Pie Plate

High fluted edges keep juices and flavors in your pie. 10-inch size 69¢.

9-inch size. 59¢

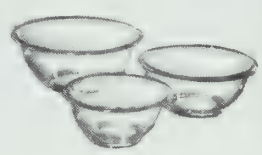
PYREX Hostess Oven-and-Table Set

2½-quart open bowl with four 12-oz. individual dishes. Set in red or yellow.



$2.95

PYREX Flameware Double Boiler

For perfect sauces and frostings. May also be used as 2 separate saucepans.

1½-quart size. $3.45

PYREX Clear Bowl Set

A nest of three clear glass bowls —1-, 1½-, 2½-quart sizes. For mixing, serving, baking.

Set of three. $1.39

PYREX Pie Plate

Bakes pies quickly—with a light flaky undercrust. 8½-inch size 29¢. 10½-inch size 49¢.

9½-inch size. 39¢

PYREX Flameware Percolator

For perfect coffee every time—always the right strength! 4-cup size $2.45. 9-cup size $3.45.

Six cup size. $2.95

PYREX Hostess Set

—in color! 1½-qt. covered casserole with 4 individual ramekins. Red or yellow.

Complete set. $2.95

PYREX Round Cake Dish

For cakes, of course! Perfect too, as a shallow casserole, for serving vegetables or dessert.

8⅝-inch size. 59¢

PYREX Color Bowl Set

Four bowls—for mixing, baking, serving. Each bowl a different color.

Set of four. $2.95

PYREX Oven-Refrigerator Dish

Clear glass, with cover. Use it for baking, serving and storing. 1½-pint size 59¢.

1½-cup size. 39¢

PYREX Flameware Teapot

Boils water, brews tea, looks handsome on your table!

Six cup size. $1.95

PYREX Measure

Easy to read! 1-cup size 29¢, 1-quart size 79¢.

1-pint size. 59¢

100th ANNIVERSARY PYREX SPECIAL

Handy 1-quart casserole, newly designed, with wide, easy-to-grasp handles . . . a cover that doubles as a baking or serving dish . . . PLUS 6 custard cups, with handsome fluted edges, 5-oz. size! All this for only 98¢!

Special prices, when you buy them separately

1-quart casserole with utility cover. Regularly ~~79¢~~. Only 59¢ each.

Six 5-oz. custard cups. Regularly ~~60¢~~. Only 39¢.

(This offer good for limited time only)

Reduced price for limited time only!

ALL 8 PIECES FOR ONLY 98¢

(Regularly priced at ~~$1.39~~)

PYREX® WARE – A PRODUCT OF CORNING GLASS WORKS

PYREX BRAND WARE CORNING GLASS WORKS CORNING N.Y.

If it's Pyrex Ware—the trade-mark is on it

® is a registered trade-mark of Corning Glass Works, Corning, N. Y.

You can see the
MAGIC FLAVOR SECRET of MY-T-FINE
Lemon Flavor Pie Filling

Flavor's sealed-in for Taste-Perfect Lemon Pie
every time

For perfect results every time, make lemon pie the quick and easy My-T-Fine way. Flavor made from the purest oil of lemon is sealed in the My-T-Fine Magic Flavor Capsule . . . so it's always fresh, always full strength, always the same in every package. The flavor stays sealed in until just the right moment during cooking—then is released like magic as the capsule dissolves—giving you the best-tasting filling you ever put in a pie shell. Be sure you always get My-T-Fine . . . America's favorite for lemon pie.

© 1951 PENICK & FORD LTD., INC.

MY-T-FINE DESSERTS . . . 8 DELICIOUS FLAVORS
Made by the makers of Vermont Maid Syrup and Brer Rabbit Molasses

Quick & Easys for Two

By LOUELLA G. SHOUER

Marilynn and Rusty combine yardwork and dinner outdoors.

MARILYNN, Rusty and their daughter, Darby, live in a charm g apartment, converted from a barn loft on Marilynn's moth s property. Having been a JOURNAL secretary in the Beauty Departm t before her marriage, Marilynn is used to being busy. The day visited her, she had spent three hours typing for the local Commu Chest headquarters, had scraped down a table for refinishing, and a big pot of hamburger-vegetable chowder ready for our din .

Marilynn loves to cook and feels blessed that Rusty and Da have good appetites. Like most young married couples, they fa the old stand-bys, such as spaghetti and meat balls and tuna-fish seroles as budget easers, but Marilynn has specialties of her own that just as money-saving—her hamburger-vegetable chowder, for instar

Any Monday

Hamburger-Vegetable Chowder
Coleslaw with Green Pepper
Peach Shortcake
(made with biscuit mix and frozen peaches)

On Monday night, Marilynn has to have dinner ready promptly at six. "Hamburger-vegetable chowder is a great favorite of ours for ready-on-the-dot dinners," Marilynn says. "I can make it quickly and easily in the pressure cooker. My pressure cooker was a wedding present and I bank on it for many a quick meal. The chowder reheats well—in fact, I o double the quantity, as we lik just as well or even better the sec day. It is a hearty dish and n only a big salad and a filling des to make a pleasurable meal."

HAMBURGER-VEGETABLE CHOWDER

Heat pressure cooker. Add 2 ta spoons butter or margarine and br ½ pound ground beef in it. Then a cup canned tomatoes, ¼ cup diced ery, 2 carrots, diced, 2 onions, chop 2 teaspoons salt, ¼ cup raw rice, 3 s potatoes, diced, and 4 cups wa Cover cooker and cook 15 minute 15 pounds pressure. Cool cooker fore removing the lid. Reseason taste, adding pepper at this p Serves two generously.

A Budget Easer That's Easy

Spaghetti Toss
Green Salad
Apricot Sundae

•

"We aren't one of those couples that feel a meal isn't a meal unless there's meat on the table. I was brought up in a large family and we didn't have meat every night for dinner—it was too expensive. We are perfectly happy with an omelet or a spaghetti dish. We could eat plates of spaghetti done with egg and cheese. With it we have one of our favorite desserts, so simple it hardly sounds like anything at all—but we love it."

SPAGHETTI TOSS

Add 1½ teaspoons salt to 1½ quarts rapidly boiling water. Add 4 ounces or package thin spaghetti and cook, uncovered, stirring occasionally until tender—but not mushy soft. Drain in colander and keep hot over boiling water. Meanwhile, melt 2 tablespoons butter or margarine in a small skillet; add 2 medium onions, chopped, and ½ clove garlic, speared with a toothpick (so you can fish it out later). Sauté until golden brown. Remove garlic. Put the spaghetti on a platter, pour sautéed onions over it. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. Break a raw egg in center and toss and mix quickly with two forks until spaghetti is coated. The egg cooks just enough from the heat of the spaghetti and blends in beautifully. Sprinkle generously with grated dry cheese—with parsley, too, if you have it.

APRICOT SUNDAE

Serve plain vanilla ice cream in sherbet glasses with apricot nectar poured over it!

Take 4 Eggs

Onion Omelet — Bacon Curls
Butter-Steamed Carrots and Potatoes
Frosted Pineapple with Sour Cream

Strangely enough, most of the young cooks I've talked to catch on to making omelets with ease and dispatch at the very start of their cooking adventures. Their mothers—not always so readily. As Marilynn says, "Why all the fuss and mystery about making an omelet? It's so easy—every cookbook tells you how. Even if mine slightly resembled scrambled eggs the first time I tried—we like scrambled eggs. We've had omelets in practically every flavor—onion omelet is a current favorite."

ONION OMELET

Fry ½ cup chopped onion in 2 tablespoons butter or margarine. Mix up a plain omelet mixture, using 4 eggs—2 for you and 2 for him—just as you have been doing for breakfast omelet, following your cookbook directions. Add the onions just before you pour the business into the skillet. Proceed as for any omelet. But this isn't any omelet. It's onion omelet, and very good eating with crisp bacon and the butter-steamed carrots and potatoes.

BUTTER-STEAMED CARROTS AND POTATOES

Scrape and slice 2 carrots thin. Peel and dice 2 potatoes. (The peelings of both come off in a wink with one of those peeler gadgets you can buy in the ten-cent store. Maybe you got one in your kitchen-shower loot and know how handy it is.) Put the carrots and potatoes in a saucepan with ½ cup water (yes, this is enough), 2 tablespoons butter or margarine and 1 teaspoon salt. Bring to a boil and boil, covered, for 5 minutes. Turn heat to low and simmer 15 minutes. Carrots and potatoes should be perfectly done by that time. There will be just enough butter and juices to sauce the vegetables.

And for a quick-to-do dessert that is refreshing, try

FROSTED PINEAPPLE WITH SOUR CREAM

Spoon well-chilled canned-pineapple chunks or partially defrosted frozen-pineapple chunks into sherbet glasses. Put a spoonful of thick commercially soured cream on top and sprinkle generously with nutmeg.

(Continued on Page 238)

PHOTOS BY STUART

Pass-through helps get food to the table in a hurry.

Beef in Tomato-Rice Ring

Here's a hearty main-dish for a hungry family any time of day! Fun to make, too, with good Campbell's Tomato Soup!

Hearty Beef Treat

½ cup chopped celery
½ cup chopped onion
1 pound ground beef
2 tablespoons shortening
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
2 teaspoons prepared mustard
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
2 cups cooked peas
½ cup liquid from peas
1 can (1¼ cups) Tomato Soup

Lightly brown celery, onion and meat in melted shortening; stir occasionally. Add remaining ingredients; heat thoroughly. Fill center of Tomato-Rice Ring.

How to Make Tomato-Rice Ring

2 cans (2½ cups) Campbell's Tomato Soup
4 cups water
¼ cup grated onion
2 cups uncooked rice (or broken thin spaghetti)

Heat to boiling: soup, water and onion. Add rice; cook (covered) over low heat for 20 minutes; stir occasionally. Remove from heat, uncover, allow to set about 10 minutes until rice absorbs remaining moisture. Pack in greased 1½-qt. ring mold. Set in hot water until ready to serve. Unmold on platter; fill center. 6 servings.

Smoother...richer...better tasting

America's Favorite Tomato Cooking Sauce!

DELICIOUS AS A SOUP... AS A POUR-ON SAUCE ... AND IN COOKING

EVERY day more and more women are cooking with Campbell's Tomato Soup. Yes, it's used more than any other brand of any tomato product as a pour-on sauce and every-day cooking ingredient. Always makes things taste better! Here's the reason:

Campbell's Tomato Soup is double-rich, double-thick—just as it comes from the can. What a sauce!

A perfect blend of best-grade, field-ripened tomatoes with creamery butter, choicest seasonings. Nothing like it for flavor and honest goodness!

Yes ...CAMPBELL'S TOMATO SOUP MAKES THE BEST TOMATO COOKING SAUCE YOU EVER TASTED!

Got Two to please?

HE will cheer for Flint sharpness . . . SHE will light up at the white and gold beauty of this newest Flint Holdster®. And for both there's a lifetime of usefulness in the five Flint Knives . . . made of special stainless vanadium steel to keep their sharp brilliance for years. The Flint Holdster hangs conveniently on a wall . . . stores neatly in a drawer. Wherever good housewares are sold.

give FLINT!®

ANOTHER GREAT PRODUCT

BY EKCO®

© 1951 EKCO PRODUCTS COMPANY
CHICAGO 39, ILLINOIS

FAMOUS RECIPE

ONE-DISH PORK CHOP MEAL

6 pork chops
1 tbsp. shortening
2 teaspoons salt
1 tbsp. LEA & PERRINS Worcestershire Sauce
1 can tomato soup (condensed)
½ cup water
4 cups cooked noodles
2 tbsp. grated onion

Brown chops in shortening, season with half the salt. Combine remaining salt, onion, LEA & PERRINS Sauce, tomato soup and water. Place noodles in casserole, add tomato soup mixture. Arrange chops overlapping around inner edge of casserole; cover and bake in moderate oven (350°F) for 1½ hours.

Whenever recipes call for Worcestershire, you can be almost certain that the experts who write the recipes mean you to use LEA & PERRINS Sauce, the original Worcestershire. Always ask for it by name.

FREE RECIPE BOOK. Write Lea & Perrins, Inc. 241 West St., New York 13, N.Y., Dept. L-10

Respects to Friday

Broiled Fillet of Haddock Marilynn
Green Beans
Half Grapefruit

"We have a way to do fish that we think is pretty special. Spread with a mustardy sauce before broiling, plain ordinary haddock has a high-hat flavor."

BROILED FILLET OF HADDOCK MARILYNN

Brush 2 fillets of haddock (about 1 pound) with salad oil. Sprinkle with salt, pepper and orégano, which is an herb you should get acquainted with if you haven't already. Broil quickly, turning once (it takes about 5 minutes). Now for the treatment that transforms the plain fillets into Marilynn's specialty. Combine 2 tablespoons mayonnaise, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, 1 tablespoon prepared mustard and 1 or 2 tablespoons chopped parsley. Spread over the fish and broil 1 more minute.

"Some young marrieds may not serve beginners with their meals. We do—particularly if the meal is light, as this one is. Our favorite is one we either eat or drink. It's always a good decoy in getting my husband to the table. Have a can of mixed-vegetable juice chilled in the refrigerator. Pour half of it into a bowl with half a cup of thick sour cream—the kind you buy. Beat up with the egg beater. Serve in glass bowls or in juice glasses with a sprinkling of chopped chives."

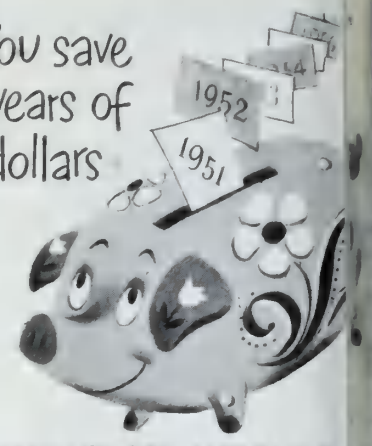
Food, Fire and Fun

Charcoal-Broiled Ham
Spider-Fried Potatoes
Coleslaw Sliced Tomatoes
Fruit Cheese

"We have outdoor-fireplace dinners off and on from early spring until late fall. Our favorite broilables are frankfurters, hamburgers, steaks—when we can afford them—and, best-loved, a smoked-ham slice. We combine our outdoor chores with the grill work. There's more incentive to rake leaves if you can smell potatoes and onions frying while you work.

"For the fried potatoes, I have an old iron spider that was mother's. After its time on the fire it's a cinch to clean with a steel-wool soap pad. I start with raw sliced potatoes and a couple of onions—fry them in a little hot shortening over the coals until golden brown, then cover them with a lid and let them steam done.

"Charcoal-broiled ham is delicious—but even more delicious since someone gave us a present of a bag of hickory-wood disks. Two or three of these dropped on the coals just before we put on the ham give the ham the genuine flavor. We've tried hickory-smoking steaks and hamburgers, too, but ham is our favorite. A center-cut slice of ham is best, but thick slices of Canadian bacon, which tastes practically like ham, are good too.

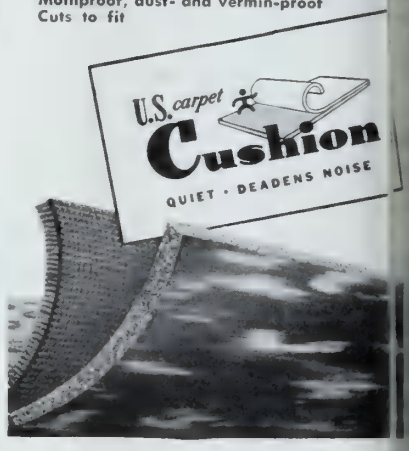


"Over the dying coals we sometimes toast rolls to eat hot with our cheese and fruit." THE END

KNICKERBOCKERS

An artist named Cruikshank made the illustrations for Washington Irving's Diedrich Knickerbocker's History of New York. The trousers he drew for the characters were gathered together at the knee. The application of the term "knickerbockers" was a literary "natural."

—DAVID T. ARMSTRONG.



You save years of dollars

WITH LONGER CARPET WEAR

When you invest in quality carpeting, be sure you gain many extra years of service with the protection of U.S. Carpet Cushion. This resilient sponge rubber puts new life beneath your carpets where it absorbs the grind of heels. Such luxury and economy in the long run!

Resilience lasts • Won't mat or spread
Mothproof, dust- and vermin-proof
Cuts to fit

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
Mishawaka, Indiana

RUG Magic by OLSON SAVES YOU UP TO 1/2

52 Colors, Designs

SEND US YOUR OLD RUGS and CLOTHING and See for Yourself (7 DAY TRIAL OFFER)

IT'S ALL SO EASY! Free Catalog tells how you send your materials at our expense to Olson Factory, where they are shred, merge, wash and sterilize immaculately clean, reclaim the valuable wools, etc.; then bleach, card, spin, dye and weave deep-textured

TWO-SIDED BROADLOOM RUGS

Any Width up to 16 ft. seamless, any length, in your choice of 52 colors and patterns:

Tweed Blends — Solid Colors
18th Century — Floral, Leaf
Early American — Embossed effects
Oriental Designs

NEW RUGS IN A WEEK
Satisfaction guaranteed. Over 3 million customers. We don't have agents or sell thru stores. Our 77th Year.

Chicago New York San Francisco

Mail Coupon or 1c postcard

FREE Catalog in Colors

OLSON RUG CO., R-62, Chicago 41, Ill.
Mail Catalog of Rugs, Model Rooms Free to:

NAME.....
ADDRESS.....
TOWN..... STATE.....

RECAPITULATION

(Continued from Page 53)

id umped on it, treading with particular ery on the section headed "I—Characr, —Social, 1—Calm."
"u haven't an ounce of romance in your all- ip, Jim Malloy," she had, she was ra now, yelled.
" ia," Jim had replied, "you know that n' ue."
S had, too; but she had been really hurt id e had turned her back on him, though is d been hard to accomplish, standing s was with his arms about her, and had ble two or three times.
" should think you would be glad to no you were marrying a man of reason," m d defended himself.
S had not said so then, but she thought ie as now, that there was probably very
.t connection between reason and list al g. List making, she felt sure, was just a a me people had of being orderly about e nreason. What she had said then was A n who could make a list of reasons for v anyone could make a list for not lov-
g r."
" uld and would," Jim had acknowledged e ully, as though the fact were not damn He had held her momentarily far o h away from him to be able to get into is it pocket. "Look at this," he had said, ol g a second sheet across her shoulder.
s headed "Reasons for Not Loving el Ames," and except for "I—None, A—io 1—None," the sheet was completely m r. Although this, in theory, was just as fe ve as the first list, she had not felt ui the same way about it, had in fact been na e to resist kissing Jim back when he ad issed her. But it had taken her two on miserable days of nonengagement to ec mmodate herself to the idea of spending li ime with a list maker, and to re-engage er f to Jim.

d little did I know then, she thought, hat I was really going to have to accom-
e myself to was a lifetime with two list
s.

"hat are you making a list of, Connie?"
sked.

S had no fear that she was intruding in te matters. One of Jim's greatest pleas-re vas the sharing of his lists. After two or n evenings hunched over catalogues and e s of paper he would look up, about bed-m and say, "See what you think of this, el ," and begin to read from a list headed S plies Needed for a Prolonged Trip in ul ero Weather." Or perhaps something no simple, as "The Well-Stocked Cellar-tt ; or "Minimum Essentials for a Basic it ry on Citriculture." They had neither el nor cellarette; they lived in Southern a ornia, where zero, let alone subzero, er eratures were never known, and the ss tials of citriculture were all packed away
i m's head without need of any library, a or otherwise.

NIE looked up from her list and an-
w d, "I'm making a list of traits, mother."
Traits?" Mrs. Malloy asked.
Good and bad traits," Connie said, and h explained further. "For school, that is."
You mean personal traits?" Mrs. Malloy sk d.
Kind of," Connie replied.

rs. Malloy wondered anew. She had e r in her life made a list of any kind x ot a grocery list, and this only when pu ed into it by Jim. Life was bigger, and e er, too, she thought, than words; and it wa disappointing and restricting to see a pi c summed up in "Remember citronella, pa r napkins, first-aid kit"; or a trip to the ju drained of half its promise by a list
he ed "Articles Needed En Route." There we clearly two classes of people in the wo d: those for whom the world was magnifie and enriched in words, and those who d never find the beautiful world of their g and knowing on any sheet of paper.
and Connie belonged to the first class sh she, belonging to the second, could only d apart, as she did now, trying to understand the need they had for their journals and records, for their "Yesterday I rose at 6:30" and their "Tomorrow I plan to begin re-reading David Copperfield." And their I's, II's and III's.

"Traits like honesty, kindness, cheerfulness?" she asked.

"Well, like them," Connie said, "but they aren't on it. This is a list of traits useful for school."

"Isn't honesty useful for school?"

"Nobody at school I ever heard of was popular for honesty," Connie said. After Mrs. Malloy had considered this in silence for some seconds Connie asked, "Did you ever hear anybody say, 'I'm just crazy about her, she's so honest'? Did you?"

"No," Mrs. Malloy admitted, "I guess I never did."

"ME either," Connie said. "It's all right to be honest," Connie reassured her, "but there's nothing very outstanding about it."

"Oh, I don't know," Mrs. Malloy said, trying to keep a foothold in this conversation which she felt to be, in spite of its subject matter, pretty slippery. "Look at Diogenes. We've remembered him all these years."

Connie sniffed. "He was hunting for an honest man, not being one. And it was his lantern that was outstanding. That was his trade-mark. That and his barrel."

"There have been a lot of people with lanterns and barrels we've forgotten, I expect."

Connie agreed. "The trade-mark's got to stand for something. But if you get a good gag and it stands for something"—for all her conviction of tone, Connie looked uncertain—"you're fixed, don't you think?" Before Mrs. Malloy had answered this—if she could have answered it—Connie asked another question, "Mother, do you think I'm funny?"

"Funny?" Mrs. Malloy repeated. If Connie was in the midst of some schoolgirl gloom because someone had called her funny, she certainly didn't want to add to it. On the other hand, if by "funny" Connie meant "witty," she could not truthfully say she wasn't.

"I mean amusing," Connie explained forthrightly. "In your opinion, can I say and do amusing things? Can I make you laugh?"

Controlling an inclination to laugh right then, Mrs. Malloy answered, "Yes, Connie. I think you can be very amusing and you have made me laugh many a time."

"Yesterday," Connie said, "I was told very confidentially something Liz Keeler said. She said, 'That freshman, Constance Malloy, is deliciously amusing.' It wasn't a trade last or anything like that. I didn't promise Hazel a thing in return for the compliment."

Mrs. Malloy said, "I don't know about deliciously, but the rest is true enough."

Connie gave her mother a look of awe and unbelieving. "Liz Keeler," she said. "Why, I didn't suppose she knew I was alive. Let alone amusing."

"Let alone deliciously," Mrs. Malloy said; then, seeing her daughter's expression alter, doubt replacing radiance, she hurried to add, "Who is this Liz, anyway?"

Connie brightened again at once. "Just about the most popular girl in school, that is all. Just about the most outstanding junior, anyway."

"What makes Liz so outstanding?"

Connie considered for a while. "Well, Liz's got practically everything, but her trademark is personality."

"Doesn't everyone have personality? Even fathers and mothers?" Mrs. Malloy asked, trying to be a little amusing herself.

"Everybody has personality," Connie agreed. "Some people have positive personality and some people have negative personality." Mrs. Malloy waited rather self-consciously for a further development of this idea, but Connie was interested only in Liz. "But personality is Liz's trade-mark."

"How are you," Mrs. Malloy asked, with real curiosity, "when personality is your

Please— don't ruin this tempting soup with the wrong cracker!

From the first whiff the soup's wonderful. But are the crackers you serve "up to it"? Yes, yes—if they're RITZ CRACKERS! Crisper, crunchier—they're just plain better-tasting. RITZ CRACKERS give extra flavor to any soup, salad, spread or beverage. Taste and see!

Remember it pays to buy "RITZ" because..

"Nothing tastes as good as RITZ—but RITZ!"®

Most make-ups shout: "Made-up!"— Magic Touch whispers: "Natural beauty"

Replace that heavy "made-up" look with natural-looking loveliness by using Magic Touch. No puff, no sponge.

43c and 1.00—6 magic shades . . . a CAMPANA product

Magic Touch is NEW . . . a tinted cream make-up so sheer your skin glows through! . . . yet it hides each tiny blemish while it smooths and softens and adds glorious color. . . . Apply with fingertips (with or without powder)—so quick, so easy, so naturally lovely!

trade-mark?" Mrs. Malloy had supposed that this question would take some thinking about, but Connie had evidently thought about it before.

"When personality is your trade-mark you are a law unto yourself," she answered promptly.

Mrs. Malloy whistled. "Thank goodness your trade-mark isn't personality."

Connie put down her pencil with melancholy finality. "At present," she said, "I don't have a trade-mark. Not of any kind."

The Malloys frequently went into town to a show on Saturday night, but after supper Mr. Malloy, who had been up at five, irrigating, and who was put out with a climate so tardy with its rains that irrigating this late in November was necessary, said to his wife, "I think I'll just stay home and read tonight. I have to reset the water at ten anyway and we'd have to rush home. You and Connie go ahead if you want to."

"I don't want to go," Connie said. "I'm busy."

"I'm not busy," Mrs. Malloy admitted. "but I'm not enough interested in what happens when a lady mayor meets a male mayor to drive into town alone to find out."

"I can tell you what happens anyway," Mr. Malloy said. "Same thing as when lady pearl diver meets gentleman pearl diver. Or lady surgeon meets male surgeon."

Connie listened to this exchange with an unsmiling face, then went to her room, where Mrs. Malloy heard the bamboo desk at once creak. The evening had cooled and at eight Mrs. Malloy lit a fire of eucalyptus chunks, then challenged her husband to a game of Russian bank. Mr. Malloy accepted the challenge, but he did not care whether he won or lost, and Mrs. Malloy wished for Connie, who followed the fall of each card with the intensity of a player who has put the home ranch up at stake. At nine Connie came out, advised her father to his benefit on his play, but refused to play a game herself.

"No, I just came out because of the fire. I've got work to do," she said, and took her papers to the dining-room table.

At nine-thirty, after losing his second game, Mr. Malloy said, "Anybody want to go out and reset the water for me?" When no one answered he said, "Woman's work is from sun to sun but man's work is never done," and went outside cheerfully whistling Swanee River.

Mrs. Malloy, who knew what he would want when he came back to the house, went to the kitchen and made a pot of chocolate and a plate of toasted cheese sandwiches. Connie wandered out, watched her whip the chocolate to a foam and put the sandwiches in the oven, refused anything to eat, then picked up a large wedge of cheese and went off toward her room nibbling gloomily.

MRS. MALLOY had planned to take the food in by the fire, but Mr. Malloy said, as he pulled off his muddy boots, "Let's have it on the dining-room table where there's room to spread out." He carried the tray in himself and had the chocolate poured by the time Mrs. Malloy, who had forgotten the napkins, came to the table. "What's this?" he asked, gesturing with a cheese sandwich toward the sheet of paper beside his chocolate cup.

Mrs. Malloy, who had an idea, answered only, "What does it say?"

Mr. Malloy read, stared, drank chocolate and finally said in a voice in which disbelief and sorrowful understanding mingled, "It says here, 'Useful Traits for School. I—Personality. A—Unusual. 1—Witty.'" He put the sheet down. "What's the meaning of this?"

"It's a list," Mrs. Malloy said. "You ought to understand if anybody would."

Mr. Malloy ate half a sandwich, then picked up a second sheet. "'My Trade-Mark: "Isn't She Crazy!"' is the heading here," he said thoughtfully. "'Isn't She Crazy!' is in quotes," he explained. "Under it is 'Useful Gags for Craziness. I—Clothes. A—Shoes. 1—Unmatched.'" He put the second sheet face down on the first and covered both with the sandwich plate. He finished his cheese sandwich, then said, "What a dark world!"

"You do understand it, then?" Mrs. Malloy asked.

"Certainly I understand it. I lived there for a year."

"What year?"

"The year I was thirteen."

Mrs. Malloy had not known her husband until he was fifteen, and these hints of an earlier life always enthralled her. She saw him at thirteen, a big solemn boy with soft dark hair, inquiring eyes and a sensitive mouth.

This story concerns a refugee who obtained a job at Shanghai. "It's a long way," said a friend. "From where?" returned the tragic wanderer.
—JAMES AGATE, Express and Admirable.

"YOU don't know who you are then or what you can do. You've got to make a hundred false starts. You've got to make your mark, without knowing what your mark is. Are you a coward or a hero? How do you know without involving yourself in dangerous situations? So you walk ridgepoles and visit cemeteries. How do you know you're alive even at that age if you aren't noticed?"

"Dear Jim," Mrs. Malloy said.

Mr. Malloy took no notice of this endearment and Mrs. Malloy hadn't expected him to. He was wound up now, he was back where he had been at thirteen. Jim Malloy was the center of Mrs. Malloy's world. To her mind the light from the fireplace lapped toward him, the rising wind booming in the eucalyptus trees celebrated him, the foothills beyond the orange groves circled around him. Jim gave her two lives. Without him she would have had only her own life of action, unexamined, not understood. Somebody—Jim frequently quoted him—had spoken of "the tragedy of an unexamined life"; that without Jim, would have been her life and, she supposed, her tragedy. But Jim, with his eloquent words—yes, they were eloquent, she thought, listening now—revealed to her this richer world of motives fully understood and rightly apprehended. By relating the joys and sorrows of his own life to the world's joys and sorrows, past and present, he opened to her depths of meaning which, she felt, her own instinctive living would never have discovered.

"It's the dark time of life," Mr. Malloy said again. "It turns my stomach now, but at thirteen I, too, had a trade-mark."

"A trade-mark!"

Mr. Malloy grimaced. "Spitting. At thirteen I was a professional spitter. I used to give exhibitions. Distance and accuracy. Power and control. I had everything. And I hated it. And I still hate anybody now from grammar-school days who calls me 'Spit' Malloy."

"I don't ever remember seeing you spit."

"At fifteen I was far past that, an ex-spitter. By that time I had taken up ——" He stopped in mid-sentence. "Connie."

Connie, in her pink sprigged seersucker pajamas, the cheek that had been against the pillow pinker than the other, stood in the opening between living room and dining room.

"Did we wake you up with our talk?"

Connie sat down in the chair her father pushed out for her. "No," she said, "you didn't wake me up because I hadn't gone to sleep yet."

Mrs. Malloy had the feeling that Connie had left her lists out on purpose, had given them time to read them and would now like to have their opinion of craziness as a trade-mark. But she was loath to speak of them unless Connie did, and Connie was silent and Jim went on as if he had never heard of trade-marks—or craziness; or spitting, for that matter, either.

"How's school?" Mr. Malloy asked his daughter. "Classes, teachers, kids? Everything turning out as well as you thought it would?"

"Everything's all right," Connie said, opening a cheese sandwich, then closing it

(Continued on Page 243)

Are you always Lovely to Love?

At important moments like this . . . underarm protection must be complete.

Merely deodorizing is not enough. Underarm perspiration should be stopped and stay stopped. Smart girls use FRESH Cream Deodorant because it really stops perspiration.

Furthermore, with FRESH you are assured of continuous protection. That's because FRESH contains amazing ingredients which become reactivated . . . and start to work all over again at those times when you need protection most. No other deodorant cream has ever made you this promise.

FRESH DEODORANT BATH SOAP

New... For head-to-toe protection, use new FRESH Deodorant Bath Soap . . . prevents body perspiration odor yet mild and gentle . . . contains amazing new soap ingredient Hexachlorophene, reported in Reader's Digest.

"We're a 3-generation Maytag family!"

—says Mrs. James Cameron of Joliet, Illinois

"My family has owned Maytag washers for three generations. For good reason . . . most of the men in our family are railroad men. Those work clothes are no problem at all for a Maytag," says Mrs. James Cameron.

Mrs. Cameron, second generation in this Joliet, Illinois, family, is shown as she puts clothes in her new 1951 Maytag automatic washer. And that's grandmother, Mrs. John Cameron, and granddaughter, Mrs. William Balog, looking on. They're full of admiration for the way this Maytag washes clothes Maytag-clean and yet is completely automatic. It washes, rinses, spin-drys . . . even shuts itself off. And this automatic washer has Gyrafoam action...famous in millions of Maytag conventional washers.

All over America, three generations in the same families have insisted on Maytag washers. Because a Maytag washes clothes so clean and lasts so long, Maytag has been America's most-wanted washer since 1907.

Below: Mrs. James Cameron, Jr., and Mrs. J. R. Cameron are third generation members of this Joliet family. Both of these young homemakers own Maytag conventionals and know Maytag's Gyrafoam washing action gets clothes clean.

Maytag Dutch Oven Gas Range. Super-insulated oven keeps heat in. Automatic controls. Giant burners. Dutch cooker well. So easy to clean. Built to "CP" standards.

3-generation dealers too! Left to right: grandfather, H. G. Dahl; father, Lloyd Dahl; grandson, Glenn Dahl. For three generations, the Dahls have made many friends for Maytag in their home town, Lyle, Minnesota.

America's best appliance dealers feature

Maytag

WASHERS • IRONERS • RANGES • FREEZERS

(Continued from Page 240)

ke a book she didn't care to read. "Did I ell you I'm probably going to be Freshman ditor of the yearbook?"

"No," said Mr. Malloy, "you didn't. That's fine. Congratulations."

"I'm not editor yet," Connie reminded him.

"But spoken of for the job. Spoken of favorably for the job."

Connie admitted it. "And it's a tradition that the person who is Freshman Editor is Editor in Chief his senior year."

"Congratulations," Mr. Malloy said again; then, shaking the chocolate pot, "Have some cocoa? It's soporific. Just what you need to put you to sleep."

"I read the other day it wasn't," Connie said. "I read it had every bit as much caffeine in it as coffee."

"Where? Where'd you read that?"

"In the newspaper."

"The newspaper!" scoffed Mr. Malloy. "You can read anything in the newspapers. Let's consult the authority."

He sprang from his chair with the enthusiasm which the search for a fact always gave him and came back to the table bearing Volume 4 of the encyclopedia, Brain to Castin. Connie got up and leaned across his shoulder as he flipped the pages. Mrs. Malloy, while the two of them pursued the word, took the thing itself—caffeine or no caffeine—to the kitchen to reheat for Connie.

THE campaign, "Craziness as a Trade-Mark," seemed to be going well in spite of Mrs. Malloy's doubts. Connie, as November wore on, had never seemed more happy. Certainly she had never been more active or engrossed—and her activities engaged Mrs. Malloy's energies as well as her own.

"Life now," Mrs. Malloy reported to her husband one gray day at lunch, "is very full for me. It is like being property manager for a vaudeville star. It takes a good deal of equipment and thought to achieve the effect of craziness when actually you're as sober as a judge."

"Connie isn't and never was sober as a judge," Mr. Malloy said. "That Liz had something when she said Connie was amusing. Clowning comes naturally to her."

"Not this clowning," Mrs. Malloy said. "She memorizes lines. She gathers up equipment. She teaches kids their cues. It's exactly as spontaneous as a vaudeville act and I think we ought to put a stop to it."

"How?" Mr. Malloy asked.

"Just tell her it's silly and to stop it."

"And for the rest of her life she'd blame us for keeping her from finding out who she really was."

"Well, there's no use her finding out the hard way when we could tell her that she suits us just as she is."

"Connie is trying out her wings for a little flight from the us-nest."

"She is trying the wrong wings, then, Jim. Do you know what she did this morning?" Mrs. Malloy didn't wait for any reply from her husband. "She wore her bedroom slippers to the bus and carried her oxfords. She had to have new bedroom slippers for this, by the way—the old ones wouldn't do for a public appearance. Do you know what the gag is there?" This time she waited for Mr. Malloy's question.

"No," he said, "I don't."

"The gag is that she has figured that it takes three minutes' time to put on her oxfords. Time on the bus is waste time. So, if she puts them on there, that three minutes is saved. Three minutes a day is fifteen minutes a week, an hour a month, nine hours in a school year. The whole busload will have it reported at school ten minutes after they've arrived. 'Hear the latest about Connie Malloy? That crazy kid. She's figured out how to save nine hours a year—by putting on her shoes in the bus. What a girl! What a card!'"

Mrs. Malloy's imitation of the high-school crowd did not awaken her husband from his musing. "Nine hours," he murmured thoughtfully. "A whole workday. I suppose she can sleep that much longer?"

"Jim Malloy," Mrs. Malloy said, "you surely ——" But in the midst of that she changed her tack. "Did you hear her phoning last night?"

"With one ear. I was busy at the time."

Yes, he had been. Mrs. Malloy felt her lips pursing, and unpursed them. Working on a three-sheet list. "Articles Needed for Complete Electrification of the Malloy Ranch. Prices at Monkey Ward, Sears Roebuck, Martin and Dugdale."

"It would've paid you to listen."

Mr. Malloy looked up from his Spanish rice. "Why?" he asked.

"She makes this call every night. Her algebra teacher made the sad mistake of saying in class that he couldn't possibly rest at night for wondering whether the class had done its homework. So Connie calls him."

"What does she say?"

"She says," Mrs. Malloy said crisply, "'This is Constance Malloy reporting, Mr. Holcomb. I have finished my homework. I hope you will sleep well now.'" About this exploit Mrs. Malloy, feeling that such a lily needed no gilding, made no comment.

Mr. Malloy appeared to choke a little on his Spanish rice. "More red pepper than usual in this today," he said.

Mrs. Malloy said, "I have been making that dish for seventeen years and I put exactly the same amount of red pepper in it now as I did when I started."

"Maybe my mouth is getting more sensitive with the years."

"Maybe so, but I doubt it."

"I suppose that really was carrying things a little far?"

Mrs. Malloy waited for a more adequate summing up of the situation.

"I should think Mr. Holcomb would be over any night now to strangle her," Mr. Malloy said.

This seemed quite a lot more likely to Mrs. Malloy and she relaxed somewhat, pleased to find that the family still contained two sane members. Mr. Malloy's sudden whoop of laughter, however, dispelled this happy supposition.

WITH that laugh still in her mind's ear, Mrs. Malloy handed her husband the Los Robles Hi-Lights at lunch a few days later. "Connie gave this to me this morning before she left for school," she said. "I think maybe she thought we would like some time alone to digest it." The paper was folded to the column called, "The Hi-Light's On ——" by I. Marcum. This week's "Hi-Light" was on "Connie Malloy, That Crazy Freshman," and there was a picture of her in the center of the column in her fur-topped bedroom slippers, holding an oxford in each hand. "Read it out loud," Mrs. Malloy said. "I want to be sure I wasn't seeing things when I read it."

After some preliminary smoothing and folding, which the Hi-Lights didn't need, Mr. Malloy read in an expressionless voice, "'Crazy or Cagey? Freshman girl sole discoverer of way never to be on her uppers, and you are a heel if you suggest that this is not the last word on this soulful subject. Personally, the ice-blond freshman can vamp us any time she wants to.'" Mr. Malloy stopped reading. "Lelia, do you really want me to go on with this?"

"Yes," Mrs. Malloy said, "I do."

Mr. Malloy took up the Hi-Lights again, but before continuing he said, "Ice-blond! Why, Connie is nothing but a mere child."

"A color is a color, I suppose," Mrs. Malloy answered mildly, "regardless of age."

"Ice-blond is something more than a color," Mr. Malloy argued, but when Mrs. Malloy asked him to explain he could do no more than mention two or three movie stars.

"Go on reading," Mrs. Malloy urged. "There's a good deal more."

Mr. Malloy gave the Hi-Lights a couple more of the flattening whacks it did not require and continued:

"'Personally, the ice-blond freshman can vamp us any-time she wants to. We get a boot out of Malloy. We pumped Connie and this is her version of what she calls "Malloy's Law," or, to add our own interpretation, "What You Do on the Bus Doesn't Count."'"

Mr. Malloy paused once more and Mrs. Malloy waited expectantly, but about Malloy's Law and its interpretation he had nothing to say.

"It goes on, Lelia, as you doubtless remember, this way," he said. "'No nitwit she, Connie, and we quote, thus explained her discovery while we listened, tongue hanging out, so to speak, and all unlaced with interest: "In my tireless search for efficiency, I discovered that I spent fifteen minutes a week putting on and tying my shoes. Now if I did this on the bus, time ordinarily lost, as all bus riders know, in useless chatter, I would gain one hour a month, or one full working day a year."

"'Asked what she intended doing with this "saved" time, Connie answered demurely, "Study." Asked what, she replied, "Algebra. Mr. Holcomb, you know, can't rest nights if the homework for his class isn't done." (See next week's Hi-Lights for the Holcomb-Mallory story. Adv't.) Asked what her ultimate goal was, Connie said, "Oxford."

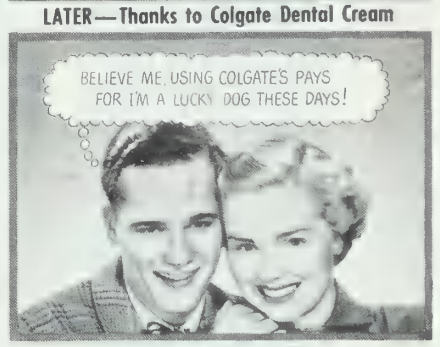
"'Excuse us please now while we pull on our own Congress boots (not on a bus, thus losing, according to Malloy's Law, three minutes). We're going to hot-foot it over to Connie's. Got a little equation we want help with. Malloy + I. Marcum = ? See next week's column for answer. (Adv't.)'"

Mr. Malloy folded the Los Robles Hi-Lights into a compact oblong and threw it toward the fireplace, which he missed.

"What have we got for dessert?" he asked.

"It's right there before you," Mrs. Malloy said, indicating the raisin pie by his plate. Mr. Malloy grunted and began slowly to

"It was a wonderful party! The boys didn't let us alone for a second!"



READER'S DIGEST* Reported The Same Research Which Proves That Brushing Teeth Right After Eating with

COLGATE DENTAL CREAM STOPS TOOTH DECAY BEST

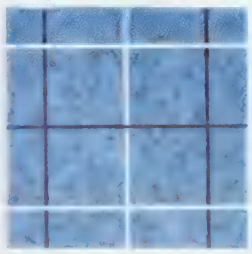
Reader's Digest recently reported the same research which proves the Colgate way of brushing teeth right after eating stops tooth decay best! The most thoroughly proved and accepted home method of oral hygiene known today!

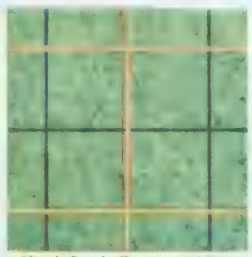
Yes, and 2 years' research showed the Colgate way stopped more decay for more people than ever before reported in dentifrice history! No other dentifrice, ammoniated or not, offers such conclusive proof!

LATER—Thanks to Colgate Dental Cream

Use Colgate Dental Cream
To Clean Your Breath
While You Clean Your Teeth—
And Help Stop Tooth Decay!

*YOU SHOULD KNOW! While not mentioned by name, Colgate's was the only toothpaste used in the research on tooth decay recently reported in Reader's Digest.





Bird Feature-Line, by the Yard, Pattern #3564, also Rug Pattern #6564

BIRD FEATURE-LINE

Floor covering that's beautiful, easy to clean and less than a dollar a yard!

Yard Goods Pattern #3563

Yard Goods Pattern #3560

YOUR dollar never bought more value! Here's a new floor covering pattern that's beautiful, bright and colorful — and easy to clean! It goes in any kitchen. Takes a beating, comes up shining — Bird Armorlite's enamel surface on a waterproof felt base stays glossy and fresh for years! You'll want it for several rooms, so be sure to see all the patterns — there are dozens! All smart, all handsome. All for about a dollar a yard — or less! In rugs or by the yard at floor covering, furniture, and department stores.

BIRD Rugs and Floor Coverings

ARMORLITE · LINOLEUM
LINOLEUM TILE · RUG BORDER
RUBBERLIKE® RUNNER

Dept. CDL-7, EAST WALPOLE, MASS

Also Manufacturers of Bird Master-Bilt Shingles and Insulating Sidings

eat. Mrs. Malloy didn't feel like raisin pie herself. "Jim," she asked, "what's your opinion of that?"

"My opinion is that I. Marcum will go far. We'll turn on the radio any day now and hear I. Marcum's report on the love life of Lana Turner."

"What do you really think, Jim?"

"I think it's a pity and a crying shame."

"You'll speak to Connie, then?"

"It wouldn't do any good. What can we say to her? Stop saying and doing funny things?"

"Yes, we can."

"Sure, we can. But in the first place, we can't stop her; and in the second place, if we could stop her, Connie would hate us for the rest of her life. She's finding out who she is. At that age the only way to know whether craziness is your trade-mark is to be crazy. It's something you've got to do."

"I didn't have to."

"No, Lelia, you didn't."

This quick admission hurt Mrs. Malloy. She felt slighted, left out. She was no list maker like Jim and Connie, but surely she had her share of craziness? They were not the two dark, chaotic ones, were they, while she was no more than the dependable housewife of known and small dimensions?

"Once on a dare I wore a dress to school hindside foremost."

"Lelia," Mr. Malloy said, "you never had to bother trying on attitudes. You were born wearing one that fit beautifully." Still, and startled, at this sudden turning of the conversation, Mrs. Malloy watched her husband eat raisin pie. He paused to ask, "Don't you want to know its name?"

Mrs. Malloy nodded, mutely.

"Radiant loving-kindness."

This unexpected and extravagant compliment made Mrs. Malloy feel shy. It was too extraordinary for her to deal with instantaneously and she put it aside for later consideration. "Whatever you think about Connie, Jim, I'm going to speak to her. I think it's my duty and I'm going to warn her at the first opportune minute."

The first opportune minute came that very afternoon and Connie, after being warned, went in tears to her room. She came out, ate her supper wordlessly, then went again to her room.

When Mrs. Malloy heard the bamboo desk creak she said to her husband, "There is Connie writing out a list of reasons for hating me."

"What now?" Mr. Malloy asked and Mrs. Malloy, with no heart for dishwashing, said, "Come on in by the fire and I'll tell you."

Mr. Malloy settled himself in the Morris chair which had been his father's, and Mrs. Malloy stood in front of the fireplace, close to the fire until her calves began to scorch, then on the edge of the hearth until they cooled.

"This afternoon," she said, "Connie came skipping and hopping home from the bus clapping those two horrible bedroom slippers together over her head like castanets."

"Cymbals," said Mr. Malloy.

"Together, anyway, and happy as a lark. It seems they had an assembly today ——"

"Assemblies, assemblies," said Mr. Malloy. "Bird imitations, football rallies, talent shows. When do the kids go to school?"

"Assemblies," said Mrs. Malloy, who went to PTA, "provide the children opportunity for participation in life situations."

"Is that thought to be a good thing? A life situation, if you ask me, is just about to engulf Connie. If you ask me, a little participation in something unlifelike on the order of ancient history or the ablative case is what Connie has a crying need for. A little more life participation and she'll bust apart at the seams. I can hear them ——"

"Jim," Mrs. Malloy said, "I just want to tell you what Connie told me. And what I told her. I don't give a whit one way or another about assemblies. The point is, they had one. And when Mr. DuMont came out on the stage ——"

"Who is this Mr. DuMont? A bird imitator?"

"Mr. DuMont is the vice-principal charge of student activities. He has p mature gray hair, a beautiful tan, and sir Rolling Down to Rio, so Connie says, so t you can feel the waves rising and falling neath you. He ——"

"That's enough about DuMont," M Malloy said, "unless you've got some seasi remedy handy."

"I've seen him," Mrs. Malloy said, "a he really is nice. He has ——"

"He came out on the stage ——" M Malloy reminded her.

"He came out onto the stage to give the what Connie called a little pep talk abo less lavatory art in the future, please

"What?" said Mr. Malloy in a stro voice.

"Jim, please try just to listen. I don know why the school does what it does why Connie calls things by the names s uses. All I want to do is tell you what ha pened."

"Okay," Mr. Malloy said. "I'm listenin Tell me."

He had the look of a man who has not y had his say out, but Mrs. Malloy went on spite of it. "On his way out Mr. DuMo stumbled over a pair of tennis shoes som body had left on the stage. He stoope picked them up by the strings, swung the back and forth and then said in what Conn reports as being a perfectly dead-pan, sid splitting way, 'I see Malloy has been her Like Kilroy has been here, you know."

"I know," Mr. Malloy said.

"Then when everyone had stopped laug ing at that he said, 'They look like my siz but as a student of Malloy's Law I intend wait until I'm on a bus to try them on find out.'"

"Mr. DuMont's trade-mark appears to craziness, too," Mr. Malloy remarked.

"The kids seem to love him."

"Why not?" asked Mr. Malloy. "The ki are one with Mr. DuMont."

"I thought you approved of craziness. thought that was what we've been arguin about."

"Lelia, I haven't been arguing and what approve of is not craziness but freedom find out who and what you are."

"Well, Connie thinks she's found out. S thinks she's a wit. Or a wag. Or the scho jester. She says that about Malloy's La really panicked them and that not an eye the auditorium but was on her. Even thoug she was sitting in an obscure spot under t balcony in the midst of one hundred an seventy-two other freshmen and practical invisible."

"She didn't say anything about standin up, whistling and waving her handkerchi to keep them seeing her, did she?"

"Now, Jim. Anyway, when she finished- and I hated to do it because she was happy as ——"

"A prima donna?" suggested Mr. Mallo

"Oh, no! A baby who's picked its fir flower. Well, when she finished I told h everything I've been thinking. I told her stop it at once. That it was cheap and sil to play to the grandstand that way and th she was going to regret getting a reputatio as a harebrained clown when she was really good, sweet, solid, sensible child." Mr Malloy was unable to keep her voice fro trembling.

"What did Connie say?"

"She said 'Good, solid, sensible, sweet' if I had—as if I had reviled her. She sai 'child' as if I had called her . . . a bastar Then she began to cry."

Mr. Malloy nodded and nodded as if th were all an old story to him.

"Then she stopped crying long enough t say that I didn't understand a thing. N her. Not school. Not young people in ge eral. Not Mr. DuMont. Not I. Marcun And she said her constant prayer was th when she grew up and had children she wou not forget what it was like to be young. T way I have. And she said that for tw months at school she had been sweet, soli and sensible. And where had it gotten he At the end of two months of that, she ha been a complete nonentity and not a soul

...ol could've told you who Constance M...oy was. And now at the end of three w...s of planned living, with craziness for h...rade-mark, she is a great success and she d...ts there is even a custodian at school w... has not heard of Constance Malloy a... Malloy's Law. 'In fact,' I said, 'you are n... a character.' She said yes she was and w... proud of it. Then she went to her room. B... before she left she said, 'Anyway, my fa... understands me.' And now she is in th... making a list headed 'What's Wrong W... Mother.' But I don't care. I had to tell h...

...r. Malloy caught at the edge of Mrs. M...oy's skirt as she switched away from the fi...nd toward him, and pulled her down on... his lap.

"Don't try to comfort me," she said, st...ggling to get up. "You think one way ar... I think another. That's all there is to it."

"I think just what you think, Lelia—ex... that I think Connie will have to find it co... for herself. She'll wake up pretty soon, an... it'll be a painful awakening, but it's be...en to come."

...rs. Malloy, in spite of herself, was set... back and relaxing. "You believe that?"

"Of course. You don't think our daughter's a...l, do you?"

"No," Mrs. Malloy said, letting her head, fi...ly, rest at ease against her husband's sh...lder. "No, how could I? Connie re... ca...tulates you."

...he "awakening," as Mr. Malloy had n...ed it, came the first week in December. T... rains which had held off through the w...le of November arrived the minute the N...ember leaf on the cal... ...ar was torn off and ...le up by their abun... ...ce for their lateness. C... Friday afternoon Mr. M...loy, happily house... ...nd by the downpour, s... before a drowsy fire w...king on his electrification lists. On the ...er side of the fire Mrs. Malloy was shell... English walnuts preparatory to sugar... them for annual Christmas gifts to East... relatives. She listened to the pleasant ...d of sounds: fire sighing, pen scratching, ...shells cracking, and behind and giving ...y to the blend the fine, heavy sound of ... constant rain. She was, she thought, ...sonably happy. Then, as the pile of wal... kernels rose in the crock on the floor b... her side, she decided that there is no s... thing as reasonable happiness, since h...piness, like love, is without reason. A r...sonable happiness is usually simply all t... reasons one can think of for not being u...appy.

...am not unhappy because my family is in g...d health and I myself am well, and a good a... needed rain is falling and we have a tight r... over our heads and the fire is drawing b...utifully. No, she thought, that is not e...ugh. Happiness, like love, fills the heart and ...s not need to be accounted for. Joy washes ...ay knowledge of numbers. The one, two, th...ee's. That was why, she supposed, Jim's l...s had offended her. If you could analyze, y... were not in love. Or at least she was not. S... was analyzing now. That was the reason s... knew she was not happy. And continuing t... analyze, she knew she would not be until C...nnie was herself once again.

...ONNIE came in from the bus as Mrs. ...alloy recognized this fact; but she was ...ither the old Connie, solid and sensible, ...r the new one, crazy and show-off. This ...onnie had been crying. She had on a hooded ...ncoat, but she had walked up from the bus ...th the hood hanging down her shoulders ...d her hair, soaked to the scalp, was lank ...d mousy. She was no ice blonde now. ...Marcum would hardly recognize her. Water ...pped from her cheeks and beaded her eye... ...shes and stood in the corners of her mouth, ...hich she held with unchildlike firmness. She ...nt without a word to the fireplace and ...ood there with her back to them while oc... ...sional drops of water hissed off her rain... ...at onto the andirons. Then she turned ...ound to face them, and it was the first time Mrs. Malloy had ever heard adult resignation in her daughter's voice, adult acceptance of the fact that the source of one's joy is also often the source of one's sorrow. I may have forgotten what it's like to be a girl, she thought, but Connie is learning what it's like to be grown up.

"You have a perfect right to say I told you so, now, if you want to, mother," Connie said. "You told me I was getting to be a character and I was, all right."

"What do you mean?" her father asked.

"I MEAN I'm a character," Connie said bleakly. "I'm 'Irresponsible Malloy,' I'm that 'crazy kid.' If I said I was dying, people would laugh." Water ran out of her hair and across her face and dripped off her chin, but she scorned to wipe it away. "I made a good speech to the Student Council and they laughed at every word I said. They laughed and held their sides and rolled in their chairs like loons."

"What speech was this, Connie?"

"The speech everybody who is a candidate for an office has to make to them. Then if they like you they nominate you. I was a candidate for Freshman Editor. What they nominated me for was Josh Editor. Josh Editor. A two-year-old can be Josh Editor. All you need to be Josh Editor is a pair of scissors to cut out jokes with. I wouldn't be Josh Editor if they shot me for not being. It's a silly job."

"Take off your coat, Connie," Mrs. Malloy said, and Connie, not ceasing to speak, began also to unbutton.

"I would've been a good editor and I told them the reasons, like I was responsible, knew the meaning of time, would see that the assignments were in on time, and so forth. They laughed like hyenas," she said, not bitterly, but reflectively. "They said, 'This is the richest thing yet. Malloy is a real character.' So they nominated me for Josh Editor and I'm branded for life." She threw her raincoat, which she had finished unbuttoning, onto the floor, said, "I have ruined my life," and walked out of the room, no longer trying to hide the fact that she was crying.

It is more difficult to organize peace than to win a war.
—ARISTOTLE.

Mr. and Mrs. Malloy still held the positions they had had when Connie entered: Mr. Malloy, pen above his list; Mrs. Malloy, nutcracker in one hand, cracked, unshelled nut in the other.

Mr. Malloy said, "I guess you were right. I guess it would've been better to have forbidden it."

"I did forbid it," Mrs. Malloy said, "in so far as I could, and you can see what came of that."

Mechanically she picked the kernel from the nut she still held, then got up and threw the pan of shells into the fire. Mr. Malloy had gone back to his list making and she felt almost the first wave of dislike she had ever known for her husband. That was really carrying objectiveness a little too far. Electrification at a time like this. She herself was going to Connie. She looked coldly down at Mr. Malloy's list as she passed and saw what had been and was in the process of being written there:

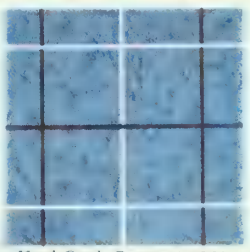
"Spit. Spit. Spit Malloy. Big Spit Malloy. Spit. Spit."

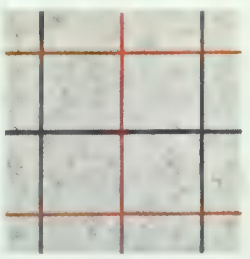
Jim saw her look and let her take his hand. "I told you it was a dark time," he said quietly.

"Jim—you still remember? It still matters?"

All he said was, "You go on in to Connie. She's your youngest baby."

She let go his hand and went toward Connie's room. She didn't know what she would or could say when she got there. Maybe, "Connie, people like you and your father, complex people, have to try on more than one way of being and doing to see who you are and you're bound to make mistakes." Maybe she would say, "My sweet, sensible daughter." But she would surely hug her and kiss her. As she opened the door she said, "Connie, honey." THE END





Bird Feature-Line, by the Yard, Pattern #3560, also Rug Pattern #6560

BIRD FEATURE-LINE

Floor covering that's long wearing, lovely, and less than a dollar a yard!

BIRD Feature-Line costs about a dollar a yard—or less! . . . a long-wearing, lovely bargain for your kitchen! It's the newest Bird Armorlite pattern, one of dozens you can choose to brighten your floors. Bird Armorlite's resilient tough enamel surface on a waterproof felt base is glossy and satiny smooth . . . it wears for years, whisks clean with mild soap and water. You'll find Bird Armorlite's lovely patterns . . . all for about a dollar a yard or less . . . at floor covering, furniture, and department stores.

Yard Goods Pattern #3563

Yard Goods Pattern #3564

BIRD Rugs and Floor Coverings

ARMORLITE · LINOLEUM
LINOLEUM TILE · RUG BORDER
RUBBERLIKE® RUNNER

Dept. CDL-8, EAST WALPOLE, MASS.

Also Manufacturers of Bird Master-Bilt Shingles and Insulating Sidings

Loom Blended by Startex

"Part Linen" on a Startex Kitchen Towel means cotton and linen blended yarns — cotton and linen percentages as shown on each label — cotton and linen loomed both ways of the fabric! It means Startex long-lasting service in your kitchen — Startex value — Startex economy — the colorful beauty of Startex Towels and Toweling in many exquisite hand printed patterns and smart woven styles!

"Swiss Village"
Hand Printed Towel
Cotton 75%—Linen 25%
(matching Table Cloth and Napkins)

Grenadier Stripes
Cotton 75%—Linen 25%

Big Size Super-Dri Towel
Cotton 65%—Linen 35%

Startex vat colors are fast to washing—Startex absorbency is over twice the weight of the towel—Startex strength is the combined strength of its cotton and linen blend. Startex Towels are tested regularly by impartial testing laboratories. They keep on serving after more than 200 soilings and launderings. No wonder Startex cotton and linen loom-blended Towels and Towelings are so popular among millions of women—and popular, too, in your favorite dry goods or department store!

STARTEX
Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

KITCHEN TOWELS and TOWELINGS

Look for the name Startex on Kitchen Towels—Towelings by the yard—Hand Printed Table Cloths and Napkins—piece goods for decorating your kitchen and dinette.
Startex Mills—division of Spartan Mills, Inc., 40 Worth Street, New York

ROASTWELL
PATENTED GRAVYWELL
SELF-BASTING . . . TENDERIZES

ROASTING PERFECTION
AT LEADING STORES EVERYWHERE OR WRITE
FLETCHER ENAMEL CO. DUNBAR, W. VA.

HAND KNITTING
WOOL and RUG YARNS
Send for FREE samples
Prompt, dependable mail service
COLONIAL YARN HOUSE
1231-R Cherry St., Phila. 7, Pa.

BE A Nurse
MAKE $50-$60 A WEEK
Practical nurses are needed in every community...doctors rely on them... patients appreciate their cheerful, expert care. You can learn practical nursing at home in spare time. Course endorsed by physicians. 52nd yr. Earn while learning. High School not required. Men, women, 18 to 60. Trial plan. Write now!
CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 2810, 41 East Pearson Street, Chicago 11, Ill.
Please send free booklet and 16 sample lesson pages.
Name_____
City_____ State_____ Age_____

A PAINTBRUSH AND A SEWING MACHINE DID WONDERS FOR MY ROOM

(Continued from Page 216)

is important. Occasionally I upholster a simple piece. My method is unorthodox, being a sort of tacked-on cover which I can take off in sections to launder. One reason our old furniture lasts so well is that my husband and I go over it now and then, tying up the springs, tacking on new webbing and equalizing the padding, which you do with a long pick affair called an equalizer. It is a great help to have the right upholstery accessories to work with. Curved upholstery needles and a long one with an eye at each end for passing through thick, padded parts. Colored upholstery thread, strong enough to take tension, and sewing-machine attachments especially made to sew welting and add special finishes are helpful.

"I've enjoyed using furniture discards. The piano is an old family piece and the sectional bookcases were salvaged from the home basement. Arranged under the buffet window and painted to match the walls, they fill an awkward space and are highly functional.

"I watch the magazines for style changes in color schemes and accessories, and so avoid the static details that date a room. By doing the actual work myself, I save enough to buy an occasional new lamp or accessory and have lots of fun trying out original ideas.

"First-quality paint for our big double room costs about $8.00 for two coats, or about one cent a square foot each coat, and I can get good drapery and slip-cover materials for under $1.50 a yard. Usually I have two sets of draperies and covers, which I change about, for summer wear is hardest and I like really washable covers for hot weather.

"I have never agreed with women who say they cannot have tasteful decorations until their children grow up. I believe that an important part of child rearing is to establish regard for home properties and to expect one's children to help keep them so. Now and then we have an accident, but on the whole we allow our children all the proper freedoms of home and they soon learn not to misuse them."

FIRST RATE FARE

(Continued from Page 76)

So to our dinner. It is October, and the beginning of the apple season. Can't you smell the pippins ripening and see the color deepen on the McIntosh? Warm-weather dishes can be set aside, except for salads and desserts. They know no seasons, they can be switched around as the fancy dictates. It's a good time to move the salad up to the first place and start off with the avocado, that mysterious fruit that's half Oriental and half domestic. I believe it has an ancestry from a Far Eastern country, and it may be that the beginnings of this fruit are lost in the mazes of antiquity and it has only now come to satisfy and gratify us Western peoples and brought to our tables a potentate's luxury, within the reach of all who like its creamy texture and its strange flavor. It needs only the simplest of French dressing, or just lemon juice, to bring out its hidden deliciousness. So prepare it without frills and furbelows. Let it speak for itself. Have it cold, but not too cold.

For a chilly night. These nights have a bite in them, no matter what the sun does all day. When the twilight comes and the stars begin their evening curtain calls, then it's dinnertime. "Dinner's ready in the dining room, everybody gather round," and a welcome dinner it is if steak is on the menu. And just to remind you that not all steak is sirloin or tenderloin and that many a good dish comes out of the round or the chuck, here is a steak called Swiss. I don't know whether the Swiss eat what we call Swiss

Haviland
proudly present
SHASTA
to grace the fastidious tabl
A magnificent daisy spra artistically expresse
in warm golden tones

You may obtain new booklet of patterns and history of Haviland China with their various trade marks throughout the years. Send 25¢ to P.O. Box #314 Glenbrook, Conn.

Theodore Haviland New York MADE IN AMERICA
Haviland & C
INCORPORATED
26 WEST 23rd ST., N. Y. 10, N.

For Deliciously "DIFFERENT" Desserts
HIP-O-LITE
THE ORIGINAL MARSHMALLOW CREME
46th YEAR
FREE. Recipe Book of Successful Desserts. Hip-O-Lite, Dept. L-2, St. Louis 1, Mo.

T-N-T POPCORN
for little "goblins"

Yours for 25¢

1001 Decorating Ideas
Beautiful 56-page book—hundreds of illustrations, many in color. Whether you're decorating or re-decorating—this book gives you countless smart suggestions. On sale in Drapery Depts., or by mail, write Dept. J10.
CONSOLIDATED TRIMMING CORP.
27 W. 23rd Street • New York, N. Y.

…k or not, but we eat it and call it that. …l so compliment the Swiss and have a …d time ourselves. And what can be …tter than that?

Here, then, is our main dish, and the way …get it the way it ought to be:

SWISS STEAK

…y a 2½–3-pound piece from the round of …f, about 1–1½″ thick. Mix 1½ table…ons dry mustard, 1½ teaspoons salt and …easpoon pepper with ¾ cup flour. Pound …seasoned flour into the beef with a meat …nder or the edge of a saucer. Don't spare …rod and spoil the beef. Work as much …ur in as you can. And with patience and …ow grease, you'll get most of it in. Takes …h. Melt 3 tablespoons shortening in a …let or Dutch oven. Brown the meat well …all sides in the hot shortening. Sprinkle …cups sliced onions and 2 carrots, diced, …r the beef. Add 2 tablespoons Worcester…re sauce and 2 teaspoons brown sugar to …ups canned tomatoes and pour over the …at. Cover and bake …–1¾ hours in a …derately slow oven, …°F. When the beef …ender, lift it on a …platter and gar…h with sautéed …shroom caps, if …u wish a dressier …h. Skim the fat …m the sauce, if …ed be, and thicken …a smooth consist…y. Serve the sauce …and with the meat …ll you have Swiss …ak.

Little spice is aw…l nice. Apricots can …a lot for me. I'm …zy about them. …w, cooked, canned, …fritters, pies (espe…lly fried pies), as a …ice and a garnish—…s beautiful fruit …n give me a good …e, any way you …ase. So, just to …ow you what I'm …ving at, I will here …d now tell you how …u can make your …n spiced apricots …h cinnamon sticks …d all, to enliven and increase the morale …the Swiss steak. And with any other …at you'll find they never let you down, …t do just what you want them to.

SPICED APRICOTS

…ain the sirup from 1 No. 2½ can whole …ricots. To the sirup, add ⅓ cup cider …egar, ⅓ cup sugar, 12 whole cloves and …½ sticks cinnamon, broken into pieces. …nmer for 15 minutes. Pour hot over the …ricots and let them stand overnight or …nger—the longer, the better they are.

…simple as ABC. The ABC's mean in …is case baking-powder biscuits—one of the …st things a little girl used to learn to make …hen she first got the cooking bug and …anted to be mamma's little cooky. And …hen she grew up and got married, B.P. Bis…its were the first and most prominent sub…ct for jest and joke concerning the bride's …ill in cooking, as you well know. Nowa…ys the mixes, prepared flour and biscuits—…ozen or canned or half baked—save the …uation for brides, young and old, and for …e too. But, to me, there is still a certain …tisfaction in knowing that you can turn …t a batch of freshly made, freshly baked …scuits whenever you've a mind to. You …ve the know-how. If you have never made …scuits or have almost forgotten how, try …ur hand at these and tell me if I'm wrong.

BAKING-POWDER BISCUITS

…ft into a mixing bowl 2 cups flour with ¾ …aspoon salt and 3 teaspoons baking pow…r. Add ¼ cup shortening and chop the shortening into the flour thoroughly. (The mixture should look like fine crumbs or corn meal.) Add ¾ cup milk all at once. Stir together quickly until all the milk is well mixed with the dry ingredients. (The dough should be light and soft.) Turn out on a lightly floured board, dip your hands in flour and knead the dough lightly—not more than half a minute. Pat or roll the dough to ½″ thickness. Cut with a floured cooky cutter. Place several inches apart on a greased cooky sheet. Bake in a hot oven, 450° F., for 10 to 12 minutes. (Be sure to have the oven hot when you put your biscuits in to bake.) They should come out a light intriguing brown—even all over. Makes about 12.

And last, the dessert. And now we come to the end of this round, and, when the coffee comes on, you've done your stint and can settle back and tell stories or play games or take a nap. I don't care what you do, for I'll know you've served a good and proper meal for an October evening. And the dessert, you will discover, is not the least of it. Bet you don't have enough left to give the kitten a taste. Want to take me up on that?

ORANGE-AND-RAISIN BREAD PUDDING

Cut enough stale bread into ½″ cubes to make 3 cups. Bread should be a day or two old, but not dry and hard. (And you're good if you can get it that way.) Scald 3½ cups milk and pour over 1 cup seedless raisins. Let stand 10 minutes. Add ¼ teaspoon salt, 6 tablespoons sugar, 4 teaspoons grated orange rind, 2 teaspoons grated lemon rind, 1½ tablespoons melted butter or margarine and 3 slightly beaten egg yolks. Add bread cubes and mix well. Pour into greased 2-quart baking dish and bake in a moderately slow oven, 325° F. about 1 hour. Remove from the oven and pile on top of the pudding a meringue made from 3 egg whites and 6 tablespoons sugar. Garnish the top with well-drained orange sections. Return to the oven and bake 15 minutes more until the meringue is a golden brown. Serve warm. Makes 6–8 servings.

In this meal, the bread pudding and the Swiss steak take the same baking temperature. Plan to have them finish cooking just before dinner, putting the pudding on a rack to cool off a bit. But don't chill it. It's best eaten warm—but not hot. Keep the meat hot on top of the range, leaving the oven free for the biscuits.

Until we meet again. If you find the end of summer sad and October's pattern frayed and the days a dreary round, then look at the "Persian carpet of purple and gold" the weary autumn weaves and think of the beauty that comes only now. Find it in darker skies and the last song of the journeying bird and know that autumn is lovelier than any summer can ever hope to be.

And, while we wait to open the album of spring and find our pictures have not faded and the colors are brighter than we remembered even, we'll be meeting. Maybe snow will cover the worn-out patches and diamonds will gleam wherever we turn. But be sure of one thing: it will be better than we thought. And I'll be with you—having a good time while the kettle sings on the window.

THE END

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Hands of Grace

By Joseph Auslander

The hands of grace are hallowed hands
When in God's name the bread is broken:
They speak what man's soul understands,
In words no tongue has ever spoken.

They speak of labor in the field,
Of earth's abundance in the sun,
Of how war's ravages are healed
By faith that makes the whole world one.

These hands that break the bread and pray
For peace, though wrath still wields the rod,
Say all the soul of man can say
When his hands touch the hands of God.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

…First in vogue

First in value!

Arvin

Master-styled Dinettes

Exclusive! Famous Arvin Miracle Leaf—disappears and stores automatically beneath table top—slips back into place at a finger touch.

The beauty and good taste so richly expressed in Arvin master-styling dress up any dining space. And Arvin engineers have added unequalled convenience features!

It's all pleasure and no bother to extend your table with the unique, self-storing Arvin Miracle Leaf! . . . Trimly tapered table legs adjust readily to uneven floors . . . Mirror-smooth plastic surfaces staunchly resist stains or mars . . . Chairs combine roomy comfort with distinguished appearance.

The handsome tables come in various types and sizes, with choice of chair styles and harmonizing color combinations. They're matchless values at low prices! Arvin Industries, Inc., Columbus, Indiana. (Formerly Noblitt-Sparks Industries, Inc.)

New finer MUM
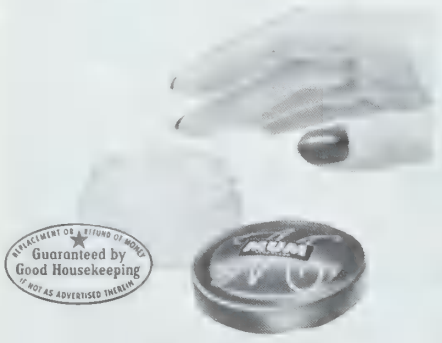
more effective longer!

NOW CONTAINS AMAZING NEW INGREDIENT M-3 TO PROTECT UNDERARMS AGAINST ODOR-CAUSING BACTERIA



•

Never let your dream man down by risking underarm perspiration odor. Stay nice to be near—guard the daintiness he adores this new finer Mum way!

Better, longer protection. New Mum with M-3 protects against bacteria that cause underarm odor. What's more, it keeps down future bacteria growth. You actually build up protection with regular exclusive use of new Mum.

Softer, creamier new Mum smooths on easily, doesn't cake. Gentle—contains no harsh ingredients. Will not rot or discolor finest fabrics.

Mum's delicate new fragrance was created for Mum alone. And gentle new Mum contains no water to dry out or decrease its efficiency. No waste, no shrinkage—a jar lasts and lasts! Get Mum!

New MUM cream deodorant

A Product of Bristol-Myers

POLITICAL PILGRIM'S PROGRESS

(Continued from Page 50)

had told her to leave the cans out, that they'd come back after them. She shrugged and Sally smiled at her sympathetically and went on.

What we need is to get the whole area cleaned up—not just the park, she thought.

The park looked deceitfully pleasant to her as she approached it. The tall sycamores and the smaller maples gave it a cool, friendly look and from a distance the grass looked inviting. Several older people were "resting and breathing" quietly on the benches, but they were outnumbered by the mothers with children who dotted the grass.

She joined two women sitting half in the shade and half in the sun whom she had seen in the park before, and told them what the Bureau of City Property man had said about children not being welcome in the park. One woman said if that were the case they ought to make half the park into a playground. Both agreed with her about the glass and with her feeling that two men working full time and one part time ought to be able to keep nine acres clean. "But I've never seen them working," the other woman said. They seemed resigned. Around them the glass glittered balefully in the sun.

Mr. Connelly did not call back that day with his information on the west end's cleanup group, so Sally tried to call him. She couldn't reach him, but she left a message. He didn't call the next day, so she called him again. Again he was out.

That night she decided to call Mr. Connelly's boss, the head of all city property. She made the call at two the following afternoon, and as she listened to the man at the other end notifying her that Mr. Maxwell was out, she recognized his voice. It was the same man who answered the phone for Mr. Connelly.

"Are most of the park officials out in the mornings and in in the afternoons?" she asked.

"They inspect parks in the morning," the man said.

Sally hung up slowly.

Half an hour later, Mr. Maxwell called back. "This is Old Man Maxwell," he said, introducing himself.

He had a loud, booming voice which kept getting louder and louder until he was shouting. He said he was getting tired of complaints about the parks. He said Clark Park was supposed to have a caretaker and two men working in it, but it was one man short because he was "recooperating" from a serious operation. He yelled that hoodlums came through the park at night and that in the daytime kids raced through it breaking pop bottles. Once he tried to stop one, he said, and the kid said to him, "My father's a cop."

"I'm not asking you to believe anything I say," he yelled. "The people think all city employees are just drones. I want to tell you that I'm on the job all the time."

SALLY squeezed in a question about whether it would help to have her call the police.

"The police won't help," he cried. "It would just be a waste of time. We've called them—we've even written them letters. They won't help us. The kids come into the parks anyway and dig up the grass and break pop bottles."

He was quieter now and Sally told him that she was not trying to attack his department, that she felt the public had a great responsibility in the care of the parks, but that she did think the maintenance men did too, and that she hadn't ever seen them working when she was there in the afternoons.

"All the public does is complain," Mr. Maxwell said. "Those men have the privilege of coming to work early, at six or seven in the morning, so that they won't have to work in the hot afternoon sun. Get up then and you'll see them working."

He added that if she wanted a playground made out of the park, she'd have to see the mayor, but that even that was hopeless.

"That ground was willed to the city for a park," he said, "not a playground. And I can tell you that there is no money for more parks—all the funds except eighty-six dollars have been spent for this year."

There didn't seem to be anything more to say at this point, so Sally hung up. She was shaking with the effort of talking to him. It seemed to her that the only way ever to get the glass picked up or to get a place for Kitty to play was to take the caretaker around and show him every piece. She had no hope any more that anyone in City Hall would help her.

Kitty had an ear infection the next few days and Sally didn't go to the park. She did think about it, however, and she put in a call to the police department in her district to ask them about the vandalism that the Bureau of City Property man said was rampant. They said they had a foot policeman and two cars patrolling in the area and they hadn't heard about any vandalism. Last summer, they said, they'd had several complaints and they'd picked up several people. The officer on the phone was very polite and helpful, and Sally didn't press him too hard because she felt the neighborhood needed all-over alertness—that if the police started concentrating just on the park there would be even more purse snatching in the streets. After all, there had been a murder only recently a few blocks away, and right out in the street too.

The care of the park seemed to have so many ramifications. Certainly the Bureau of City Property had a rough task on its hands if people used the waste tins as garbage cans. There was also the problem of the kids who raced through the park on their way home from school; it was quite possible that they did litter the park with the remains of their empty milk bottles. But still, she thought, even if the city-property officials and the park maintenance men couldn't police the park, they could keep it clean. That was their responsibility—just as it was the public's responsibility not to mess it up.

> If every man could see hisself as he's seen by the woman as loves him, he'd say, "Who the devil's this?"
> —J. E. PATTERSON: Watchers by the Shore.

And the policemen's responsibility was to watch over it—and to help build a law-abiding community.

As Sally thought, she began to see the park as a sort of mirror. If you only looked casually, all you saw in its bits of glass were some lazy maintenance men; but if you looked more closely, you saw behind them the Bureau of City Property and the police, and then, behind them, the mayor—and behind him? The voters. Including me, she thought.

A cleanup campaign wouldn't really change the park; only a good city government would remove that glass—and keep it removed. Clearly, the situation called for more basic action than she had yet thought of.

For several days she pondered over what else she could do. She was handicapped, as most women are, by the always demanding concerns of her home and family, from giving either her full mind or time to the problem. The heat of the summer and her ear trouble were making Kitty fractious; Sally herself was more bothered by the child than usual because of her pregnancy. The open windows managed to waft in an astonishing amount of dust, soot and dirt, not to mention noise; and the effort of adding anything else to the cleaning, meal fixing and baby tending that made up her normal day's routine seemed almost too much.

She had, however, gone too far to back down. Furthermore, she felt under some sort of compulsion to carry the whole problem back into the realm where it appeared to begin—into politics.

Her only avenue into government lay through the very field which she most distrusted, the field occupied by the powerful Republican Party. It was not that she w against the party itself; she was a Repub can both by family tradition and thoughtful choice. It was simply that Philadelphia, as in all communities, large a small, the beliefs and hopes of the regul party members had long been controlled by strong handful of men, commonly referr to as "the machine," because of their unite noiseless, precise functioning and mechanic progress. She had broken faith with this co trol earlier in the year and voted for a ne city charter; a change which the machi was admittedly against but which had wor two-to-one vote of approval from arous Philadelphia citizens, hopeful of better go ernment. Because she had helped vote t charter in she felt that she had a respon bility to see that a good mayor was electe and that her party seize the challenge toss to it and change its ways to meet the growi demands of its members. Up until now, s had felt that her responsibility began a ended with voting wisely in the coming p mary.

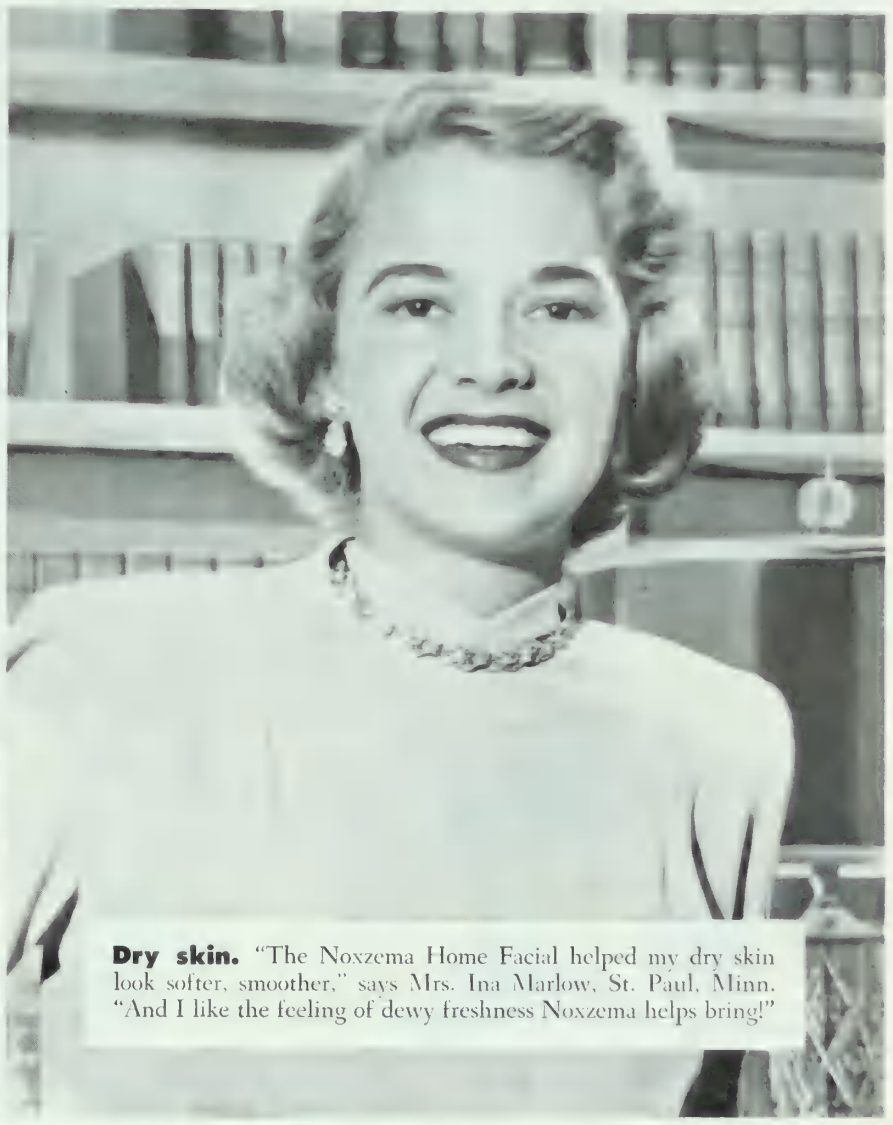
Now, as she thought of the park, of h own relation to it and its place in the city vast pattern, she felt she must do mor If we had a good city government all down t line men would do their jobs, right down to t child who wouldn't either dare, or want, break a pop bottle in a park which his parer took pride in.

IT sounded fanciful and dreamlike—b not impossible. It was worth trying. Her ne step, Sally thought, was to beard the loc committeeman—her closest representati in the party.

His wife answered Sally's call. Mrs. Har put her through a lengthy interrogation abo what she wanted her husband for, why s wanted it, and for good measure threw in h own opinions on the people in the neighbo hood (bad), the condition of Clark Pa (good) and the work her husband had to (hard). Sally noted afterward:

I asked her if I could call him tomorro and she said he worked from eight to six. I sa tomorrow was Saturday, and she said, even s he went in at eight o'clock and got off in t afternoon, but that he had a lot of things to then and would not want to be bothered. I ask her if I could call him early in the morning a she said he was going in very early tomorro Maybe, I said, he could call me over the we end. She said that she demanded Sunday that was all that was left for her and since s did not get to see him much of the other tim she demanded Sunday. I told her she had eve reason to do this, but when could I talk wi him? She suggested that I call him a quar to eight Monday morning, before he left f work.

Mr. Harris was quite cordial when Sal phoned him Monday. The conversation w brief. Mr. Harris asked her what she wante she told him, and he said he'd be happy talk to her if she'd like to drop by "the clut the next night at about 7:30. At her reque he gave her "the club's" address and rang o



That morning Sally took Kitty for a wa by "the club." It turned out to be no mo than a block from her house, and a place sl had noted before. No one Sally knew had ev seen anyone going into or out of it in th daytime. It appeared from the street to unfurnished. Its only identification w a shiny bronze plaque, hanging in the cu tainless windows, saying "West Philadelph Club." At night people came and wen noisily, and sometimes, people said, it w lit up "until all hours."

Sally found a baby-sitter, and Brud, h husband, accompanied her to the club. B cause of the recent murder and many ro beries in the area, Brud did not like her be out alone after dark, nor did she like t When they arrived somewhat early, th found the club dark. Promptly at 7:30 a c drew up and a man and woman got out, we

(Continued on Page 250)

Lovely complexion. "Noxzema helps keep my skin looking smooth and fresh," says Mrs. Betty Seghers of Miami, Florida. "It's a wonderful skin-freshener... my all-purpose beauty cream!"

Dry skin. "The Noxzema Home Facial helped my dry skin look softer, smoother," says Mrs. Ina Marlow, St. Paul, Minn. "And I like the feeling of dewy freshness Noxzema helps bring!"

Look Lovelier in 10 Days with Doctor's Home Facial or your money back!

Easy, New Beauty Routine Quickly Helps Skin Look Softer, Smoother, Lovelier!

● No need for a lot of elaborate preparations...no complicated rituals! With just one cream—greaseless, medicated Noxzema—you can help your problem skin look softer and smoother, feel so much fresher, too!

The way to use it is as easy as washing your face. It's the Home Facial, described at right... the beauty routine, developed by a skin doctor. In actual clinical tests, it helped 4 out of 5 women with problem skin look lovelier. Once you try it, you'll know why hundreds of women—all over the country—are switching to Noxzema!

See what it can do for your skin

With this doctor's Home Facial, you "creamwash" your skin to glowing cleanliness—without any dry, drawn feeling afterwards. You give your skin the all-day protection of a greaseless, natural-looking powder base...and the all-night aid of a medicated overnight cream that helps heal *externally-caused blemishes—helps soften and smooth skin.

Follow this easy Home Facial as an aid to a lovelier-looking complexion!

Morning—Apply Noxzema over face and neck. Using a damp cloth, "creamwash" with Noxzema just as you would with soap and water. No dry, drawn feeling afterwards—with Noxzema!

Now, smooth on a light film of Noxzema for your powder base. This greaseless film of Noxzema holds make-up beautifully and helps protect skin all day!

Evening—At bedtime, you "creamwash" again. How clean your skin looks! How fresh it feels! See how you've washed away make-up, the day's accumulation of dirt—without harsh rubbing!

Now, lightly massage your skin with Noxzema to help soften and smooth. Pat a bit extra over any blemishes* to help heal them. Medicated Noxzema is a greaseless overnight cream.

externally-caused*

Joan Murray of Rye, N. Y. says: "I first started using Noxzema for some annoying blemishes*. It helped my skin look so much smoother and softer. I've used it regularly since! Used as a make-up foundation, Noxzema helps powder really stay on."

Wannah Lee of Kansas City, Mo. says: "A friend suggested that I use Noxzema for my rough, dry-looking skin and it helped immensely! Now, I use it daily to help keep my skin looking smooth. Noxzema is so pleasant to use, too—feels cool, refreshing!"

Money-Back Offer! Try the Noxzema Home Facial for 10 days. If your skin doesn't show improvement—return jar to Noxzema, Baltimore, Md.—your money back. Get your jar today!

Money Saving Offer

NOXZEMA skin cream

BIG 85¢ JAR now only 59¢ plus tax

Limited time only. At any drug or cosmetic counter.

IT PAYS TO PICK THE FAVORITE!

You put your money on a winner every time when you choose comfortable, wearable HOBBIES for boys. From the shape-retaining necklines of the shirts to the full double gore features of the shorts, HOBBIES are leading the field in popularity. The quality-controlled manufacture of HOBBIES—right down to the finish of the final seam—insures the uniform perfection of every garment. For faultless fit and longer wear, mothers pick HOBBIES every time.

1. Shorts have full double gore for longer wear, greater support . . . no-gap fly plus natural rubber waistband.

2. No-stretch necklines of shirts made possible by tape in neck and shoulders . . . no side seams.

COMMENDED BY THE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU OF PARENTS' MAGAZINE AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
ATTACHMENT OF REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

SINCE 1891 also makers of Neslings*
MINNEAPOLIS KNITTING WORKS MINNEAPOLIS

(Continued from Page 248)

up the steps and unlocked the door. Brud and Sally followed them; they turned out to be the Harrises.

Mr. Harris was a large man, and pleasant. He said he'd be happy to tell them anything they wanted to know. It turned out he was the party leader for the ward in which the Vogels lived and thus a member of the Republican City Committee. They talked first about the club; he described it as the headquarters for the Republican Club of their ward, a place for the club meetings, the committee meetings and for a local women's Republican group, all of which he said was largely social, except the committee work. The Republican men's group met monthly, he said, and each member paid a $12 annual membership; the women's group also met monthly, he said, but they just "had a nice time" and paid dues of only $1 a year. The two committeemen from each voting division—he had fourteen divisions—also met monthly. They, he said, "did the work."

Sally brought up the subject of the park. "I'm getting nowhere as an individual citizen," she said, "so I decided to see what my party could do about it."

He said he hadn't had any complaints about the park lately, although he had had previously. Then, he said, all the complaints seemed to be based on the growing number of Negroes in the park, so they had created a playground farther north "for them." He said he realized that the caretakers probably did some loafing, but it was certainly true that the neighborhood was not interested in keeping the park clean. Then he enumerated all the problems Sally had heard before—about the garbage, the ruined flower beds, the broken pop bottles.

Sally asked him about the maintenance men's qualifications and salary; he said they took a physical exam—"It's a job that needs back work, not brain work"—and that the men made about $2200 a year—"You can't expect them to be balls of fire for that."

Sally said she and Brud had always been interested in politics, but that they didn't know how people like themselves could get started with a political group.

All they would have to do, Mr. Harris a sured them, was to let someone know th they were interested. Sally, he said, shou call his wife in September and the wome club would welcome her into the group. Th were not meeting during the summer, added. As for Brud, Mr. Harris said the par was always glad to get young workers. Sa then wanted to get straightened out on wh a committeeman was—last election, one h called at their home and discussed the can dates. She added that she had thought s was bringing her complaint to her comm teeman when she came to Mr. Harris—b that it was clear now that she'd been wro

"Yes," Mr. Harris said, "I have twent eight committeemen in my ward, each whom has his own locality to cover. Th receive complaints and give out party inf mation about elections."

Sally asked how they got the job—a whether they were paid.

"Not paid," Mr. Harris said, "but warded—and they were elected. You ele them. There are two committeemen in ea Philadelphia election division—and the reg tered Republicans in the area get a chance the even years to vote on who they'll They are your official representatives in t party; they attend meetings of the par groups, explain what their constituents— electors—want and need, and as a group w to keep the ward under the party influenc

The rewards, he said, were city jobs. this ward," he said, "we try to fit the job the man. Some politicians don't worry ab that—but I do. I figure if a man's a bum day, he's going to be a bum in the evenin

Sally asked him if the ward leaders e had trouble with any of the committeemen she was thinking at the moment of the sp in the G.O.P. ranks over who should be Republican candidate for mayor.

Mr. Harris laughed and said he never jected to a fight within the party—"Tha healthy and good for the party," he said. grew somewhat grimmer as he added th on the other hand, when a Republican co mitteeman bolted the party and worked another party's candidate, if he, Mr. Har could do it, he'd take his job away fr him.

HOW AMERICA LIVES

Other Views, Sizes and Prices of Patterns on Page 215

Vogue Design No. 7336. "Easy-to-Make" one-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 7483. "Easy-to-Make" one-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 46. 60c.

Vogue Design No. S-4188. Coat; Small (32–34), Medium (36–38), Large (40–42). $1.00.

Vogue Design No. S-4235. One-piece dress and jacket; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. $1.00.

Vogue Design No. 7440. "Easy-to-Make" lounging robe; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 60c.

RELIEVES PAIN OF HEADACHE • NEURALGIA
NEURITIS
FAST
The way thousands of physicians and dentists recommend
ANACIN

Anacin® relieves headache, neuralgia, neuritis pain fast because Anacin is like a doctor's prescription—that is, Anacin contains not just one, but a combination of medically proven, active ingredients in easy-to-take tablet form. Thousands have been introduced to Anacin through their own dentist or physicians. If you have never used Anacin, try these tablets yourself for incredibly fast, long-lasting relief from pain. Don't wait. Buy Anacin today.

NEW cushion plastic tightens
LOOSE FALSE TEETH
Stop slipping, sliding and sore gums! Chew and enjoy all foods. Reline your plates at home with DENTUR-EZE. Not a paste or powder, but a cushion plastic that lasts weeks. Thousands delighted. 59c & 98c tubes. If druggist hasn't it, send check or m. o. to DENTUR EZE, 902 John St., Seattle 9, Wn.
ONE APPLICATION LASTS FOR WEEKS!
DENTUR-EZE
MONEY BACK GUARANTEE

DISASTER
May Lurk in Neglected Minor Injuries
BURNS, CUTS, SCRATCHES, SCALDS
Painful, dangerous infection may result from neglect of all injuries. Apply Oil-O-Sol instantly. This gentle germ arresting antiseptic acts at once to help control infection, ease pain, speed healing. Wonderful first aid protection for 50 years. Does not sting. Easy to use. Mentholatum's Oil-O-Sol. 50¢ today at your drug store.

Shines Hair
As it Shampoos!

How an Oil Shampoo Leaves Hair Gleaming—At Once!
Gets Hair Recover Alluring Luster
When men are regaining lost hair beauty —most overnight. New luster, gloss and suppleness appear after the first shampoo. But, do not confuse this with ordinary soap or cream shampoos or strong chemical detergents.
Instead it is an oil shampoo! The very thing needed to counteract the effect of strong chemicals that leave hair so brittle, so dry, so lack-luster.
Switch to Mar-o-Oil Shampoo. You'll see your hair gleaming. Actually makes it want to curl! You'll find glorious scalp comfort—freedom from itching scalp and unsightly dandruff scales. Get genuine Mar-o-Oil—either Non-Foamy for dry hair or Super-Foamy for oily hair—at your drug counter today. Accepted Committee on Cosmetics American Medical Association. For FREE trial bottle, write Mar-o-Oil, Dept. J, 657 W. Chicago Ave., Chicago 10, Ill. Specify: Non-Foamy or Super-Foamy.
Mar-o-Oil SHAMPOO

"If other people get vicious—well, I can get as vicious as anybody else," he said.

A group of people were now gathered in the clubroom, and Sally felt she had taken up enough of Mr. Harris's time, so they thanked him and left. Going home, Sally asked Brud why he'd been so silent, and Brud said he thought she'd asked him to come along only "for protection."

The idea of joining a women's club to "have a nice time," as Mr. Harris had put it, didn't appeal to Sally, who had neither the leisure nor the inclination for such activity. What she wanted to do, she thought, was to do some actual work—if, of course, the party would let her. The primaries for the selection of the Republican candidate for mayor were coming up. She had made her choice of which candidate she wanted nominated, and now she was ready to work for him. Her choice was not the favorite, nor even the one supported by the party (Sally always thought of it in Philadelphia as "the machine") but he was a Republican, albeit an independent one. The group which had split away from the party to back him was called the Republican Citizens Committee, and after making four phone calls under the guidance of the League of Women Voters, she finally located its headquarters.

She wrote in her notes that night:

A woman answered the phone, and I asked if this were not the group that was sponsoring Mr. Miller for mayor and that if it was, I thought he was a good man and that I would like to help them. The woman was very glad and said that oh, that was fine, and asked me to hold on for just a minute. Then someone else came to the phone and asked for my name, address and phone number, and explained that "Miss Chappell" was not in right now but that she would call me this afternoon.

Miss Chappell called me back within half an hour. She said she had stayed home that morning to do her marketing. However, she was very glad to talk with me and said that I could not imagine how much good it did her for someone to call in and volunteer, that it made her feel that their work was not in vain. Miss Chappell explained that on Monday or Tuesday of next week they were moving to the Commercial Trust Building, changing their headquarters. They may need volunteers to put in the building at headquarters to serve as information posts, or to work in a telephone campaign. I chose the latter. She said that in order to do this they now wanted people to look up the phone numbers of registered Republicans and have them in to the office before July 1, so that, prior to the primaries, the canvassers could call these people. I said I would be very glad to do that and she said that in that case she would send me lists of my ward and division to do. I asked how many names there would be and she thought about 200.

She was very gracious and very interested in me. She said that she felt 100 per cent better—that generally she had made three or four calls before she could find one volunteer. She asked if I thought I would be able to find some other people who would be interested in doing this telephone list work, and I said I would try—but that she should send me only one division until I could find out something definite.

The next day Sally received the list from the Republican Citizens Committee. There were about 500 names. "It is good that I

(Continued on Page 253)

F. D. R., riding through the streets of Cairo during the famous Allied conference held there, received a thunderous ovation from the natives pressing around the car. But the Secret Service men were uneasy. One of them whispered to the interpreter:

"What are they saying? And why do they keep pointing at Mr. Roosevelt?"

"They say," came the answer, "'That's her husband! That's her husband!'"

You would not knowingly deny your baby a well-shaped head
a strong back
a fine full chest straight legs
yet many mothers do

DO THEY really? Surely every mother wants her baby to build a well-shaped head, a fine, full chest, a strong back, straight legs and sound teeth. But some mothers just don't know what to do.

One thing you must give without fail —extra Vitamin D. Your doctor will advise giving your baby this extra Vitamin D every single day. Only then can you be sure that your baby will build strong bones and sound teeth.

A recent five-year study shows that children living in institutions who receive regularly plenty of Vitamin D and essential minerals have better teeth—fewer cavities—than children living at home and not eating so carefully.

Help your baby with a natural Vitamin D source that you can trust absolutely —Squibb Cod Liver Oil. Start now and help your baby build sound bones and teeth. Ask today for Squibb Cod Liver Oil! Never miss giving it a single day.

Which Doll Is The Toni?

Toni Dolls Only Have Washable Nylon Hair
Nylon hair actually improves with washing.
Toni dolls in 4 sizes.
$11.98 • $13.98
$16.98 • $19.98
Made by Ideal
Toni play-wave kit with every doll.
AT BETTER DOLL DEPTS.

REQUEST A SAMPLE
Dexter Diaper

• The One-Size Diaper for All-Size Babies
• No Folding Necessary
• Even Dad Can Do It
• Made of Long Lasting Red Star Birdseye
SEND 25c TO FRED DEXTER
Dept. LJ, Houston 8, Texas
For Diaper, Pins on Chain, Helpful Booklet

The Label In Fine Coats For Boys & Girls
AN ORIGINAL Grow-A-Year by Trim-Sel
TRADEMARK REG.
*U.S. PAT. 2508223

No Blistered Heels!
No "Holey" Sox!
No Weary Feet!
with
Step Master SHOES FOR CHILDREN

COMMENDED PARENTS MAGAZINE
STEP MASTER Shoes have a smooth one-piece lining of genuine leather. No back seams, ridges, or wrinkles to chafe little feet.
STEP MASTER is the only shoe with AIR HOLES in the lining — to let little feet breathe — and stay dry, fresh, comfortable . . . From toddler to teen-age . . . Budget-priced. Write for Interesting Leaflet.
STEP MASTER SHOES INC.
Greenup, Ill.

Young Mrs. Barbara Nunn Howell Advises:

Start Housekeeping RIGHT with a Stanley Hostess Party

Lovely and talented Mrs. Howell is one of the youngest STANLEY Party Hostesses in Atlanta and a frequent guest at STANLEY Parties given by her friends. Still in her early twenties, she already has had a distinguished musical career having sung, as Barbara Nunn, leading roles in the Atlanta Civic Opera and in successful Hollywood and Broadway productions. Married for little more than a year, Mrs. Howell gives this advice to other young housewives: "Start off right by holding your own STANLEY Hostess Party and stocking your new home with STANLEY'S polishes, mops, brushes and other housekeeping aids. I personally would never think of having any other kind."

* * *

Most popular of all informal, easy-to-arrange parties is the STANLEY Hostess Party. Each day, more than 10,000 housewives . . . women like Mrs. Howell . . . please groups of friends and neighbors by acting as STANLEY Party Hostesses. To arrange for your own STANLEY Hostess Party . . . or for any information about STANLEY . . . phone or write your STANLEY Dealer, your nearest STANLEY HOME PRODUCTS Branch Office, or communicate direct with STANLEY'S Home Office in Westfield, Massachusetts.

Mrs. Barbara Nunn Howell, singing star and popular STANLEY Party Hostess in her attractive home, 743 Home Street, N. W., Atlanta, Ga.

IT'S EASY TO HOLD YOUR OWN STANLEY HOSTESS PARTY . . .

You invite your Stanley Dealer into your home with a group of your friends and neighbors.

Your friendly Dealer, as one of your guests, sees that everyone has fun, gets welcome gifts.

While your Dealer demonstrates Stanley QUALITY PLUS Products, you all shop for those you need.

Your Dealer presents you, in return for your cooperation, a splendid Hostess Dividend Gift.

STANLEY LEADS with more than 150 QUALITY PLUS Products to save housekeepers time, work, money:— (1) Polishes and cleaning preparations (2) Dusters, mops, brushes, etc. (3) Products to improve personal grooming.

STANHOME
A STANLEY HOME PRODUCT

Originators of the famous Stanley Hostess Party Plan

STANLEY HOME PRODUCTS, INC.
WESTFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS
Stanley Home Products of Canada, Ltd., London, Ontario

Copr. Stanley Home Products, Inc., 1951

(Continued from Page 251)

idn't volunteer to do any more than this ned vision," Sally told Brud, after she'd ori about fifty names. "Even this little bit as taken me one hour and a half!"

She had only two weeks in which to complete the lists, Sally spent most of her vis time on them. In the afternoons, how-ver, he went to the park with Kitty. She oun it as distressing as ever, though the ras seemed somewhat cleaner, and twice he saw the maintenance men working—once he were cleaning the power mower, the th time they were trimming the privet
ed

Bu these small efforts encouraged her, ne afternoon she and a friend decided o talk to the caretaker. They hesitated bu approaching him while he was sitting n the tool-shed steps with his men, but th he got up—apparently to leave—they u d to intercept him.

He was a big man, in his mid-forties,
id dressed in blue-gray slacks, sleeveless wer and shirt. To Sally he didn't look lik park attendant at all. Her friend, a mo n with two children, first asked him
th it was safe for the children to play, n e laughed and said there was the whole a She said she was worried about the gla He asked, "What glass?" The woman ha shortly pointed out some glass at her pe nd he laughed again. She picked up a pa ul, but he still managed, laughing, to ju st that this was unusual, special, and fe ps it didn't really exist.

"We haven't time to go around picking pi ery little bit of glass we see," he said.
Fi des, there isn't any glass around here."
He added that he had 20 acres to care for ac ally 9.1 in the park), that he'd just co ed using the power mower, and that ki ids broke so many bottles that no one co keep up with the glass. He was, he sa a landscape gardener and knew how to ke a park looking good—if only people wo dn't come in and mess it up.

Sally's friend asked him what she should do ith the glass now she had picked it up.
He ood, his hands in his pockets, laughing.

"Throw it against the tree," he said. "That's what everyone else does."

Sally watched them dispassionately. As her friend strode off, obviously angry, the caretaker laughed again.

"Your girl friend is the kind that gets mad," he said, smiling in a pleased manner.

Sally asked him why there weren't any waste tins for her to put the glass in. He said—almost as if he knew it by heart—what Sally had heard before: that the neighborhood people used them for garbage, that the kids used them for playthings. He then said that Mr. Maxwell, the department chief, had been visiting him that morning and had told him that the park looked "better than it ever had before."

The conversation went round and round and got nowhere. Sally pointed out the glass lying at his very feet; he ignored it. He said he worked hard keeping the park clean. Sally asked him what he would need to get up the glass; he said they'd raked the place only a few weeks before. He went on laughing. Finally Sally said good-by, feeling totally frustrated. As she left he called out to her, "Tell your girl friend we'll try harder," and laughed again.

"I never did think it would help any to talk to the maintenance men," Sally said to her friend. "After all, they've had plenty of opportunity to clean up the park, if they were going to—this glass looks as if it's been here for years."

She took Kitty from the friend who had been watching out for her and went home. That night Brud helped her with the telephone lists. She read off the names, he looked them up in the phone book, she wrote the phone numbers down. They found that they saved about ten minutes for each fifty names this way. Sally was grateful, but Brud insisted he wasn't doing anything. Sally said that she wouldn't be working on any of this at all if she felt he didn't approve—that his interest alone was a great help.

Just as they were winding up the lists about ten days later, Sally got another call from the Republican Citizens Committee. Miss Chappell asked her if she'd be able to give them a day or a half day at headquarters during the next few weeks before the primaries. Sally asked her for time to think it over, but said she'd like to, and after talking with Brud about it, she called back and said she'd come in the next Friday morning at ten for three or four hours' work. It would be more fun, she thought, being at headquarters—there should be some hustle and bustle there, not just a small pile of papers with an endless number of names on them.

The headquarters was located in the ground-floor office of what had been formerly a bank branch. There were posters around, and pamphlets, but only a small group of people. Miss Chappell was not in, but Sally was welcomed by a Miss Jones, who was a veteran worker with the group, the daughter of one of the important women leaders. She put Sally at a desk next to hers and gave her a list of names of registered Republicans to call to see if any of them would volunteer on the telephone campaign to be held the following week.

In three and a half hours she had made 34 calls—and had found only one woman interested. She had moved her desk away from Miss Jones' because the latter was getting volunteer after volunteer and it was too discouraging. Of course she was calling from a special list of interested people, but even so, Sally felt whipped.

"I have never talked to so many sick women—or so many women who were just leaving town—before in my life," she said.

Miss Jones laughed. "It's a real problem getting women to work in politics," she said.

A few of the women she called were friendly, but oddly enough these were women who had not yet made up their minds for whom they were voting. These women wanted information, and although Sally had to call for help on some of the questions, she felt somewhat encouraged by their demands. She was also encouraged by the fact that most of the women she called seemed to know that Mr. Miller was challenging the Republican machine, and thought he had a chance.

"Time something happened around here," one woman said, but she declined to help make it happen. She was, she said, going out of town.

When Sally left, she felt discouraged by her lack of success, but she told Miss Jones she would be back the following Friday at the same time.

That day, Sally was assigned to call people to acquaint them with Mr. Miller's record, his views and his fight against the Republican machine. One or two people hung up on her, but a great many more listened, and asked questions. She felt pleasantly excited by the end of the afternoon and agreed to come back the next day for more of the same kind of work. She had to beg off the day after, however, because she hadn't done her weekly washing.

When election day arrived, she was impatient and eager. The polls closed at nine, and she and Brud turned on the radio on the dot, but it was more than an hour before official returns started coming in. There were over 30 places on the ballot and counting went slowly. Shortly before midnight it was clear, however, that Mr. Miller had fallen way behind, and that the primary vote was as woefully small as at any primary election in Philadelphia's history.

Sally was stunned and shocked: not so much because the machine had won again (she expected that, more or less), but because of the smallness of the primary vote. How could people, she thought, simply sit back and do nothing while the machine rolled over them? Just as the mower rolls over dangerous broken glass in the park?

I must do more, she thought, we must all do more. The fewer people there are in politics the more this becomes a country run by the few—for the few. Nobody wants a dictatorship—but that's what we're getting anyway when we don't demand anything else.

Clearly, a new broom was needed, and Sally was more than ever determined to be one of those to wield it. Figuratively, she could feel herself rolling up her sleeves, as she usually did when she started to clean house.

THE END

★ ★ ★

Arranged in our cabinet here are a dozen kinds of geraniums, out of literally thousands: some for flowers, some for spicy fragrances, some for fancy foliage.

Geranium Cabinet

Design by Allen Saalburg; photograph by the author.

EVERY summer my wife used to put so many geraniums on the porch there was hardly room to sit down. That's how this cabinet came to be. Decorated with "combing," it flatters all the plants she puts in it, and protects them from wind, sun, rain; her favored geraniums in all their fascinating varieties, and later on her gloxinias and big-flowered begonias. There is a catchall cupboard for odds and ends. The cubbyholes are carefully figured for plant sizes. The pots stand on fine gravel in the trays to soak up just the right amount of moisture. The whole thing, not counting carpentry, comes to about $27. A leaflet showing how to make it yourself, and telling all you need to know about geraniums, can be had for 25c from the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Phila. 5, Pa. Ask for No. 2581, use coupon on Page 30.

By RICHARD PRATT

MADE OF STYRON

MADE OF STYRON IS A DOW PLASTIC

.....means colorful
Easy to Handle
Easy to Clean
Accessories
FOR YOUR HOME

For color, practicality and beauty in household accessories, look for the "Made of Styron" label; it's your assurance of satisfaction. Products bearing this label have been evaluated for proper application of plastics, sound design and good workmanship. You can buy made of Styron (Dow polystyrene) products with confidence.

GLAMOUR—Eye-catching colors in attractive barbecue sets that are extremely useful, so easy to clean.

CONVENIENCE — Don't worry about bread getting stale; this colorful tight-closing box always keeps it fresh, ready for use.

LUXURY—Beautiful clock case adds color to a practical product.

REALISM—Plastic toys are more fun because they can be designed to resemble the real thing.

ORIGINALITY—This toy ukulele will bring hours of melodious fun to your child.

UTILITY — Easy-to-clean, tight sealing covers make this canister set a joy to use. Will not rust, chip, or peel. Very attractive.

HATTER-RESISTANCE—Defroster ays and other refrigerator parts ade of Styron retain their shape nd resist shattering.

EAUTY—Light-weight wall tile ade of Styron for bathrooms and tchens is available in harmoniz- g colors that will last because ey will not chip, peel or wear off.

ACID-RESISTANCE—Styron's high degree of chemical resistance enables it to be used in battery cases.

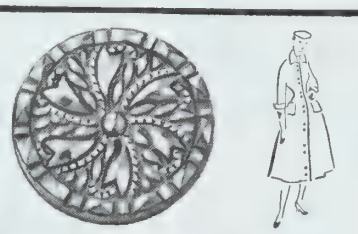
Plastics Division, Dept. PL-131 • THE DOW CHEMICAL COMPANY
MIDLAND, MICHIGAN

DOW plastics

Notes from designers' sketchbooks...



New effect . . . graduated buttons on diagonal-front tunic. La Mode 8186.

Gargantuan pocket. La Mode king-size button 8149.

Scalloped front shows beautiful button parade. La Mode 8171.

Button twosomes smarten the coat dress. La Mode 3478.

Famous designers agree:

Buttons are the exclamation point of fashion!

Your wardrobe can have that "couturier stamp." Take your cue from leading designers both here and abroad . . . concentrate on buttons . . . the world's most beautiful buttons by La Mode. You'll find every shape, every shade, every price, at your favorite Button Department. Or write . . . we'll tell you where.

La Mode

FOR EVERY FASHION . . . IN EVERY PRICE RANGE

BUTTONS

Since 1877

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — Replacement or Refund of Money — If not as advertised therein

B. Blumenthal & Co., Inc., 1372 Broadway, New York 18, New York

Also creators of nationally advertised Le Chic buttons, available at variety stores.

UNWANTED HAIR?

For complete removal of superfluous hair use ZiP Epilator

ZiP - IT'S OFF because IT'S OUT

Safe for face, arms, legs. Good stores, or send $1.10 to Jordeau, Box K-11, South Orange, N. J.

INGROWN NAIL Hurting You?

Immediate Relief!

A few drops of OUTGRO® bring blessed relief from tormenting pain of ingrown nail. OUTGRO toughens the skin underneath the nail, allows the nail to be cut and thus prevents further pain and discomfort. OUTGRO is available at all drug counters.

For SEWING EASE . . . For SEWING EFFICIENCY . . . For SEWING EVERYTHING IN THE HOME!

A sewing machine is a lifetime family investment . . . which pays dividends every time you sew. VIKING is the perfect machine for women who want the best! Various VIKING models available in a variety of beautiful walnut, mahogany, maple, blonde and limed oak veneer cabinets and portables . . . for any budget and every home.

VIKING machines priced from about $79.50

Attractive non-glare green finish. A blend of beauty and quality. See your neighborhood dealer or write to:

VIKING

"The Royal Family Sewing Machine"

Model 33 Deluxe ZIG-ZAG

SWEDISH STEEL

CONSOLIDATED SEWING MACHINE & SUPPLY CO., INC., 1115 B'way, N.Y.C.

THE GHOST HORSES

(Continued from Page 56)

"You are to go away," said the doctor. "And Nonny is to realize that only when she is perfectly well will you come back to her, and you and she will be together again, for good. Your husband has been talking about a fortnight's motoring tour in France. My advice is that you should start on it tomorrow."

Nonny's mother looked at the doctor, then looked out the window.

"You are leaving your child in excellent hands," the doctor went on. "Miss Anderson is a trustworthy, serious-minded person, Miss Brown a fully trained nurse, and your little Swedish nursery maid devoted to her charge. I myself will call every day."

"Perhaps," said the mother slowly, "it would be a good thing to go away."

"The four of us," said the doctor, "will agree to talk about you to Nonny every day, and to tell her that the quicker she gets well, the sooner will you return to her. Then our headstrong young lady will concentrate not on dying but on recovering."

"My brother is arriving from Paris tomorrow," said Nonny's mother. "I have wired for him."

"Your artist brother?" asked the doctor. "The young man who draws such amusing pictures for Nonny? The very person we want. He will describe your journey to your daughter from day to day, illustrate it too."

So Nonny's mother set out for France with her husband, in her new big car.

It so happened that she met her brother in the seaport. They lunched at a hotel and when after lunch Peter, the husband, went out to take a look at the car, the two others had a long talk over their coffee.

THE brother and sister were twins and much alike, so that their friends named them Sebastian and Viola. They had always been great friends. Cedric had surprised his family first by wanting to become a painter and later by making a kind of name for himself as one. He lived in Paris in a circle of artists of whom he thought highly, while he was modest about his own work. He was a pleasant-looking young man with gentle manners and the kind of equilibrium found in boys whose people have lived for generations in unaltered economic circumstances, either very good or very bad.

Annabelle told her brother that a child's world centers upon one single magnetic personality, and that she was going to France to save Nonny's life. He must now talk about her every day and hour, tell Nonny that she would come back to her as soon as the child was perfectly well, and send reports of the progress to various addresses in France. Cedric promised to do all she asked him.

"But that was not why you wired for me," he said.

"No," said Annabelle, "it was not." She paused, then said, "I wanted your advice." She had often before wanted his advice.

"At your service," he said.

"Yes, that is easy to say," said Annabelle, "but the thing is that Peter and I have been spending more money than we have got. Living beyond one's means, people call it."

"What, you?" Cedric asked in surprise.

"For heaven's sake do not begin to bully me," said Annabelle. "It is terribly unpleasant to live beyond one's means, I can't stand it—and you couldn't either, could you?"

"No," said Cedric, who lived very soberly in Paris.

"There, you see," said the sister. "Just lately we have got a wonderful chance. Peter has always wanted to do some work. Now Sir Maurice Mendoza has offered to take him into his firm as a partner. It will be the very thing for Peter. So don't you think it is wonderful?"

"Yes, I do," said the brother.

"You do, do you?" said the sister. "And what about me?"

"Yes, what about you?" he asked.

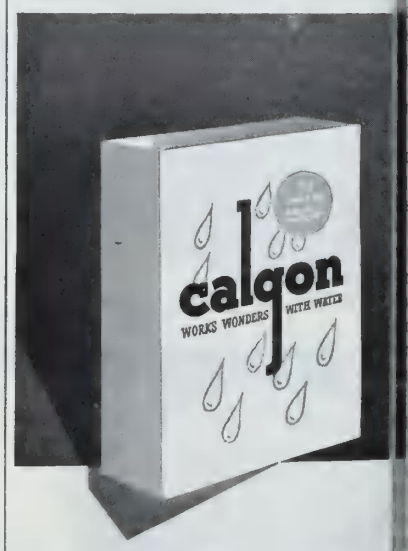
"Oh, Cedric," she said, "try not to be so terribly dense. The thing is that Sir Maurice admires me."

it's a beauty it's a joy to use!

"SIT-or-STAND" G.P.F. MET-L-TOP IRONING TABLE

● Countless women admire the gleaning beauty of this modern ironi table . . . but most of all they enjoy th thrill of easy, comfortable, restful iro ing, for which MET-L-TOP is famou

Finger-tip control gives instant a justment to desired height, whether y sit or stand to iron. Relieves back, ar and foot fatigue. The MET-L-TOP res firmly on floor . . . no wobble, no cree no tipping. Smooth, sturdy, tubul legs won't snag stockings.



Remember, MET-L-TOP is the ori inal all-metal ironing table. See it your dealer's.

Speed-Top SIT-or-STAND Model, $14. Speed-Top Adjustable Model, $10.95 Speed-Top Non-Adjustable Model, $9.

GEUDER, PAESCHKE & FREY CO. Milwaukee 1, Wisconsin

it's a miracle

that any water conditioner can b so easy on your hand and so hard on dirt!

Calgon® makes any soap or deterg wash anything cleaner in hard or soft water

Calgon, Inc. PITTSBURGH, PA.

Commended PARENTS' MAGAZINE — Replacement or Refund — Guaranteed Good Housek — If not as advertised

e everybody," said he.
" she said. "No, not like everybody,
Peter always likes to see you ad-said he.
" said she. "No, he might not like it,
ew about it at all."
how do you yourself like it, my he asked.
l, Cedric," she said, "it is like this. I ter. And I have loved him for seven that I feel that I know him by heart. urice I do not know at all. He is a ous person, as you will be aware from tation. He is not rich in the ordinary is like somebody in a fairy tale. It is
's cave: rubies like cherries, sapphires pes! I come to think of that old fairy urs because Sir Maurice has got such ful knowledge of precious stones.
I wish that great-great-nother Anna-ad not taken ily jewels with n she ran away
r groom!"
," said Cedric
"there gener-
some kind of about those tic love af-

e night before got ill," said
elle, "we dined
im, and he us a big ruby
e had got in
d. He asked us
n Peter and he
ttled the mat-might give it
in a bracelet.
ed seal to our
ent, he said.
Nonny got ill
have not seen ince, and we got this fort-in France to
up our minds,
here it is, and
do you advise
do?"
you give me,
he fortnight to
it over in?"
the brother.
es," answered
ter.
e they saw Peter up to their
and changed onversation.
is very queer," nnabelle, "that all her illness
s been talking horses, about nothing but horses, and and hunting and grooming. Why, she rdly ever seen a horse! When she went ut them Peter bought her a beautiful nical toy just like a horse. But she did re for it."
n this they parted.

IC was looking forward to his holiday.
had a big new picture to think over.
anted to be alone.
had never been in his sister's house she was not there. Now that he had nd peace to walk about and take it all seemed to him a new and fascinating

his house had been mine, he thought. I
I have left it as it was. If I had then lived
I should have been able to paint like ny.
went up to Nonny's room. She was prettier than he remembered her. But did the severe, haggard and hopeless ssion do in the flowerlike face?
obedience to his instructions, he talked nny about her mother, described her ey and illustrated it with paper and
l. She listened without the slightest sign erest and hardly looked at the drawings.

The mechanical horse stood by her bed; he admired it, and her face became still more tragic.

If I am worth anything as an artist, he told himself, I must be able to put this pretty Portrait of a Child right.

He asked, "What are we going to play, Nonny, when you get up?"

FOR the first time he got an answer. After a silence Nonny said, "We can't play. Not you and I."

He thought the thing over, then said, "No, not you and I. Who can play?"

Nonny answered, "Billy."

He did not want to force the matter, so left it at that.

The doctor came, examined the child and inquired if she had been up. When the nurse shook her head he told her that it was becoming a serious thing and that they must needs have had the little baggage on her feet by the time of his next visit, then he drove away.

Cedric said to Nonny, "You would get up, wouldn't you, if you could go and play with Billy?"

"Yes," said Nonny.

"And why is it now," he again asked, "that you can't do so?"

The child's face grew dark with indignation. "You know!" she said.

"I have been away in Paris so long, my dear," he said. "Many things, I find, have happened in the meantime. Do you mind telling me?"

"Because Billy g back dead," said Nonny. He

By this time Cedric n he found that he was iums occupying himself as itors much with Nonny as grew with his new picture. He felt that he would gave get no assistance from e for either Miss Anderson edric. or Miss Brown, so he your- turned to the little the Swedish nursery avey, maid, Ingrid. She ap- ist in pealed to his painter's room heart, for in her white I had cap she looked like c. "I a Dutch picture. He does took pains to find her f the alone and sat down too. with her. They dis- Jncle cussed Nonny's illness, and agreed that they oom. must get her well for her mother's return. e the

"And by the way, my dear," said Cedric, "who is Billy?" to a

Ingrid grew pale, stared at him and said, "Oh, sir." ified.

"You see," said he "I can't help you it all about Nonny till I know." ws to

"I had hoped," said Ingrid, "that nobody ng in should ever know." an's

"And why must they never know?" he since asked. true:

"Because Billy is dead," answered Ingrid. old

"I have understood that much," said Cedric, "and I am very sorry indeed. But ment there must be something more to Billy than The just that. If you will be kind enough to tell filled me, I shan't let it get any farther." s and Ingrid drew her breath deeply. "I shall be ashed glad to tell you," she said. "I have been un- e old happy about it, sir."

Gravely, from time to time pausing and looking him in the face, as if to hold him to his promise, she told him.

Billy was old Mrs. Peavey's grandson. And who was old Mrs. Peavey? Old Mrs. Peavey was the old coachman's widow. The old coachman had lived in the small flat above those stables which were turned into garages s and llery. reast- and

★ ★ ☆ ☆ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Reflection

By Virginia Reynolds

She stood on tiptoes, peering down into
The well, her chin against the concrete side.
She liked to look down at the water, deep
And black, to feel the dampness on her face,
And see that other face like hers,
stretched wide
And moving just a little as she moved.
She tried to look on past that face,
to see
What lay down there, and once, just one time, she
Was sure that she had seen right through
The water mirror, found the secret
there,
And then she moved, or else it did—she turned
And ran back to the house to tell them what
She'd seen, but when she got there, she'd Forgotten what she'd meant to say and how
It looked, and in forgetting knew that they
Would never have believed her anyway.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Mfrs. of Stearic & Oleic Acids, Candles, Twitchell Textile Oils, Plasticizers.

"A new job! Thanks to low fares by Greyhound"

—writes Miss Mary A. Payne of Louisville, Ky.

"Recently—when I had the chance for a new job in another city—I hesitated to take it because of the cost of transportation to and from my home town.

"But when I discovered how little it costs by Greyhound bus, my worries ended!

"I have the job now—and I often go home by Greyhound over the weekend and during the holidays."

GREYHOUND

A LOT MORE TRAVEL FOR A LOT LESS MONEY!

Meds Meds Meds

Which Hair Problems Do You Have?

Try this new Glamour-Treatment!

Used by professionals for problem hair! A creamy lotion—not sticky or greasy. Makes your wave behave—leaves hair soft, shining! ★ Rich in Lanolin to soften dry hair or stiff, fuzzy permanents. ★ Ends loose dandruff worries. ★ Deodorizes for between-shampoos freshness, fragrance.

RICH IN LANOLIN!

50¢ and $1.00 plus tax

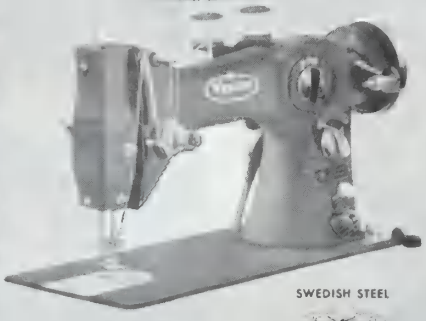
new LUSTRE-CREME Hair Dressing

Also creators of nationally advertised Le Chic buttons, available at variety stores.

UNWANTED HAIR?
For complete removal of superfluous hair use ZiP Epilator
ZiP - IT'S OFF because IT'S OUT
Safe for face, arms, legs. Good stores, or send $1.10 to Jordeau, Box K-11, South Orange, N. J.

INGROWN NAIL Hurting You?
Immediate Relief!
A few drops of OUTGRO® bring blessed relief from tormenting pain of ingrown nail. OUTGRO toughens the skin underneath the nail, allows the nail to be cut and thus prevents further pain and discomfort. OUTGRO is available at all drug counters.



For SEWING EASE . . . For SEWING EFFICIENCY . . . For SEWING EVERYTHING IN THE HOME!

A sewing machine is a lifetime family investment . . . which pays dividends every time you sew. VIKING is the perfect machine for women who want the best! Various VIKING models available in a variety of beautiful walnut, mahogany, maple, blonde and limed oak veneer cabinets and portables . . . for any budget and every home.

VIKING machines priced from about $79.50

Attractive non-glare green finish. A blend of beauty and quality. See your neighborhood dealer or write to:

VIKING
"The Royal Family Sewing Machine"

Model 33
Deluxe ZIG-ZAG

SWEDISH STEEL

CONSOLIDATED SEWING MACHINE & SUPPLY CO., INC., 1115 B'way, N.Y.C.

after his death his widow had been allowed to stay on in the flat.

The gentleman would probably never have seen old Mrs. Peavey? Nay, that was because her legs were poor and it was difficult for her to climb the stairs. She and Ingrid first had become friends because Mrs. Peavey came from the real country, her father had been a farmer and had bred horses, as the Swedish girl's father had done, and the two had many interests in common.

"It must have been very nice to both you and her," said Cedric.

"So it was, sir," said Ingrid.

Mrs. Peavey had an only son, who worked in a big racing stable, was married and had seven children. When his wife died and he married again, his new wife could not be bothered with the youngest child, so old Mrs. Peavey had taken him on. The little boy's eldest brother had brought him here, a groom at the racing stable himself, a nice young man. Cedric wondered whether the groom was not the interest which the old and the young woman had had in common. The small boy had then lived with Mrs. Peavey, above the old stables.

"That was Billy, sir," said Ingrid.

Billy was three months younger than Nonny, a very pretty and clever little boy. But he was deaf and dumb.

Sometimes when Miss Anderson told Ingrid to take Nonny out for a walk, the two would instead go up the stable stairs to visit Mrs. Peavey. Ingrid would sit with her and do a little darning for her, but Nonny and Billy went into the big harness room next to Mrs. Peavey's own rooms, to play.

"But there was no harm in that," said Cedric.

"Yes, sir, there was," said Ingrid, "for it was from Billy that Nonny caught the measles." [illegible] wrung her hands [illegible] her lap. "And just [illegible] when Nonny was recovering," she continued, "Billy died. It was [illegible] when Nonny heard about it that she got so very bad again."

"How did she hear of it?" Cedric asked.

She had heard of it from Ingrid. Ingrid had gone to see Mrs. Peavey, and had wept with her over Billy, and when she came back Nonny asked her why she had been crying. Then they sent for the doctor in the middle of the night. When Nonny had been delirious Ingrid had feared that she would speak about Billy, that it would all come out and old Mrs. Peavey be sent away. But Nonny had been loyal, and had said nothing then either.

"My sister told me," said Cedric, "that she talked about horses."

Yes, she would talk about horses. There were a great many pictures of horses up in the harness room, and Billy had told her the names of them all.

"How could he tell her," Cedric asked, "when he was deaf and dumb?"

The thing evidently had not struck Ingrid as particularly strange, but she could not quite explain it either. Nonny and Billy had always insisted on being left alone to play in the harness room, they had even locked the door of it, and they had been playing almost without a sound in there. Billy had been taught, or had taught himself, to read from people's lips; she believed that he had taught Nonny too.

For Nonny would say to Ingrid, "Now I am going to tell you a wonderful thing," and then just move her lips, and pull a face when Ingrid did not understand her. Sometimes, too, when Ingrid had put her to bed, she would laugh to herself for a while, and then tell her, in a low voice, that she and Billy had got beautiful horses to play with.

"I think," said Cedric after a silence, that I shall speak to Nonny about Billy."

"Will that be right, sir?" asked Ingrid.

"I believe that it will be right," said Cedric. "The doctor told my sister that to a child there will always be one outstanding, fascinating personality who will hold all attention before anybody else. He thought that to Nonny it was her mother. But I see that it was Billy."

Cedric had been sending a post card to his sister every day. Now he himself received a post card from her. France, she wrote, was lovely. It was lovely traveling with Peter, it would be lovely to get back to Nonny. Sometimes she wished that she had not got to go back. Love to Cedric.

Cedric said to Nonny, "If I were you I should get rid of that horse."

Both looked with contempt at the mechanical horse by the bedside.

"Things," said Cedric, "which are exactly like other things are a great nuisance."

Nonny looked at him, but was still suspicious and did not speak.

"The only really real things, you know," he said, "are those which one makes up oneself, and which are not like other things. In my house in Paris I make up a great many really real things: flowers and birds, and a lady who throws herself into the river, because she is unhappy. They smell and look and jump into the river very well, very sweetly indeed."

After a silence Nonny asked, "What do you make them from?"

"I generally," he said, "find something to make them from. Don't you?"

A pale little smile, the first he had ever seen, lit up her face.

"Yes," she said.

He waited a moment. "Now as to horses," he said, "really real horses. I suppose that I could really make them do everything."

Nonny looked him in the face, another thing she had not yet done. Her own face was grave and proud, but not unfriendly. "Billy could explain everything they did to me," she said.

"I know," said he, "because he was able to speak the way other boys do."

She seemed to be going to say more, but again closed her lips tightly.

"Well, Nonny," he said, "so long. I have got to go for a drive in the car your mum left here for me. It is a bore, really, because a car becomes so slow when you begin to think about Billy's horses."

"You will come back, Uncle Cedric?" asked Nonny.

He went away and thought, The change is coming. It is difficult, difficult to get it right, but it is coming. May God help me, now to choose the proper brushes and the proper tubes of paint!

The next day he succeeded in making Nonny play a kind of board game with men on the counterpane. While he was pondering on a move she asked him:

"Where do you keep your flowers and your birds, and the lady?"

"I put them up against the wall," he answered, "then nobody can see them. But they are there all the time, of course."

If this time Nonny did not speak it was not, he felt, from lack of sympathy but quite simply, from lack of words wherewith to express their new, happy understanding. At last she said, "Our horses are in their boxes. And in their stable."

"Like most really fine horses," said he.

When she had won the game, and as she was putting the pieces back in the box, Nonny suddenly asked, "Shall I show you my horses, Uncle Cedric?"

"Please," he said. "I have been thinking about them. It isn't right that they are not watered or groomed, now that Billy is not there and your own legs are too weak for you to go."

"They are not," said Nonny and stood up in her bed.

"One ought to have fine strong legs to work in a stable," said Cedric. "Perhaps you can go tomorrow."

THE PERFECT COMPLIMENT

Many years ago, during a gala gathering in Springfield, Illinois, Abraham Lincoln was asked by a young widow to guess her age. And Abe was equal to the task. "I have a good idea," he said. "The trouble is, I don't know whether to make you ten years older on account of your intelligence, or ten years younger on account of your beauty."

—ANNA FAYE.

NEW patent

BY REALSILK

HOSIERY THAT LOOKS, FITS, WEARS BETTER

REALSILK MEANS QUALITY

For easy shopping, Realsilk's smart hosiery and other family apparel are brought to your home or office!

▶ Profitable Sales Opportunities now available for men and women. Write:

REAL SILK HOSIERY MILLS, INC.

Dept. J-18, Indianapolis 6, Indiana

WHAT EVERY

HEARING AID USER SHOULD KNOW!

"CAN I GET a hearing aid without anything in the ear?—without any attachment to the head?—that doesn't need batteries?—without a cord? Can I get an aid I can wear so that NO ONE will know I am hard of hearing?"

A new FREE booklet, "What Every Hearing Aid User Should Know", by the author of a 700-page text on hearing instruments, gives you the FACTS. It tells the truth about hearing aids and will save you many hard earned dollars.

DON'T BUY UNTIL YOU READ IT!—until you know what every hearing aid user should know.

Just put your name and address on a penny postcard and send it to L. A. Watson, Room 43B, 21 North Third Street, Minneapolis 1, Minnesota. Your copy of this valuable booklet will come to you FREE in a PLAIN WRAPPER by return mail.

Advertisement

"No," said Nonny, "today. After lunch." She looked round her and said, "Miss Anderson and Miss Brown must not know."

"No," said he.

"Ingrid can dress me," said the child.

"Ingrid can dress you," he agreed, "and I shall tell Miss Anderson and Miss Brown that you are taking me for a ride in the car."

As she stood up, in her small flannel nightgown, her face was on a level with his. What lovely eyes and delicately arched eyebrows, what rich hair. And what a sudden, strange power in the whole frail figure.

"Because," she said slowly and solemnly, "you will never, never, never tell!"

"Because," he repeated slowly and solemnly, "I shall never, never, never tell!"

Her clear eyes looked into his, gravely, searchingly. Her short life had held disappointments and catastrophes; in this matter she could take no risk. He scanned his mind for an oath which would bind him unconditionally.

"If ever," he said, "I speak a word about the horses, or the boxes, or the stables, to any live soul, may I never paint a decent picture in my life. So help me God."

He talked the matter over with his fellow conspirator. It was arranged that Miss Anderson should have her day off, and that Ingrid should keep Miss Brown occupied.

It was a lovely afternoon of late summer. The air was drowsy with sweetness above the box hedges and the long beds of roses and stock, the big trees' shadows rested lightly and peacefully on the lawns. Nonny, on Cedric's arm, gazed round and up. He wondered whether a child would have any idea of time, and whether she realized that time had passed, and things happened, since she was last in the garden.

"I have sent away Parker," he told her on their way to the garages. "We will go straight up the stair to Mrs. Peavey."

She looked at him as if to ask him how he had come to know the way so well, but said nothing.

On the stair he thought, I am going back ten years on each of these worn old steps. He had reached the days of Zoffany when he crossed Mrs. Peavey's doorstep.

A very small old woman, by the geraniums on the window sill, at the sight of her visitors tried to rise from a big chair, gave it up, grew smaller still and began to cry. Nonny gave her a kind glance, but had no time for speech.

"It is all right, Mrs. Peavey," said Cedric. "Nonny is well again. How are you yourself? And we should like to go into the harness room."

"Oh, I am afraid, sir," said Mrs. Peavey, "that there will be a terrible lot of dust in there. I have not been in the harness room since my little grandson passed away. I had a little grandson, sir."

"I know, Mrs. Peavey," said Cedric. "I am very sorry indeed about him. And it does not matter about the dust."

"Billy put the key on the inside of the door," said Nonny. "He could turn it too. You will put me down in there, Uncle Cedric."

"Yes, Nonny," said Cedric.

He opened the door to the harness room. The smell in there met him even before the light, then the two melted together into a quiet welcome, both humble and dignified.

The room was large and low, it went all through the house and had two windows to the east and two to the west. Everything in it was covered with dust. The old woman's statement that she had not been in here since Billy's death was probably more than true: this delicate layer must date from the old coachman's time.

It was so lovely in here that for a moment he forgot his task and stood quite still. The mellow golden light of the afternoon filled the empty room and turned its bareness and poverty into splendor. The whitewashed walls had the luster of alabaster and the old wooden ceiling the deep gloss of metal.

All along the two walls there were pegs and stands hung with harness and saddlery. There were hames and neckstraps, breastbands and bellybands, bridles, girths and

How A Sanitone Dry Cleaner Helped Her Get Married

In Her Mother's Wedding Gown!

Only the Secret Known to the 1034 Sanitone Dry Cleaners Could Have Restored this Priceless Gown.

APPROVED SANITONE SERVICE

Look for this symbol, the sign of a better kind of dry cleaning, in the classified section of your phone book.

Insist upon better Sanitone Service for all your family's clothes!

You'll be amazed at how all dirt vanishes—colors, patterns, and textures are restored to like-new beauty! Spots are gone! No trace of cleaning odors, even perspiration banished. And the better press lasts longer. Discover this one service that answers all your needs. See your Sanitone Dry Cleaner today!

Sanitone Service Means Super-Skilled Craftsmen Using a New, Better Kind of Dry Cleaning. If your dry cleaner doesn't offer Sanitone Service, have him write to Emery Industries, Inc., Sanitone Dept.

Sanitone

Dry Cleaning Service

EMERY INDUSTRIES, INC. • Cincinnati 27, Ohio

Mfrs. of Stearic & Oleic Acids, Candles, Twitchell Textile Oils, Plasticizers.

"A new job! Thanks to low fares by Greyhound"

—writes Miss Mary A. Payne of Louisville, Ky.

"Recently—when I had the chance for a new job in another city—I hesitated to take it because of the cost of transportation to and from my home town.

"But when I discovered how little it costs by Greyhound bus, my worries ended!

"I have the job now—and I often go home by Greyhound over the weekend and during the holidays."

GREYHOUND

A LOT MORE TRAVEL FOR A LOT LESS MONEY!

Meds Meds Meds

stirrups. There were sets of single and double harness, and harness for tandems and four-in-hand, brass-mounted and plated, with crests on the blinkers. There were hunting saddles, racing saddles and side saddles.

Cedric knew very little about saddlery, he did not remember ever to have ridden in a vehicle drawn by a horse. He looked at the things and saw that they were moldy and cracked, but that they had been beautifully made, from fine leather and metal. Skilled, careful, patient hands had worked at them.

On the other two walls were pictures of horses, single or in groups, and in magnificent attitudes: galloping, jumping fences, gamboling before phaetons, pacing before coaches, carrying ladies with sweeping trains. They were old prints, neatly made like the other objects in the room, and like them faded and flyspecked, some of them with their glass cracked or gone.

He was, he felt, in Billy's kingdom.

In this room people had lived who thought and talked about horses, who knew everything about them, and whose deepest satisfactions and highest ideals in life were in some way connected with horses. Billy himself—the trainer's son and the coachman's grandson, very likely the last descendant of a line of horsemen and horse breeders reaching back into the dark ages—had been the lawful heir to this old and gone horse world of England. A small, silent keeper and custodian of its last, forgotten province or reserve, he had made it rise and come to life gloriously, before the eyes of his friend, the child of the motor age.

Nonny had demanded to be set down on the floor, and had stood still there like Cedric himself, gazing round the room with passionate, tender pride. Now she demanded to be lifted up again, in order to show the guest her pictures. They agreed that she was feeling strong enough to ride on his shoulders, and in this way they slowly made the tour of the place.

"This one, Uncle Cedric," she said, "is The Ranger, who won the Longchamps. This is Boiard, who won the Ascot. This is the Queen's favorite horse, and this is Prince Albert's. This is Robert the Devil, who won the Saint-Leger—and doesn't he look a real devil too? And this one is Gladiateur, who won the Derby! It is all written underneath them."

"But you cannot read, Nonny," said Cedric. "How have you come to know so much about them?"

"Billy could read," said Nonny. "He explained it all to me. . . . And look!" she cried in a sudden burst of delight. "There is the Queen's coronation on the twenty-eighth of June, eighteen-thirty-eight!" She became grave and silent for a moment. "I shall get down," she said. "We will do the coronation procession today, you and me."

Cedric looked all round the room. There was no cupboard or chest anywhere, only, in a corner, a basket with clothespins and some empty bottles. He had believed that he was near his goal; now he stood on the bare floor feeling sadly clumsy and grown-up. What objects up here, he wondered, had been animated and exalted by Billy's magic wand, so as to make up a royal procession?

There was a grandfather's chair in the room, with its stuffing coming out through the ragged horsehair covering.

"Look, Nonny," he said. "I shall set you in the chair. Then you just order me about."

"No," said Nonny, "I won't sit in chair."

"And why not?" he said. "If we are t have a race, it will be the judge's chair, an you will be the judge. And if we are to hav the coronation cortege ——" He stoppe not quite certain just what Nonny woul then be.

"I shall be God," said Nonny in a clea voice, "looking down at it. God looks dow at all horses, Billy said."

She seemed very small in the big chair, bu she sat in it as upon a throne.

"Open the stable door," she said, "an let out the horses on the floor!"

"Yes, my dear," he said. At randon afraid of doing anything wrong, he too down a picture, and set it against the wal

"No," said Nonny, "not Ormond, Unc Cedric. That one: Zeodone, who won th Grand National!"

Upon the wall was Zeodone, on her hin legs and hung onto by a valiant groom.

Nonny said, "You would never have foun the stable on your own, would you, Unc Cedric? Billy found all on his own. And h had got to stand o the side saddle on th saddle horse to reac it."

As the picture wa taken down, a squa hole appeared in th wall. It looked dark an deep.

"They are in there, said Nonny.

In the niche the was a pile of large an small boxes. He too them down one by on and when he had take down three or four h began to guess what i was he was handlin

The boxes were a prettily made in mo rocco or velvet, wit golden clasps to then but they were mold and cracked. He wa told to place them all o the floor and then t open them. They wer lined with faded satin But the jewelry on th decaying fabric shone clean and radiant, in hundreddazzlingsmiles

"Have you ever seen such shiny horses, Un cle Cedric?" asked Nonny joyfully. "Bill and I washed them with a small sponge and groomed them with a wash leather tha has been Billy's grandfather's. When yo put them out one by one, in a row, the go from that wall to that."

There were rings set with diamonds, emer alds, rubies and sapphires. There wer brooches made like bouquets or flowe baskets, arabesques or stars. There wer bracelets, pendants and clasps. Five boxe contained necklaces or big ornaments, th stones of which for some purpose had bee taken out of their settings and were lyin scattered or in heaps. The strings of tw pearl collars, one very long and one shorte and made from incredibly large and even roseate pearls, had both been broken or hac rotted away—the pearls rolled gently agains one another as the box was moved. Ther were pearl earrings and long diamond ear drops. There were three tiaras, the biggest o them all in diamonds, and very regal.

The radiance of the cut stones, and th soft gleam of the pearls, filled the artist' heart with deep and humble adoration, wit simple gratitude for the beautiful things o this world. He stood immovable for a while gazing at the display, picking out first one then another object as the loveliest.

Then he thought, So that is it. And Go only knows what has happened here. Did th lovers, after having prepared their flight s carefully, at the last moment have to hurr away to escape the husband's revenge? Or di Great-great-great-grandpapa George come upo

WITH THE CHILDREN

From a five-year-old: "I'd like a real, live wrist watch—one with a pulse."

While I was busy washing paint our ten-year-old son said: "I hate to see you working so hard, mommy. I'll do that hard work and you go out to the kitchen and relax—bake some cookies or something easy like that. Do something that's fun and shows."

"You're not always nice but you are fair and you'll listen, so even if I had a choice of mothers, I'd pick you. Some children have mothers who won't listen."

"Have you noticed that grown-ups who like dogs usually like boys?"

"There are two kinds of mothers. The ones who always think their own children are perfect and the mothers who can see both sides of trouble."

Our ten-year-old, getting part-conscious, looking in the mirror after combing his hair, said with amazement, "Golly, I look like the pictures you have of me!"

—KATHRYN COFFEY GLENNON.

WITH BAND FROM A CAN OF VANiSH

You'll sing praises of this amazing, 9-inch utility brush of 101 uses! Electro-static attraction of washable, all-plastic bristles lifts out dirt, dust, lint, dog hairs, from upholstery, auto seats, clothing. Strong wood handle. Just send red band from can of VANiSH toilet bowl cleaner, with your name, address, and 35¢, to Dept. L, Judson-Dunaway Corp., Dover, N. H.

Double-Action VANISH makes bathrooms fragrant as it cleans Flick of Finger opens New EXPELLID Top.

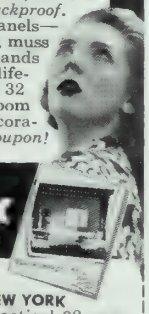
Mortite KEEPS THE COLD OUT

SAVES FUEL AND MONEY



Moldlike and pliable, Mortite is the perfect weatherstripping. Goes on in a jiffy without tools or tacks. Keeps out wind, dust, cold. Anyone can press it around windows, doors, transoms, baseboards. Weatherstrip whole window for 29¢—costs even less if you use the larger packages. Get Mortite at stores or write for circular. J. W. Mortell Co., 555 Church St., Kankakee, Ill.

CEILINGS CRACKED?

Plaster Loose — Ready to Fall?

No need to re-plaster! Send for our booklet! In just a day or two, have a beautiful ceiling—forever crackproof. Apply Upson Kuver-Krak Panels—right over old plaster. No fuss, muss or delay. Hundreds of thousands of Upson Ceilings giving lifetime satisfaction. Practical 32 page full color booklet shows room arrangements by leading decorators. Sent postpaid—10c. Use coupon!

UPSON KUVER-KRAK PANELS

THE UPSON COMPANY
310 UPSON POINT, LOCKPORT, NEW YORK
I enclose 10c. Send me your practical 32 page idea booklet, "New Interiors For Old."
Name _____
Street _____
City _____ State _____

them before they got off, and am I likely to find skeletons under the floor if I look for them?

Nonny in her chair was content with the impression which her stables were making on her young uncle's mind. She gave him a minute for dumb admiration, then she told him to set to work.

Obedient to her orders, he went down on hands and knees and arranged the cortege. The long procession was to wind from the wall to her chair, and he was to begin by the head of it. While it took shape under his hands it grew more and more glorious, for the Queen's own coach made its appearance almost at the end.

First of all and before anybody else came Mr. Lee, High Constable of Westminster. Mr. Lee was a tall seal carved in agate, cut with the family crest. He could stand up, and bore himself with great dignity.

Then came a squadron of the Life Guards, in fine rows of smaller rubies from the necklace.

Then followed the carriages of the royal family, sparkling bracelets with teams of two or four rings to each; the last of them was the coach of the Queen's mother, which was made from a tiara, and had a team of six rings. The Queen's mother herself, a very large pearl made as a pendant, leaned back gracefully against the inner curve of the tiara.

Next came the mounted band of a regiment of the Household Brigade, all brooches.

The round, roseate pearls of the shorter necklace followed; they were the Queen's forty-eight Watermen.

THEN came a superior squadron of the Life Guards, the bigger rubies of the necklace, and after them the Royal Huntsmen, in green, from the emerald necklace and ornaments. The Yeomen of the Guards, on white horses, were all of them diamonds.

And then, at last, came Her Majesty's coach, the big, luminous tiara, drawn by six pairs of eardrops, the smallest in front, the very long and heavy pair nearest to the coach.

"Now," said Nonny, "put the Queen in her coach. Isn't she beautiful, all in white? It is really me, you know. Billy said that it was really me!"

With great care Cedric placed the one huge diamond in the center of the half circle formed by the tiara. He remembered that he had heard about this diamond, bought a hundred years ago from a maharaja.

Behind the coach marched a regiment of pearls from the long necklace.

"Get up, Uncle Cedric," said Nonny, "and look at the procession!"

He rose, tried to dust his trousers, gave it up, and looked at the procession. Nonny's gaze followed his; her face was calm and rosy with happiness.

"Say something about it now, Uncle Cedric," she said, her voice soft with delight.

"It is like Aladdin's cave, Nonny," he said.

At the sound of his own words he remembered his sister, and their talk at the hotel, and became thoughtful. One big ruby from Holland, he said to himself, to be set in a bracelet. And then all this. All this in her own harness room. Alas, Annabelle!

"Nay, Uncle Cedric," said Nonny, "you should not say that it is like Aladdin's cave. When it is really exactly like a coronation."

"My dear," said he, "that is what I did say. It is really a coronation. That is what makes it so valuable, and so fascinating. But some people might say that it was a little like Aladdin's cave."

"Oh, yes," said Nonny. After a while she added, "When we have finished, you will put them all back, and put Zeodone up to be the stable door, won't you, Uncle Cedric? So that nobody can find them."

"Yes, Nonny," he said. "And won't it be, then," he added after a moment, "quite as if Billy was still here?"

She was silent for a while. "No," she said at last, "not quite. But in a little while ——" She stopped for a second or two. "In a little while," she said in a steady, sonorous voice, "I shall be perfectly well. Then Billy will come, and he and I shall be together again. For good." THE END

"... and it's the only Koylon Chair in the House!"

Everybody enjoys the amazing comfort of Koylon Foam. It's so closely grained it gives years of luxurious service. Always smooth and neat—never needs fluffing. Ask for Koylon upholstery, in fine furniture.

U.S. Koylon® FOAM Cushioning

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
ROCKEFELLER CENTER • NEW YORK

Nothing Flatters Windows Like Cloth WINDOW SHADES!

No other kind of window covering can match the quiet beauty . . . the clean, crisp trimness . . . of straight-hanging, smooth-rolling Joanna Western CLOTH Window Shades. And they wear for years—cost you less. See the window shade "Quality Demonstrator" at your dealer's. It shows you the difference between CLOTH window shades and substitutes.

Joanna Western Cloth Window Shades

JOANNA WESTERN MILLS CO. • CHICAGO
WILLIAM VOLKER & CO. • Western Distributors

SEND FOR Shillcraft Readicut RUG BOOK

Get our colorful Rug Book. Discover how easily you can make a beautiful Shillcraft Readicut Rug for yourself or as a gift. No bulky frame or heavy loom needed! No winding, sizing or trimming. Our Readicut 100% English Virgin Wool Yarn is PRE-CUT, ready to use. Patented Latchet Hook ties yarn securely on sturdy English Canvas will not ravel or pull-out; can be vacuumed or cleaned with safety.

Save 25% to 35% Buy from Importer

$5 starts you . . . when you purchase unit-by-unit. Or, buy the COMPLETE Shillcraft Rug Outfit at one time for greater savings! Full information and prices with illustrated Rug Book. Fill in coupon today.

Shillcraft Dept. L, 106 Hopkins Place Baltimore 1, Maryland

Please send me your Shillcraft Readicut Rug Book, showing 20 distinctive rugs in full-color. I enclose 25c (in coin) for book and postage.

NAME .....
(Please Print)
ADDRESS .....
CITY ..... ZONE .... STATE .....

Do you keep your bedroom behind closed doors?

If only that bedroom were as beautiful as the rest of your home . . . what a wonderful addition it would be! Make Mengel Furniture your choice for your bedroom now, and you'll make your whole house more gracious.

THE WINTHROP GROUP in solid mahogany . . . and in truest Colonial spirit. Graceful, charming, and, as for generations past, in admirable taste. Rubbed and polished until the wood gleams warm . . . says "this is the finest, this is solid, solid mahogany."

Open the Door to Compliments . . . . . with MENGEL FURNITURE

If what your guests say makes a difference to you . . . choose Mengel Bedroom Furniture. It wins compliments from everybody. Such beautiful styling! Such a fine gleaming finish! Every piece of Mengel Furniture speaks openly of your good taste . . . but keeps your budget a secret.

Permanized MENGEL Furniture

Look closely, look twice . . .
here's furniture you could look at forever!

IVORY BISQUE OAK . . . a functional modern group . . . everything its name implies, and more. Smooth as ivory in line, creamy as bisque in color, sturdy as an oak in construction . . . to give new efficiency and new charm to your bedroom.

THE MENGEL COMPANY

Growers and processors of timber · manufacturers of fine furniture · veneers · plywood · flush doors · corrugated containers · kitchen cabinets and sliding-door wall closets · largest manufacturer of hardwood products in America.

FURNITURE DIVISION · LOUISVILLE 1, KENTUCKY

30 MENGEL DAYS

Sept. 10 to Oct. 13. A special nation-wide event . . . and a specially eventful time to see your Mengel dealer.

I COULDN'T COMPETE WITH MY MOTHER

(Continued from Page 54)

, I weighed 198. Now I weigh 118, which ctly mommy's weight. She gives me all d clothes, but I look bigger because I big shoulders and big bones. My waist- hough, is smaller than hers—23 inches. eople ask me what diet I followed. No diet has ever yet been written for isy woman, and I am busy sixteen hours . Three vitamin pills and a hearty din- night are all that I live on. I seem to lost my great need for food. I am con- d that mine was psychological fat and I got fat because my childhood was able."

ria was born in Berlin, Germany. Her was Rudolf Sieber, a well-known Ger- film director. Her mother was a night- nd musical-comedy star. They lived in sant, sunny apartment, and every day Sieber played with her friends in the nearby. Her upbringing was European, meant she was taught that the man the ruler of the family and that a n's career should be her home and en.

d then Marlene Dietrich appeared in a an film, The Blue Angel. She became a tion as the highly charged entertainer the fabulous legs and the husky voice. Maria was five years old, her mother ted for Hollywood to make Morocco, the child remained in Berlin with her r and her grandmother. She did not see other again for one whole year.

Mother made it fun. She would send me dings instead of letters, once a week. I till hear her voice tell- me about California what she was doing how happy she would see me again. And in one record she she was coming for

She came at the end e year, and we sailed America. I loved Cal- ia immediately because it was so sunny. ived in a wonderful house that was sur- ded by trees, like a park. At first it ed like a child's paradise. I had lots nimals—a German shepherd dog, a key, several cats, two sheep, a parrot, an aviary that held two hundred birds. I beautiful clothes to wear, a swimming to swim in and a motorcar to ride around Mother let me appear in two pictures with The Scarlet Empress and The Garden of ."

he house seemed to have been built for es and Dietrich gave them once or twice ek. Maria, in hand-sewn organdy, would n the stairs while the orchestra played beautiful people dressed in their beauti- est danced past her. It was a city where yone was rich and beautiful, and her er was the most beautiful of all.

UT a child grows lonely living in a ma- world," Maria said. "I had no friends own age. Mother received many kidnap- hreats, so she never sent me to school in fornia. Instead I was taught at home by tutors, one English, one German. From to twelve, I had lessons, and lessons n from one to three-thirty, sometimes in house, sometimes in the garden under the s. Every afternoon I had a tennis lesson piano lesson or a dancing lesson or a mming lesson, all at home. I was never nitted to leave the grounds."

nce, shortly after the Lindbergh kidnap- when Maria was about ten years old, an al kidnaping attempt was made. A lad- was found outside her window, and r demanding that money be left in a er bag, or Maria would be stolen. Fifteen men hid in the bushes, awaiting the kid- ers' car. Her father carried a gun in his , and Maria was put to bed on the floor of maid's room so that if shots were fired she ld not be hurt. The kidnapers never e. But from that time on all the windows e barred, and her life was filled with body- guards. They remained with her the rest of her childhood, two by day and two by night, guarding the front and rear entrances of the house, and one to watch her.

"It was a routine accepted in Hollywood," Maria said. "Lots of children had body- guards—Gloria Swanson's children; Mary Barthelmess, the daughter of Richard Bar- thelmess; and others. I was driven to parties with a bodyguard. I went horseback rid- ing with a bodyguard and to moving pic- tures with a bodyguard. They were kind, fatherly men and the only friends I had."

IN addition to the five bodyguards and the two tutors, Maria had governesses, maids and chauffeurs. But she was denied privileges that other girls take for granted. The right to see her mother whenever she wished, the right to make friends, to be herself instead of her famous mother's little girl who had to look better, dress better, behave better than other little girls. Early in her life, the Siebers "had an understanding" and separated. Maria remained with her mother in Cali- fornia, while her father moved to New York.

"Mother and I were never like mother and daughter," Maria told me with pride. "We were friends. Even when I was a child she would discuss her clothes with me. I was per- mitted into the studio. I read her scripts and went over the sketches of her costumes. Her friends were my friends: Nelly Manley, her hairdresser; Clive Brook; Josef von Stern- berg; Brian Aherne, whom I loved best of all because he would discuss Shakespeare with me. As I matured, I was often taken for her sister, an older sister because I was so heavy. I have al- ways felt the older one in our relationship, to this day.

"I resented the fact that we could not be together more. When mother was working, she would go to bed at eight o'clock. When she was not working, she would go out evenings, dressed in jewels and furs. I just wanted her to stand there, shimmering and perfumed, only for me, but I knew she was dress- ing for someone else. She would tuck me in, kiss me, and hurry, hurry. I would cry my- self to sleep in the dark. I swore that if I had children I'd never leave them alone at night. Of course I wasn't exactly alone in the midst of all those people. But I knew they were simply hired to take care of me, and I dis- liked them. They had no meaning for me. I never told mother that I was unhappy. Not until I was a young woman did I ever discuss anything like that with her.

"Mother couldn't help herself. A parent always gets blamed by children. You can't vindicate yourself until they experience the same things themselves. I am proud that I can walk out any time of day or night with- out sneaking away or bribing my children. They don't need my constant presence to know I love them. I brought them up as free human beings who can't ever be dependent upon anyone from necessity.

"Once when Michael, our older son, was six months old, he cried because I left the room. 'A child must learn to live by himself,' I told him. 'All human beings are lonely. You'll have to learn to live a lonely life.' I'm sure he understood from the tone of my voice that I was treating him like a reasonable human being. Looking back on myself now, I'd say that I was unreasonable and emo- tionally insecure. I lived for myself, by my- self, and never let my emotions attach to anything or anybody."

The story of Maria's obesity dates back to those early years she spent in her palatial prison. Whether because of loneliness or boredom or frustration, she found solace in eating—cakes, ice-cream sodas, sandwiches, a taste of everything prepared in her mother's gourmet kitchen. Slowly, despite the tennis and the swimming, she began putting

A modest person seldom fails to gain the good will of those he converses with, because nobody envies a man who does not appear to be pleased with himself. —STEELE.

Imagine . . . a candlewick bedspread that is virtually lint-free!

The Radiant Heiress is a joy to own. . . . a lavishly tufted bedspread of new-found brilliance without the usual lint. You can't find another like it! MORGAN-JONES fashions it by weaving special rayon tufts into a sturdy cotton background. These little pompoms are of a new "Avisco" crimped fibre—lustrous—and "springy", like wool. They come right back into shape after laundering. Only MORGAN-JONES makes the lovely RADIANT HEIRESS with the lint-free feature. Ask for it by name. In white and many lovely decorator colors.

MORGAN-JONES, INC.
58 Worth Street, New York 13

Notice your skin looking dry?

after 25

drying skin

begins to show!

IT'S NOTICEABLE the way skin often begins to look drier after 25.

At about this age, the natural oil that keeps skin soft and fresh starts decreasing.

You need a special replacer to offset this drying out. Use this special Pond's lanolin-rich Dry Skin Cream.

See below how this quick un-drier works to soften and repair common dry skin troubles. Begin to get this wonderful help—now!

That matronly-looking sagging starts to show along your chin-line.

To Tone Up Chin-Line—Use thumb and first finger of each hand and "pinch along" from point of chin to up in front of your ears, with lanolin-rich Pond's Dry Skin Cream. This treatment brings circulation up, and gives this dry skin the lift and rich lubrication it needs.

Thread-like dry lines on Forehead dig little furrows to age you.

To Help Erase — Circle lanolin-rich Pond's Dry Skin Cream firmly all over your dry forehead skin. Pay special attention to skin at temples. A special emulsifier in this cream gives dry skin extra softening help.

start using Pond's Dry Skin Cream today.

Rich in lanolin, it is homogenized and has a special softening emulsifier.

At night: work this rich cream in generously. By day: use very lightly under make-up. Get your jar of Pond's Dry Skin Cream right away! 98¢, 55¢, 31¢, 15¢ (all plus tax).

MRS. NICHOLAS R. DU PONT says... "The nicest cream I know for softening dry skin is Pond's Dry Skin Cream." on weight when she was about ten years old. In a city like Hollywood, where slenderness is an economic necessity, she felt like a monstrosity. Her mother dressed her in dark colors to make her look thinner. The parties that used to be such fun for her were torture now; dressed in expensive black-velvet dresses, she would hide where none of the guests could see her.

"The fatter I got the more I suffered and the more I suffered the more I ate," she told me. "Mother tried to curb me. She took me to a metabolic clinic, to doctors who prescribed stringent diets. But you know how children are. I couldn't stick to a diet. Sometimes I would impose literal starvation on myself for three days. Then I would break down and gorge myself. After a while I felt I would never be thin and I grew utterly defeated. I decided then that I would have to be a mental woman who would rely on brains rather than physical appeal."

Maria, as an adolescent, withdrew into the world of books. She had a morbid interest in cancer, tuberculosis and brain diseases; she read Cushing's book on brain surgery, books on psychoanalysis, and any other medical books she could find. Suicide fascinated her, and once, sitting in a European café with her mother, she wrote this macabre little poem which her mother proudly showed to Ernest Hemingway and Dorothy Parker:

A man who was committing suicide
Said, as his feet left the earth
Which had grown too small for him:
"How soon shall I regret this?"

In the years that followed, Maria lived in many places, but no place was home—New York, where her father worked dubbing in sound for foreign films; France, England, Germany. She spent at least half of every year in Europe, where her mother felt that she was safe from kidnapers. In Switzerland, she attended Brilliamont, a school for the daughters of the international rich, and kept up a correspondence with the bodyguards who had sheltered her. They sent her news of California, and great jars of peanut butter which she devoured.

In August, 1939, just before the outbreak of World War II, she returned to America unwillingly, a sullen, overweight girl of fifteen with no clear idea of who she was or what she wanted to study. Medicine, perhaps? Or writing? She wound up at the dramatic academy of Max Reinhardt in California (it later became the Geller Workshop) studying acting. And for reasons that had nothing to do with love of theater:

"I DID it as a shock treatment, because I knew what the effect would be on a public stage of this big, heavy girl who was Dietrich's daughter. As a student and later as a teacher, I appeared in or directed forty-nine plays, some of them classics, some of them junk. I deliberately chose the parts of old women, and ugly women with warts and thick noses. Had I been thin, I probably would not have had such varied experience.

"Also because it was a challenge, I played roles that are commonly associated with slender, irresistible women. Hedda Gabler, when I weighed a hundred and eighty pounds. Regina in The Little Foxes when I was a hundred and ninety. I was known as 'an up-and-coming young actress, overweight, but ——' After I left the Geller Workshop I could have had all the picture offers I wanted—as Dietrich's daughter.

"When people say to me that it must be a great asset to be the daughter of Marlene Dietrich, I could laugh. Or cry. Everyplace I went I was compared with mother. My dates, sooner or later, would ask 'When may I meet your mother?' Nobody wanted to find out whether I had a character or a talent of my own. Once I went to see a producer who thought he could use me. I recited passages from Romeo and Juliet for him; I did scenes from Macbeth. And what did he say? He said, 'Lift your skirts a little higher, honey. I want to see if you have your mother's legs.' Of course I haven't. Nobody has.

"Interviewers came to see me. Why? I never could tell whether it was because I was a good actress or because I was the daughter of one. Finally, I changed my name from Sieber to Manton. I did radio work with Orson Welles. I played on the road and on Broadway. I went overseas with the USO. I taught dramatics. I would have scrubbed floors for my independence. Mother didn't interfere in any way, though she wanted me to have an easy life. She has always loved to lavish gifts on me. But I wanted to support myself."

Of all the jobs she tried, teaching gave her the greatest satisfaction.

In the fall of 1946, she was coaching a student performance of Peer Gynt at Fordham University in the Bronx. There she met an attractive, twenty-five-year-old American of Italian descent, Bill Riva, who was an instructor of scenic design at the university. He was tall, dark and very thin. They found out that by some magic they both had the same ideas about the theater, food, music, decoration, people. Bill thought that heavy women were attractive—he seemed unimpressed by the fact that she was Marlene's daughter and never asked when he might meet her mother.

Maria did not want an engagement ring. Bill bought plain, wide wedding bands for the two of them and on July 4, 1947, they were married. Dietrich's gift to them was an electric refrigerator. It was what Maria wanted. Their first home was a cold-water flat at 1118 Third Avenue, with the Third Avenue El running past their windows, and the street alive with noisy traffic.

"The place was ankle-deep in filth. The window sills were caked with tallow. We scrubbed it and scraped it. We painted it and made it beautiful. At night we used to take walks and come home with things other people had thrown out—chairs, old tables, pieces of fine wood. A year after we moved in, Michael was born, an eight-and-a-half-pound baby. We lived there until he was one year old."

Her present home is nothing like the first. It is a handsome, four-story private house off Park Avenue in the East 90's, for which her mother paid $43,000—a fact which Maria is so sensitive about that I had to dig up the information myself in real-estate records. Its garden and its exquisite interiors, Maria told me, were designed by her husband; they did much of the work themselves.

Imagination begins at the front door, which is glass, covered with bleached ferns and coated with translucent plastic. A white-painted hall, hung with framed butterflies, leads into the kitchen where the Rivas eat and entertain. It is copper-hooded, and bright with copper utensils. Beyond it is the garden where, weather permitting, Maria plays with her sons, John Michael, three, and John Peter, one.

Bill's study on the second floor rear is ed with green light reflected from the ga en. The living room at the front is a wide r m, veiled from ceiling to floor with beige he- atrical gauze. Maria pulled a cord an he room was enveloped in misty folds. " ll's idea."

The master bedroom on the third floo as painted white, with blue ceiling, by B in two days, his wife boasted. In the win it will be a dark, warm color, "because re theater folk and we like to change our tings." At the end of an enormous dres g- room closet a one-way glass was set int ho wall looking into the nursery. Maria be- oned to me to come see her plump, prec u- pied Peter playing in his crib. Michael as asleep upstairs.

"OUR bedroom is the family mee ng place," Maria said. "We have Sunday br k- fasts here, I study my scripts here and ll and I come here to talk. On the top floo re Michael's bedroom and another room at will be Peter's when he is old enough. By at time I hope we'll have a new occupant fo he nursery. I want five sons, no daughters. We have chosen the names for them: J n Christopher, John David and William r. John was the name of Bill's father, an ve use it the way Europeans do."

The Rivas keep house with the help of p one maid, Ollie, a young colored wo an whom they pay the prevailing rate of $ an hour.

"Ollie has sort of adopted our househo Maria said. "She talks about 'my kitch n' and 'my boys.' Ollie takes over when I g rehearsals and she leaves when I get ba Maria laughed. "You wanted to know I got thin. Let me tell you. The children up at seven o'clock. So do I, though I o wake up at five-thirty, which is the h mommy used to get up. Bill and I have co at seven-thirty. Then I make cereal, eggs, con and toast for the children, wash th change them, dress them, dress myself, things for the laundry and the cleaner, n ning up and down stairs a dozen times.

"Then we play in the garden until l downtown to rehearsals, some days at o'clock, some days at noon, some days not two P.M. If I have a free hour I see the d tist, the hairdresser, shop, market, give in views, try on costumes. Rehearsals end six, and I get back in time to give the c dren their dinner and put them to bed.

"I love to cook and I cook dinner for self and Bill. We eat late—eight-thirty nine o'clock. We don't save our best sil and china and cooking for company, wh would be the same as saying that I value guests more than my husband. Our chin English Spode and Meissen ware. Whe

(Continued on Page 266)

"Isn't dinner ready? What have you been doing all afternoon—playing jacks?"

. . . the joy of giving is an act of love . . . the sweetest of all human traits. And that is why we always wish our gifts were lovelier than they are . . . perfect for the person . . . splendid in quality and beauty.

There is one thing that wears finely as a friend, and is touched with the lustre of tribute . . . one thing everyone needs from life's beginning to its end . . . one thing as practical as it is beautiful . . . a Blanket by St. Marys. It is warmth. it is quality. it is strength. For years on end it is comfort against the darkness and the cold.

Far less costly than the smallest jewel, for more than a century the name has stood as top treasure in the world of warmth.

St. Marys

ST. MARYS BLANKETS

ST. MARYS
OHIO

Marys Blankets • St. Marys Baby Blankets • St. Marys Robes • St. Marys Fabrics • Three Weavers Handwoven Throws

"MY UNCLE SAM SAYS YOU'RE A BIG HELP"

"Your Uncle Sam is right, honey. He has a big job protecting the Nation these days and the telephone is helping him do it."

"IS THAT WHAT KEEPS
YOU SO BUSY?"

"It sure is. Every day there are thousands and thousands of urgent calls from the Army and Navy and from all the plants which are rushing out the guns and the tanks and the airplanes for our men in service."

"DOES IT HELP ME
AT HOME, TOO?"

"Yes, indeed. The telephone is a vital link in Civilian Defense. Day and night, in every part of the country it is helping to keep the country safe and secure."

BELL TELEPHONE SYSTEM

(Continued from Page 264)

was a child it was always my dream to have Meissen ware like my grandmother's, white with light blue. When mother was abroad last, she got me a complete set.

"We don't decorate the table with flowers—only with food. And we don't drink cocktails—only wine. We start with hors d'oeuvres or soup. Then meat. We have wiener schnitzel often because Bill loves it. I always serve it with chopped parsley on lemon slices, always drop a big pat of butter on the mashed potatoes and cook the peas with fresh mint. Then we have a luscious company dessert. Such a meal would have put tons on me once. Now it doesn't add an ounce."

Ollie sleeps out. Maria can't tolerate having another person around nights, besides the family, she told me. I wonder whether this might be a reaction to the houseful of servants that attended her childhood.

"It's because Bill and I are still on our honeymoon," she said. "We don't like to go out much. In the four years of our marriage we've dined in restaurants exactly four times. We have friends in, or read or look at television. I love watching it just as much as being in it. If we go visiting, mommy often baby-sits for me. Mostly we stay at home and we love it.

"Mine is the perfect marriage—my husband is one of those rare people who are completely honest. I got heartless flattery as a child and I have a distrust of compliments. In our entire life together Bill has never said anything for effect or anything that was not completely true. It is difficult to live with, but wonderfully refreshing. To be loved by that kind of man is the most marvelous thing in the world. You know exactly where you stand."

Motherhood is a career for which especial talents are required. Very few women know how to bring up children properly. If you don't believe it, look at the difference between our angelic offspring and the little imps next door.

—MYRTLE REED:
Threads of Grey and Gold
(G. P. Putnam's Sons).

I asked Maria about her short-lived first marriage in 1943 (they were divorced in June, 1946) to Dean Goodman, a Hollywood drama critic, and she froze. "I don't want to talk about it," she said briefly. "It never existed. I consider my marriage to Bill my first and only marriage."

When I first met Maria, seven years ago, she had insisted that she would never go on with a career, no matter how successful, if she had children: she would not want them to have a celebrity for a mother. Yet here she was, with a job that would make her known to millions. Had she had a change of heart? She shook her head.

"I still don't want them to be known as the children of a celebrity. I would not want to overshadow Bill, either. He is much more talented than I. I have a horror of that phrase 'Are you the husband of ——'

"I like my work, but I don't love it. I went back to work because of money. But if I had to choose between doing a television show and staying home to make soup, I'd make soup. It was Bill who suggested that I go back to work. A university professor doesn't make much money, you know. So when Bill said, 'I'd like you to. It would be fun for you, and you can put your money away for extras like a country house or a trip to Europe or good schools for the children,' it gave me a purpose.

"It is healthy for a woman to work because of economic necessity, but unhealthy if she needs it as a way of life. There are many young actresses who live, eat and exist only for the theater. I have no patience with that. It angers me."

The vehemence of her protest surprised me: she is listed in the telephone directory as "Riva, Maria, Actress"; she refers to herself and her husband proudly as "theater folk"; she has lived all her life in the atmosphere of the theater. There seemed to be such a sharp conflict between herself as an actress and herself as a mother that I wondered whether she did not feel guilty about pursuing a career.

"I love the theater and I'll always l whether I'm an actress or not," she said. I would feel guilty if I centered my futu a human being around the theater. greater satisfaction can a woman have healthy children and a husband who is h with his home and his wife? Even the successful play can't give that kind o fillment."

Maria does not want her career to bu her children in any way. She will nc them be photographed or made to feel spicuous. Their freedom to be themsel precious to her. They may do any they want or eat anything they want, w reason; Mike went on a five-day choc orgy and now it holds no attraction for He may watch television whenever he wi so he doesn't listen to it excessively. Pet one year, feeds himself with a knife and as Michael did. They may leave wha they wish on their plates.

HER mother respects Maria's methods never tries to impose her own ideas: thinks I am doing a better job than sh with me." Dietrich sees her grandchil often. They call her "Massy," a name Mike invented.

She takes them to Central Park Ollie is too busy. She baby-sits wher she is needed; one Saturday when Ollie unable to come, Maria telephoned her m at Elizabeth Arden's, where she was h shampooed, and twenty minutes later trich arrived, her wet hair wrapped in a t

Maria sees or talk her mother every "She never comes u I ask her, but I ask often because I lov see her," Maria told Dietrich camphors daughter's closets, l ders the baby's hand- wool soakers so that stay soft and fluffy; w Maria has guests a a television show, mother loves to cook serve the food.

"Mother enjoys cooking for Bill and She and Bill are very fond of each other. abominates kidneys and we never have th But mother cooked them one night and raved about them. I said, 'You never them when I make them,' and he answe 'Sure, but the way your mother makes th is fine.'

"Mother thinks I am a great cook, a g mother and a great dramatic actress as w Maria smiled. "She comes to the st whenever I ask her to and she gives me vice whenever I ask for it. But she ne volunteers it."

I was at the CBS television studio Grand Central Station one afternoon w Maria was rehearsing. The play had to with a gangster and his female assist played by Maria, who looked very pre in black slacks and a casual white blo even though she wore no make-up.

During a lull in the rehearsal, Dietrich rived on the highest of heels, dressed f cocktail party in black starched chiffon, w a brown mink stole flowing around her. M introduced her mother to me and then t withdrew into a corner of the studio. middle-aged woman and the young seemed to get lost in each other, exclud everyone else. Maria crouched on haunches. So did Marlene, her wide sk and her mink stole settling like a pool aro her. They talked earnestly, apparently ab make-up, for Dietrich held her daught face in her two hands and studied it clos

Then the rehearsal was resumed, Dietrich and I went up into the control ro to watch. Maria was playing a scene with gangster's henchman.

"You Joe's girl?" the man asked.

Maria said curtly, "I'm my mother's gi

In the control room there was a flurry laughter, and then Marlene Dietrich's voi determined, humorous, fiercely possessi "That's right, honey," she murmured.

THE E

NOVEMBER, 1951

Ladies' Home
JOURNAL
The Magazine Women Believe In BURLINGAME PUBLIC LIBRARY Burlingame, Calif.

25 CENTS

"There are some women, Philip, good women, very possibly, who through no fault of their own impel disaster. Whatever happens, it is tragedy."

DAPHNE DU MAURIER

MY COUSIN RACHEL

beginning in this issue

POLITICAL PILGRIM'S PROGRESS—What a woman can do about politics and how to begin

PARIS FASHIONS—The Journal reports important new trends for you

For every woman who leads a double life...

COMPETENT YOU. You whip up rave-winning dinners, breeze through stacks of dishes, tub your fine things, too. But your hands don't get rough and red—for you keep Trushay by your kitchen sink and smooth on its fragrant creaminess before each washing task. Then when HE is around, it's . . .

CAPTIVATING YOU—with hands so soft and appealing, he can't resist holding them. Yes, "beforehand" Trushay guards hands even in hot, sudsy water. But that's only part of its magic. Trushay is such a wondrous, quick skin softener—you'll want a bottle on your dressing table as well as in your kitchen.

TRUSHAY... the "beforehand" lotion... guards your hands even in hot, sudsy water!

And OH, what a fabulous skin softener! Trushay's oil-richness gives dry skin a velvety feel. Softens and smooths elbows, heels, knees.

A "lovelier-you" powder base! So flattering—so natural looking—the way your Trushay-based make-up clings! No cakey, gummy look!

Such soothing relief for chapped skin! Cracked, sore skin feels better—looks better—the moment Trushay's soothing oils go to work.

A PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

BUY TWO BOTTLES OF TRUSHAY—ONE FOR YOUR KITCHEN AND ONE FOR YOUR DRESSING TABLE

"CUT-RITE" REG. U.S. PAT. OF

Waxed through and through ... pliable, folds without splitting ... cutting edge tears easily

One thing is sure—you won't waste any of Sunday's expensive roast and vegetables if you wrap what's left in Cut-Rite. Cut-Rite is waxed all the way through to keep out the drying air that robs them of freshness and flavor.

So often you use just half a lemon, half an onion. And here's where Cut-Rite stars. Wrap the other half in this extra-heavy waxed paper and tuck it in a corner of your icebox. It stays juicy for the next time. And a double plus, strong odors don't seep through either!

Cut-Rite's famous cutting edge tears across quic and clean. You can always tear off exactly wh you need the first time. Never any waste. Keep handy to save food, refrigerator space and dis washing. A Scott Paper Product.

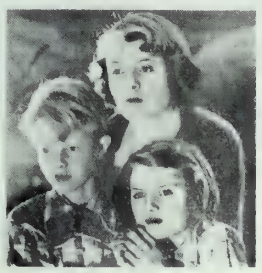
If you want to be sure-wrap it in Cut-Rite

Journal

Contents

VOL. LXVIII NO. 11

November 1951



Journalities

Daphne du Maurier: Lady Browning.

Sir Frederick A. M. Browning.

Christian, Flavia and Tessa.

For many readers—especially those who remember Rebecca—"By DAPHNE DU MAURIER" means an engrossing story will follow. These and all others will soon be enthralled with her new novel, My Cousin Rachel, beginning on Page 38. Daphne's grandfather, George du Maurier, was the artist and author of Trilby. Her husband, a lieutenant general in World War II, is exchequer of Princess Elizabeth's household in Clarence House. She has three children and her age is no secret. She writes: "In 1921, when I was fourteen, I was sick with love for the actor Basil Rathbone."

"Menabilly"—the Browning home.

Novel Condensation Complete in This Issue

Too Young to Marry . . . Sherrill Lee 12

Stories

My Cousin Rachel (First part of five) . . . Daphne du Maurier 38
Caution: Dangerous Male Ahead! . . . Florence Jane Soman 40
Tryout . . . Robert Wallsten 46
The Auction Sale . . . Letha Ritter 54
Tiger in the Closet . . . Clara L. Parks 58
Melville Goodwin USA (Conclusion) . . . John P. Marquand 68

Special Features

Are Women Different? . . . Dorothy Thompson 11
Why Buy Defense Bonds? . . . Sylvia Porter 11
Women in Politics . . . New Hampshire Legislators
Your Vote Counts . . . Margaret Hickey 25
Political Pilgrim's Progress: "Why Don't You Get Out of Town?" 50
How to Get Better Men Elected . . . Senator J. W. Fulbright 52
"The Boys in the Back Room" . . . 53
Portrait of a Lady . . . Painting by Rogier van der Weyden 67
How America Lives: "We Live by the Journal"
Betty Hannah Hoffman 187
The Make-Believe Twins . . . Phyllis McGinley and Roberta MacDonald 216

General Features

Our Readers Write Us . . . 5
Under-Cover Stuff . . . Bernardine Kielty 16
Reference Library . . . 26
Making Marriage Work . . . Clifford R. Adams 28
My Problem Is . . . (The Sub-Deb) . . . Edited by Jan Wevl 30
Diary of Domesticity . . . Gladys Taber 34
Fifty Years Ago in the Journal • Journal About Town . . . 37
There's a Man in the House . . . Harlan Miller 71
This is a Pan-Peeker . . . Munro Leaf 160
Ask Any Woman . . . Marcelene Cox 219
Baby Comes Home . . . Dr. Herman N. Bundesen 224

Fashions and Beauty

Little Gem of a Wardrobe . . . Nora O'Leary 56
There's Something About Her . . . Wilhela Cushman 60
Year-Round Fashions . . . Ruth Mary Packard 62
Paris Fashions . . . Prettiest in Years . . . Wilhela Cushman 64
Little Black Dresses of Paris . . . Wilhela Cushman 66
Doll-Clothes Patterns . . . Nora O'Leary 143
Gay Gift Slippers . . . 169
My Husband's Diet . . . Dawn Crowell Norman 192
$100 Wardrobe . . . Nora O'Leary 195
Journal Play Rug . . . Nora O'Leary 245

Food and Homemaking

Thanksgiving, 1951 . . . Ann Batchelder 72
Line a Day . . . Ann Batchelder 74
Conversation Piece . . . Ruth Mills Teague 108
For Goodness' Sake . . . Nika Standen 124
Moving Day at the Hills' . . . Margaret Davidson 198
My Kitchen Was a Wreck . . . Gladys Taber 200
Recipes That Saved the Day . . . Louella G. Shouer 202

Architecture, Interior Decoration and Garden

Savannah . . . Richard Pratt 44
Our Own Young Marrieds . . . 48
Window Greenhouse . . . Richard Pratt 70
"More Energy Than Money—That's Us!" . . . Henrietta Murdock 197

Poetry

Joan Story Wright 85 ▪ Robert P. Tristram Coffin 97 ▪ Berenice Thorpe 117
Elizabeth-Ellen Long 133 ▪ Jessamyn West 148 ▪ Ina S. Stovall 174 • Dorothy Ashby Pownall 181 ▪ Peter Hanke 218 ▪ Elizabeth McFarland 238

Cover Photograph by Wilhela Cushman

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Send your new address at least 10 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect. Address:
LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.

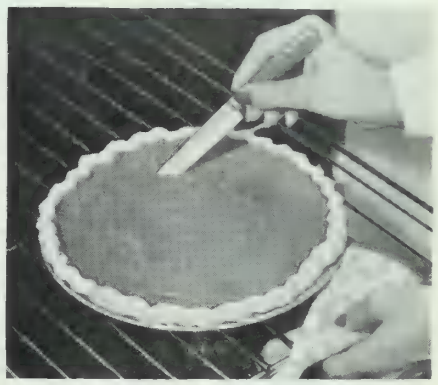
Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1951 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U. S. and Possessions, Canada, Costa Rica, Cuba, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America except the Guianas: 1 yr., $3; 2 yrs., $5; 3 yrs., $7; 4 yrs., $9. Other countries, 1 yr., $6. Remit by money order or draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.



The Curtis Publishing Company. Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President; Lewis W. Trayser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Donald M. Hobart, Vice-President and Director of Research; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

How a table knife helps you bake better pumpkin pie

—another pie-baking hint from MARIE GIFFORD, Armour's famous home economist

Of course you want your Thanksgiving pumpkin pies to come out of the oven just right—not overbaked or underdone. The best way to test them is with the blade of a table knife. Insert the blade into the filling near the edge of the pie. If the blade comes out clean, your pumpkin pie is perfectly done!

And for perfect pie crusts every time—rich, flaky, tender pie crusts—use Armour Star Lard. It's America's perfect pie lard—the lard of pie-baking champions. Be sure to try Marie Gifford's famous 5-minute pie crust recipe, too. It's printed on the handy self-measuring Armour Star Lard carton. It's a quick, easy, can't-fail recipe—exactly the right recipe for this new-type lard that needs no refrigeration. You mix all ingredients at room temperature. So much easier—saves you so much time!

Got a pie-baking question? Just write to Marie Gifford, Dept. 468, Box 2053, Armour and Company, Chicago 9, Illinois. She will help you with any pie-baking problem you may have. Write to Marie Gifford, too, for an interesting free booklet of her favorite baking recipes.

Armour Star Lard

the new-type lard that stays fresh without refrigeration! Remember, lard saves you money, too!

"Hi Ya, Handsome"

Meet Mr. D-138 whose pedigreed flavor you get in every can of NIBLETS Brand Corn

This ear of corn is a very unusual fellow. His kernels are taller, tenderer, with tissue-thin skins. And some very fancy words have been used to describe his flavor.

You've never seen his like on any produce counter, because D-138 is the sole property of the Green Giant. This exclusive breed was developed over the years by crossbreeding 2200 different corn varieties to get the one for Niblets Brand Sweet Corn.

Serve some tonight and see what science and nature have done to make your life a little richer.

SEE THE GREEN GIANT TV SHOW, "LIFE WITH (ART) LINKLETTER," ON ABC-TV

"You are what you eat," they say. That goes for growing corn plants, too. Green Giant chemists keep the good earth rich with the right plant food formula.

Green Giant Company, headquarters, Le Sueur, Minnesota; Fine Foods of Canada, Ltd., Tecumseh, Ontario.

"Niblets" Brand Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. © GGCo.

Niblets Sweet Corn
BRAND

Our Readers Write us

What America Means

Jersey City, New Jersey

Dear Editors: I am not yet American, but my naturalization is pending. During my first months here, when everything was still so difficult "over there," I was asked endlessly the same question: "How do you like it here?" but hated the comment, "How nice it must be to find an abundance of food." This hurt me. At the outset, America was more to me than a provider of food and shelter. I deplore that America is all too often considered as such, and that Americans accept it so naturally. I love America because of her sky, her fields and her forests; for the mighty sky line of Manhattan as well as for her shore and the sea breeze, her rivers and her flowers; for her soil without tombs or ties.

Coming from an old world where the past is heavy, I am thrilled that she does not cry or dream over faded brocades or old carvings, but creates new and daring conceptions, invents new lines, new daring shades. I love America for her candor, her youthful soul, sometimes hard, but more often given to tenderness and faith. I love America for the people in the street, so smiling and friendly; for having been called "Frenchie" but never "That foreigner!"

Sincerely,
MRS. G. SWIFT

Keeping Marriage New

The following letter was written to newlyweds by a couple who have kept their marriage new for a long time. ED.

Nashville, Tennessee

Dearest Janie and George: All the cards on your gifts will say "Best Wishes" and all those people wish you happiness, but it doesn't come by wishing. To us it's an intangible thing not to be bought, but earned.

Marriage is never being lonely again . . . having someone to tell your troubles to and then suddenly they don't seem like troubles . . . having the other give you a look of confidence when you've done something stupid . . . having someone hold your hand in those moments when your courage fails or the movie gets scary and you can't look . . . having someone that brags about you . . . being kidded about something that you secretly don't think is funny at all . . . being tired at the end of the day and having someone praise a meal . . . admitting you were wrong, just plain wrong and no excuses . . . and settling those arguments instead of retreating behind a wall of silence, or slamming the door . . . a lot of laughter, some tears, some hurt feelings. There is no such thing as 50–50. Make your share 100 per cent.

Well, that's about it. Banks says to say something about church. He says to laugh a lot. And every day say "I love you"—try to be the first to say it. Then everything in the world can pound on your door and you will be safe. Love from,

BANKS AND MARTHA

Source of Wisdom

Columbia, Alabama

Dear Editors: Since I can first remember, the JOURNAL has been in our home. My mother was an agent for it back in the '90's. She was a religious woman and very ambitious for her family. She was always quoting wise sayings. If it was an especially good quotation, we children would solemnly look at each other and ask, "Now, let's see, did that come from the Bible or the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL?"

Sincerely yours,
MRS. R. H. PURCELL

Revolution in Lone Tree

Lone Tree, Iowa

Dear Editors: Last fall, as I helped "pupils" to register in our ten-week adult school, I thought, "What most of these people really need is a self-betterment class—posture, reducing, voice culture, advice on costume, becoming colors, hair style, walking, and so on." Couldn't a magazine or a cosmetics firm pioneer in an enterprise of this kind? Where better to start a national charm revolution than in Lone Tree? Of course I need improvement as badly as anyone else!

Sincerely,
THEODORA PEET RAYNER

Some, contemptuous of charm, say it's all on the surface. But, as Whistler remarked, that's where it should be. ED.

Hold That Pose

Okmulgee, Oklahoma

Dear Editors: Here is a picture of my granddaughter, Benna Vaye Piccalo.

She is a blue-eyed blonde and her hobby is dancing. She won first place in the Eastern Oklahoma bathing-beauty review last summer.

Yours truly,
MRS. FRANK PICCALO

What a Little Boy Prays For

Cogan Station, Pennsylvania

Dear Editors: Stevie is four years old. Today I heard wood being chopped and hurried outside to find that Stevie had just finished chopping up a kitchen chair—an old one, but one we were going to refinish. "Aren't I a good chopper?" he asked happily. He delights in "making up recipes," as he calls it, by mixing cream, orange juice, chocolate bits, vanilla, mustard, salt, sugar or anything he can get in a hurry when I am busy elsewhere. All his concoctions must be cooked "until two and a half hours." The other night he made up his own prayer, and I jotted it down on the back of an envelope just as he said it.

STEVIE'S PRAYER

Dear God, lead us along the way if we live to another day. We have so much fun in our house. We have a re-

NO WASH, NO WIPE TONIGHT!

NEW DREFT DOES BOTH AND DISHES SHINE

. . . . . All YOU do is RINSE!
Even pots and pans glisten!

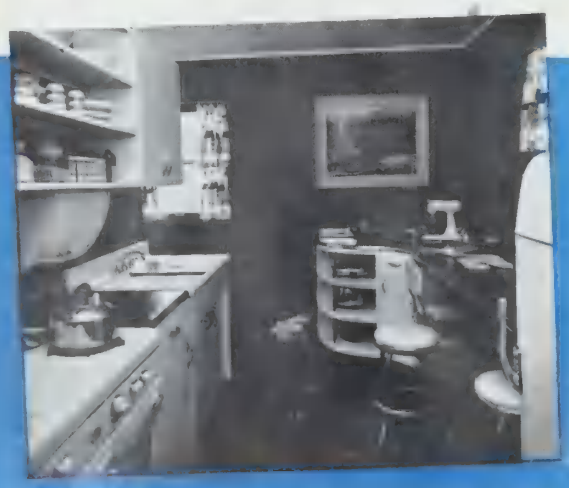
You don't wash . . . Instead of washing dishes just let them soak in warm Dreft suds for 2 minutes. Dreft floats grease and food particles away. Your hands barely touch the dishwater. All you have to do is rinse the dishes, giving a swish of the cloth where needed, and presto! They're done!

You don't wipe . . . New Self-Washing Dreft leaves no dishwater film. It washes dishes and glasses so clean, they shine—even without wiping.

You don't scour . . . Even pots and pans practically soak clean. Dreft's amazing "floataway" action gets under grease . . . lifts it off. Then grease rinses away . . . without hard scouring.

BEAUTY TIP!
New Dreft is so mild, and your hands are in water so little, it leaves hands beautifully white and soft!

It's magic . . . sheer magic
. . . it's self-washing!



Right for You

in STYLE . . . in COMFORT . . . in COST!

• Only NATIONAL HOMES offers such beauty and variety in smart new fine-quality homes, priced to fit your budget. Choose from dozens of lovely designs. Soon you can be living in your National Home, one that will stay modern through all the years ahead!

LET YOUR NATIONAL HOMES DEALER tell you how easily and quickly you can have a luxurious home like this, or help your married children enjoy one of their own! For free catalog circular of new 1952 floor plans and designs, address National Homes Corporation, Dept. LH1, Lafayette, Ind.

National Homes

CORPORATION • Lafayette, Ind. • Horseheads, N. Y.

frigerator and a big, big family, and we are tired tonight, but we don't have any fence. And the sun won't rise again till it's morning. And thanks for the rain to make our things grow to eat them. Dear God, we all have nice eyes and noses and hair and all the furniture we want, but dear God, we do not die. We have legs and socks and shoes, and now dear God, you have a nice house, and then dear God, good night and good-by. You are a nice man.

Sincerely yours,
E. BLANCHE WRIGHT

Self-Appointed Critics

Stuttgart, Germany

Dear Editors: The Germans manufacture Meissen for sale and are very happy to sell to Americans. The German artist who painted portraits for $25 got a good fee, by European standards, and was probably very happy to get the work.

I have purchased several water colors from a young, and struggling, German artist. He, being a man of honor, explained to me that he did not ask me more than he would ask from a German. He has difficulty selling his work and seemed glad to sell to Americans. What is wrong with such a transaction?

Why is it that these self-appointed critics never see any of the fine things that Americans are doing here?

Sincerely,
DONALD H. HALE

There is no doubt in our mind that Americans do fine things—but there is in the minds of some German people. Perhaps it is not the transaction but the spirit of it. ED.

Global Viewpoint

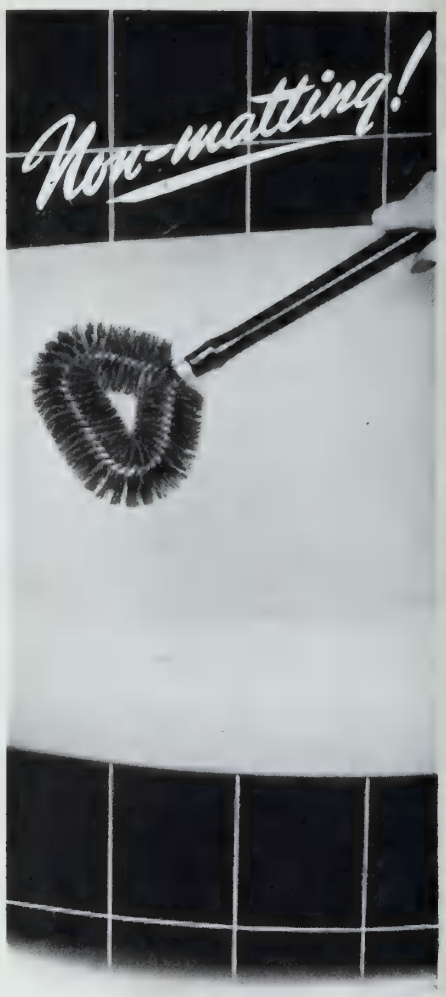
San Francisco, California

Dear Editors: Why do so many women wear hats tilted beguilingly over the face, but leave an area in back as neglected as a vacant lot? Why do so many women carefully arrange curls to frame their features, yet leave the back of their hair looking like a sea gull's nest?

Many women fail to realize that men are apt to see their backs a greater per cent of the time than their charming faces. Can you not start a campaign against those areas of lank hair, as unattractive to touch as a shredded-wheat biscuit, that are Out in Back? Why not explore the other side of the globe?

Sincerely,
G. A. B.

This is the Army



Augusta, Georgia

Dear Bruce: The Adjutant General personnel threw a party recently—about 500 officers, men, Wacs and wives assembled in civvies for a chicken dinner and an evening of dancing. It has a wholesome effect: the wife of the sergeant can corner the colonel and give him the inside dope on how his section should be run; the WAC private can make eyes at the general's aide, and so better her future. Formality was abandoned—first time I've seen such a thing in the Army. Ending a conversation with a colonel, one of my buddies—a private—slapped him on the shoulder and said, "Well, see you around!" Nothing's come of this episode, so I suppose that the colonel couldn't recall who it was the next morning.

Augusta seems a nicer town as I get to know it. It's a shame there can't be a greater interchange between the so-called upper class of Augustans and the soldiers. About all a soldier can hope to see of the town are the row of slums along the main highways and the catchpenny military-supply stores. Yet the town has extensive sections of expensive homes. I've often wondered where the daughters of these sections hide themselves. They never appear on Broad Street, the main drag. Possibly their parents pack them off to relatives in other towns as soon as they reach sixteen.

Many Augustans probably feel sorry for the thousands of quiet young men who wander up and down the streets on Saturday afternoons, looking in shopwindows and taking pictures of the Confederate monument. They have set up a rather nice service club, but that isn't much help. It's a difficult problem: how does a rather iso-

(Continued on Page 8)

new bathtub brush with springy NYLON bristles

It's sturdy . . . long-lasting . . . and bristled with Du Pont nylon—the bristles that stay stiff and resilient for efficient cleaning. And it's easy to keep clean and free of grit. Look at the features nylon bristles bring to this new brush.

SPRINGY Du Pont nylon bristles stay resilient, do a better job, won't mat down with long use. Nylon bristles never get limp or brittle . . . don't break off.

IT'S EASY to keep nylon bristles clean and sanitary. Nylon can be sterilized by boiling. Dirt washes right off the smooth bristles. And they dry quickly.

Whenever you buy any brush, ask for one with Du Pont nylon bristles, because . . .

The best brushes have
DU PONT NYLON BRISTLES

DU PONT
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

Better Things for Better Living . . . through Chemistry

Don't fool with INFECTIOUS DANDRUFF

Start with Listerine Antiseptic . . . Quick!

The stubborn "BOTTLE BACILLUS" (P. ovale) which many dermatologists say is a causative agent of infectious dandruff.

A little normal shedding is natural, but when flakes and scales persist on coat collar, look out! They may mean infectious dandruff. Dandruff is the most frequent scaly disease of the scalp. When due to germs, Listerine Antiseptic is especially fitted to aid you because it gets after the germs in a jiffy.

Don't fool around with preparations devoid of germ-killing power which merely remove loose dandruff. Start now with Listerine Antiseptic and massage regularly twice a day . . . the medicinal treatment that has helped so many. Listerine Antiseptic treats the infection as an infection should be treated . . . with quick germ-killing action.

You simply douse it on the scalp, full strength, and follow with vigorous fingertip massage.

Kills "Bottle Bacillus"

Listerine Antiseptic gives your scalp an antiseptic bath—and kills millions of germs associated with infectious dandruff, including the "Bottle Bacillus" germ, (P. ovale). This is the stubborn invader that many dermatologists say is a causative agent of infectious dandruff.

Keep the treatment up regularly: see how quickly the flakes and scales begin to disappear . . . how itching is alleviated . . . how healthy your scalp feels.

Remember, in clinical tests twice-a-day use of Listerine Antiseptic brought marked improvement in the symptoms of dandruff within a month to 76% of dandruff sufferers.

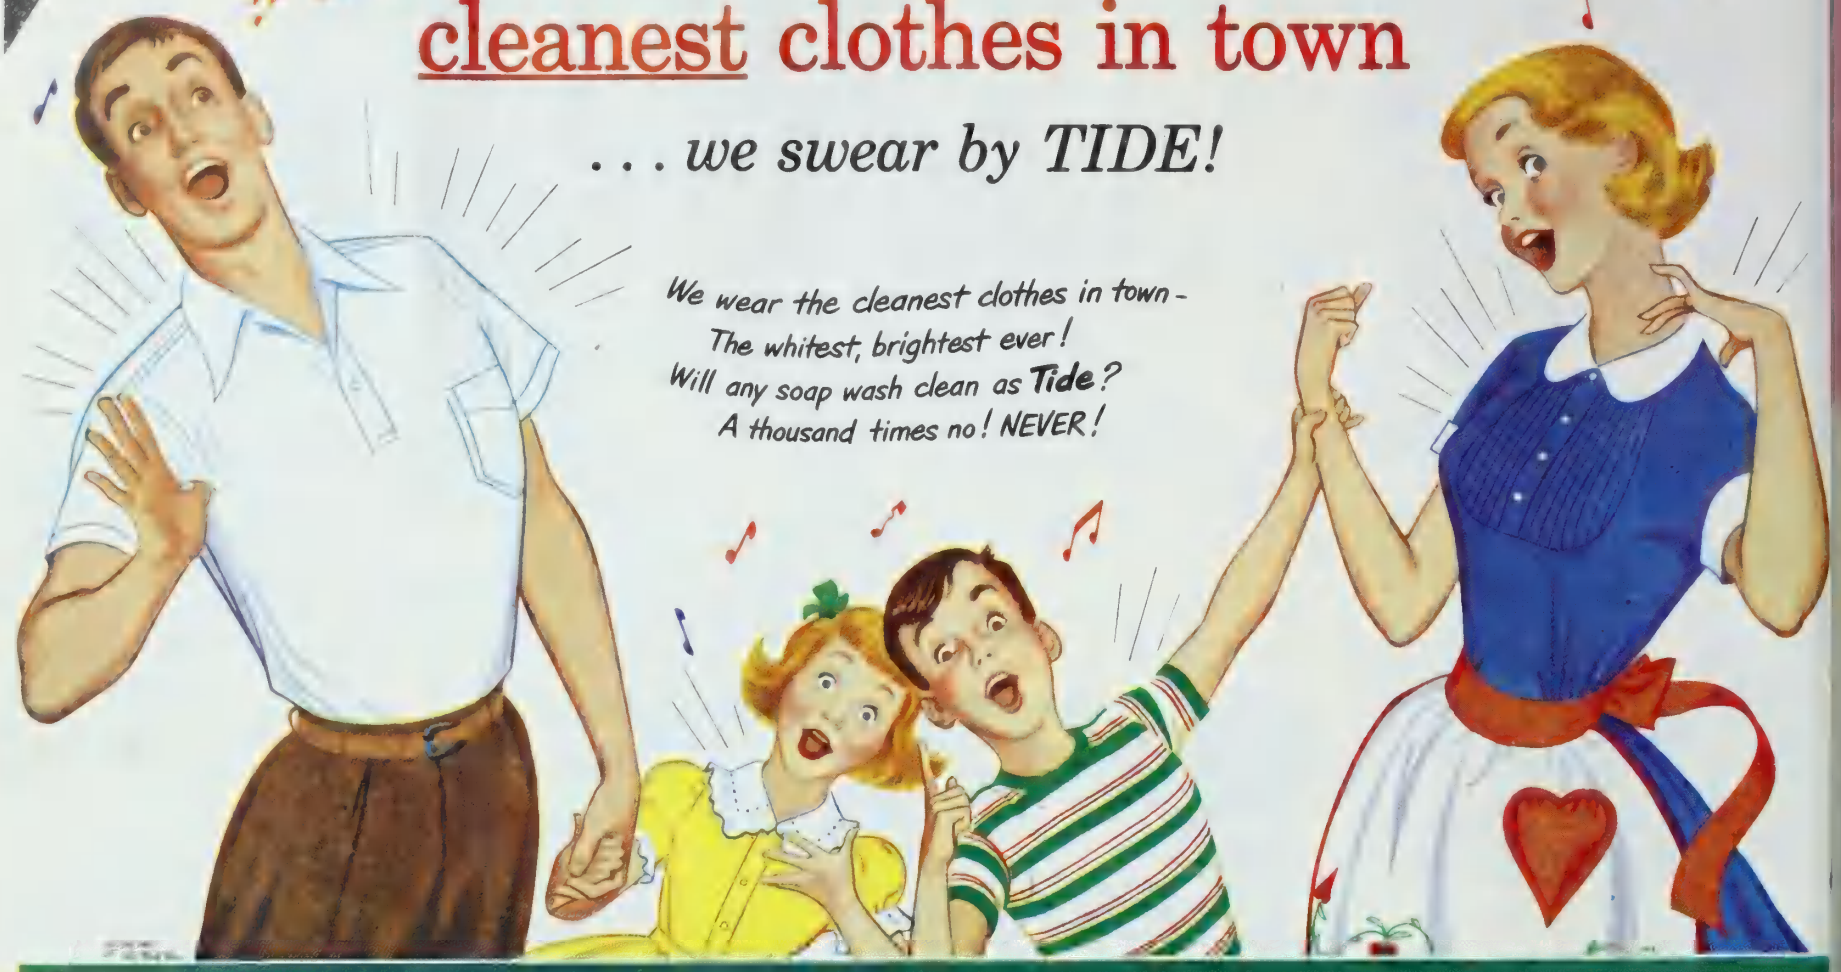
When You Wash Hair

To guard against infection, get in the habit of using Listerine Antiseptic whenever you wash your hair. Listerine Antiseptic is the fine, time-tested medicine that has served Americans so well for more than sixty years.

LAMBERT PHARMACAL COMPANY
St. Louis, Missouri.

AS A PRECAUTION . . .
AS A TREATMENT FOR . . .

INFECTIOUS DANDRUFF



See The SAMMY KAYE SHOW • "So You Want to Lead a Band" • CBS TELEVISION NETWORK

OF ALL THE FOLKS WHO DO THEIR WASH...

We wear the cleanest clothes in town

... we swear by TIDE!

We wear the cleanest clothes in town -
The whitest, brightest ever!
Will any soap wash clean as Tide?
A thousand times no! NEVER!

Tide GETS CLOTHES CLEANER THAN ANY SOAP!

TIDE not only washes clothes cleaner— but whiter, too, in hardest water!

CLEANER CLOTHES! When you rinse out a Tide wash, you've got the cleanest clothes in town . . . cleaner clothes than any other woman will get with any soap of any kind. And here's why—Tide not only gets out the ordinary dirt, but removes dulling soap film, as well!

WHITER, TOO! Yes, tests prove Tide gets clothes cleaner and whiter than any soap in hardest water. What's more, after just one Tide wash, soap-dulled colors actually come brighter! Millions of you women have proved these Tide miracles. You've seen the proof in your husband's cleaner, whiter shirts . . . in your own bright wash prints.

NEW MILDNESS FOR HANDS! Tide is kind to your hands —now milder than ever before. Tough on dirt—but easy on your hands—that's Tide! Get Tide today and hang the cleanest wash in town on your line!

P.S. PREFER TO SKIP RINSING?

With Tide you can skip the rinsing, and save all that time and work. Just wash, wring out, hang up. Tide will give you the cleanest possible no-rinse wash!

Ladies' Home JOURNAL

Bruce Gould and Beatrice Blackmar Gould

Editors

WILD DUCKLING ON SANDY BEACH
INK AND COLOR ON SILK
960-1279
COURTESY METRO. MUS. OF ART

WHY BUY DEFENSE BONDS?

By Sylvia Porter
Financial Editor, New York Post

"THE average family has a financial crisis once every two years. You will need some money during that period. This should always be a basic part of your investment program: cash, insurance, United States Government Bonds."

"After all, what is a Savings Bond? It is cash plus interest, and when you can have cash and get paid interest in addition, that is not a bad investment. So, buy the Bond as an investment. Buy it to discipline yourself and buy it because the financial law of all time has always come back to the importance of a basic nest egg."

"If we can pass a law that says that every young man must take two years out of his life in order to go through military training for the defense of the country, is it asking you too much to put a few dollars out of your pay check or your money every month into Bonds, particularly when you can get out of the Bonds any time you want to—but the boy can't get out of the uniform?"

"You don't stop a spendthrift government, if such there be, by refusing to buy Savings Bonds. That is only biting off our collective nose to spite our collective face. We will stop extravagance when we are sufficiently aroused to stop it ourselves. We intensify the evil, however, do precisely the wrong thing, when we attack the soundest form of Government financing—sale of Savings Bonds."

"This is one way you can help fight inflation. Do your own part to make sure that inflation, the enemy on the home front, does not win, and that Stalin does not really conquer the world without having a single soldier of his own in the front lines."

Are Women Different?

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

In connection with a project for voicing the attitude of women toward peace, I recently sounded out, in a personal letter, the views of some fifty distinguished American women. I was not recommending a project, but rather submitting to their consideration certain still-tentative ideas. A thesis that I presented in the letter was that there is, in women, "an untapped source of spiritual power," which, if it could be released, might contribute to a reconsideration of policies based almost entirely on force, policies which hold, in my opinion, immeasurable dangers.

Among the replies was one from a woman of my own profession, whom I greatly admire. She wrote, in part:

"Certainly I agree with you that the policies of the great powers are heading us toward the antithesis of 'peace, progress, liberation and democracy.' I should call you no Cassandra for warning of a time ahead that may, by comparison, make the Dark Ages seem to have been shot through with light.

"But I cannot agree with you that there is, in our sex, 'an untapped source of spiritual power,' superior to men's. That women can procreate seems to me a biological accident and no guaranty of wisdom, vision or moral strength. I'll grant that women have not planned and executed wars, but I have observed among them as many armchair fighters and hysterics as among men. And I question that there are now any more thinking women who are immensely troubled by the world's perilous direction than there are thinking and feeling men."

Now I am not inclined to challenge my correspondent's opinion. What she says is true, certainly as far as (Continued on Page 14)

Executive Editor, Mary Bass ▪ Managing Editor, Laura Lou Brookman
Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman,
William E. Fink, Alice Blinn, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock,
Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Dawn Crowell Norman, John Godfrey Morris, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary, Jan Weyl
Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Barbara Benson, Margaret Hickey, Betty Kidd
Assistant Editors: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Donald Stuart, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Shapley Matthews, Alice Conkling, June Torrey,
Joseph Di Pietro, Anne Einselen, Glenn Matthew White, Betty Niles Gray,
Elizabeth Goetsch, Robert N. Taylor, Elizabeth McFarland, Charles Stryker Ingerman, Elizabeth Crawford
Editorial Assistants: Alice Kastberg, Jeanne Lenton Tracey, Adrina Casparian, Virginia Price, Marion Wilson, Victoria Harris,
Helen Schmidt Kennedy, Cornelia S. McCook, Rosemary Jones, Virginia Carr, Sallie Eager Kubly, Lee Stowell Cullen, Jeanmarie Dunn,
Elizabeth W. Graham, Isabel G. Phelps, Pauline Stieglitz, Erma W. Kelley, Janice H. Bauder, Dolores Knapp, Dorothy Anne Robinson

MAKE NEVER-FAIL FUDGE IN 15 MINUTES

No cooking! No testing! No beating!

"Philly" fudge

You make it with Philadelphia Brand
Cream Cheese

HERE's the Kraft Kitchen secret for fudge that can't turn out grainy or ever be too soft or too hard.

Made without cooking there's no testing or beating to do. No guesswork. You whip up a batch in 15 minutes and it's ready to serve 15 minutes later.

The magic ingredient that makes this new method possible—that gives you wonderful fudge every time—is none other than Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese. Cream cheese creamy-white and rich, and always delicately fresh in flavor —guaranteed fresh!

Philadelphia Brand puts in milk-and-cream richness yet adds no sweetness. Soft, it quickly blends with the sugar. And you can get this famous brand of cream cheese at any good grocery store. You identify it by the words Philadelphia Brand and the red Kraft K on the package.

CHOCOLATE "PHILLY" FUDGE

1 3-oz. pkg. Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese
2 cups sifted confectioners' sugar
2 1-ounce squares of unsweetened chocolate, melted
¼ teaspoon vanilla
Dash of salt
½ cup chopped pecans

Here's all you do. Place the cream cheese in a bowl; cream it until soft and smooth. Slowly blend the sugar into it. Add the melted chocolate. Mix well. Add vanilla, salt and chopped pecans and mix until well blended. Press into a well-greased, shallow pan. Place in refrigerator until firm (about 15 minutes). Cut into squares. (For slightly softer fudge blend in 1 tsp. of cream.)

MAPLE "PHILLY" FUDGE. Follow directions for the chocolate "Philly" fudge except use 2½ cups sugar and add 10 drops maple flavoring instead of the chocolate and vanilla.

COCONUT "PHILLY" FUDGE. Follow directions for the chocolate "Philly" fudge except use 2½ cups sugar, add ½ cup shredded coconut instead of the chocolate, and leave out the pecans.

ALMOND "PHILLY" FUDGE. Follow directions for chocolate fudge except use 2½ c. sugar, add ¼ tsp. almond flavoring instead of the chocolate and vanilla, and use ½ c. chopped almonds instead of pecans.

Try a batch of "Philly" fudge tonight. In just a half-hour you'll be eating the most delightful fudge you've ever had.

For more fine "Philadelphia" recipes, write the Kraft Kitchen, Dept. J-11. Box 6567, Chicago 77, Illinois.

This is "Philly" fudge made by the new, never-fail, no-cooking method. Smooth, creamy, wonderful to eat. You'll have a batch of it soon, we hope. When you make it, be very careful to use Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese. This is the brand of cream cheese that has been famous since 1880, and is so popular today it outsells all other brands of cream cheese combined.

Philadelphia Brand's richness, its texture, its freshness (guaranteed) all contribute to perfect results with the quick, no-cooking method. Try it—chocolate, maple, coconut or almond "Philly" fudge. The recipes are on the opposite page.

HONEST EATING

NOT "FANCY" FOODS IS WHAT KIDS NEED!

AND HERE IT IS!

NABISCO SHREDDED WHEAT ...100% WHOLE WHEAT...

WITH MILK IT'S AMERICA'S GREAT BODY-BUILDING BREAKFAST!

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

Here's the breakfast that makes sense! Wholesome as only whole wheat can be, with the wheat germ and bran left in to make it honestly good! Get the original Niagara Falls product — NABISCO SHREDDED WHEAT — see how delicious honest eating can be!

THE BREAKFAST FULL OF POWER FROM NIAGARA FALLS

(Continued from Page 11)

the so-called "thinking" women are concerned. But I wonder why this is so.

When I expressed the belief that there is "an untapped source of spiritual power in women" I meant untapped and unrealized by women themselves. Nor did I mean that this power is "superior" to men's or a "guaranty" of anything. On the contrary, I believe—to the irritation of my ultra-feminist friends—that men are in many ways superior to women. But what men are patently not superior in is in being women. I meant, rather, that the source of feminine power is different, arising out of a different experience; and that this difference is essential as a balancing force in human society. This led me to consider again the feminist movement. And, as I thought about it, it seemed to me that it has led, to some extent, to a diversion of the feminine function, in public as well as in private life, and that it is a movement—and, indeed, a revolution—which is still far short of fulfillment.

As a struggle for equal civil status with men it has largely succeeded; nor can I, whose life has been so greatly enriched by the achievement, reject the rights that women have won. But as a struggle for a society more compatible with the fundamental needs of women, it patently has not succeeded. On the contrary, I am inclined to think—and I would not put it more dogmatically than that—that in the struggle against men, the struggle for more life room in the world of men, women have tended more than ever to exalt the masculine as superior, enviable and worthy of emulation, the most "successful" women being regarded—and by women, perhaps, especially—as those who most nearly think, feel and achieve like men.

> God enters by a private door into every individual.
> —RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

The pinnacle of such achievement might be illustrated by the fact that we have, for the first time in American history, a woman as Assistant Secretary of Defense.

Now it can certainly be argued that as long as war is included in the possible necessities of organized society, it makes no difference whether its direction in whole, or in part, is taken over by men or by women. The woman selected for this post is admirably fitted for it, and she is a humane person. It is not she who drafts eighteen-year-olds. They are drafted on the recommendation of the Pentagon and supported by Congress to implement the foreign policy of the United States, which, via the UN, aims, in behalf of peace, to suppress aggression all over the world, if necessary, by war. And that policy is, perhaps—there is no conclusive evidence—supported by women as much as by men.

So I must appear—and in measure even to myself—as totally irrational when I find it personally distasteful to me that a woman should be in that position—profoundly more distasteful than I find it with men in similar positions. My so finding it has no relation whatever to the woman who occupies it. But I do so find it. Far more so do I find women who actually fight, as some Russian women did, revolting—revolting in a different order of nature, having about them something monstrous and sinister. I find women revolutionaries, like Anna Pauker, carrying out the "liquidation" of whole classes more revolting than men revolutionaries engaged in the same dreadful business.

I admit that this reaction is "instinctive." But I am also convinced that what we call "instinct" is only unconscious knowledge. Though we cannot, perhaps, rationalize it, "instinct" also has some basis in reason.

Is this reaction peculiar to me?

I do not think so. Particularly among so-called "simple" women, and among sensitive men, I have found the same reaction, amounting almost to "a turned stomach," at women uniformed and armed for war, as they are, for instance, in the Soviet Union and in other "revolutionary" nations, and as some people would like to see here. What is the source of such a reaction? Is it just "delayed prejudice," a reaction no different in kind from those which have blocked the progress of women toward equality at every step?

I do not, again, know the answer, but I think it much more profound, resting in a feeling that when women become organizers of or active participants in wars, a polarity operating to keep life itself in balance—the eternal male-female polarity—will have been broken, and all the weight shifted to the side of the warrior and huntsman—after which, the deluge. The reaction is connected with a view of the maternal function as something more than "biological."

May I, continuing the train of thought, suggest that it took men much longer to become "fathers," in any but the purely biological sense, than it did women to become "mothers"?

In the lower orders of mammals "fatherhood" can hardly be said to exist. The ram, the bull, the tomcat place their seed with no further interest in its fruit. And in certain primitive tribes, I have read, a child is identified only as belonging to its mother.

According to Robert Briffault, whom I have quoted before in LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, woman, the mother, founded civilization itself by insistence that her mate should cease to roam, turning him from hunting wild animals to agriculture as a source of food, in order to secure a more permanent roof and be able to keep her young with her longer and more safely. Civilization, in short, began with domestication.

It might, of course, be argued from that that the settled community and the material accumulations resulting from it invited attack and necessitated the first organized defense, so that women gave the first impetus to a militia. Also, it would seem true that Kipling was correct in describing "the female of the species" as more deadly than the male," when the defense of her cubs is concerned. But hunters of big game also attest that the female wild beast does not desert her cubs to seek a fight. The maternal instinct is fiercely protective, but it is not aggressive. It aims to secure the tenure of a domestic society.

Biologically, women are not the same as men. Whether "the fact that they can procreate is a biological accident," the process of such procreation is not male. A child grows in a woman's body nourished from her blood, and afterward, if she is a wise mother, nursed from her breasts. The life of the child during the prenatal and postnatal period is thus indissolubly linked with hers. The two are one. It may even be that the child is more deeply influenced prenatally by experiences affecting the mother. "Old wives' tales" always held this to be true, but medical science often reverses itself on further investigation. I found it fascinating when, last May, Dr. Clemens E. Benda, internationally known authority on mental deficiencies, reported to a scientific convention in New York that "Mongolism" is the result of insufficient growth in the eighth to twelfth week of a baby's fetal development and associated with physiological or psychological derangements in the mother.

The female is not only a procreative but a nursing animal. And nothing is more easily disturbed by external excitements, physical or emotional, than this function. They cause her to "lose her milk." This can be observed at both the human and the lower levels. I am, among other things, a farmer, and must sharply contradict the notion that "bovine" indicates unrufflable placidity. A radical change in external conditions invariably, if temporarily, affects milk production. If, for instance, a herd is moved from one barn to another, or from

(Continued on Page 137)

Libby's Holiday Crowd-Pleaser!

Richest flavor ever known!

Start a festive holiday luncheon, dinner or buffet supper with this gay, sociable bowl of Libby's Tomato Juice Punch!

For the tomato ice blocks: shake up cans of Libby's Tomato Juice and pour into refrigerator tray. (Genuine Libby's is essential. It's so rich in consistency it always freezes smooth—always gives you the richest tomato juice flavor ever known! Freeze till mushy. Set 2 cardboard strips crosswise in tray. Freeze solid.

Unmold by running warm water on back of tray. Float blocks in a bowl of chilled Libby's Tomato Juice and garnish with lemon slices. It's party-perfect!

Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago 9, Ill.

Because it's twice-rich (Rich in flavor— Rich in vitamins) more people buy LIBBY'S more often than any other brand!

"After Comparing Them All

I chose Caloric"

"I shopped and compared," reports one careful homemaker, "and found Caloric was not only easier to clean, but had more of the automatic, time-saving features I wanted."

You'll agree when you see the beautiful Caloric Gas Ranges, with new, exclusive TriSet Burners that keep even mashed potatoes at serving heat without scorching!

Compare America's Easiest Ranges to Keep Clean with any other, and prove how much more for your money Caloric gives you.

TRISET BURNERS

instantly give measured fast-boil, keep-boil, keep-warm positions with unlimited heats between.

VERI-CLEAN BROILER

gives meats that wonderful "charcoal" flavor. Smokeless. No cooking vapors. Removable for washing.

HOLD-HEAT OVEN

with exclusive door seal and new air-cooled side keeps kitchen cooler. Automatic clock control optional.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Sold by leading dealers everywhere. See classified phone books. Any model can be equipped for "Pyrofax" Bottled Gas or other LP-Gases. Caloric Stove Corporation, Topton, Pennsylvania.

Ultramatic

Caloric® Gas Ranges

America's Easiest Ranges to Keep Clean

WIDE WORLD

Lorna Levant's reaction to twins: "Are they the Warner brothers?"

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

SOMEONE told us about Oscar Levant's little daughter Lorna, aged 8½, who is conditioned to Hollywood names. One afternoon when she and her mother were out walking, they met a pair of twin boys dressed exactly alike. Lorna stared. "Are they the Warner brothers?"

■

"Nov. 2. Any little boy born today may become President of the United States if he always eats his spinach and stays in good with the right people. James Knox Polk, our 11th President was born November 2, 1795, in Mecklenburg County, North Carolina, and Warren Gamaliel Harding, our 29th leader, arrived at Blooming Grove, Ohio, on November 2, 1865."

For every day in the year there is an item in HOW TO GET FROM JANUARY TO DECEMBER, by Will Cuppy. Sometimes an obscure fact, sometimes a birthday notation, usually what Cuppy thought merrily about it all. Cuppy kept several hundred index-card-file boxes, catalogued by subject, and containing some two hundred thousand cards bearing his scrawled notes. From these comes this new, big, funny, informative book. Published posthumously, edited, with introduction, by Fred Feldkamp.

●

This country swarms with people, native-born, who are not, cannot be and ought not to try to be American, says Gerald Johnson in THIS AMERICAN PEOPLE. They are those who, although they are qualified to vote, will not take the trouble to vote, and in 1950 they numbered, he says, more than half of those qualified. . . . One may be

(Continued on Page 18)

REPRINTED COURTESY OF COLLIER'S

"Sometimes I feel all they care about is our votes—"

Dinner's ready in a hurry (and golly, is it good!)

Watch Minute Rice do special, speedy tricks no other rice can do!

FISH-NIGHT FANCY . . . IN 15 MINUTES

Tuna Supreme. Prepare 1⅓ cups (5-oz. package) Minute Rice as directed on package. Add 2 tablespoons butter. No work for you—and it always turns out perfect! Cook 1 package Birds Eye Mixed Vegetables as directed; add 2 tablespoons butter and pinch of marjoram. Mix 1 can condensed celery soup, ¼ cup milk, and 1 can tuna fish. Heat. Arrange on platter. Serves 4 or 5—and serves 'em a treat!

GALA-FOR-GUESTS . . . IN 18 MINUTES

Glamour Rice and Ham. A prize dish for special company—but so easy, you can serve it any time! Combine in saucepan: 1⅓ cups (5-oz. package) Minute Rice, 1 cup water, ½ cup pineapple juice, ¼ cup seedless raisins, ½ teaspoon salt. Bring to boil, cover, simmer 3 minutes. Remove from heat, let stand 10 minutes. Add ½ cup drained crushed pineapple and 2 tablespoons butter. Press into greased molds; unmold on plates. Serve with fried ham and Birds Eye Green Beans. Never was anything so delicious . . . there's pineapple flavor in every grain of rice. With ham, it's heaven! Serves 4.

THRIFTY NIFTY . . . IN 20 MINUTES

Drumstick Surprise. A pound of hamburger does the trick—and what a glorious trick it is! (It's a budget-blessing from Minute Rice!) Prepare 1⅓ cups (5-oz. package) Minute Rice as directed on package, adding 1 teaspoon chili powder. Combine 1 lb. ground beef, 2 tablespoons chopped onion, ¾ teaspoon salt, ⅛ teaspoon pepper, and ½ teaspoon sage. Shape into 8 drumsticks, brown in fat. Place toothpick with parsley in small end of each drumstick. Serve with rice and sauce made by heating can of mushroom soup with ½ cup milk. Serves 4 or 5.

Minute Rice now comes in 2 sizes. It's smart shopping to get the big 15-oz. box of this fancy, long-grained, pre-cooked rice! Be ready to turn out glamour rice dishes in a hurry!

★ NO WASHING! ★ NO RINSING! ★ NO DRAINING! ★ NO STEAMING!

For perfect rice without the work ★★★ pre-cooked

MINUTE BRAND RICE

A Product of General Foods

The LESTER GRAND PIANO is the Official Piano of the Philadelphia Orchestra

LESTER Betsy Ross Spinet

a dream come true

Surely you have dreamed of having your boy or girl play the piano! Surely you have dreamed of owning a fine instrument to encourage practicing and playing! Make that dream come true now by choosing the genuine Betsy Ross Spinet with Amplified Tone!

Years of research have resulted in this remarkable Amplified Tone that gives every Betsy Ross Spinet unequalled tonal quality and resonance.

Decorator designed and compactly sized . . . the Betsy Ross Spinet is available in exquisite woods to suit every taste.

Dampp-Chaser equipped . . . only Lester offers this amazing moisture control feature.

Priced from $693.00; model pictured $752.00. Your dealer will arrange terms.

Guaranteed for ten years; made ONLY by the Lester Piano Manufacturing Company Inc., builders of world renowned Lester Grand Pianos.

a beautiful piano with magnificent tone

ONE name quality price

MAIL THIS COUPON FOR ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET

sold by America's foremost piano dealers

Lester Piano Manufacturing Co., Inc., Lester 13, Pa.

Send me your 24-page illustrated book showing piano arrangement in the home. (Enclose 10c for postage.)

Name

Address

City

Zone No. State LHJ-60

Foreign Sales Representatives: H. A. ASTLETT & CO., 39 Broadway, New York 6, N.Y.

(Continued from Page 16)

"an" American by the accident of birth; to be American requires thought, effort and, especially, courage.

One quality essential to genuine Americanism, Johnson continues, is willingness to take a risk, and in this fine book he tells what that risk has been from the time the founding fathers drew up the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution. It is a magnificent review of American courage and sense.

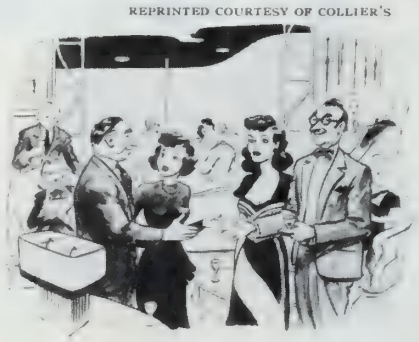
•

The women of Greece just got the vote this year, writes Laird Archer, head of the Near East Foundation in Athens, adding that 85 per cent of the gals turned up at the polls, and only 80 per cent of the men!

•

Light, frivolous, naughty is THE BLESSING, by Nancy Mitford. Remember THE PURSUIT OF LOVE? This has the same grace and audacity and sophistication. It's Paris this time, a drawing-room and bedroom farce, à la française. Don't read it if the French outlook on extramarital activities annoys you.

•



Two good historical novels are up. THE WANDERER, by Mika Waltari, is not quite as good as THE EGYPTIAN, but way ahead of THE ADVENTURER. It is about the court of Suleiman the Magnificent, and has all the dash, fire and thunder, heroics and wild escapes, that you have every right to expect.

The other is a far more modest story, but very, very pleasant: TWIN COUSINS, by Oriana Atkinson. This is laid in the Catskill Mountain region about the early part of the nineteenth century, we'd judge; the adventures of two young married couples, ignorant and inexperienced, who try to start a tavern on the new Susquehanna Turnpike. It has good local color and is a first-rate yarn.

•

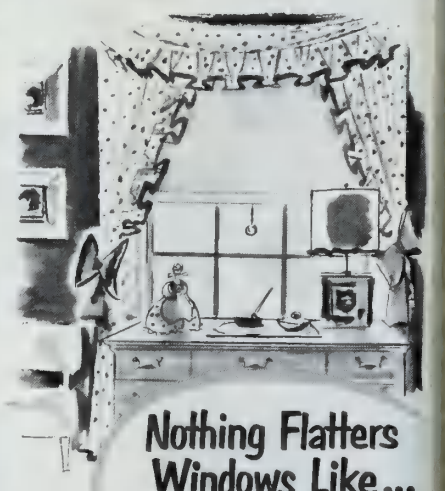
When Laura Hobson wrote GENTLEMAN'S AGREEMENT, she became a celebrity. She knew what it was like to see her book week after week at the top of the best-seller list, to see her name and its name in lights over movie marquees. She knew the fuss that people make over the authors of popular hits. Now she has written THE CELEBRITY, about a man who wrote a highly successful book, and about what that success did—not so much to him as to his family and relatives. It is satire with a solid foundation, amusing, pleasantly gossipy (about the folks in Hollywood and lit'ry circles in New York City), homey at times.

REPRINTED COURTESY OF COLLIER'S

"Mr. Harbaugh, meet Herkimer Z. Diphthong, the famous novelist, and his wife, who also has quite a reputation."

(Continued on Page 21)

WITH LONGER RUG WEAR



U.S. Carpet Cushion reduces grinding wear and tear. This resilient sponge rubber absorbs heel-shocks—keeps carpet nap and backing like new. Wonderful, this deep-walking luxury, and long-term economy!

Resilience lasts • Won't mat or spread
Mothproof, dust- and vermin-proof
Cuts to fit

Look for the U.S. Rubber trademark which always identifies genuine U.S. Carpet Cushion.

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
Mishawaka, Indiana

Nothing Flatters Windows Like...

Cloth WINDOW SHADES!

Through the years, at less cost, Joanna Western CLOTH Window Shades keep windows trim, tidy, well groomed. They hang straight down (no dust traps!), roll smoothly (no effort!), stay crisp and beautiful!

See the window shade "Quality Demonstrator" at your dealer's. It shows you the difference between CLOTH window shades and substitutes.

Joanna Western Cloth Window Shades

JOANNA WESTERN MILLS CO. • CHICAGO
WILLIAM VOLKER & CO. • Western Distributor

New wet mop keeps hands dry

No more wringing a smelly old string mop! Your hands stay clean, dry and out of hot, soapy scrub water with an O-Cedar Sponge Mop.

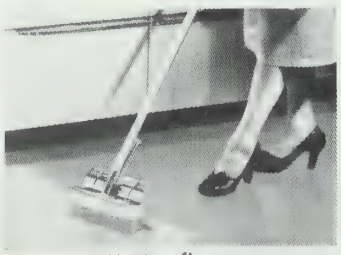
You press the water out with a handy built-in squeezer. No more rough, red hands from mopping. Your hands stay softer, smoother, lovelier—when you use an O-Cedar Sponge Mop.

You mop floors faster, too! O-Cedar's exclusive "wonder working" angle forces sponge to grip the floor firmly, scrub dirt out faster. Thirsty cellulose sponge leaves floor dry enough to wax or walk on a few minutes after mopping.

Already proved in use by more than 4 million women!

O-Cedar Sponge Mop $3.95 complete

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN



O-Cedar Corp'n Chicago, Illinois

O-Cedar of Canada, Ltd. Toronto, Canada

O cedar

You get 4 extra uses with 1 extra sponge head!

To keep your O-Cedar Sponge Mop efficient, replace the sponge head as soon as a new one is needed. To wax floors faster or speed housecleaning many other work-saving ways, get an extra sponge head when you buy your O-Cedar Sponge Mop.

Waxing floors

Washing walls

Cleaning tile

Scrubbing porches

Where you buy cleaning supplies

Van Camp's DELICIOUS MEXICAN STYLE FOODS

FOR A

FIESTA

OF GOOD EATING

Look • Listen • Enjoy
Stokely-Van Camp's Little Show
Tues. and Thurs. Evenings
NBC-TV Network

Van Camp's . . . Van Camp's only . . . prepares for you such a variety of exciting foods that perk up interest in any meal . . . make your parties different. Every dish temptingly season . . . all rich in flavor . . . all ready to heat . . . eat . . . enjo

Stokely's Finest
SINCE 1898

2 GREAT NAMES IN FOOD that mean QUICK MEALS for you

Van Camp's
SINCE 1861

KITCHEN Smells from cooking fish, cabbage, cauliflower, onions, vanish in seconds!

BATHROOM No more embarrassing odors. Instant freshness with one Good-aire spray.

Kill unpleasant odors in seconds with instant-action

Good-aire*

Spray indoor odors away with Good-aire—so quickly, so easily! A touch of thumb releases a fine spray which kills unpleasant smells in seconds. No waiting. Can't spill—won't stain. Ideal for kitchens, bathrooms, living rooms, closets. Keep your whole home wholesome with instant-acting Good-aire. Get Good-aire today at your drug, grocery, hardware or department store.

REMEMBER: "Good-aire is Good Etiquette"

Large economy size, $1.89

Regular size, 98¢

Slightly higher in Canada

Special Offer to Good-aire Users!

Famous 8-inch KLEENCUT UTILITY SHEARS ($1.29 Value) FOR ONLY 50¢ and special wrap-around label from a Good-aire container.

Offer limited by coupon conditions

BRIDGEPORT BRASS CO., Bridgeport 2, Conn.

World's Leading Producer of Aer•a•sol Products

Trade Mark*

(Continued from Page 18)

Life is so short that when you see THE HISTORY OF THE WORLD IN THREE HUNDRED PAGES, you run fast to the nearest bookstore and buy it. As a geologist sees the history of mankind as a mere incident of the Quaternary epoch, or an astronomer sees our planet as a speck of dust in a universe of stars, so René Sedillot sees history in ten fine, short, effective chapters:

1. Prehistoric Man
2. The Ancient World
3. The Age of Greece
4. The Thousand Years of Rome
5. The Thousand Years of Christendom
6. The Awakening of the West
7. The Age of Italy
8. The Age of Spain
9. The Centuries of France
10. The Anglo-Saxon Centuries

•

Unpleasant but true, the fact that scarcely a day passes that we do not eat some six-legged creature in one form or another, says Dr. C. H. Curran, in INSECTS IN YOUR LIFE. Doctor Curran is Curator of Insects and

VIC HERMAN, ELKS MAGAZINE

"I'm afraid it hasn't been cooked enough, sir."

Spiders at the American Museum of Natural History, but it might nevertheless be trying to have him in for dinner. Likely as not he'd pick up a piece of lettuce from the salad and point out two or three plant lice. Or spinach with some choice fly larvae. Or rice rich with rice-weevil eggs. Or tomato relish garnished with corn-ear worm.

Which brings us to three new cookbooks, all recommendable: THE EMILY POST COOKBOOK, BUCKS COOKS, and THE NEW JOY OF COOKING. Emily Post and The Joy need no introduction. Bucks County is that rich, luscious farmland in Eastern Pennsylvania, dotted with old stone houses and artists, writers and theatrical folk.

•

Books seem to be coming in pairs. There are two excellent ones about New York life among the very poorest Jews: Samuel Ornitz's BRIDE OF THE SABBATH, a novel about the Lower East Side ghetto at the turn of the century, and Alfred Kazin's A WALKER IN THE CITY, autobiographical reminiscences, also about the ghetto, but twenty-five years later, and removed to Brownsville, Brooklyn.

The Ornitz is melodramatic, exciting, one of the most explicit accounts of early slum conditions in New York since Jacob Riis's famous THE MAKING OF AN AMERICAN (1901). Alfred Kazin's book is small—a gem, polished, shining, reflecting on its tiny planes every facet of a boy's yearnings.

"Royal Dahlia" Royledge above.

NEW COLOR for your kitchen

Cut out Royledge patterns and see how they color-glorify shelves instantly. Sparkles up the whole kitchen! Costs only about a penny a foot. Select gorgeous new Royledge Shelving now at 5 & 10's, Supermarkets, Naborhood, Dept. Stores.

Plasti-Chrome Royledge

Shelving Paper ■ Edging all-in-one. 9 ft. ■ 24 ft. pkgs.

New ADHESIVE Edging for steel or wood shelves

"Gingham Garden" above. "Fruit-n-Check" below.

Royal Lace Paper Works, Inc., Bklyn. "Royledge," "Roylies" Td. Mk. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

NEW BEAUTY at MEALS

Food looks better and you save money, laundering with exquisite Roylies. Get economical Family Pkgs. of 45 to 120 Roylies; 5", 6", 8", 10", 12" round, and oblong Place Mats. At 5 & 10's, supermarkets, housefurnishing, naborhood, dept. stores.

ROYLIES

Lace Paper Doylies

Spark your hair with brighter, richer color

BLONDE HAIR GLEAMS with bright gold. For new Shasta Cream Shampoo contains an amazing sparkle-giving cleanser that "super" cleans your hair, so the natural color shines through in all its splendour.

...with Shasta Cream Shampoo. Contains an amazing sparkle-giving cleanser that gives your natural hair color a dazzling lift. A super cleansing shampoo.

Not a tint! Not a dye!

BRUNETTE HAIR DANCES with dark fire. Super cleansing Shasta lathers out color-dulling grime. Leaves hair so clean—your own true color dances through like sunshine streaming through a clean window pane.

RED HAIR GLOWS with burnished glory. New Shasta Cream Shampoo sparks your hair with brighter, richer color. Not artificial color. But your own true shade, glistening through "super" clean hair.

GRAY, WHITE HAIR SHINES with silver. The secret is Shasta's amazing sparkle-giving cleanser. That's why—after shampooing with New Shasta Cream Shampoo, all hair color looks brighter, richer.

29¢ to 89¢

MONEY BACK GUARANTEE If not convinced that New Lanolin-Enriched Shasta sparks your hair with brighter, richer color, return the jar to Procter & Gamble and get your money back in full.

New Shasta Cream Shampoo

FOR BRIGHTER, RICHER, NATURAL COLOR

Food was important in both these books "The last part of you to give up being a Jew is your stomach," says Ornitz, as his hero and a girl, both deciding to forget their Jewishness, still find themselves preferring the Jewish delicatessen for a good-night snack.

Kazin remembers the Friday nights in summer—the nights of special food. "We sat down to chopped cucumbers floating in ice-cold borsch radishes and tomatoes and lettuce in sour cream, a mound of corn just out of the pot steaming on the table, the butter slowly melting in a cracked blue plate."

■

For the husband or brother with a taste for the wilds, here are two books: GRASS BEYOND THE MOUNTAINS by Richmond P. Hobson, Jr., and WASA-WASA, by Harry Macfie, with Hans G. Westerlund. Both have to do with the Cold North, and in their way are as exciting and as adventurous—on land—as KON-TIKI on the sea.

WASA-WASA tells of two friends trapping, hunting and gold-prospecting in Alaska, fifty years or more ago—a debonair pair, driving their dog sleds, meeting moose without a gun, near freezing, half starving. GRASS BEYOND THE MOUNTAINS is a search in the Canadian Northwest, just under the Arctic Circle, for vast grasslands for cattle raising. Actually the two adventurers found what they were looking for, they got backing, and they have established (if one can read between the lines) one of the biggest cattle ranches in the world. This, however, is the story of their search.

"We've found our country—a green country as big as a quarter of the U. S.—a place that will be all our own—nobody else will want it. Nobody can get into it, and we're lucky if we can get out of it. Our neighbors will be the wolves. Our music the call of the loon. Our beds will be the earth."

Maybe these books are not for women, but this woman liked both of them inordinately.

After we'd read them it was a great jolt to learn what is happening to the

WIDE WORLD

What the well-dressed soldier wears for fighting in the Arctic.

parka hoods that they wear in those cold countries (also in the Air Force). Usually lined with either wolf or mouton skins, they are now going synthetic. Instead of wolf they're testing nylon fur at 65° below zero, and for mouton they're trying a blend of Dynel and vicara fibers! Too hard to find wolves and mouton, they say!

Costume by Adele Simpson

Doubletake

"look-again" color by

GOTHAM GOLD STRIPE

Color excitement in beautiful Gotham Gold Stripe nylons!

Ask for "Doubletake" in Fashion Five*, wonder stocking with five fabulous fashion features.

Gotham Gold Stripe stockings from $1.35.
At 7,000 fine stores in U.S.A. and Canada.

*T.M. Pending

GOTHAM GOLD STRIPE REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. BEAUTIFUL STOCKINGS

Towle Sterling has graced generations of Thanksgiving tables

CENTURIES of proud traditions place TOWLE Sterling on your Thanksgiving table. Its presence is not only time-honored, but eloquent: it proclaims your good taste.

The TOWLE Silversmiths work in solid silver only . . . from craft traditions over two and a half centuries old. As enduring as it is beautiful, TOWLE Sterling will grace future Thanksgiving tables generations hence.

This lasting beauty is easy to own. Six-piece place settings start at a mere $27.50, teaspoons at $3.35, serving pieces at $3.75.

For easy ways to own your TOWLE Sterling, send 10c in coin to Dept. L-11, Towle Silversmiths, Newburyport, Massachusetts, and ask for How to Build Your Own Collection of Towle Sterling.

TOWLE
STERLING

There's a Towle pattern that's perfect for you

EVERY PIECE OF Lenox IS A COLLECTOR'S ITEM

FOR PRESIDENT FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT—COBALT BLUE AND GOLD

This "Command Performance" service is an exquisite example of glowing, translucent Lenox China. The magnificent combination of craftsmanship, beauty, and superior strength has made Lenox the choice of connoisseurs the world over.

FOR YOU—EXQUISITE Starlight

Yes, here is lovely Lenox China in a superbly different new pattern for you. Only the master craftsmen of Lenox could achieve the perfect blending of traditional, jewel-like hand-enamelling and the dramatic, modern Coupe Shape. And only Lenox artistry could bring such fresh loveliness and color to the graceful brown blossoms with their twinkling sky-blue centers. Truly, whether you prefer modern or traditional, your Starlight service will be cherished for generations.

Five-piece place setting (dinner, salad, and butter plates, teacup and saucer)...$21.25

GOLDEN WREATH
5-piece place setting, $20.25

BELLEVUE SEA GREEN
5-piece place setting, $27.75

FOR HELP IN CHOOSING YOUR FINE CHINA send for the name of your nearest authorized Lenox Dealer. Write Lenox, Inc., Dept. P5, Trenton, New Jersey. Enclose 25¢ if you wish "The Reference Book of Fine China" with full-color pattern and price leaflets.

LENOX CHINA

AMERICA'S WORLD-FAMOUS FINE CHINA

PUBLIC AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT
Edited by MARGARET HICKEY

Women in Politics . . .

Your Vote Counts

By MARGARET HICKEY

WOMEN in the United States were at last officially recognized as full citizens of their country in 1920. On the August morning when Secretary of State Bainbridge Colby proclaimed the 19th Amendment a part of the Constitution, women gained the right to vote for which they had fought, been ridiculed and thrown into jail.

What have women done with their vote?

Not a great deal, to judge by a statement from the United States Census Bureau. In November of last year, thirty years after ratification of the 19th Amendment, the bureau announced that since equal suffrage was adopted the ratio of actual number of votes to the number of potential voters had not "reached the high point attained in 1916—the last presidential election limited to males."

There were an estimated 97,000,000 people who could have voted in 1950. But less than 70,000,000 registered, and of these only 42,325,000 voted. Less than half the people who might have voted did so. Even among those who troubled to register, 39 per cent cast no ballots in the 1950 election.

Women make up the majority of the population. Whether fewer women than men vote, as one would infer from the report of the Census Bureau, or the other way around, as claimed by the League of Women Voters on the basis of scattered checks, one fact is certain: millions of women have failed to accept their full responsibility as citizens.

Leaders of both major political parties are trying hard to get more people to register and to vote. The "Work and Win" program of the Republican women's 1950 campaign is being supported by many similar efforts for 1952. Mrs. Gilford Mayes, Assistant Chairman of the Republican National Committee in charge of women's activities, says the precinct program to develop forceful leaders and "alert and responsive rank-and-file workers" is being carried into "every home in every block." The Women's Division of the Democratic National Committee, under the leadership of dynamic India Edwards, is equally determined to get out the vote.

The hobble-skirted marchers of the early 1900's achieved for women the right to vote. By the use of that right, and all it stands for, American women today can be the deciding power in public life. We—you and I—can assure the election of honest and competent public officials, along with the kind of government we want for our communities—and our nation.

New Hampshire Legislators

MARY WASTCOAT, seventy-one, a slight, soft-spoken grandmother, was a candidate for the New Hampshire House of Representatives from the little town of Candia. She was modestly confident she could "do some good" in her state legislature.

"No woman should be sent to Concord!" her influential male opponent said, two weeks before election.

Mary Wastcoat set out to convince Candia voters he was wrong. She discussed her qualifications and ideas of good government with farmers in their hayfields; she sat down at kitchen tables with their wives; held babies and chatted over cups of coffee. Frequently she mentioned her opponent's challenge, but seldom did she ask them to vote for her. She knew she was making some progress, but couldn't guess how much.

On election night, the Candia town hall was packed—everyone wanted to be first to hear the results. Few, except Mary Wastcoat, were really surprised by the final tally. She won—334 votes to 7!

Like Mary Wastcoat, most of the women who have climbed to political authority in conservative, tradition-bound New Hampshire have triumphed over male candidates, often in hard-fought campaigns. To measure their success you need only count the number of women in the state legislature today: forty, or 10 per cent, in Representatives' Hall; six, or 25 per cent, in the Senate chamber. Proportionately they constitute the largest feminine voice in any governing body in the world.

According to Gov. Sherman Adams, "These women, though accused of overemotionalism, are generally not given to personal prejudices nor arbitrary allegiances and pressures as much as men. They give balance and weight of good judgment to legislative decisions, take a good deal of committee burden, and can be relied on for attendance and for digging into problems enough to understand them completely before voting."

(Continued on Page 222)

DI PIETRO

Good government begins at kitchen tables, not in back rooms, says 28-year-old Representative Barbara Winters. On week ends, she brings lawmaking home to the people.

NYLAPAC Gaytees never let your feet know it's cold and wet! Very new — of washable nylon gabardine, all fleece lined, wool trimmed. Flat soles fit all shoes. Natural with brown trim.

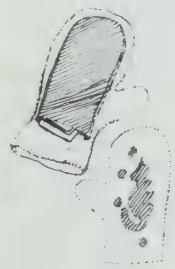
ARGOLINER Gaytees foil chills for youngsters' feet with warm, wool fleece lining. Just pull these on over snow pants — yank the strap for no-slip fit. Easy! Red, russet brown.

It's always fair weather!

SNO-VALE Gaytees give dry-day protection even in blizzards. Storm-proof rubber is edged with rich trim, laced shut. Flat soles fit several heel heights. Black, sable brown, green.

MARQUETTE Gaytees get down to business about keeping your toes warm as well as dry. Staunch rubber, lined with fleece; shearling cuffs. Flat tread fits most shoes. Black, brown.

U.S. Gaytees®
Fashion Over-the-Shoe



UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
ROCKEFELLER CENTER, NEW YORK

Reference Library

Why not plan a homemade Christmas with these simple JOURNAL patterns?

● 2110
PINCUSHION to make of satin with skirt of lace. 10c.

2527 ●
SHOWER MITT of terry cloth has pocket in the palm for soap. 15c.

● 2500
POUCH BAG, giant size, of plain-and-plaid wool. Or try it in felt. 15c.

2497 ●
KNITTED ANKLETS for men or women. Initials trim the cuffs. 15c.

● 2102
HEART-SHAPED POT HOLDERS in three sizes. Use bright chintz. 10c.

2525 ●
TRAVEL CASE for toilet articles. Trim a washcloth to go with it. 15c.

● 2526
QUILTED SLIPPERS with bag for easy packing. Lovely in soft satin. 15c.

2522 ●
SACHETS, bow-shaped or tiny bag design. Use wide taffeta ribbon. 15c.

FREE BOOKLET AND PATTERN LISTS

2008. LIST OF DEPARTMENTAL BOOKLETS. For your home, garden, beauty, entertaining and child care.
1695. SUB-DEB BOOKLET LIBRARY.
1660. LIST OF JOURNAL HAT AND BAG PATTERNS.
2333. CHILDREN'S PATTERNS LIST.
2076. THINGS-TO-WEAR PATTERNS. Aprons, blouses, accessories.
1571. REFERENCE LIST OF KNITTED AND CROCHETED PATTERNS.
1752. HANDICRAFT PATTERN LIST.

We will gladly send any of these patterns and lists if you'll order by number. They will be mailed anywhere in the United States and Canada upon receipt of cash, check or money order. Do not send stamped, addressed envelopes. Allow two to three weeks for delivery. Readers in all foreign countries should send International Reply Coupons, purchased at their post office. Each coupon is redeemable for 5 cents in the United States. Please address all requests to Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

ORDER BLANK

PATTERN NUMBERS

Name _____ (Please Print)

Street _____

City _____ Zone _____

State _____

An evening of cards... fun! surprises! triumphs!

With every hand dealt, the curtain's up on a brand-new show . . . and you're in it! The thrill of the unexpected . . . traps for the unwary . . . strategy one moment, humor the next.

For sociable, "live" entertainment when family and friends get together, you can't beat the fun in a pack of cards!

Have the "card book" handy to look up rules . . . and learn new games! For your new OFFICIAL RULES OF CARD GAMES (256 pages, 165 games) just mail 15¢ with your name and address to Dept. C-6, United States Playing Card Company, Cincinnati 12, Ohio. (In Canada: The International Playing Card Co., Windsor, Ont.)

Compliment your guests with playing cards of really top quality. You'll notice the unmistakable luxury "feel" of CONGRESS cards. Their exclusive Cel-u-tone finish gives them a "snap" and "slip". . . a gleam and glide no other cards possess!

Only Congress Cards have CEL-U-TONE finish

My problem is... Dear Jan,

My problem is....

My problem is...

Dear Jan,

My problem is...

the sub-deb

EDITED by JAN WEYL

"Dear Jan: My girl friend always tries to monopolize every boy she meets, even if he seems to like me or some other girl. She is a good friend otherwise. How can I put a stop to her actions, which she doesn't profit by, anyway, as she never gets a date?"

Obviously this girl doesn't know what you know—that boys don't like girls who are aggressive and pushy, that they like to make their own advances. Your friend acts this way because she feels unpopular and insecure with boys. She hasn't had a chance to be pals with boys—to relax with them. Try to help her out. Arrange a date for her the next time you have a date—or give a small record party at your house, and invite the boys you think would like her most. Before the party begins, give her the pitch: "That new fellow in class sure is cute, isn't he? Mary says he goes for the quiet type. I guess a lot of boys do, but we don't always realize it." If she's interested—and she should be—the way will be open for a long conversation about boys and what they do and don't like about girls. As soon as your friend begins to go out on dates herself, she won't be bothering you and your dates.

"Dear Jan: Ever since I was old enough to go on dates, my mother's friends have been getting me dates with their sons. I feel that I don't need any help in getting dates. What can I do to stop this without hurting their feelings?"

Many mothers are eager to arrange dates for their children—and most of the children resent it, just as you do. The mothers who do this fail to realize something important: that when you're forced to do something, you generally do it badly. Think about the boy. He probably doesn't like the idea any more than you do. You can say you're busy every time a mother suggests a date with her son, but why not accept the date and use your best personality to make the evening fun for both of you? After all, you're a girl with lots of dates. Your pride and prestige aren't being hurt, you can always refuse a second date if you don't have fun—and you just might meet someone you like a lot.

BY TOM JOHNSON, AGE 18

"Dear Jan: I have a lovely home, nice parents, and I love them very much, but they just don't understand me. They treat me like a two-year-old and keep telling me teen-agers are unpredictable. I'm growing up as fast as I can. How can I let my parents see this?"

If your parents treat you like a two-year-old, probably it's because you act like a two-year-old sometimes. Look at it this way. How often do you ask your mother to do things for you that you could do for yourself—like picking out your dresses, or making all the sandwiches for the party you are giving? This is important—because the less you ask your mother to do for you, the less she will tell you what to do. "Growing up as fast as you can" should mean that you are learning the first real step toward becoming an adult: accepting responsibility. If your job is to keep your room neat, do it every day—without being reminded. If you promise to be home by 12:30, be there on the dot. When you disagree with your parents, explain to them unemotionally and quietly why you disagree—and consider their opinions with as much thought as you expect them to give to your opinions. As soon as you prove to your parents that you really are growing up, they'll start treating you that way.

"Dear Jan: I know you're supposed to send thank-you notes, but when do you do this? I spent the night with one of my friends and we went to the movies and then home. Do I send a thank-you note to her mother or her? Or do I send one at all?"

If you see the girl and her mother often, a note isn't necessary because you will have a chance to tell them again in person what a fine time you had. But if you're visiting out of town, you should write a note to the girl's mother as soon as you return home. In both cases, try to be a good guest while you're there. Help with the dishes, make your own bed, and do any other things you can to make things easier for your friend's mother. And if you're staying as long as a week end, be sure to take her mother a small gift.

"Dear Jan: I am sixteen years old and very much in love with a boy eighteen. We have been going steady for five months, but recently he enlisted. My parents think I'm too young to be faithful to a soldier, but I feel that I couldn't enjoy myself with other fellows. What would you advise?"

If you consider matters carefully, you'll realize that having other dates can help both you and your soldier. You're lonely at home. He's off in a strange place with new people and new situations—even more lonely. The fact that both of you go on occasional parties and occasional dates has nothing to do with the important thing between you—your love—as long as that love remains important. Write him long newsy letters about what you're doing and how much you miss him. Send him little gifts that show you're thinking about him. That's the way to show him he's still No. 1 man in your life. You're both young. There will be plenty of time to go steady when he is back home again.

"When I Was Sixteen . . ."

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

. . . "I was studying like mad to get out of grammar school. I spent four years in the fifth grade, and she was beautiful. After that my mother wanted me to go to high school; I wanted to go to work; and my dad just wanted me to go."

—Bob Hope

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

. . . "I was working for hours every week studying voice, learning musical scores, taking lessons in acting and dancing. My voice had been discovered by the superintendent of my high school when he heard one raspy voice in the school chorus and, upon investigating, discovered that I was the guilty party—singing an octave lower in my natural register. Fortunately he also thought my voice had possibilities—and helped me arrange for special lessons. I've been working at singing ever since."

—Risë Stevens

. . . "The thing I was most interested in was football. I wasn't very big then and it was a long time before I made even the high-school scrub team. That was a big day in my life. I took the money I'd saved from 'swamping' (running orders) on a grocery truck and invested in a pair of good cleated shoes and some shoulder pads. I remember carrying them to school the next day, and how good I felt. That afternoon at practice I broke my leg—and never played football again. That was when I took up dramatics—and found I liked it even better than football."

—Howard Duff

ACME

. . . "I lived with my grandmother about half a mile from the Pacific Ocean. Naturally I did a lot of ocean swimming. At that time a peculiar sandbar formation created ideal conditions for riding surfboards, Hawaiian style, and I got to be good at it—so good that I decided that when I grew older, I'd get a job on a boat, save some money, jump ship at Waikiki, and turn into a beach boy. I never did get to Waikiki until 1947—when I went with the Davis Cup team."

—Ted Schroeder

SPEAK UP . . . if you've a problem you can't solve. We'll try to help with a personal letter. Write to Jan Weyl, Sub-Deb Department, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

Once you experience the economy of Vanity Fair lingerie you will find that you cannot afford to wear anything cheaper – because

One Vanity Fair nylon tricot slip replaces and outwears several ordinary ones, stays ever-beautiful. Since every lovely inch of it, from the precious nylon yarn to the last fine detail is made in our own mills, you are buying our economical "know how", the highest quality, our remarkable values. Slip #3-8-6 in sizes 32-42 average length, 34-42 in tall length, Extacee sizes 9-15.

only by

Vanity Fair

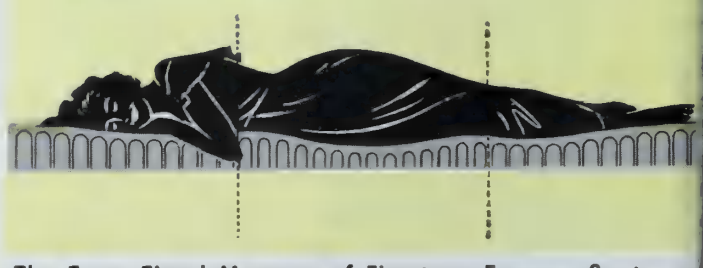
©1951, VANITY FAIR MILLS, INC. • EXECUTIVE OFFICES, READING, PA.

the X-ray story of how this mattress

The entirely new and exclusive Form-Fitting Construction supports your different body weights while it cradles your body curves

The Form-Fitted Mattress of

NOT THIS



When mattress is too stiff all over, it doesn't "give" under your heavier mid-section. Doesn't conform to the curves of your body. After a restless, uncomfortable night you awake tense, irritable, often aching, feeling as if your spine has been thrown out of kilter.

NOT THIS

Serious center sag occurs when mattress is too soft all over. It may be comfortable for your head and legs, but it can't give proper support to your heavier mid-section. Result? You sink into a hollow and fight all night long to get out of it.

...BUT THIS

The Form-Fitted Mattress of Firestone Foamex floats yo different body weights in natural balance.

This section gives lighter support where you are lighter – from head to just above your waist. Here, larger air spaces (nature's own springs) cradle you gently while Foamex moulds itself to each curve of your body.

This section gives firmer support where you are heavier – from your shoulders to just above your knees. Here, more firm, buoyant Foamex (smaller air spaces) prevents you from sagging in the middle.

This section (like t head), gives lighter su port under your legs. S how larger air spac keep your body in b ance. No wonder y awaken alert and r freshed. You've enjoy perfect relaxation!

1951 Firestone Industrial Products Company

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

*Trademark

helps you relax while you sleep

Firestone FOAMEX*

ere sleep is not good enough for you, d your family. You need complete rest to lax every tense nerve and tired muscle in ur body. You need the right mattress to at your body on an even level while you et go" and sink into deep, relaxing slumber.

e X-ray Story proves it! Your body can st as nature meant it to rest. Not on the ard-like surface of too-firm a mattress. Not the sagging discomfort of too-soft a mat-ess. But cradled on Foamex, built with firmer pport in the mid-section where you need it.

e Form-Fitted Mattress is a Firestone amex exclusive! No other mattress so mpletely supports your body in correct sleep-g position. The Form-Fitted Foamex Mattress ves you lighter support in the head and foot ctions — firmer support under your heavier id-section. No matter how much you turn, ist or change your position, your different dy weights stay evenly balanced.

Night after night, year after year, Firestone Foamex delivers "brand new mattress" comfort. Foamex stays lively for life, because there's nothing to break down. Just pure milk of the rubber tree, whipped with air to a creamy foam, baked like an angel food cake. After 12 years of 24 hour use in hospitals, Foamex mattresses showed no sign of wear.

You can feel the heavenly softness of Foamex yourself. Bedding departments everywhere feature Form-Fitted Foamex Mattresses and matching Box Springs. Just stretch out and imagine what it's like to be cradled in comfort every night of your life.

Form-Fitted Mattress of Firestone Foamex $79.75

Available with special Matching Box Spring $69.75

Ensemble $149.50

Prices subject to change

Look for this label at better stores everywhere

Enjoy the Voice of Firestone Monday Evenings on NBC Radio and Television

just 4 minutes..

and dry skin

turns dream-soft

as you sleep

11:00 p.m.

Cleanse with Tussy Dry Skin Treatment Cream; stimulate with Dry Skin Freshener.

11:02 p.m.

Smooth on Tussy Beauty Plus Hormone Cream; beauty prescription for mature skin.

11:03 p.m.

Use Tussy Wind & Weather Lotion or Hand Cream; makes arms, hands feel silken-soft.

Just 4 minutes can make you look years younger! For Tussy works its magic on over-30 skin, while you sleep. Tussy Dry Skin Treatment Cream contains an effective blend of sterols; cleanses without disturbing skin's natural oil balance. Tussy Beauty Plus is an exquisite hormone cream; furnishes a natural "young-skin" substance. The hormones are actually absorbed by your skin!

TUSSY

Tussy Dry Skin Treatment Cream, $1.25, $2., $3.50, Dry Skin Freshener, $1., $1.75, Beauty Plus Hormone Cream, $3., $5., Wind and Weather Lotion; Hand Cream, $1., $2. All prices plus tax

Linens by Lenon

November is a reflective and thoughtful time. All its colors are tranquil, the soft and quiet air lies gently on our earth.

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

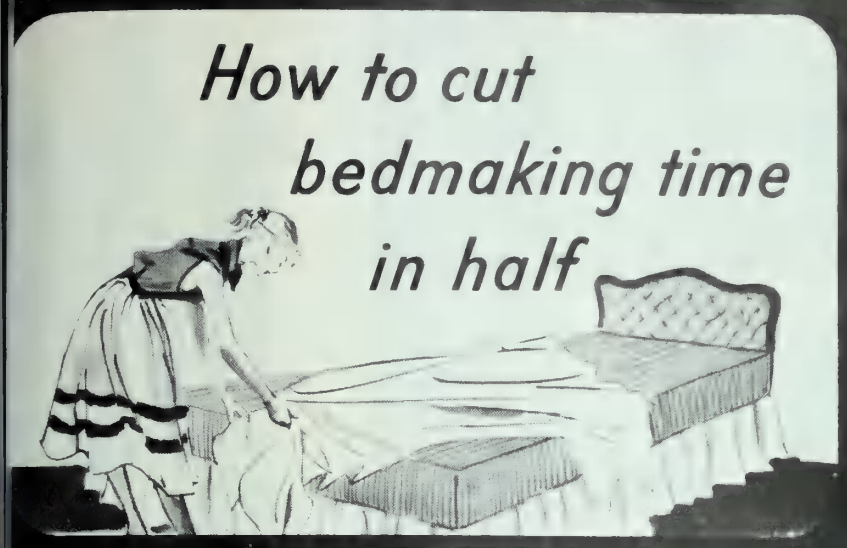
SOME of the days in November carry the whole memory of summer, as a fire opal carries the color of moonlight. These are the days I especially love, when the soft and quiet air lies so gently on our earth. All the colors are tranquil, waiting to be dazzled into the great white of the snow. It is a reflective and thoughtful time. I feel the past summer with its violent heat, I remember the spring bright with tulips, and I catch again the deep excitement of the first peepers in the April night. Genius, they say, brings emotion recollected in tranquillity; if so, November is the genius of the seasons in New England. And doubly precious because we country folk cock an eye to the barometer at night just to see.

When the season closes in, I am thankful I am a country dweller. Summer folk are nice, and they overflow the green valley and clutter the country roads with fast cars, and fill the summer theater in the old red barn. But those of us who stay and pile in the firewood and worry the storm windows up, we are the ones who belong. I often think the proudest moment of my life was the first time George referred to somebody else as "just one of those city persons."

Actually, village life is so busy, there is no time to be dull during the gray days and early nights. We are fighting pollution in our silvery streams and rivers, we are battling against a reservoir which would flood our valley, we are involved with personal matters such as repairing fences, pruning and clearing. The dog clubs are in full swing; every cocker and great Dane and Pomeranian and shepherd goes riding over the autumn roads to attend the school of his owner's choice. There isn't a minute when life lacks something vital to be at.

Thanksgiving is one of the best holidays we have. I love stuffing the turkey, popping the mince pies in the oven, polishing apples and hunting up the nutcrackers. The children are coming and we have one buffet supper for everybody around. I bake a ham for extra; one can never go wrong with a ham in the larder. Esmé feels turkey is the best there is, and she has to have her dish before anybody else gets more than a smell. The emotions of a Siamese brook no delay.

We always have country turkeys in plenty in this rich farm area. But after all, it isn't really the turkey that makes Thanksgiving; it is the family gathered around the table, the togetherness. It is friends dropping in, and the smell of hot mulled cider and the bowls of golden popcorn going around that make Thanksgiving.

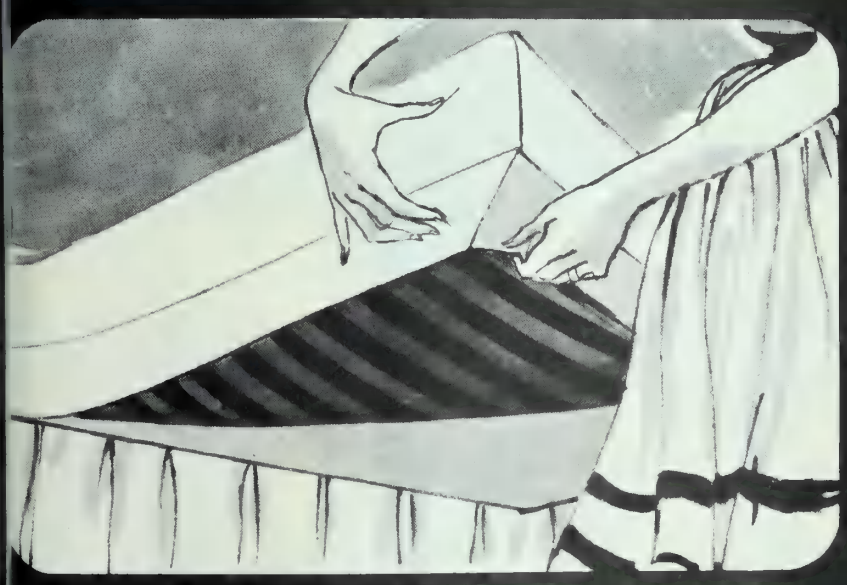


It is finding a few small flowers that escaped the frosts, and an extra acorn squash in the garden, and it is George's pleasant hello as he comes in after breakfast with a big log in his arms.

And it is Steve and Olive finding the corner cabinet at last and struggling home with it in their station wagon, with the car going lopsided from the weight of it. Or Jill discovering a comb-back rocker for Don's room. If you wander around the country roads, you can find lovely treasures and give them a home again. Most of the people who sell them have a real love for them, and most of them will tell you if part of a piece is modern. The comb-back had three new spindles; but painted a soft flat black, who can tell? And it sits elegantly.

Jill is still tucking narcissus bulbs in on the hill by the pond. George has one parti-colored cow that loves that slope, and she gets in there every day or so and "hunkers" up the sod, but we always hope she misses the best bulbs. It seems that once a cow gets an idea in her head, it is there to stay.

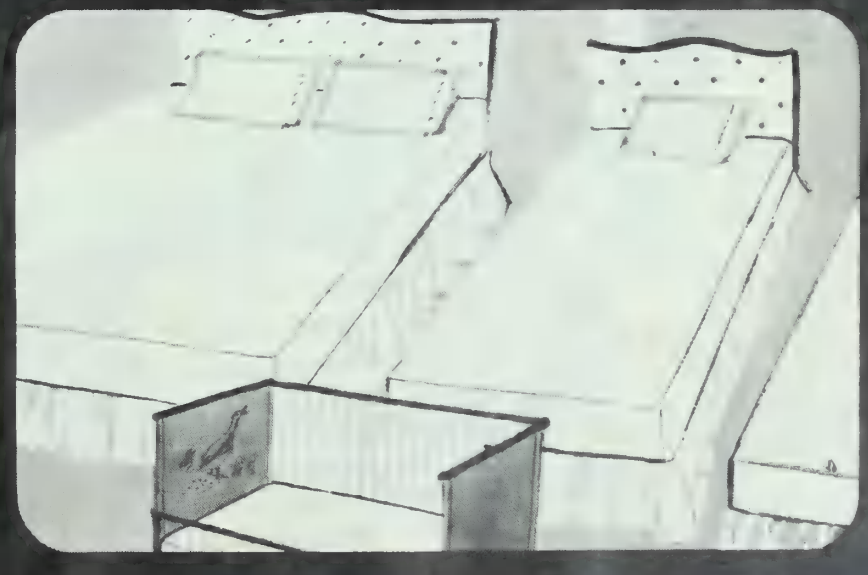
When the cows come home in the dusk the cockers line up behind our picket fence and between the pickets wild noses thrust out. Jonquil's high feminine bark and Tiki's boyish yell greet each and every cow. Linda always sounds hysterical, Sister like a



(Continued on Page 246)

1. Retucking old-fashioned sheets is a waste of time...

2. A CONTOUR SHEET* stays so smooth all night long, when you get up your bed is half made!



3. Four fitted corners cap the mattress. A shaped tuck-under holds all four sides drum-tight

4. The sheet won't wrinkle, can't pull out. Goes on in a jiffy, adjusts to mattress thickness, needs no re-tuckin

5. A CONTOUR SHEET is easy to launder, keeps its fit because it's Sanforized.* Ironing's optional

6. Combed percale or muslin in standard sizes—double, twin, crib—youth-bed size in muslin

At your favorite store, or write for folder and name of nearest dealer to Pacific Mills, Dept. DD11, 1407 Broadway, New York 18, N.Y.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Contour...a PACIFIC sheet

BY PACIFIC MILLS . . . WEAVERS OF FINE COTTONS, RAYONS, WOOLENS, WORSTEDS

Deeply scrolled, with a lovely symmetry . . .

Mansion House in HEIRLOOM STERLING

Country brunch party: tiny animals from your gift or toy shop, with hunting-pink geraniums and golden wheat—charming setting for Mansion House* Heirloom Sterling!

The warm heart of your home... spreads its welcoming radiance to all who enter—speaks most truly through the gracious beauty of your table appointments! Be the occasion ever so informal, your lovely Heirloom* Sterling pays quick compliment to your guests . . . brings new lustre to your hospitality through the years. For this is solid silver . . . even a hundred years of loving daily use won't wear it out! Why not start your Heirloom Sterling with one or two place settings now? Then add more to them later—ask your jeweler about payment terms.

o one will ever know the burden of blame

lers, nor that every day

k myself the question I cannot answer.

nocent or guilty?"

Daphne du Maurier

y the author of REBECCA.

'our Turnings
nore, though.
enalty for his
after fair trial
convicts him
m. It is better
the body has grave.

destiny. But there's no escape. You cannot learn the lesson too young. Bu felon dies. Here is Tom Jenky dull, except when he drank too
his wife was a scold, but that w kill her. If we killed women for all men would be murderers."

I wished he had not named t

beer ould in w vn q him vato
"
and nbr sick me crea
d, mh

50 years ago in the Journal

IN November, 1901, while Jacob Riis was writing his powerful books about New York slums, the best sellers of the mail-order houses were about fortunetelling, palm reading and dream books. The Charleston, South Carolina, Exposition opened, Great Britain and the U. S. A. signed the Isthmus Canal Treaty, and Ain't That a Shame? topped the song-hit parade.

Writes The Lady From Philadelphia in the November, 1901, JOURNAL: "Many think that a girl in her first season is not expected to invite ...

covering the fall and winter collections. The skirt is silk faille, the jet-embroidered jacket and pillbox hat in velvet, the blouse white slipper satin. The picture was taken in Princess Gourielli*'s apartment overlooking Paris.*

If you're fed up with movies that make you feel you could do a better one yourself, don't miss The River. Just out, it was made in India from the book by a JOURNAL author, Rumer Godden, and directed by Jean Renoir. Its producers, Kenneth and Melvina McEldowney, told John Morris at the preview here it was their first picture; that he had been a florist, she an air-line publicist. "How did you happen to do it?" John asked. . . . "Oh, we just got fed up with movies that made us feel we could do a better one ourselves. Hope you think we succeeded." John did. So will you.

Movie-maker Melvina McEldowney.

We sometimes feel we should be publishing two or three picture magazines for the fine photographs we just can't get into the JOURNAL—fashions, food, interiors, gardens, houses, people. We'd need a whole supplement for surplus pictures of How America Lives alone. Like the ones Joe Di Pietro took of Ray Hill at the hospital in Maryland while the husband and father of this month's family was standing by for his latest offspring to be born. It was a ten-hour vigil, so Joe had plenty of time to get sneak shots of Ray in various attitudes of waiting—fretful, dozing, bored, and so on—a wonderful sequence of long-drawn-out expectancy. A funny thing, though: Joe got so nervous waiting to take a first-minute picture of mother and baby that everybody thought he was the father.

DI PIETRO

How-America-Lives Ray Hill awaiting new arrival.

A girl here who rides occasionally in Central Park notices that every horse she hires does the same thing: not only stops of its own accord on the red light, and starts up on the green, but even tries to beat the light a little on the green—just like a taxi driver.

A University of Michigan survey shows that children watch television on an average of 19½ hours per week. . . . In 1940, 79 per cent of American homes had electric lighting, and 2 out of 5 had mechanical refrigerators. By 1950, the figures had risen to 94 per cent with electric lighting and 4 out of 5 with mechanical refrigeration . . . There are three marriages every minute somewhere in the U.S. In June, 1951, only one third of all girls between 20 and 24 were still unmarried and only 15 per cent of all women between 25 and 34. . . .

Gladys Denny Shultz arrived in Chicago to confer with Doctor Bundesen, only to find that two big conventions had filled every hotel in town to overflowing. Doctor B. phoned around; finally told Gladys he'd found her a bed. "They're putting you up out at the Isolation Hospital," he told her. Late that night, weary and full of misgiving, she showed up at the hospital. Found that Dr. B. had known all the time that the superintendent and his family were away, that Gladys was going to get their whole seven-room apartment.

FOR YOUR

Christmas Gift ORDERS

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

Inclosed is $_____ for which please enter a Christmas gift subscription for LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, to go to each of the following addresses:

Name_____
Length of Sub._____ Street or R.D._____
Town_____ Zone____ State____

Name_____
Length of Sub._____ Street or R.D._____
Town_____ Zone____ State____

Name_____
Length of Sub._____ Street or R.D._____
Town_____ Zone____ State____

Sent by_____
Street or R.D._____
Town_____ Zone____ State____

U. S. GIFT PRICES

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL: 1 1-yr. $3; 2 1-yr. $5; Each additional $2.50
THE SATURDAY EVENING POST: 1 1-yr. $6; 2 1-yr. $10; Each additional $5
HOLIDAY: 1 1-yr. $5; 2 1-yr. $8; Each additional $4
COUNTRY GENTLEMAN: 5 yrs. $3; 3 yrs. $2; 1 yr. $1 (Sold in U.S., R.D. only)
JACK AND JILL: 1 1-yr. $2.50; 2 1-yr. $4.00; Each additional $2

PRINTED IN U. S. A.

ting-pink geraniums and golden wheat—charming setting for Mansion House* Heirloom Sterling!

o one will ever know the burden of blame

lers, nor that every day

k myself the question I cannot answer.

nocent or guilty?"

Daphne du Maurier

y the author of REBECCA.

'our Turnings
nore, though.
enalty for his
after fair trial
convicts him
m. It is better
the body has grave.
erwise. I can
ellow hang in
. His face and preservation.
fore they cut
h week that I arth and sky
usin Ambrose
ll. Heaven he ll that he had

with his stick.
he wind like a
a poor scare-

destiny. But there's no escape. You cannot learn the lesson too young. Bu
felon dies. Here is Tom Jenky
dull, except when he drank too
his wife was a scold, but that w kill her. If we killed women for all men would be murderers."

I wished he had not named t
that moment the body had beer without identity. Now it would tion with reality, and the man w who sold lobsters on the town q
so long ago that I had seen him

"Well," said Ambrose, watc
"what do you make of him?"

I shrugged my shoulders, and of the gibbet with my feet. Ambr know I cared. That I felt sick terrified. He would despise me twenty-seven was god of all crea
god of my own narrow world, object of my life was to resemb

50 years ago in the Journal

IN November, 1901, while Jacob Riis was writing his powerful books about New York slums, the best sellers of the mail-order houses were about fortunetelling, palm reading and dream books. The Charleston, South Carolina, Exposition opened, Great Britain and the U. S. A. signed the Isthmus Canal Treaty, and Ain't That a Shame? topped the song-hit parade.

Writes The Lady From Philadelphia in the November, 1901, JOURNAL: "Many think that a girl in her first season is not expected to invite men to call, but her mother does so in her behalf, usually naming certain times when they are likely to be home."

Announces Miss de Forest from Paris: "Surely one announcement I can make concerning winter fashions will be hailed with delight by the entire feminine sex. We are to have pockets in our coats."

"How Can a Girl Help Support Herself at College?" Answer by Margaret E. Sangster: "She may go on errands, copy papers, press skirts and rebind them, trim hats, make beds, wait on tables and shampoo hair."

Good Health for Girls: "Perspiration is sometimes offensive. An eminent skin specialist advises a tea of white-oak bark applied freely to the perspiring parts."

Fashion: "Shirtwaists opening in the back are only becoming to young and slender forms. They are novel, and it is claimed induce a better carriage and straighter back."

Wonders a reader: "Should children be taught to say 'Yes, ma'am,' and 'No, ma'am'? Some of my friends consider it old-fashioned." Answer: "It is customary now to teach children to add the name of the person, as 'Yes, Mrs. Grant,' and 'No, papa.'"

When the public-relations man from the American embassy in London told Helen Cook, Pan-American Airways hostess at Heathrow Airport, that Pan-American hostess Helen Cook.

Bruce Gould and Harlan Miller were on the plane coming in, she made him take her out to meet them. Told our far-flung editor she just had to tell him how much she loved the JOURNAL and how she couldn't do without it. As nice a reception as he ever got on foreign soil, Mr. G. wrote us from England, enclosing Helen's photograph. What made the reception all the nicer, he added, she's even better looking than her picture.

Paris this year was full of pretty, feminine clothes. The 1951 version of the romantic "cloak and dagger" fashion is the full skirt and basque jacket by Christian Dior on the cover, photographed by Wilhela Cushman while she was there covering the fall and winter collections. The skirt is silk faille, the jet-embroidered jacket and pillbox hat in velvet, the blouse white slipper satin. The picture was taken in Princess Gourielli's apartment overlooking Paris.

If you're fed up with movies that make you feel you could do a better one yourself, don't miss The River. Just out, it was made in India from the book by a JOURNAL author, Rumer Godden, and directed by Jean Renoir. Its producers, Kenneth and Melvina McEldowney, told John Morris at the preview here it was their first picture; that he had been a florist, she an air-line publicist. "How did you happen to do it?" John asked. . . . "Oh, we just got fed up with movies that made us feel we could do a better one ourselves. Hope you think we succeeded." John did. So will you.

Movie-maker Melvina McEldowney.

We sometimes feel we should be publishing two or three picture magazines for the fine photographs we just can't get into the JOURNAL—fashions, food, interiors, gardens, houses, people. We'd need a whole supplement for surplus pictures of How America Lives alone. Like the ones Joe Di Pietro took of Ray Hill at the hospital in Maryland while the husband and father of this month's family was standing by for his latest offspring to be born. It was a ten-hour vigil, so Joe had plenty of time to get sneak shots of Ray in various attitudes of waiting—fretful, dozing, bored, and so on—a wonderful sequence of long-drawn-out expectancy. A funny thing, though: Joe got so nervous waiting to take a first-minute picture of mother and baby that everybody thought he was the father.

A girl here who rides occasionally in Central Park notices that every horse she hires does the same thing: not only stops of its own accord on the red light, and starts up on the green, but even tries to beat the light a little on the green—just like a taxi driver.

A University of Michigan survey shows that children watch television on an average of 19½ hours per week. . . . In 1940, 79 per cent of American homes had electric lighting, and 2 out of 5 had mechanical refrigerators. By 1950, the figures had risen to 94 per cent with electric lighting and 4 out of 5 with mechanical refrigeration . . . There are three marriages every minute somewhere in the U.S. In June, 1951, only one third of all girls between 20 and 24 were still unmarried and only 15 per cent of all women between 25 and 34. . . .

Gladys Denny Shultz arrived in Chicago to confer with Doctor Bundesen, only to find that two big conventions had filled every hotel in town to overflowing. Doctor B. phoned around; finally told Gladys he'd found her a bed. "They're putting you up out at the Isolation Hospital," he told her. Late that night, weary and full of misgiving, she showed up at the hospital. Found that Dr. B. had known all the time that the superintendent and his family were away, that Gladys was going to get their whole seven-room apartment.

DI PIETRO

How-America-Lives Ray Hill awaiting new arrival.

My Cousin

ILLUSTRATED BY

"No one will ever know the burden of blame

I carry on my shoulders, nor that every day

I ask myself the question I cannot answer.

Was Rachel innocent or guilty?"

By Daphne du Maurier

Beginning a serial in five parts by the author of REBECCA.

THEY used to hang men at Four Turnings in the old days. Not any more, though. Now, when a murderer pays the penalty for his crime, he does so up at Bodmin, after fair trial at the assizes. That is, if the law convicts him before his own conscience kills him. It is better so. Like a surgical operation. And the body has decent burial, though a nameless grave.

When I was a child it was otherwise. I can remember as a little lad seeing a fellow hang in chains where the four roads meet. His face and body were blackened with tar for preservation. He hung there for five weeks before they cut him down, and it was the fourth week that I saw him. He swung between earth and sky upon his gibbet—or, as my Cousin Ambrose told me, betwixt heaven and hell. Heaven he would never achieve, and the hell that he had known was lost to him.

Ambrose prodded at the body with his stick. I can see it now, moving with the wind like a weather vane on a rusty pivot, a poor scarecrow of what had been a man.

Ambrose must have taken me there for a purpose. Perhaps to test my nerve. To see if I would run away, or laugh, or cry. As my guardian, father, brother—as, in fact, my whole world—he was forever testing me.

"There you are, Philip," he said. "It's what we all come to in the end. Some upon a battlefield, some in bed, others according to their destiny. But there's no escape. You cannot learn the lesson too young. But this is how a felon dies. Here is Tom Jenkyn, honest and dull, except when he drank too much. It's true his wife was a scold, but that was no excuse to kill her. If we killed women for their tongues, all men would be murderers."

I wished he had not named the man. Up to that moment the body had been a dead thing, without identity. Now it would have connection with reality, and the man with watery eyes who sold lobsters on the town quay. It was not so long ago that I had seen him.

"Well," said Ambrose, watching my face, "what do you make of him?"

I shrugged my shoulders, and kicked the base of the gibbet with my feet. Ambrose must never know I cared. That I felt sick at heart, and terrified. He would despise me. Ambrose at twenty-seven was god of all creation, certainly god of my own narrow world, and the whole object of my life was to resemble him.

"Tom had a brighter face when I saw him last," I answered. "Now he isn't fresh enough to become bait for his own lobsters."

Ambrose laughed and pulled my ears. "That's my boy," he said. "Spoken like a true philosopher"; and then he added, "If you feel squeamish, go and be sick behind the hedge, and remember I have not seen you."

He turned his back upon the gibbet and went striding away. (Continued on Page 76)

Copyright, 1951, by Daphne du Maurier

Rachel

dangerous male ahead!

By FLORENCE JANE SOMAN

"AND what made you decide to come to New York, my dear?" Miss Baines asked. She smiled at Marcy in her calm, gentle way, but there were surprisingly few lines in her face, considering her seventy-one years. "From what your grandfather wrote me, you were the prettiest and most popular girl in town."

Marcy put down her teacup and grinned. "There wasn't much competition around there," she said. "And you can't trust grandpa's eyes—they're slightly out of focus as far as I'm concerned. But—well, you know what Pennyfield was like, Miss Baines. And after pop married again, I felt sort of in the way."

She lowered her eyes, caught up suddenly in a little drift of longing. I wish, she thought—her fingers made a small pleat in her skirt—I wish I could find someone nice to marry too.

She wasn't looking, as most girls were, for anyone dashing and handsome and exciting. In fact, her every instinct was to steer clear of anyone like that. You had to worry too much about keeping him, and he usually had the power to hurt, to twist your heart in little ways. It was an exquisite kind of torture. She knew, because of Rocky. Never again.

All I want is someone sweet, on the quiet side, who has a nice face. Someone reliable. Peace of mind was the thing to look for when you fell in love and got married. And it was just as easy to fall in love with a good, steady man as with the other kind.

She looked up at Miss Baines again. She certainly is well preserved, she thought. She had never met Miss Baines before. The old lady, a former friend of her grandfather's, was from Vermont, too, but she had lived for a long time in New York. In fact, because of her dabblings in real estate, it was she who had placed Marcy in her present flat. Miss Baines owned the house. Marcy considered herself lucky all around—lucky to have found such a nice place and lucky that her father insisted on sending her a liberal allowance every month to pay for it.

But she hadn't been prepared for Miss Baines. All the old ladies she had ever known were plump and silvery-haired, looking like old-fashioned advertisements for somebody's cocoa; they spent their time crocheting and sending out greeting cards. Miss Baines was of a different breed entirely; she was thin, erect and quite chic with her blue-gray coiffure setting off the dark elegance of her clothes. Furthermore, she seemed to be on a (Continued on Page 205)

She couldn't help admiring him. It was like gazing at a sable coat in a window before you walked on to look at something you could afford to buy.

ILLUSTRATED BY TOM MILLER

girls ran the other way when they saw him coming. . . .

The young couple were in love,
but Aunt Elsie glimpsed
a nameless shadow over them
There was a lightning second of silence.
I saw Aunt Elsie lean forward in her seat.

Too young to Marry

by Sherrill Lee

AUNT ELSIE'S youngest brother, Ross, tells me that when she was sixteen, Elsie fell out of a surrey onto the pavement in front of their house. Ever since then, he relates, Elsie has been unhappy. I have always felt, however, that Aunt Elsie's dissatisfaction with life started at the age of twenty, when she returned home from New York's Juilliard School of Music, thereby losing track of a West Point officer with whom she was in love. Whatever the cause may have been, Aunt Elsie has seldom been completely happy since her girlhood. Her troubles have grown year by year like a cancerous disease until, four months ago, they finally became full-blown and burst upon us, angry and swollen. This was Aunt Elsie's largest mental and emotional crisis, to which the family will hereafter refer as the Great Panic.

For several years before its advent, we sensed that family relations were not safe from possible disaster. We all felt, without saying so, that Aunt Elsie might be actually hiding a leak in the family ship of sanity and good spirit, and that one day storm waves might sweep in through this chink and destroy our home. Such a feeling of foreboding pushed itself into a prominent place in my mind during the summer before the Panic. I shall always remember that summer well, because it was reputed to be the hottest three months in ten years. I also remember it as the last summer Aunt Elsie will ever spend with my family.

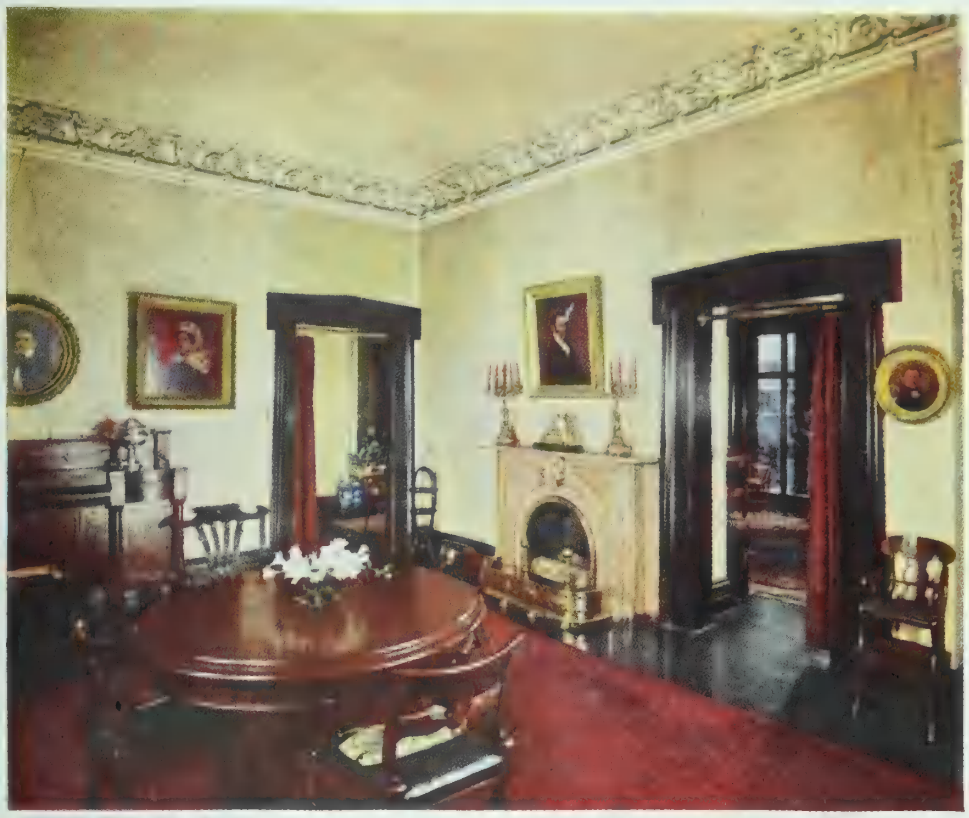
At the beginning of April she had begun to be restless for a visit to us. Ever since I can remember a wanderlust has overtaken Aunt Elsie annually in the spring. Its regularity is as dependable as the return of birds from a southern climate or the rapid melting of winter snow under the sun's heat. At such times she invariably wants to visit my family, because my mother was very close to her heart and because it costs her nothing to stay at our house. I am sure, moreover, that she has a comfortable sense of importance when she visits the home of my father. He bears the impressive title of John Lowell Russell, M. D., Chief of Staff of the Phillips Memorial Hospital. By dint of twenty years' residence in Glencoe, combined with the delicate skill of an expert surgeon, he is well known in our town. When she is with us, Elsie shares the love and respect father is generally accorded. In April of that year she wrote to say that she would arrive with her two daughters, Lu and Peggy, on the tenth of June to visit for "a while." None of us knew just what to expect by the term "a while." As it turned out, she meant the summer, for it was not until the fifth of August that she took the trouble to buy a return ticket to her home in Montana.

That summer I spent five days a week as a Nurse's Aide at the Presbyterian Hospital in Chicago. Saturdays and Sundays and every day after three o'clock represented my free hours. They were the hours, week after week, in which I first came to know my aunt well. I had never before realized what a unique person she is. I discovered for the first time that she is simply the sum total of her desires. Her mind is a battlefield where the treasures of the world are gained or lost. Her life is (Continued on Page 138)

THE JOURNAL'S
COMPLETE-IN-ONE-ISSUE CONDENSED NOVEL

Empire pieces predominate in most finely furnished Savannah rooms today, filled in with Hepplewhite, Sheraton and Phyfe.

WINBURN



SAVAN

THE finest of the houses that line Savannah streets and frame her fascinating squares range from Adamesque through Regency into Classical Revival. But more than a study in styles, it is the present appearance of the Savannah houses in their settings which so many people like myself find enchanting. I like their looks in the squares especially. Generally with a monument or fountain half hidden in the middle among live oaks and palmettos, the surrounding façades form a frieze of soft yellows, pinks and chalky whites, marked off with ornamental ironwork and held together by garden walls crowded over with crape myrtle and glossy green magnolias. As for Savannah interiors at their most attractive today, here you have them.

By RICHARD PRATT
Architectural Editor of the Journal

Glimpses into two of old Savannah's score or more of squares show the architecture all clad in subtropical verdure.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

Cornice and doorway details and the mantel carving all belong to the rich decorative period that produced the furniture.

ANDERSON

Noteworthy in this lofty, gracious drawing room are the Empire chaise, and Thomas Jefferson's cane-seated chair.

N A H

In the theater, the only sin is defeat

FINGER to lips, Miss Jessica Lovelace glared at the two dachshunds on her bed. Then, assured of their silence, she tiptoed to the slightly open door of her room, to listen to the conversation in the vestibule. Her hearing, at any rate, was perfect; every word came to her distinctly.

Angela—her beloved Angela: secretary, companion and lady's maid—had answered the doorbell. After thirty years away from England, Angela still sounded like the vicar's daughter she was, and she greeted the young producer, in her breathy, hurried way, as though he were a parishioner come to call on her papa.

"Good evening, Mr. Marshall—won't you come in? Miss Lovelace will be right with you."

"Thank you." The young man's voice was firm and cheerful—a gentleman's voice. How nice, Miss Lovelace thought.

"Here now—there are cigarettes in that box, and an ash tray here; and pay no attention to Poppy. He'll perch there on the fire screen and won't trouble you at all."

"Does Poppy talk?"

"Oh, he's a very bad bird, really. He can, but he won't. That is, he will, but only for Miss Lovelace—and she rehearses with him by the hour."

At that moment Poppy emitted a sullen cackle, and Mr. Marshall laughed. Then Miss Lovelace heard him say, "Will you give this to Miss Lovelace for me?"

"Oh, she will be pleased. Excuse me, Mr. Marshall." And she came running into the bedroom with a spray of bronze-green orchids in a cellophane box. "Look, Miss Lovelace, look!"

Jessica Lovelace nodded. "Close the door, Angela. They're beautiful. But there's no need to be so excited. Pin them on my coat, if you will."

She lit a cigarette and sat on the bed—the picture of imperturbable calm. But she was far from calm, because she knew why Mr. Marshall had come. Eileen Shively, the agent, had telephoned a few days before: "I don't want to raise your hopes, dear, but Vincent Marshall has taken an option on Crimson Velvet, and he wants to—to talk to you about it." To look you over, she meant, and had almost said; and Miss Lovelace, nettled, answered dryly, "Thank you, Eileen. I'll be happy to see him if he cares to come."

The very next morning he telephoned. He had never had the pleasure of meeting Miss Lovelace, he said, but would she like to go to the opening of the new musical at the 47th Street Theater with him? She would, and here he was. (Continued on Page 128)

He looked at her in sorrow and pity.
He had found out what he had come to learn.

ILLUSTRATED BY R. G. HARRIS

Tryout

By Robert Wallsten

John and Mary Adele Morris

Helen and Joe O'Donnell

Ellie and John Simmons

John and Nora O'Leary Smith

Our own young

Eight ideas on decorating for young householders—— practical, inexpensive and definitely eye-catching.

Like other young marrieds, we have a double motive in decorating—to suit ourselves to a trim T, and keep the lid on the family budget. And whether it's only a brand-new coat of paint for a junk-shop special or a complete overhauling job on a pedigreed antique, about nine tenths of the fun is being able to say, like proud parents, "We did it ourselves!" Here, then, are eight of our own favorite decorating ideas that can be anyone else's for a small sum of money and a slightly larger amount of elbow grease; that will, we feel sure, hold their own through the years and won't be pushed up into the attic as your floor space and/or budget increase.

John and Dele Morris, for instance (John is our picture editor), are in the process of furnishing their newly built home, and abound with tried-and-tested money savers, a number of which they're passing along to you. If your problem is bookshelves, and an afternoon's meander through furniture departments has discouraged you about the prices of ready-made (Continued on Page 107)

Dining table from a flush door. Now, sanded and lacquered, it rests on a pair of iron-legged sawhorses, will seat six to eight very comfortably.

Stair-tread bookcases — make them yourself, with 3 x 10 supports between the shelves, build them up to any height you wish. Treads and supports may be purchased from any lumber company.

FOWLE

gmarrieds

ne break-front can house a radio-honograph unit, provide ample storage or books and phonograph records, lus a worthy setting for your ne "show-off" pieces of china.

Twentieth-century Victorian—a fringed table cover in bright felt with ice-cream-parlor chairs ($2 apiece in junk shops), painted white. Give them felt seat cushions to match the table cover's fringe.

Remember these? They're grade-school chairs, another second-hand "find," converted for breakfast in a kitchen with a coat of paint and bright seat covers.

he coffee table (opposite) was made from a utcher's block, with simple legs of strap on. The draperies — inexpensive innow net, which keeps out glare and ts in plenty of light.

Marble-topped table made from two sections of iron fence, the marble slab purchased for $25 from a stonecutter. A canvas director's chair is dressed up with white cotton fringe.

Political Pilgrim's Progress

"Why don't you

GET OUT OF TOWN?"

All Connie Sycafoose wanted was to wheel her baby to the park without encountering homeless derelicts—drunken, ill or scavenging through garbage cans. She didn't know she was getting a first lesson in government by politicians.

Suzanne. Her carriage rides, airings began it.

As Connie Sycafoose maneuvered her baby carriage out through the door of her apartment house, she saw that a bum was going through her garbage can, set by the curb for collection. Head deep in the container, he was tearing open the parcels, putting anything he wanted into his pocket and throwing wrappings and refuse on the sidewalk.

Connie felt revulsion mixed with pity. Pity because of the man's broken shoes, held together with string; ragged trousers, out-at-elbows jacket, emaciated body. Revulsion at the pawing over of the garbage, the litter he was making at her doorway. Connie had always shrunk from speaking to the homeless men who had become a common sight on New York City's Second Avenue at 51st Street, where she lived. She turned the carriage south and started for the park.

Two more men were sitting slumped over on the steps of an empty building, staring vacantly. Another swayed precariously on the curb, the fixed, foolish grin of intoxication on his face. Connie wheeled Suzanne's carriage around him.

Connie and Dick had felt so lucky when they found an apartment that occupied a whole floor of the old house on Second Avenue. They loved the nicely proportioned rooms and high ceilings. There was even a little room off the bedroom that could serve as a nursery! The streets outside hadn't seemed to matter then.

The tall, slender girl from Boston had met the tall, lean man from West Virginia two and a half years before, when Connie was twenty-seven and Dick was twenty-eight. Dick had graduated from West Virginia University and taught before he went into the Navy; had taken a job in New York with the American Express after he came out. Connie had worked in Boston for several years, and then had come to New York in the spirit of adventure that brings so many young people to the big city. The minute Dick laid eyes on Connie he knew she was the one. But it took Connie a bit longer. It wasn't until their second meeting that she was sure! That was in September, 1948, and they were married the following January, even though it meant living in one room because no apartments were to be had.

Then they learned of the place on Second Avenue that was available because there had been a fire. Together they tackled the burned-out rooms. They had doorways widened, so that three rooms could be thrown into one when they wished. Dick made bookcases and cupboards. They had the walls of the living room painted a deep forest green. In winter, drapes of Chinese red, matching the Chinese prints on the wall, made the room warm and cozy. In summer Connie took the red drapes down, and the breeze from east or west swept through the whole apartment. To crown all, Suzanne had arrived.

"We're pretty settled people," Connie expressed it. "After we found each other, what we both wanted was a home and children."

PHOTOGRAPHS BY ESTHER BUBLEY

Homeless men on Second Avenue wer

Connie had continued with her job until a week before Suzanne was born. Dick was going to Columbia University at night, completing his Ph.D. in education. Away at work in the daytime, and happy to stay home evenings together when Dick was not in classes, neither had been particularly aware of the derelicts until after Suzanne was born.

It was the following spring, when Connie was keeping Suzanne out-of-doors as much as she could, that both Dick and Connie became "Baby's safety is mother's job." Connie sought police aid, was told hands of law are tied.

To kids of neighborhood, sprawling drunken men were of intense interest. Wasn't this a welfare problem? Connie and husband, Dick, thought so, but social worker, questioned, doubted that anything could be done about it.

Advised to tackle problem politically, Connie and Dick made ap pointment with Democratic district boss, Connolly, at his bar Connolly did not come. Bartender told them to try Tammany Club nebody else's problem" to Connie until one nearly fell on her baby. Police lieutenant advised. "Just shut your eyes to the whole thing."

conscious of the scarecrow figures in tattered, nondescript clothing, who now seemed to be everywhere on Second Avenue and on the adjacent side streets. When Dick left in the morning, there was usually a man going through their garbage can. When Connie came out later with Suzanne on errands or for airings, she was likely to pass twenty or more, sitting on curbs or leaning against store fronts, even lying sprawled on the sidewalk, dead drunk. Connie and Dick had had unpleasant proof that the apartment-house entrances served as toilets for the men. Dick would not let Connie go out at night without him.

Turning east at 48th Street, Connie felt the thrill she always experienced at the gleaming, dramatic oblong of the United Nations Building, thrusting high into the sky. A little park facing the East River, where she spent as much time with Suzanne as she could, was in its shadow. But so also were hangouts of the derelicts. The buildings torn down to make way for the new installations had left hollows and gaps which homeless men had appropriated. Scattered through this section were regular hobo "jungles," in the heart of the metropolis, where men cooked and ate and slept under crude shed roofs or ragged canvas.

Now, as she went by, Connie saw three men, sitting as usual in a little niche made by some projecting timbers. They were drinking from a bottle which they passed from one to another. A little farther on she saw others wandering through (Continued on Page 113)

score to date: "Two tries, two sh-offs, zero." When she tried Hall she met third brush-off.

These men live by selling loot from refuse. Home is hobo "jungle" in heart of New York. Many vagrants are ill.

Connolly, at Tammany Club, agreed problem of bums is awful. "In La Guardia's day there were hospitals where they could be sent. Did a lot of good too."

Confused and disappointed — but ready to quit? No. Now Connie thinks, "If enough people like us got busy and worked in the party, maybe we'd get something done."

Political Pilgrim's Progress

How to get BETTER MEN Elected

Have you a low opinion of public officials? A senator (and former university president) tells why such an attitude may actually keep second-rate men in office.

By SENATOR J. W. FULBRIGHT

WASHINGTON, D.C.

"THE Secretary of the Army has asked me to express his deep regret that your son was killed in action in Korea, 21 May 1951. Confirming letter follows."

Few of us have not been touched, directly or indirectly, by the sadness of just such a message. Few of us, for as long as we can remember, have not had our daily lives either dominated by war or overshadowed by the threat of war.

The mothers and fathers of our soldiers, the wives and children, the sweethearts and friends, have accepted their losses with resignation and bewilderment. Isn't there anything that can be done to prevent the recurrence of these national bloodlettings? Women, with an instinctive concern for the preservation of the race, have, it seems to me, a special interest in this question, and since they are now in the majority in this country, they have a responsibility they cannot escape.

WIDE WORLD

Nations start wars or become involved in wars because their leaders lack the patience, the foresight and the wisdom to find a way to settle their differences by reason rather than by force. Recently one of our most astute columnists, a woman, wrote: "This country . . . has been far too much under the domination of military and strategical thinking, and terribly lacking in both historical sense and political imagination." This being at least part of our trouble, is there anything the women, in business or in the home, who have little time to study military strategy, revolutionary Marxism or Chinese history, can do to help bring about a more peaceful and less savage world? I believe there is.

The Constitution of the United States, the basic law of our land, does not bar men and women of superior ability and character from public office. It is the attitude of the citizens toward public officials, and the traditions and myths that have grown up about politicians, that have so effectively deterred the abler citizens among us from seeking public office.

The founding fathers of this nation—Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Hamilton, Franklin, Jay, Adams, and their associates—were the outstanding men of their day. They were men of many talents. They were well educated, with great energy and imagination. They were men of ideas and with the ability to put them into effect. They considered it to be an honor and a duty to serve the republic which they created. They were politicians. They understood the art of politics and practiced it to their own glory and for the welfare of the people they represented.

Is it not a strange and curious thing that in the beginning, when we were a weak and struggling community of three million pioneers, our ablest citizens sought and were given the responsibility of governing us; yet today, when we are a powerful nation, proud and rich, our ablest citizens, except in time of national emergency, are unwilling to seek or accept public office? From my own experience in teaching law, I found that the brightest and ablest students looked forward to careers in private practice, not in public office. The most common reaction to the suggestion of public service was that they could not afford it and that it was too rough a life.

In confirmation of this, a poll was taken a short time ago on the question "If you had a son, would you like him to enter politics?" The approximate result was 70 per cent "No," 16 per cent "Yes," and the balance undecided. In answer to a subsidiary question, "Why?", a common observation was, "I prefer that my son work for a living."

Recently, before the Douglas Committee considering ethical standards in government, a well-known Washington columnist of national reputation said, "I am afraid that a large part of the public has little but contempt for most public officeholders." The findings of the Kefauver Committee would seem to support this view.

Let us consider for a moment the consequences of this low opinion of the people, which I do not share, for the political officials whom they elect to direct their government. Our political life becomes subject to what one might call a vicious circle. Our public officials are assumed to be corrupt or incompetent and, therefore, the people have little respect for them. Since the people have little respect for the politicians, the decent and abler citizens of the community will not seek public office and consequently only mediocre, or worse, candidates are available at election time. The bright and able young men prefer to enter the professions or industry where, with reasonable diligence, they can look forward to a life of security and honor in the eyes of the community. There are, of course, many honorable and able men in political office, but this critical attitude of the public often results in their becoming self-conscious and disillusioned.

What can we do about this deplorable situation? First, and most important, we can change our attitude toward public officials, both as a class and as individuals. It is especially important that we do so with regard to the local and state officials, for it is from that level that the raw material for the higher offices is recruited. We must stop thinking of the sheriff, or the prosecuting attorney, or the councilman, as another one of those (Continued on Page 218)

"The Constitution does not bar men and women of superior ability and character from public office. It is the attitude of the citizens toward public officials, and the traditions and myths that have grown up about politicians, that have so effectively deterred the abler citizens among us from seeking office."

"The boys in the back room"

Who runs your city? The boys in the back room. Who are they? "Practical politicians"—often not the highest type of citizen. How do they do it? Ask the boys—they know.

The "woggle bug" is the campaign purse contributed by interested supporters so the party can "go down the road." Future political favors often depend upon how much an individual or business contributes to the "woggle bug." The opposition calls collecting for the woggle bug "macing." The party concerned calls it "bearing the freight."

The "fix" or "protection money" paid by racketeers to public officials is called "juice" in California. In Florida it is called "ice."

"We may wreck the party, but we'll control the wreckage."

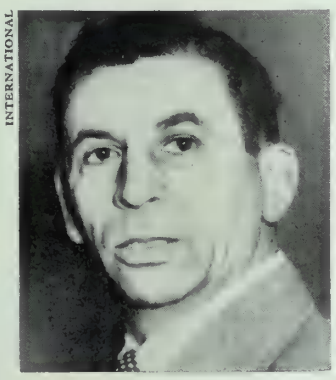
The average number of voters in the average political precinct is 600; the average number of people who vote in the average primary is only 125. Thus, the precinct leader who controls 65 votes can determine the primary-election result in the average precinct—65 being more than half of 125.

Eight districts of Columbia County in Pennsylvania were so completely under the control of one man that when a reporter, two days before an election, asked him to telephone the results as soon as the votes were counted, he said, "Hell, I'll give them to you now." Which he did. Immediately after the election, the man called the reporter. "That count I gave you is all right," he said, "except for one district. One sonavabitch that we didn't expect came back from Harrisburg to vote."

A common item on campaign expense accounts is "hauling voters." Workers are usually paid a flat rate—$15 to $20 for election day—but sometimes they are paid 25 cents to $2 "per head," and their take runs into impressive sums. In Jersey City, under the Hague machine, one enthusiastic vote hauler drove up to the poll with a busload. "Here's the gang from Bayonne," he called happily.

"I guess I can explain best what to do to succeed in politics by tellin' you what I did. . . . What I did was to get some marketable goods before goin' to the leaders. What do I mean by marketable goods? Let me tell you: I had a cousin, a young man who didn't take any particular interest in politics. I went to him and said, 'Tommy, I'm going to be a politician and I want to get a followin'; can I count on you?' He said, 'Sure, George.' That's how I started in business. I got a marketable commodity, one vote."

A fairly accurate way to identify the political boss in any given constituency is to discover whom one must "see" in order to get a job in the public service.



Political influence is often called "juice." A citizen possessed of juice in his home town can telephone the chief of police and say, "Hello, Joe. This is Bill. Howarya, Joe? Joe, you know my wife. Joe, she parked in front of the fireplug at Main and First at noon today. Fine, Joe. Thanks, Joe." Bill is a man with juice.

Once there was a senator who approached a constituent whom he counted upon for active help in a campaign, only to find that the help wasn't forthcoming. The senator couldn't understand the man's apathy. "Didn't I appoint your son postmaster?" he asked. The man admitted that he had. "Didn't I send your nephew to West Point?" Again the constituent conceded that he had. "Didn't I get your brother out of that tax trouble he was in?" "You did," the man said. "Then why are you letting me down in this campaign?" he demanded. His answer: "It is true that you did all these things for me, and I appreciated them, but what have you done for me lately?"

When good citizens refuse public office

MEN LIKE THESE

run our government

Meyer Lansky

"Little Meyer" Lansky, forty-nine years old, who with the even more notorious Frank Costello heads New York's gambling and racketeering activities, lives in a penthouse at 36 East 36th Street in Manhattan. He has been a friend of politicians for many years. In 1946 he helped to arrange the parole of "Lucky" Luciano, narcotics overlord, later visited him in Cuba and Italy. His son, Paul, was appointed to West Point in 1949 by Representative Arthur Klein, New York Democrat.

Arthur H. Samish

"I am the governor of the legislature," million-dollar lobbyist Samish is quoted in the Philbrick report. "To hell with the governor of the state." California's "Mr. Big"—he is 6′2″ tall and weighs over 300 pounds—calls himself a "public-relations counsel." In 1943 he enabled a state senator to buy one-fifth interest in a liquor distributorship for $500, which sold four years later for $40,000. Senator Estes Kefauver describes Samish as "a combination of Falstaff, Little Boy Blue and Machiavelli, crossed with an eel."

Charles Binaggio

Outstanding example of political boss and undisguised gangster in the United States, Charlie Binaggio was the leader of the First Ward Democratic Club in Kansas City. He supplanted the old city boss, Tom Pendergast, branched out and helped to elect Governor Forrest Smith. Last year he was found dead in his political clubhouse with four bullet holes in his head. Shortly before he was killed, he had told a friend that he "planned to get out of politics altogether—too many headaches."

Abner Zwillman

A poor boy from the slums of Newark, New Jersey, Abner "Longie" Zwillman organized the Third Ward Political when he was twenty-one. In 1930, at the age of twenty-six, he got a six-month term for assault, decided to keep the cops on his side thereafter. Through bootlegging, gambling and racketeering, he moved to "respectability"—and a $200,000 twenty-one-room house in West Orange. Now he has many friends in public offices, state and city, who owe him allegiance because he put them there.

the Auction Sale

Plain gossip started it all—you know how men talk—and now mother and father weren't speaking.

By LETHA RITTER

IT was hot the day of Bill Hensley's sale. Hot even for an August day in Western Kansas. We started early, but even at nine-thirty in the morning the sun was burning and the edge of the wind felt scorched as it swept past you.

The heat made me feel worse. I wondered if maybe I could ask father to turn around and take me home. But, young as I was, I knew that skipping that auction sale wouldn't cure what ailed me. One way or another, that sale was going to settle the almost wordless quarrel between my father and mother. If we didn't go, the quarrel would grow bigger and bigger, uglier and uglier. If it got any worse I couldn't stand it.

It had been going on for ten days now. Ever since the last Saturday we drove in to town for the mail and groceries.

Watching mother buy groceries at Sam Winter's store was the biggest event of the week for a boy like me who was alone so much. She would stand straight and slim and pretty, reading from a long list in her fine, firm handwriting, just as though she could buy out the whole store if she chose. Father would stand beside her with his wallet in his hand. You could just feel how impatient he was, wanting her to reach the end of her wants. It was like a contest. I always got excited watching. Someday, I thought, father will win. But he never did. Mother would keep on reading right down to the end, then look slowly around the store and add another item or two.

On this summer day, the list was longer than ever. Sam had figures all the way down the big paper bag he was using for a sales slip. When he reached the bottom father said, "Harrumph," and opened his wallet. Mother read on, cool as a cucumber, and Sam wet the tip of his stub pencil on his tongue and started another column.

Halfway down the bag, mother said, "That's all I have listed this time, Mr. Winters."

Father got some bills out and said quickly, "How much is the damage this time, Sam?"

Sam was slow getting at the total. By the time he arrived mother had finished her survey of the shelves. She said, "Add a pound of baking chocolate and a can of sliced peaches to that, please. We're having company Sunday."

Mother had a saying that even if you lived in the middle of nowhere you could set a good table, if you were a good manager. She was, and even father felt proud when company stuffed themselves and bragged on mother's cooking. But you could tell he thought she carried it too far sometimes.

Father picked up the box of groceries and Sam brought our mail from the post office at the back of the store. He handed it to mother and said, "You get more mail than anybody else in the country, Mrs. Andrews, and you get it every week at that." He said that every time, but mother always smiled and looked pleased.

"We have to keep up with the rest of the world while we build a new one out here, Mr. Winters," she said, looking through the mail before she stuffed it down in a corner of the grocery box.

Our light spring wagon was across the street, the mares dozing at the hitching post. Most prairie farmers went everywhere in heavy lumber wagons, their women and girls wearing big slat sunbonnets for shade. I strutted a little, boy-fashion, proud of our trim outfit with the big striped umbrella fastened to (Continued on Page 210)

The Journal Presents LETHA RITTER AND HER FIRST PUBLISHED STORY

Father had said, "I won't have a sissy for a son."
And mother answered,
"I won't have a clodhopper for mine."

ILLUSTRATED BY WALTER BAUMHOFER

THE SUIT in oxford-gray flannel is a perfect background for change. We like the look of Mrs. Taylor's yellow sweater with the rolled neckline, the matching belt, the red bag; we also see it in spring with soft blouse and a flowered toque. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 7529. 12 to 40.

HAT BY ELIZABETH MARKS, EYES BY AGNEW

© VOGUE

MARIA MARTEL

THE COAT in silky gray fleece will go on forever. The classic lines, the sleeve which can be worn long or turned back in a cuff, the patch pockets make it a real Gem. You might line it with a splash of red or in a matching color. A touch of fur or a bright stole for added warmth and color. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 7533. 12 to 46.

MUFF BY FREDRICA, HAT BY MR. JOHN

Back and other views and prices are on Page 121

the Journal's LITTLE GEM OF A WARDROBE

It's the lasting quality of clothes that we try to emphasize in a Gem of a Wardrobe. Lasting from the standpoint of fashion as well as fabric. Mrs. Lloyd Taylor (mother of two young sons, who still finds time to make most of her own clothes) is a firm believer in our theory and feels that this gray fleece coat is a Gem because it is so classic. It is neither too full nor too straight . . . it is pretty with all colors. The suit in oxford-gray flannel has a conservative button-up jacket and a four-gore skirt. It has the faculty for change. It takes to sports accessories as shown, but would also be right for a pale chiffon blouse and a jeweled pin. A black velvet dress is a timeless fashion. You make it a dress of the season by your choice of accessories, this year a taffeta petticoat. A bright wool in basic design takes to scarves and belts prettily and easily. The most you could want to change on these clothes would be the hemline, and each would look just as pretty either a little longer or a little shorter. Designs such as these are worthy of the best material you can afford. • By NORA O'LEARY

Pattern Editor of the Journal

THE WOOL DRESS is basic in design, gay in color. The dress zips up the back from just below the waist, which makes it an easy dress to get in and out of. The neckline and sleeves have self-facings; the skirt, four gores. Lovely felt flowers by Lenci. Vogue Design No. 7543, 12 to 20.

THE DRESSY DRESS in black velvet, a conservative design enhanced by a beautiful fabric. For year-round wear you may prefer it in a silk taffeta. Under it put a silk taffeta petticoat with pleated ruffle. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 7542, 12 to 20.

PEARLS BY SEAMAN SCHEPPS

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Conn.; in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont. *(Connecticut residents please add sales tax.)

They had tried everything. Then they remembered

t i g e r

i n

to fight fire with fire.

by CLARA L. PARKS

the closet

FOR once the alarm clock beat Marian to the punch. In a daze she reached over and fumbled for the knob, then lay back and fought sleep and wondered if the noise had wakened the children. But no sound came from the other room where eighteen-month-old Eric and three-and-a-half-year-old Gerry slept in their cribs.

What a night! Up three times with Gerry's nightmares. A tiger. In the closet.

Five months that tiger had lurked there. Five months of broken sleep for her and Andy. And what they hadn't done to get rid of the beast! They had tried everything they could think of. They searched in books for the answer. They gave Gerry extra love and attention. Marian took him around to play with other children his age. His wants were attended to ahead of baby Eric's as much as possible. The doctor prescribed vitamins. And still the tiger haunted their nights. They lost Gerry's circus book. A night light held back the darkness. And Marian even sent away for a stuffed toy tiger with a silly expression on its face. The tiger took one look at it, said, "That's no tiger," and went back to the closet. The toy landed in the bottom of the toy chest.

Poor baby. Her own childhood dreams had been invaded by lions. What did it all mean?

Feeling herself slipping back into warm darkness, she threw off the covers and sat up on the edge of the bed. She put on her slippers and sat hunched over with her face in her hands and looked at the floor. She felt weak and dizzy. She'd better get moving if she wanted to fix the boys' cereal before they woke up.

Andy had made coffee before he left. Its fragrance still filled the house. It beckoned to her. She went into the bathroom and washed with cold water. Back in the bedroom, she dressed quietly. Fresh underthings, a clean print house dress, bright socks and saddle shoes, her hair brushed, and she was ready for the day.

Once in the kitchen, she worked quickly. She put the coffee on to reheat and then (Continued on Page 179)

The Journal Presents CLARA L. PARKS AND HER FIRST PUBLISHED STORY

ILLUSTRATED BY Schwinn

MRS. LOVETT, at the door of her Locust Valley house, wearing tweeds in her favorite mauve and rose shades, a velours hat.

HIGH-COLLARED black broadtail coat is lined with velvet. She carries a velvet bag, wears a beaver-felt hat, hand-sewn doeskin gloves.

There's something about her

MRS. ROBERT A. LOVETT, wife of the Secretary of Defense, has the kind of feminine loveliness every woman would like to possess. Her clothes reflect her personality, and she repeats her favorite fashions year after year. She has always loved full skirts, and big apron-overskirts, even before they came in style. Early in the morning, you might see her in a pink-and-blue dirndl at her house in Locust Valley, cutting flowers. The same night she might be at a reception in Washington, in bouffant gray tulle. When she wears a suit it is a soft feminine one, often in mauve tones. She loves tweeds and wools in beige and rose-taupe, the colors of her living room. An easy tweed coat is as important to her as a black luncheon dress. Her hats are small and simple—little "muffins," she calls them. Mrs. Lovett finds time for the things that give her delight. She sees her three small grandsons at least once a week, raises her own herbs and flowers, takes cooking lessons, clips magazines and newspapers for fashion and decorating ideas—often ordering her clothes by mail. • By WILHELA CUSHMAN

Fashion Editor of the Journal

MRS. LOVETT'S New York or Washington luncheon suit is velveteen in soft mink beige, worn with pearls, gold earrings.

THIS black silk faille with deep V neck, three-quarter-length sleeves and soft skirt is the dress she wears most for luncheons and teas.

JOHN EN

SMOKE-GRAY faille dress with back fullness in the skirt, a short mink-trimmed slipper-satin jacket for state occasions. Her sandals are gray satin.

ONE of Mrs. Lovett's favorite evening dresses is gray tulle over taffeta, with appliquéd taffeta leaves at the décolletage, tulle around her shoulders.

Scotch-plaid wool world-around travel suit by Etta Gaines, $59.95, worn with green felt beret by Mr. Alf, barrel bag.

MORE and more women are discovering the virtues of clothes that need never be put away or pushed to the back of the closet. This year's fabrics and fashions play into this kind of planning—rayons and rayon-and-wool mixtures that look like flannels and tweeds, tie silks and Paisley challis that go under fur coats and are cool enough for summer, all-purpose tweed coats, lightweight jersey dresses, taffetas and failles for the year round, gay-colored felt or rayon flannel at-home skirts for December or May. Several costumes of this nature give a wonderful stability to every wardrobe, prevent nothing-to-wear gaps between seasons.

By Ruth Mary Packard

YEAR-ROUND FASHIONS

Around-the-calendar suit, gray rayon that looks like flannel. The flared skirt is taffeta-lined. $45.00. Worn with gray velours beret.

Soft black wool jersey dress, $22.95, velvet belt and ba satin pillbox with net veil, $10.95, by John Frederic

Black faille dress, velvet collar, soft hipline, $49.95, by Ben Barrack. Black fox collar tied with a bow, by Harold Rubin, velvet beret.

JOHN ENGSTEAD

ort-sleeved rayon moire afternoon dress with a jacket for day-ne wear, black or brown, around $49.95, by Bernard Browner.

Lightweight beige wool town dress with side fullness, by Madeleine Fauth. $29.95, worn with black calf belt, medallion pendant, brushed-felt beret, $12.95.

Tweed topcoat for country, town or travel, any time of year, $100.00, Alvin Handmacher. Felt cloche by Peggy Buchanan. Medallion by Kendall Smith.

New sleeves, top ruffles—in Fath's gray wool.

PARIS

FASHIONS... PRETTIEST IN YEARS

By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

A look of unsophistication is in these clothes. Simple dressmaker suits with short jackets, sleeveless dresses with buttoned-up boleros, rough tweeds made as softly as a silk are becoming, easy to live in. They will delight American women.

The silhouette has a longer line, neither full nor straight, but slim and shapely. Suits and dresses often have a deep inverted back pleat, the big full coat has a high-belted back, the fitted redingote a princess line. Skirts are at their most flattering length, twelve to fourteen inches from the floor.

Black is the fashion, every hour of the day . . . black with brown, beige, soft green, flashing red. Emerald green is important in wool and satin. Blues are everywhere.

Little bows, biggest detail in Paris . . . bows at the back of the waist or neckline, tailored bows on tweeds, butterfly bows on evening dresses. Dior's suède pump with dressmaker bow and walking heel is the prophetic shoe.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILHELA CUSH

Tweed dress, shoulder cape, edged with Persian. Velours hat, satin scarf, by Dior.

Pale beige jersey basque dress with pleated fullness, matching hat, Jacques Fath.

Short-sleeved black has a Persian-trimmed lero, back fullness. By

Most important, most becoming suit in Paris: Christian Dior's soft black wool, hipbone-le jacket, skirt with deep back pleat, slim front. Velvet hat, bow shoes, antique rhinestone s lipper satin dress, surplice ne, side flare—Christian Dior.

Rough gray wool cardigan suit, bow in back, chiffon scarf. By Dior.

Full, pleated-skirt silhouette in green wool. A two-piece dress, worn over petticoat, by Jacques Fath. Black velvet hat.

Dior's trend-setting tweed coat has high-belted back, controlling its fullness, big easy sleeves with turnback cuffs.

WILHELA CUSHMAN

This slim wool dress with short sleeves and easy skirt has fitted bolero, buttoned to the waist.

Little black dresses of

PARIS

Versions at moderate prices, from coast to coast in the U.S.A. Originals by Christian Dior.

Lightweight wool with a pleated skirt, taffeta petticoat, pillbox with feather brush.

Side-swept silhouette, long-and-short hemline, in faille taffeta. Velours hat with ostrich feather.

Wool dress with shoulder-tip neckline edged in velvet, wool muff with sealskin.

Back-pleat, back-bow. This wool dress has a satin gilet, bow neckline.

Dress with long slim sleeves, wide V neckline, narrow belt, bow-tied. Black fox muff.

NATIONAL GALLERY OF ART—MELLON COLLECTION

PORTRAIT OF A LADY

By ROGIER VAN DER WEYDEN (See Page 212)

MELVILLE GOODWIN USA

by

John P. Marquand

conclusion

THE Chicago plane was excellently equipped. Two beautiful uniformed hostesses put each passenger at his ease as he climbed aboard, smiling and making the gentle, playful remarks hostesses must have learned at hostess seminaries. We were all to relax and we were all to partake of a delightful experience, flying in a pressurized cabin northwestward through the stratosphere. Coffee and meals and chewing gum would be served aloft, and fasten your seat belts, please. After a moment of tension which I always felt whenever a heavy plane left the runway, everything became smooth. The night was clear, and as I was dozing off to sleep, I began to think of Melville Goodwin.

The Army would handle his personal difficulties. The Army had its ways of taking care of its own, when it came to woman trouble. I could see them already, in some Pentagon office, dealing in the broad generalities of love and life and then coming down to particulars.

From a military viewpoint, the subject of woman trouble fell into several categories. Officers weren't meant to be plaster saints. Where you had war you had to have sex, and anyone who got anywhere in the Army could face the fact. For instance, everybody knew about Captain So-and-so and Colonel So-and-so's wife, and none of this ever hurt Captain So-and-so, and he was a general now, because it had all been handled in the right way.

But there were some officers who were different. Take Mel Goodwin, for instance, and I could hear them already taking Mel Goodwin in the Pentagon. You would never think this of Mel Goodwin. He had never been off the deep end before. What he was doing quite frankly denoted emotional instability, and emotionally unstable officers did not look well in Plans; not that there were not maritally unfaithful officers in Plans, but somehow these officers knew how to handle these problems. It was different when someone like Mel Goodwin suddenly took a stray. It was hard to explain the difference, but it shook one's faith in institutions of regularity. The thing to hope for was that he would get over it. That was undoubtedly what they were saying in the Pentagon.

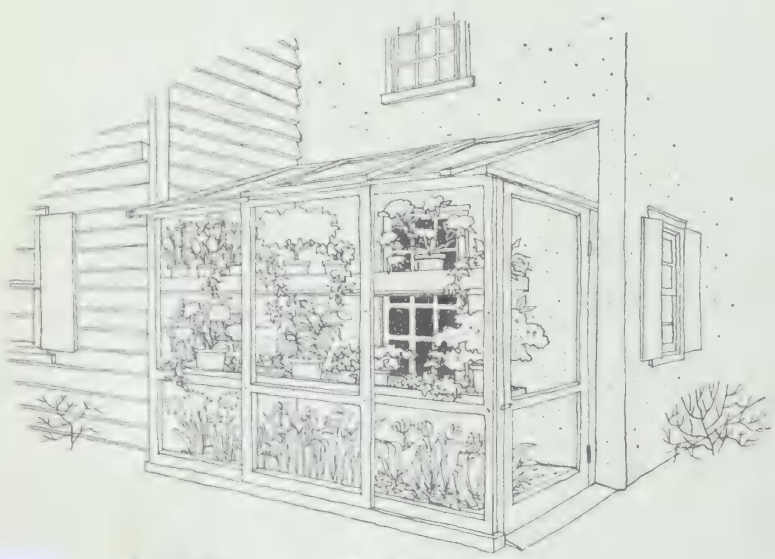
Melville Goodwin was still beside me invisibly when I was talking things over with Mr. George Burtheimer at breakfast in Chicago, and he was still beside me when I flew back to New York.

After I had been to Chicago, I naturally expected that Gilbert Frary would return from the Coast precipitously. He reached New York at two o'clock in the afternoon the day after I had arrived from Chicago, and he sent word that he wanted to see me in his office at three. I was sure that he had stopped over in Chicago to see Mr. Burtheimer himself, but I was not worried about this any longer, because I had been over all the ground with Mr. Burtheimer and I had done rather well with him.

There is no need to go into the details. They were sordid, but they were practical. I did not like anything I had done. In fact, I was rather (Continued on Page 226)

Copyright, 1951, by John P. Marquand. The complete novel was recently published by Little, Brown & Co.

ILLUSTRATED BY AL PARKER



"Any woman can tell when her man's infatuated," Muriel said. "But what I want to know is, does Mel really love her?"

DESIGN BY GEORGE NAKASHIMA; PHOTOGRAPH BY THE AUTHOR.

In this climactic pre-Easter picture the plants, left to right, are: Top row: hyacinth and amaryllis; azalea; azalea. Middle row: hydrangea; Easter lily; azalea. Bottom row: paperwhites; Dutch iris; early tulips. The ivy garnish is Merion Beauty.

Window Greenhouse

It will fit almost any kind of house.

THIS is to satisfy that winter craving for the smell of warm damp earth and the fragrance of growing flowers. It is a simple demountable lean-to structure of wood-and-glass panels which you set up against your house and fasten together with thumb nuts in a matter of minutes. To give the greatest pleasure it should stand outside a window or doorway, and the exposure should be as nearly toward the south as you can possibly make it. It has a door at its easterly end, and there is just enough room inside for you to sidestep along the tray shelves. On bright days, even in freezing weather, it will feed flower-scented sun warmth into the room from which it opens. Nights and dark days it will need heat. One way is to place it over an open area from a warm cellar; another is to use a hotbed-warming cable. A floodlight on the floor at one end makes it spectacular after dark, from indoors or out, and furnishes further warmth. In it you can grow almost anything; it's merely a question of care. How to make and manage it are clearly shown in picture patterns and complete instructions, obtainable for 25c from the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Phila. 5, Pa. Ask for No. 2582, use coupon on Page 26. • By RICHARD PRATT

there's a man in the house

By HARLAN MILLER

My neighbor with the dramatic picture window tells me (as if the neighborhood didn't suspect it) that he and his wife have quarreled at least two thousand times. "But we still love each other dearly!" he assures me.

"We husbands wouldn't mind having the babies," says Peter Comfort unconvincingly, reluctantly nibbling at a potato his small son baked in a leaf bonfire, "if we could do it in nine days instead of nine months!"

Our oil-station attendant is puzzled by a new record in the collection plate at his church: $233.01 on the first cold Sunday. He's a vestryman and tells me that to get the $145.54 a week required by his church budget he often has to rattle his dish a bit. "Maybe their fingers were chilly," he surmises.

The man next door tells me he'd rather spend a few billions on weapons for Western Europe's soldiers than finance all the teen-age boys in our block on a free trip to Moscow. "If only to please the girls," he says, "who'd prefer to keep 'em home and available."

I'm afraid we men are more sentimental than our wives. . . . I still have the suit I wore at our wedding (and can still get into it), but my wife hasn't the faintest idea what became of her wedding dress.

When Junior queries, "Dad, do you want me to do anything around the house today?" and goes into a spectacular sixty minutes of conspicuous chores. I know what's coming: a deft nudge for $5 and the use of the car.

A few of our friends are still coy about bifocal glasses, but a few others are already bragging about their trifocals. "In an art gallery, for example," one of 'em tells me, "with trifocals you can read the catalogue, admire the pictures and still see the pretty girls across the gallery!"

I can tell when our daughter has a date that evening, because at breakfast she begins to needle us all to be at home promptly for an early dinner. And then she races through the dishwashing in half the time it takes when she's staying home.

In the steam bath at the club our town's most worried man was worrying again about our public schools. "They don't teach our kids to read or spell," he says, "and after they graduate they never read a book; and people who don't read are a menace."

Some of the men I know keep the boss' picture on their office wall to spur 'em on to new heights. But I find there's nothing like a picture of the wife and kids to goad me on to pretensions of genius when I'd rather go play some golf.

Several of the thirtyish and fortyish men in our town are learning to fly, mostly to impress their wives. (Some of 'em were egged on because they could get flying lessons free under the GI Bill.) But their wives still don't confuse 'em with dashing young pilots.

One of our town's nervous matrons keeps her chums spellbound with tales of her sleepless nights, her 2 A. M. sleeping pills and her predawn awakenings. . . . But a man who's enjoyed the privilege of sleeping in the same room says she sleeps like a night watchman. (No cad, either; he's her husband.)

If it weren't for our wives, I'm sure string beans would vanish from the earth. . . . They feed 'em to us regularly, I've concluded, because we're so neutral against 'em that they make a most durable leftover.

Our youngest recently discovered Uncle Tom's Cabin via the movies, and he demands why such a masterpiece has been kept from him. . . . When I told him I'd read the book at his age (11) he even expressed willingness to read it, too, an unheard-of thing nowadays.

This neighborhood envies the lawn at the governor's mansion in the next block. It's always the best-mowed lawn in summer, and in autumn its leaves are raked more promptly than ours. . . . And yet I've never seen the governor with a rake or a lawn mower.

Our town seems to have trained quite a group of most considerate husbands: they tiptoe out of the house early and get downtown in time to have breakfast before the day's occupation, so the little woman can sleep late. . . . Very few of 'em brag about it, though.

A quartet of our local globe-trotters caught a glimpse of Eva Perón down in Buenos Aires recently. They report she reminds 'em of the late evangelist Aimee Semple McPherson, as Aimee might have looked thirty-five pounds slimmer after a sojourn at Elizabeth Arden's health farm.

At the bridge table I asked the girls who were needling Ava, Ingrid and Rita why they didn't turn their guns also on Frankie, Roberto and Aly. Or do the men get a sort of immunity? (Anyhow, I've never understood what a spirited girl like Ava sees in Frankie!)

I'm shocked by our stinginess with blood for the blood banks, and have resolved to let 'em have a pint every eight weeks. (The children and my Dream Girl want to donate too.) Anyhow, I figure I can save a pint every eight weeks by shaving a little more carefully.

When Junior's voice gets a little throaty as he says good-by when you're about to fly across the ocean . . .

And your daughter breaks down and admits you don't look too awful in a butch haircut . . .

Or your youngest scribbles "love and kisses" on the outside of the envelope he mails overseas to you . . .

And when your beloved wife's voice sings out across the Atlantic over the radiotelephone as ecstatically as when you used to call her up for a date . . .

Then you ignore the insults from your shaving mirror and begin to think in a lonely faraway place maybe you're quite a remarkable fellow after all.

At dusk it's a cozy sight, the line of bonfires as our neighbors rake and burn their fallen leaves. . . . But Junior thinks it's ridiculous to rake 'em until you see what'll blow off our yard onto our neighbors', and what'll blow from their yards over to ours.

Thanksgiving

I HAVE a blue platter. No doubt many of you have also a blue platter, with the picture of a bold and lovely turkey in the center, and around the edge a motto reading "Let Us Be Thankful. Thanksgiving 1881." Quite a number of Thanksgivings have come and gone since that platter was new. And the miracle is that it has passed through many hands, yet not a crack, not a chip, not a single misadventure has marred its seventy years of perfection. This particular platter was designed to accommodate, with appropriate garnishments, a noble bird of ample proportions, say around twenty-five to thirty pounds or maybe bigger. It's a far cry from the size they call a turkey platter nowadays.

Thanksgivings come and go. The celebration of Thanksgiving has been going on for a long, long time. And my platter evokes memories as clear and scenes as poignant as this very Thanksgiving you are about to add to the twice-told tales of the years that are gone. And of these the blue platter would, if it could speak, tell in the firelight of dreams and remembrances never to fade and never to grow old while memory abides. (Continued on Page 102)

By ANN BATCHELDER

STUART-FOWLER

Menu
Shrimp Cocktail—Caviar Sauce
Turkey Broiler
Pecan Stuffing—Turkey Gravy
Cranberry Sauce
Broccoli with Black Butter
Onions in Bread Sauce
Apple-Aspic Salad
Pumpkin-Mince Pie
Coffee
(Planned for 6)

LINE A DAY

PRATT

Saint Paul's Church, Edenton, North Carolina.

BY ANN BATCHELDER

1 NO RAIN TODAY

Rain, I forbid you to rain,
Sun, I forbid you to shine.
Hide where the storm clouds abide
As they summon the infinite tide,
But remember—no rain.

2 Up in Vermont, it's still deep-dish apple pie when all other desserts get the brush-off. And don't get the idea that pie for breakfast is as common here as scrapple and fried eggs. It isn't. By the way, a deep-dish pie made with half apples and half winter pears is awfully good. With a slab of that incomparable sage cheese—full cream, you know.

3 A chicken croquette, properly made, with chicken and not leftover veal, is a rare treat. You might try putting a spoon of cranberry or currant jelly in each croquette before dipping in egg, crumbing and frying. It's a surprise item and worth going for.

4 This sounds strange, but try it. Chop 1 pound raw spinach, add 6 hard-cooked eggs, sliced, and about 1 teaspoon grated onion. Just before serving, toss in ⅓ cup mayonnaise. A spinach salad.

5 Soften 1 bouillon cube or 1 teaspoon meat paste with 1 tablespoon milk. Add to 1 package cream cheese and beat well. Then mix in a dash of Tabasco and ⅛ teaspoon Worcestershire. A fine spread or dip for crackers, potato chips.

6 Soup course coming up: To 3 parts strong clear chicken broth add 1 part canned tomato juice. Heat. Serve in cups, garnish with sour cream spiked with a whiff of curry powder.

7 Recommended to me by an excellent cook—one who cooks and doesn't groan when it's time to put on the teakettle: Just add a scratch of nutmeg to hot chicken soup. Hope you approve the result.

8 Forever and forever we look for something brand-new. Isn't it true? Orange-and-onion salad—who doesn't know about that? Well, cut up some peeled oranges and slice some Bermuda onions thin. Dress with French dressing, garnish with cottage- or cream-cheese balls rolled in paprika or pecans ground fine. Maybe you've tried this already, but it tastes fine.

9 From an old cookbook: "It is unfortunate that so many otherwise excellent cooks persist in *under*cooking vegetables. They should bear in mind that peas and corn, for example, should never be cooked less than one to two and a half hours and the water thrown out at once, as all so-called 'vegetable juices' are poisonous, and all vegetables therefore must be thoroughly rinsed after cooking." And what would our home-economics teachers say to that?

10 Pork chops are mighty good eating, if done right by. A good relish affair to go with them is made by mixing ½ cup sour cream with 1 tablespoon horseradish, 1 teaspoon mustard and a little salt. Beat it up and pass on the side.

11 This is called "Special Spinach"; but if any spinach can be special. I should like to see it. Anyway, spinach is a good sound vegetable, so, if there's a new slant, you should know it. Better try it too. It's very simple.

12 Cook a package of frozen spinach as the directions on the box tell you to. They know, so let them boss the job. Season it with ¼ teaspoon garlic salt, a very little pepper, ¼ teaspoon anchovy paste and 2 tablespoons butter or margarine. Heat and hurry.

13 An elegant sauce for hot cottage pudding is made by sweetening whipped cream, then adding instant coffee to taste.

14 To 1 cup cream-style canned corn add 3 slices bacon, broiled crisp and crumbled. Then add 4 eggs, beaten lightly, season to taste, and scramble as you would scramble eggs. This is known as Squaw Corn, and very good too.

15 You know where I stand on prunes. I really like them. Give this a try, once anyway, and then you'll go on as occasion requires.

16 Cook large "plum" prunes and carefully take out the stone or seed. Same thing, stone, seed. Stuff the prunes with a tart pickle relish and use as a garnish with ham or roast pork or pork chops. These are first rate. Incidentally, do you ever serve pitted, hot, cooked glazed prunes with meat? Very good.

17 For men only. Ladies will please think up something else for their parties. It's a sandwich. On rye. Or brown. Take ½ jar very sharp cheese spread. Add half a dozen slices cooked ham, chopped or minced. Mix well.

18 Chapter 2. Now season with 1 onion, minced, 4 teaspoons prepared mustard, 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce and a few drops of Tabasco. Mix and there you are. And, ladies, don't taste more than necessary, or the men will have to settle for ham and Swiss on rye. Russian dressing—just mayonnaise and chili sauce.

19 For the morning after roast-chicken day: Sauté the chicken liver in butter or margarine. Cut into small pieces. Add to your scrambled-egg mixture and scramble!

20 Choose large shiny green peppers. Halve and get out all the seeds. If you don't, you'll wish you had! Cut the peppers into strips and fry slowly in bacon or salt-pork fat. Season with salt and pepper. Toss. Add cut-up tomatoes. Cook until the tomatoes go to pieces. Mix well. Serve with sausages or such.

21 Peanut brittle used to be dedicated to little boys' pockets and took the place of jam and molasses as face cream. But now things have changed. For one thing, roll the brittle well and stir into hot applesauce. It will make a dessert when Sophia and the Rev. call. Try it.

22 I'm pretty choosy about omelets. However, this is good enough to pass along: Chop fine a bunch of stemmed water cress and stir in a little sour cream. Fold in the omelet and serve quick as a lamb going over a stone wall.

23 I hold with straight melted butter with cold boiled or hot broiled lobster. But—converted, in a way, to mustard butter, I tried it. Only 1 teaspoon of prepared mustard to 3 tablespoons of melted butter. Depends on how addicted to mustard you are.

24 Hollow out some firm, tart apples. Leave a good "wall." Stuff with deviled ham or ground ham not related to the devil. Dot with butter or margarine. Sprinkle with brown or maple sugar and bake until tender, not too soft. Serve with griddlecakes or ham or bacon—and no hurry.

25 Now a Banbury tart is the best thing that ever came out of Banbury, and you can say that again. You know leftover mincemeat will serve as a quick filling for the pastry. Add lemon juice and raisins. And whatever is best. Get me?

26 An old lady told me this. I pass it on. In case. Put a cut apple in the cakebox to keep the cake from drying out. If it's the cake I think it is, you won't need it.

27 For a Sunday-night supper, cover slices of brown buttered toast with sliced sautéed mushrooms. Over these put a poached egg, sprinkled with paprika, salt and pepper. Cover the whole works with red-hot Welsh rarebit and serve instantly.

28 Flavor tricks: Add a drop or two of almond flavoring to canned cherries. . . . Sprinkle freshly ground black pepper over a tossed green salad. . . . And don't forget to add dry mustard to cheese sauce for macaroni.

29 Radishes, firm and red and tasting of the good earth, cut into thin slices and used as a garnish for soups. And it's a garnish that's eatable, that's the gimmick.

30 This summer I spent an all-too-short vacation in my native state. An old friend of earlier days gave me a little porcelain plate. Only a little piece with tiny wild flowers under the glaze. Only a hundred years old. Only a treasure treasured through a century of care and love. A little plate, coming to one who loves it and the giver of it. A century gone by. I shall hope that someone else will treasure it as I do when the giver and I are gone. And that it will be as lovely on its second-century birthday as it is now. Will it be so? Who knows?

Enjoy the Magic of Mushrooms

in Soup . . . in Sauce . . . in Cooking

Mushroom Scalloped Potatoes

Prepare scalloped potatoes as usual, using cream of mushroom soup as the cream sauce. Sprinkle with grated cheese and bake to a crusty brown.

Croquettes with Mushroom Cream Sauce

After making your favorite beef, ham, chicken, or turkey croquettes . . . serve them hot and golden brown with lots of mushroom cream sauce.

Cream of Mushroom, the Luxury Soup

Cultivated mushrooms . . . extra heavy cream! In my book, there's nothing better! Looks wonderful—and tastes it, too. The whole family will enjoy it!

ANNE MARSHALL
Director Home Economics
Campbell Soup Company

BY Anne Marshall

MUSHROOMS . . . I love them! That's why cream of mushroom soup makes any of my everyday meals a party. It dresses them up . . . really adds that special touch.

Not too many years ago cream of mushroom soup was classed as a luxury, something for entertaining or to be enjoyed at the finest restaurants. Now nearly everybody seems to serve this rich, creamy-smooth soup with lots of tender mushroom pieces . . . and they serve it often. It's so delicious, so easy on the budget.

If your "man and clan" tremendously enjoy it as a soup, then they're sure to rave about it as a sauce and cooking ingredient.

As a pour-on sauce with vegetables, chicken or turkey, it steps up their taste . . . gives a real lift to economy meat cuts.

Cream of mushroom soup is "dreamy" in soufflés. Any cheese dish is sparked by it. And as for potatoes or tuna, once you've scalloped them with cream of mushroom soup . . . you'll never do them any other way.

There's magic in cream of mushroom soup. It does so much for your reputation as a cook!

A clever cook keeps a full "Soup Shelf."

"Soaping" dulls hair— Halo glorifies it!

Not a soap, not a cream— Halo cannot leave dulling, dirt-catching soap film!

Gives fragrant "soft-water" lather —needs no special rinse!

Removes embarrassing dandruff from both hair and scalp!

Halo leaves hair soft, manageable— shining with colorful natural highlights!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or oily cream shampoos leaves dulling, dirt-catching film. Halo, made with a new patented ingredient, contains no soap, no sticky oils. Thus Halo glorifies your hair the very first time you use it. Ask for Halo—America's favorite shampoo—at any drug or cosmetic counter!

Halo reveals the hidden beauty of your hair!

MY COUSIN RACHEL

(Continued from Page 39)

I was glad to see him go, because I did not reach the hedge in time.

I felt better afterward, though my teeth chattered, and I was very cold. Tom Jenkyn lost identity again. He was even a target for the stone I threw. Ashamed of my action, I sped off in search of Ambrose.

Well, that was all of eighteen years ago, and to the best of my recollection I have not thought much of it since. Until these last few days. It is strange how in moments of great crisis the mind whips back to childhood. Somehow I keep thinking of poor Tom. He killed his wife, so Ambrose said. And that was all. She was a scold, but that was no excuse for murder. Perhaps Tom staggered forth from the inn upon the quay, that winter's night, all lit with love and fever. He may have groped his way home to his cottage behind the church, and his wife lashed out at him for bringing his damp feet inside the door, which broke his dream, and so he killed her. That well might be his story.

If there is survival after death, as we are taught to believe, I shall seek out poor Tom and question him. We will dream in purgatory together. But he was a middle-aged man of some sixty years or more, and I am five and twenty. Our dreams would not be the same. So go back into your shadows, Tom, and leave me some measure of peace. I threw a stone at you in ignorance. Forgive me.

The point is, life has to be endured, and lived. But how to live it is the problem. The work of day by day presents no difficulties. I shall become a justice of the peace, as Ambrose was, and also be returned, one day, to Parliament. I shall continue to be honored and respected, like all my family before me. No one will ever guess the burden of blame I carry on my shoulders; nor will they know that every day, haunted still by doubt, I ask myself a question which I cannot answer. Was Rachel innocent or guilty? Maybe I shall learn that, too, when I go to purgatory.

The contrast between the popular estimate of my powers and achievements and the reality is simply grotesque. The consciousness of this extraordinary state of affairs would be unbearable but for one great consoling thought: it is a welcome symptom in an age which is commonly denounced as materialistic, that it makes heroes of men whose ambitions lie wholly in the intellectual and moral sphere.

—ALBERT EINSTEIN:
The World As I See It (Philosophical Library).

How soft and gentle her name sounds when I whisper it. It lingers on the tongue, insidious and slow, almost like poison. Which is apt indeed. It passes from the tongue to the parched lips, and from the lips back to the heart. And the heart controls the body, and the mind also.

Shall I be free of it one day? In forty, in fifty years? Perhaps, when all is said and done, I shall have no wish to be free. As yet, I cannot tell.

I still have the house to cherish, which Ambrose would have me do. I have wondered lately if, when he died, his mind clouded and tortured by doubt and fear, his spirit left his body and came home here to mine, taking possession. So that he lived again in me, repeating his own mistakes. It may be so. All I know is that my likeness to him, of which I was so proud, proved my undoing.

HAD I been another man, agile and quick, with a deft tongue and a shrewd head for business, the past year would have been no more than another twelve months come and gone. I should be settling down to a brisk contented future. To marriage, possibly, and to a young family.

But I was none of these things, nor was Ambrose. We were dreamers, both of us, impractical, reserved. Disliking our fellow men, we craved affection; but shyness kept impulse dormant until the heart was touched. When that happened the heavens opened, and we felt, the pair of us, that we had the whole wealth of the universe to give. We would have both survived had we been other men.

Rachel would have come here just th same. Spent a night or two, and gone he way. Matters of business would have bee discussed, some settlement arranged, th will read formally with lawyers round table, and I—summing up the position in glance—given her an annuity for life, and s been quit of her.

It did not happen that way, because looked like Ambrose. It did not happen tha way, because I felt like Ambrose.

WHEN I went up to her room, that firs evening she arrived, and she got up from th chair where she had been sitting by the win dow and looked up at me, I should hav known then, from the glance of recognitio in her eyes, that it was not I she saw, bu Ambrose. Not Philip, but a phantom. Sh should have gone then. Packed up her trunks and left.

Did she, I wonder, when she saw me stanc ing there diffident and awkward, smartin with sullen resentment at her presence, ye hotly conscious of being host and master— did she, I wonder, think swiftly to hersel Ambrose must have been thus when he wa young. I did not know him when he looked lik this, and therefore stayed?

It was my godfather, Nick Kendall, wh in his bluff, straightforward fashion, said t me, on the eve of my twenty-fifth birthday— a few months ago only, yet how long i time—"There are some women, Philip, goo women very possibly, who through no fau of their own impel di aster. Whatever the touch somehow turn to tragedy. I don know why I say th to you, but I feel must." And then I witnessed my signatu on the document tha I had put before hin

No, there is no r turn. Tom Jenkyn, ba tered specimen of h manity, did you, a those years ago, sta after me in pity, as went running down th woods into the future Had I looked back, should not have seen you swinging in yo chains, but my own shadow.

I had no sense of foreboding when we s talking together that last evening, befo Ambrose set out on his final journey.

It was now the third autumn that the do tors had ordered him to winter abroad, an I had become used to his absence and looking after the estate while he was awa The first winter that he went I had been u at Oxford still, so his going had made ve little difference to me, but the second wint I came down for good and remained t whole time at home. I did not miss the ga garious life at Oxford; in fact, I was glad be quit of it. I never had any desire to be an where but home.

In fact, apart from my school days at Ha row, and afterward at Oxford, I had nev lived in any place but this house, where had come at the unremembered age of eigh een months after my young parents die Ambrose in his queer generous way bei seized with pity for his small orphaned cous and so bringing me up himself, as he mig have done a puppy, or a kitten, or any fr and lonely thing needing protection.

There could not be a man more fair, m just, more lovable, more full of understan ing. He taught me my alphabet in the si plest possible way by using the initial lett of every swear word—twenty-six of th took some finding—but he achieved it son how. And warned me at the same time n to use the words in company.

Although invariably courteous, he was s of women, and mistrustful too, saying th made mischief in a household, therefore

(Continued on Page 78)

Mrs. George Jay Gould, Jr.

HER VIVID INNER SELF richly warms Mrs. Gould's lovely face . . . telling everyone who sees her what a captivating, charming person she is. You, too, have a special beauty that is quite your own. Does it speak to others through your face . . . tell them you are lovely to know?

That special undiscovered self within you — can bring you new loveliness

Mrs. Gould has perfectly beautiful milk-white skin that is in exciting contrast to her dark hair, dark eyes. She is a devoted user of Pond's Cold Cream. "Pond's has always been my cream," she says.

MANY WOMEN are being unjust to themselves—sing to admit and cultivate the charm that could heirs.

et—no woman needs to lack charm. Within you, in every woman, is an exciting power that can ake you. This power grows out of the inter-ndence of your Outer Self and your Inner Self ne way you look, the way you feel.

is this power that lights you with a starry con-ice when you know you are attractive to see. —it dims and dispirits you when you do not look your best. That's why you need to be faithful every day to the routine essentials that do so much to keep you outwardly lovely and inwardly at ease.

You can so easily help your face say happy things about you. And you'll find this treatment with Pond's Cold Cream gives you very special help. It creams all skin-dulling dinginess right off. It adds a velvet quality of softness. Give your face this Pond's care always at bedtime (for day cleansings, too). This is the way:

"Outside-Inside" Face Treatment

Hot Stimulation—give face a good splashing with hot water.

Cream Cleanse—swirl light, fluffy Pond's Cold Cream all over your face and throat to soften dirt and make-up, sweep them from pore openings. Tissue off.

Cream Rinse—do another soft Pond's creaming to rinse off last traces of dirt, leave skin immaculate. Tissue lightly.

Cold Stimulation—give face a tonic cold water splash.

Literally, this face treatment works on both sides of your skin. From the Outside—light, fluffy Pond's Cold Cream cleanses and softens as you massage. From the Inside—every step of this Pond's treatment stimulates beauty-giving circulation.

Mrs. Gould says: "I think this face treatment with Pond's Cold Cream is particularly good for my skin."

Remember—it's not vanity to develop the beauty of your face. When you look lovely, it banishes that bogy of self-consciousness—radiates you with a happy new confidence that brings others closer to the real Inner You.

You hear it everywhere—
"She's Engaged! She's Lovely! She uses Pond's!"

New IVORY FLAKES
with Radiant Action
keeps lovely clothes lovely far longer

Now, your precious knit dresses and treasured sweaters can actually be worn more often, yet stay lovely for years! Gentle care with new Ivory Flakes will keep them fluffy and bright, fitting right, washing after washing!

And of course there's a reason why! Ivory Flakes, you see, has "Radiant Action"—an entirely new kind of beauty protection for fine washables. Now, when you wash your nice things gently with pure, mild Ivory Flakes, they'll keep their radiant, new beauty through more wearings and washings than you ever dreamed possible.

So don't take chances! You know your fine washables are safe in Ivory Flakes. It's the soap millions of mothers use for washing babies' clothes, when only the purest, mildest soap will do. It's the only flake form of baby's pure, mild Ivory Soap. So kind to hands in the dishpan, too. Get a box today!

If it's lovely to wear...
it's worth Ivory Flakes care

(Continued from Page 76)

would employ only menservants, and the tribe was controlled by old Seecombe, who had been my uncle's steward.

Eccentric perhaps, unorthodox, but, in spite of his individual opinions on women and the upbringing of small boys, Ambrose was no crank. He was liked and respected by his neighbors, and loved by his tenants. He shot and hunted in the winter before that rheumatism got a grip on him, fished in the summer from a small sailing boat he kept anchored in the estuary, dined out and entertained when he had the mind to do so, went twice to church of a Sunday.

I can see him now, half hunched, half sprawling in his chair—I caught the habit from him—shaking with silent laughter. I came to appreciate his qualities the more once I went to Harrow; the holidays passed all too swiftly, as I compared his manners and his company with the urchins who were my schoolmates, and the masters, stiff and sober, lacking to my mind all humanity.

"Never mind," he used to say, patting my shoulder. "It's just a training process, like breaking in a horse; we have to face it. Once your school days are behind, I will bring you home here for good, and train you myself."

"Train me for what?" I asked.

"Well, you're my heir, aren't you? That's a profession in itself."

He reckoned without his health, though, and when school and university lay behind me, it was then his turn to go.

"They tell me if I spend another winter being rained on every day I shall end my days crippled in a Bath chair," he said to me. "I must go off and search for the sun. The shores of Spain, of Egypt, anywhere where it is dry and warm. I don't particularly want to go, but on the other hand, I don't want to end a cripple. There is one advantage in the plan. I shall bring back plants that nobody else has got. We'll see how the demons thrive in Cornish soil."

THE first winter came and went, likewise the second. He enjoyed himself well enough, and I don't think he was lonely. He returned with heaven knows how many trees; shrubs, flowers, plants of every form and color. Camellias were his passion. We started a plantation for them alone, and they flourished from the first, and we lost none of them.

So the months passed, until the third winter. This time he had decided upon Italy. He wanted to see some of the gardens in Florence and in Rome. We talked late, that last evening, both of us with our long legs stretched out before the fire.

"I wish you were coming with me," h said suddenly.

"It won't take me long to pack," I an swered.

He shook his head and smiled. "No," h said, "I was joking. We can't both be awa for months at a time."

"I could travel with you down to Rome, I said, excited at the idea.

"No," he said slowly, "no, it was just whim. Forget it."

HE got up from his chair, and went ove to the window. He drew back the heavy cu tains, and stood for a few moments starin out across the grass.

"I'm glad we did away with the paths an brought the turf close to the house," he sai "It would look better still if the grass wer sloping right to the end there, by the pony paddock. One day you must cut away th undergrowth there, to give a view of th sea."

"How do you mean," I said, "I must do it Why not you?"

He did not answer at once. "Same thing, he said at last, "same thing. It makes r odds. Remember though."

My old retriever Don raised his head an looked across at him. He had seen the corde boxes in the hall, and sensed departure. Th clock in the belfry struck nine. From th servants' quarters I could hear Seecombe grumbling voice scolding the pantry boy.

"Ambrose," I said, "Ambrose, let n come with you."

"Don't be a fool, Philip, go to bed," h answered.

That was all. We did not discuss the ma ter any more.

Next morning at breakfast he gave m some last instructions about the sprin planting. It was a raw, damp morning. We lington brought the carriage to the door, an it was soon piled high with baggage. T horses were restless and eager to be off.

Ambrose turned to me, and laid his han upon my shoulder. "Take care of things he said. "Don't fail me."

"That's a hit below the belt," I answere "I've never failed you yet."

"You're very young," he said. "I put great deal on your shoulders. Anywa everything I have is yours, you know tha

I believe that if I had pressed the mat then he would have let me go with him. Bu said nothing. Seecombe and I put him in t carriage with his rugs and sticks, and smiled at us from the open window.

"All right, Wellington," he said. "Dr on." And they went away down the dr just as the rain began.

"That perfume I bought made her too irresistible—now she won't bother with me."

LAVORIS

Always for Good Mouthcare!

First thing in the morning
Pre-prepare for your day

Again in the evening
Before social engagements

Keep your mouth and throat clean all of the time!

LAVORIS
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
MOUTHWASH AND GARGLE

...with our best regards for your mouth and throat

LAVORIS DOES A THOROUGH JOB SO PLEASANTLY

Tangy with Oils of Cinnamon and Cloves

Detaches and removes germ-harboring film

The weeks passed much as they had done during the two previous winters. I missed him as I always did, but there was plenty to occupy me. If I wished for company I rode over to visit my godfather, Nick Kendall, whose only daughter, Louise, was a few years younger than myself, and a playmate from childhood days. She was a stanch girl, with no fancy ways, and pretty enough. Ambrose used to jest at times and say she would make me a wife one day, but I confess I never thought of her as such.

It was mid-November when his first letter came. He was well, and in good spirits, and looked forward to the journey into Italy. He was not trusting himself to a diligence, which would have meant going up to Lyons anyway, but had hired himself horses and a conveyance, and proposed driving along the coast into Italy. The next letter came from Florence. I kept all his letters, and I have the bunch of them before me now. How often I read them during the next months; they were thumbed, and turned, and read again, as though by the very pressure of my hands upon them more could be gleaned from the pages than the words gave of themselves.

It was toward the close of this first letter from Florence that he first spoke of Cousin Rachel. He wrote:

I have made the acquaintance of a connection of ours. You have heard me talk about the Coryns, who used to have a place on the Tamar, now sold up, and changed to other hands. A Coryn married an Ashley two generations ago—you will find it on the family tree. A descendant of that branch was born and brought up in Italy, impecunious father, Italian mother, and married off at an early age to an Italian nobleman called Sangalletti, who departed this life by fighting a duel, it appears, when half-seas over, leaving his wife with a load of debts and a great empty villa. No children. The Contessa Sangalletti—or, as she insists on calling herself, my Cousin Rachel—is a sensible woman, and good company, and has taken it upon her shoulders to show me the gardens in Florence, and in Rome later, as we shall both be there at the same time.

I was glad that Ambrose had found a friend, and someone who could share his passion for gardens. Here was a person whose family had hailed from Cornwall, so they would have that in common too.

The next letter consisted almost entirely of a list of gardens which, though not at their best at this season in the year, seemed to have made a great impression upon Ambrose. As had our relative, twice or thrice removed.

I am beginning to have a real regard for our Cousin Rachel [wrote Ambrose, in early spring], and feel quite distressed to think what she must have suffered from that fellow Sangalletti. These Italians are treacherous blackguards, there's no denying it. She is just as English as you or I in her ways and outlook, and might have been living beside the Tamar yesterday. Can't hear enough about home, and all I have to tell her. She is extremely intelligent but, thank the Lord, knows when to hold her tongue. None of that endless yattering, so common in women. She has found me excellent rooms in Fiesole, not far from her own villa, and as the weather becomes milder I shall spend a good deal of my time at her place, sitting on the terrace or pottering in the gardens, which are famous, it seems, for their design, and for the statuary, which I don't know much about. How she exists I hardly know, but I gather she has had to sell much of the valuable stuff in the villa to pay off the husband's debts.

I asked my godfather, Nick Kendall, if he remembered the Coryns. He did, and had not much opinion of them.

"They were a feckless lot, when I was a boy," he said. "Gambled away their money, and estates, and the house now, on Tamarside, is nothing much more than a tumbled-down farm. This woman's father must have been Alexander Coryn. He was second son of a second son. Don't know what happened to him, though. Does Ambrose give this contessa's age?"

"No," I said. "He only told me she had been married very young. But he did not say how long ago. I suppose she is middle-aged."

"She must be very charming for Mr. Ashley to take notice of her," remarked Louise.

If you wash windows... bake... scrub... or polish silver

...you need the LOTION MADE FOR BUSY HANDS!

If, as with most people, yours are working hands, it's a problem to keep them from getting rough and dry. You may have tried many lotions without success. What you really need is Italian Balm.

Not an ordinary, "cosmetic-type" lotion, Italian Balm is made especially for working hands. It contains medically-proved ingredients that are good for your skin. Soothes and softens chapped, rough skin overnight. Then, like an "invisible glove," it constantly protects your skin—from work, weather and water—helps keep your hands smooth and attractive no matter how hard you use them.

From the moment you apply Italian Balm, your hands will feel better, work better, and look better. Easy, and economical too—one drop does it! —only 25¢, 50¢, 1.00. For men and children, too.

So simple: Just use a drop of Balm after each exposure to work, weather or water, and at bedtime. Your hands will always feel smooth and comfortable.

So good, one drop does it!

Italian Balm
A CAMPANA PRODUCT

Van Raalte

GLOVES • STOCKINGS • UNDERTHINGS

Slip in 3 proportioned lengths, $6.95 Nightgown, $10.95 Panties to match, $3.00

Blue Horizon

Wonderthings of nylon tricot and nylon net

Night or day, asleep or awake, there's nothing like nylon next to your skin. Especially when it's so exquisitely styled, so artfully created by Van Raalte.

And, for all that look of gossamer, Van Raalte's wonderthings wear and wear, come up smiling and color-fresh wash after wash—and, of course, they never need ironing. In Blue Horizon, white and other lovely colors. At better stores.

—and Van Raalte is famous for gloves and hosiery, too!

"BECAUSE YOU LOVE NICE THINGS"

"I have never heard him admire a woman yet."

"That's probably the secret," I said. "She's plain and homely, and he doesn't feel forced to pay her compliments."

One or two letters more came, scrappy, without much news. He was just back from dining with our Cousin Rachel, or on his way there to dinner. He said how few people there were in Florence among her friends who could really give her disinterested advice on her affairs. He flattered himself, he said, that he could do this. And she was so grateful.

"I feel I have accomplished something," he said, "besides acquiring hundreds of new plants to bring back home with me."

Then came a space of time. He had said nothing of the date of his return, but it was usually toward the end of April.

Winter had seemed long with us, and frost unexpectedly severe. Some of his young camellias had been affected by it, and I hoped he would not return too soon and find hard winds and driving rain were with us still.

Shortly after Easter his letter came:

Dear boy: You will wonder at my silence. The truth is, I never thought I should, one day, write such a letter to you. Providence works in strange ways. You have always been so close to me that possibly you have guessed something of the turmoil that has been going on in my mind during the past weeks. "Turmoil" is the wrong word. Perhaps I should say happy bewilderment, turning to certainty. I have made no quick decision. As you know, I am too much a man of habit to change my way of living for a whim. But I knew, some few weeks back, that no other course was possible. I had found something I had never found before, and did not think existed. Even now, I can hardly believe it has happened. My thoughts have gone to you very often, but somehow I have not felt calm and steady enough to write until today.

You must know that your Cousin Rachel and I were married a fortnight ago. We are now together in Naples, on our honeymoon, and intend returning to Florence shortly. Further than that I cannot say. We have made no plans, and neither of us has any wish, at the present time, to live beyond the moment.

One day, Philip, not too far distant I hope, you will know her. I could write much of personal description that would weary you, and of her goodness, too, her real and loving tenderness. These things you will see for yourself. Why she has chosen me of all men, a crusty, cynical woman hater if ever there was one, I cannot say. She teases me about it, and I admit defeat. To be defeated by someone like herself is, in a sense, a victory. I might call myself victor, not vanquished, if it were not so conceited a statement.

Break the news to everyone, give them all my blessings, and hers too, and remember, my dearest boy and pup, that this marriage, late in life, cannot belittle one jot my deep affection for you, rather it will increase it, and now that I think of myself as the happiest of men I shall endeavor to do more for you than ever before, and will have her to help me. Write soon, and if you can bring yourself to do so, add a word of welcome to your Cousin Rachel.

Always, your devoted AMBROSE.

THE letter came about half past five, just after I had dined. Luckily, I was alone. Seecombe had brought in the post bag, and left it with me. I put the letter in my pocket, and walked out across the fields down to the sea. I climbed over the rocks to a narrow ledge, jutting into the little bay, where I used to swim in summer.

I sat down, and taking the letter from my pocket, read it again.

If I could have felt one spark of sympathy, of gladness, one single ray of warmth toward those two who were sharing happiness together down in Naples, it would have eased my conscience.

Ashamed of myself, bitterly angry at my selfishness, I could raise no feeling in my heart at all. I sat there, numb with misery, staring at the flat, calm sea.

I think what shamed me most was the delight of his friends, their real pleasure and true thought for his welfare. Congratulations were showered upon me, as a sort of messenger to Ambrose, and in the midst of it all I had to smile, and nod my head. I felt double faced, a traitor. Ambrose had so tutored me to hate falsity that suddenly to find myself pretending to be other than I was came near to agony.

"The best thing that could have happened." How often I heard the words and had to echo them. "When will they be coming home?"

For this there was one answer: "I do not know. Ambrose has not told me."

THERE would be much speculation upon the looks, age, the general appearance of his bride, to which I would reply, "She is a widow, and she shares his love for gardens."

Very suitable, the heads would nod, could not be better. And then would follow jocularity and much amusement at the breaking in of a confirmed bachelor to wedlock. That shrew, Mrs. Pascoe, the vicar's lady, ground away upon this subject.

"What a change there will be now, Miss Ashley," she said. "No more go-as-you-please for your household. And a very good thing too. I don't imagine Seecombe being too well pleased. He has had things his own way long enough."

In this she spoke the truth. I think Seecombe was my one ally, but I was careful not to side with him, and shut him up when he tried to feel his way with me.

MODERN ATTITUDE TOWARD WAR

The most important and characteristic trait of the times we live in is the universal, deeply rooted opposition to war.

War in past ages was accepted as a necessity. The warrior was surrounded with an aura of respect. The conqueror often received the tribute reserved for a god. Men recognized the horrors of war, but they also praised its glorious and heroic aspects. They also believed it was useful and profitable, because, up to a fairly recent past, there was no better way for a people to enrich itself than to make war on others and to plunder them. The idea that war does not pay is a modern idea. It could not have been thought of before our time because it is only in our time that this may have become true.

—RAOUL DE ROUSSY DE SALES: The Making of Tomorrow (Harcourt, Brace and Company).

"I don't know what to say, Mr. Philip," he murmured, gloomy and resigned. "The mistress in the house will have everything upside down. I think the time has come for me to retire and give way to a younger man. Perhaps you had better mention the matter to Mr. Ambrose when you write."

I told him not to be a fool, and that Ambrose and I would be lost without him, but he shook his head and continued to go about the place with a long face, and never let an opportunity pass without making some sad allusion to the future, how the hours of the meals would no doubt be changed, the furniture altered, and an interminable cleaning be ordered from dawn till dusk with no repose for anybody, and even the poor dog destroyed.

This prophecy, uttered in sepulchral tones, brought back to me some measure of my own lost sense of humor, and I laughed for the first time since reading Ambrose's letter.

What a picture Seecombe painted! His gloom amused me, but when much the same thing was foretold by others, even by Louise Kendall, the remarks brought irritation.

"Thank goodness you will have free covers in the library," she said gaily. "The have gone quite gray with age and wear, but I dare say you never noticed it. The drawing room will come into its own at last. Mr Ashley will furnish it, no doubt, with books and pictures from her Italian villa."

She ran on and on until I lost patience with her, and said roughly, "For heaven's sake Louise, leave the subject alone. I'm sick and tired of it."

She stopped short then. "You aren't jealous, are you, by any chance?"

"Don't be a fool," I told her.

Does Dry Skin make you shun the bright lights?

Do you dread being caught in the bright lights of a theatre marquee? Or wonder how your complexion looks in dazzling sunlight?

It's a very insecure feeling—but you don't have to have it. For often it's just a dry skin that causes bright lights to be unflattering.

And now there is something you can do about that! For science makes miracles with a new wonder-working substance called Penaten. Available to you in Woodbury Dry Skin Cream—miraculous Penaten penetrates deeper into the important corneum layers of the skin. Carries the rich benefits of lanolin and 4 other skin softeners deeper than ever before!

Try Woodbury Dry Skin Cream! See little dry skin lines and roughness seem to melt away. Your skin looks fresher, smoother, younger! The very first application shows results—the whole jar produces wonders! 25¢ to 97¢ plus tax.

WOODBURY DRY SKIN CREAM

penetrates deeper because of Penaten

YARN at TREMENDOUS SAVINGS!
Knitting yarns, new fall novelties. Send 10c for catalog 400 sample yarns. Money back guarantee.
Melrose Yarn Co., Inc., 345 Grand St., N. Y. City, Dept. H-11.
SUPREME MELROSE YARNS

Eyes tired?

TWO DROPS

QUICK RELIEF!

Murine brings quick rest to tired eyes—a pleasant, cooling sensation of wide-awake refreshment. You can use Murine as often as you like, for its blend of 7 ingredients cleanses and soothes your eyes as gently as a tear. When your eyes feel good, you'll probably feel better—and Murine makes your eyes feel good.

MURINE FOR YOUR EYES

It was an ugly thing to call her, but we knew each other so well that I thought of her as a younger sister. I noticed that when the well-worn theme came up again, she glanced across at me and tried to change it. I was grateful. And liked her the more.

It was my godfather and her father, Nick Kendall, who made the final thrust, unaware, of course, that he was doing so.

"Have you made any plans for the future, Philip?" he said to me one evening, after I had ridden over to take dinner with them.

"Plans, sir? No," I said, uncertain of his meaning.

"Early yet, of course," he answered, "and I suppose you cannot very well do so until Ambrose and his wife return home. I wondered whether you had considered looking around the neighborhood for some small property of your own."

I was slow to grasp his meaning. "Why should I do that?" I asked.

"Well, the position is somewhat changed, isn't it?" he said in matter-of-fact tones. "Ambrose and his wife will want most naturally to be together. And if there should be a family, a son, things won't be the same for you, will they? I am certain Ambrose won't let you suffer from the change, and will buy you any property you fancy."

He continued talking, mentioning places within twenty miles or so of home that I might care to own, and I was thankful that he did not seem to expect a reply to anything he said. The fact was my heart was too full to answer him. What he suggested was so new and unexpected that I could barely think straight, and shortly afterward made an excuse to go. Jealous, yes. Louise was right about that, I supposed. The jealousy of a child who must suddenly share the one person in his life with a stranger.

I can remember wandering about the house, when I came home from visiting the Kendalls, looking upon it with new eyes, and the dogs, seeing my restlessness, followed me, as uneasy as myself. My old nursery, uninhabited for so long, and now the room where Seecombe's niece came once a week to mend and sort the linen, took on new meaning. I saw it freshly painted, and my small cricket bat that still stood, cobweb-covered in a shelf among a pile of dusty books, thrown out as rubbish. I had not thought before what memories the room held for me. Now I wanted it for my own again.

HITHERTO, when I had thought of my Cousin Rachel—which I did but sparingly, brushing her name from my mind as one does all things unpleasant—I had pictured to myself a woman resembling Mrs. Pascoe, only more so. Large-featured, and angular, with a hawk's eye for dust as Seecombe prophesied, and far too loud a laugh when there was company for dinner, so that one winced for Ambrose. Now she took on new proportions. One moment middle-aged and forceful, the next simpering and younger than Louise, my Cousin Rachel had a dozen personalities or more, and each one more hateful than the last. I saw her forcing Ambrose to his knees to play at bears, the children astride his back, and Ambrose consenting with a humble grace, having lost all dignity.

Yet again, decked out in muslin, with a ribbon in her hair, I saw her pout and toss her curls, a curving mass of affectation, while Ambrose sat back in his chair surveying her, the bland smile of an idiot on his face.

When, in mid-May, the letter came saying that after all they had decided to remain abroad throughout the summer, my relief was so intense I could have shouted aloud.

Your Cousin Rachel is still so bothered by the tangle of business that must be settled before coming to England that we have decided, although with bitter disappointment, you may imagine, to defer our return home for the present. I do the best I can, but Italian law is one thing, and ours another, and it's the deuce of a job to reconcile the two. I seem to be spending a mint of money, but it's in a good cause, and I don't begrudge it. We talk of you often, dear boy, and I wish you could be with us.

And so on to inquiries about the work at home, the state of the gardens, with his usual

at Home in Town & Country Shoes

A new fashion . . . a new way of dressing after hours, at home. Glamor, excitement, gaiety . . . for yourself, or holiday gifts. Our wonderful young Spree, and our high-spirited Open House. Look for them, you'll love them in an Oriental Brocade, in velvet, in roman stripes and in 24 carat gold jersey. Such luxury, such fun, such value.

Spree 7.95, Open House 7.95 to 9.95, in fine stores or write we'll tell you where. Town & Country Shoes, St. Louis, Mo.

make your hair Colorful with this safe
Temporary color rinse

Add all the glamorous color you want, without making a permanent change. Noreen Super Color Rinse gives your hair such natural-looking color . . . color that rinses in like it belongs, and stays until shampooed out. There are 14 true-to-life shades, ranging from light gold to lustrous black, and lovely grays. Choose one, and "try it on." Then, when you want a change try another! Noreen is so easy to apply. It takes only 3 minutes with the Noreen Color Applicator (40¢).

Try, too, Noreen's wonderful Super Satin Creme Shampoo. It's freer-rinsing! (50c)

ALSO AVAILABLE IN CANADA

Noreen
SUPER COLOR RINSE

15¢ · 30¢ and 60¢ Sizes. Also Applied in Beauty Salons

Until the Applicator and Shampoo are available in every store, you may order from

NOREEN DISTRIBUTORS, 450 LINCOLN STREET, DENVER 9, COLORADO

fervor of interest so that it seemed to me I must be mad to have thought for a moment he could change. Disappointment was of course intense throughout the neighborhood that they would not be home this summer.

"Perhaps," said Mrs. Pascoe, with a meaning smile, "Mrs. Ashley's state of health forbids her traveling?"

"As to that I cannot say," I answered. "Ambrose mentioned in his letter they had spent a week in Venice, and both of them came back with rheumatism."

Her face fell. "Rheumatism? His wife? How very unfortunate"; and then reflectively, "She must be older than I thought."

My spirits rose as the simpering bride gave place to the aging matron. The nursery receded, and I saw the drawing room become a lady's boudoir, hedged about with screens, huge fires burning even in midsummer. I took to singing once again when I went riding, urged the dogs after young rabbits, swam before breakfast, and teased Louise about the London fashions when she went to spend the season there. At twenty-three it takes very little to make the spirits soar.

Then, in the winter, the tone of his letters changed.

Imperceptible at first, I scarcely noticed it, yet on rereading his words I became aware of a sense of strain in all he said, some underlying note of anxiety creeping in upon him. A longing for his own country, and his own possessions, but above all a kind of loneliness that struck me as strange in a man but eight months married. "I was never one for headaches," he said, "but now I have them frequently. Almost blinding at times. I miss you more than I can say. So much to talk about difficult in a letter. My wife is in town today, hence my opportunity to write."

It was the first time that he had used the words "my wife." Always before he had said Rachel, or "your Cousin Rachel," and the words "my wife" looked formal to me, and cold.

In these winter letters there was no talk of coming home, but always a passionate desire to know the news.

Nothing came at Easter, and by Whitsun I grew worried. I told my godfather, who said no doubt the weather was holding up the mails. It was over a year now since Ambrose had been married, eighteen months since he had been home. My first relief at his absence after marriage turned to anxiety that he would not return at all.

In July a letter came, short and incoherent. Even his writing, usually so clear, sprawled across the page as if he had difficulty in holding his pen. He said:

> All is not well with me. You must have seen that when I wrote you last. Better keep silent, though. She watches me all the time. I have written to you several times, but there is no one I can trust, and unless I can get out myself to mail the letters they may not reach you. Since my illness I have not been able to go far. As for the doctors, I have no belief in any of them. They are liars, the whole bunch. The new one, recommended by Rainaldi, is a cutthroat, but then he would be, coming from that quarter. However, they've taken on a dangerous proposition with me, and I will beat them yet.

Then there was a gap, and something scratched out which I could not decipher, followed by his signature.

I had the groom saddle my horse and I rode over to my godfather to show him the letter. He was as much concerned as I was myself.

"Sounds like a mental breakdown," he said. "I don't like it at all. That's not the letter of a man in his right senses. I hope to heaven ——" He broke off, and pursed his lips.

"Hope what?" I said.

"Your Uncle Philip, Ambrose's father, died of a tumor on the brain; you know that, don't you?" he said shortly.

I had never heard it and told him so.

"Before you were born, of course," he said. "It was never a matter much discussed in the family. Whether these things are hereditary or not I can't say, nor can the doctors." He read the letter again. "There is of course another possibility, extremely unlikely, but what I would prefer."

"And that is?"

"That Ambrose was drunk when he wrote the letter."

If he had not been over sixty years, and my godfather, I would have hit him for the bare suggestion.

"I have never seen Ambrose drunk in my life," I told him.

"Nor I either," he said dryly. "I am merely trying to choose the best of two evils. I think you had better make up your mind to go to Italy."

"That," I remarked, "I had already decided upon before I came to see you," and I rode home again.

There was no vessel sailing from Plymouth that would help me. I was obliged to travel up to London, and thence to Dover, catch the packet to Boulogne, and then cross France into Italy by the usual diligence. I set forth for London on a fine morning in July, with the prospect of nearly three weeks' traveling ahead of me.

When a resolute young fellow steps up to the great bully, the world, and takes him boldly by the beard, he is often surprised to find it comes off in his hand, and that it was only tied on to scare away timid adventurers.
—O. W. HOLMES.

As the carriage turned onto the Bodmin road I saw the groom riding toward us with the post bag. I told Wellington to rein the horses, and the boy handed me the bag. The chance was one in a thousand that there would be a further letter from Ambrose, but it so happened that the chance was there. As Wellington whipped up the horses I drew out the scrap of paper and held it to the window for light.

The words were scrawled, almost illegible:

> For God's sake come to me quickly. She has done for me at last, Rachel my torment. If you delay, it may be too late. AMBROSE.

That was all. There was no date upon the paper, no mark upon the envelope, which was sealed with his own ring.

I sat in the carriage, the scrap of paper in my hand, knowing that no power in heaven or on earth could bring me to him before mid-August.

When the conveyance brought me and the other passengers to Florence and dumped us down at the hostelry beside the Arno, I felt I had been a lifetime upon the road. It was now the fifteenth of August. No traveler, setting his foot upon the continent of Europe for the first time, was ever less impressed than I.

My first instinct, on climbing from the coach in Florence, as the dusty baggage was unloaded and carried within the hostelry, was to cross the cobbled street and stand beside the river.

I was travel-stained and weary, covered from head to foot with dust. I stood watching the moving water, fascinated, and the sun beat down upon the bridge, and suddenly, from behind me in the city, a great bell chimed four o'clock.

A woman stood by my side, a whimpering child in her arms, another dragging at her torn skirt, and she stretched out her hand for alms. I gave her a coin and turned away. Later, when I had mounted to the room they showed me, and stood out upon the little balcony, I saw her creep away between the horses and the carrozzas, stealthy as a cat that slinks by night, its belly to the ground.

I washed, and changed my clothes with a strange apathy. Now that I had reached my journey's end, a sort of dullness came upon me, and the self who had set forth upon his journey, excited, keyed to a high pitch and ready for any battle, existed no longer. Excitement had long since vanished. Even the reality of the torn scrap of paper in my pocket had lost substance. It had been written many weeks ago; so much could have happened since.

(Continued on Page 85)

It's really true! The one true red you've spent a lifetime looking for!

"Love That Red!" Revlon's new-and-forever red for lips and fingertips Fall's newest, truest red... for Fall's new fashion colors! In new "Indelible-Creme" lipstick* and improved-formula nail enamel. (Love that wear!)

"LOVE THAT RED"
Also in Revlon's regular lipstick*

COSTUME ALAN GRAHAM JEWELS CARTIER

You are his world—he depends on you to keep him happy and comfortable—to guard his tender skin from hurt. Even the huskiest baby's skin is thinner than a grownup's, you know. Skin studies show it might become irritated more quickly, "rub off" sooner. All through babyhood, his thinner skin needs your wisest care.

Baby's Thinner skin needs Gentlest Care

More and more mothers are finding the ideal combination of "tender skin" qualities in ScotTissue. You will discover too, that ScotTissue's greater value makes it the perfect choice for every member of the family. You get 1000 generous-size sheets to a roll. ScotTissue goes further, lasts longer. "ScotTissue," "Soft as old linen," Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

You take special care of his little shirts—keep them fluffy-clean and soft. Be careful, too, when choosing his bathroom tissue, to look for 3 important "tender skin" qualities. Old linen softness that doesn't chafe. Instant-quick absorbency for clean cleansing. The right amount of strength to resist tearing and shredding.

1000 Generous-Size Sheets—Soft as old Linen

(Continued from Page 82)

I went downstairs, and out into the square. The carrozzas that had been waiting there had driven off. The siesta hour was over, and the streets were crowded. I plunged into them, and was lost at once. About me were dark courts and alleyways, tall houses touching one another, jutting balconies; and as I walked, faces peered at me from the doorways, passing figures paused and stared, all wearing that same age-old look of suffering and passion long since spent.

The church bells began to clamor once again, and I came to a great piazza where the people stood thickly, clustered together in groups, talking. I hailed a passing carrozza, and when I said to the driver doubtfully the words "Villa Sangalletti?" he answered something which I could not understand, but I caught the word "Fiesole" as he nodded and pointed with his whip. As we drove through the narrow crowded streets and he shouted to the horse, the reins jingling, the people falling back from us as we passed among them, the bells re-echoed in my ears, solemn, sonorous, tolling not for my mission, insignificant and small, nor for the lives of the people in the streets, but for the souls of men and women long since dead, and for eternity.

We climbed a long, twisting road toward the distant hills, and Florence lay behind us. The buildings fell away. It was peaceful, silent, and the hot staring sun that had beat down upon the city all the day, glazing the sky, turned gentle suddenly, and soft. Cypress trees, shrouded and still, turned inky green.

The driver drew up his carrozza before a closed gate set in a long, high wall. He turned in his seat, and looked down at me. "Villa Sangalletti," he said. The end of my journey.

I made signs to him to wait and, getting out, walked up to the gate and pulled at the bell that hung there on the wall. There was no sound from within and I rang the bell again. This time there was a muffled barking of a dog. The fretful cry of a child was hushed shrilly by a woman's voice, and I could hear footsteps approaching the gate.

There was a heavy dragging sound of bolts being withdrawn, and then the grind of the gate itself as it scraped the stone beneath and was opened. A peasant woman stood peering at me.

Advancing upon her, I said, "Villa Sangalletti. Signor Ashley?"

The dog, chained inside the lodge where the woman lived, barked more furiously than before. An avenue stretched in front of me, and at the far end I could see the villa itself, shuttered and lifeless. The woman made as though to shut the gate against me as the dog continued barking and the child cried.

I pushed past her through the gate and repeated the words, "Signor Ashley."

THIS time she started, as though for the first time she saw my features, and she began to talk rapidly, with a sort of nervous agitation. Then she turned swiftly, and called over her shoulder to the lodge. A man, presumably her husband, came to the open door, a child on his shoulder. He silenced the dog and came toward me.

"I speak a little English, signore," he said. "Can I help you?"

"I have come to see Mr. Ashley," I said. "Are he and Mrs. Ashley at the villa?"

The concern on his face became greater. He swallowed nervously. "You are Mr. Ashley's son, signore?" he said.

"No," I said impatiently, "his cousin. Are they home?"

HE shook his head, distressed. "You have come from England then, signore, and have not heard the news? What can I say? It is very sad. . . . The Signor Ashley, he died three weeks ago. Very sudden. Very sad. As soon as he is buried, the contessa she shut up the villa, she went away. Nearly two weeks she has been gone. We do not know if she will come back again."

The dog began to bark again; he turned to quieten it.

I felt all the color drain away from my face. I stood there, stunned. The man watched me in sympathy, and said something to his wife, who dragged forward a stool, and he placed it beside me.

"Sit, signore," he said. "I am sorry. So very sorry."

I shook my head. I could not speak. There was nothing I could say.

The man, distressed, spoke roughly to his wife to relieve his feelings, then turned again to me. "Signore," he said, "if you would like to go to the villa, I will open it for you. You can see where the Signor Ashley died."

I did not care where I went or what I did. My mind was still too numbed to concentrate. He began to walk up the drive, drawing some keys from his pocket, and I walked beside him. The woman and the child followed.

The cypress trees closed in upon us, and the shuttered villa, like a sepulcher, waited at the farther end. As we drew closer I saw that it was large, with many windows, all of them blank and closed.

The man opened the huge door with his key, and motioned me inside. The woman and the child came, too, and after the man had whispered instructions to his wife, the pair of them began to fling open the shutters, letting the daylight into the silent hall.

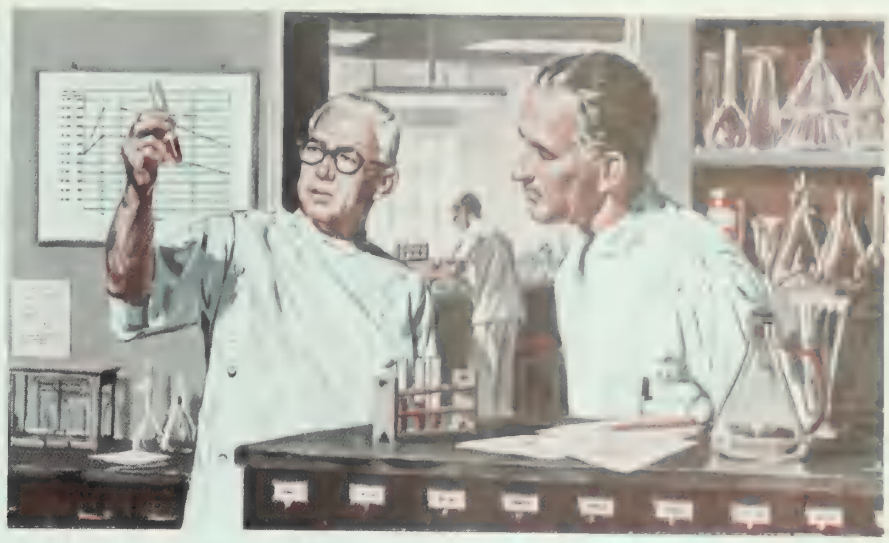
The rooms all led into each other, large and sparse, with frescoed ceilings and stone floors, and the air was heavy with a medieval musty smell. In some of the rooms the walls were plain, in others tapestried, and in one, darker and more oppressive than the rest, there was a long refectory table flanked about with carved monastic chairs, and great wrought-iron candlesticks stood at either end.

"The Villa Sangalletti very beautiful, signore, very old," said the man. "The Signor Ashley, this is where he would sit, when the sun was too strong for him outside. This was his chair." He pointed to a tall high-backed chair beside the table.

I watched him in a dream. None of this held reality. I could not see Ambrose in this house, or in this room. He could never have walked here with familiar tread, whistling, talking, throwing his stick down beside this chair, this table.

Relentlessly, monotonously, the pair went round the room, throwing wide the shutters. It gave upon a little court, open to the sky. In the center of the court stood a fountain,

(Continued on Page 87)



★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Winter Lover

By Joan Story Wright

Come now; forget your April-bitten heart,
And try November's love. He's strong enough
To tear your frail, beribboned dreams apart
And make you scorn the tender for the rough Sureness of his love-making. Come, be wise;
Put springtime's wistful fantasies away
And wipe the blatant rainbows from your eyes.
Rainbows will fade, but never the gusty gray
Of winter's bleak caress. Spring buds deceive;
Not so this bitter lover. Take his hand.
He offers frank commands for weak appeals
And he will trade cold truth for make-believe,
And, for rain's phantom fragrance, the demand
Of a little muttering wind to pluck your heels.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Doctor looks at Diabetes

It is estimated that there are one million people in our country who have diabetes . . .

Their chances of living happy, useful lives are better today than ever before. In fact, life expectancy for the average diabetic is now double what it was before the discovery of insulin.

Moreover, the outlook for still further gains against this disease is good, as medical science is constantly improving the treatment for diabetes. New types of insulin, for example, have made possible better control of this condition. Hope for future progress lies in current research on insulin and on utilization of food by the body.

Doctors say, however, that the successful control of diabetes more than ever depends largely upon the diabetic himself, who must understand his disease in order to learn to live with it. Above all, he must cooperate closely and faithfully with his physician in keeping insulin, diet, and exercise in correct balance.

Today, the patient who carefully follows the doctor's instructions about these three essentials of treatment—as well as other measures to maintain good health—can usually look forward to many years of happy living.

However, there are a great many people in our country who have diabetes, but do not know it . . .

This is because the disease usually causes no obvious early symptoms. Yet detection is easier today than ever before. For instance, it is now possible for anyone to make a simple test at home to detect sugar in the urine—one of the signs of diabetes.

This test is also a routine part of most medical examinations. If the test is positive, the doctor can then make additional tests to determine whether the presence of sugar is due to diabetes or some other condition.

Authorities urge everyone—particularly those who are middle-aged, overweight, or who have diabetes in the family—to have a check-up for diabetes included in regular physical examinations. In this way, the disease can be discovered early when the chances of successful control are best—often by diet alone. It is especially important for those who are overweight to be on guard against this disease, as studies show that 85 percent of diabetics over age 40 were moderately or markedly overweight before the onset of the disease.

Doctors stress the importance of learning the symptoms of this disease. They are: excessive hunger, excessive thirst, excessive urination, continual fatigue, and loss of weight. Although these symptoms may indicate well-established diabetes, prompt and proper treatment can usually bring it under control. Indeed, many patients live as long with diabetes as they would be expected to live without it.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

A MUTUAL COMPANY

1 Madison Ave., New York 10, N. Y.

Please send me a copy of your booklet, 1151-J, "Diabetes."

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

Beautiful Hair

B R E C K

THERE ARE THREE BRECK SHAMPOOS FOR THREE DIFFERENT HAIR CONDITIONS

Hair tends to be dry, oily or normal. For this reason there are three different Breck Shampoos. One Breck Shampoo is for dry hair. Another Breck Shampoo is for oily hair. A third Breck Shampoo is for normal hair. When buying a Breck Shampoo, mention whether your hair is dry, oily or normal. You will be given the Breck Shampoo which you should use for your hair.

Breck Hairdress keeps hair soft and in place. It helps make dry, brittle ends of the hair smooth and silky. Breck Hairdress may be used daily for the care of the hair.

The Three Breck Shampoos and Breck Hairdress are available at Beauty Shops and wherever cosmetics are sold.

JOHN H BRECK INC · MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS · SPRINGFIELD 3 MASSACHUSETTS
NEW YORK · SAN FRANCISCO · OTTAWA CANADA

(Continued from Page 85)

nd the bronze statue of a boy holding a shell in his two hands. Beyond the fountain a laburnum tree grew in its own soil between the paving stones, making its own canopy of shade.

The man whispered to the woman, and she went to a corner of the quadrangle and turned a handle. Slowly, gently, the water trickled from the shell between the bronze boy's hands. It fell down and splashed into the pool beneath.

"The Signor Ashley," said the man, "he sat here every day, watching the fountain. In summer, always they sit here. Signor Ashley and the contessa. They take their meals, they hear the fountain play. I wait upon them, you understand. I bring out trays, and set them here, on this table." He pointed to the stone table. "They take their tisane here, after dinner." He paused, and touched the chair with his hand.

A sense of oppression grew upon me. It was cool in the quadrangle, cold almost as a grave, and yet the air was stagnant like the shuttered rooms before he opened them.

I thought of Ambrose as he was at home. He would walk about the grounds in summertime without a coat, an old straw hat upon his head against the sun. I could see him, his shirt sleeves rolled above the elbow, standing in his boat, pointing at something far away at sea. I remembered how he would reach down with his long arms and pull me into the boat when I swam alongside.

"Yes," said the man, as though speaking to himself, "the Signor Ashley sat in the chair here. Do you wish to see the room where the signore died?"

Possessed with the same sense of unreality, I followed him up the wide stairway to the landing above. We passed through rooms more sparsely furnished than the apartments below, and one, looking northward over the avenue of cypress trees, was plain and bare like a monk's cell. A simple iron bedstead was pushed against the wall. There were a pitcher, a ewer, and a screen beside the bed. Tapestries hung over the fireplace, and in a niche in the wall was the small statuette of a kneeling madonna.

I looked at the bed. The blankets were folded neatly at the foot. Two pillows, stripped of their linen, were placed one on top of the other at the head.

"The end," said the man in a hushed voice, "came very sudden, you understand. He was weak, yes, very weak from the fever, but even the day before he had dragged himself down to sit by the fountain. 'No, no,' said the contessa, 'you will become more ill, you must rest,' but he is very obstinate, he will not listen to her. And there is coming and going all the time with the doctors. Signor Rainaldi, he is here too, talking, persuading, but never will he listen; he shouts, he is violent, and then, like a little child, falls silent. It was pitiful. To see a strong man so. Then, in the early morning, the contessa she comes to my room, calling for me. She says, her face white as the wall there, 'He is dying, Giuseppe, I know it, he is dying,' and I follow her to the signore's room, and there he is, lying in bed, his eyes closed, breathing still, but heavily. We send away for the doctor, but the Signor Ashley he never wakes again, it was the coma, the sleep of death. I myself lit the candles with the contessa, and when the nuns had been I came to look at him. The violence had all gone, he had a peaceful face. I wish you could have seen it, signore."

TEARS stood in the fellow's eyes. I looked away from him, back to the empty bed.

"What do you mean," I said, "by violence?"

"The violence that came with the fever," said the man. "Twice, three times I had to hold him down in bed, after his attacks. And" with the violence came the weakness insidere here." He pressed his hand against hi stomach. "He suffered much with pain. Andre when the pain went, he would be dazed and heavy, his mind wandering. I tell you signore, it was pitiful to see so large a manw helpless."

I turned away from that bare room lik an empty tomb, and I heard the man closid the shutters once again, and close the doored

"Why was nothing done?" I said. "Th doctors, could they not ease the pain? An I Mrs. Ashley, did she just let him die?" d.

He looked puzzled. "Please, signore?" He

"What was this illness, how long did ito last?" I asked.

"I have told you, at the end, very sud den," said the man. "But one, two attackne before then. And all winter the signore no so well, sad somehow, not himself. Ver?" different from the year before. When th Signor Ashley first come to the villa he wa happy, gay." en

He threw open more windows as he spokhe and we walked outside onto a great terrace at the far end of which ran a long stonlla balustrade. eft

WE crossed the terrace and stood by tlid. balustrade, looking down upon a low garden, clipped and formal, from which tl scent of roses came, and summer jasmirow

We looked westward toward the settines sun, and there was a glow upon the terraSell and the hushed garde The stone was stere warm under my hared. and a lizard ran awShe from a crevice aShe wriggled down onto trite wall below. e to

"I think," said the man slowly, "that the contessa will not co:hat back again. Too even for her. Signor Rainaeen told us that the vom, is to be let, possiuch sold." ted.

His words jerHerme back into realinal- "Who is Signor Fthis naldi?" I asked. my

The man turned back with me toward the villa. "The Signor Rainaldi he arrange was things for the contessa," he answerVhy "Matters of business, matters of mon He knows the contessa a long time." ake

He frowned, and waved his hand at ath wife who, with the child in her arms, not, walking on the terrace. She disappeasual within the villa and began fastening e in shutters. ain

"I want to see him, Signor Rainaldi,' ent said. Irs.

"I give you his address," he answerwas "He speak English very well." dis-

We went back into the villa, and aswas passed through the rooms to the hall tley shutters were closed, one by one, behind nnly I felt in my pockets for some money. his

"Thank you for all you did for M Ashley," I said, putting the coins into that fellow's hand. ese

Once again the tears came into his ey "I am so sorry, signore. So very sorryess, The last shutters were closed. The womble and the child stood beside us in the hame.

"What happened to his clothes?" I askdid "His belongings, his books, his papers; to

The man looked troubled. "Signore," said, "my wife gave some help to the cith-tessa when she went away. But she says ight contessa took everything. All the Sigwas Ashley's clothes were put in a big trunk,ame his books, everything was packed. Noth tors left behind."

I looked into both their eyes. They r of not falter. I knew they were speaking truth. "And you have no idea," I asksing "where Mrs. Ashley went?" , or

The man shook his head. "She has hich Florence, that is all we know. The day af the funeral, the contessa went away." . A

He opened the heavy front door, andwas stepped outside. hen

(Continued on Page 89)

HONEYMOON

There seems to have been a Teutonic custom of drinking wine mixed with honey during the wedding feast and for about a month (or moon) thereafter. The moon part of the term is supposed by some marital pessimists to refer to the waning of courtship after the fullness of happiness culminating in the wedding, but it probably actually refers to the period of thirty days after the wedding during which a couple "spent their honeymoon."

—DAVID T. ARMSTRONG.

Yardley products for America are created in England and finished in the U.S.A. from the original English formulae, combining imported and domestic ingredients. Yardley of London, Inc., 620 Fifth Avenue, N.Y.C.

Beautiful

B R E

THERE ARE T
FOR THREE DI

Hair tends to be dry, oily or norm
One Breck Shampoo is for dry ha
Shampoo is for normal hair. Wh dry, oily or normal. You will be gi

Breck Hairdress keeps hair soft hair smooth and silky. Breck

The Three Breck Shampoos and Breck H

JOHN H BRECK INC · MANUFACTURING CHEMIS
NEW YORK · SAN FRANCIS

SS . . . . because

(Continued from Page 87)

"Where is he buried?" I asked.

"In Florence, signore, in the new Protestant cemetery. Many English buried there. Signor Ashley, he is not alone."

It was as if he wished to reassure me that Ambrose would have company, and that in the dark world beyond the grave his own countrymen would bring him consolation.

I turned away, and as I did so I heard the woman exclaim suddenly to her husband, and before he had time to shut the door she had darted back into the villa. She came back carrying something in her hand, which she gave to her husband, and he in turn to me. His puckered face relaxed, broadening to relief.

"The contessa," he said, "one thing she has forgotten. Take it with you, signore, it is for you alone."

It was Ambrose's hat, wide-brimmed and bent. The hat that he used to wear at home against the sun. It would never fit any other man. It was too big.

I could feel their anxious eyes upon me, waiting for me to say something, as I turned the hat over and over in my hands.

I remember nothing of the return drive to Florence except that the sun had set, and it grew quickly dark. When we came into the city we lost the cooler, cleaner air of the surrounding hills, and it was hot once more. I paid off my driver in the piazza by the cathedral, and the sound of that great bell, compelling, insistent, rang like a challenge in the still and vapid air.

Scarcely aware of what I did, I passed into the cathedral and, straining my eyes into the gloom and the pallid light, stood for a brief moment. I still held Ambrose's hat in my hand, and as I stood there in the great cathedral, I realized suddenly and sharply the full measure of my loss. Ambrose was dead. I would never see him again. He was gone from me forever.

I turned and went out of the cathedral, and onto the piazza, and looking up at that great dome and the tower, remote and slender, carved against the sky, I remembered, with the sudden recollection that comes after great shock, that I had not eaten for the day.

I turned my thoughts away from the dead, back to the living; and having found a place to eat and drink, close to the cathedral, I went, with hunger satisfied, in search of Signor Rainaldi.

The good servant at the villa had written down his address for me, and after one or two inquiries, I found his house, over the bridge from my hostelry, on the left bank of the Arno.

A servant opened the door, and without inquiring my name led me upstairs, and along a passage and, knocking upon a door, showed me into a room.

I STOOD blinking at the sudden light, and saw a man seated in a chair beside a table, looking through a pile of papers. He rose as I came into the room, and stared at me. He was a little less than my own height, and of some forty years perhaps, with a pale, almost colorless face, and lean aquiline features. There was something proud, disdainful about his cast of countenance, like that of someone who would have small mercy for fools, or for his enemies; but I think I noticed most his eyes, dark and deep-set, which at first sight of me startled into a flash of recognition, which in one second vanished.

"Signor Rainaldi?" I said. "My name is Ashley. Philip Ashley."

"Yes," he said. "Will you sit down?" His voice had a cold, hard quality. He pushed forward a chair.

"You are surprised to see me, no doubt?" I said, watching him carefully. "You were not aware I was in Florence?"

"No," he answered. "No, I was not aware that you were here."

"You know who I am?" I asked.

"You are cousin, are you not, or nephew to the late Ambrose Ashley?"

"Cousin," I said, "and heir."

He took up a pen between his fingers, and tapped with it on the table, as if he played for time or for distraction.

"I have been to the Villa Sangalletti," I said. "I have seen the room where he died. The servant Giuseppe was very helpful. He gave me all the details, but referred me to you."

WAS it my fancy, or did a veiled look come over those dark eyes?

"How long have you been in Florence?" he asked.

"A few hours. Since afternoon."

"You have only arrived today? Then your Cousin Rachel has not seen you." The hand that held the pen relaxed.

"No," I said. "The servant at the villa gave me to understand that she had left Florence, the day after the funeral."

"She left the Villa Sangalletti," he said. "She did not leave Florence."

"Is she still here, in the city?"

"No. She has now gone away. She wishes me to let the villa. Sell it, possibly."

"Do you know where she is now?" I asked.

"I am afraid not. She left very suddenly. She told me she would write when she had come to some decision about the future."

I had the feeling that only today, or even yesterday, she had been with him in this room, that he knew much more than he admitted.

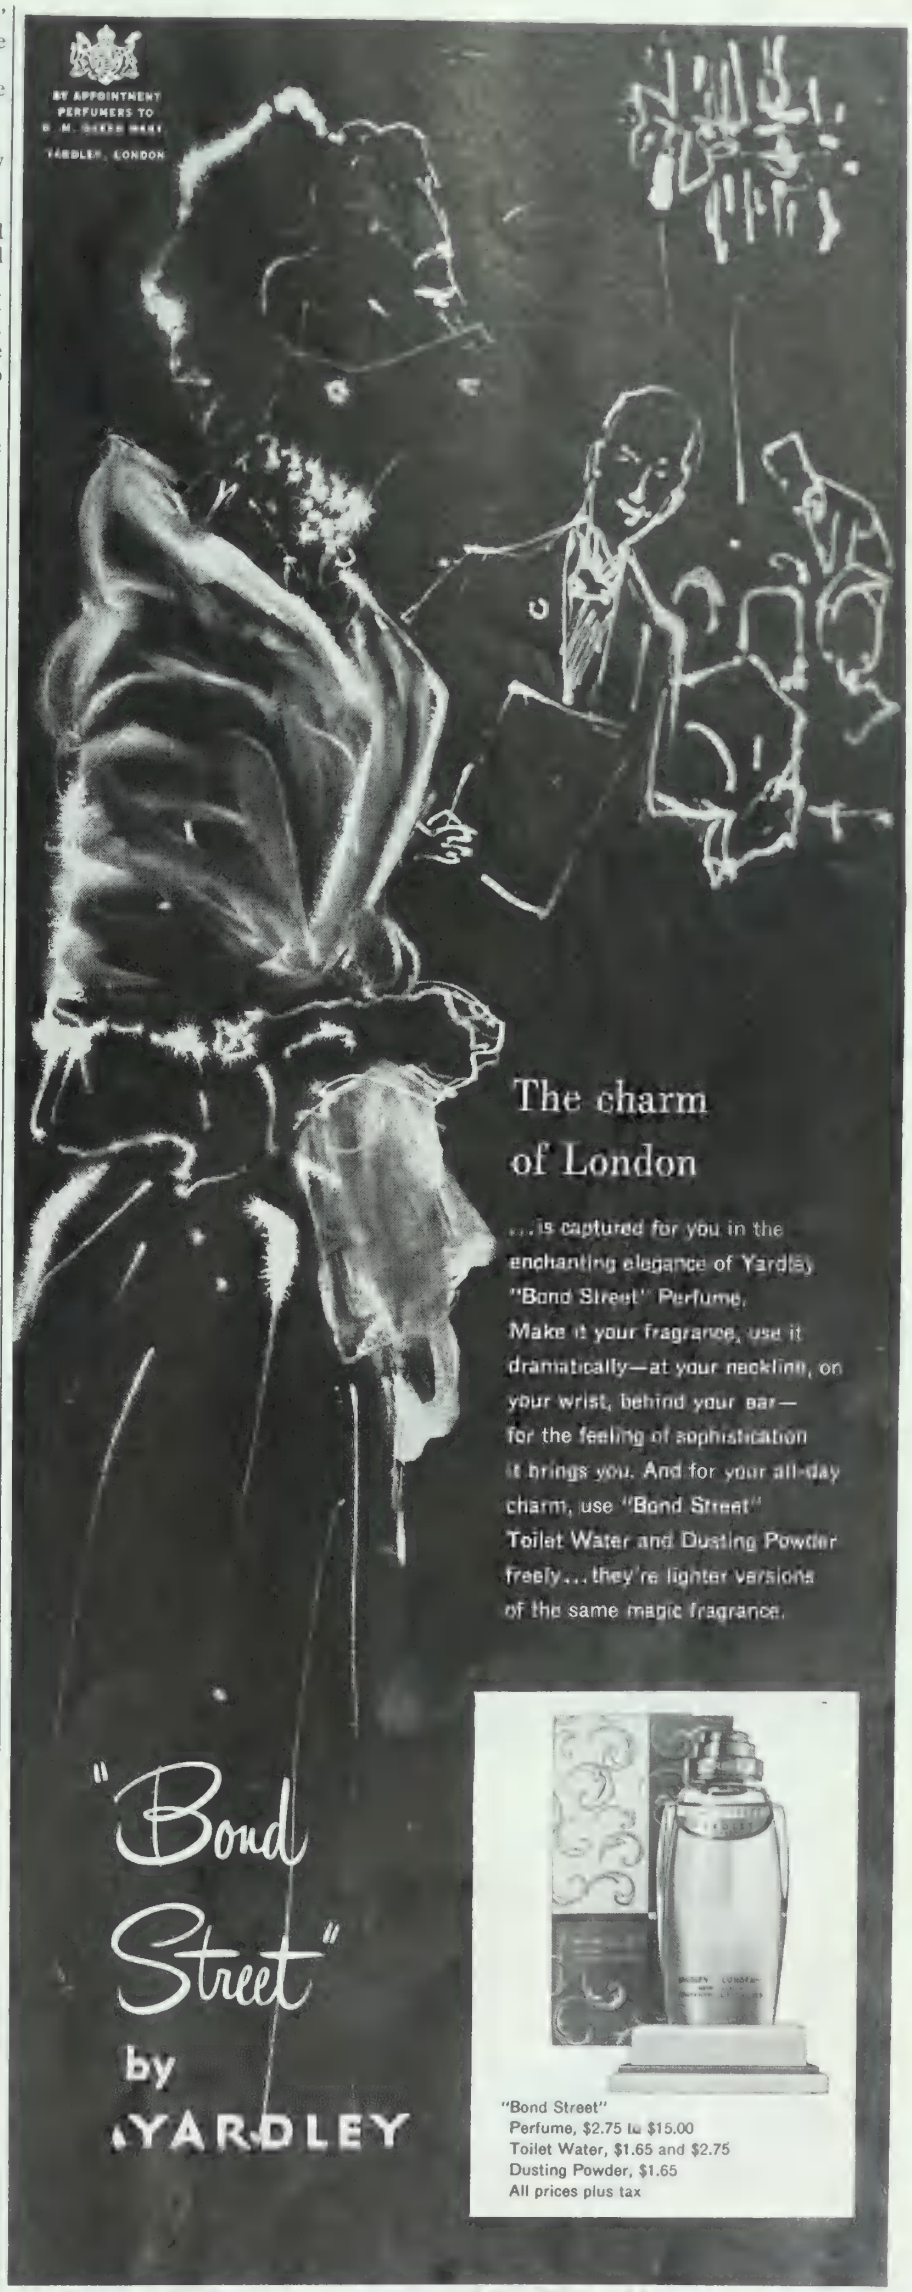
"You will understand, Signor Rainaldi," I said, "that this sudden hearing of my cousin's death, from the lips of servants, was a very great shock. What happened? Why was I not informed that he was ill?"

He watched me carefully, he did not take his eyes from my face. "Your cousin's death was sudden too. He had been ill, yes, but not, we thought, dangerously so. The usual fever that attacks many foreigners here in the summer had brought about a certain weakness, and he complained, too, of violent headache. The contessa—I should say Mrs. Ashley—was much concerned, but he was not an easy patient. He took an instant dislike to our doctors, for what reason it was hard to discover. Every day Mrs. Ashley hoped for some improvement, and certainly she had no desire to make you and his friends in England anxious."

"But we were anxious," I said. "That was why I came to Florence. I received these letters from him."

It was a bold move, perhaps, and reckless, but I did not care. I handed across the table the two last letters Ambrose had written me. He read them carefully. His expression did not change. Then he passed them back to me.

"Yes," he said, his voice quite calm, without surprise, "Mrs. Ashley feared he might have written something of the sort. It was not until those last weeks, when he became so secretive and strange, that the doctors feared the worst, and warned her."



"Warned her?" I said. "Warned her of what?"

"That there might be something pressing on his brain," he answered. "A tumor, or growth, of rapidly increasing size, which would account for his condition."

A blank lost feeling came over me. A tumor? Then my godfather's surmise was right after all. First Uncle Philip, and then

(Continued on Page 91)

Any mother knows the racket and unrest that inevitably accompany bad-weather days—days when the kids try to amuse themselves indoors. And all the modern psychological toys put together can't compete with a homely solution used by at least one maternal genius along about the turn of the century. One of her grandsons told me about it; it works. When she'd had enough from one of her brood she picked him up, popped him in his high chair, smeared his hands with molasses and presented him with a feather. It's messy and it's amusing to watch, but trying to get rid of that feather and licking at the molasses at the same time keeps the small fry preoccupied for a couple of hours.

Yardley products for America are created in England and finished in the U.S.A. from the original English formulae, combining imported and domestic ingredients. Yardley of London, Inc., 620 Fifth Avenue, N.Y.C.

Picture of a smart shopper with just TWO WEEKS to spend

TODAY's young business girl has a knack of getting a lot done in a short time—and that goes double when it comes to vacation. Watch her "shop" for those two weeks, study the timetables, figure her budget.

The result—chances are you'll find her leaving on a Flagship because it's easy to see how much more a Flagship vacation offers—more places to choose from, more time to spend there, more enjoyment in the trip itself and in arriving fresh and rested.

So make a note now, you bright young white-collar girls, to drop in at American Airlines some lunch hour and see how low our fares are this year. Those "Vacation Club" savings can take you farther than ever if you travel American.

America's Leading Airline AMERICAN AIRLINES INC.

(Continued from Page 89)

Ambrose. And yet . . . why did this Italian watch my eyes?

"Did the doctors say that it was a tumor that killed him?"

"Unquestionably," he answered. "That, and a certain flare-up of after-fever weakness. There were two doctors present. I can send for them, and you can ask any question you care to put."

"No," I said slowly, "no, it isn't necessary."

He opened a drawer, and pulled out a piece of paper. "I have here a copy of the certificate of death," he said, "signed by them both. Read it. One copy has already been posted to you in Cornwall, and a second to the trustee of your cousin's will, Mr. Nicholas Kendall."

I looked down at the certificate. I did not bother to read it. "How did you know," I asked, "that Nicholas Kendall was trustee of my cousin's will?"

"Because your Cousin Ambrose had a copy of the will with him," replied Signor Rainaldi. "I read it many times."

"You read my cousin's will?" I asked, incredulous.

"Naturally," he replied. "As trustee myself for the contessa, for Mrs. Ashley, it was my business to see her husband's will. I have a copy of it, in fact. But it is not my business to show it to you. It is the business of your guardian, Mr. Kendall. No doubt he will do so, on your return home."

He knew my godfather was my guardian also, which was more than I did. Unless he spoke in error. Surely no man past twenty-one possessed a guardian, and I was twenty-four. This did not matter, though. What mattered was Ambrose, and his illness. Ambrose, and his death.

"These two letters," I said stubbornly, "are not the letters of a sick man. They are the letters of a man who has enemies, who is surrounded by people whom he cannot trust."

Signor Rainaldi watched me steadily. "These are the letters of a man who was sick in mind, Mr. Ashley," he answered me. "Forgive my bluntness, but I saw him those last weeks, and you did not. The experience was not a pleasant one for any of us, least of all for his wife. You see what he says in that first letter there, that she did not leave him. I can vouch for that. Another woman would have had nuns to tend him. She nursed him alone, she spared herself nothing."

"Yet it did not help him," I said. "Look at the letters, and this last line, 'She has done one for me at last, Rachel my torment.' What do you make of that?"

I SUPPOSE I had raised my voice in my excitement. He got up from his chair, and went over to the side of the room where books lined the wall, and took down a volume.

"Are you any sort of a student of medical history, Mr. Ashley?" he asked.

"No," I said.

"You will find it here," he said, "the sort of information you are seeking, or you can question those doctors, whose address I am only too willing to give you. There is a particular affliction of the brain, present above all when there is a growth, or tumor, when the sufferer becomes troubled by delusions. The fancies, for instance, that he is being watched. That the person nearest to him, such as a wife, has either turned against him, is unfaithful, or seeks to take his money. No amount of love or persuasion can allay this suspicion, once it takes hold. If you don't believe me, or the doctors here, ask your own countrymen, or read this book."

How plausible he was, how cold, how confident. Whether he was right or wrong I did not know. All I knew was that I hated Rainaldi. "Why didn't she send for me?" I asked. "If Ambrose had lost faith in her, why not send for me? I knew him best."

Rainaldi closed the book with a snap, and replaced it on the shelf. "You are very young, aren't you, Mr. Ashley?" he said.

I stared at him. "What do you mean by that?"

"A woman of feeling does not easily give way," he said. "You may call it pride, or tenacity, call it what you will. In spite of all evidence to the contrary, their emotions are more primitive than ours. They hold to the thing they want, and never surrender. We have our wars and battles, Mr. Ashley. But women can fight too."

He looked at me with his cold, deep-set eyes, and I knew I had no more to say to him.

"If I had been here," I said, "he would not have died."

I ROSE from my chair, and went toward the door. Rainaldi pulled the bell, and the servant came to show me out.

"I have written," he said, "to your guardian, Mr. Kendall. I have explained to him everything that has happened. Is there anything more I can do for you? Will you be staying long in Florence?"

"No," I said. "Why should I stay? There is nothing to keep me."

"If you wish to see the grave," he said, "I will give you a note to the guardian, in the Protestant cemetery. The site is quite simple and plain. No stone, as yet, of course." He turned to the table, and scribbled a note which he gave me.

"What will be written on the stone?" I said.

He paused a moment, as though reflecting. "I believe," he said, "that my instructions were to put 'In Memory of Ambrose Ashley, beloved husband of Rachel Coryn Ashley,' and then of course the date."

I knew then that I did not want to go to the cemetery, or visit the grave. They could put up the stone, and later take flowers there if they wished, but Ambrose would never know, and never care. He would be with me in the west country, under his own soil, in his own land.

"When Mrs. Ashley returns," I said slowly, "tell her that I came to Florence. That I went to the Villa Sangalletti, and that I saw where Ambrose died. You can tell her, too, about the letters Ambrose wrote."

He held out his hand to me, cold and hard like himself, and still he watched me with those veiled, deep-set eyes.

"Your cousin Rachel is a woman of impulse," he said. "When she left Florence she took all her possessions with her. I very much fear that she will never return."

I left the house and went out into the dark street. It was almost as if his eyes still followed me from behind his shuttered windows.

I walked back along the cobbled street, and crossed the bridge, and before turning into the hostelry to seek what sleep I could before the morning, I made a vow that whatever it had cost Ambrose in pain and suffering before he died, I would return it, in full measure, upon the woman who had caused it. Because I did not believe Rainaldi's story.

I believed in the truth of those two letters that I held in my right hand. The last Ambrose had ever written to me.

Someday, somehow, I would repay my Cousin Rachel.

I arrived home the first week in September. The news had preceded me. The Italian had not lied when he told me he had written to Nick Kendall. My godfather had broken the news to the servants and to the tenants on the estate. Wellington was waiting for me at Bodmin with the carriage. The horses were decked in crape, he and the groom also; their faces were long and solemn.

"A sad home-coming, Mr. Philip," said Wellington, and when I asked after Seecombe and the household he shook his head and told me that they and all the tenants were sorely grieved. The whole neighborhood,

The dance is the rule of number and of rhythm and of measure and of order, of the controlling influence of form, of the subordination of the parts to the whole. That is what a dance is. And these same properties make up the classic spirit, not only in life, but, still more clearly and definitely, in the universe itself.

—HAVELOCK ELLIS: The Dance of Life (Houghton Mifflin Company).

Dial Soap keeps complexions clearer by keeping skin cleaner!

Dial's AT-7 (hexachlorophene) removes blemish-spreading bacteria that other soaps leave on skin.

The cleaner your skin, the better your complexion. And mild, fragrant Dial with AT-7 gets your skin cleaner and clearer than any other kind of soap. It's as simple as that. Dial's bland beauty-cream lather gives you scrupulous cleanliness to overcome clogged pores and blackheads. You do far more than remove dirt and make-up when you wash thoroughly every day with Dial. Dial with AT-7 effectively clears skin of bacteria that often aggravate and spread pimples and surface blemishes. Skin doctors know this, and recommend Dial for both adults and adolescents.

Protect your complexion with fine, fragrant Dial Soap.

DIAL DAVE GARROWAY—NBC, Weekdays

© ARMOUR AND COMPANY

Illustrated "Monterey Surf." Material costs about $44.50 for average room.

LOVELIEST LINOLEUM

in all the land . . .

The only linoleum ever awarded the Fashion Academy Gold Medal for "outstanding beauty."

Yours! Pabco "Home Decorating Guide"—16 full-color, idea-packed pages. Send 10¢ coin to Pattern Center, Pabco Products Inc., 475 Brannan Street, San Francisco.

California Originals colors in Pabco Paints, Shingles, Roofing, Siding, available in 11 Western States.

he said, had talked of nothing else since the news became known.

The church had been draped in black all Sunday, likewise the chapel on the estate, but the greatest blow of all, Wellington said, was when Mr. Kendall told them that the master had been buried in Italy, and would not be brought home to lie in the vault among his family.

"It doesn't seem right to any of us, Mr. Philip," he said, "and we don't think Mr. Ashley would have liked it either."

There was nothing I could say in answer. I got into the carriage and let them drive me home.

It was strange how the emotion and the fatigue of the past weeks vanished at sight of the house. All sense of strain left me, and in spite of the long hours on the road I felt rested and at peace.

It was afternoon, and the sun shone on the windows of the west wing and on the gray walls as the carriage passed through the second gate, up the slope to the house. The dogs were there, waiting to greet me, and poor Seecombe, wearing a crape band on his arm like the rest of the servants, broke down when I wrung him by the hand.

"It's been so long, Mr. Philip," he said. "And how were we to know that you might not take the fever, too, like Mr. Ashley?"

He waited upon me while I dined, solicitous, anxious for my welfare, and I was thankful that he did not press me with questions about my journey, or about his master's illness and death. All his words were punctuated with a new formality of address. I was "Mr." Philip. No longer "Master" Philip. I had noticed the same with the coachman and the groom.

It was unexpected, yet strangely warming to the heart. When I had dined I went up to my room and looked about me, and then down into the library, and so out into the grounds, and I was filled with a queer feeling of happiness that I had not thought ever to possess with Ambrose dead; for when I left Florence I had reached the lowest ebb of loneliness, and hoped for nothing.

Now, on returning home, my bitterness went too. Ambrose was with me once again, and he was not tortured, he no longer suffered. It was as though he had died here, in his own home, and lay buried with his father and his mother and my own parents. My grief was now something I could overcome; sorrow was with me still, but not tragedy. I, too, was back where I belonged.

I went out across the fields, and the men were harvesting. The shocks of grain were being lifted into the wagons. They ceased work at the sight of me, and I went and spoke to all of them. Old Billy Rowe, who had been tenant of the Barton ever since I could remember and had never called me anything but "Master Philip," touched his forehead.

"We've missed you, sir," he said. "It hasn't seemed right to start carrying the grain without you. We're glad you're home."

A YEAR ago I would have rolled up my sleeves like the rest of the hinds, and seized a fork, but something stayed me now. A realization that they would not think it fit.

"I'm glad to be home," I said. "Mr. Ashley's death has been a great sadness to me, and to you too, but now we all have to carry on as he would have wished us to do."

"Yes, sir," he said, and touched his forelock once again.

I stayed a few moments talking, then called to the dogs and went my way. When I came to the pony's paddock, midway between the house and the sloping fields, I paused, and looked back over the sunk fence. The wagons were silhouetted on t farther hill, and the waiting horses and t moving figures black dots on the sky lir The shocks of grain were golden in the la rays of the sun. The sea was very blue, most purple where it covered the rocl Back at home the house was in shadow, or the weather vane on the top of the clo tower catching a loose shaft of light. walked slowly across the grass to the op door.

The windows were still unshuttered, Se combe had not yet sent the servants to clo them down. There was something welcor in the sight of those raised sashes, with t curtains softly moving, and the thought all the rooms behind the windows, known me and loved.

IT came upon me strongly and with for and for the first time since I had learned Ambrose's death, that everything I nc saw and looked upon belonged to me. T grass beneath my feet, the trees surroundi me, the hills behind me, the meadow, t woods, even the men and women farming t land yonder, were all part of my inheritanc they all belonged.

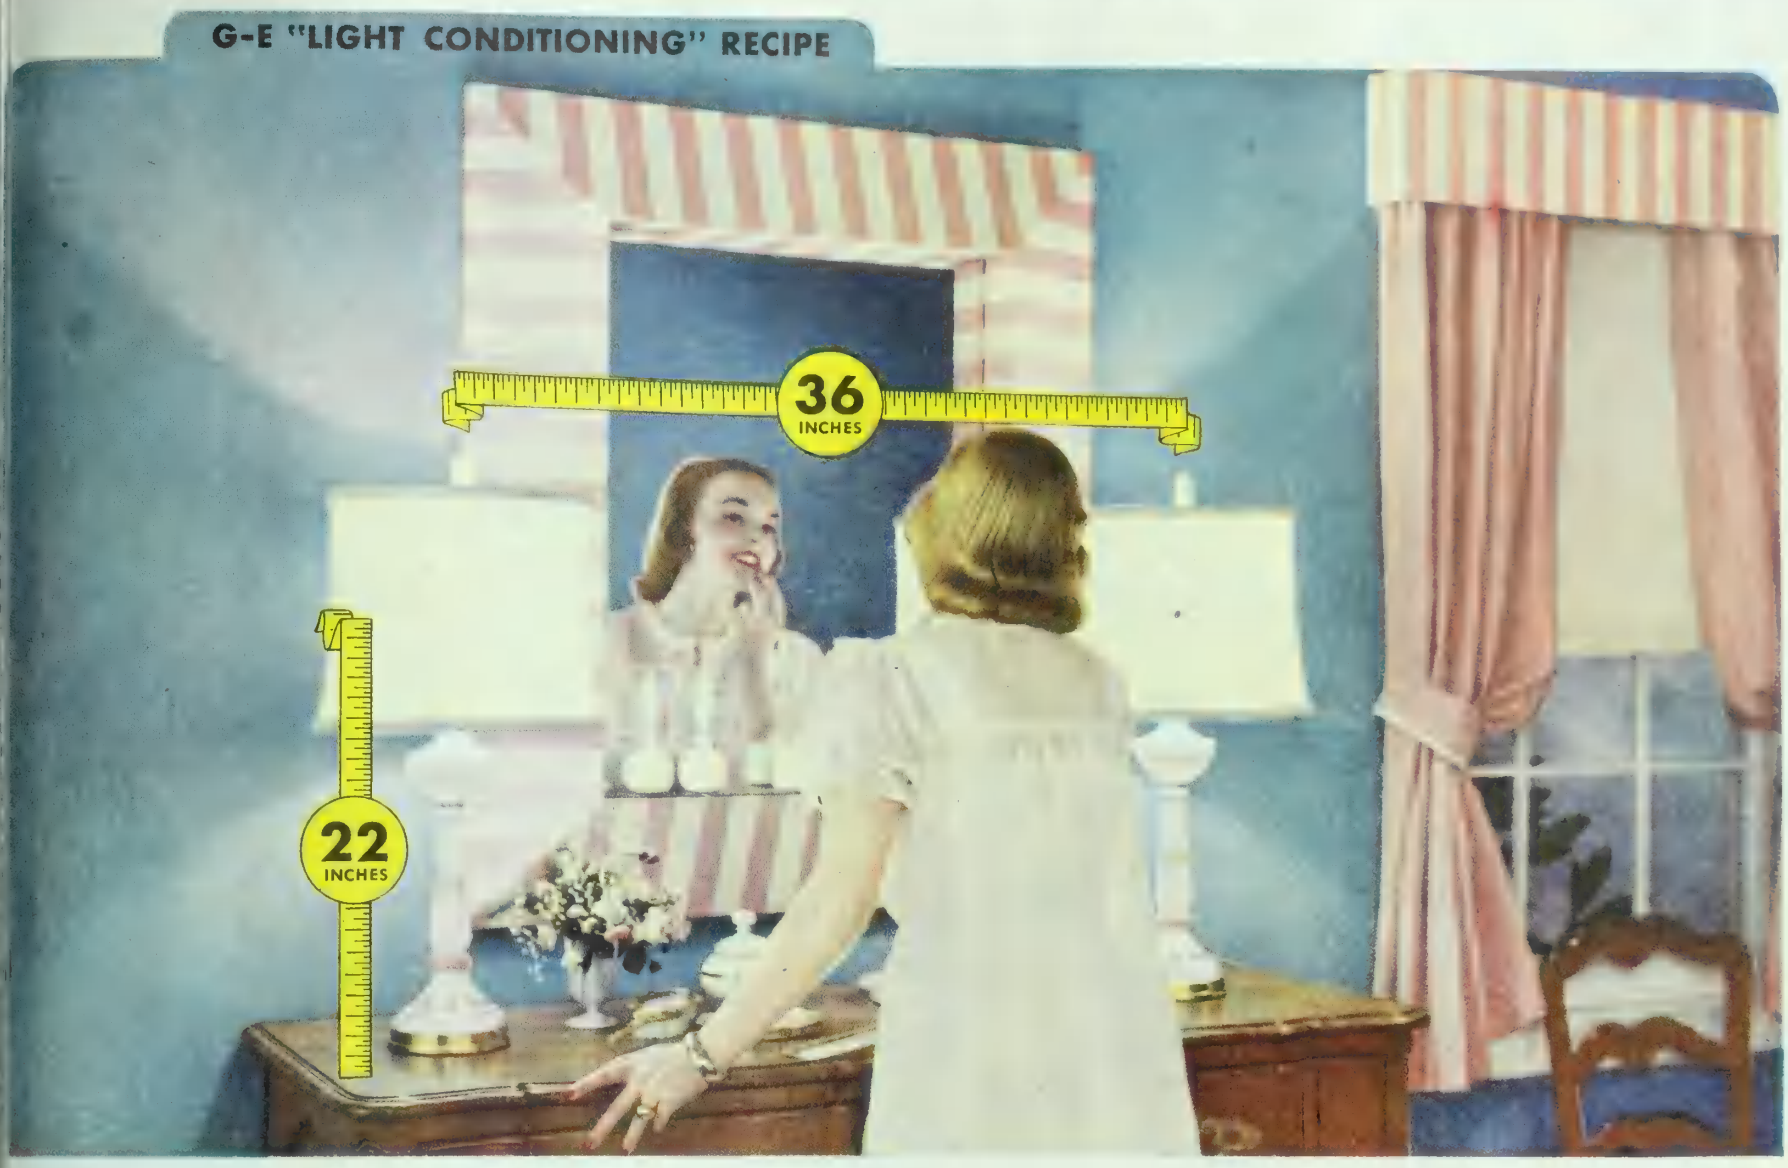
I went indoors and stood in the librar my back to the open fireplace, my hands my pockets. The dogs came in as was the custom, and lay down at my feet. Seecom came to ask me if there were any orders f Wellington, for t morning. Did I wa the horses and the ca riage, or should he sa dle Gypsy for me? N I told him, I would gi no orders tonight. would see Wellingt myself after breakfas I wished to be call at my usual time. H answered, "Yes, sir and left the roor Master Philip had gor forever. Mr. Ashley ha come home. It was strange feeling. In sense it made me hun ble, and at the sam time oddly proud.

Never give way to melancholy; resist it steadily, for the habit will encroach. I once gave a lady two-and-twenty recipes against melancholy; one was a bright fire; another, to remember all the pleasant things said to her; another, to keep a box of sugar plums on the chimney piece, and a kettle simmering on the hob. I thought this mere trifling at the moment, but have in after life discovered how true it is that these little pleasures often banish melancholy better than higher and more exalted objects; and that no means ought to be thought too trifling which can oppose it, either in ourselves or in others.

—SIDNEY SMITH.

My godfather, Nic Kendall, came over th following day, bringir Louise with him. There were no close relative to summon, and aside from bequests to Se combe and the other servants, with the cu tomary donations to the poor in the parisl the widows and the orphans, the whole of h estate and property was left to me. Nic Kendall read the will alone to me, in the brary. Louise took herself off for a walk in th grounds. In spite of the legal language, th business seemed simple and straightforwar Except for one thing. The Italian Rainaldi ha been right. Nick Kendall was appointed m guardian, because the estate did not becom completely mine until I was twenty-fiv

"It was a belief of Ambrose's," said m godfather, taking off his spectacles, as h handed me the document to read again fo myself, "that no young man knows his ow mind until he turns twenty-five. In point fact, it won't affect you, except that you wi have to call upon me for money, as you a ways have done, for the estate accounts, an for your personal use, for a further seve months. Your birthday is in April, isn't it?



"You should know," I said, "you wer my sponsor."

"A funny little worm you were, too," h said with a smile, "staring with puzzled eye at the parson. Ever felt the lack of parent Philip? It's been hard on you, I often think without your mother."

"I don't know," I said. "I've neve thought about it much. I never wanted any one but Ambrose."

"It was wrong, all the same," he said. " used to tell Ambrose so, but he never lis tened to me. There should have been some one in the house—a housekeeper, a distan relative, anyone. You have grown up ig norant of women, and if you ever marry will be hard on your wife. I was saying so t

(Continued on Page 97)

New beauty secret—"G-E Light Conditioning"

HAVE you ever really seen yourself? As others see you, that is? With no light distortions in your mirror? No deceptive shadows to fool your eye? No mirror glare to confuse your image?

Chances are you never have—unless your dresser mirror is G-E Light Conditioned. You'll be amazed when you see the new you in a Light Conditioned mirror. And your room, too, will take on new beauty.

With G-E Light Conditioning you have plenty of light to see that your make-up blends smoothly with your natural coloring. You have even light on both sides of your face. No harsh glare in your eyes. No sharp shadows to mar your reflection.

G-E Light Conditioning is a brand new idea in home lighting—recipes that tell you how to get the lighting that engineers have found is best by using the right bulb in the right fixture in the right place.

The recipe above shows one type of lamp recommended for your bedroom dresser. Many others are available. The tape measure shows exactly where to put them.

FREE "LIGHT CONDITIONING" RECIPE BOOKLET. Brand new! Contains 22 Light Conditioning recipes. Covers every room. Specifies bulbs, fixtures, measurements. Write Lamp Div., General Electric Company, Dept. 166-LHJ-11, Nela Park, Cleveland 12, Ohio.

CHOOSE YOUR BRIGHTNESS. A G-E 3-lite lamp gives you three lighting levels without changing bulbs. The 30-70-100-watt size is recommended for the dresser lamps in recipe above. Only 30¢ plus tax.

SOFT LIGHT. Lamp in front is the new G-E White bulb with special "Q" coating. It's all-over bright. Gives softer, more evenly spread light than standard bulb (rear) with no loss of light. Cuts glare. 100-watt 21¢ plus tax.

BRIGHT MONDAY. Cool fluorescent lighting chases gloom from your laundry room. More light. Fewer shadows. Less glare. You get the wash done faster, easier and better.

STOP BULBSNATCHING! With plenty of spare G-E lamps on hand, the family won't have to rob one socket to fill another. Buy them in new G-E 4-lamp packages—easy to carry, store, use. 100-watt pkg. 64¢ plus tax.

You can put your confidence in—

GENERAL ELECTRIC

ALABAMA

Andalusia — Homa-Goff Furn. Co.
Anniston — Haverty Furn. Co.
Birmingham — Haverty Furn. Co.
Birmingham — Sokol Bros.
Brewton — Hainjes'
Decatur — Sterchi Bros. Stores
Florence — Rogers
Florence — Sterchi Bros. Stores
Gadsden — Moss Furn. Co.
Gadsden — Sterchi Bros. Stores
Greenville — Hainjes'
Huntsville — Sterchi Bros. Stores
Jasper — Palmer-McCutchen Furn.
Mobile — Adam Glass
Mobile — Roche Home Equip. Co.
Montgomery — Bishop-Parker Furn.
Montgomery — Grimes-Hudson Furn.
Montgomery — Haverty Furn. Co.
Montgomery — Homa-Goff Furn. Co.
Montgomery — Rhodes, Inc.
Tuscaloosa — Sokol Bros.

ALASKA

Anchorage — North'n Commercial Co.
Fairbanks — North'n Commerical Co.

ARIZONA

Flagstaff — Flagstaff Furn. Co.
Mesa — Paul L. Sales Co.
Phoenix — Barrows Furn.
Tucson — Mitchell Furn. Co.
Tucson — Steinfeld's Dept. Store
Winslow — H. L. Boyd Supply

ARKANSAS

Arkadelphia — Nowlin Furn. Co.
Batesville — C. W. Maxfield & Co.
El Dorado — Hanna & Co. Inc.
Fayetteville — Stump Furn. Co.
Ft. Smith — Arcade Furn. Co.
Little Rock — Arkansas Carpet & Furn.
Little Rock — Gus Blass & Co.
Little Rock — Haverty Furn. Co.
Little Rock — John Tucker Furn. Co.
Magnolia — Home Furn. Co.
Pinebluff — Ideal Furn. Co.

CALIFORNIA

Alhambra — Ashburn's
Anaheim — Aaron Schultz Furn.
Bakersfield — McMahan's Furn. Store
Bell — Garner Furn. & Apl. Co.
Burbank — McMahan's Furn. Store
Chico — Hayden Furn. Co.
Compton — Phillips Furn. Co.
Covina — Sawyer Furn. Co.
Dinuba — Mathis & Bolinger Furn.
Eureka — Garrison's
Fresno — Slater Furn. Co.
Fullerton — Riutcel Bros. Furn.
Glendale — McMahan's Furn. Store
Glendale — Geo. Seeley Furn. Co.
Huntington Park — McMahan's Furn.
Inglewood — McMahan's Furn. Store
Laguna Beach — Laguna Beach Furn.
Long Beach — Aaron Schultz Furn.
Los Angeles — Gold Furn. Co.
Los Angeles — Noal Furn. Co.
Los Gatos — Mickelsen's
Marysville — Beal Furn. Co.
Merced — Slater Furn. Co.
Modesto — Wherry Furn. Co.
Monterey Park — Jordan's Furn.
Mountainview — Moore Furn. Co.
National City — Bay Furn. Co.
No. Hollywood — McMahan's Furn.
No. Hollywood — Rediger Furn. Co.
N. Long Beach — Aaron Schultz Furn.
No. Sacramento — Modern Furn. Co.
Oakland — H. C. Capwell Co.
Ontario — Thompson's Furn.
Orange — Clyde Higgins
Oxnard — McMahan's Furn. Store
Palo Alto — Palo Alto Furn Co.
Pasadena — Hansen & Kirkpatrick
Pasadena — McMahan's Furn. Store
Pomona — Pomona Valley Furn. Co.
Richmond — Travalina Furn. Co.
Sacramento — John Breuner Co.
Sacramento — Montgomery-Ward
Salinas — Standard Furn. Co.
San Bernardino — Fooshee Furn. Co.
San Diego — Dryer's Std. Furn. Co.
San Fernando — McMahan's Furn.
San Francisco — Redlick-Newman
San Jose — Goldeen's Furn. Co.
Santa Ana — Horton Furn. Co.
Santa Cruz — Samuel Leask & Son
Santa Paula — McMahan's Furn.
Santa Rosa — Santa Rosa Furn. Co.
Stockton — John Breuner Co.
Susanville — Whitely's
Vallejo — Staats & Bell
Van Nuys — McMahan's Furn. Store
Van Nuys — Slocum Furn. Co.
Visalia — Morris Furn. Co.
Yreka — J. E. Turner & Son

COLORADO

Denver — McBurney Furn. Co.

CONNECTICUT

Ansonia — Spector Furn. Co.
Bridgeport — George B. Clark Co.
Bridgeport — Colonial Furn. Co.
Bridgeport — Leventhal Furn. Co.
Bristol — Bristol Furn. Co.
Danbury — Henry Dick & Son
Derby — Howard & Barber Co.
Elmwood — Puritan Furn. Mart
Hartford — Lane Furn. Co.
Hartford — Shoor Bros.
Hartford — Wise Smith Co.
Meriden — Franklin Furn. Co.
Middletown — Caulkins and Post, Inc.
Milford — Wayside of Milford
New Britain — Coronet Showrooms
New Haven — Chamberlain's
New Haven — Komisar's
Plainville — Plainville Wayside Furn.
South Norwalk — Angevine Furn. Co.
Stamford — P. Sabina & Co. Inc.
Stamford — Wallman's
Terryville — Terryville Furn. Co.
Torrington — A. A. Smith
Torrington — The Wolcott House
Waterbury — Howland-Hughes Co.
Waterbury — Warehouse Furn. Co.
Winsted — Southworth Wayside Barn

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Washington — House & Hermann
Washington — Lansburgh Bros.

DELAWARE

Dover — Nap & Spence
Milford — Forrest Webster
Millsboro — Collins & Ryan
Newark — Eagle Furn. Co.
Selbyville — Selbyville Furn. Co.
Wilmington — John P. Feeney Inc.
Wilmington — P. Feinberg Inc.
Wilmington — Hurley-Powell
Wilmington — Liebman's
Wilmington — Miller Bros. Co.
Wilmington — Ogden-Howard
Wilmington — B. Ritter

FLORIDA

Bradenton — Mather of Bradenton
Clearwater — Mather of Clearwater
Cocoa — Kidd Furn. Co.
Daytona Beach — McFarland Furn.
Delray Beach — Craige Furn. Co.
Eustis — B. E. Thompson Furn. Co.
Fernandina — Fernandina Furn. Co.
Ft. Lauderdale — Mather of Ft. Lauderdale
Ft. Lauderdale — Rhodes, Inc.
Ft. Pierce — Mather of Fort Pierce
Gainesville — Cox Furn. Co.
Hollywood — Hollywood Furn. Co.
Homestead — Homestead Furn. Co.
Jacksonville — Cunningham Furn. Co.
Jacksonville — Hart Furn. Co.
Jacksonville — Haverty Furn. Co.
Jacksonville — Jones Bros. Furn. Co.
Jacksonville — Mather of Jacksonville
Jacksonville — McCranie Furn. Co.
Jacksonville — Pierce-Wall Furn. Co.
Jacksonville — Rhodes, Inc.
Jacksonville — Sterchi Bros.
Lake City — Cox Furn. Co.
Lake Worth — Gunderson Furn. Co.
Leesburg — Lamb Furn. Co.
Miami — Burdine's Inc.
Miami — J. J. Cater Furn Co.
Miami — Compton-Oden Furn.
Miami — Hadley's Inc.
Miami — I. C. Helmly
Miami — Helmly's Furn. Dept. Store
Miami — Luther Furn. Co.
Miami — Rhodes, Inc.
Miami — Southern Furn. Co.
Miami — Woodrum's Inc.
Naples — Smith Furn. Co.
Ocala — Blocker-Turnipseed Furn.
Ocala — Cox Furn. Co.
Orlando — Mather of Orlando
Orlando — Powell Furn. Co.
Orlando — Sterchi Bros. Stores
Palatka — Mather of Palatka
Palatka — Yelverton Furn. Co.
Palm Beach — J. J. Cater Furn. Co.
Panama City — Chavers-Fowhand
Pensacola — Echols Furn. Co.
Pensacola — Escambia Furn. Co.
Pensacola — Marston & Quina, Inc.
Pensacola — Rhodes, Inc.
Sarasota — Mather of Sarasota
St. Augustine — Willis, Inc.
St. Petersburg — Dew Furn. Co.
St. Petersburg — Lester Bros. Furn.
St. Petersburg — Mather of St. Petersburg Tallahassee — Cox Furn. Co.
Tampa — Friday O'Neal Furn. Co.
Tampa — Haverty Furn. Co.
Tampa — Home Furn. Co.
Tampa — Maas Bros.
Tampa — O'Neal Furn. Co.
Tampa — Seminole Furn. Co.
Tampa — Walker-Hood Furn.
Vero Beach — Tropical Furn. Co.
West Palm Beach — Mather of Palm Beach
West Palm Beach — Rhodes, Inc.
Wintergarden — W. T. Ziegler Furn.
Winter Haven — Lamb Furn. Co.
Ybor City — D. Stein Furn. Co.
Ybor City — Ybor Furn. Co.

GEORGIA

Albany — Callaway's Inc.
Atlanta — Haverty Furn. Co.
Atlanta — Rhodes, Inc.
Atlanta — Sterchi Bros.
Augusta — Haverty Furn. Co.
Augusta — Maxwell Bros.
Augusta — Rhodes, Inc.
Brunswick — Singleton Furn. Co.
Columbus — Maxwell Bros.
Dublin — Brown Furn. Co.
Macon — Rhodes, Inc.
Macon — Sterchi Bros.
Rome — Maxwell & Garnett Furn. Co.
Savannah — I. C. Helmley Furn. Co.
Savannah — Maxwell Bros.
Thomasville — W. Feinberg & Son
Thomasville — Rhodes, Inc.

HAWAII

Honolulu — Oahu Furn. Co.

IDAHO

Kellogg — Thornhill Co.

ILLINOIS

Alton — C. J. Jacoby & Co.
Aurora — B & M Furn. Co.
Belleville — Knapp Furn. Co.
Cairo — Rhodes-Burford
Canton — Reynolds Furn. Store
Carbondale — Rhodes-Burford
Champaign — Keck Furn. Co.
Collinsville — Leo Hiken Furn. Co.
Danville — Rhodes-Burford
Decatur — Arthur's Furn. Co.
Earlville — Arthur C. Hill
E. St. Louis — Rhodes-Burford
Elgin — Rauschenberger Furn. Co.
Freeport — Don Smith Furn.
Jerseyville — Jacoby Bros.
Lawrenceville — Teegarden Furn. Co.
Lincoln — Harwick's Furn.
Mattoon — Paul Harris Furn. Co.
Pana — Tex Brothers
Peoria — Cohen Furn. Co.
Peoria — Loewenstein's Inc.
Rockford — Ingrassia Bros. Inc.
Taylorville — Tex Furn. Co.
Waukegan — Morrison Globe Co.

INDIANA

Alexandria — Broyles Furn. Store
Attica — Coffing & Robinson Co.
Aurora — Green & Schwier Co.
Bluffton — Linn & Saurer
Corydon — Conrad & Son Piano Co.
Decatur — W. H. Zwick & Son
Evansville — Gem Furn. Co.
Ft. Wayne — Earl Groth & Co.
Ft. Wayne — Homestead Furn. Co.
Ft. Wayne — Rialto Furn. Co.
Goshen — Stiver's Furn. Co.
Greensburg — Schultz Furn. Co.
Jeffersonville — United Home Furn.
Kokomo — Shirley's Home Furn'g Co.
Lafayette — Reifers Furn. Co.
Lawrenceburg — The Junker Store
Madison — Gans Furn. Store
Milan — W. H. Stute
Mishawaka — Beiger Furn. Co.
New Albany — Reisz Furn. Co.
Princeton — Scull Furn. Co.
Rushville — Taff Furn. Co.
Shelbyville — Ben Piatt Furn. Co.
South Bend — Sailors Home Furn.
Terre Haute — Root Dry Goods Co.
Terre Haute — Silverstein Bros.
Wabash — Sterling Furn. Co.

IOWA

Cedar Rapids — Leibsohn's Furn. Co.
Davenport — Huebotter Furn. Co.
Keokuk — Lindquist Bros.
Ottumwa — Kipple DePrenger Furn.

KANSAS

Chanute — Johnson Bros. Furn. Co.
McPherson — Green Furn. Co.
Wichita — Hinkel's

KENTUCKY

Barbourville — Miller-Yancey Furn.
Berea — Finnell Furn. Co.
Central City — Villines Furn. Co.
Covington — J. E. Brock Furn. Co.
Covington — A. J. Ostrow Inc.
Covington — Tillman's Furn. & Apl.
Danville — Baugh & Garner Furn. Co.
Elizabethtown — Hardin Furn. Co.
Frankfort — Marcus Furn. Co.
Harrodsburg — Lay-Lawson Furn. Co.
Hazard — Bullard Home & Off. Supply
Hazard — Hazard Furn. Co.
Hopkinsville — Keach Furn. Co.
Lexington — Baugh & Garner
Lexington — Leet Bros.
Lexington — H. H. Leet Furn. Co.
Lexington — Montgomery-Ward & Co.
Lexington — The Purcell Co.
Lexington — L. L. Roberts Furn. Co.
Lexington — Standard Furn. Co.
Lexington — Wheeler Furn. Co.
Louisville — American Home Supply
Louisville — Central Furn. Co.
Louisville — Delaney Furn. Co.
Louisville — James Greene Furn. Co.
Louisville — Kaufman-Straus Co.
Louisville — Rhodes-Burford
Louisville — United Furn. Co.
Madisonville — Utley Furn. Co.
Maysville — C. L. Mains & Son
Newport — Kentucky Sales & Service
Pineville — Pineville Furn. Co.
Richmond — W. F. Higgins Furn. Co.
Somerset — A. Goldenberg
Winchester — Ratliff Furn. Co.

LOUISIANA

Alexandria — Clark, Dunbar & Dunn
Alexandria — Hemenway-Johnson
Alexandria — United Furn. Co.
Baton Rouge — Kornmeyer's
Lake Charles — Hemenway-Johnson
Lake Charles — Home Furn. Co.
Lake Charles — Milford Furn. Co.
Lake Charles — Southern Furn. Co.
Monroe — Durrett Hdw. & Furn. Co.
Monroe — Monroe Furn. Co.
New Orleans — Max Barnett Furn. Co.
New Orleans — Beach Bros. Furn.
New Orleans — Bradford's, Inc.
New Orleans — Doerr Furn. Co.
New Orleans — Haverty Furn. Stores
New Orleans — D. H. Holmes Co.
New Orleans — Morris Kirschman
New Orleans — LaFayette Furn. Co.
New Orleans — Jeff D. Mathews Furn.
New Orleans — Mintz Furn. Co.
New Orleans — Nu-Idea Furn. Co.
New Orleans — H. Rosenberg & Sons
New Orleans — Weiner's Inc.
Opelousas — Abdallas Furn. Store
Shreveport — American Furn. Co.
Shreveport — Bewley Furn. Co.
Shreveport — Haverty Furn. Co.
Shreveport — Hemenway-Johnson

MAINE

Biddeford — Potter's
Portland — Potter's

MARYLAND

Baltimore — Gassinger Bros. Inc.
Baltimore — Gomprecht & Benesch
Baltimore — Highland Furn. Co.
Baltimore — Howard Furn. Co.
Baltimore — Sam Shaivitz Furn.
Baltimore — A. Sindler
Cambridge — Nathan's
Cumberland — B. Beneman & Son
Cumberland — L. Bernstein Furn. Co.
Cumberland — E. V. Coyle Furn. Co.
Cumberland — Wolf Furn. Co.
Dundalk — Dundalk Furn. Co.
Elkton — Rubenstone's
Frostburg — Frostburg Furn. Co.
Hagerstown — Jacob Miller Inc.
Salisbury — Nathan's
Salisbury — R E Powell & Co.

MASSACHUSETTS

Arnold — W. R. Gott
Beverly — Kransberg Furn. Co.
Beverly — C. F. Tompkins
Boston — Frank Ferdinand Inc.
Boston — Moller's
Brockton — Atherton Furn. Co.
Fall River — Charlmor Furn. Co.
Fall River — Kaplan Bros. Furn. Co.
Fall River — Mason Furn. Co.
Fall River — Travis Furn. Co.
Framington — Anderson Furn. Co.
Gloucester — Metropolitan Furn. Co.
Holyoke — Adaskin-Tilley Furn. Co.
Holyoke — The Kane Co.
Hudson — Boston Furn. Co.
Lawrence — Michael J. Sullivan Inc.
Lowell — Household Furn. Co.
Lowell — Moller's Inc.
Lynn — W. B. Gifford
Lynn — Hill & Welch
Lynn — Metropolitan Furn. Co.
Malden — Gorman Furn. Co.
Marlboro — Anderson Furn. Co.
New Bedford — Alpert's
New Bedford — Bettencourt Furn Co.
New Bedford — Mason Furn. Co.
North Adams — National Furn. Co.
Northampton — Ruby's Furn. Stores
Norwood — Norwood Furn. Co.
Peabody — McGivern's Furn. House
Pittsfield — Pontoosus Wayside Furn.
Pittsfield — Union-Fern Co.
Salem — Metropolitan Furn. Co.
Salem — C. F. Tompkins
Springfield — The Kane Co.
Waltham — Clarkson Furn. Co.
West Springfield — Sam Salem Inc.
Worcester — Singer's Furn. Sh'rooms

MICHIGAN

Adrian — Traster Furn. Co.
Alma — Alma Furn. Co.
Alpena — Alpena Furn. Co.
Ann Arbor — Barrett Furn. Inc.
Bay City — C. E. Rosebury & Sons
Benton Harbor — House of Furniture
Benton Harbor — W. Newland & Son
Birmingham — Har-Trom Hiway Mart
Buchanan — Sexton's Furn.
Clare — Clare Furn. Co.
Coldwater — Mac's Furn. Home
Dearborn — Calvin Furn. Co.
Dearborn — Crown Furn. Co. No. 6
Detroit — Baer Furn. Co.
Detroit — Crown Furn. Co. No. 5
Detroit — Fenster & Co.
Detroit — Irvings Furn. Co.
Detroit — Roberts Furn. Co.
Detroit — United Outfitting Co.
Detroit — Westown Furn. Co.
Dexter — Webers Furn. Store
Flint — Quality Htg. Co.
Flint — Smith-Bridgman & Co.
Hamtramck — Worker's Furn. Exchg.
Hillsdale — H. J. Gelzer & Son
Ithaca — Beebe Furn. Co.
Kalamazoo — Central Furn. Co.
Lincoln Park — Eder Furn. Co.
Ludington — P. C. Hansen Furn Co.
Marquette — Tonella & Rupp
Mt. Clemens — Mt. Clemens Furn. Co.
Mt. Pleasant — Superior Furn. Co.
Muskegon Hgts. — Vandervelde's
N. Adams — North Adams Furn. Mart
Owosso — D. M. Christian Co.
Owosso — Robbins Furn. Co.
Perry — P. J. Aldrich Stores
Pontiac — Miller Furn. Co.
Romeo — Wilbur's
Sparta — Sherry's Furn. Store
Sturgis — Mac's Furn. Store
Wayne — W. L. Gates Furn. Co.
Wyandotte — F. W. Ginzel Co.
Wyandotte — Lynch & Sullivan

MISSISSIPPI

Biloxi — Hayley-Clower Furn.
Brookhaven — John B. Perkin Furn.
Gulfport — J. C. Clower Furn. Co.
Gulfport — Rhodes, Inc.
Jackson — Batte Furn. Co.
Jackson — Mississippi Moving & Stg.
Jackson — Rhodes, Inc.

MISSOURI

Cambridge — Nathan's Furn. Stores
Joplin — Joplin Furn. Co.
Kansas City — Jones Store Co.
St. Louis — Dau the House Furnisher
St. Louis — Ideal Home Furnishers

MONTANA

Billings — Billings Hdwe. Co.

NEBRASKA

Omaha — Davidson Furn. Co.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Manchester — A. A. Mooney Furn. Co.
Nashua — C. H. Avery Co.
Portsmouth — Atherton Furn. Co.

NEW JERSEY

Asbury Park — Banker's Furn. Co.
Asbury Park — Steinbach & Co.
Atlantic City — M. E. Blatt Co.
Atlantic City — Dungan, Fry & Spence
Atlantic City — Hurley-Jones Co.
Atlantic City — Rosengard & Ginsburg
Bayonne — Cohen Furn. House
Belmar — Clayton J. Newman
Bridgeton — I. W. Goldberg
Bridgeton — Dorr Furn.
Bridgeton — Hurley's
Camden — Hurley's
Camden — Naden Store
Clifton — David Sussman
Dover — S. T. Bryant
Elizabeth — Hudson Furn. Co.
Elizabeth — Levy Bros.
Elizabeth — McManus Bros.
Egg Harbor — Weiler & Co.
Elmer — Carl Harz
Freehold — Silvert's Furn.
Hackensack — Union Furn. Co.
Hoboken — Washington Furn. Co.
Irvington — Wayne Furn. Co.
Jersey City — Foye Furn. Co.
Jersey City — Goodman Furn. Co.
Jersey City — Gray's Inc.
Jersey City — Kunath Furn. Co.
Jersey City — John Mullins & Co.
Millville — Dorr Furn. Co.
Morristown — Grand Rapids Furn. Co.
Newark — Hoffman Furn. Co.
Newark — Rockford Furn. Co.
Newark — Sheitleman Furn. Co.
Newark — W. Wilderotter
New Brunswick — Built Right Furn.
New Brunswick — Rice & Co.
New Brunswick — Schwartz Furn. Co.
New Brunswick — J. Schwartz Inc.
North Bergen — Castle Furn. Co.
North Bergen — Union Furn. Co.
No. Hackensack — Huffman & Boyle
Parsippany — Parsippany Furn.
Passaic — American Furn.
Passaic — Gang & Gang
Passaic — Grand Rapids Furn. Co.
Passaic — Locker Bros.
Passaic — Stark & Son
Paterson — Keystone Furn. Co.
Paterson — Select Furn. Co.
Pennsgrove — Hurley's
Pennsgrove — Weinberg's
Perth Amboy — Irwin's Fine Furn.
Perth Amboy — Albert Leon & Son
Plainfield — Watchung Furn. Co.
Pompton Lakes — Larans Inc.
Rahway — Koos Bros.
Red Bank — Acme Furn. Co.
Riverside — Hurley's
Salem — Goldberg's Furn. Store
Salem — Hitchner's Furn. Store
Salem — Kline's Furn.
Somerville — R. Granetz
South River — S. Shayevitz
Succasunna — Suburban Furn. Co.
Summit — Doyle Furn. Co.
Trenton — Goldberg's Corp.
Trenton — Hurley-Tobin
Trenton — Swern & Co.
Ventnor — Ventnor Furn. Co.
Vineland — Blom Bros.
Vineland — Vineland Home Supply
W. New York — Public Furn. Co. Inc.
W. New York — Royal Furn. Co.
W. New York — Stanley Furn. Co.
Westwood — Parkview Furn. Co.

NEW MEXICO

Albuquerque — American Furn. Co.
Artesia — Boyd Barnett Furn.

NEW YORK

Albany — John B. Hauf
Albany — Union-Fern Co.
Albany — A. Wildove
Amsterdam — Union-Fern Co.
Astoria — H. Bogen & Sons
Brooklyn — D. Berlinger & Son
Brooklyn — C. & M. Furn. Co.
Brooklyn — N. Deutsch
Brooklyn — George Hummel & Sons
Brooklyn — Knickerbocker Furn. Co.
Brooklyn — Paul Nielsen, Inc.
Brooklyn — Pawgan Bros.
Buffalo — Victor's
Catskill — A. Oren & Sons Inc.
Endicott — Coury Bros.
Flushing — Abramson's
Glens Falls — Union-Fern, Inc.
Gloversville — Union-Fern, Inc.
Greenport — S. B. Horton Co.
Hempstead — Franklin Shops Inc.
Hempstead — George's Fine Furn.
Hempstead — H. Plotsky & Sons
Herkimer — Markson's Furn. Stores
Huntington — Knight Bros.
Jamaica — Ruby's Furn. Exchg.
Kingston — Union-Fern, Inc.
Kirkland — Harrison Furn.
Latham — Sharlet's
Mechanicsville — Union-Fern, Inc.
Middletown — J. H. Hait Furn.
Middle Village — Arion Furn. House
Newburgh — Burger's Furn. Store
New York — Eckhardt-Berman Corp.
New York — Harris Cohen & Sons
New York — Royal Furn. Co.
New York — Weil & Co.
Oneonta — Markson's Furn. Stores
Ossining — Cartoon's Furn. Store
Ossining — A. L. Myers Inc.
Peekskill — Voughts Furn. Co.
Plattsburg — Ames Furn. Co.
Port Chester — Jos. Cohen & Sons
Poughkeepsie — Perlmutter's
Poughkeepsie — Wallace's
Queens Village — J. A. Bellafiore
Riverhead — S. Harding & Sons
Rochester — E. W. Edwards & Son
Rochester — Harry T. Mangurian's
Rochester — Reliable Furn. Co.
Saratoga — Union-Fern, Inc.
Schenectady — Union-Fern, Inc.
Schenectady — Wallace's
Stapleton, S. I. — Ace Furn. Co.
Syracuse — E. W. Edwards & Son
Syracuse — Fleischman's
Syracuse — Kieffer Bros. Inc.
Tarrytown — Cartoon's
Troy — Wm. H. Frear & Co.
Troy — Standard Furn. Co.
Troy — Union-Fern, Inc.
Utica — Markson's Furn. Stores
Utica — Union-Fern, Inc.
Valley Stream — Roman Co.
Waverly — Knapp's Dept. Store
Whitehall — Scott Furn. Co.
White Plains — Mazur Bros.
Yonkers — Chachkes Furn. Co.
Yonkers — Main Furn. Corp.
Yonkers — T. Whalen

NORTH CAROLINA

Charlotte — Perry-Mincey Furn. Co.
Dunn — Dunn Furn. Co.
Durham — Rhodes, Inc.
Fayetteville — Highland Furn. Co.
Fayetteville — Market Furn. Co.
Gastonia — Rankin-Armstrong Co.
Gibsonville — Boone Furn. Store
Greensboro — Burtner Furn. Co.
Greensboro — Miller Furn. Co.
Greensboro — Rhodes, Inc.
High Point — Burtner Furn. Co.
Lawrinburg — Market Furn. Co.
Lumberton — Biggs Furn. Store
Murphy — Peyton G. Ivie
Raleigh — W. E. Cooper Furn. Co.
Rockingham — Hallum Furn. Co.
Salisbury — R. W. Norman Co.
Sanford — Dossenbach Furn. Co.
Spencer — Stoudemire Furn. Co.
Washington — Phillips-Wright Furn.
Whiteville — Todd Furn. Co.
Wilmington — Pender Furn. Co.
Wilmington — People's Furn. Co.
Wilmington — Todd Furn. Co.
Wilmington — Rhodes, Inc.

OHIO

Akron — M. O'Neal Co.
Akron — The Yeager Co.
Barberton — Weigand Furn. Co.
Bellefontaine — L. M. Stupp Furn.
Camden — Caskey, Vernon Co.
Chillicothe — H. W. Cruitt
Cincinnati — A & N Furn. & Apl. Co.
Cincinnati — Alms & Doepke
Cincinnati — P. L. Barth Co.
Cincinnati — D. Davis Furn. Co.
Cincinnati — Ernst Furn. & Apl. Co.
Cincinnati — E & S Furn. & Apl. Co.
Cincinnati — The McAplin Co.
Cincinnati — Leo S. Mode & Sons Co.
Cincinnati — The A. Nielen Co.
Cincinnati — L. L. Redman Co.
Cincinnati — The John Shillito Co.
Cincinnati — Solway's Furn. Co.
Cincinnati — Jake Tennenbaum Co.
Cincinnati — Julius Tennenbaum
Cleveland — Cassidy Furn. Co.
Cleveland — Kronheim Furn.
Cleveland — The May Co.
College Corner — The Furn. House
Columbus — Good Hsksg. Shop
Columbus — White Furn. Co.
Dayton — R. L. Norris
Dayton — Westside Furn. Co.
East Liverpool — Moore Furn. Co.
Hamilton — Hamilton Furn. Co.
Hamilton — Max Joffe Furn. Co.
Hamilton — George Krebs' Sons
Hamilton — Lowenstein Furn. Co.
Laura — Roark Furn. Co.
Lima — Armstrong & Son
Lockland — Schuman Furn. Co.
Marion — Scherff Wayside Furn. Store
Miamisburg — Gebhardt & Schmidt
Middletown — F. Cappel Furn. Co.
Middletown — Max Joffe Furn. Co.
Milford — Mack's Furn. & Apls.
Norwood — Norwood Apl. & Furn. Co.
Piqua — The Elliott Furn. Co.
Portsmouth — Gemperline Furn. Co.
Reading — Farr's Trade Mart
St. Marys — John's Furn. Co.
Springfield — The Cappel Htg. Co.
Springfield — The Hadley Co.
Toledo — Tiedtke's
Washington C. H. — Wm. E. Dale
Wilmington — G. M. Rice
Xenia — The Adair Co

OKLAHOMA

Ardmore — Collier Bros. Furn. Co.
Bartlesville — Bartlesville Furn. Co.
Durant — Durant Furn. Co.
El Reno — Jones Furn. Co.
Lawton — Lacy Furn. Co.
Oklahoma City — Harbour-Longmire
Oklahoma City — O. K. Furn. & Rug
Oklahoma City — Sneed Furn. Co.
Oklahoma City — A. F. Williams Furn.
Sand Springs — Mule Skin Brown
Sapulpa — Rule-Reel Furn. Co.
Seminole — Collier Bros. Furn. Co.
Tulsa — Dickason-Goodman Furn.
Tulsa — Hanna Furn. Co.
Tulsa — Shannon's Furn. Co.
Wewoka — Moore Furn. Co.
Woodward — Young Furn. Co.

OREGON

Astoria — Greenberg's Furn.
Beaverton — Gales Furn. Co.
Enterprise — Ratcliff Furn. Co.
Eugene — Lyon's Furn. Co.
Portland — Director Furn. Co.
Portland — Powers Furn. Co.
Portland — Star Furn. Co.

PENNSYLVANIA

Allentown — Benesch's
Allentown — Miller Furn. Co.
Altoona — Wolf Furn. Co.
Ambler — Ambler Furn. Co.
Barnesboro — Wolf Furn. Co.
Bellefonte — Wolf Furn. Co.
Bethlehem — H. Coleman & Sons
Bethlehem — Miller Furn. Co.
Carlisle — Meyers Furn. Co.
Chambersburg — Jacob Miller Inc.
Chester — M. J. Freed
Chester — L. A. Hackett
Chester — Stanley Furn. Co.
Chester — Tollin's
Clearfield — Leitzinger Bros.
Clearfield — Wolf Furn. Co.
Coalport — Rupp Furn. & Apl. Co.
Coatesville — Braunstein's Inc.
Coatesville — Lipkin's
Darby — Martin's of Darby
Darby — M. Weiner & Co.
Dillsburg — Knaub-Clemens
E. Greenville — Robt. E. Ritter & Son
Easton — Lipkin's
Emporium — Coppersmith's
Galeton — Lush Bros. Inc.
Grove City — Clarkson Furn.
Harrisburg — N. B. Liebman & Co.
Harrisburg — Jacob Miller Inc.
Harrisburg — Gamburg Furn. Co.
Hatboro — DeLite Sales Co.
Hazelton — Wolf Furn. Co.
Huntingdon — H. J. Brown
Hyde — Jas. S. Balthaser
Hyde Villa — Block Bros.
Jenkintown — Stewart Furn. Co.
Jersey Shore — Rick Furn. Stores
Kane — J. W. Bentz Furn. Co.
Lancaster — Harold Furn. Co.
Lancaster — Heinitsh Furn. Co.
Lansdale — Kauffman's
Lansford — N. & J. Greenberger Co.
Lebanon — N. B. Liebman & Co.
Lewisburg — Donahoe Furn. & Apl.
Marcus Hook — C. L. Morris Inc.
Meadville — H. L. Marquette Co.
Media — George Bloom
Mount Carmel — Guinan's Dept. Store
Norristown — B. E. Block & Bros.
Norristown — Stern Furn. Co.
Oxford — Eagle Dept. Store
Palmerton — Silver Furn. Co.
Philadelphia — Charles Barwis
Philadelphia — Block's
Philadelphia — Brody's
Philadelphia — Cohen Bros. Inc.
Philadelphia — Geo. B. Davis Co.
Philadelphia — J. Diegel & Sons
Philadelphia — J. Finkel Co.
Philadelphia — Fuld Furn. Co.
Philadelphia — Gimbel Bros.
Philadelphia — M. Grass & Son
Philadelphia — J. B. Liebman Co.
Philadelphia — Lit Bros.
Philadelphia — McGinnity & Murta
Philadelphia — John A. Moore's Sons
Philadelphia — Nelson's Furn. Inc.
Philadelphia — Pennsylvania Furn.
Philadelphia — Penway Furnishers
Philadelphia — Morris Schiff Co.
Philadelphia — Northeast Home Furn.
Philadelphia — J. Schwartz & Co.
Philadelphia — Shuman Bros.
Philadelphia — Strawbridge & Clothier
Philadelphia — Tioga Elec. & Furn. Co.
Philadelphia — Unity Furn. Co.
Philadelphia — Samuel Waldman
Philadelphia — Walnut Home Equip.
Philadelphia — M. Weiss Son
Philadelphia — West End Furn. Co.
Philadelphia — J. Wolf Furn.
Philipsburg — Martin Furn. Co.
Phoenixville — A. C. Bishop Store
Phoenixville — McCarraher Bros.
Port Alleghany — G. L. Gallup & Son
Pottstown — Block Bros.
Pottstown — Wilkie Furn. Co.
Pottsville — Hummel's Good Furn.
Pottsville — N. B. Liebman & Co.
Reading — Bloom Furn. Co.
Reading — Harold Furn. Co.
Reading — Kaufman Furn. Co.
Sayre — Wolf Furn. Co.
Selinsgrove — Burns Furn. Co.
Shamokin — Guinan's Dept. Store
Somerset — Lohr's
Souderton — Fisher's Furn. Store
Sunbury — Miller's Furn. Store
Tamaqua — Scheid's Dept. Store
Tyrone — Wolf Furn. Co.
Upper Darby — Geo. B. Davis Co.
Upper Darby — Lit Bros.
Warren — Blomquist Shop
Warren — Waxman's & Son
Waynesboro — Jacob Miller Inc.
West Chester — Kauffman's
Williamsport — Neyhart Inc.

PUERTO RICO

San Juan — Gonzalez Padin

RHODE ISLAND

Pawtucket — Shartenberg's Inc.
Providence — The Boston Store

SOUTH CAROLINA

Abbeville — Maxwell-Benson & Bolen
Chester — Peoples Furn. Co.
Charleston — Haverty Furn. Co.
Charleston — Maxwell Bros. & Hall
Charleston — Rhodes, Inc.
Charleston — Southern Furn. Co.
Columbia — Haverty Furn. Co.
Columbia — Lawrence Furn. Co.
Columbia — Rosewood Furn. Co.
Florence — W. M. Waters Co.
Georgetown — Sampit Furn. Co.
Greenville — League's Inc.
Greenville — Maxwell Bros.
Greenville — McDuffie-Parker
Greenville — Rhodes, Inc.
Lauren — Maxwell Bros. & Kenard
Orangeburg — Wannamaker Smoak
Prosperity — Prosperity Furn. Co.
Rock Hill — Allen Furn. Co.
Rock Hill — Moore Furn. Co.
Spartanburg — Hammond-Brown-Jennings
Spartanburg — Maxwell Bros.
Spartanburg — Rhodes, Inc.
Sumter — Hurst-Sexton Furn. Co.
Sumter — Maxwell Bros. & Blackwell
Travellers Rest — Garrett's Inc.
W. Columbia — Hamm & Wise Furn.

TENNESSEE

Bristol — Bristol Furn. Co.
Chattanooga — Haverty Furn. Co.
Clarksville — Brenner Furn. Co. Inc.
Johnson City — Sterchi Bros. Stores
Kingsport — Homeland
Knoxville — Fowler Bros. Co.
Knoxville — J. F. Walker Co.
Nashville — Harley-Holt Co.
Nashville — National Furn. Store
Nashville — Rhodes, Inc.

TEXAS

Abilene — Thornton Dept. Store
Alice — Brunston Furn. Co.
Angleton — Hudeck Bros. Furn. Co.
Austin — Bridges Furn. Co.
Austin — Cabaniss-Brown Inc.
Austin — Karotkin Furn. Co.
Austin — Shanks-Meyer Furn. Co
Beaumont — Dallas-Williams Furn.
Beaumont — Phoenix Furn. Co.
Beaumont — Thompson Furn. Co.
Belton — Household Furn. Co.
Borger — Frank Jennings Furn. Co.
Brady — Lee Adams Furn. Co.
Childress — John's Furn. Co.
Cleveland — Thomas Furn. Co.
Conroe — Conroe Furn. Co.
Corpus Christi — Modern House
Corpus Christi — Nueces Furn. Co.
Dallas — Duffey's Furn. Stores
Dallas — Fakes & Co.
Dallas — Hart Furn. Co.
Dallas — Rick Furn. Stores
Dallas — Sanger Bros.
Edinburg — Star Furn. Co.
Ft. Worth — Ellison Furn. & Cpt. Co.
Ft. Worth — Kemble Bros. Furn. Co.
Ft. Worth — Ladd Furn. & Cpt. Co.
Ft. Worth — Modern Furn. Co.
Ft. Worth — Phoenix Furn. Co.
Ft. Worth — W. C. Stripling Co.
Galveston — Plantowsky's
Galveston — Schreiber & Miller Furn.
Galveston — Warren Furn. Co.
Grand Prairie — Long Furn. Co.
Harlingen — Crossland Furn. Co.
Henderson — Henderson Furn. Co.
Houston — Black Bros. Furn. Stores
Houston — Chapman Furn. Co.
Houston — Collins Furn. Co.
Houston — Christmas Co.
Houston — Finger Furn. Stores
Houston — Haverty Furn. Stores
Houston — Herod Bros. Furn. Stores
Houston — Hovas Furn. Stores
Houston — James Furn. Co.
Houston — W. T. Long Co.
Houston — Monarch Furn. Co.
Houston — Morrison Furn. Co.
Houston — Phoenix Furn.

THIS CHRISTMAS GIVE HIM Comfort...

"for the REST of His Life!"

THE Streit SLUMBER* CHAIR

Furnishings by Shillito's, Cincinnati

No. 347 The Beverly

...103
...obile

No. 107
The Detroit

No. 134-L
The New Yorker

No. 339-L
The Madison

...359
...ape Cod

IT WILL DO YOUR HEART GOOD just to see how excited and pleased a man can get over a Christmas gift . . . when that gift is a genuine Streit Slumber*Chair—the most comfortable chair in the world. He'll be saying "Thank you" 365 times a year . . . for the "REST of his life!"

Stop in and see your nearest Streit dealer today and order his Slumber* chair now. And, just to convince yourself, sit in it and discover the luxurious built-in comfort of its thick upholstered seat-and-back that is adjustable to 3 positions . . . its seat-high matching upholstered footstool . . . and its soft cushion-back that snuggles up to the crook of your neck.

AVAILABLE IN AUTHENTIC PERIOD DESIGNS FOR ANY DECOR

You may choose from authentic period designs in all the popular textile coverings, genuine leather, or Du Pont's marvelous new supported plastic, "Fabrilite"—in open or closed arm models, to harmonize with any decorative scheme. Place your order now while your dealer's selection of Slumber* Chairs is complete.

EVERY CHAIR HAS A MATCHING FOOTSTOOL

Every Streit Slumber* Chair is sold complete with its matching footstool. The soft, upholstered top lifts off to reveal a spacious storage compartment for books, slippers, sewing, etc.

ADJUSTABLE TO 3 PERMANENT POSITIONS OF COMFORT

Send For Free Booklet!

C. F. STREIT MFG. CO., 1104 Kenner Street, Cincinnati 14, Ohio.
Please send me the name of my nearest Streit Slumber* Chair dealer and your Free Booklet entitled "Gentlemen, Be Seated!"

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ Zone ____ State _____

My Regular Shopping Area Is _____

THERE IS ONLY ONE SLUMBER* CHAIR

— AND IT IS MADE BY Streit

...sold by leading furniture and department stores from coast-to-coast

...IRS SHOWN ON OPPOSITE
...AGE FEATURE THESE CHAIRS

FELSO

WASHES EVERYTHING BETTER!

...and so Gentle on hands!

FOR BETTER WASHINGS, USE THE BETTER PRODUCT FELSO

There's only one "proof of the pudding" when you buy washing products. That's to try them . . . at home . . . with your own wash. Compare . . . feel your FELSO-clean clothes.

Try FELSO. You'll see that gentle just-right suds give you the freshest, most fragrant, sweetest-smelling wash. Did you ever see whiter sheets and shirts . . . brighter, more colorful prints? Did you ever feel softer, fluffier laundry . . . or any so easy to iron? And how soft and smooth your hands are after you use FELSO.

(Continued from Page 92)

Louise at breakfast." He broke off then, looking—if my godfather could look such a thing—a little uncomfortable, as if he had said more than he meant.

"That's all right," I said. "My wife can take care of all the difficulties when the time comes. If it ever does come. Which is unlikely. I think I am too much like Ambrose, and I know now what marriage must have done to him."

My godfather was silent. I then told him of my visit to the villa, of my meeting with Rainaldi, and he showed in turn the letter that the Italian had written him. It was much as I expected, giving in cold, stilted words his story of Ambrose's illness and death, and of the grief to the widow, who was, according to Rainaldi, inconsolable.

"So inconsolable," I said to my godfather, "that the day after the funeral she goes off, like a thief, taking all Ambrose's possessions with her, except his old hat, which she forgot. Because, no doubt, it had no value."

My godfather coughed. "Surely," he said, "you don't begrudge her the books and clothes? Hang it all, Philip, it's all she has."

"How do you mean, it's all she has?"

"Well, I've read the will to you," he answered, "and there it is, before you. It's the same will that I drew up ten years ago. No codicil, you know, upon his marriage. There is no provision in it for a wife. All this past year I rather expected word from him, about a settlement at least. I am a little surprised that this Italian, Signor Rainaldi, whom you seem so much to dislike, makes no mention of any sort of claim on the part of Mrs. Ashley."

"Claim?" I said. "You talk of a claim, when we know perfectly well she drove him to his death?"

"We don't know anything of the sort," returned my godfather, "and if that is the way you are going to talk about your cousin's widow, I don't care to listen." He got up, and began to put his papers together.

"So you believe the story of the tumor?"

"Naturally I believe it," he replied. "Here is the letter from this Italian, Rainaldi, and the death certificate, signed by two doctors. I remember your Uncle Philip's death, which you do not. The symptoms were very similar. It is exactly what I feared, when the letter came from Ambrose and you left for Florence. The fact that you arrived too late to be of any assistance is one of those calamities that nobody can help. It is possible, now I think of it, that it was not a calamity after all, but a mercy. You would not have wished to see him suffer."

I could have hit him, the old fool, for being so obstinate, so blind. "You never saw the second letter," I said, "the note that came the morning I went away. Look at this." I gave it to him. He put on his spectacles again, and read it.

"I'm sorry, Philip," he said, "but even that poor heartbreak of a scribble cannot alter my opinion. You must face facts. You loved Ambrose, so did I. When he died I lost my greatest friend. I am equally distressed with you, when I think of his mental suffering—perhaps even more so, because I have seen it in another. He was mentally and physically sick, and not responsible for what he wrote or said."

"I don't believe it," I said.

"You mean you won't believe it," said my godfather, "in which case there is nothing more to be said. But for Ambrose's sake, I must ask you not to spread your views to others. It would cause distress and pain to all of them, and if such a whisper ever got to his widow, she would be well within her rights to bring a case against you for slander."

I had never heard my godfather speak with such force. He was right in saying there was no more to be said on the subject. I had learned my lesson. I would not broach it again.

"Shall we call Louise?" I said pointedly. "I think she has been wandering about the gardens long enough. You had both better stay and dine with me."

My godfather was silent during dinner. I could tell he was still shocked by what I had said to him. Louise questioned me about my travels. She was quick-witted, though, and saw something was wrong. And after dinner, when my godfather summoned Seecombe and the servants to tell them of the various bequests, I went and sat with her in the drawing room.

"My godfather is displeased with me," I said, and told her the story.

She watched me in that rather critical inquiring way she always had, her head a little on one side, her chin lifted.

"You know," she said, when I had finished, "I think you are probably right. I dare say poor Mr. Ashley and his wife were not happy, and he was too proud to write and tell you so, before he fell ill. What did

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

New England Was the Bible

By Robert P. Tristram Coffin

Small New England Yankee boys
  Grew straight when I was young,
For they saw prophets, captains, kings
  Through every gate they swung.

David raised barred Plymouth Rocks,
  Wise Solomon, good hay,
Sunburnt Maine Disciples caught
  Herring in the bay.

Tubal plowed, and Jubal struck
  Sparks from horses' shoes,
And Moses had long sun horns on
  His hair in evening dews.

Isaac herded Yankee cows,
  Rebecca put up jam,
A boy came on nations of sheep
  Herded by Abraham.

A boy could sit on Joshua's knees
  And hear of Shiloh's battle,
Elijahs sang small boys to sleep,
  Jacobs drove home their cattle.

Noahs made the small boys boats,
  Tall bearded patriarchs
Carried them home upon their backs
  Through the fireflies' sparks.

New England was the Bible then,
  Bible men were around,
And every farm with cows and sheep
  Made a Bible sound.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

those servants say about her? Was she young, was she old?"

"I never asked," I said. "I don't see that it matters. The only thing that matters is that he did not trust her when he died."

She nodded. "That was terrible," she agreed. "He must have felt so lonely."

My heart warmed to Louise. Perhaps it was because she was young, my own age, that she seemed to have so much more perception than her father.

"You should have asked that Italian, Rainaldi, what she looked like," said Louise. "And what happened to the count, her first husband. Didn't you tell me once he had been killed, in a duel? That speaks badly for her too. She probably had several lovers."

This aspect of my Cousin Rachel had not occurred to me. "At any rate," I said, "whether that woman had a hundred lovers or not doesn't concern me. She can lie low in Rome or Naples or wherever she is, for the present. But one day I'll hunt her out, and she'll be sorry for it."

At that moment my godfather came to find us, and I said no more. He seemed in a better humor. No doubt Seecombe and Wellington and the others had been grateful for their little bequests, and he, in benign fashion, felt himself in part the author of them.

"Ride over and see me soon," I told Louise, as I helped her into the dogcart beside her father, "you're good for me. I like your company."

She flushed again, silly girl, glancing up at her father to see how he would take it, as though we had not ridden backward and forward visiting each other before, times without number. Perhaps she also was impressed by my new status. I went back into the house, smiling at the idea of Louise Kendall, whose hair I used to pull only a few years back, now looking upon me with respect. The next instant I forgot her, and my godfather as well, for on coming home there was much to do after two months' absence.

I did not think to see my godfather again for at least a fortnight, what with the harvest and other things upon my hands, but scarcely a week had passed before his groom rode over one morning, soon after midday, with an oral message from his master, asking me to go and see him; he was unable to come himself, he was confined to the house with a slight chill, but he had news for me.

The following afternoon I rode to see him. I found him in his study, alone. I could see he was disturbed.

"Well," he said, "now something has got to be done, and you have to decide exactly what, and when. She has arrived by boat in Plymouth."

"Who has arrived?" I asked.

He showed me a piece of paper in his hand. "I have a letter here," he said, "from your Cousin Rachel." He gave me the letter. "She does not appear to know that we have heard the news," said my godfather. "She must have left Florence before Signor Rainaldi wrote his letter. Well, see what you make of it."

I opened up the letter. It was dated from a hostelry in Plymouth, on the thirteenth of September.

Dear Mr. Kendall: When Ambrose spoke of you, as he so often did, I little thought my first communication with you would be fraught with so much sadness. I arrived in Plymouth, from Genoa, this morning, in a state of great distress and, alas, alone.

My dear one died in Florence on the twentieth of July, after a short illness but violent in its attack; everything was done that could be done, but the best doctors I could summon were not able to save him.

There was a recurrence of some fever that had seized him earlier in the spring, but the last was due to pressure on the brain which the doctors think had lain dormant for some months, then rapidly increased its hold upon him. He lies in the Protestant cemetery in Florence, in a site chosen by myself, quiet, and a little apart from the other English graves, with trees surrounding it, which is what he would have wished. Of my personal sorrow and great emptiness I will say nothing; you do not know me, and I have no desire to inflict it upon you.

My first thought has been for Philip, whom Ambrose loved so dearly, and whose grief will be equal to my own. My good friend and counselor, Signor Rainaldi, of Florence, assured me that he would write to you and break the news, so that you in turn could tell Philip, but I had little faith in those mails from Italy to England, and was fearful either that the news should come to you by hearsay, through a stranger, or not at all. Hence my arrival in this country. I have brought with me all Ambrose's possessions; his books, his clothes, everything that Philip would wish to have and keep, and which now, by right, belong to him. If you will tell me what to do with them, how to send them, and whether or not I should write to Philip myself, I will be deeply grateful. I left Florence very suddenly, on impulse, and without regret. I could not bear to stay with Ambrose gone. As to further plans, I have none. After so great a shock time for reflection is, I think, most necessary. I had hoped to be in England before this, but was held up at Genoa; the ship that brought me was not ready to sail.

I believe I still have members of my own family, the Coryns, scattered about Cornwall, but knowing none of them, I have no wish to intrude upon them. I would much prefer to be alone. Possibly, after I have rested here a little,

(Continued on Page 99)

Curity®
DIAPERS

Curity is the name to remember if you want the modern; easy washing diaper that stays smooth and wrinkle free . . . no matter what the method of laundering. Ravel resistant edges, too . . . and patented woven-in Foldlines! All these exclusive advantages Curity alone offers you, as well as:

Easier Washing — The open weave means cleaning ease in Ivory Flakes, Ivory Soap or Dreft.

Faster Drying — Indoors or out, drying air acts faster on their open weave.

Greater Absorption — Their thirsty surgical weave assures maximum absorption.

Now you can buy them in pastel tints of pink, blue, maize or mint green. Pretty and practical, they're wonderful gifts! All the leading stores sell Curity Diapers, and leading diaper laundries have them.

NURSERY PADS • BIBS • FLUFFS • MASKS
PAT. NO. 2,146,137

MAIL THE COUPON

KENDALL MILLS — Division of The Kendall Company, Walpole, Mass., Dept. J111

Enclosed is 25c (coins only) for full-size Curity Diaper and literature on Curity Nursery Products. (Only one diaper to a family.)

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

Good in Continental United States and Hawaii.

"We're a 3-generation Maytag family!"

— says Mrs. Earl H. Merritt of New Augusta, Indiana

Meet this 3-generation Maytag family from Indiana: grandmother, Mrs. Neva Merritt of Brownsburg; mother, Mrs. Earl H. Merritt of New Augusta; and granddaughter, Mrs. Thomas Hadley of Danville, owner of this beautiful Maytag automatic washer.

Why has this family been so loyal to Maytag for three generations? This is the way Mrs. Earl H. Merritt, second generation, explains it: "When my daughter, Ann, shopped for her new washer, it had to be a Maytag. She knew how clean my Maytag washes clothes. And Ann's grandmother is still using a Maytag made in 1923. Imagine . . . it's been washing clothes clean for almost thirty years!"

Mrs. Hadley says goodbye to washday work with her new Maytag automatic. "I just set a simple control. That's all there is to it. I can play with my son, shop, or just rest." And while she does, the Maytag automatic washes, rinses, spin-drys, shuts off . . . all automatically. Famous Gyrafoam washing action, fully automatic, Safety Lid; needs no bolting down.

See it today . . . and learn why Maytag has been the most-wanted washer for 3 generations.

• • •

Mrs. Earl H. Merritt finds the Gyrafoam action of her 1951 conventional Maytag helps her whizz through a big wash. And that's daughter Ann (Mrs. Thomas Hadley) giving her a cheerful assist.

Maytag Dutch Oven Gas Range. Super-insulated oven keeps heat in. Automatic controls. Giant burners. Dutch cooker well. So easy to clean and keep clean. Built to "CP" standards.

3-GENERATION DEALERS TOO! Left to right: father, Arthur E. Naylor; grandfather, A. D. Naylor; and grandson, Howard Naylor. All three are Maytag dealers in Oakland, Maryland.

America's best appliance dealers feature

Maytag

WASHERS • IRONERS • RANGES • FREEZERS

(Continued from Page 97)

I may travel up to London, and then make fur-t ıer plans.

I will await instruction from you what to do ith my husband's possessions.

Most sincerely yours,
RACHEL ASHLEY.

I read the letter once, twice, perhaps three
t mes, then gave it back to my godfather.
] did not say a word.

"You see," he said at length, "that after ll she has kept nothing. Not so much as one ook or a pair of gloves. They are all for ou."

I did not answer.

"She does not even ask to see the house," e went on, "the house that would have been er home had Ambrose lived. I'm sorry, hilip. I know your views. But as Ambrose's iend, as his trustee, I cannot sit here and o nothing, when his widow arrives alone nd friendless in this country. We have a uest room in this house. She is welcome to until her plans are formed."

I went and stood by the window. "Why hould you imagine I don't wish to see her?"
asked. "I do wish to see her, very much.
When you write to Plymouth, say that hilip Ashley has already heard the news of mbrose's death. That he went to Florence, n receipt of two letters; went to the Villa angalletti, saw her servants, saw her friend nd adviser, Signor Rainaldi, and that Philip shley is now returned. Say that he is a lain man, and is little sed to the society of omen, or indeed of nyone. If, however,
he wishes to see him,
nd her late husband's ome, Philip Ashley's
ouse is at the dis-osal of his Cousin Rahel, when she cares
o visit it." And I placed ıy hand upon my eart, and bowed.

"I never thought,"
aid my godfather
lowly, "to see you row so hard. What's appened to you?"

"Nothing has hap-
ened to me, except,
ke a young war horse, I smell blood. Have ou forgotten my father was a soldier?"

Then I went out into the garden to find ouise. Her concern at the news was greater han my own.

"Your house isn't fit to receive anyone," he said, "let alone a woman like the ontessa—like Mrs. Ashley. Why, Philip, here hasn't been a woman staying there for wenty years. What room will you put her n? And think of the dust! Not only upstairs, ut in the drawing room too. I noticed it ast week."

"None of that matters," I said impaiently. "She can dust the place herself, if he minds so much."

"Oh, but you're wrong," exclaimed Louise.
You don't want to seem a boor, an ignoamus. That would be putting yourself at a isadvantage before you even speak to her.
he is certain to have brought a quantity of lothes, and jewels too perhaps, besides Mr. shley's things. She will have heard so much bout the house from him, she will expect omething very fine, like her own villa. And o have it all untidy, dusty, smelling like a ennel—why, you would not want her to nd it so, Philip, for his sake, surely!"

I was angry. "What do you mean," I aid, "by my house smelling like a kennel?"

SHE had the grace to look contrite, if not shamed. "I'm sorry," she said. "I did not ıean to offend you. You know I love your ouse. I have a great affection for it and always will. But I can't help saying what I hink, as to the way it's kept—well, lacking omfort, if you'll forgive that too."

"All right," I said, "forget my lack of com-ort. It suited Ambrose, and it suits me, and or the space of a few days it can suit my Cousin Rachel too."

Louise shook her head at me. "If Mrs.
shley is the woman I believe her to be she will take one look at the house and then seek refuge in St. Austell. Or with us."

"You're very welcome," I replied, "when I have done with her."

Louise looked at me curiously. "Will you really dare to question her?"

I shrugged my shoulders. "I can't say until I have seen her. She'll try to bluster her way out, I have no doubt. Or maybe swoon, and have hysterics. That won't worry me. I shall watch her, and enjoy it."

"I don't think she will bluster, nor have hysterics. She will merely sweep into the house and take command. Don't forget, she must be used to giving orders."

"She won't give them in my house."

"POOR Seecombe! What I would give to see his face. She will throw things at him, if he fails to come when she pulls her bell. Italians are very passionate, you know, very quick-tempered. I have always heard so."

"She's only half Italian," I reminded her. "And I think Seecombe is well able to take care of himself. Perhaps it will rain for three days, and she will be confined to bed with rheumatism."

We laughed together, like a pair of children, but I was not so light of heart as I pretended. The invitation had been flung onto the air like a challenge, and already I think that I had regretted it, though I did not say so to Louise. I regretted it more when I went home and looked about me.

What in the world was I to do with that woman in my house? What indeed should I say to her, what action should I take? If Rainaldi had been plausible, she would be ten times more so. Direct attack might not succeed, and what was it the Italian had said anyway about tenacity, and women fighting battles? If she should be loud-mouthed, vulgar, I think I knew how to shut her up. But sugary, insidious, with heaving bosom and sheep's eyes—the siren Louise had suggested, with many lovers—could I deal with that? I believed so. I had met with some of these in Oxford, and I always found extreme bluntness of speech, amounting to brutality, sent them back to their holes in the ground with no bones broken. No, all things considered, I was pretty cocksure, pretty confident, that when I had actual speech with my Cousin Rachel I should find my tongue. But preparations for the visit, that was the deuce.

To my great surprise, Seecombe received the idea without dismay. I told him that Mrs. Ashley had arrived in England, bringing with her Mr. Ambrose's effects, and that it was possible she would arrive for a short visit, within the week.

"Yes, sir," he said, "very right, and very proper. We shall all be glad to welcome Mrs. Ashley."

I glanced at him over my pipe, amused at his pomposity. "I thought," I said, "you were like me, and did not care for women in the house. You sang a different tune when I told you Mr. Ambrose had been married, and she would be mistress here."

He looked shocked. "That was not the same, sir. There has been tragedy since then. The poor lady is widowed. Mr. Ambrose would have wished us to do what we can for her, especially as it seems"—he coughed discreetly—"that Mrs. Ashley has not benefited in any way from the decease."

I wondered how he knew that, and asked him.

"It's common talk, sir," he said, "all around the place. Everything left to you, Mr. Philip, nothing to the widow. It is not usual, you see. In every family, big or small, there is always provision for the widow."

"I'm surprised at you, Seecombe," I said, "lending your ear to gossip."

(Continued on Page 101)

Richard Aldington tells that, "An American friend of mine was then editing the Outlook, and asked me to write an article telling his readers about young writers and picking out those I thought would make a name. I made a choice which I modestly think wasn't bad for 1919: James Joyce, T. S. Eliot, D. H. Lawrence, Aldous Huxley and Marcel Proust. I received a letter from the editor in these terms:

"'For God's sake, Richard, can't you think of somebody who has been heard of or is ever likely to be heard of?'"

GRIT-FREE

Bon Ami gets the dirt... cuts grease fast...but never, never scratches!

TWO HANDY FORMS
POWDER AND CAKE
USE THEM BOTH

TRY IT TODAY—Bon Ami Cleanser is the one fast cleanser that's safe for everything you clean. No wonder millions of women won't use anything else!

The safe, speedy cleanser

BON AMI "hasn't scratched yet!"

BUY DORMEYER

You Get this ELECTRIC FOOD GRINDER AT NO EXTRA COST!

BU
PO
DR
No Awk
Adapters N

UL GUARANTEED

Your Mixer Isn't Complete Without a Grinder!

CHECK THESE DORMEYER VALUE FEATURES!

✔ Electric Food Grinder, juicer, all accessories and big recipe booklet are yours AT NO EXTRA COST with the Dormeyer Food-Fixer!

✔ Built-In Power Drive for food grinder and juicer—saves time and work—you need no awkward, costly adapters with the Dormeyer Food-Fixer.

✔ 10 Recipe-Tested Speeds on dial selector—just a flick of your finger for perfect results every time with the quick, easy-to-use Dormeyer Food-Fixer!

✔ Removable, Light-Weight Mixing Head and simple, automatic, finger-tip controlled beater release speed your kitchen tasks with the Dormeyer Food-Fixer!

✔ Famous Magic-Mix Arm assures quick, thorough, even mixing from side through center of bowl—your cakes will be higher, lighter, tastier with the Dormeyer Food-Fixer!

✔ Automatic Governor-Controlled Motor, beautiful modern design, and sturdy, long-lasting quality are yours for years of enjoyment with the Dormeyer Food-Fixer!

THE Complete FOOD MIXER

Insist on DORMEYER - The Most Modern Mixer Ever Made

DORMEYER

GUARANTEED

DORMEYER
FRI-WELL

THE Automatic Electric Deep-Fryer with Safe "Drain-Away" Faucet

With the new Dormeyer Fri-Well you'll discover speed, ease and perfection in deep-frying you've never known before. You'll enjoy the most delicious, tender, golden-brown deep-fried foods you've ever tasted. The Fri-Well's safe "Drain-Away" faucet eliminates dangerous, messy hand-pouring — allows fast, easy draining; the Fri-Well deep-fries 6 big portions in a matter of minutes; its automatic thermostat control assures "just right" results every time; even, thorough cooking is assured by Monotube heating unit through three baskets, no scorching or burning because food particles settle into special "cold well." You'll love America's most famous deep-fryer—see the Fri-Well today!

DORMEYER THE LEADER
for ALL Your Kitchen Appliances!

DORMEYER MEAL-MAKER • The Meal-Master is complete—grinds, juices, purees has portable mixing head, dial control. All attachments and new cookbook included at no extra cost.

DORMEYER BLENDER • It liquefies, shreds, blends, whips, chops, purees—ideal for baby foods, fixing left-overs, fruit drinks, sauces, etc. Big 32 oz. container. Includes new recipe book.

DORMEYER TOASTMAKER • Scientific timer lets you enjoy toast just as you like it—light, golden brown, dark. The Toastmaker also features automatic pop-up and rewarming.

DORMEYER
Dormeyer Corporation • 4300 N. Kilpatrick Avenue • Chicago 41, Illinois

(Continued from Page 99)

"Not gossip, sir," he said with dignity. "What concerns the Ashley family concerns us all."

I had a vision of him sitting out at the back there, in his room, and coming in to chat and drink a glass of bitter with him would be Wellington, and the old coachman, and Tamlyn, the head gardener, and the first woodman—none of the young servants, of course, they would not be permitted—and the affairs of the will I had thought most secret would be discussed with pursed lips and shaking heads.

"That's all, Seecombe," I said. "I will let you know if Mrs. Ashley decides to visit us. I don't know about a room. I leave that side of the business to you."

"Why surely, Mr. Philip, sir," said Seecombe, "it will be correct to put Mrs. Ashley into Mr. Ashley's own room?"

I stared at him, shocked into sudden silence. Then fearing my feelings showed in my face, I turned away. "No," I said, "that won't be possible. I shall be moving into Mr. Ashley's room myself. I meant to tell you so before." It was a lie. I had not thought of such a thing until that moment.

"Very well, sir," he said. "In that case the blue room and the dressing room will be more suitable for Mrs. Ashley." And he left the room.

To put that woman into Ambrose's room, I thought, what sacrilege! I flung myself down in my chair, biting the stem of my pipe. I felt angry, unsettled, sick of the whole affair. What had I let myself in for? That idiot, Seecombe, with his ideas of what was right and what was wrong.

The invitation was accepted. She wrote a letter back to my godfather, not to me. She would be ready, she said, whenever it was convenient to send for her, or if not convenient, she would come by post chaise.

I sent word back, again through my godfather, that I would send the carriage for her on the Friday. And that was that.

Friday came all too soon. A moody, fitful sort of day, with gusts of wind. We often had them thus, the third week in September, with the big tides of the year. The clouds were low, scudding across the sky from the southwest, threatening rain before the evening. I hoped it would rain. One of our true downpours, with maybe a gale thrown in for good measure. I had sent Wellington off with the horses the day before. He would stay overnight in Plymouth, and then return with her.

EVER since I had told the servants that Mrs. Ashley was expected, a sort of unrest had come upon the house. Even the dogs were aware of it; they followed me about from room to room.

Seecombe moved about, mysterious and solemn, with hushed footsteps—he had even bought himself a pair of soft-soled slippers—and bits of silver I had never seen in my life before were borne into the dining room and placed on the table, and upon the sideboard. Relics, I supposed, of my Uncle Philip's day. Great candlesticks, sugar casters, goblets; a silver bowl filled—great Joshua!—with roses, placed as a centerpiece.

"Since when," I said to him, "have you turned acolyte? What about the incense, and the holy water?"

He did not move a muscle of his face. "I have asked Tamlyn to bring in flowers from the walled garden," he said. "The boys are sorting them now. We shall need flowers in the drawing room, and in the blue bedroom, and the dressing room, and boudoir."

The dogs gazed up at me, dejected. One of them crept and hid under the settle in the hall. I went upstairs.

Heaven knows when last I had trespassed into the blue room. I had a dim recollection that Ambrose had once said it was Aunt Phoebe's room, and Aunt Phoebe had gone away to live in Kent, and later died.

No trace of her remained today. The servants, under Seecombe's direction, had worked hard, and Aunt Phoebe had been swept away with the dust of years. The windows were open, looking out on the garden grounds, and the morning sun shone on the well-brushed rugs. Fresh linen of a quality unknown to me, had been put upon the bed. Had that washstand and ewer always been there, I wondered, in the dressing room adjoining? Did that easy chair belong?

THE third room, under the arch, making up the suite had been Aunt Phoebe's boudoir. This, too, had been dusted, and the windows opened. There was a portrait of Ambrose hanging on the wall above the fireplace, painted when he was a young man. I did not even know of its existence.

It was painted three-quarter length, and he had his gun under his arm, and carried a dead partridge in his left hand. The eyes stared ahead, into my eyes, and the mouth smiled a little. His hair was longer than I remembered it. There was nothing very striking in the portrait, or in the face. Only one thing. It was strangely like myself. I looked in the mirror, and back again to the portrait, and the only difference lay in the slant of his eyes, somewhat narrower than mine, and in his darker coloring of hair. We could be brothers though, almost twin brothers, that young man in the portrait and myself. This sudden realization of our likeness gave an uplift to my spirits. It was as if the young Ambrose were smiling at me, saying, "I am with you." And the older Ambrose, too, felt very close.

I shut the door behind me and went downstairs. I heard the sound of wheels out on the drive. It was Louise, in the dogcart, and she had great bunches of Michaelmas daisies and dahlias on the seat.

"For the drawing room," she called. "I thought Seecombe might be glad of them."

Seecombe, passing that moment through the hall with his drove of minions, looked offended. "You should not have troubled, Miss Louise," he said. "I had made all arrangements with Tamlyn. Sufficient flowers were brought in from the walled garden."

"I can arrange them, then," said Louise. "Your men will only break the vases. I suppose you have vases. Or have they been cramming the flowers into jam pots?"

Seecombe's face was a study in pained dignity. I pushed Louise into the library hurriedly, and shut the door.

"I wondered," said Louise, in an undertone, "whether you would have liked me to stay and see to things, and be here when Mrs. Ashley comes. Father would have accompanied me, but he is still rather unwell. Shall I stay? These flowers were only an excuse."

I felt vaguely irritated that both she and my godfather should think me so incapable, and poor old Seecombe, too, who had worked like a slave driver for the past three days.

"Good of you to suggest it," I said, "but quite unnecessary. We can manage very well."

She looked disappointed. She was evidently afire with curiosity to see my visitor.

"You can go upstairs if you like, and see the blue room," I told her, as a sop to disappointment.

"The blue room?" said Louise. "That's the one facing east, isn't it? Then you have not put her in Mr. Ashley's room?"

"I haven't," I said. "I use Ambrose's room myself."

This insistence that she, and everybody else, should put upon the placing of Ambrose's room at the disposal of his widow added fresh fuel to my rising irritation.

"If you really wish to arrange the flowers, ask Seecombe for some vases," I said, going toward the door. "I have a mass of things

If I had my life to live over again, I would have made a rule to read some poetry and listen to some music at least once a week: for perhaps the parts of my brain now atrophied would thus have been kept active through use. The loss of these tastes is a loss of happiness, and may possibly be injurious to the intellect, and more probably to the moral character, by enfeebling the emotional part of our nature. —DARWIN.

Give.. Fostoria
MADE IN U.S.A.

CHINTZ...for you and yours

It's time now to add a bright note for your approaching festive occasions. So easy when you choose Chintz. It's a spritely "Master-Etching" handmade by American craftsmen. Every fragile line is like a snow painting on crystal . . . all blending to a vivacious sparkle . . . a fascinating crystal for dreams come true, to give or get. You'll find Chintz, or many other favorite Fostoria patterns, at the better stores everywhere . . . because Fostoria has a quality that everyone likes.

FOSTORIA

FOSTORIA GLASS COMPANY • • • MOUNDSVILLE • WEST VIRGINIA

to do outside, and shall be away about the estate most of the day."

She picked up the flowers, glancing at me as she did so. "I believe you're nervous," she said.

"I am not nervous," I said. "I merely want to be alone."

She flushed, and turned away, and I felt the prick of conscience that always came to me after wounding anyone.

"Sorry, Louise," I said, patting her shoulder. "Don't take any notice of me. And bless you for coming, and bringing the flowers, and for offering to stay."

"When shall I see you again," she asked, "to hear about Mrs. Ashley? You know I shall be longing to hear everything. I shall be thinking, and wondering ——"

"Wondering what?" I said. "If I have thrown my Cousin Rachel over the headland? Listen; just to satisfy you, I will ride over tomorrow afternoon to Pelyn, and I will paint a vivid picture for you. Does that content you?"

"That will do very well," she answered, smiling, and went off to find the vases.

I was out all morning, and returned about two, hungry and thirsty after my ride, and had some cold meat and a glass of ale. Louise had gone. Seecombe and the servants were in their own quarters, sitting down to midday dinner. I stood alone in the library, munching my sandwich of meat and bread. Alone, I thought, for the last time. Tonight she would be here, either in this room or in the drawing room, an unknown hostile presence, stamping her personality upon my rooms, my house. She came as an intruder to my home.

Creation of woman from the rib of man: "She was not made out of his head, to top him; nor out of his feet, to be trampled upon by him; but out of his side, to be equal with him; under his arm, to be protected; and near his heart, to be beloved."
—MATHEW HENRY.

I looked about the room, almost in farewell; and then went out of the house and plunged into the woods.

I judged that Wellington would be home with the carriage not earlier than five o'clock, therefore I determined to remain without until after six. They could wait dinner for me. Seecombe already had his instructions. If she was hungry, she must hold her hunger until the master of the house returned. It gave me satisfaction to think of her sitting alone in the drawing room, dressed to the nines, full of self-importance, and no one to receive her.

I went on walking in the wind and rain. Up the avenue to where the four roads met, and eastward to the boundary of our land; then back through the woods again and northward to the outlying farms, where I made a point of dallying, and talking with the tenants. Home at last just as it grew dark. I was wet nearly to the skin, but I did not care.

I opened the hall door, and went into the house. I expected to see the signs of arrival, boxes, and trunks, travel rugs and baskets; but all was as usual, there was nothing there.

A fire was burning in the library, but the room was empty. In the dining room a place was laid for one.

I pulled the bell for Seecombe. "Well?" I said.

He wore his new-found look of self-importance, and his voice was hushed. "Madam has come," he said.

"So I would suppose," I answered. "It must be nearly seven. Did she bring luggage? What have you done with it?"

"Madam brought little of her own," he said. "The boxes and trunks belonged to Mr. Ambrose. They have all been put in your old room, sir."

"Oh," I said. I walked over to the fire and kicked a log. I would not have him notice for the world that my hands were trembling. "Where is Mrs. Ashley now?" I said.

"Madam has gone to her room, sir," he said. "She seemed tired, and she asked you to excuse her for dinner. I had a tray taken up to her about an hour ago."

His words came as a relief. Yet, in a sense, it was an anticlimax.

"You're very wet, sir," said Seecombe. "Better change your things, or you'll take cold."

"I will directly," I answered. Then, glancing about the room, "Where are the dogs?"

"I think they followed Madam upstairs," he said. "At least old Don did. I am not certain of the others."

I went on warming my legs before the fire. Seecombe still hovered by the door, as if expecting me to draw him in conversation.

"All right," I said, "I'll bathe, and change; tell one of the boys to take up the hot water. And I'll dine in half an hour."

I sat down that evening alone to my dinner before the newly polished candlesticks, and the silver rose bowl. Seecombe stood behind my chair, but we did not speak. Silence must have been torture to him, for I knew how much he longed to comment on the new arrival. Well, he could bide his time.

Just as I finished dinner, John came into the room and whispered to him. Seecombe came and bent over my shoulder.

"Madam has sent word that if you should wish to see her, when you have dined, she will be pleased to receive you," he said.

"Thank you, Seecombe."

When they had left the room I did something that I very rarely did—only after extreme exhaustion, after riding perhaps, or a hard day's shoot, or buffeting about in a summer gale in the sailing boat with Ambrose: I went to the sideboard and poured myself a glass of brandy. Then I went upstairs, and knocked upon the door of the little boudoir.

(To be Continued)

THANKSGIVING 1951

(Continued from Page 72)

Youth must be served. So many times I've described and discussed the old-time Thanksgiving dinner, paying tribute in my way to its oyster stew, pumpkin pie and plum pudding, not to mention other eatables of the time. But this time we have a 1951 version of the feast. Only the older, more "set in their ways," have to get out the roaster and go at the turkey, stuff and prepare to the last traditional step the bird that for so many years has come to hold the center of the stage for Thanksgiving Day—the home-coming and gathering together of family and friends. Home to Thanksgiving. That's the theme song we may never forget whether there's turkey or not.

• • •

Let us look forward. This year we've added a new leaf to our collection of traditions. This year the younger set are taking over. And here's how they're starting to do their stuff. We who are older can stick to the old ways—but you never know. We may be converted yet. Let us see. Let's look into what we're up to and start with a shrimp cocktail at its magnificent best. One where caviar noses in to the delight and satisfaction of all.

SHRIMP COCKTAIL—CAVIAR SAUCE

Cook 2 pounds raw shrimp in water enough to cover, adding celery tops, sprigs of parsley, 2 slices lemon, salt and pepper. Simmer until tender—about 20 minutes. Shell and clean shrimp when cool. You may buy frozen cooked and cleaned shrimp, and they will do a first-rate job for you. For the sauce, mix ¼ cup chili sauce, ¼ cup mayonnaise, 1 tablespoon minced dill pickle and 5 teaspoons red caviar. This is really only salmon roe, so don't let the name scare you. Add a

(Continued on Page 104)

The more TROPIC FLAVOR — the merrier

In this gay gathering of five DEL MONTE Pineapple styles, you'll find a special lift, a better flavor for any meal.

That's to be expected. Only DEL MONTE grows these exclusive strains of magnificent pineapple. And DEL MONTE packs them only when natural tartness and sweetness balance perfectly—which means pineapple at its tropic best.

You've discovered that DEL MONTE knows how to pack other fruits just the way you like them. Let DEL MONTE show you just how good pineapple can be, too. How about tonight?

Del Monte Pineapple

BRAND

–the brand that puts flavor first

CHICKEN RICE BOWL

- 1 cup raw rice
- [illegible] tbsps. salad oil
- 1¼ cups chicken broth or bouillon
- 1 tsp. salt
- 1½ to [illegible] cups thinly sliced well-chilled uncooked chicken, cut in small strips*
- 2 cups sliced celery
- 1 cup coarsely chopped onions
- ½ cup coarsely chopped green pepper
- 1 chicken bouillon cube dissolved in 1 cup hot syrup from pineapple
- 1 tbsp. soy [illegible]
- 1 #2½ can DEL MONTE Sliced Pineapple

Brown rice in 1 tbsp. of the oil. Turn into 2-qt. shallow casserole; stir in broth, salt. Cover; bake in moderate oven (350°F.) about 1 hr. (add more broth if rice gets too dry). Brown chicken in remaining 2 tbsps. oil, hot. Stir in vegetables, syrup-bouillon, soy sauce. Cover; simmer 5 min. Mix into rice, top with pineapple slices, return to oven until pineapple is heated. Serves 6 to 8.

Cooked chicken may be used, but flavor and character of dish is even better with uncooked.*

LI'L ABNER by AL CAPP

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

COPYRIGHT, UNITED FEATURE SYNDICATE, INC.

GET THAT CREAM OF WHEAT® FEELING!

(Continued from Page 102)

dash of Tabasco, a little salt and 1 teaspoon lemon juice. Arrange the chilled shrimp on a few greens or a little chopped lettuce in glasses set in ice. Pour the sauce over them.

• • •

Try a turkey broiler for size. There's a lot to be said for broiled turkey. You can have as much or as little as you want. The preparation is simple and you don't even have to have a roaster. And you can have turkey stuffing—that I insist on and this is how we manage it.

TURKEY BROILER WITH PECAN STUFFING

Pick out a fine young turkey broiler weighing about 6 pounds. Have the turkey split in half lengthwise. Clean, remove the pinfeathers and cut off the wing tips. In short, fix up the bird as if he were a 20-pounder. Tuck ends of wings under back. Skewer the legs to the body. Brush well with melted butter or margarine. Season each half with ¼ teaspoon salt and a sprinkling of pepper. Rub a little poultry seasoning on the inside. That's the trick that makes a broiler taste like a roast turkey. Put the turkey stuffing in the broiler pan and cover with the broiler rack. Put the turkey halves over the stuffing on the rack, skin side down. Place in the broiler 7" from the heat. Cook slowly for 1 hour under medium broiler heat. Turn and brush with melted butter or margarine several times during the 1-hour cooking period. Cook until the thickest part of the drumstick is very tender when tried with a fork, and there is no pink visible inside.

• • •

Nuts in the stuffing. I was always one to like nuts in stuffing, even in old-fashioned sage stuffing. Now I have fixed you a wonderful stuffing. (Don't call it "dressing." You stuff a turkey or a chicken, don't you? You don't dress it. It knows nothing of a dress, morning or afternoon or evening.) So get hold of plenty of those big, fat, handsome pecans, and follow along with all the savories and herbs you like best. (Don't skimp on the sage. Sage was made for turkey. Sage, the herb that Pliny loved and caressed with words as soft as the velvet leaves of that incomparable plant. I hope you've grown some and don't be stingy with it. Don't skimp.)

The best time for you to hold your tongue is the time you feel like you must say something or bust.

—JOSH BILLINGS.

PECAN STUFFING

Sauté 2 medium onions, chopped (they'll come to around ¾ cup), in ¼ cup butter or margarine until the onions are transparent. Mix with 1 loaf white bread (not too fresh) which has been crumbled and lightly toasted and no crusts. The best way is to buy unsliced, day-old bread, cut off end slice and pull the crumbs from the center of the loaf. Add ½ cup finely chopped pecans, 1 tablespoon sage, ¾ cup chopped celery, 2 teaspoons salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper and ¼ cup canned chicken broth. Mix thoroughly.

• • •

What is turkey sans gravy? There's something lacking in any turkey dinner without gravy, seasoned to a queen's taste—that is, if the queen is a gourmet. And this is how you can achieve gravy with your turkey:

TURKEY GRAVY

Sometime during the day—don't wait until you're ready to broil the turkey—cut off the neck (you have the wing tips too) and put these in a saucepan with the giblets. Brown them well in 1 tablespoon hot shortening, stirring frequently. Add 1 can chicken broth and ¾ cup water, 1 onion, chopped, and a little salt. Cover and simmer until giblets are tender. Strain. Discard neck and wing tips. Chop giblets fine. Add to the strained broth. Thicken with 1½ tablespoons flour, made smooth with 2 tablespoons water. Season to taste. If gravy has cooked down, you may have to add a little more chicken broth after you thicken it. If giblets are very fatty, you may have to skim broth before thickening. Reheat when ready to serve.

Streamlined vegetables. There was a time when practically all members of the fall vegetable family were represented at the Thanksgiving feast. Now we settle for two and, for those who like bread sauce, we have combined the traditional onions with the sauce and made a dish that is so good it's a natural for many dinners to come.

ONIONS IN BREAD SAUCE

Peel about 2 pounds small white onions and cook in boiling salted water until tender. While they are cooking, heat 1 quart milk with 1 onion in which 8 cloves have been stuck, 1¼ teaspoons salt, ⅛ teaspoon pepper and 2 cups fine stale bread crumbs. Cook over boiling water for 30 minutes, stirring occasionally. Remove the onion and cloves. Drain the boiled onions and add to the sauce with 2 tablespoons butter or margarine. Turn into a casserole, top with 1 cup bread crumbs that have been sautéed in butter or margarine until lightly browned. Sprinkle with paprika, dot with butter or margarine and run under the broiler until the top is crisp. This dish may be made up ahead and reheated. In fact, it's improved if the onions and sauce stand together awhile.

BROCCOLI WITH BLACK BUTTER

Cook broccoli as usual. Heat 6 tablespoons butter in a small frying pan until well browned. Add the juice of 1 lemon and pour over the broccoli just before serving.

• • •

If salad is indispensable. Personally, I would just as soon skip the salad and take a second helping of turkey and stuffing. But, if there is to be a salad, it should provide an interlude in the meal and create a change of mood. Foot-loose and fancy free, here is such a salad for this meal or almost any other you may have in mind:

APPLE-ASPIC SALAD

Peel and core 6 small apples. Have ready a pan large enough to hold the apples without crowding. Cook the apples until tender in 2 cups water, 1 cup sirup drained from canned, crushed pineapple, 1 cup sugar and a little red coloring. Be careful that the apples do not lose their shape. Drain and cool. Put each apple into an individual mold and fill the center loosely with drained, crushed, canned pineapple. Soften 1 envelope unflavored gelatin in ¼ cup cold water. Add to 1½ cups hot liquid from cooking apples, plus ¼ cup lemon juice. Mix thoroughly. Pour the gelatin mixture over the apples, covering them well. Chill. To serve, unmold each aspic on lettuce. Serve with mayonnaise.

• • •

The pumpkin and the mince. It doesn't take a day's baking to achieve the pies for this Thanksgiving dinner. You make only one crust instead of four, and yet you have both pumpkin and mince and keep faith with tradition. What could be better than that?

COMBINATION PUMPKIN-MINCE PIE

Line a 9" pie plate with pastry. Crimp the edges. Spread 2 cups mincemeat over the bottom. Bake in a hot oven, 425° F., for 15 minutes. While this bakes, mix together ⅓ cup brown sugar, ½ teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon cinnamon, ¼ teaspoon ginger and ¼ teaspoon cloves. Mix spice mixture with 1 cup canned strained pumpkin. Beat 2 eggs slightly and add to ¾ cup evaporated milk or cream. Stir into pumpkin mixture. Mix thoroughly. Set oven temperature regulator to moderate—350°F. Let the oven cool slightly. Pour the pumpkin mixture over the mincemeat. Bake in a moderate oven until the pumpkin custard is set—takes about 35 minutes. Serve with good old sage cheese—if you've been by that country store up Westor way in the hills of old Vermont.

• • •

Have a happy Thanksgiving. The best of holidays to all of you. May your favorite football boys win. And remember that things may sound a bit strange but turn out to be like egrets as against a crow's wing. You keep this in mind. I'm going to. THE END

Problem child...or child problem?

MANY TIMES THE CHILD WHO HAS TROUBLE IN SCHOOL NEEDS DIET CORRECTION — NOT DISCIPLINE!

[any children who are thought to be "well-fed" ay in fact be "subclinically undernourished"— ot really sick but not quite well. They may get ts of food but not always enough of the right nd. Such children obviously need special care the selection of the foods they eat.

A mother should remember that a child needs, roportionately, 2 to 3 times as much of certain od elements as an adult. These food elements clude protein, calcium, iron, vitamins B_1, C, acin and riboflavin. These may be called the spark plugs" of robust health. A child needs ts of them. A lack of one or more can cause a ump. And—please note this—they are the very es in which meals are most apt to be deficient.

In theory—one can provide an adequate family et by serving a wide variety of carefully se- cted foods and thereby obtain all the essential ements. And this every mother should strive do.

In practice, however—this often is hard to do, ecause of the many problems of food buying, asonal shortages, storing and cooking, and the ide differences in individual tastes and require- ents within the family.

And so, today—busy, intelligent mothers employ a sound and simple method in approaching this problem. They use a supplementary food like Ovaltine.

Ovaltine is a rich supplementary food that fills in the gaps, the chinks, and the loopholes that may occur in otherwise "good" meals. Ovaltine, mixed with milk, contains practically all the vitamins and minerals necessary to bring such meals up to the full requirements of a growing child. It also provides an extra supplement of high quality proteins.

So why don't you join the host of other mothers in this health promoting program through better nutrition. Give 2 to 3 glasses of Ovaltine daily in addition to regular meals. Then you can be sure you have taken a logical step toward insuring proper nutrition for your child.

NOTE: Ovaltine has a remarkable appeal for children who refuse to drink plain milk, and it is especially processed for easy digestion.

OVALTINE

THE PROTECTING SUPPLEMENTARY FOOD-DRINK

READ WHAT FOOD-VALUES

YOU GET IN OVALTINE

MIXED WITH MILK

HIGH-QUALITY PROTEIN—essential in building body and nerve cells.

HIGH-ENERGY FOOD—needed for keen vitality.

IRON—necessary to maintain good red blood.

VITAMIN B_1—required for good appetite, digestion and healthy nerves.

VITAMIN C—necessary for healthy gums and all connective tissue throughout the body.

VITAMIN D, CALCIUM & PHOSPHORUS—all needed for straight, strong bones, good teeth.

VITAMIN A—necessary for normal growth—and to avoid night blindness.

NIACIN—for normal functioning of nervous system and digestive tract.

VITAMIN G (Riboflavin)—essential to normal growth —and health of eyes and skin.

Have 'em for lunch... for supper... for guests!

Velveeta Harvest Delights

What a helper you have in handy Velveeta!

So nutritious . . . so good so many different ways!

When folks drop in, you're all set for "refreshments" with Velveeta on hand. Or when the youngsters demand a hand-out, again to your rescue comes Velveeta (chock-full of fine food values from milk!). What a helper you have in this finest of cheese foods.

For guests or the family try these open-face sandwiches. Spread toast slices (crusts trimmed) with Kraft Mayonnaise. Cover with Velveeta slices. Top with apple rings (which have been brushed with butter or Parkay Margarine, sprinkled with brown sugar and broiled). Add 2 strips of partially broiled bacon to each sandwich. Place in 350° oven until Velveeta is melted and bacon crisp. Serve hot.

Luncheon Special. Melt ½ lb. of Velveeta in top of double boiler. Stir in ¼ c. milk. Pour that rich (and nutritious!) cheese sauce over toast points topped with hard-cooked egg halves. Garnish with pimento.

Enjoy the KRAFT TV THEATR Brilliant drama every Wednesday evening, NBC-TV.

GOOD FOR THE WHOLE FAMILY!

- VELVEETA IS DIGESTIBLE AS MILK ITSELF!
- RICH IN FOOD VALUES FROM MILK THAT THE WHOLE FAMILY NEEDS.
- PROTECTED! From fresh milk to sealed package this pasteurized process cheese food is protected every step of the way by strict Kraft Quality Control.

VELVEETA IS THE QUALITY CHEESE FOOD . . . MADE ONLY BY KRAFT

OUR OWN YOUNG MARRIEDS

(Continued from Page 48)

ones, the Morrises suggest: make them yourself from oak stair treads. Stair treads in 3′, 3½′ and 4′ lengths can be purchased already sanded from any building-supply company for anywhere from $3 to $4, in hard woods like pine and oak, so they make firm, practically warp-proof bookshelves. Here's how: you'll need, along with the treads, 3 x 10's for supports between the shelves; have the lengths cut according to whatever distance you'll want between the shelves (11″ will accommodate all but giant books). You'll need flat angle irons to reinforce the support, two at each end, one part screwed to the 3 x 10 and the other to the underside of the stair tread. Used stair treads, if you can find them—from an old house that's being torn down, for instance—would be equally as good as new ones, and cost much less, or maybe nothing. The stair treads with their rounded ends and solid look give a really handsome effect, and you can do as you like about finish—wax them or lacquer them, or rub in paint to bring out the grain of the wood. (This same combination, incidentally, of stair treads and 3 x 10's makes excellent benches for a child's playroom. Reinforcing with the angle irons is also indicated here, of course.)

Another of the Morrises' inventions, providing an easy, inexpensive substitute for a break-the-budget item: a dining table made from a flush door—which, because it has no molding, provides a perfectly plain, straight table surface. For about $15 you can get from any building-supply company a hollow flush door in gumwood made from two pieces of plywood (30″ x 7′ is standard size) glued to a solid honeycomb frame inside along all four sides. A completely solid flush door costs a little more. This table couldn't be easier to make. You'll need, besides the door, two 30″ wooden sawhorses with iron legs—about $6 a pair in department stores. Rest the ends of the flush door on the sawhorses, do a paint or lacquering job, and there you are. It is usually unnecessary to fasten the flush door to the sawhorses, as the flush doors are quite heavy. If you are planning to paint your table, gumwood is a good choice of wood, and least expensive. Flush doors are also available in birch and oak plywood for about $25. Whether your table is to be painted and/or waxed, Dele Morris suggests a coat of water- and alcohol-resistant lacquer as insurance against wet-glass rings, cigarette ash and other such household hazards.

We should behave toward our country as women behave toward the men they love. A loving wife will do anything for her husband except stop criticizing and trying to improve him. We should cast the same affectionate but sharp glance at our country. We should love it, but also insist upon telling it all its faults. The noisy, empty "patriot," not the critic, is the dangerous citizen.

—J. B. PRIESTLEY.

Dele and John also made one of the handsomest coffee tables you can imagine from a large chopping board. These can be purchased from butcher- and bakery-supply houses for about $10. They are usually maple, one of the hardest, densest close-grained woods. The legs: four strips of strap metal purchased from a blacksmith for $2—each bent by him into a V shape, then screwed by you into the chopping board to form, as you can see in the photograph on Page 48, a set of sturdy V-shaped legs. Total cost: under $12.

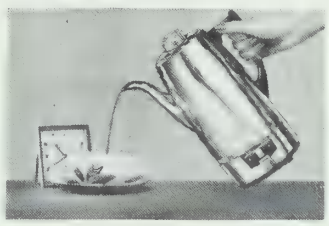
In the same photograph, you can see another of the Morrises' prize innovations: their version of the new light-control draperies that admit plenty of light but eliminate glare. Most of the fabrics one reads about are expensive, especially if your windows require much yardage. But one fabric has all the advantages without the drawback—old-fashioned fishermen's minnow net. You can buy it through your local sporting-goods store or through a ship-chandler-supply company for about 65 cents a yard (without the bobs and sinkers) in 4′ widths. It comes in natural and a good reddish-brown color; sometimes you can find it in a dark aqua. It is, of course, washable; not hand-tied, but done by a patented process that prevents the mesh from slipping. Don't let the limited color choice deter you, because you can always have it dyed or dye it yourself in a color of your own choosing. Another nice thing about it is that minnow net doesn't look a bit "fishy" or nautical because the squares measure only ¼″. Total cost for floor-to-ceiling draperies for a 6′ window: about $6 for 9 yards of material. The easiest way to make these draperies is to gather the net onto a band of solidly woven tape, shirring it as you go; hem it at the bottom, then attach it to a curtain rod or traverse track with drapery hooks.

Felt is an old stand-by for quick-and-easy decorating with Nora and John Smith. It lasts forever and needs only an occasional cleaning; comes in bright purples, orange, flamboyant greens and reds. As you can see in the photograph on Page 49, a Victorian corner, for canasta, or dinner for two, grows simply out of a secondhand round table (secondhand restaurant tables, for instance, can be had for as little as $2 or $3), covered with a felt table cover lavishly fringed at floor level. Felt comes in 72″ widths for about $4.95 a yard and the edges, once they're cut, need no finishing. A table cover like the Smiths' would require about 2 yards of material. Bent-wire ice-cream-parlor chairs (you can get revivals for about $5 apiece, originals for $2), painted white and given seat covers in bright felt, complete the picture, and the Smiths are delighted with the effect of their curved, intricate backs outlined in white against the walls. Incidentally, ice-cream-parlor chairs are extremely comfortable, too, as past generations of soda sippers will be glad to tell you.

Helen and Joe O'Donnell started housekeeping in a very small apartment with many books, phonograph records and wedding-present china—decided to co-ordinate them in a beautiful cherry-wood break-front cabinet inherited from Joe's grandmother's parlor. Joe, who is a spare-time as well as a full-time engineer, fitted it out with their old radio and phonograph in the bottom sections, leaving the rest free for their books, records and "best" dishes. He claims the new arrangement gives the machine the volume of a cabinet-combination, and Helen is happy because the break-front-phonograph gives her living room focus, spotlights attention on her most prideful piece of furniture, as well as providing her with badly needed storage space.

Ellie and John Simmons have a practical and unusual idea for space saving in a kitchen: buying secondhand a couple of flat-armed student chairs (the Simmonses' chairs cost $3 apiece) and using them for breakfasting in their small kitchen. They painted theirs, and equipped them with bright seat covers—that's all the fixing necessary, and would be a good idea for any midget kitchen too small to hold a breakfast table and chairs.

Another of the Simmonses' brainstorms: a dining table made from two sections of curlicued iron fence, bought at a junk shop for $2 apiece, with a marble top, purchased from a stonecutter for $25. The Simmonses had two sturdy 5′ iron bars attached to the two sections of fence—any blacksmith or metalworker will do this for under $10. The marble top, cut to fit, rests on top, and is heavy enough so that no further reinforcement is needed. Total cost: $39. With this table, the Simmonses use folding canvas director's chairs with a special touch—the arms and chair backs outlined by Ellie in heavy white cotton fringe.



THE END

NO GUESSING—NO WATCHING

Flavor-Selector automatically assures correct strength . . . Mild, Medium or Strong. Just set it and forget it—the Redi-Lite will come on when coffee is ready to pour.

EASY POURING—NO EXTRA BOWLS

Heat-Sentinel automatically reduces current when brewing stops. Keeps coffee "just right" 'til poured. The Non-Drip Spout is designed to prevent splashing or dripping.

Completely Automatic—Complete in One Unit

Everyone enjoys the automatic convenience of a Universal Coffeematic. Just set it . . . and forget it! Select the exact strength you want, and the wonderful Coffeematic takes over . . . automatically brews coffee to the correct strength and signals when it is done.

Your coffee stays hot, too, cup after cup is kept at perfect serving temperature without increasing the strength. And remember, Coffeematic has no bowls or extra, cumbersome parts to remove.

For features, for the flavor and quality of the brew . . . for its completely automatic action, it's no wonder Coffeematic is America's Favorite Coffeemaker.

Copyright, 1951, LF&C

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

UNIVERSAL

LANDERS, FRARY & CLARK, NEW BRITAIN, CONN.

The budget menu with a party face

lamb rouladen, buttered peas, beet-and-cauliflower salad.

For dessert: apricot-banana sh

conversation piece

By RUTH MILLS TEAGUE

FROM Thanksgiving through the New Year the party mood is epidemic—it's a time of year that makes for conviviality. But this same period puts a strain on the pocketbook, what with Christmas, that season of lavishness, in the offing. A dinner-party menu that goes light on the budget department is, therefore, a handy thing to have around the house, and I'm about to come up with one such. I don't say it is inexpensive—that word has lost the comforting, old-fashioned meaning it used to have—but it is comparatively economical without letting down any gourmet standards.

